While located at Rivera, Stephen M. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Emma Montgomery, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Montgomery of that place. Three children were born to them—Claude Edgar, Guy and Matilda. Claude Edgar Smith was born at Rivera, January 16, 1887, and there his early school days were spent. Later, when the family had taken up their residence on the La Habra ranch, he attended the high school at Fullerton, supplementing this with a course at Whittier College. Accepting a position on the sales force of the Studebaker Automobile Company of Whittier, he remained with them for five years, during which time he became sales manager for the Whittier district. He then was with the Hudson Automobile Company at Whittier for the next four years, after which he spent a year driving racing cars. Leaving this hazardous field, Mr. Smith took up publicity work for the Studebaker people, his territory covering all of Southern California south of Santa Barbara. On April 21, 1906, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Lillian M. Kellam, a native of Illinois, who came to Rivera with her parents in 1889. They are the parents of a son, Stephen E., who attends school at La Habra. Mr. Smith is prominent in the ranks of the Elks, having been made a member of the Whittier lodge. Guy Smith was born at Rivera on March 14, 1890, and so was but seven years old when his parents moved to La Habra. Here he grew up, attending the public school at La Habra, and later the high school at Fullerton. He then became interested in the garage and auto repair business and had two shops, one at La Habra and one at Whittier. On May 30, 1916, at Bellingham, Wash., he was married to Miss Ellen Alice Smith, the daughter of Albert G. and Ellen Alice Smith. She was a native of California, having been born near Los Angeles; her father, who is a railroad engineer, removed to Bellingham, Wash., with his family in 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Guy Smith are the parents of one child, Lorraine.

Owing to the ill-health of their father, the Smith brothers took over the management of the ranch at La Habra in 1917, and have since given their entire time to its operation. The entire acreage is set out to walnuts, five acres being budded trees. For many years one of the finest properties in the La Habra district, it is continuing to thrive under the expert care given it. One of the best pumping plants in the vicinity is on the ranch, producing 100 inches of water. Fortunately the father is rapidly recovering his health and hopes to be able to take an active part in the ranch management soon. A valued pioneer, he stands high in the esteem of the whole community.

MRS. MARY STODART.—With the courage and fortitude so characteristic of woman, when new and untried responsibilities devolve upon her, Mrs. Mary Stodart, of the Buena Park district in Orange County, has shown her business acumen in directing the management of her ranch affairs for many years. She has had the cooperation of her sons in making the ranch what it is today and is deserving of the highest praise for her work of development.

Mrs. Stodart was born in Washington Territory, on January 5, 1863, while the great Civil War was in progress. Her parents were Mr. and Mrs. John Condra, and were born in Tennessee but removed to Washington Territory and became pioneers of that part of the Northwest. Mr. Condra was a farmer and met with fair success in his operations. He was a well-educated man and was a writer of some note on political questions, as well as civic matters. After the death of his wife in Washington, who left two children, Mary and a son John, Jr., the father sold out his interests there and removed to California, coming via steamer to San Francisco and thence on a prospecting trip down to the southern part of the state and finally located in Los Angeles County in 1868, settling at Los Nietos, near where the city of Whittier now is located. Here he improved a ranch and followed diversified farming up to the time of his death, when he was sixty-three years old. His son died at the age of twenty-one and is buried by the side of his father at Whittier.

Mary Stodart was educated in the public and private schools and for a time after their removal here attended the school at Los Nietos. Her first husband was the father of her first-born, a son, Frank W. Davison, who is an electrician by trade and resides at San Diego. He married Alice Clark of Los Angeles and they have a son, Delbert Davison. On October 1, 1891, she married Archibald Stodart, a native of Scotland, born there in 1846. He came to California in 1887, and settled near the Condra homestead. By this marriage four children have been born; Mrs. Grace Davis, who lives near the ranch operated by her mother. She has two children, Viola and Donald; John Archibald, born February 2, 1895, is superintending the affairs of the ranch and with his two brothers operates two trucks and does heavy hauling in any part of Orange County and vicinity; Charles Edward, comes next and then George Adam. All three sons live at home and are interested in the conduct of the ranch of twenty acres located southwest of Buena Park. This property is an inheritance from her father and she has owned it for more than thirty years and all the improvements on it have been made by herself and her sons. The children are all natives of Orange County and have contributed towards the development of their home county and are highly respected by all who have the pleasure of knowing them. For three years the family conducted a dairy ranch in the Cypress district and when that place was sold they moved back to the old homestead. Mr. Stodart died in 1913, at the age of sixty-seven years. He had been an invalid for seven years before his death and the management of the ranch devolved upon his wife, who showed her ability in directing the affairs of the ranch and at the same time rearing her family to lives of usefulness.

Mrs. Stodart has in her possession a family tree of the Stodart family which traces the name back to 1565 in Scotland, bringing the names down to the present generation, a valuable heirloom for her descendants. She is an interesting talker and recounts the condition of Los Angeles as she remembers it at the time of their removal here, when her father camped on Aliso Street, at a time when it was covered with wild oats and mustard. She is a pioneer of Orange County and has watched with interest the development of the ranches, towns and cities, also to see the wonderful increase in property valuations all over the Southland. She takes great pride in the success her sons are making in their operations and enjoys the esteem of a wide circle of friends. She is public spirited and gives her aid to all measures for the betterment of her county, particularly the district where she has made her home for so many years.

RUDOLPH M. FRICK.—A very progressive rancher, much ahead of his time in agricultural pursuits, is Rudolph M. Frick, who resides on the corner of Tustin and Fairhaven avenues, in Orange, where he has lived for the past eighteen years. He was born in Austria on April 8, 1863, and is the son of John and Katherine (Zimmerman) Frick, who died in their native land. They had eight children, two of whom emigrated to the United States, one being the subject of our interesting review, and the other is Joseph Frick, a farmer now in Canada.

Rudolph was reared and educated in Austria, and when twenty years of age left for the United States in 1883, and located at St. Paul, Minn., where he worked for four years. He removed to Glasston, Pembina County, N. D., in 1887, and there for fourteen years grew steadily prosperous. He engaged in general farming and stock raising and came to hold 480 acres devoted to raising grain. In November, 1898, Mr. Frick, impressed with the greater resources of California, came West, and early pitched his tent in Orange County, and from the beginning of his life here he easily established himself in the good graces of his neighbors and friends, assisted by his excellent wife, Miss Armilde Raedel before her marriage, to whom he was joined in wedlock in Glasston on February 17, 1892. She was born at Denbig, Addington County, Ontario, the daughter of Gotthard and Caroline (Pacholke) Raedel, natives of Germany, who came when young folks to Ontario, Canada, where they met and were married, and where they followed agricultural pursuits until they removed to Manitoba; six years later they removed to and were among the early settlers of Glasston, Pembina County, N. D., and as pioneer homesteaders improved a farm. Mrs. Frick was the youngest of their four children, and received a good education in the schools of North Dakota. Their marriage has resulted in the birth of thirteen children, twelve of whom are living. Louise C. is the wife of Clarence Boone of Long Beach; Armilde P. is Mrs. George Leichtfuss of Helendale; Martha A. is Mrs. Herman Uphal of Tustin; Rudolph A., Reinhard F., Eda C., Walter R., Cora M., Alfred R., Dorothea E., Hilda W. M. and Lorenz W. R.

Mr. Frick's home ranch consists of fifteen acres devoted to oranges, lemons and walnuts. It was raw land when he purchased it, and he first set out apricots, which he found did not yield satisfactory returns, so he set out Valencia oranges, and added a comfortable residence and modern improvements, all of which have made the property more valuable. In addition he owns seven acres across the road from his home place, as well as twelve acres, two miles northwest of Orange and ten acres at McPherson, making his holdings total forty-four acres, principally in Valencia oranges, thus yielding a splendid income.

The family are members of the Lutheran Church at Orange, and while in North Dakota Mr. Frick was a trustee of the congregation, as well as the school district. He is a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association, as well as the Foot Hill Orange Growers Association. A most patriotic American, Mr. Frick and his family take pride and pleasure in fulfilling every civic duty, and thus hastening the healthy development of the nation, the state and the county of his adoption and choice.

C. C. VIOLETT, M. D.—Prominent among the first citizens of Garden Grove, Dr. C. C. Violett, the physician and surgeon, enjoys the distinction of exerting a powerful and beneficent influence in favor of everything making for the healthy development and permanent growth of the young town. He was born in Gallatin County, Ky., on December 7, 1863, the son of Dr. C. F. and Susan (Dean) Violett, both born and reared in the Blue Grass State. The elder Violett was a well-known physician and extensive landowner, who had 300 acres of improved farm land devoted to hay, grain, corn and stock. They had eleven children—five boys and six girls—and among them C. C. Violett was the youngest son and next to the youngest child.

Although born amid the roar and din of the great conflict proceeding between the North and the South, Dr. Violett has no recollection of the Civil War. He does recall an incident, however, and one none too pleasant, of the Reconstruction period. His parents owned a fine country home, to which fifty or more Federal soldiers came and ordered his mother to prepare a dinner for them. This she could not do, as she was destitute of groceries and other food, and they were compelled to retire unsatisfied; but their overbearing demeanor left an impression of horror indelibly stamped on the child's mind. He attended the public school in his home district, and the high school at Williamstown, Ky., and soon chose medicine as his future field of endeavor. This choice was undoubtedly due to the exceptional association of his family with the development of that science in Kentucky, two of his brothers, J. W. and J. D. Violett, also being physicians. He commenced his studies with his father and continued with his brothers, and J. D. Violett became in particular his preceptor, and was also the organizer of the first medical society in northern Kentucky.

After graduating from the medical department of the University of Louisville, with the class of '92, where he was offered an internship by D. P. Yandell, the professor of surgery, he hung out his shingle in his home town, Napoleon, where his father and mother lived, old and feeble. In 1899 he went to Texas, and on April 26, married there Mrs. Elizabeth Wharton, a widow, who had been a schoolmate with him at the Williamstown high school. She was in maidenhood Miss Elizabeth Bailey, a native of Sussex County, Va., where she was born and reared. As schoolmates they were very fond of each other, but the young man did not feel prepared financially to assume the responsibilities of the married state, and the twain who were destined for each other, parted for different paths. Miss Bailey married M. F. Wharton, a brother of the Baptist evangelist, H. Marvin Wharton of Virginia, but her husband died in 1895 in Texas, to which state he had gone for his health. After his death, Mrs. Wharton, who had enjoyed superior educational advantages, having taught four years in her Alma Mater at Taylorville, Ky., and also near Louisville and in Virginia, had returned to her vocation and was teaching in the high school at Uvalde. Mrs. Wharton had one child by her first marriage, Malcolm F. Wharton, Jr., who has been brought up in the Violett home. While attending the State Agricultural College in Oregon, young Wharton, showing the patriotic spirit of his ancestors, enlisted in the U. S. Navy, and after two years and eight months he came out a first class pharmacist's mate from the naval hospital in Washington, D. C. He belongs to the Sons of the American Revolution, through his great-grandfather, Malcolm Wharton, who lost both hands while carrying messages for General Washington. After his discharge, Malcolm F. Wharton returned to Corvallis, Ore., to complete his collegiate course. One child has blessed the union of Dr. and Mrs. Violett—a daughter, Ruth, who graduated from the Santa Ana high school and is now attending Redlands University, where she is pursuing a course in music and is majoring in the piano.

Returning to Kentucky with his bride, Dr. Violett continued his practice at Napoleon until February, 1901, when he removed to Kansas, and for a year and a half practiced at Lindsborg. The persistent call of California, however, at length drew him here and to Orange County, and with his family he settled at Westminster, where he took up his practice again. In 1906 he removed to Garden Grove, coming here early enough to see the advent of the Pacific Electric Railway in the town. He welcomed it, as he welcomed everything else of benefit to the community, for he is by nature a good booster. The same year he built a bungalow residence, and now he owns a home with an orange grove of five acres, which he set out himself. He has added a ten-acre orchard of walnut trees, six years old, a mile northeast of Garden Grove, which he also looks after in person.

In 1911 Dr. Violett established the modest but very efficient cottage hospital of four beds and an operating room at Garden Grove, which has served the community admirably, proving a very necessary adjunct to this growing section. His family practice is constantly increasing and he has more than he can do. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the State Medical Society, treasurer of the Orange County Medical Association, and, last but not least, a member of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps.

Dr. Violett helped organize the Chamber of Commerce, which was first known as the Business Men's Association, and when, in June, 1919, it became the Chamber of Commerce, he was made its president. In national politics a Democrat, he is a member of the Democratic Central Committee of Orange County. For ten years past Dr. Violett has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the First Baptist Church at Garden Grove and is now the treasurer. He is a well-known Mason and is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., Orange Chapter No. 73, R. A. M., Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, K. T., and he belongs to Al Malaikah Temple, A.A.O.N.M.S., of Los Angeles. Mrs. Violett is a member of the Eastern Star at Santa Ana. Dr. Violett is a past master of the lodge at Napoleon, Ky., where he was made a Mason, and was master there for four years, in different terms.

During the war Garden Grove made an excellent record, going over the top in all the drives, the Liberty and Victory loans, and in all the other activities, but in the work of the Red Cross, especially, a great service was accomplished, and for this much credit is due to the ability and initiative of Mrs. Violet and her associates, for through her efficient organization as chairman of the Garden Grove auxiliary the work was speeded up and there was a most generous response from the whole community in garments, money, time and labor. Out of this spirit of patriotism and activity has grown the establishment of the Red Cross Community nurse of Orange County, who is now operating in the public schools of Garden Grove. This was brought to the notice of the public by the establishment and operation of a rest room and first aid station at the Orange County Fair. Mrs. Violet has served her community in many other ways, the most lasting, perhaps, being the establishment of Orange County's Parent-Teachers' Association.

SOREN CHRISTENSEN.—A most highly respected pioneer of the Garden Grove section of Orange County is found in the person of Soren Christensen, a resident there since August, 1890, when he settled on his present ranch two miles north-east from the town. An interesting personality, he has a fund of reminiscences of the early days of Southern California, particularly of Los Angeles in 1869, the year of his arrival there in the old Mexican adobe town. Broadway was then known as Fort Street, barley fields abutted the town where Sixth Street now is, there was not a house on the hill, no street cars, and Government land was to be had below what is now Exposition Park. Like thousands of others Mr. Christensen could not foresee the present condition, and of course let "slip" many chances to become wealthy. His stories are replete with character sketches of many of the men who later became prominent in varied circles there.

A native of Denmark, Soren Christensen was born on September 16, 1843, the son of N. C. and Catherine M. Christensen, who had ten children in their family, six of whom grew to years of maturity, and two of the sons, the oldest and youngest of the family, live in Southern California. Our subject was reared in his native country until he reached young manhood, attended the schools of his district and was confirmed in the Lutheran Church, which, by the way, he has a picture of and is among his treasures. Leaving home he followed the sea as a common sailor and he landed in San Francisco on May 1, 1865, sailing through the Golden Gate on a ship he boarded, after running away from the one he had shipped on, at Mazatlan. He was barefooted, had worked his passage on the William Richardson, landed without a dollar except the one a kindly sailor gave him to buy some shoes. Thus he had to begin at the very bottom of the ladder and he followed the sea in vessels plying up and down the coast until he tried his luck in mining in Inyo County, where he worked in the smelter at Swansey, when its first run was made. That life did not appeal to him and he left it to seek other fields of endeavor.

In 1869 he arrived in Los Angeles and soon entered the service of the Griffith Lumber Company, with whom he remained for fifteen years. It was in their interests that he first came to Santa Ana to establish a branch yard, the same year that the Southern Pacific was finished to that town from Anaheim. Crocker Bowers was the local agent. This was when the town boasted of a store, and but a few scattered houses to mark the place that has since taken the lead in this part of the state.

In 1890 Mr. Christensen made a deal for sixty acres near what is now Garden Grove, trading his property in Los Angeles for the ranch, upon which the former owner had erected a brick house, but which has since been razed; there was also a well 176 feet deep on the place. The ranch was practically raw land, but with characteristic energy the new owner began to improve it and found that two crops could be raised instead of one if irrigation could be secured and he put down another well of the same depth, and now has plenty of water for all purposes. He set the land to oranges, installed a modern pumping plant operated by electric power, and altogether has been very successful. He still retains thirty-eight acres of his original purchase, having sold off the balance to his children as they grew up.

Mr. Christensen was united in marriage in 1876, in Los Angeles, with Miss Johanna C. Johnson, a native of Sweden, but who had come to the United States in 1869, and to Los Angeles in 1875. She has been a good helpmate and together this pioneer couple look back upon a life well spent and to the future without fear, for they have lived by the Golden Rule and won a wide circle of good friends. Their marriage has been blessed by the birth of eight children, six of them living: Clara M., is the wife of Bruce S. Boyer and lives at Indio; Carl J., is at home; Serena, is teaching in the Twentieth Street school in Los Angeles; Herman W., lives in Long Beach and has two bright children, Leroy and Leslie (the only grandchildren in the Christensen family); E. Martin, is a rancher in Orange County; Agnes, married S. W. Gibson and died January 13, 1920; and Albert R., is also living at home. All the children are graduates of the high school, and Carl served in the Spanish-American War, and Albert in the World War, and because of efficient service was made a sergeant and detailed as a mustering officer.

Mr. Christensen is a self-made man, proud of the success he has attained through honest effort and believes in progress, doing all he can to help build up the county of his adoption as a member of the Garden Grove Walnut Growers' and Orange Growers' Associations. His good wife shares in the esteem in which he is held by all their friends.

J. T. DUNLAP.—A well-cultivated ranch of some of the best Orange County soil is that of J. T. Dunlap, who resides on Brookhurst Street, near Anaheim, and grows citrus fruit, according to the most approved methods of science and personal experience. He has sixteen acres, sufficient to afford anyone ground for modest pride; and if that should prove insufficient, then Mr. Dunlap can fall back on the fact that his is a native state which has produced more presidents and more representatives of the Union in high station than any other. For he was born in Ohio in 1854, the son of William Dunlap, who was twice married and had ten children. Mrs. Elizabeth (Fonts) Dunlap was the mother of our subject and five other children besides.

J. T. Dunlap was reared and educated in Missouri, to which state his father moved while he was yet of tender years. Through the occupations of boyhood, the young man settled down to agricultural pursuits as the most likely always to guarantee him a living, and an honest one at that; and this keeping close to Mother Earth brought various blessings in its train.

In the Centennial Year of the Republic, when California was beginning to be talked about in the East, Mr. Dunlap came to the Golden State and settled in San Benito County, where he remained up to 1884, when he removed to Oregon; but in 1903 he returned to Colusa County, Cal., and in 1911 he came to Orange County.

The following year he purchased his present ranch, then raw land, and began to set out the trees which are today the objects of real interest to those engaged in citrus culture, and which amply pay for themselves. He belongs to the Garden Grove Orange Association and delights in participating in both such work and discussion as will tend to advance California horticulture.

In 1882, Mr. Dunlap was married to Miss Melissa DeVaul, a native of Missouri, and three children have blessed their union. One is Mrs. Ethel Schroeder; another, Alice, is a trained nurse; and a third is Mrs. Hazel Suggett. In politics Mr. and Mrs. Dunlap are independent, but they work hard for the best men and the best measures, and are very loyal to local community interests.

WILLIAM A. COLLMAN.—A modest, hard-working rancher, who has done something to advance horticulture in California while attaining success for himself, is William Collman, who lives three miles to the southwest of Fullerton, on the Brookhurst Road. His own life has been varied with interesting experiences, and he represents those of an earlier generation, who were prosperous and influential in their sphere.

He was born in Freeport, Ill., on November 10, 1872, the son of Albertus Collman, a man of many lines of business and associated in particular with a brother, C. O. Collman, who was the head of the German Insurance Company of Freeport. William attended the Freeport common schools, and later the Nagle Business College, and he spent his early days at home. After his father's death, on July 3, 1880, he went to Nebraska and embarked in business with his brothers.

In 1896 Mr. Collman came to Fullerton, and purchased, at first, four acres on the Garden Grove Road. After a short time, however, he sold the same, and then he bought twenty acres on the Brookhurst Road. Ten acres of this was already set out, and the other ten he himself set out to Valencia oranges. He has an interest in the Brookhurst Water Company, which owns a pumping plant with a capacity of about seventy-five inches of water, thus guaranteeing him an excellent irrigation supply. He markets his oranges through the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Association, and is again well served. He cultivates the grove with a tractor, and in other respects follows the last word of science and uses only the most approved methods and apparatus.

At Los Angeles, on January 18, 1912, Mr. Collman was married to Miss Ella Hetrick, a native of Nebraska and the daughter of a worthy Nebraska farmer; and two children have come to brighten their home: Albertus and Wilma. In 1913 he built his cosy country home. He is a member of the B. P. O. Elks of Anaheim, and believes in the fitness of the political candidate for office, rather than party endorsement.

CYRUS G. SPARKES.—The poultry industry is fast taking a leading place in the commercial life of Orange County and the enterprise conducted by Cyrus G. Sparkes and his partner, Alvin O. Melcher, is the only one of its particular kind in the state. The place of business is located on Fairview Avenue, Anaheim, where their unique plant was erected in 1918, and still in its infancy, bids easily to outdistance others in the state as an up-to-date hatchery for commercial purposes. The building, erected of hollow tile, and circular in form, is a two-story structure, sixty feet in diameter, built in the most modern manner and equipped with a heating plant of three units so piped as to distribute heat to the various compartments where eggs are placed for hatching and maintain a temperature of 101° to 103° on all levels in the building without the aid of a fan; the humidity is maintained at 56 per cent without the aid of artificial moisture. The entire building is well ventilated and can hatch 1,000,000 eggs as easily as 100. These eggs are arranged on trays and exposed to an equal degree of heat in all parts and the necessity of having to turn each egg daily is done away with. Heating, ventilating and moistening is done at the same time by the installation of the Pemberton System, installed after careful study by Mr. Sparkes and his partner. The demand for chicks is becoming so great that this institution bids fair to become one of the most remunerative hatcheries in the state and does away with the old incubator system so long in vogue all over the country.

Mr. Sparkes owns the ranch on which the hatchery is located and the land is given over to walnuts, oranges and lemons, and is in a high state of cultivation and very productive. All the improvements on the place have been the result of careful study by Mr. Sparkes, who has been a resident of the county since 1893. He is proud of being a native son of California, for he was born in San Bernardino on June 2, 1859, the son of George W. and Luanna (Roberts) Sparkes, who came across the plains with ox teams in 1852 and settled at Diamond Springs. This pioneer couple had eight children, five of whom are still living, viz: E. A. Sparkes, Mrs. Hattie Carter, Mrs. Sadie Keller; Cyrus G., and R. J. Sparkes, and three of these live in Orange County.

Cyrus G. received his education in the public schools of this state and followed agricultural pursuits nearly all his life and has been a pioneer in many activities. He was married in 1890 to Miss Mary E. Davis, a native daughter of this state, whose father, D. S. Davis, came as a pioneer in the days of gold and here he married Miss Clara Brown, a native of Missouri, in 1849. One son has blessed this union, James G. Sparkes. Mr. Sparkes is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America of Anaheim and is a real booster for Orange County.

A resident of Orange County since 1911, Alvin O. Melcher has entered into the spirit of this western commonwealth and has become a typical Orange County booster. He was born in Sheboygan County, Wis., on January 31, 1893, the son of M. F. and Bertha Melcher, and is the seventh child in a family of ten children. Of this family, three of the children and their mother reside in Orange County. For forty years the father was town clerk of Sherman, Wis., and is now deceased.

A. O. Melcher was united in marriage in 1915, with Miss Vivian Fox, a fair native daughter, born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fox, pioneers of Anaheim, and two daughters have been born to this couple, Olive and Thelma. Mr. Melcher was formerly occupied as a builder of houses. He is a member of the B. P. O. Elks of Anaheim.

EDWIN TILL.—A progressive, prosperous rancher who was formerly a successful Philadelphia merchant, is Edwin Till, now well and favorably known, in addition, as a contractor, making a specialty of finishing new homes. He is never without plenty of work, his patrons living at Fullerton, La Habra, Long Beach, Yorba Linda, and from the latter place to the beaches. He was born in London on October 9, 1856, the son of Edwin and Eliza Till, and grew up in the world's greatest city, under the guidance of his father, who was a contractor, operating on a large scale. He attended the London schools, and was thoroughly prepared for a career at home or beyond the seas. Attractive as England was and always is, Mr. Till elected to leave his native land and to come to America.

He settled in Philadelphia, and there as an enterprising leader in the mercantile world built up a moderately large business. From Philadelphia he went to Chicago, and from Chicago to New York; and in each of these places he conducted a dry goods store for a year. When he returned to Philadelphia it was to resume the selling of dry goods, and in that city and field he continued until 1894, when he sold out and came to California. Locating at Latin, near Los Angeles, he lived there for six years, when he came to Orangethorpe, and in 1900 purchased a ranch of ten acres. The land was bare, but by hard work and close attention to the problem in hand, Mr. Till developed the land in an admirable manner, setting it out to Valencia and Navel oranges. He also built a home on the ranch. At first he went in for chickens, but he soon discontinued the poultry enterprise, and confined himself to citrus fruit. His land is under the Anaheim Union Water Company, and that is equivalent to saying that it is well-watered.

Mary E. Sparkes

At London, on March 6, 1884, Mr. Till was married to Miss Adelaide Wyatt, a native of London and the daughter of James and Adelaide (Barton) Wyatt, the latter being a descendant of Lady Sarah Barton. Her father was a stone contractor and helped build the famous Spurgeon Tabernacle in London. Two sons have resulted from this fortunate marriage. Fredric James is living in Los Angeles and is in the garage business, and James Fullerton is an electrician with the Union Oil Company of Brea. He married Ruby McNeil and is the father of a girl, Edna, and a son, Wyatt James; while Fredric James became the husband of Miss Mary E. Hart. In 1892 Mrs. Till returned to England to witness the coronation of King Edward—a wonderful sight, as one might have expected of one of the greatest spectacles in modern history; and she was also fortunate in being an eye-witness to the Queen Victoria Jubilee in 1887, celebrating the fifty years of that beloved sovereign's reign. As if, perhaps, to remind the observing world of Britain's great naval strength, there were seven miles of ships lined up in close formation at the grand review at Portsmouth. Mrs. Till was one of the organizers of the Parent-Teachers' Association of the Orangethorpe school district, and with her husband has always been a liberal supporter to all movements that have had the betterment of general conditions and the upbuilding of Orange County.

ALBERT H. SITTON.—The development of the automobile industry has led to the creation of various related enterprises, among them being that of the modern garage; and these enterprises have called for the brains, experience and aggressive initiative of thousands known in other fields as successful men of affairs. One such man is Albert H. Sitton, proprietor of Sitton's Garage, a native son born at Downey on June 18, 1878.

His father was Brice M. Sitton, a farmer who married Miss Nannie B. Harris whose folks had crossed the great plains by ox-teams in early days. Mr. Sitton arrived in Nevada in 1869, and three years later reached California. Years afterwards, Mr. Sitton was killed, and Albert had to assist in the support of his mother and his sister. The family had settled in Los Angeles County near Orange in 1880, where the mother still makes her home.

The younger of two children, Albert attended the public schools of Orange County and then engaged in the bicycle trade in Santa Ana. On January 1, 1900, he went to Fullerton and for a couple of years continued to repair cycles; and next he embarked in business for himself. It was only a step, and a very natural one, to work into automobile repairs and sales; and now, with northern Orange County as his field, he is the wide-awake agent for the Overland and Willys-Knight. Self-made in more respects than one, with his own hand at the helm, Mr. Sitton has been so successful that he needs to employ ten men.

On August 27, 1902, Mr. Sitton and Miss Rose B. Rogers were married at Fullerton, the bride being the daughter of Joseph Rogers, a rancher. Mrs. Sitton was born in Iowa. One son, Arthur, has blessed the union, and with his parents attends the Baptist Church at Fullerton. When recreation time comes, Mr. Sitton likes to hunt and fish. He is a Republican in party politics, but an American first and last, as seen by his record of service with Company L of the Seventh California Regiment in the Spanish-American War. For twelve years, Mr. Sitton has been a school trustee; and while a member of the school board the present grammar school building was erected. He served one four-year term as a city trustee.

JOHN M. JOHNSON.—A rancher whose several tours of inspection and careful quest in search of the best soil and conditions for walnut growing were well rewarded is John M. Johnson, the owner of fifteen acres on La Mirada Avenue, constituting one of the finest groves in the northwestern section of Orange County. He was born in Smaland, Sweden, on June 14, 1863, the son of John P. Johnson, who is still living there, an alert and able-bodied farmer at the golden age of eighty-six years. He had married Miss Louisa Anderson, and as a good mother she sent John to the excellent common schools in his native land.

In 1882, our subject came to America and settled in Duluth, Minn.; and there he followed the occupation of a cook, preparing the repasts first for camps and then for various well-known hotels. For five years continuously, for example, he was with the Willard Hotel of Duluth, and previous to his work there he cooked for one of the largest lumber camps near Duluth. He spent the winter in the camp with the loggers, and then cooked for the "gang" during the spring drives when the timber was cut loose and was floated to the mills.

In 1905, Mr. Johnson came to the Pacific Coast and made a tour of inspection preparatory to purchasing land, and then he spent a season at the Lewis and Clark Exposition in Portland, after which he returned to the Southland and purchased his fifteen acres west of La Habra. The land was practically bare; but he soon set out thirteen acres to walnuts and two to Valencia oranges, and he soon had a ranch which many came miles to look over. It is under the service of the La Habra Irrigation Water Company, and Mr. Johnson markets his chief product through the California Walnut Growers Association.

An American citizen full of the American spirit of elevation with expansion, Mr. Johnson is an Episcopalian, and as such is ever ready to cooperate in good works. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Whittier, and there are few if any members there both enjoying and so deserving of popularity.

HENRY YOUNT.—More than interesting and instructive, from several stand-points, is the story of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Yount, pioneer settlers of California, who, after a life of hard labor and self-sacrifice, are enjoying the reward of having found the Golden State a veritable paradise. Mr. Yount was long a faithful and popular public official, privileged to be identified with the first movements toward the formation of the county of Orange, and, as a result he is never at a loss, wherever he goes, for admirers and friends.

He was born near Platte City, Platte County, Mo., on December 11, 1845, the son of Henry Yount, a native of Pennsylvania and a pioneer farmer in Missouri. He married Deborah Daugherty, who was born in Indiana, and soon after he died, in 1845, she married, taking for her second husband Abraham Van Vranken. Henry Yount got what schooling he could in Missouri during the disturbed condition of Civil War days, and for a while worked on the farm of his stepfather. The latter died in Missouri in 1860, and three years later Mr. Yount, with his mother and three sisters, crossed the great plains to California with an ox team in a train of fifty wagons. During the journey his eldest sister, Mrs. Sarah J. Dinsmore, died, and was buried on the Humboldt River, but aside from this sad incident good luck attended the venture of these sturdy emigrants, who had no trouble with the Indians, lost only two head of oxen on the way—poisoned by alkali—and arrived at their goal with ten head of horses, whereupon they settled in the San Jose Valley, remaining in Santa Clara County for the year 1863-64. Then they went to San Joaquin County and farmed for four years, purchasing 320 acres of land there and raising wheat by dry farming.

In 1868 Mr. Yount went to Stanislaus County, and near what is now Modesto purchased 240 acres on which, for another four years, he raised wheat. His next move was to Visalia, where he purchased a half-section of range for sheep, besides which he rented some land; and for a couple of years he raised sheep there. In 1875 he sold out and came south to Compton, Los Angeles County, where he purchased and farmed forty acres.

When he had disposed of this land, in 1880, Mr. Yount came to Santa Ana, and on Lyon Street in Tustin he bought twenty acres. It was raw land, but he set it out to grapevines; the vines died, and then he set walnuts. The acreage is now under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and is therefore well watered. Mr. Yount lived on the ranch at Tustin and thus was enabled to give his personal attention to the improvements which afterward made the sale of the property, at a neat profit, easy. He then purchased an alfalfa ranch of twenty acres on McFadden Street, and when he had sold that, bought a ten-acre ranch on Santa Clara Avenue, which he had for a year. His next purchase was a ten-acre grove of Valencia oranges on Collins Avenue, northeast of Orange, which he retained until 1919, when he sold it.

At Compton, on March 12, 1880, Mr. Yount was married to Miss Alice A. Twombly, who was born near Lansing, Leavenworth County, Kans., the daughter of Benjamin H. and Augusta A. Twombly, educators known for their idealistic, efficient work both in Kansas and California. Her father, a graduate of Dartmouth College, a fine scholar and linguist, and an able speaker, was an attorney and a member of the Kansas legislature, and was a member of the committee that located the state penitentiary at Lansing, Kans. He was the first tax collector of Howard County, Mo., and he rode horseback with saddlebags over the county fulfilling the duties of his office. Coming to California for his health in 1873, he was followed two years later by his wife, his daughter Alice, now Mrs. Yount, and his son Benjamin. Four children—two boys and two girls—blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Yount: John H. is with the Southern Pacific Railroad in Los Angeles; Augusta is Mrs. George H. Merrill of Los Angeles; Charles is with the American Express Company at the same place, and Harriett, who graduated from the Los Angeles State Normal and the State Manual Arts School, Santa Barbara, is now in Hollywood, teaching at the Manual Arts School. In 1908 Mr. Yount purchased the residence at 844 Van Ness Avenue, Santa Ana, and here has since made his home.

Alice A. Grant.

Henry Grant.

Mr. Yount has several times held offices of considerable public trust, and well he deserves to have done so, for in 1888 he circulated the first petition to form the county of Orange. For two years, from 1887 to 1889, he was deputy assessor of Los Angeles County, and from 1889 to 1897 was deputy assessor of Orange County. He thus served under C. C. Mason, Fred Smythe and Frank Vegley, and if he found them inspiring chiefs, it is certain they found in him one of the rare dependables.

Mrs. Yount has always been prominent in the civic and social life of Santa Ana; for more than twenty-eight years she has been a member of the Sedgwick Corps, No. 17, W. R. C., of Santa Ana, and occupied the office of president three different times. In 1907, at the Department Convention, held at Santa Barbara, she had the honor of being elected department president of California and Nevada, presiding at the department convention held at Santa Ana in May, 1908, and the same year she attended the national G. A. R. Encampment, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., thus being honored for her splendid work as department president. Mr. and Mrs. Yount have been active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Santa Ana for over thirty-six years, Mrs. Yount being president of the ladies' aid society for thirteen years, and they are among the oldest and most prominent members of that church. They are both staunch Republicans and prominent in the councils of the party. Mr. Yount was for years a member of the county central committee, and is now active in the work of the local Republican club.

WILLIS J. NEWSOM.—An interesting representative of a fine old pioneer family of California, and a man of such progressive tendencies that, as a natural leader he has been able to point the way onward and upward to others, is Willis J. Newsom, the well-known teacher of Los Angeles and the president of and prime mover in the Farmers' Loan Association of Orange County. He was born at Glen Elder, Mitchell County, Kans., on April 20, 1882, the son of Alfred J. and Christina (White) Newsom, who came to El Modena in 1887. The father bought some land there, but sold it and went to Pasadena, thence to Lankershim, and from Lankershim to Whittier; moving to Garden Grove in the fall of 1891.

Willis attended the schools at Garden Grove, and for a year went to the Santa Ana high school, still later studying at the Los Angeles Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1903. He began to teach at West Anaheim, and is now teaching at the Santa Fe special school for incorrigibles at Los Angeles. Besides taking charge of this responsible work, going back and forth every day, he directs the farming of forty acres of land near Garden Grove.

He owns twenty-five acres, has planted ten acres to Valencias, and fifteen acres to budded walnuts. He has improved the ranch with a fine house, the best of facilities for a water supply, and a mile of cement pipe for irrigation. All this he has in a high state of cultivation. He is a member of the Farm Bureau.

In 1917, the Federal Farm Loan Association of Orange County was organized, and Mr. Newsom became its president. How well he has pushed its interests and directed its expansion may be shown from the fact that today it has outstanding loans aggregating a quarter of a million dollars, and is growing faster than ever.

Mr. Newsom was married in 1907 to Miss Grace Parish of Berkeley, who died in 1913, leaving one child, Christine Elizabeth. He was married a second time in 1915 to Miss Glee Woolley of Alva, Okla., then a teacher at Covina; and one child has blessed this second union—Willis Robert. Mr. Newsom is a Republican, and belongs to the Southern California Teachers' Association.

CHARLES C. KINSLER.—A pioneer of Brea and one of the first men who settled there, Charles C. Kinsler is well known as a prominent citizen who always takes an active lead in the advancement of the interests of his home town.

He is a native of the Empire State, and was born January 4, 1878, at Otto, N. Y., but was reared at Bradford, Pa., where his education was acquired in the public schools of that place, and as a boy he was in the employ of the J. T. Jones Oil Company of Bradford. He is a veteran of the Spanish War, having enlisted as a regular in the Thirteenth United States Infantry when the trouble with Spain arose. One of the heroes of San Juan Hill, Cuba, he served alongside the late Theodore Roosevelt and was wounded in the leg during service. After his discharge from the army he came to Olinda, Orange County, Cal., December, 1899, where he worked for the Olinda Oil and Land Company for one year. He then located at Whittier, and was in the employ of the Home Oil Company at that place. Afterward he became major and drill master at the Whittier State Reform School, retaining the position three years. He then went to the Puente oil district, where he was engaged with the Birch Oil Company. In 1912 he purchased land at Brea, buying the third lot that was sold in the town, and he built one of the first homes on the townsite. He held the office of city clerk of Brea and was the first secretary of the Chamber of Commerce after its inauguration, resigning the position in 1920. At present he is engaged in the real estate and insurance business and is also secretary of the Brea Oil Workers' Union.

Mr. Kinsler's marriage united him with Miss Lena Morse, a native of Vermont, and they are the parents of three daughters: Thelma, Arlene, and Mildred. Fraternally Mr. Kinsler is very prominent in Masonic circles. He is a member of the Blue Lodge and Chapter at Fullerton, the Whittier Commandery, and the Shrine at Los Angeles. He is further affiliated with the Knights of Pythias at Brea, the D. O. O. K. at Los Angeles, the B. P. O. Elks at Anaheim, and is a Modern Woodman. He takes a keen interest in the welfare of Brea, is a dominant factor in its business life, ever on the alert to advance its best interests, and justly enjoys the comforts worthily earned by his labors, and the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens.

ROBERT GISLER.—An Orange County rancher who has contributed much toward the substantial and permanent development of a part of his adopted country, while advancing in prosperity for himself, is Robert Gisler, a native of Switzerland, where he was born in the Canton Uri, on February 28, 1861. His father was Joseph Gisler, a farmer and a dairyman, who had married Elizabeth Troxel; they were born, married and died in the canton so famous in Swiss history. They had nine children, two of whom died young; Robert was the fifth in the order of birth, and is the only one in California. Besides himself, the only other surviving member of the family is a sister, Mrs. Rosa Scroggin, who dwells on the old Gisler homestead. Robert grew up a Swiss peasant boy, attended the Roman Catholic Church, and learned the German language. His mother died when he was fifteen; and perhaps it was his early dependence that made him desire all the more to see America.

At seventeen, then, he bade good-bye to father, brothers and sisters, and took the railway to Havre, France, from which port he was to sail across the Atlantic. He embarked on May 1, 1878, and eleven days later arrived on a French liner at Castle Garden. Without delay he pushed on to Sacramento, Cal., together with some young folks from Switzerland who had relatives at Ventura; and from Sacramento they took the river boat to San Francisco. Even the strange metropolis of the Coast did not detain them, and as soon as possible they continued their journey by steamship to Ventura, where they arrived on June 4, 1878. Mr. Gisler had only enough money to take him to Ventura, and on arriving there he immediately went to work on a farm.

He labored fourteen months for one employer at that place, and then went back to San Francisco and worked at various kinds of employment, mostly dairying, for a couple of years. He put in another two years at dairying in Napa, when he returned to Ventura County and began to farm for himself. He became acquainted with Casper Borchard, Sr., and from him rented a grain ranch of 2,400 acres, in the management of which he continued for four or five years. He toiled and struggled, but prices were very low, and the laborer at times could scarcely depend upon a reward worth talking about. He then bought 300 acres of grain ranch, well situated in Ventura County, but after farming there for five years he sold it.

In 1903 Mr. Gisler came down to what was known as Gospel Swamp and bought some eighty acres as a starter, bringing with him his wife, whom he had married in Ventura County. Her maiden name was Anna Pflanzer, and she was a native of Switzerland, having come to America with her sister, now Mrs. Samuel Gisler of Huntington Beach, when a young woman. The happy and resolute couple set about to improve the Swamp property; they cleared away the willows and drained and plowed and cultivated. After a while Mr. Gisler purchased sixty acres more, and then another sixty acres, and after that twenty acres; so that he finally had about 220 acres a mile south and a mile east of Talbert. In partnership, also, with his two sons, Walter and Tom, Mr. Gisler bought from F. D. Plavan, in 1919, a handsome block of ninety-nine acres, for which they paid $50,000. He has since built a large farmhouse, and has sunk three ten-inch wells and four seven-inch wells, installed a pumping plant and built a tank house, thus adding greatly to the improvements on the home place—improvements in which he can take the more pride since they are the fruit of his own toil.

At first Mr. Gisler kept cows and went in for dairying, but as soon as he got his land clear he continued the raising of sugar beets, a knowledge of which he had acquired in Ventura County. There was then no sugar factory, except the one at Los Alamitos, and his first four crops were shipped up to Oxnard. He has seen the several beet sugar factories built at Huntington Beach and Santa Ana, and he now sells to both the Holly Sugar Corporation at Huntington Beach and the Southern California Sugar Company at Santa Ana. In 1919 he had forty-five acres of sugar beets, while he now grows mostly lima beans. In 1920, for example, he and his sons planted about 200 acres to lima beans and eighty acres to sugar beets, and the balance to alfalfa.

A. B. Hawley

Mr. and Mrs. Gisler belong to the Roman Catholic Church at Huntington Beach, and Mr. Gisler is a member of the Knights of Columbus at Anaheim. In national politics he is a Republican, but he never draws the party line when it is a question of giving a whole-hearted support to a worthy local movement. They have seven children: Walter, who married Marie Collins of Talbert, is a rancher; Emma is the wife of Bernard Stouffer, another rancher, and lives at Anaheim; Thomas is also a rancher; Della has graduated from the Huntington Beach High School, and is now living at home; and there are Agnes, Harold and Lucile.

Thomas Paul Gisler, the third in the order of birth, was called into service for the great World War through the first draft, and trained at Camp Lewis. Then he joined Company E of the Three Hundred and Sixty-fourth Infantry. On July 12, 1918, he sailed from New York for Southampton, and then proceeded to Havre—the same port from which his father had embarked for America—and for a month continued training at Longchamps. From there he was assigned to the reserves at St. Mihiel, France, and in the great Argonne drive was wounded in the left arm by a piece of shrapnel. His severe injuries confined him to a hospital in France for eight and a half months, and on account of disability he was discharged at the Letterman Hospital in San Francisco on June 9, 1919.

ALFRED E. HAWLEY, MRS. ELIZABETH M. HAWLEY.—Distinguished as the oldest living pioneers at Newport Beach, in point of actual continuous residence, Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Hawley enjoy an enviable position at one of the most attractive and most promising of all beach resorts along the Californian Coast. Their faith in Newport Beach, it is not surprising to learn, has always been firm, and it is getting stronger year by year. They have invested wisely here and now own a number of choice residential lots and about eight houses, which they have built and which they keep rented out. They have been in Orange County for thirty-three years, and if anyone is likely to make a success of the business in realty so ably handled by Mrs. Hawley, they are the old-timers of experience.

Mr. Hawley manages a large sporting-goods store at 305 N. Sycamore Street, Santa Ana, and is the head of the firm of A. E. & E. M. Hawley, and is therefore one of Santa Ana's pioneer business men; a gentleman of strict integrity, deep knowledge of human nature, and a reputation for urbanity and a desire to please, who naturally has both a wide acquaintance throughout the county, and also a very profitable and growing trade.

He was born in Cambridge, Vt., and when his mother died in Vermont he came to Madison County, N. Y., with his father, Julius Hawley. He attended school near Oneida, and it was there he met the lady who afterwards became his wife, Elizabeth (Mallery) Hawley. She, however, was born near Lansing, Mich., but reared in Virginia. She was the daughter of Gibson and Sarah M. (Chadwick) Mallery, both natives of England.

After his marriage Alfred E. Hawley engaged in manufacturing, becoming superintendent of the Wescot Chuck Company at Oneida. They were manufacturers of lathes and drill chucks. However, they had a longing to live on the Pacific Coast, so came to Santa Ana in 1887. He purchased the small stock of sporting goods from J. P. Hutchins, which business he enlarged from time to time until it is the largest of the kind in the county, and he now has thirty-three years of honorable and successful business experience to his credit.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawley first came to Newport Beach in the boom year of 1888, and the summer month of August, and it is natural that they should feel the deepest interest in the building up of what today owes so much to them. They have three children: O. J. and Ralph E. are associated with Mr. Hawley in the store, while Arline married Terrel Jasper, and he is assistant postmaster at Newport Beach, and shares in the popularity of the family. Mr. Hawley's enterprise leads him into being an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, as well as the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. Fraternally, they are members of the Maccabees, while Mr. Hawley is a popular member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks, where he is much appreciated for his native good humor and pleasantness.

C. GEORGE PORTER.—A representative of one of the most historic American families in Orange County, C. George Porter is well known as both the owner of a very fine orange grove and also as a leading and helpful spirit in the local fraternal world. He was born, a native son, in Orangethorpe, Los Angeles County, now Orange County, on March 7, 1875, the son of Benjamin F. and Mary H. (Meade) Porter, who have been identified with Orangethorpe and its district since the early seventies. The father, who was born and educated in Tennessee, came to San Diego County in 1869, journeying hither from Texas. He was a plantation holder in that commonwealth, and was therefore always a man of influence. On coming to what is now Orange County, he bought forty acres on the north side of Orangethorpe Avenue, and this his wise and progressive management soon made known as the Porter Estate. There our subject lived until he was married, on July 29, 1898, to Miss Jane Orell Jennings, a native of Kansas, who grew up in San Diego; she passed away on September 11, 1917, leaving one child, Charles G., Jr., and the memory of a charming woman.

In 1898 George Porter purchased fifteen acres on the south side of Orangethorpe Avenue, and he now has a valuable grove devoted to Valencia oranges, which he markets through the Specialty Fruit Company of Fullerton. Well-grounded in his education at the Orangethorpe graded school, and later at the Los Angeles Business College, Mr. Porter has operated successfully in both oil and real estate in the county.

On December 22, 1919, Mr. Porter was married for the second time, his bride being Mrs. Alta Rose Rhodes, a native of Iowa, in which state she was educated; and they reside in the fine Porter home built by our subject in 1898. A member of the Masonic Lodge of Fullerton the last twenty years, Mr. Porter has been active there, and he is a past master of the Blue Lodge; also belongs to Fullerton Chapter and Santa Ana Council and the Hacienda Country Club. He also belongs to the Eastern Star. In national political affairs he prefers to work with the Democrats, but he is too broad-minded to allow partisanship to interfere with his support of any movement properly indorsed and likely to benefit the community in which he lives and prospers.

CHARLES DAVID OVERSHINER.—Among the Federal representatives in California whose administration of office has proved satisfactory, is Charles David Overshiner, the popular postmaster of Santa Ana, who hails from Kentucky, where he was born at Hopkinsville, Christian County, on December 29, 1863. His father was the merchant, John G. Overshiner, who married Miss Margaret Nichols, the daughter of David and Mary Nichols, and by her had nine children, of whom five are living. Both parents are now dead.

Mr. Overshiner enjoyed the usual public school advantages of those days, and supplemented them in the field where so many men have acquired a rare education—that of printing. Having learned the printer's trade, he came to California in June, 1883, locating at Santa Ana, and identified himself with the Santa Ana Standard, later with the Blade, and still later with the Santa Ana Bulletin, in which he still retains a half interest.

As a Democrat, Mr. Overshiner was active in support of his party, and on January 12, 1915, was appointed to the responsible position he now holds. His only child, William H., is a graduate of the Santa Ana high school and the University of California, and is a civil engineer, connected with the U. S. Geodetic Survey, stationed in the Philippines. Mr. Overshiner is a Mason, Odd Fellow and an Elk, and has attained to various chairs, his popularity in official circles even being eclipsed by that showered upon him in fraternal life.

J. M. CALLAN.—An enterprising, progressive citizen, whose burning desire for years at last drove him "back to the soil," is J. M. Callan, now handsomely rewarded for the struggles of the past in the possession of one of the best-developed groves in Orange County. A native son, proud of his association with this great state, he was born in El Monte, on July 4, 1867, the son of J. M. and Ruth J. (Glenn) Callan. The father came to California in 1850, and the mother reached here in the hardly less stirring days of a decade later. J. M. Callan, Sr., settled at first in Northern California, and when he came south, he pitched his tent at El Monte.

Our subject thus went to school at El Monte, and finished his education at the Woodbury Business College. His father having died when he was an infant, his mother married a second time, then becoming the wife of M. F. Quinn. The lad helped his stepfather until he was seventeen years old, and then he began to work for an uncle who had a ranch of 2,400 acres, and raised stock. This uncle was A. T. Currier, senator from the thirty-eighth district.

On November 5, 1891, Mr. Callan was married to Miss Lenore Bronson, a native of Savannah and the daughter of A. C. and Fannie (Green) Bronson, also early settlers of California. She was educated at Walnut and Spadra, and was particularly fortunate in having superior opportunities, from which she profited, for the study of music.

Robert Samuel Hazard

Betsey Ann Hazard

While a boy, it may be mentioned, J. M. Callan served as page during three sessions of the state legislature, and thus had the best chance to see and hear notable men, and to be present on historic occasions. He came to know, in particular, Hiram Johnson, and has always cherished the friendship then formed. He was also a carrier of telegrams between Los Angeles and San Dimas, and went the whole distance on horseback. After his marriage, Mr. Callan farmed for four years, and then, in 1896, he went to Arizona, trying his luck at silver and lead mining, south of Casa Grande, in the Vekol district. After two years in that state, he returned to California and worked in the railway mail service. He traveled on various lines, but chiefly on the Southern Pacific, and ran especially between Los Angeles and El Paso, and Los Angeles and San Francisco.

His main interest, however, has always been ranching, and in 1912 he purchased ten acres in oranges and eight acres in walnuts, grubbed up the latter and set out Valencias. In 1916 he purchased an additional twenty-five acres, also devoted to oranges, and like the other ranch, well watered by the Anaheim Union Water Company. Now he is a director in the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Growers Exchange; and his son Forrest is living upon a part of the homestead, and also forwarding by his work the progress of California horticulture.

Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Callan. Glenn M. is the elder, and is engaged in business in Fullerton; and the other is Forrest B. Callan, who married Miss Selma Salvesson, and they have one child, Lenore. Mrs. Callan died on November 30, 1918, and on July 1, 1920, Mr. Callan married Mrs. Bertie Bronson, born in Kentucky, but a resident of California for several years.

Mr. Callan is a Democrat in national politics, although nonpartisan enough in his support of local measures likely to help the town and county, and he is a member of the Masonic Lodge, holding membership in Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and in Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M.

MRS. BETSY ANN HAZARD.—The ancestry of Mrs. Betsy Ann Hazard dates back to the early days of the Pilgrim Fathers, when two White brothers came over in the Mayflower, and from one of these Mrs. Hazard is directly descended. The White family figured prominently in the Revolutionary War and in the early history of Massachusetts and of New York, Mrs. Hazard herself being a pioneer of Iowa; she was born at Erieville, Madison County, N. Y., her parents being Elijah and Betsy (Cook) White. Elijah White was a blacksmith at Erieville for many years, having come there from his native state of Massachusetts, Mrs. White also having been born at Williamstown, in that state. They were the parents of four children: Charles, William, Austin, who died at Fallbrook in 1916, and Betsy Ann, of this review, and the only one living. She was reared and educated at Erieville and on February 14, 1858, at Leeville, N. Y., was married to Robert Samuel Hazard, who was also born at Erieville, N. Y., in 1833, only half a mile from the birthplace of Mrs. Hazard; he was the son of Ira and Clarissa (Brown) Hazard, both of whom were born in New York and lived there until their death, the father being a well-to-do farmer and dairyman, and was the first child born in that village.

Mr. and Mrs. Hazard remained in New York for a year or so after their marriage, when they removed to what was then considered the far west, settling in Blackhawk County, Iowa, in 1860. Here they bought a partially improved farm of eighty acres, which they cultivated until 1877. They then drove their cattle out to Redwillow County, Nebr., and later to Hitchcock County, in that state, moving into a deserted dug-out that had been occupied by settlers who had been eaten out by grasshoppers and abandoned the place. In 1881, Mr. and Mrs. Hazard, with their children, came to California, settling in the Westminster district in August of that year. They purchased forty acres northwest of Bolsa, paying $700 for the tract, and moved on it February 6, 1882, and there engaged in ranching until Mr. Hazard's death, which occurred very suddenly from heart failure on November 23, 1895, while he was at work in the field. Mrs. Hazard resides on the home place and rents the land to her grandson, Robert F. Hazard.

There were five children, two now living, born to Mr. and Mrs. Hazard, all natives of Iowa except the third child, who was born in New York: Bertha resides on the home farm with her mother; Frank became a prosperous rancher in the Westminster precinct, the owner of 120 acres of land there; he passed away on January 22, 1916, at the age of forty-five years. He was married to Alice Marden of Westminster, who died in 1900, leaving three children—Harry is a rancher at Lancaster, Cal., is married and has two living children, Eugene and Alice; Robert F. is a rancher in the Westminster district, farming the land of his grandmother, Mrs. Betsy Ann Hazard; he has three children.

Roland, Clyde and Kenneth; Luella, who married Gifford Giles and lives at Santa Ana; she was reared by her grandmother, Mrs. Betsy Ann Hazard, her mother having passed away when she was but two weeks old; the youngest of the Hazard children, Grace, is the wife of Harry Bush, a shipbuilder at Harbor City, Cal., and they have one daughter, Ethelwyn, now Mrs. Harry Griswold of Exeter, Cal.

Coming from a long line of patriotic forbears, it is but natural that Mrs. Hazard should feel an intense loyalty to her country and this she expressed in a practical way during the stirring time of the late war, being especially active in the work of the Red Cross. While she has never allied herself with any particular church, she has always lived an exemplary Christian life, governed by the principles of the Golden Rule. She has never found any religion higher than the truth and she considers it her privilege to discover truth anywhere and everywhere, adhering to the highest concept of life as it is unfolded. A firm advocate of temperance, she has been a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Good Templars and other prohibition organizations.

HARRY RAY.—A pioneer business man of Brea, Orange County, Harry Ray has been closely identified with the commercial interests of this fast-growing city since 1911, during which time he has been classed among the upbuilders of this district in all progressive movements. A native of Ohio, he was born at Cincinnati on March 25, 1878, a son of Samuel and Louise (Hoffman) Ray, the latter still living and the mother of seven children.

The third eldest of the family, Harry Ray received his education in the excellent schools of his native city, also fortunate in having been able to pursue a course in the high school as well. When his school days were over he entered the mercantile business there and thoroughly equipped himself for his career in life. When twenty-three years of age he decided to come West, feeling that the best opportunities were to be found here rather than in the crowded marts of the East. On his arrival he secured employment with the Stern-Goodman Company at Fullerton, and for ten years was in their store in that city. In 1911 he was sent to the new town of Brea to open a branch store for his company, and was made manager of it, having demonstrated his ability and integrity during his ten years' service with them in Fullerton. He later bought their interest and for three years carried on a flourishing business for himself and expanded the business to large proportions during that time. He then sold out to Joseph Weiss, and was made manager for him, continuing in that position until he resigned to embark in the general gents' furnishing business for himself, where he is to be found catering to the best element of the prosperous oil-producing center.

Public-spirited and active in all forward movements of the locality, Mr. Ray was the prime mover in organizing the Chamber of Commerce and was honored with the first presidency of that organization, and later served another term, and as a booster for the community he exerted a strong influence for the good of the entire section. He is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Foresters and the B. P. O. Elks of Anaheim.

FELIX BOZENTA MODJESKA.—Among the most popular favorites at Balboa Beach, indeed throughout all Orange County where the memory of Madame Modjeska, as both a genius and a noble woman, is held so dear, none enjoys a more enviable position than the grandson of the famous Polish-American actress, Felix Bozenta Modjeska, and his talented wife, residing on Modjeska or Bay Island, where the divine interpreter died on April 9, 1909, and which she willed to her two grandchildren, the aforesaid. He was born at Omaha, Nebr., on August 6, 1887, when his father Ralph Modjeski, the noted civil engineer of Chicago, was engaged on the Union Pacific bridge then being stretched across the Missouri River at Omaha. Ralph Modjeski was born at Cracow, Poland, in 1861, and came to the United States with his mother in the year of our national Centennial, 1876. Later, he graduated from the Coll. des Ponts et Chaussées, at Paris, at the head of his class, with honors, and in 1911 was made a Doctor of Engineering, by the University of Illinois. On December 28, 1885, he married Felicie Benda, of Cracow, a niece of Mme. Modjeska, by her beloved brother Felix, by whom he had two sons and a daughter—Felix Bozenta, the subject of our review; Marylka Stewart, wife of Sydney Pattison, professor of English in the University of Arizona at Tucson, and Charles E. J., who is at present a student at Cornell University. Ralph Modjeski, who is now a member of the eminent firm of Modjeski and Angier, also independent as Ralph Modjeski, has been a consulting engineer at Chicago since 1892, and for years has maintained an office in New York City, and he has been identified with the designing and completing of many of the great engineering works in the land, among them the Thebes Bridge across the Mississippi and the Quebec Bridge in Canada, also one at Memphis, Tenn., and many others. He is an honored member of several of the leading clubs of Chicago and New York. He resides on Hyde Park Boulevard, Chicago, and has an office on Michigan Avenue.

The early life, therefore, of Felix Bozenta Modjeska was mainly spent at Chicago, where he attended the public schools and De La Salle Institute and the University high school. He also studied electrical engineering at Armour Institute, and enjoyed the instruction of men noted the world over for their mastery of modern electrical science, and so became himself a recognized electrical expert. He was married at Davenport, Iowa, to Miss Dorothy Hill, of Western Springs, Ill.; and in 1910, following his revered grandmother's death, he and his wife came West to inherit their enviable property. They have two children, Felix G. and Ralph.

Some time ago, Mr. Modjeska formed a partnership with R. M. Simberg for the establishing and conducting of an electrical engineering and supply business at Balboa and Newport Beach; and Mr. Simberg takes charge of the store at the latter place, while Mr. Modjeska manages the business at Balboa. As might be expected of those who began with a reputation for exceptional ability and who have since added to their laurels and by strict attention to the wants of their patrons, increased their number of appreciative friends, these gentlemen have done well from the start; and they bid fair to "grow up with the country," and to come in on the crest of the waves, at the high tide of the beaches' prosperity.

ALBERT J. CHAFFEE.—Residents of Garden Grove for nearly forty years, Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Chaffee occupy an honored place in the community for the contribution they made to the upbuilding of this section of Orange County. A native of Illinois, Mr. Chaffee was a son of Eber C. and Anna (Davis) Chaffee, his birth occurring April 27, 1848, in Kane County, near Elgin, in that state. Eber C. Chaffee was born at Bellows Falls, Vt., and when a youth learned the trades of tanner and currier, but after removing to Kane County, Ill., in 1839, he became interested in agriculture, improving a farm of 400 acres there. Mrs. Chaffee was also a native of Vermont, born at Rutland, of Welsh and English descent; both parents died at the Illinois homestead.

Albert J. Chaffee spent his early life on the home farm in Kane County, Ill., attending the public schools there and later the Seminary at Aurora, the Academy at Elgin and the Rock River Seminary at Mt. Morris, Ill. For a while he took up the profession of a school teacher, teaching two years in Iowa and one in Illinois. Later he became interested in dairying, running an extensive dairy near Elgin for many years. He was one of the early promoters of that industry in that section, which has since become famous throughout the country as a butter-producing market. He continued there until 1881, when he decided to remove to California, settling at Garden Grove directly on his arrival here. For a number of years he engaged in the dairy business on the peat lands in the Westminster and Bolsa districts, but later gave over his time to general farming, in which he achieved splendid success. Through different purchases he at one time owned 140 acres of land, but disposed of most of it, retaining a small acreage where he erected his commodious farmhouse, the trees which he planted now having grown to a great size. Here his family make their home.

Of the twelve children of the Chaffee family, only two are now living: Alonzo D. resides at Wasco, Ill., and is eighty years of age; and Dorr B., who is seventy-eight years old, makes his home in Los Angeles, where he is well known. Of the brothers who are deceased may be mentioned Dr. John D. Chaffee, who came to Garden Grove in 1875 and was widely known there and at Long Beach, where he had an extensive practice until his death in 1907; Simon E. Chaffee was justice of the peace and notary public at Garden Grove for many years and died there in 1916, at the age of sixty-nine years; the oldest brother, Sereno S. Chaffee, was a man of means and figured in the business and political circles of Los Angeles, becoming a strong Prohibitionist before his death in 1894, at the age of sixty-eight; another brother, Fernando H. Chaffee, was a prominent resident of Long Beach, living to be eighty years old, and dying in 1908. Of Mr. Chaffee's three sisters, Mrs. Sarah M. Johnson was a resident of Garden Grove before her death in 1899; Addie F. died in Illinois at the age of ten years; Mrs. Marcia A. Ryder died in 1916 in Long Beach, aged eighty-six years, her son, Dr. Burns Ryder, being a well-known physician there.

Mr. Chaffee's marriage, which occurred in 1873, united him with Miss Susan E. Ambrose, the daughter of Rev. Samuel Ambrose, a well-known minister of the Rock River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Illinois. Mrs. Chaffee was born in Maine, but was reared in Illinois from the age of six. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Chaffee: Mettie E. is in the Deaconess work in Los Angeles; Edward A. is a large rancher and apricot grower at Garden Grove; Dr. Burns S. Chaffee, a physician at Long Beach, is a graduate of Johns Hopkins University, where he specialized in surgery. He was a surgeon in the army during the late war, serving in France, and was commissioned a captain; Ralph A. is a resident of Garden Grove; Leila B. graduated from the Santa Ana high school and later from the Los Angeles Normal, and is now taking a domestic science course at Santa Barbara; she taught five years in the Garden Grove grammar school; an infant daughter died at the age of ten days in Garden Grove.

Mr. Chaffee was a member and trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove; always a hard worker, he lived a clean, industrious and useful life, and was found furthering every good work, especially the cause of temperance and national prohibition. He died June 4, 1920, aged over seventy-two. Mrs. Chaffee, who is also a faithful member of the Methodist Church, ably seconded her husband in all his good works and is beloved by the entire community.

NOAH ULYSSES POTTER.—A highly esteemed family of Orange with an unusually interesting association with the great World War, is that of Noah Ulysses Potter, whose sturdy sons vie with him in popularity. He was born in Madison County, Iowa, in 1869, the son of Ephraim Potter, a native of Michigan who settled in Iowa, and there farmed. He also married there, taking for his wife Miss Mary Blosser; and there he died. He had two brothers in the Civil War, one of whom was killed. All of their five children are still living; but only the youngest—the subject of our sketch—is in California. Mrs. Potter, the beloved mother, survived to give joy to all who knew her, until March, 1920, when she died.

Reared on a farm, Noah attended the local public schools, and after a while learned the carpenter's trade, in time marrying Miss Minnie O'Brien, a native of Illinois. He worked at his trade in Madison County until 1902, when he located in California. Four years before he had come to the Golden State for the first time, and had remained here nearly a year, mostly at Santa Cruz; and then he returned to Iowa. The spell of California, however, had seized him as it has so many others, and when he came he chose Orange as the most attractive place, promising the most for the future. For the first two years after coming here he worked at his trade as a carpenter, and since then he has been in business for himself.

Mr. Potter has been exceptionally successful and has erected many buildings of note. Among these are the Jörn Block, the Ainsworth Block, the Smith and Grote Block, the Pixley and Edwards Block, the Eltiste Garage, the Struck Garage, the Boring Buildings, the Christian Church, as well as many of the finest private residences in the city. He built his own residence on East Palmyra Street.

A Republican in national political affairs, Mr. Potter was appointed on the non-war construction committee for Orange County during the period of the war. His son, Claud, who is a carpenter and assists him, joined the aviation section of the U. S. Army and was stationed at Rockwell Field in this state until he was honorably discharged in March, 1919, when he resumed work with his father. Another son, Raymond, who is also a carpenter and assists his father, was in the war as a member of Battery B, of the Anti-Aircraft, serving overseas, and was in active service in France for six months. After the armistice had been signed he returned home and was honorably discharged. A third son was in the U. S. Naval Reserve Force, and in the returned to tell the tale, he is with the Griffith Lumber Company at Orange. All three of these worthy sons are members of Orange Post No. 132 of the American Legion. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Potter was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M., and belongs to Orange Grove Chapter No. 99, R. A. M. Mrs. Potter belongs to the Hermosa Chapter, O. E. S., and is justly popular in the circles in which she is active and best known.

FRED A. GROTE.—An enterprising and liberal-minded young man who, by his own unflinching energy and close application to the duties of the day, has risen to a prominent place in the business circles of his native city, is Fred A. Grote, who was born at Orange on March 22, 1886. His parents were Henry and Wilhelmina Grote, the well-known pioneers, and in the order of birth he was the fourth of six children.

He was sent to the local schools for his early education, and in Santa Ana he continued his studies at the Orange Business College. When his student days were over, he entered the store of the Ehlen and Grote Company, of which his father was a large owner, and beginning at the bottom, advanced through various departments stockholders, and as a controlling factor, is director and secretary of the company. He belongs to the Commercial Club and also to the Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Orange, in which organizations his counsel is often sought, and in unorganized channels he makes his influence felt in an encouraging, helpful way.

H. W. Head
Maria Caldwell Head

Mr. Grote is also interested in citrus culture, and owns a ranch of twenty acres east of Orange, which he has set out and improved with Valencia oranges and lemons. He is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association and the Central Lemon Association at Villa Park, and loses no opportunity to advocate the introduction of the most approved, up-to-date methods and appliances.

While at St. Louis, Mo., Mr. Grote was married to Miss Mathilde Schuessler, a native of that city and a graduate of Strassberger's Conservatory of Music at St. Louis; and their union has been blessed with the birth of one child, a daughter, Elinor. Mr. Grote is a member of St. John's Lutheran Church.

A Republican in matters of national political import, and a most loyal American citizen, always solicitous for a high standard of civic honor, Mr. Grote knows no political partisanship when it comes to boosting Orange, town and county, nor does he allow party preferences to stand in the way of endorsing the best men and measures. In this respect, he sets the best example for civic reform and growth.

MRS. MARIA E. HEAD.—Preeminent among the most interesting factors in the history of romantic California must be rated the lives of such genuine and worthy pioneers as the late Dr. H. W. Head, who passed to his eternal reward on December 5, 1919, and his estimable companion who so admirably sustains his standards in her charming home life at 520 East Sixth Street, Santa Ana. He was born in Obion County, Tenn., on January 1, 1840, and as a decidedly pioneer physician settled at Garden Grove in the far-away Centennial year of 1876. At Rives, then Troy Station, Obion County, Tenn., on August 18, 1869, he was married to Miss Maria E. Caldwell, a daughter of Waller H. Caldwell, a well-known farmer of Obion County, Tenn., where he was also a pioneer. He was born in Henry County, Tenn., lived to hunt not merely wild turkeys but grizzly bears in Obion County, when he first essayed to set up his home there, and died there in 1891, almost eighty years of age. He was married in Obion County to Elizabeth Morgan, who died when Mrs. Head was only eleven years old. She left five children—three girls and two boys, of whom there are only two living: our subject and a brother, Waller J. Caldwell, a farmer in Obion County. In May, 1917, Dr. and Mrs. Head took an extended trip East, to visit their old Tennessee home, and on the journey they stopped at Washington, D. C., and shook hands with President Wilson.

Dr. Head studied medicine under his father, Dr. Horace Head, perhaps the leading physician of Obion County; attended the Academy at Troy, Tenn., and later matriculated at the Nashville Medical College, graduating in the spring of 1869. Prior to his beginning the study of medicine he enlisted in the Civil War as a Confederate soldier and participated in the following battles: Shiloh, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge (both battles), Cut Creek, Rocky Ford Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Pine Mountain, Dead Angle, Beech Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin, Nashville and Sugar Creek. At the battle of Franklin he came out with such torn clothes and so bedraggled and powder-stained that his own uncle did not know him. The company in which he served throughout the war was the one in which he had enlisted—the "Avalanche"; it was made up at Troy, Tenn., and he became its captain. After his marriage, Dr. Head went to live at Troy and there he practiced until he came to California. The first captain, by the way, who organized the "Avalanche," was John W. Buford; and when he was promoted to the office of colonel, Dr. Head was made captain. Dr. Head was a valiant soldier, remained prominent in Confederate circles, and numbered his friends by the thousands, as was evidenced by the attendance and demonstrations at his funeral, which was attended by admirers and mourners from far and near. He had been commissioned lieutenant-colonel and judge-advocate on the staff of Maj.-Gen. S. Lerchfield, on January 1, 1905, and at their twenty-ninth reunion at Atlanta, Ga., in 1919, he was made surgeon-general of the Pacific Division of the United Confederate Veterans. Always an earnest advocate of education, he was for twenty-eight years a trustee of the Garden Grove school.

Nine children blessed the fortunate union of this distinguished couple. Horace C. Head is the well-known attorney. Percie is assisting her mother in presiding over the home. Lucy died in Tennessee, in infancy, as did also Ocie. Flora is the wife of Marvin Johnson, of Los Angeles. Maggie Belle became Mrs. Newton H. Cox, the wife of a rancher living near Blythe, Palo Verde Valley, Riverside County, Cal. W. Clair Head is a rancher at Garden Grove, and Bessie, living near, is the wife of Anson Mott, while Mary is Mrs. James Pumphrey and resides in Los Angeles. Dr. and Mrs. Head were members of the First Christian Church at Santa Ana. Mrs. Head and her daughter Percie are charter members of the Emma Sansom Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, of which Mrs. Head has served as president. Mrs.

Head, like her lamented husband, is a consistent Democrat, and the Head family cast fifteen votes for President Wilson.

Dr. and Mrs. Head moved to Santa Ana in 1905, and in 1919, they celebrated their golden wedding very fittingly at the County Park. The local newspaper in chronicling the event said: "The long table was decorated with golden flowers, and conspicuous among the good things was an enormous wedding cake, made by a daughter-in-law, Mrs. Clare Head, with the two dates, 1869-1919. At the extreme end of the table, where the bride and groom of fifty years ago sat, was a clever poster made by Hugh Johnson, a gifted grandson. At the close of the beautiful repast, H. C. Head, the eldest son arose, and after a felicitous speech, presented on behalf of the sons and daughters, a handsome gold watch, suitably engraved, to his father and a beautiful gold chain and lavalliere to his mother. Dr. and Mrs. Head have seven children and fourteen grandchildren living, all of whom were present yesterday to rejoice with them. They have lived in this vicinity ever since 1876, and for many years Dr. Head practiced his profession. Often in an early day when there was destitution or sharp need, the patient was taken to his own home and cared for by himself and his wife. Many of the old settlers here have reason to remember these good people with gratitude. They and their newer friends join with the family in wishing them continued health and happiness."

It was not long, however, before the same newspaper announced the sad news of Dr. Head's death in the headlines: "Dr. Head, Well-known Citizen, Passes Away: Active in Public Affairs—Served in the Legislature in 1884-85." It reviewed his energetic and fruitful life, and added this comment:

"Throughout his life in this section, Dr. Head was deeply interested in public affairs. He was long a recognized leader in the Democratic party, first in Los Angeles County and later in Orange County. In 1883 he was elected as assemblyman for a district that at that time comprised the eastern part of Los Angeles County, including what is now Orange County and the Pomona Valley. When residents of what is now Orange County made a fight in 1887 at Sacramento for a bill for the creation of Orange County, Dr. Head was one of those selected to go to Sacramento and work for the passage of the bill. Throughout the active period of his life in this section, Dr. Head was a power in various public activities. He was a man of genial personality and forceful character. While unable to take part in public affairs in recent years, he never lost his keen interest in them. He was a man of wide acquaintance, one who had hosts of friends all over the county."

E. C. MARTIN.—Born shortly before the outbreak of the Civil War, and left fatherless during the terrible days of that great conflict, the early life of E. C. Martin was one of extreme hardship. Undismayed by the obstacles confronting him, however, he has steadily risen through his own untiring efforts and now occupies a gratifying position as one of the substantial and influential men of his community.

Alabama was Mr. Martin's native state and here he was born on January 20, 1860, near Guntersville, in Marshall County. His parents were Asbury and Martha (Pogue) Martin, and shortly after their marriage, which took place in Georgia, they removed to northern Alabama. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin, all of whom are living: Sophrona is the widow of George King and resides in Tulare County; James H. is raising cotton in Arizona; William Theodore resides at Santa Ana, where he is in the employ of the city; E. C., the subject of this biography, and Josephine, the wife of William H. Barker, a fruit grower of Tulare County. Mrs. Martin removed to Colorado, remaining there for some time, then came to California, where she resided until her death in June, 1915, near Visalia.

Directly after the beginning of the Civil War, Asbury Martin enlisted in the Confederate Army and was soon engaged in active service. During the desperate fighting in the battle of Chickamauga in 1863 he was wounded three times, and died on the way to the hospital; like many others who perished in this fierce conflict, he lies in an unknown grave. His wife was a noble woman and although her family had been financially ruined by the war, she succeeded in keeping her little family together, but only at the cost of the hardest struggle for a livelihood. When E. C. was five years old the mother took her children to Bedford County, Tenn., and here she rented land and farmed. Here he attended school for a few years, but his educational advantages were meager, for as soon as he was old enough he had to render what assistance he could toward the support of the family. He began working out on neighboring farms, remaining in Tennessee until he was twenty-one years of age, and being ambitious for a better education he attended Palmetto Academy, Palmetto, Tenn. He then went to Navarro County, Texas, where he obtained a teacher's certificate, his education having been attained almost entirely through his own individual efforts, and here he taught school for several terms.

He then engaged in farming in Texas and through his tireless industry he became the owner of a farm of 220 acres near Corsicana. This he devoted largely to growing grain and cotton and to stock raising and in this he was very successful, becoming one of the prosperous farmers of that vicinity. After a residence of twenty years in Texas, during which time he had brought his place up to a high state of cultivation, he disposed of it at a good profit in the fall of 1901, and came to California with his family in January, 1902. They settled at Santa Ana and within a month after his arrival here he bought the eight-acre farm at 1176 East Chestnut Avenue, and here he still makes his home in the beautiful mansion erected by the late Mr. Crookshank for his own residence. From time to time Mr. Martin increased his holdings until he had twenty-eight acres, and this he steadily improved, continually increasing its value. Recently Mr. Martin disposed of half of his acreage, retaining fourteen acres, which is planted to walnuts, now in full bearing and bringing in a handsome income. He is active in the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, and served as a director of that organization for three years. About the year 1908 he bought a 428-acre ranch near Tulare, on which he raised alfalfa for four years, selling the ranch at a profit; he now owns a sixty-acre alfalfa ranch eight miles west of Tulare.

Mr. Martin's marriage, which occurred at Bazette, Texas, October 25, 1885, united him with Miss Roxie Moon, a native of that state. Mrs. Martin was orphaned in her early childhood and she was reared by Mr. and Mrs. John W. Pope, who accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Martin when they came to California and spent their last years with them. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Martin: Martha Agnes is the wife of J. Roy Adams of Imperial, who is in the real estate business there and a member of the board of supervisors of Imperial County; John A. married Miss Rosalie Lyon and is a rancher at Tulare; Charles E. is a graduate of the University of California and also of Columbia University, New York, where he received his Ph.D. degree; he is now assistant professor of international law at the University of California; Eva is a graduate of the University of California, class of '18, and she has just recently taken her master's degree; Edith Grace is a student at the Santa Ana high school.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and Mr. Martin has been a local preacher in that denomination for thirty-six years, having been licensed to preach when twenty-four years of age. They are very active in the work of the church and for eight years Mr. Martin was superintendent of the Sunday school and is now the teacher of the men's Bible class. A consistent Christian, his noble Christian manhood has been a source of strength to the community. A Democrat in national politics, he always puts principle above party in local measures.

JAMES F. CONLEY.—How much a young man may accomplish of what is worth while if only he directs his energies and expends his time in the proper way, is admirably illustrated in the case of James F. Conley, the rancher of Yorba Linda. He was born in Clay County, Ill., on January 8, 1871, and attended the common schools of Hoosier Prairie. His father was a pioneer farmer in Clay County, and as the eldest of a family of three sons, James hired out for farm work, at the early age of thirteen years, at only eight dollars per month wages. Then, for some years, he worked equally hard as a farm hand at thirteen dollars a month, and he labored in the broom-corn fields at one dollar a day, to earn money to come to California.

While a mere youth, James Conley had looked toward the Far West with eager interest, and in 1887, the boom period, two years before Orange County was formed, Mr. Conley came out to Orange with W. H. Isom and was employed with Mr. Hargrave in planting out vineyards around Orange and Santa Ana. He also worked around as a ranch hand for Mr. Craig, and later he was employed by Owen Handy, the pioneer rancher of Villa Park. The following year, on January 5, 1891, Mr. Conley was married to Miss Nettie Handy, the only daughter of Owen Handy, now the mother of their one child, Mary Gladys, who has become the wife of E. A. Taylor, the rancher and expert mechanic of Yorba Linda.

In 1911, Mr. Conley came to Yorba Linda, the pioneer of the valley and the first to erect a fine residence at Yorba Linda. He purchased ten acres of the best soil that he could locate, and today he has a profitable grove of ten acres of Valencia oranges. He is a member of both the Anaheim Union and the Yorba Linda Water companies, and is well supplied with water for irrigation. The recent oil boom has induced many of the ranchers to lease to oil companies, but thus far Mr. Conley has held aloof and refused such offers. Prior to his advent at Yorba Linda, Mr. Conley farmed for six years in the Irvine district, and during that time he was located close to the Orange County Park, and before that, he enlarged his experience in agriculture by leasing land from the George B. Bixby estate. A member of the Chamber of Commerce of Yorba Linda, Mr. Conley lends a hand in every way possible for the advancement of the best interests of the community in which he lives and prospers.

Mr. Conley was instrumental in securing the right-of-way and deeds to the property required for the Yorba Linda Boulevard, to be held by Orange County, and for a number of years served as overseer of road work in the third Fullerton district. He had charge of grading roads and developing new thoroughfares in the section around Yorba Linda, and no road work in Orange County shows to greater advantage than that vouched for by Mr. Conley. This ability to execute what is regarded as among the most important of public works is recognized in such recent engagements as that for Mr. Conley from the La Habra Heights Developing Company, where he acted as foreman and completed grading and reservoir work laid out by the chief engineer. He has also completed three miles of road work for the National Exploration Company, in the Olinda district. Mr. Conley has participated in practically every important movement for the betterment of Yorba Linda and vicinity, and it is not surprising that he is among the most esteemed residents of the district.

BERNARD ARROUES.—Among the well-known families of Orange County is noted that of Bernard Arroues, of the Brea district, where he has lived with his interesting family since 1912, and where he is welcomed as a progressive citizen and a prosperous citrus grower and general rancher.

France was Mr. Arroues' native land, and his birthplace was in Basses-Pyrenees, where he first saw the light of day October 10, 1873. His parents were Jean and Marie Arroues, farmer folk of that section of France, and here Bernard Arroues spent his boyhood days, attending school and assisting his father on the farm, sheep raising being the main industry in that locality. Coming to America at the age of eighteen, Mr. Arroues located in Orange County in 1892, going into the sheep business. His first three years here were spent on the Irvine ranch, and he then grazed sheep on the old Bolsa Chico and Bolsa Grande ranches, the present site of Huntington Beach, for seven years. Subsequent to this he formed a partnership with the Toussau Brothers, and together they ran from 6,000 to 8,000 head of sheep. As this land was gradually sold off and divided into small ranches, sheep raising was no longer so profitable, so Mr. Arroues disposed of his herds, and in 1904 purchased a tract of 100 acres southwest of Brea. Here he engaged in general farming, raising hay, beans and corn on land that had never before been under cultivation. In 1907 Mr. Arroues erected his comfortable home on the ranch, and two years later he set out twenty-five acres of it to lemons and Valencia oranges, now in full bearing and bringing him a handsome income. Recently he has added seven acres more to his orchard, this tract being set to walnuts, oranges and lemons. He has installed a splendid pumping plant of his own which has a capacity of fifteen inches, so that he is thoroughly prepared to take care of his crops, no matter how dry the season may be.

At Fullerton, on August 20, 1903, Mr. Arroues was united in marriage with Miss Marcelina Yturi, who was born in Spain, in the district just south of the Pyrenees. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Arroues: Jean Jose, is a student at the Fullerton high school, and Katherine, Josephine and Marcelina attend the public school at Brea. The family are members of the Roman Catholic Church at Fullerton. Mr. Arroues became a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1900, and ever since that time has been loyal to all movements that have helped to build up the place he selected for his home. One of the early settlers of this part of Orange County, Mr. Arroues can indeed feel that his success is due entirely to his steady hard work and the thrift and industry that are characteristic of his French forebears, as coming here with practically no means he has accumulated a generous portion of this world's goods.

PALO ALTO FISHER.—A conservative, but very successful contractor active in hard work for nearly forty years is P. A. Fisher, of Laguna Beach, popularly known by all who are acquainted with and esteem him as "Ol' Dad Fisher," who was able, some years ago, to retire to his equally well-known and appropriately named ranch, "Sweet Home." He was born in the Shenandoah Valley, Va., on May 19, 1848, the son of Abraham Fisher, also a Virginian, and an expert mechanic and blacksmith. His ancestors on the Fisher side came from the British Isles, while his maternal ancestors migrated from Holland. Abraham Fisher had married Miss Lucy Shepard, and she was a native of Pennsylvania. They both attended the Methodist Church, and Abraham Fisher stood so well in the community that he was the justice of the peace.

Our subject attended the log cabin school, but only for about fourteen months, and most of the education he acquired was after the Abraham Lincoln fashion—reached after and seized by himself. An older brother, Benjamin, enlisted as a lad of only sixteen years in the Confederate Army and served for four years during the Civil War; and after that awful conflict, the family found itself wrecked, with everything lost save the resolution to work and retrieve.

P. A. Fisher remained in Virginia until 1872, and for a number of years worked on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad. Then he set out for Illinois, and on October 27, 1872, located in Woodford County, where he helped to survey and lay out the town of Roanoke. He himself bought town property, and being on the high road to prosperity, decided to take the next great step and set up his own domestic establishment. Establishing himself as a contractor in painting, he also became police magistrate in Roanoke, an office he held for twelve years; during the coal strike in 1873, he was appointed deputy sheriff, and rendered valuable service. He was also for several years a member of the Democratic County Central Committee.

In 1909, Mr. Fisher came out to California and Laguna Beach, where he continued to take contracts for work. Two years later, he purchased a ranch, in partnership with his son-in-law, Frank B. Champion, located in the canyon three miles north of Laguna, and containing thirty-one acres. In 1914, he built a fine residence there, and named the farm, the "Sweet Home Ranch." In various ways he improved the property, and brought it to such a high state of cultivation that he has been able to grow successfully walnuts, pears, berries, apples and some melons and vegetables. At the present time, Mr. Fisher is the sole owner of this very productive ranch, for in 1918 he purchased his son-in-law's share. On his ranch he has developed a valuable source of water, known by the appreciative neighbors as the Joseph Spring.

In September, 1873, Mr. Fisher was married to Clara S. Robinson of Roanoke, Ill., of Virginian parents, and two children blessed this fortunate union. Virginia is now the wife of Frank B. Champion, of Laguna Beach, and the mother of one son, Frank B., Jr. And Orpha has become Mrs. Raymond L. Jones, of Oakland, and the mother of three children, Dorothy Estella, Orpha Clara and Raymond L., Jr. Mrs. Jones is a university graduate of Normal, Ill. In 1884 Mrs. Fisher died, and on April 18, 1886, at Roanoke, Ill., Mr. Fisher was married again, this time to Miss Anna Elizabeth Coverly, of Apple River, Ill., who proved a kind and devoted stepmother to the half-orphaned children; besides these children Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have reared two girls, Mattie, Mrs. W. T. Summers of Long Beach and the mother of four children, Frances, William, Beatrice and Martha; and Nellie M. who died at the age of eighteen. Mr. Fisher is a Mason, and in politics he seeks to act with a liberal mind.

R. CLARKSON COLMAN.—Prominent among the successful young artists of California may be mentioned R. Clarkson Colman of Laguna Beach, who has made that place in Orange County his permanent abode, regardless of future tours of the world in search of life and local color. He was born in Elgin, Ill., on January 27, 1884, the younger of two sons of Sumner M. Colman, a descendant from the well-known family of Colman, that have lived for generations at Colman Station, named for them, on the Illinois Central Railroad. His mother was Miss Charlotte Clarkson, also a native of Illinois, the daughter of George Clarkson, who was a pioneer mining engineer of Leadville, and a member of a family hailing originally from England where they had been seafaring men for generations.

From his earliest memory of things, R. Clarkson Colman had a strong desire to draw and paint. When very young he was influenced by the paintings of Henry A. Elkins and A. W. Kenney who were artist friends of his family, and well-known landscapists of a decade ago. At the age of sixteen he studied with L. H. Yarwood, of Chicago, and sketched independently through Illinois, and Southern Wisconsin, along the Fox River being his most favored sketching grounds. Mr. Colman in 1903 joined his parents, who had moved to Dallas, Tex., and established a studio there, making numerous sketching trips to the Gulf of Mexico. He received a commission to paint the old Indian forts of West Texas; commencing with Fort Concho at San Angelo, at the extreme spur of the Santa Fe Railroad, continuing to Fort Pecos on the Pecos River. This arduous but delightful task kept him busy for two years. He spent some time in San Antonio, later moving to Waco. He exhibited at the principal exhibitions in the state; taking first prize at the Texas Cotton Exposition, in 1920.

On the fourteenth of July, 1909, Mr. Colman was married to Miss Frances M. Fannin, a graduate of the Mulholland School at San Antonio, Tex. Mrs. Colman is a member of a prominent Texas family, closely connected with the making of the early history of Texas—the heroes, Colonel Fannin and James Bowie, being of the same family. She was the only child of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Fannin of San Antonio.

In 1911, accompanied by his wife, R. Clarkson Colman went to Europe, touring Germany, and Belgium, and settled at Paris; where he studied under Jean Paul Laurens, Academie Julien, and later at the Grande Chaumerie. He studied, sketched, and painted in Italy and southern France; and visited Switzerland and England, in each advancing his own technique and demonstrating to foreigners the native genius of a son of the New World. Mr. and Mrs. Colman returned to America in 1913. After spending several months in New York and Chicago, they came to California, spending the first winter in Pasadena, later having a studio in Los Angeles. The year 1916 was spent at La Jolla where he painted and taught. In 1917 he was director of the Santa Ana Art Academy.

Laguna Beach, having been a favorite sketching grounds for some time, he decided he had found there the "soul of his dreams," so, bought several fine ocean front lots on which he has his studio and home. This cosmopolitan artist is a great addition to the growing colony at Laguna. He is a member of the San Diego Art Guild, the California Art Club, and the Laguna Beach Art Association of which he is a charter member. The Popular Prize at the 1920 Annual August Exhibition of the Laguna Beach Art Association was awarded Mr. Colman's canvas, "Summer Radiance." Mr. Colman is one of our most successful and best-known marine painters, exhibiting annually at Riverside, Pasadena, and Los Angeles, and in cities in other states. His pictures have been shown in many women's clubs. The Santa Monica Bay Women's Club recently purchased one of his paintings for their collection. He is represented in the public library of Waco, Tex., and Ajo, Ariz., and many private collections.

Mr. Colman is an enthusiastic motorist, and the automobile is now the magic carpet of the artist carrying him quickly to his desired sketching grounds. Since coming to California he has painted the Coast from San Diego to San Francisco; and declares the scenic beauty equal to the Riviera.

Good fortune seems to have attended this artist all his life, for he luckily escaped death twice. When a boy, he was accidentally shot by a playmate, who sent bullets flying wildly into his knee joint, and through his right arm; later he fell eighty-four feet from a cliff, and escaped without injury. He is a Republican in national political affairs, and an enthusiastic American. Both he and his wife have many admirers in a large circle of friends.

EDWARD SPENCER JONES.—Another illustration of the lure of California for those who have once lived here and wandered away is afforded in the experience of Edward Spencer Jones, a worthy rancher, who by hard work and the application of the best that he had to offer, has done his share and liberally, too, toward making Orange County what it is today. He first settled in this country in 1874, but from 1880 to 1885 he was absent from the state and only returned in the middle eighties to remain here "for good." He is a native of Illinois and was born in Huey, Clinton County, in the Prairie State on July 7, 1857. There he received his education and early training in the great task of earning a living and in 1874 he came directly from Illinois to what is now Orange County. His father was John M. Jones, who married Miss Mary J. Phillips, born in Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. The father was a farmer and died when thirty-two years of age, his wife having preceded him several years. Three uncles of Edward Jones served in the Civil War, Michael, Charles and James Jones, the former and latter holding commissions as officers. Three children were born of the union of John M. and Mary (Phillips) Jones, but the subject of this sketch is the only one of them now living.

Left an orphan when fourteen years old, Edward S. Jones since then has paddled his own canoe, working on farms in Illinois for a livelihood for a time. In 1874 he arrived in Santa Ana, Cal., and found employment on the O'Neill ranch, where he rode the range for two years; next he drove the stage between Santa Ana and San Diego, being engaged in this hazardous work for a period of two years; then we find him riding the range in Oregon and later in Washington and British Columbia. After spending four years in the northern country he returned to Santa Ana, which by comparison he decided was the best region he had ever seen and here he settled down to make his home and improve his ranch.

In 1885 occurred Mr. Jones' marriage to Maud Turner, the ceremony being performed at Santa Ana, and their union has been blessed with four children: Edward M., Annie L., Jane and Frances, and all make their home under the parental roof. Mrs. Jones is a native of Purdy, Tenn., where she was born on June 7, 1870, and presents in a charming and unpretentious manner the culture of the South. All in all Mr. Jones has had a valuable, if at times a discouraging experience along agricultural lines. When he purchased his ranch he set it out to grapes, and these having proven a failure, he set out walnuts. When he found that the soil was not adapted to their growth, he put in apricots, and after testing the foregoing fruits, he planted oranges, succeeding at last with his latest venture. Mr. Jones has been a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association since its organization. He has always enjoyed popularity and nowhere more so than in the circles of the Odd Fellows, to which famous order he belongs.

JOSEPH W. SKIDMORE.—A native son of the Golden State, Joseph W. Skidmore of Laguna Beach, was born in Los Angeles on September 9, 1891, a son of George E. and Catherine A. (Brenizer) Skidmore. George E. Skidmore was born in Lamar County, Texas, on November 10, 1846, was a prospector and an explorer and was one of the first to blaze a trail through Death Valley and, like others bent on scientifically studying the unknown parts of the earth and in time paying a fearful price for their intrusion upon untamed Nature, Mr. Skidmore's life was shortened through exposure. He was married in 1882 and the family lived in Newhall, then Riverside, and finally moved to Santa Fe Springs in the hope of benefiting his health, but he died there on March 26, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Skidmore had four children: Lee Ethel, the wife of Oscar Farman, of Los Angeles; Joseph W., of this review; Guy, who was born on the same day and month five years later than our subject and on Admission Day at that; and Anita Maria, Mrs. Maurice D. McElree, of Orange. After the death of Mr. Skidmore his widow married the well known pioneer, "Nate" Brooks, of Laguna Beach.

"Joe" Skidmore, as he is known by his friends, attended the schools of Laguna Canyon, and in 1908 was graduated from the Orange County Business College. His first employment was by W. P. Fuller and Company of Los Angeles, and on Saturdays and Sundays he worked as a life guard at Redondo, being an expert swimmer and water-polo player. In the declining days of his stepfather, "Nate" Brooks, he assisted in the management of his business interests and upon his death he assumed heavy liabilities and became manager of his mother's estate; also for the C. A. Brooks estate.

Mr. Skidmore has made numberless improvements for the interests of the citizens of the beach city, including the water system for Laguna Heights, which serves a six-mile frontage. He bought water-producing land at high prices to insure against a water shortage, and now there is a large reservoir in the canyon and three four-and-one-half inch pipe lines leading into Laguna—one line being 25,000 feet long. There are three reservoirs with capacities of 250,000, 40,000 and 100,000 gallons respectively, the system costing about $100,000. Grading, leveling and subdividing is continually being done, all to please those who live at or visit Laguna and Arch Beaches. There is abundant evidence that the labor and money thus spent in bettering conditions, and in advertising, have not been spent in vain.

Mr. Skidmore helped organize the Laguna Beach Chamber of Commerce, of which he is serving as treasurer; is a member and the secretary of the Laguna Beach Sanitary District board; has served as clerk of the school board and cast his influence in favor of the most modern equipment for the school rooms; and also as one of three members of the board of control of the Laguna Art Association. In fact there has been no movement for the bettering of conditions at the beach city that has not had his support and encouragement. With his brother, Guy Skidmore, he is owner of the Coast Royal and Tract No. 99, and other lots and business property there; and he and his wife own the famous Laguna Terrace and numerous lots in the district.

On September 18, 1912, Mr. Skidmore was united in marriage at Los Angeles with Flora Bel Geier, a native of California and a daughter of Samuel C. and Nancy Geier of Los Angeles, now residing in Laguna Beach, and they have two promising sons Donald and Orville. Mr. and Mrs. Skidmore and their family enjoy a deserved popularity in Orange County, where he is known as a loyal "booster."

A. THORMAN.—An esteemed citizen of Tustin who has found here the comforts and pleasures of home life, so that he has very naturally become a "booster" for Orange County, wishing others to know the truth and to come here to reside, is A. Thorman, the well known rancher of East Sixth Street. He was born in Fayette County, Iowa, on December 10, 1863, the son of two sturdy pioneers, William and Augusta (Schmidt) Thorman who came out from Germany to Fayette County, Iowa, in about 1840, so early that they were sixteen weeks on their journey from Bremen. There his father located on sixty acres and raised grain and stock. Of this union, our subject is the only son and survivor.

He attended the school in the district in which he was born, while he worked on the farm of his father, and remained at home until he was twenty-three years of age. Then, for five years, he rented his father's farm, and after that he purchased land and settled down to farming.

In 1899 Mr. Thorman's first wife died and having always had a desire to see California with its balmy climate and tropical fruit, in comparison to the bleak cold winters of Iowa he concluded to come hither, so he brought his children to Southern California in 1900 locating at Pomona and there purchased a nine-acre orange grove.

While living at Pomona Mr. Thorman was married to Miss Maude Freeman of Pomona, who was a native of Chicago, Ill. In 1906 he sold his Pomona holding and removed to Tustin where he immediately purchased his present orchard of eleven acres, set to Valencia oranges and walnuts. He also owned 115 acres known as the Rogers property, near Santa Ana, which he farmed for several years, when he disposed of it and purchased thirty-eight acres at El Modena, which he has set to oranges and lemons. He is a member of the Tustin Hill Citrus Association and the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association. The four older children of his family are: Clara, who is training at the Angelus Hospital, Los Angeles; Otto has the distinction of having served as a soldier overseas; and is now a rancher at El Modena; Emma, a graduate in pharmacy of the University of Southern California, is now practicing at the City Hospital in San Francisco; Albert F. attends the California Institute of Technology at Pasadena; the youngest are named Ida and Charles and are attending school at Tustin. Mr. Thorman is a Republican, and he and his family are members of the Presbyterian Church of Tustin.

WILLIAM J. HANSLER.—Few, if any, of the present generation of citizens of Orange County fully appreciate the debt of gratitude they owe to the early pioneers, those fearless and courageous men and women who experienced great hardships in blazing the path for future civilization and laying the foundation for the present prosperous conditions of the wonderful "big-little" county of Orange. Great honor is due to these men and women and their names should be perpetuated in the history of the county. Numbered among such are the names of Henry and Mary A. (Phillips) Hansler, parents of the subject of this review. They were born in the Dominion of Canada and New York, respectively, and migrated to California in 1876, locating near Westminster, in November of the Centennial Year, where they purchased the ranch now owned and occupied by their son, William J.

Whether the early pioneers came to the Golden State by ox teams, across the plains, sailed around the Horn, or were among the more fortunate ones who later came by rail, they were all greeted by an uninviting, sandy desert in the section now known as Orange County, formerly a part of Los Angeles County. It has taken many years of arduous endeavor, great patience and endurance on the part of these hardy pioneers, to make the desert waste blossom as the rose.

The Hansler family are descendants of an old Pennsylvania Dutch family that moved from the Keystone State to the Province of Ontario, Canada, locating at Pelham. William Hansler's grandfather, Andrew Hansler, lived for many years in Pelham Township, where he followed farming and it was in this same township that he married and continued to reside until he passed away. He could read and write the Dutch language fluently. Great-grandfather Hansler was one of the first settlers in Pelham Township.

William J. Hansler's mother, before her marriage to Henry Hansler was Mary Ann Phillips, a native of Cattaraugus County, N. Y. Their family consisted of ten children: Asa, a farmer in Pelham Township, Canada; Sarah Ann, who died in childhood; John Andrew, passed away when two and a half years old; Truman resides in Fresno County; Elizabeth Esther is now Mrs. Edwin Wiggins of Colusa County; Margaret Ellen married J. E. Miller, a rancher in Orange County; William J., the subject of this review; Rosanna is the wife of Luther R. Newsom, a rancher of Stanton; Julia Ann is the wife of Ernest Carner, who resides at Winkleman, Ariz.; Robert Oscar, the youngest member of the family, is a rancher at Seeley, Imperial Valley, Cal. The Hansler family is a very large and influential one and every year a family reunion is held. A newspaper of Welland, Canada, in speaking of the family says: "The Pelham Hanslers have a record rarely exceeded. The homestead of Andrew Hansler has been that of the family for the past four generations, 120 years. During that time the property has never been mortgaged." The great-grandfather, as well as the grandfather of William J. Hansler, were ministers of the Dunkard Church.

William J. Hansler was born in Pelham, Canada, on November 13, 1869. His father having died before becoming a naturalized citizen, William J. was obliged to take out his naturalization papers, which he gladly did, and is a most loyal and patriotic citizen. Mr. Hansler became a member of the Friends Church, known as the Quaker faith, uniting with the Alamitos Friends Church. His first wife, Miss Mary E. Hirst, who passed away in 1899, was a member of that church. The second marriage of Mr. Hansler occurred in 1915, when he was united with Miss Cora Alice Stith, daughter of William Fletcher and Hettie (Hubbard) Stith, her father being a blacksmith at Long Beach, employed by the Long Beach Water Company. Mr. and Mrs. Stith are the parents of three boys and four girls; the boys have all passed away, two dying in infancy, and the third being accidentally electrocuted while engaged as an electrician at Stockton, Cal. The daughters are: Cora Alice, Mrs. Hansler; Nellie, Mrs. Simmons of Picher, Okla.; Ita, Mrs. Riddick of Long Beach; and Bertha, Mrs. Mitchell also of Long Beach.

Wm. J. Hansler

Mrs. William J. Hansler's grandfather, Rev. Jeremiah Hubbard, a minister of the Friends Church, was sent by the missionary board as a missionary, with the sanction of the President of the United States, to Indian Territory, to seek to pacify, civilize and Christianize the fierce Indians of the Territory and of the Southwest. He labored with telling effect for over forty years. He wrote several books telling of his experiences there, among them, "A Teacher's Ups and Downs from 1858 to 1879," and "Forty Years Among the Indians." He also wrote several books on the histories of the various Indian tribes. He was greatly beloved by the entire community, and when he died the business houses of Miami, Okla., closed their stores during his funeral.

SAMUEL T. MILLER.—A highly esteemed citizen of Santa Ana who never tires of sounding the praises of Orange County, is Samuel T. Miller, the retired apiarist, who is also well-known as a wide traveler who has experienced no end of profitable adventure. He was born in North Carolina on December 1, 1837, the son of Nicholas Miller, a descendant of an early and prominent Carolina family, who came to be extensive planters. His wife, the mother of our subject, was Nancy Smith before her marriage, and she also descended from a fine, old-time family.

When Samuel was six years of age, his father removed with the rest of the family to Rockport, Ark., and there took up a tract of raw land, commencing new chapters in an arduous existence terminated only when, in Arkansas, he died at the ripe age of eighty. Having attained the age of seventeen, the young man pushed out into the world to support himself. At first he went to El Paso, then of importance as a station on the way to Mexico, and as the headquarters of stage companies having routes throughout the Southwest, and for a couple of years he was employed as a stage driver. The route through the wild country constantly exposed him to great perils. He was also exposed to both sun and storm, so that he was glad to say goodbye to such savagery and engage in merchandising in Juarez, Mex., in which line he did very well until the outbreak of the Civil War.

Then he furnished horses to the Confederate Army, and also other war supplies, and when the Confederates had to retreat, he went with them, hoping to get money due him which was never paid. Another six months of hard work as a storekeeper led to his venturing into Mexico and starting a stage line from Monterey south to San Luis Potosi. He kept at his hazardous task for eighteen months, when everything was taken from him by the Mexican Army. Thereupon he returned to the United States and ran a stage route from San Antonio to El Paso, Texas, but this was soon cleaned out by the Indians. Then he was engaged as a guide by General Wesley Merritt who was building up the old forts on the Mexican border, destroyed during the war, for which services he received five dollars a day and his board.

Bidding San Antonio farewell, Mr. Miller took the New Orleans steamer to Omaha, about 1867, and from there crossed the great plains into California and the Sacramento Valley. He had really sailed up both the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and had tarried at Omaha for a while to work at the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad. After arriving in California, he spent several years in farm work. Deciding to return east to New York, Mr. Miller sailed for Buenos Aires, traveling on a sailing vessel that took sixty-two days to make the voyage; and having seen something of the country, he set sail again for Southampton and Liverpool. Then he steamed across the Atlantic again to Philadelphia, and in 1870 once more arrived in California at Sacramento.

In 1873 he came south to Santa Ana, to which place his attention had been directed through an acquaintance formed with a teacher at San Diego. He located on 160 acres in Belle Canyon, built himself a log cabin, still to be seen, and lived there for fifteen years before he got his title. He went in for bee culture and the gathering of honey, and made a record as an apiarist with a harvest of forty tons of honey in a single year, and had twenty tons left from the year before, so had sixty tons on hand at one time. One of the results of these later years of hard, successful work is Mr. Miller's ownership today of considerable choice residence property in Santa Ana.

Mr. Miller was married in Los Angeles by Reverend Bovard, in 1878, to Mrs. Amy (Taylor) Inman, and they are the parents of one son, Cyrus G. Miller, a rancher at Imperial. Mrs. Miller was born near Quincy, Adams County, Ill., a daughter of Thomas and Hester Ann (Rundell) Taylor, born in Tennessee and New York, respectively, who were farmers in Illinois. Her father served in an Illinois regiment in the Civil War. Afterwards he removed to Oregon where he resided until he died. He was a prominent G. A. R. man. His widow spent her last days with Mr. and Mrs. Miller, and died at the age of eighty-nine years. Mrs. Miller was educated in the public schools of Illinois. She was first married in Illinois in 1869, when sixteen years old, to Mr. Jno. W. Inman, who followed farming there until he removed to Nevada and later came overland to California, locating at San Juan Capistrano about 1877. Her husband passed away at that place. Later she made the acquaintance of Mr. Miller and they were married. By her first marriage she had two daughters: Emma Viola, now the wife of W. A. Webster, resides in Sacramento; Lorena is the wife of W. D. Anderson of Santa Ana. Mrs. Miller is a member of the Congregational Church of Santa Ana. In national politics a Democrat, Mr. Miller is second to none as an American citizen.

ARTHUR WEST.—An early settler of Orange, who for years has given freely of both his time and means to advance the growth and prosperity of both city and county, is Arthur West, whose pleasing personality has naturally drawn around him a large circle of devoted friends. He was born in Wiltshire, England, in 1852, the son of Stephen and Eliza (McCluen) West, the seventh in a family of nine children; and while being reared on a farm, received the best educational advantages afforded by the excellent country schools. When he had put aside his books, at the age of sixteen, he was apprenticed to learn the carpenter's trade in Bristol, and having become a master carpenter at the age of twenty, he worked for three months in London and then came out to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, landing from the steamer Mohongo in 1873 at San Francisco. There he worked at his trade until 1875, when he came south to Orange.

At McPherson he bought ten acres of land; but as it was a very dry year, he had no crop, and it became necessary for him to return to San Francisco to make sufficient money to meet the periodical payments and interest on his ranch. On returning to Orange he assisted his brother Henry in contracting and building, erecting, among other structures, the first two schoolhouses put up in town. Success followed all of their subsequent efforts, and for the next twenty-five years they completed many of the finest homes in Orange.

During this time Mr. West improved his ten acres, on which he also made his home, and set out Navel oranges which grew into a splendid orchard, so that he was able to ship thirty boxes of the citrus fruit to the World's Fair in Chicago, one box of which was selected for presentation to Carter Harrison, at that time mayor of Chicago. Just as he was hailed with the prospect of success, however, the red scale appeared to alarm the citrus world; and as there was then no means known by which to destroy the pest, the orchard was ruined, and he had to grub out the trees, and burn them up. He then set out walnuts and cultivated them until they were ten years old.

By that time science had found a means to combat the scale, and the section in which Mr. West lived was found to be favorable to Valencia oranges, so he took out the walnut trees and set out Valencias, and in time sold his land for $2,000 an acre, a splendid price for those days; in fact, one of the highest anywhere recorded, and that, too, for land for which he had paid only forty-five dollars an acre. This sale helped to give a decided impetus to the local citrus industry, and Orange moved to the front as a Valencia orange-growing section.

With Paul Kogler, Mr. West then purchased ten acres near Placentia Avenue, not far from Anaheim, a tract with two-year-old Valencia and Navel orange trees, for which they paid $650 an acre. This orchard he is now caring for, and as it is already in bearing, it is very valuable property and a source of much satisfaction. About 1882, also, he purchased a block of five acres on what is now on Palm, between Lemon and Glassell streets, where for some years he raised apricots and walnuts. When, however, the town had grown and the time was ripe, Mr. West laid the tract out in city lots as the Arthur West Addition to Orange, and he has already sold off all but two lots, on which he resides. This investment has also proven very profitable, as he paid only $500 for the five acres. Naturally, Mr. West is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and gives that wide-awake organization his best support.

As a lover of out-door sports—so natural to one born an Englishman—Mr. West has been particularly fond of hunting and shooting. In the latter he has long excelled, and his record at the contests of the California Inanimate Target Association, at Stockton on May 30, 1896, won for him the diamond medal. He has also won many honors in live-bird and clay pigeon shooting, and this has made him so well known among the hunters of the state that nothing pleases him so much as when he can have the time to spend in the wilds. He has also very naturally for years been a member of the Los Angeles Gun Club. In national political affairs a Democrat, Mr. West is a broad-minded, nonpartisan supporter of the best obtainable for local welfare, both in respect to measures and men.

COL. S. H. FINLEY.—It is not given to many men, as in the distinguished career of Col. Solomon Henderson Finley, the civil engineer and county supervisor, to serve their fellowmen in such a varied manner, and to serve them so acceptably, for he has been a member of the Santa Ana Board of Education for two years, county surveyor for twelve years, city engineer of Santa Ana for six years, chief engineer of Orange County Highway Commission for two years, and for four years a member of the board of trustees of Santa Ana, half of which time he was chairman of the board. In 1916, also, he was elected supervisor for a four-year term. At various times he has served as city engineer of Newport Beach, Huntington Beach and Seal Beach.

The Finley family in the United States harks back to good old Colonial days and the generations that lived and died especially in Virginia, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Tennessee. Among them were Senator Jesse Johnson Finley, John Finley, the poet, Robert, Robert Smith, Robert W., and James Bradley Finley, clergymen, John P., the educator, Samuel, the soldier, Clement Alexander, the surgeon, and Martha, the author so well known for her prolific output under the nom de plume, Martha Farquharson, the Gaelic translation of her surname. James Finley was born and reared within the confines of old Virginia so dear to his ancestors, but as the years went by, he threw aside old traditions and removed to newer Kentucky, and finally as far as Lincoln County, Mo., where he engaged in farming. He also did considerable surveying in both Virginia and Kentucky—thus carrying on some of the good work begun by no less a personage than George Washington.

While in Kentucky, a son was born, named Andrew R. Finley, who inherited his ability as a surveyor, and for several terms served as county surveyor of Lincoln County, Mo., including the period when he was judge there for a term. He was indeed a versatile man, for he also maintained a woolen manufactory and superintended the farm that he owned near Auburn, Mo. The year 1870 found him in California, first in Salinas, Monterey County, and after a year on a ranch near Antelope, in Sacramento County. In 1878 he came to Orange County and bought 200 acres of land near Santa Ana. The land was so arid at first as to be of little or no value for crops; but two huge artesian wells were bored, and thereafter irrigation made of the area a blossoming garden. In 1887 he sold the land to a subdividing company, which laid out the town of Fairview; and then he removed to Santa Ana, lived here retired, and died in 1897, in his seventy-ninth year. He was a stanch member of the United Presbyterian Church, which repeatedly honored him as their ruling elder. Mrs. Finley was Miss Caroline Gibson before her marriage, and she was born in Lincoln County, Mo. Her father, George Gibson, was a farmer of Scotch-Irish descent. She died in Santa Ana on April 5, 1901, aged seventy-one, the mother of a large and devoted family. While the family home was in Lincoln County, Mo., Solomon Henderson Finley was born on October 10, 1863, so that he was about seven years old when the Finleys removed to California. Besides the typical public schools of his locality and period, he attended Monmouth (Ill.) College, from which he was graduated with the class of '86. Three years later, he was honored by receiving the degree of A.M. from the same institution.

Returning to California at the close of his college days, Mr. Finley located in Santa Ana and went into his profession, that of surveying and civil engineering. His ability was soon recognized in his election, in 1891, as surveyor of Orange County, and in 1899 he was reelected. During these years he laid out many additions to Santa Ana and other cities, and was chief engineer in constructing the reservoir on the Modjeska ranch, which has a concrete dam with a capacity of three million cubic feet.

As might be inferred from his enviable title, Colonel Finley has had a military career important as a chapter in the annals of California. On January 6, 1890, he entered the ranks as a private, enlisting in Company F, Ninth Infantry, National Guard of California, and gradually rose until, in January, 1895, he was commissioned as captain. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, his company was mustered in on May 5, 1898, being accepted as Company L, Seventh California U. S. Volunteers, and Governor Budd tendered Mr. Finley his commission as captain. The regiment was stationed at San Francisco, and was mustered out of service in Los Angeles on December 2 of the same year. Subsequently he continued as captain of Company L of the National Guard, and in April, 1902, he received promotion to the rank of major of the Seventh Regiment. In 1904 he was commissioned colonel, and in 1908, at the expiration of his term of service, he was retired with the rank of colonel.

Not less interesting nor important has been Colonel Finley's part in the development of railroading in Orange County. Natural bent as well as first class technical preparation eminently fitted him to become chief engineer and superintendent of construction of the Santa Ana and Newport Railway, which was later extended to Smeltzer. In 1891 he was made chief engineer for the Bolsa drainage district, and constructed its system of drain ditches. He likewise had charge of the planning and construction of the ditches for the Talbert drainage district, a work that extended from 1904 to 1909, and the Delhi district in 1910, and several other drainage districts of the county at other times. He built, as has been said, the concrete dam for Madam Modjeska at her ranch in the Santiago Canyon in 1900; and the following year, he purchased with the Hon. P. A. Stanton of Los Angeles and the Hon. J. N. Anderson of Santa Ana, the site of what is now Huntington Beach, and incorporated the West Coast Land and Water Company, serving as one of the company's directors. They laid out Huntington Beach, which was at first called Pacific City, and as engineer, Colonel Finley had the responsibility of laying out the site.

On January 8, 1890, in Santa Ana, Colonel Finley was united in marriage with Miss Ida Hedges, a native of New York, and the daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Telford) Hedges; they have had five children—Gailene, Malcolm H., Knox H., Wendell W. and Rhodes A. Finley. The family attend the United Presbyterian Church, and the Colonel belongs to both the Sunset Club and Radio Club of Santa Ana and the Democratic party. Upon the organization of the city of Santa Ana in 1888, he was made a member of the first board of education, and it was when he was secretary that the Central school house was constructed. He was one of the charter members of the Chamber of Commerce and served as one of its directors.

ELMER L. CRAWFORD.—An Orange County banker whose conservative aggressiveness typifies the twentieth century spirit animating and directing the financial interests of the Golden State is Elmer L. Crawford, the popular cashier of the California National Bank. He was born at Danville, Iowa, on September 17, 1881, the son of Franklin P. Crawford, and his good wife, Mary J. Six children blessed this union, and Elmer was the third in the order of birth. Both parents are still living, and they make their home at Tustin.

Having finished the usual courses at the excellent grammar and high schools of Iowa, Elmer continued his studies at Howes Academy, at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, taking a two-year teacher's training course, after which one year was spent as a teacher in the public schools of Iowa. Not contented with this life, however, Elmer next enrolled as a student with the Gem City Business College of Quincy, Ill., from which he was graduated with a master of accounts degree. When twenty-two years of age, he left home and the Hawkeye State and came west to California. He found much to enlist his attention and to appeal to his imagination for the future; but Santa Ana looked best of all, and in Santa Ana he pitched his tent.

In Santa Ana, also, he first engaged in banking, taking service for a year with the old Commercial Bank. Then, for four years, he was assistant postmaster, and in 1910, at the time of the organization of the California National Bank, he joined its staff. In the beginning, he acted as teller and bookkeeper, later becoming assistant cashier and for the past two years has occupied the cashier's desk. He is also a director in the bank.

At Tustin, in May, 1907, Mr. Crawford was married to Miss Maud Leck, a charming lady with a wide circle of friends. He is fond of out-of-door life, especially mountain climbing, hunting, fishing and camping in the open, and together Mr. and Mrs. Crawford enjoy pleasures unknown to those devoting so much of their time to the less profitable attractions of society. In matters of national politics Mr. Crawford is a Republican, but he is one of the first to volunteer for work in any local movement eschewing partisanship and having for its goal the development of the community on broad and permanent grounds, and the uplift of social conditions.

C. L. NORTON.—A successful, popular man of affairs, who always finds some time to "lend a hand," and generally a very helpful one, to advance every worthy movement in local affairs, is C. L. Norton, who was born on December 7, 1878, the son of H. J. and Clara (Turner) Norton, pioneers who helped to settle the great plains of Republic County, Kans. His mother died when he, the oldest child, was only three years old, and so he was reared by his aunt, Rebecca Woodard. He attended the little red schoolhouse of the district, and there got that fine general training which has proven so useful to thousands and thousands of American young men.

In 1894, Mr. Norton's stepmother came west to California and Tustin, and at the station of Aliso, on the line of the Santa Fe just to the south, was made agent. The following year, the sad death by accident of his only brother occurred, and Mr. Norton came to California from Republic County to attend the funeral. What he saw of California industries and California prospects interested and encouraged him so much that he remained here. A stepbrother, E. B. Collier, also in time established himself in California, and is the secretary and manager of the Central Lemon Growers Association.

Mr. Norton became especially interested in the handling of Navel oranges, and soon became an expert packer. He worked in the packing houses at La Verne, Riverside, Fontana and Rialto, and learned all that they could teach him. For a couple of years he was connected with the E. E. Wilson Fruit Company, packers and shippers, and is now with the Golden West Citrus Association as field man.

On May 26, 1909, Mr. Norton was married to Miss Lela Holford, the daughter of J. D. Holford, a rancher of Tustin, who passed away in 1918. She was born at Tustin, and attended the Tustin schools. She has grown up a talented artist, and still studies with Miss Minnie C. Childs, of Chicago, who has established her well-known studio at Tustin. Two children, Helen L. and Claude James, have blessed this marriage. Mr. Norton is a Republican in national political movements, but nonpartisan when it seems best to support local affairs without regard to party lines and for the real and lasting good of the community.

HENRY DIERKER.—A progressive, broad-minded and liberal-hearted American citizen who is such a distinguished resident of Orange that he has been pronounced "the finest old gentleman that ever lived," is Henry Dierker, a native of Hanover, Germany, and just eighteen months old when his parents concluded to remove to the United States. His birth occurred on April 5, 1840, and his father and mother were Victor and Clara (Koenig) Dierker. They pushed on west into St. Charles County, Mo., and at St. Charles became farmers. They cleared a farm of timber and later sold it, and in 1858, moved to Wentsville, in the same county, and there died. They had seven children—three boys and four girls, and of these Henry and his younger brother George are the only ones now living, George residing at Wentsville.

Henry, next to the youngest in age, was reared on a farm, while he received only a private school education, there being then no public school there. His oldest as well as his youngest brother went through the Civil War, and during the raids of the notorious Bill Anderson, Henry served in the Missouri State Militia for three months. On Washington's Birthday, 1866, he was married to Miss Marie Gruer, a native of that state, who died in Orange on November 7, 1913. They had ten children. Annie is Mrs. Henry Benne, of Stanton, Nebr., and she is the mother of six children. Ella is Mrs. Holstein, of Dodge, Nebr., and she has four children. George is married and is a rancher here, and the father of four children. Tillie presides gracefully over her father's home. Fred is a rancher in Orange, is married and has one child. Ed is married, and lives at Orange with his wife and three children. Ben also is married, lives here, and is the father of four children. Albert is a horticulturist in Yakima, Wash. Harry is married and ranches at Anaheim, and Mamie is Mrs. Will Kogler of Orange. There are twenty-two grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren.

Henry Dierker and his brother built a hotel at Wentsville, which he conducted as the Wentsville Hotel until 1870, when he sold out his interest to his brother and then removed to West Point, Cuming County, Nebr. The previous year he had bought 400 acres of land at $3.75 per acre, and he now began to improve it. He raised corn and stock, and fed cattle, hogs and sheep, driving them to market; and he met with such success that he bought more land until he had 1,140 acres, paying for this highest-priced ten dollars an acre. In 1891 he sold 700 acres at thirty-five dollars an acre, and three years later he disposed of the balance at fifty-five dollars an acre.

In 1891 Mr. Dierker brought his family to Orange; and from T. J. Lockhart he bought a forty-acre ranch near the town. It was set out to walnuts, but he improved it with oranges and bought first one, and then another ranch, until he had 115 acres in all. When his children came of age, he divided the property up and gave each his share. Then, about 1902, he bought his residence on South Glassell Street. He has belonged to the Lutheran Church all his life, and has done yeoman civic service as a Republican. Mr. Dierker has always been public-spirited, and while in Nebraska he had the local school for two years in his house, and he also acted as school trustee, and gave the two acres on which the school eventually was built.

ARTHUR E. KOEPEL.—Prominent among the leading attorneys, who have steadfastly sought to maintain a high standard of ethics for the Orange County Bar, Arthur E. Koepsel, of the well-known firm of Eden and Koepsel, enjoys that esteem, both indicative of the confidence of his fellow-citizens in the past and desirable and enviable as a guarantee of profitable patronage for the future. A native of the splendid commonwealth of Kansas, he was born at Yates Center on July 30, 1883, the son of Herman Koepsel, a faithful and highly-honored clergyman of the Methodist Church, who had married Miss Augustine Burchardt. After retiring from a rather strenuous life, the Reverend Koepsel came to Santa Ana, Cal., in 1907 and in 1913 he passed away, his devoted wife surviving him until November 20, 1919. Besides serving his congregation with the true conscientiousness of a shepherd caring for the sheep, Mr. Koepsel served his country, when the Civil War broke out and the Federal Government had need, enlisting and fighting in Company C of the Seventeenth Wisconsin Infantry Regiment.

Educated in the public schools of Kansas, Mr. Koepsel was graduated from the Kansas City high school and for some seven years was engaged in railroad work. During this time he studied law privately and on coming to California in 1907, he entered the law department of the University of Southern California, and on July 22, 1908, he was admitted to the bar and until January, 1911, he practiced in Los Angeles. Then he joined the staff of the district attorney of Orange County and remained there until the beginning of 1919. On January 1 of that year he associated himself with Walter Eden, in the partnership already referred to, in the general practice of law.

A Republican in matters of national politics, Mr. Koepsel has shown his willingness to do civic service by acting as a member of the board of health. He has been an active member and is chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, and is president of the local Republican club. He had previously belonged to the State Militia, Company B, Third Missouri Infantry, from 1901 to 1903, and since August, 1917, has been captain of Company F, Infantry, California National Guards.

At Santa Ana on September 1, 1914, Mr. Koepsel was married to Miss Alfreda Holzgrafe of that city, a lady proud of her status as a native daughter and a member of the family of Ferdinand and Helen Holzgrafe. One child, Vernon, has blessed the union. The family attend the Evangelical Church and Mr. Koepsel is a Knights Templar Mason and Shriner, being a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles, and also a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks as well as the Orange County Bar Association. As captain of the local company of National Guards during the recent war, Mr. Koepsel gave much time and was active in recruiting men in his company, where he gave them preliminary training, and of the 150 or more enlistments in the army from his company all but three were made noncommissioned officers.

JOHN WILLIAM FREEMAN.—An energetic, successful rancher interesting as not only one of the first to grow alfalfa in the vicinity of Santa Ana, but the first to cut and cure it in the green state, is J. W. Freeman, who has the distinction of having had four sons in the service of his country in the great war. He had a very valuable mercantile experience in Alabama in early years, and later conducted arduous and costly experiments with garden products. Being a man of high principles, industry, varied experience and definite accomplishment, he is everywhere esteemed by those who know him.

Mr. Freeman was born near Montgomery, Ala., in September, 1860, the son of J. Wesley and Carrie (Sistrunk) Freeman, of English and Holland descent and were planters who owned 500 acres of good land there and raised cotton of a superior quality. During the Civil War the devoted father died, and later J. W. Freeman left home to go to Waco, Texas. He attended Burleson College, now Baylor University, in 1878, and for nine years made his home near Waco, raising, with his brother, corn, cotton and stock. While living in Texas, Mr. Freeman was married in Caddo, Indian Territory, in 1886, to Miss Laura W. White, born in Missouri, also of an old Southern family, who was reared and educated in Missouri and Texas.

During the height of the great agitation about realty here, known as the "boom," on September 14, 1887, Mr. Freeman came to California and settled in San Diego, where he was employed in helping to build the old Coronado Hotel. At the end of six months, he went to San Bernardino and was employed in the material department of the Santa Fe Railroad, and only after a year and a half there, was he able to reach Santa Ana and Orange County. He farmed on leased land, and then moved near Norman, Okla., where he purchased 160 acres which he devoted to general farming for about two years.

On his return to California, Mr. Freeman commenced farming again and went in for the raising of alfalfa. He cut and cured it in the green state, and soon had the largest trade, both in the city and the county, for the commodity. He also purchased and sold various groves, at one time having two of ten, and then one of twenty acres. He has recently disposed of all the land that he had in Orange County, and has invested in land near Hemet, Riverside County. He has forty-two and a half acres, interset, of walnuts and apricots at Hemet, and has a private electric pumping plant and well with a capacity of ninety inches—one of the finest plants in Riverside County. He is a member of the California Prune and Apricot Corporation. He is a stockholder in the Cooperative Cannery of Hemet, and also owns stock in the Federal Grocery Company, which has a chain of stores having headquarters in Los Angeles.

Fourteen children make up a very remarkable family bearing and honoring Mr. Freeman's name: Henry A., of Los Angeles, is an expert interior marble decorator, whose skill is known at Santa Ana on account of his work in the Orange County Bank; Claude W. is in the financial department of the Los Angeles Y. M. C. A., a position he has filled for seven years; James is farming in Fresno County with his brother; Charles L. was formerly cashier for the Southern Pacific Railroad at Oxnard and is now farming on his father's ranch at Hemet; Frank is also at home working on the ranch; Carrie, having graduated from the commercial course of the Santa Ana high school, is also at home; Minnie K. took the same course and was duly graduated with honors; John W., Jr., is working at home on the farm; Clarence B. is on the farm in Hemet with his brother; Ruth M. is a grammar school student; Laura A. is in the intermediate school; Willie B. died when he was two years old; Mabel E. is in the grammar school at Santa Ana; and Luella, the baby, is at home. The family attend the First Baptist Church.

Joseph Skinsen.

Mr. Freeman is especially proud of the record of his four boys for service during the great World War struggle. Claude W. trained in Camp Lewis, then served in the Ninety-first Division of the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Infantry, where he was personnel sergeant. He was in the Argonne offensive, and also in Belgium, and was discharged in May, 1919, at Camp Kearny, Cal. James A. entered the service in September, 1917, and trained at Camp Lewis. He served in the postal service in the Three Hundred Sixty-second Infantry, was wounded in Belgium, and was then returned to America and held in the hospital in the Presidio, to regain his strength and health. In February, 1919, he was discharged. Frank served in the Navy. He was fireman on the S. S. San Diego, which cruised the Pacific and the Atlantic Coasts. He was discharged from the navy on account of impaired health, but reenlisted in the army, and served in the infantry at Camp Lewis until November, 1918, when he was discharged. John W. served in the One Hundred Fortieth Regiment, Thirty-fifth Division of U. S. Army, went overseas to France, was in the St. Mihiel offensive and Argonne drive; then transferred to the Two Hundred Forty-second Military Police Company, having charge of troops sent from France to England for trial. He received his honorable discharge from service at the Presidio, at San Francisco, September, 1919.

JOSEPH HELMSEN.—A self-made man whose many sterling friends were, from the start, among his most valuable assets, and who, despite the handicap of physical disability, amassed a snug fortune accumulated from small and unpretentious beginnings, was the late Joseph Helmsen, who died on September 11, 1917. He was born at Leavenworth, Kans., on January 23, 1861, the son of Jeseoph Helmsen, who had married Miss Elizabeth Hesse, parents who were well-to-do and disposed to favor him in every way; but when a child of tender years, he became afflicted with hip disease, and specialists were called from distant cities to minister to and cure him, if they could. Among the incidents of those troubled days to which he later referred was the gift from his father and mother of a profusion of toys, procured from far and near, when he was a bed-ridden sufferer, and then children came to play with him, stimulated by his unwonted cheerfulness, all his life a characteristic of him. When his ailment was finally found to be such that no medical aid could come to his rescue, he was nursed into such convalescence as was possible, and after years of painful illness, he was able to get about on crutches.

In the days following the Civil War, the fortunes of his parents failed, and to add to his miseries, his father, after whom he was named, fell dead of sunstroke as the lad was succeeding in making his way about the old home. This was a great blow to the prosperity and hopes of the family; and after enduring the privations of a scanty income for years, he and his mother set out in 1874 for California. Their farm at Leavenworth had already been practically abandoned; for years it had yielded no revenue, and in 1873 a plague of grasshoppers took from them what little there remained of a once ample fortune. They reached San Francisco in 1874, and young Helmsen assisted his mother by gathering kindling from the Palace Hotel, which was then in course of erection. He filled a gunny sack with this material, and many were the encounters he experienced with city boys before reaching his humble abode with the fuel.

In April, 1875, young Helmsen and his mother took passage on the steamship Ventura bound for Anaheim, and on the eighteenth of the month, off the coast of Monterey, the vessel was wrecked and the passengers had to make for the shore in life-boats. Being a cripple, Helmsen was put aboard one of the first boats that got away from the ill-fated ship; and, seeing that his mother was still aboard the sinking vessel, he sought to leap into the sea and return to her. In this he was prevented; but, as the boat neared the beach, he sprang into the waters and tried to get back to the ship. He was picked up by John Bush, of Olive, uncle of the gentleman of that name now of Anaheim, who was also on the boat, and who thus saved him from drowning. He spent the night on the shore with other passengers who had been rescued, and not until the next morning did he find his mother—after hours of indescribable strain and mental agony. All of their scant belongings, together with their savings, which were in a trunk, went down with the ship; but they were able to continue south to Anaheim, where they arrived some days after the disaster.

Here his mother found employment, and young Helmsen was not slow in obtaining odd jobs about town to assist in keeping the wolf from the door. He soon secured a position in the Gazette office and learned to set type, at which he became an adept, and after some years of close application he and his mother saved enough money to establish a fruit and candy store in West Center Street, near where the post office now stands. Here they remained for years, saving their money and practicing the most rigid economy. During this time the wonderful climate of the Southland restored his health, and he discarded his crutches and gained flesh; he was six feet in stature and weighed about 215 pounds, and was a man of pleasing personality.

In 1885, the farm in Kansas having appreciated in value, under an honest administrator, Mr. Helmsen returned to Leavenworth and sold his holding for $10,000, a sum which he brought back to California and invested advantageously. He purchased forty acres of land at Placentia, when land on Placentia avenue was selling for fifty dollars an acre, paying for the same just $2,000, which he improved, and later sold the tract for $17,000. He made other investments here, and established himself in business in the building now owned by John Cassou on West Center Street, and later purchased the property adjoining this building on the east, and up to his retirement from business in 1913 conducted his stationery and notion establishment at that place. For this property he paid about $6,000, and it is now worth at least $50,000. He also purchased property on East Center, South Claudina and Olive streets, and was one of the organizers of the German-American Bank, becoming one of the heaviest stockholders and its vice-president, which office he held until his death.

Mr. Helmsen was also interested in land in the Imperial Valley, where he acquired 640 acres of school land; he sold a quarter section of it, and the balance is still owned by Mrs. Helmsen.

In 1911 Mr. Helmsen was married to Mrs. Jane D. (Cross) Green, born at Chaumont, Jefferson County, N. Y., the daughter of Geo. W. and Harriet Canfield (McPherson) Cross. The father died at Cape Vincent, and his widow, with her four children, came to Orange County in 1885, where her two brothers, Stephen and Robt. McPherson, were large ranchers. She now makes her home with Mrs. Helmsen, at the age of seventy-six years. Mrs. Helmsen came to Anaheim about twenty-seven years ago as manager for the Western Union Telegraph Company, and later for eight years was assistant postmaster of Anaheim. She still owns the Helmsen Block on West Center Street. Mr. Helmsen gave to the town half of the lot on which the City Hall now stands, and he was a trustee of Anaheim for eight years, half of that time serving as mayor or chairman of the board. He was a prominent Mason, belonging to the Anaheim Lodge, of which he was secretary for nineteen years. He was also known as "the boys' friend," and started many of them on the road to success and fortune. He taught them to save, to keep out of pool rooms and loafing places, and to lead clean and honest lives; and it is impossible, therefore, to state how far-reaching was his example and influence for good, and his life is certainly worthy of emulation.

EMIL R. TURCK.—To learn one thing thoroughly, and then to spend the active years of life in the industry for which both study and natural inclination have fitted one, is to carry on the world's work to the best of any man's ability, and it is such work that is building up our civilization of today. Such a man is Emil R. Turck, one of the prominent citizens of Orange County. Born August 6, 1857, in Brandenburg, Germany, he received his education in the public schools of that country, and in the engineering school, later taking a course in sugar chemistry in a German college. He has followed the sugar industry all his life since finishing his studies, and in Germany was chemist in the leading sugar factories.

Coming to the United States, in 1890, Mr. Turck was chief chemist for the sugar beet company at Grand Island, Nebr. When the American Sugar Factory was being built, at Chino, Cal., in 1891-92, he came there and was chief chemist at that factory for fourteen years, up to 1906, when he located at Anaheim, and for a time gave up his life work to engage in horticulture. He bought seven acres of land on South Lemon Street, and planted an orange grove, which he brought to a high state of cultivation. In 1913, Mr. Turck became chief chemist for the Anaheim Sugar Company, and continued in that position until 1917, when he retired and spends his time looking after a twenty-acre orange grove, the property of his wife and her sister, situated on North Lemon Street. An expert in sugar refining, Mr. Turck has taken a large part in the development of the comparatively new industry in the state, and as such takes rank with other able men who have helped, each individual to the best of his ability in his chosen line, in making California the richest state in the union. It is to such that the praise of posterity is due.

The marriage of Mr. Turck united him with Clementine E. Schmidt, daughter of Theodore Schmidt, one of the original fifteen settlers of Anaheim, who came from Germany in 1857 and bought 1,200 acres at the purchase price of two dollars per acre, and founded the town of Anaheim; Mr. Schmidt himself selected the name of the town. Water was brought from the river, vineyards planted and the town started. A more extensive biography of Mr. Schmidt will be found elsewhere in the work, and of the body of men who made this garden spot of the state possible.

One son has blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Turck; Arthur W., a graduate of the University of California with the class of 1919, and who served as ensign in the U. S. Navy during the World War, doing his share to preserve the rights of his country, though he did not see foreign service. He is now with a bond and banking house in Oakland. Fraternally, Mr. Turck is a member of the Mother Colony Club of Anaheim, and of the Odd Fellows. All movements that mean the upbuilding and development of the county have received his substantial assistance, and his unqualified approval for the advancement of his community.

JACOB MUELLER.—A very successful citrus grower who, with the aid of his good wife and excellent family, has amassed, after the hard work and residence of a third of a century in Orange, a comfortable competency, is Jacob Mueller, a native of Schwallingen, Saxe-Meiningen, in the heart of Germany, where he was born in 1860. There he attended school, and early received such a substantial grounding in the things worth while knowing, that later, in more leisure hours, he has been able by self-culture to add materially to his knowledge and capability. He was also so well drilled in the practical affairs of life that when he pushed out and was far away from home in the New World, he was better able than many other pioneers to grapple with raw and difficult conditions.

When just twenty years of age, Mr. Mueller crossed the Atlantic to the United States at a time when the tide of emigration from Germany was still at its height, and tarrying but a short time in the great metropolis of New York, he made his way west to Allen County, Kans., and at Humboldt he followed for seven years his trade, which was that of a stonemason. While in Humboldt he was married to Miss Johanna Hoffman, a native of Wallbach, Saxe-Meiningen, Germany, and the daughter of Valentine and Caroline (Goldschmidt) Hogman. Her father was also a stonemason, and brought her out to Allen County, Kans., when she was fourteen years old, and in that state both he and his wife passed to their eternal reward. A sister of Mrs. Mueller remained in Germany and died there. A brother came to Kansas, and during the Spanish-American War enlisted in the United States Navy. He served on the "Mariette" and accompanied the "Oregon" around Cape Horn. It is thought that he went to South Africa during the Boer War, but he has not been heard from for many years, and is probably dead. Mrs. Mueller, therefore, is probably the only member of the Hoffman family now living.

From Humboldt, Kans., on June 25, 1887—the year of the great "boom" in California—Mr. Mueller and his bride came to Orange County and settled at Orange, and for about a year he worked out by the day. The next year, he leased the Gallagher place, now the Fairhaven Cemetery. He bought his first place, consisting of eleven acres, at the corner of Fairhaven and Grand avenues, on October 30, 1895. It was set out to walnuts at that time, and he and his devoted wife had to work very hard to care for it and make it pay. Since then he has replanted the acreage, so that it is now in apricots, Valencia oranges and lemons, and has built a substantial and ornate cement-block dwelling house, and made many other improvements.

His next purchase was the plot of land now his home-place on Fairhaven Avenue, at the south end of Glassell Street, consisting of 11.59 acres, which he bought on July 12, 1897. He made his third and last purchase on January 7, 1901, when he bought 7.17 acres on Grand Avenue, adjoining the eleven acres he first acquired. All three of these places are situated in the southern part of the city of Orange, in a section giving every promise of a bright future. Besides that, Mr. Mueller owns some residence property in Anaheim, and also some residence property at Huntington Beach. He is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, the Villa Park Lemon Growers Association and the Orange Walnut Growers Association.

During these years of strenuous activity, Mr. and Mrs. Mueller have reared an attractive family of six children. The eldest, Gustav Herman, studied at St. John's College, at Concordia, Mo., from 1904 until 1909, when he married Huldah Stuerke or Sweet Springs, Mo. He became a rancher at Orange, and died on March 1, 1920, lamented by a wide circle of friends, and leaving a widow and one child, Alvira. Emil Carl, the second in the order of birth, was in the United States Army, serving overseas in France and after the armistice was with the Army of Occupation stationed at Coblenz, Germany, until he returned to the United States, when he was mustered out in August, 1920, and is now at home. Ernest F. Mueller is a graduate of Oakland College and afterwards from Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, and ordained a minister in the Lutheran Church, is now pastor at San Luis Obispo. He married Miss Emily F. Thommen of Oakland. Lillie Marie and Lydia Louise Mueller, twins, are graduates of the German Lutheran School at Orange, of which the youngest child, Annie R. Mueller, is also a graduate. The family are members of St. John's Lutheran Church at Orange. Mr. Mueller is a naturalized American citizen, and no one is more patriotic or public-spirited. In 1905, he erected his substantial two-story house of twelve rooms, up-to-date in all its appointments, and having a beautiful porch facing the southern end of Glassell Avenue and commanding a clear view of the American flag on the liberty pole at the Plaza in Orange. Of a sunny, philosophical, optimistic, common-sense temperament, Mr. Mueller is a good neighbor and a good friend, and is always appreciated by those who know his character and his conversational powers as "good company."

HARVEY B. ROYER.—An expert machinist who has proven himself to be a successful rancher is Harvey B. Royer, one of the dependable employes of the Santa Fe Railroad since 1909 and now also farming along the Romneya Drive, to the southwest of Fullerton. He was born at Lockhaven, Clinton County, Pa., on August 23, 1871, a member of a family dating back to the early days of the Keystone State. His father was Franklin V. Royer, a lumber man who purchased whole groves of forest, cut them down and ran the timber through his own mills; and so extensive was his business that it developed in several counties, including Center, Clinton, Union, Lycoming and Cambria. He died in Pennsylvania in 1900. His widow was Susan (Brungard) Royer, born in Pennsylvania and now makes her home with her son Harvey.

Harvey B. Royer attended the public schools of Clinton County, Pa., and remained with his father until he was twenty-five years old, at which time his father's mills burned down. Then he began to rebuild them, and took complete charge of the business. In 1900, he sold out and went to Johnstown, Pa.; and there he worked as a machinist in the employ of the Cambria Steel Company. Whatever he did, he so thoroughly carried out as to insure those for whom he was working of his intelligent, honest and expert service. In 1909 Mr. Royer came to California and settled in Los Angeles, and from 1909 to the present time has been a machinist with the Santa Fe Railroad Company, working on locomotives and giving genuine satisfaction to that well-equipped organization for difficult problems and delicate work. In 1912, he bought twelve acres in Orangethorpe on Romneya Drive, and in 1913 he moved his family to the ranch. When he bought the land, it was a barley field, and he himself set out the ten acres to Valencia oranges. He has his own private pumping plant and so supplies what water he needs for irrigation. His products in fruit he markets through the Stewart Fruit Company of Anaheim.

Mr. Royer's mother, Miss Susan Brungard before her marriage, was a woman of such superiority that it is not surprising that when our subject married, on June 25, 1895, he should choose, in Miss Rosie Schwenk, a helpmate worthy in every respect and promising from the first to be just the companion that he needed. She was born in the locality of his birthplace, and educated in the grade schools of Clinton County. Her father, Benjamin Schwenk, was a lumberman who engaged in business in the same way that the Royers had followed. He passed away in 1912, while his wife, Emma (Barges) Schwenk, died in 1916. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Royer; and the two sons have both distinguished themselves in the service of their country. Miss Ruth is the daughter, and her brothers are Merrill C. and Le Roy H. Royer. Mrs. Royer belongs to the Presbyterian Church of Anaheim, and Mr. Royer is a member of the Knights of Pythias and also the Odd Fellows of the same city.

Merrill C. Royer enlisted on August 31, 1918, as a military engineer and was sent to the Berkeley Training School; and on October 30, he left for Fort Myers, Va., and later he was sent to Camp Leach, Washington, D. C. He was serving in Company K of the Twenty-ninth Engineering Corps when he was shot during target practice, the bullet penetrating his spine; and it is said to have been miraculous that he recovered from such a wound. This delayed his progress so that he was not ready to sail for France until the armistice had been signed. On December 21, 1919, he was discharged at Camp Kearny, after which he returned to civilian life. He married Miss Rose Livingston and is with the Santa Fe at San Bernardino.

Wilhelmine Gertrude Grosse, Grosse.

LeRoy H. Royer enlisted on March 27, 1918, in the quartermaster's corps, and spent three weeks at Fort McDowell, after which he was sent to Camp Johnson at Jacksonville, Fla. He sailed from Hoboken, N. J., for France, after spending a few days at Camp Upton, N. Y., and bade good-bye to America on September 13, in a convoy of fifteen ships, landing at Glasgow, Scotland. He stayed in Camp Romsey near Liverpool, and then went through Southampton to Havre, France. He served in the motor transport service, and was stationed at such places as Tours, La Rouchelle, Nantes and St. Nazaire. On May 26, 1919, Mr. Royer returned to the United States, and on June 5 at Camp Mills, N. J., he was honorably discharged. Four days later he returned to California and is now attending Fullerton high and also assisting his father in caring for the ranch.

HENRY GROTE.—One of the earliest settlers and prominent residents of Orange was the late Henry Grote, who was privileged to contribute much toward the building up of both the city and nearby country districts. In his good work he was ably assisted by his wife, an excellent woman of business ability, so that both Mr. and Mrs. Grote enjoyed a wide circle of worth-while friends.

Mr. Grote was born in Rehburg, Hanover, Germany, on August 23, 1842, the son of Henry and Mary (Meyer) Grote, both of whom came to America and spent their last days in comfort at Bremen, Kans. They had four children—two boys and two girls—and among these, Henry was the oldest.

He was brought up at the old homestead, and educated in the public schools; and in time he learned the trade of a harness maker and saddler. In 1866 he came to the United States and located in Chicago; and for a while he was employed at farm labor. In 1868 or '69 he removed to Bremen, Marshall County, Kans.; and having undertaken to homestead 160 acres of raw land, he turned the first furrows in the soil. He planted corn and wheat, and raised stock; and for nine years continued as one of the progressive and successful farmers of that region.

In 1882, however, stirred by the reports of better things in California to be had for the coming, Mr. Grote sold out his Kansas property and moved to the Pacific Coast, and in the town of Orange he bought fifteen acres lying between North Shaffer and Pine streets, and running from Chapman to Maple. The land had been set out as a vineyard, but the vines died, and then he set out walnuts and apricots. Later, when the town grew, he laid out the Henry Grote addition to Orange, in 1888, and sold lots at fancy prices, and now it is nearly built up as a residence district.

In time, Mr. Grote joined P. W. Ehlen under the firm name of Ehlen and Grote, and conducted a general mercantile business, and such was their success in expanding their trade that they incorporated the concern as the Ehlen and Grote Company, and they built the Ehlen and Grote block, which they still own. Mr. Grote has also owned and improved several ranches, and with Mr. Ehlen he was interested in the National Bank of Orange and the Orange Savings Bank. Both Mr. and Mrs. Grote were heavily interested in the Ehlen and Grote Investment Company, in which they were directors; Mr. Grote was vice-president, and Mrs. Grote is secretary of the organization.

At Bremen, Kans., on October 16, 1873, Mr. Grote was married to Miss Wilhelmine Dusin, a native of Pomerania, Germany, and the daughter of Henry and Louisa (Kartt) Dusin. With her brother, August, the only other child, she came to Bremen, Kans., in the spring of 1873, and there met Mr. Grote. Six children have blessed their fortunate union: Emma has become Mrs. Heim of Olive; Sophia is the wife of Alfred Huhn, the manager of the Ehlen and Grote Company of Orange; Mary died at the age of thirty-five; Fred A. is assistant manager of the Ehlen and Grote Company; Lena assists her mother to preside over their home, although she is a graduate of the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana, and was bookkeeper until lately for the Ehlen and Grote Company; and Minnie, who is also a graduate of the Orange Business College, was also for a time with the Ehlen and Grote Company, in which Mr. Grote maintained his financial interest until his death, which occurred May 10, 1920, when Orange lost one of her best men and upbuilders and his passing was mourned by his family and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Grote identified themselves with the Lutheran Church here from its start; he was a trustee and treasurer, and was chairman of the committee having charge of the building of the old church and the school. He also presided over the responsible undertaking of a new church, erected at a cost of $50,000. Besides belonging to the church, Mr. Grote was also a member of the Lutheran Men's Club, while Mrs. Grote was always active in and an ex-president of the Ladies' Aid Society. Since her husband's death, Mrs. Grote continues to reside at the old home surrounded by her children, who shower on her their loving affection and devotion and assist her in looking after the large interests left by her husband, thus relieving her as much as possible from all unnecessary worry and care.

HERMAN A. DICKEL.—The enviable career of a worthy citizen of Anaheim is recalled in the family history of Mr. and Mrs. Herman A. Dickel, long honored residents of this place. A native of Germany, Herman A. Dickel was born on April 22, 1860, the son of George Dickel, also a native of that country. He had married Charlotte Zumwinkel, and they had eleven children. Among these, Herman was the youngest, on which account, perhaps, he enjoyed even more and better school advantages than ordinarily, attending the grade schools of his home district. Both parents, industrious and esteemed by those who knew them, are now dead.

As early as 1882 Mr. Dickel came to the United States, and having clerked for three years in Germany, and finished his apprenticeship in the proper manner, he had no trouble in securing employment in New York, where he also spent three years, and rapidly acquired a knowledge of American ways. In 1885, however, just when California was beginning to feel the impetus of the "boom," Mr. Dickel left the Atlantic metropolis and came to the Pacific Coast. Not only that, but he came straight to Anaheim, where for ten years he worked in Mr. Langenberger's store. In 1895 he leased the establishment, and for twenty-two years conducted it for himself as a general merchandise center.

On June 8, 1887, Mr. Dickel married Miss Rosie Schmidt, a native of Anaheim and a member of a family rather distinguished as Californians of the pioneer sort. Traveling most of the way wearily and at great danger on foot, her father crossed the great plains and settled in this vicinity about 1851; so that when, in 1857, a group of optimists founded Anaheim, he was here and ready to join in the movement. Three sons blessed this union: Theodore E., a mining and civil engineer, now in Tejamen, Durango, Mexico; Arnold C., of the same profession, in Pittsburg, Cal., and Percival A. Dickel, an artist, is at home. Arnold saw service in the great war. Three grandchildren have been born to attest the sturdiness of the stock.

Mrs. Dickel was a cultured and refined woman, with a love for the beautiful, and was an artist of ability, having spent four years in the art centers of Germany, studying painting. The Dickel home is replete with paintings on china and canvas of her own production. Kind, generous and charitable, she was a woman of beautiful character, and her passing, December 8, 1919, was indeed a severe blow to her husband and children, as well as her host of friends, for she was endeared to all who knew her.

A Republican in national politics, Mr. Dickel has served as city trustee of Anaheim for four years, and has been treasurer of the Anaheim Building and Loan Association for thirty-two years. He is an Odd Fellow, and also an Elk, and belongs to the Mother Colony Club. In many ways, Mr. Dickel has proven his value as a whole-hearted citizen, always having the future of Anaheim and Orange County before him, and ever ready to hasten the hour when the Golden State, among the late-comers into the Union, shall "come into its own."

FRANK WILLIAM CUPRIEN.—An American artist who has attained distinction in foreign lands as well as in his own is Frank William Cuprien, of the Viking Studio, at Laguna Beach, the Mecca of many, frequently those favored in foreign travel, who have discovered his whereabouts and his art, and who appreciate him at his true worth. He was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., on August 23, 1871, and attended the excellent schools of that home city. He grew up so near to the ocean that it is only natural he should have loved the sea while yet a mere youth; and he early became a marine painter. In the beginning, however, he received but scant encouragement when he most needed sympathetic help, his first efforts dating back to school days and his coloring picture books with the aid of a Murillo paint box given him—a keepsake he prizes today. His father was Charles Cuprien, a native of Brooklyn, the son of a tapestry and cloth merchant of that city who emigrated from Lyons. Charles Cuprien had married Miss Phillipin Millar, a native of Brooklyn, and the descendant of a well-known and long-established family originally from Manchester, England.

Frank William Cuprien pushed into New York City as early as he could, and in the evenings attended the art and drawing classes of the Cooper Institute, one of the oldest and best established and conducted schools of its kind in America; and when he had the leisure, he spent his free time profitably in the galleries. Up to his eighteenth year he had really been interested more in drawing than in painting, and his first course in painting at the Art League in New York was taken under the direction of the renowned artist, William T. Richards, of Brooklyn. When he was a mere boy, his ambition was to study under this master; and this dream was realized, on the attaining of his eighteenth year.

Soon afterwards, he left America to study in Europe; and in Paris he gave his attention to the voice and the piano, becoming proficient as a singer and a pianist, and earning a reputation for his own compositions. He attended the royal conservatories at Munich and Leipsic for three years, and in 1905 was graduated from the Royal Conservatory. Then he toured Italy, and spent much time in Florence.

About that time, he began to study marine art, and to perfect himself, he traveled up and down the Mediterranean, even to Athens, and spent eleven years in Europe studying and painting. During this time, in order to familiarize himself with the local color of the North Sea, he spent six months on fishing smacks out from Hamburg serving as a common seaman, just as Dana and others have done, but taking along his sketch-book in order to profit by moments of leisure; and liking the experience so well, he put in four months on a steam trawler, as a friend of the captain, through which association he had the best of opportunities to study from nature and sketch. He visited Helgoland before the fortifications were erected and the great guns mounted, and that was an experience in itself.

Upon returning to America, Mr. Cuprien concluded that California must offer much to the artist, and in 1912 he came to Los Angeles, intending to settle at Catalina, and since then he has spent weeks at a time roaming over and sketching the scenery of the island. In 1913, however, Mr. Cuprien began his association with Laguna; and in 1914, he erected there his studio to which, on account of his adventures in the North Sea of Europe, he has given the name of "The Viking." It is one mile south of the Laguna Beach Hotel, and overlooks the peaceful, beautiful Pacific; and as his own original creation, it attracts the attention of passersby.

Mr. Cuprien's style of painting as seen in his marines is intensely individualistic, and one may get some idea of his ideals by his definition of the true artist: "What a man paints is what is in his mind—the expression of the inner man put upon canvas by himself." Mr. Cuprien received the gold medal at the Berliner Ausstellung; first prize at the Cotton Carnival, Galveston, Tex., 1913; silver medals at San Diego in both 1915 and 1916; honorable mention at the State Fair at Phoenix, 1916; and a bronze medal at the State Fair at Sacramento, in 1919. He is a Republican in matters of national political import, and humanitarian and philanthropic in his attitude toward society and the problems of the day.

Mr. Cuprien is a member of the American Federation of Arts, the Leipsic Art Association, the Fort Worth Art Association, the California Art Club, and the Laguna Beach Art Association, being a charter member there, and one of the board of trustees.

KARL JENS.—A noted American painter who has contributed his efficient influence for the advancement of art in California and for the building up of an artistic atmosphere at Laguna Beach, is Mr. Jens, better known as Karl Yens, who was born in Altona, on the Elbe, in northern Germany, not far from Hamburg, on January 11, 1868, and grew up in a beautiful environment of gardens and villas, and with all the educational advantages that the Old World could offer. He pursued high school and college studies there, and took up and followed art in Hamburg, Berlin and Munich, and later in England and Scotland. When nineteen years of age, he studied at the Museum of Arts and Crafts at Berlin, under Professors Koch and Ewald, the latter the director of the institute, and these studies he continued at the Academie Julien in Paris, where he was under the guidance of the renowned Benjamin Constant and E. Paul Laurens. There he entered into sharp competition for honors, and was one of the few declared to have made much progress and been successful in 1900.

When Mr. Yens first came to America he traveled through the country as an artist, desirous of seeing the best there was and for six years made his headquarters in Cambridge, Mass. He exhibited in Boston and in Philadelphia, then moved temporarily to Washington, D. C., where he made a specialty of mural decoration; in New York, he later executed some mural work in theaters and private residences.

Mr. Yens had married in Germany, before coming to America, Miss Helene Grote of Cambridge, Mass., who was on her first trip to that country. Mrs. Yens died at their home in Cambridge while her husband was in Germany on a visit to his mother and left three children, Anna, Otto and Elizabeth, all of whom are in the East completing their educations. In 1909, in New York, Mr. Yens was married a second time, taking for his wife Miss Katherine Petry, a trained nurse who had been reared and educated there, and with him she enjoys a wide popularity.

In 1910, Mr. Yens removed from the East to California and settled at Pasadena, and soon after he had established a studio at South Pasadena, he became, in 1911, a professor in the University of Southern California, and for nearly three years had charge of their College of Fine Arts. From 1916 to 1918 Mr. Yens was an art instructor at the Los Angeles Polytechnic school.

While in the East, Mr. Yens made a specialty of portraiture, and is an expert in all mediums; being an etcher he owns his own etching press. He is particularly fond of out-door painting—landscapes and studies from nature. He called his workshop at South Pasadena, just beyond the Mineral Park, the Arroyo Verde Studio, and the name and the design and furnishing of the studio well bespeaks the man. Fond of roaming here and there, Mr. Yens has often limned the beauties of Southern California, depicting every feature with rare fidelity, and giving to all his work spontaneity and vitality.

Mr. Yens' aim to do the big and important things has been richly rewarded, for he has exhibited at all the leading exhibitions in Los Angeles and his paintings are a source of delight to the local art world. His larger works are shown in the leading exhibits in the East—The National Academy of Design and the Architectural League Club in New York; the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia; the Architectural League in Washington, D. C., and other places, for he keeps up a live connection with the East. He took the silver and bronze medals at both the State Fairs in California in 1915-1916; was also awarded the Clarence A. Black prize for excellence in landscape painting as a result of his participation in the exhibits at Exposition Park, Los Angeles. He is a member of the California Art Club and of the Laguna Beach Art Association, and was secretary of the Los Angeles Modern Art Society.

Despite his pleasant associations with other art communities, Mr. Yens removed to Laguna Beach on November 19, 1919; and here he has been an especially distinguished citizen ever since. An enthusiastic American, with rare confidence in our institutions for the future, Mr. Yens has been able, as few others are privileged to do, to contribute much to advance the appreciation for art among a folk heretofore too busy with founding a great commonwealth always to give time and attention to the finer attractions in life. When, therefore, Laguna Beach will come to its own in the matter of high art, the influence of this progressive exponent will be sure to be recognized and acknowledged.

CHARLES A. KNUTH.—A conservative, yet decidedly enterprising leader in business affairs, who has sought to lead a Christian life through the application of the Golden Rule, is Charles A. Knuth, of the Villa Park section of Orange County. He was born in Germany on January 11, 1873, and came to America with his mother. His foster father is William Knuth, who adopted the lad and he was reared as his son. The family moved to Milwaukee, and it was there Charles A. Knuth attended school for eight years, during which time he worked at his trades, continuing until 1887, when he decided the Pacific Coast country held better inducements.

On March 17, 1887, the "boom" year, William Knuth brought his family to California, and at Villa Park, in Orange County, he bought ten acres of land, gradually increasing his holdings, with the aid of his children, until he owned sixty-eight acres. Charles helped set out the trees and otherwise improve their holdings and in time the father gave to each of his children ten acres, retaining five acres upon which he and his good wife now live. While Charles was working on the ranch he found time to attend the Orange Business College, where he took a general commercial course. From 1908 to 1915 he traveled over, part of the state representing, at various times, some of the best-known commission houses of Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Since its organization in 1913, excepting one year, Mr. Knuth has been foreman of the field work for the Villa Park Orchards Association, which serves over 150 growers and handles the product of more than 2,000 acres. This position has brought him in close touch with the citrus industry of the state and occupies his time so that he hires the work done on his ten-acre ranch.

On June 7, 1905, Charles A. Knuth and Marie Steffens were united in marriage and they have two daughters, Norma Marie and Marie Charlotte, both now attending school. The family belongs to the Lutheran Church at Orange. Mr. Knuth is a Republican, has served on the election boards and is a member of the Farm Center. During the war he served as a committeeman on the loan drives. He is one of the best-known and well-liked men of his section of country.

MARTIN V. ALLEN.—A well-read, reflecting, self-made man, whose hard work and honest methods have made him a sharer in all the good things of life, is Martin V. Allen, a native of Bloomington, McLean County, Ill., where he was born on November 10, 1874. His father was Patrick Allen, a stonemason employed for most of his life by the Santa Fe, who died in 1918, at the ripe age of seventy-four. He had married Miss Margaret Allen, and she passed to her eternal reward when our subject was a mere youth. A sister of Martin died when he was twenty-four, and he is now the only survivor of his once happy family.

Having always had to work hard for a living, Martin Allen enjoyed but a few years of schooling, and so came to acquire that wide knowledge of agriculture for which he is locally famed, when he was a boy. The rudiments of the three R's were obtained at the Church Street school in Galesburg, Ill., and so thorough was that elementary training that when he came west to California in 1897 and cast his lot in with others who were rapidly developing Orange County, he was better equipped than many to wrestle with work-a-day problems. He started to grow barley, potatoes and corn on a ranch in Santiago Canyon, and securing his first crop of "spuds" in 1897, when prices were very low, he sold them to wholesale houses in Los Angeles and realized all that the market would allow. For eight years he followed cement contracting in Orange County and since 1908 he has been the able superintendent of the thirty-eight acres belonging to the Adolphus Busch estate in the Villa Park precinct. At one time he knew nearly every family in Orange County, but now so many settlers have come in he scarcely knows his nearest neighbors.

On July 31, 1901, Mr. Allen was married to Miss Anita Martin, a native daughter of Orange County, whose parents came to California from Texas in an ox-team train. Mrs. Martin, the mother, is still living at Villa Park, aged eighty-four. Two children have blessed their union: Ernest L. and Carl L., both attending school in Villa Park.

Mr. Allen belongs to the Odd Fellows of Orange and served one term as noble grand. Both Mr. and Mrs. Allen are members of the Rebekahs. He is a Democrat in national politics, but holds himself free to vote for whom he chooses. And in business, desiring to see California go forward by leaps and bounds, and to stabilize all her development, he is an independent shipper of produce and fruit. Mr. Allen was a member of Company L, Seventh Regiment U. S. Volunteers for service in the Spanish-American War.

LEONARD O. VAUGHAN.—A resident of California since 1892, Leonard O. Vaughan of Orange County has been an eyewitness to the many marvelous changes that have taken place in Southern California since that time. He is the representative of a Virginian family and was born at Upper Alton, Ill., on June 21, 1856, a son of Cornelius B. Vaughan, born in Culpepper, Va., but a pioneer of the state of Illinois where he became a farmer at Alton. He was a member of one of the brave bands of pioneers who crossed the plains from the East to California with ox teams in 1849 to mine for gold and he met with the success of the ordinary miner. He remained here for five years and then returned to Illinois to claim his bride. When he went back he took with him several gold nuggets as souvenirs and one of these is now in the possession of Leonard O., who had it mounted as a scarf pin. The mother of Leonard O., was in maidenhood Frances M. Smith, a native of Alton, and a daughter of George Smith, who is honored as the founder of Alton, where he erected the first cabin and ran a store and established the town site on Pisaw Creek. That was at a time when Indians were very numerous in that state, but he was on friendly terms with most of them. He taught school, read law and specialized in land law, and served in the state legislature with Abraham Lincoln. Later Mr. Smith, and Dr. Benjamin Shurtleff of Boston, Mass., endowed the Baptist College at Alton, so that it became known as Shurtleff College. Cornelius B. Vaughan died in Idaho in 1904, his widow surviving him until 1918, when she died at Long Beach, Cal.

In 1858, when Leonard O. was a child of two years the family removed to Carrollton, Mo., but at the outbreak of the Civil War, being a strong Union man, Mr. Vaughan returned to Alton with his family and from there enlisted for service in an Illinois regiment and served from 1861 to 1864, when he was honorably discharged from service. He was prominent in Grand Army circles after its organization and his G. A. R. button is one of the prized keepsakes of his son, Leonard O. After the war was over the family moved back to their farm near Carrollton, Mo., and it was here that the son attended the graded schools, after which he returned to Alton, entered Shurtleff College and was graduated therefrom in 1876, then joined his folks in Missouri.

In 1878, at Marshall, Mo., Mr. Vaughan was united in marriage with Miss Lenora Herndon, a native of Saline County, that state, and in time they were blessed with seven children, two of whom, L. O. Jr., and Cornelius B. are now deceased. Charles H. is an automobile dealer in Los Angeles and has two sons; Gertrude is Mrs. C. E. Wagner of West Orange and the mother of one son; Edna became Mrs. Ned Cutting and resides in Los Angeles; Russell T., is an oil-well driller in Granger, Texas, and he has a son and a daughter; Howard S. conducts an oil station at Sixth and Main, and one at the Central Auto Park in Santa Ana. He is the father of a daughter. The wife and mother died in Los Angeles on August 14, 1913.

In 1886 Mr. Vaughan moved to Greeley County, Kans., and there preempted land which he farmed. A natural mechanic, in 1887 he was induced to enter the service of the Santa Fe railroad at Coolidge, Kans., as a repairer of locomotives, coming to Los Angeles in 1892 in the service of that company. In 1895 he was in the employ of the Southern Pacific at Dunsmuir as an engineer, and in 1905 he came to Long Beach and was employed as engineer at the power plant of the water department of that city. In 1914 he came to Orange County and has since resided on his twenty-one acre ranch devoted to walnuts, and it is one of the best groves in the locality, rapidly being recognized as a show place. It was in 1914, in Los Angeles, that the second marriage of Mr. Vaughan took place when he married Mrs. Martha Shaffer. She died in December, 1917. Mr. Vaughan also owns a half block in Santa Ana upon which is located the Temple Theatre, a half block where the Central Auto Park is situated and numerous parcels of land in this county and in Los Angeles, so that he gives a great deal of his time to looking after his varied interests. He is a believer in the future of Southern California, Orange County in particular; is a supporter of all movements that tend to build up and promote the welfare of the people and is highly esteemed as a successful business man. In politics he is a Republican in national affairs, locally he votes for the best men and measures and he finds recreation as a member of the Elks lodge.

MRS. MARTHA M. SHAFFER VAUGHAN.—A pioneer of Orange County beloved by all who knew her was Martha M. Shaffer Vaughan, who for many years lived on a ranch on North Main Street between Santa Ana and Orange. A native of Rock Island County, Ill., she was born and christened Martha M. Cowles and was reared amidst the pioneer environments of that state when it was known as the "far west." Her marriage to Uriah Shaffer was solemnized in Decatur County, Iowa, in 1877. Mr. Shaffer was a Virginian by birth who descended from German stock and he was reared on a plantation in Hampshire County, Va. His birth occurred there on June 16, 1820, and he attended the subscription schools in his native locality until he was twelve, when he accompanied his parents to Lee County, Iowa, and there he became a pioneer farmer on the frontier, continuing farming in Lee County for himself from 1838 until he left that vocation to come to California in 1850 to mine for gold. He was among that hardy band of Argonauts that crossed the great plains with oxen and prairie schooners and arrived in Nevada County, Cal., September 7, 1850. He was not successful in his search for the shining metal and he took up land in Plumas County and engaged in ranching. After experimenting for several years he returned to Iowa and farmed in Decatur County, and while so occupied he became the husband of Martha M. Cowles.

That same year, 1877, they came to California and to Santa Ana, on the first railroad train that ran into that town. Mr. and Mrs. Shaffer became very prominent factors in the civic and commercial life of Los Angeles County, as Orange County had not been partitioned off at that period. When the new county was formed they continued to ranch and increase their interest in the new county and did their part to make it one of the best known and richest sections of this great state. They improved a ranch of twenty-five acres of walnuts, besides doing general farming on other land they owned. Both were stanch Republicans. Mr. Shaffer died May 20, 1902, after which Mrs. Shaffer erected a large twenty-six room house on her property, after her own plans. She also operated her walnut ranch and the 300-acre ranch besides, where she raised fine cattle and alfalfa, and had sixty acres of it set to walnuts. She was a good business woman and was highly esteemed by all who knew her for her integrity and public spirit.

Mrs. Shaffer became the wife of L. O. Vaughan on January 1, 1914, who took from her shoulders the cares of business and administered the property with fine success. She passed away on December 27, 1917, mourned by all who had known her for her unselfish spirit and great helpfulness as a pioneer woman of Orange County. She was a strong believer in Spiritualism and contributed much money towards that belief.

MRS. LAVINIA AVERY MAYFIELD.—A generous-hearted, hospitable woman, esteemed and liked by all who know her, and known as a conservative and cautious operator in business, is Mrs. Lavinia A. Mayfield, who was born an Avery and christened Lavinia, the place of her birth being Rusk County, Texas. On her father's side her ancestors came to America from Scotland and were among the early Southern families to settle on the Atlantic Coast. Her grandmother, Rachel (McDonald) Avery, was born on the Atlantic Ocean. On her maternal side her grandparents came from France. Her mother, Sarah Dumas (Halton) Avery, married a second time, choosing as her husband William Henry Talley, a lineal descendant of Patrick Henry. Mr. Talley was a successful orchardist who proved a kind and helpful stepfather. Her father, Rhoderic McDonald Avery, was a pioneer in Rusk County, Texas, and died when she was a mere babe. Lavina received her education in the common schools of the locality in which she was brought up and also studied at Kidd-Key College at Sherman, Texas, after which she taught school for two years. In 1889 Mr. Talley, her stepfather, removed to California with his family, and at Covina he purchased forty acres, which he in time set out to oranges.

On March 3, 1889, Miss Avery became the wife of Dr. M. S. Jones, the eye, ear, nose and throat specialist of Santa Ana. Dr. Jones was born in Clinton County, Ill., his parents being natives of Virginia. He was educated at McKendree College, at Lebanon, Ill., completing his medical education at St. Louis, there having the privilege of special courses under the celebrated specialist, Dr. William Niehaus, in ophthalmology and aural surgery, and with Dr. D. B. St. John Roosa of New York. Receiving his diploma in 1869 he entered into practice with Dr. Niehaus, but after a year his health failed and he went to Shreveport, La. Here he practiced for two years, and his health being improved he returned to his old practice at St. Louis, remaining there until January 26, 1874, when he came to California. After practicing for a year in Los Angeles he located in Santa Ana, where he soon had a large general practice. Becoming an enthusiast over the possibilities of citrus culture in this locality, he purchased a tract of sixty acres on East Seventeenth Street and Tustin Avenue, forty acres of which was devoted to oranges, and while he continued his medical practice Mrs. Jones looked after their horticultural interests, thus pioneering in an industry that has reached such vast proportions in Orange County. Dr. Jones was also very active in farming and was very successful in his undertakings in that line. Always enjoying a large and lucrative practice, he stood high in the professional circles of Orange County. He was a Democrat and took an active part in county politics, always working for the upbuilding of the neighborhood, on which account his death, which occurred at Santa Ana in 1908, was generally deplored. Mrs. Jones had also lost her mother, who passed away at Santa Ana the year before. Inasmuch as Mr. Talley had passed away in 1895, Mrs. Talley had disposed of the ranch property at Covina and bought residence property in Santa Ana instead. Mrs. Jones kept the orange ranch and home on East Seventeenth Street for some time after Dr. Jones' death, later disposing of it. By a former marriage Dr. Jones had two children whom Mrs. Jones reared and educated: Essie L., the wife of J. W. Jones of Boston, and George R., a rancher in Arizona. A sister, Mrs. M. R. Hall, who had removed from Colorado to Tustin, died on May 8, 1898, leaving five children in Mrs. Jones' care. The children are: Lavinia and Jennie Hall, now deceased; Bess is the wife of Sam Hill, a prominent merchant of Santa Ana; Avery Hall lives at San Pedro, and Lulu Hall is the wife of Charles F. Johnson, a postal employe of Santa Ana. Three years after Dr. Jones' death Mrs. Jones married Dr. W. S. Mayfield.

Mrs. Mayfield is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, in whose various activities she takes a prominent part. She also participated in various kinds of war work, and in whatever way she can, she endeavors to live up to and practice the Golden Rule. She is an enthusiastic supporter of every worthy project for the development of Southern California and is particularly loyal to Orange County.

CHARLES E. BOWMAN.—A practical and scientific rancher, who draws upon his own valuable experience, and who has the confidence of his associates, because of his conservatively progressive methods, is Charles E. Bowman, who good-naturedly boasts that he has been a booster for Tustin and Orange County since he was ten years of age. He was born near Savannah, Andrew County, Mo., on April 28, 1871, a son of W. D. and Ella (Galloway) Bowman, also natives of that great commonwealth. They had six children and among them Charles was the second in the order of birth. In 1881 Mr. and Mrs. Bowman came west to California and settled at Tustin, where Mr. Bowman became a fruit grower.

Charles E. Bowman attended the common schools at Tustin and later took a course at the Orange County Business College, being a member of the class of '88. As a young man he became identified with fruit packing at Tustin; the season lasting there only four months, the balance of the year he was in the employ of A. E. Bennett of Tustin, engaged in fumigating, and during this time became interested and made an exhausting study of citrus enemies and the best methods of getting rid of the pests, for when he was not packing he carried on experiments in this line. In time he was made foreman, first of the Fay Fruit Company at Whittier for two years and then for Gowen and Willard of Santa Ana, which position he held for four and a half years. Early in 1907 Mr. Bowman became a partner in a company styled Bowman and Ritchey, whose business was fumigating; later the firm was changed to Bowman and Wiley and in this partnership he continued until they owned eight different outfits, employing as many as fifty-five men. In the spring of 1916 Mr. Bowman became sole owner of the fumigating company and continued the business until 1918, when he sold it to engage in ranching. Since then, three consecutive times, he has bought, improved and sold properties in Tustin, and he has also become interested in oil production in Orange County to the extent of desirable holdings in the Richfield district. In October, 1919, he purchased a walnut and Valencia orange grove of ten acres on Laguna Boulevard in Tustin and became a member of the Tustin Hills Orange Growers Association, and also a member of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

On April 30, 1902, Mr. Bowman was married to Miss Anna L. Schillinger, a native of Easton, Pa., and the daughter of William Schillinger of that city. Both her paternal and maternal grandparents were pioneers of that same place, and she thus comes from a well-established family, whose folks have always been heavily interested in manufacturing and similar enterprises on the Delaware. A son and daughter blessed this union: Charles Clarence, who attends the Santa Ana high school and Frances Schuler is a pupil of the Tustin grammar school. The family attend the Presbyterian Church in Tustin, and Mrs. Bowman is a member of the Parent-Teachers Association at Tustin.

A Republican in national politics, Mr. Bowman is a loyal American citizen, especially and naturally proud of his record as a veteran of the Spanish-American war, in which he served as a member of Company L, Seventh Regiment, California Infantry, under Capt. S. H. Finley. He is also a member of the Tustin Lodge of Knights of Pythias, Whittier Lodge of Odd Fellows and Santa Ana Lodge No. 784, B. P. O. E., and a member of the Spanish-American war veterans.

H. J. KOGLER.—A highly-respected citizen of Orange County who owes his phenomenal success in part to his advocacy and practice of cooperative or team work, in part to his own Christian character and the application of Christian principles to everyday transactions, and quite as much, no doubt, to the intelligent, unselfish and faithful help rendered him by his capable wife, is H. J. Kogler, who was born, with his twin-brother, William J. Kogler, at Orange, on August 24, 1884, the son of Jacob and Dora (Shulz) Kogler, the well-known pioneers. He attended the public grammar and also the parochial school of the town, there being at that time no high school for the district; and later he was graduated from the Orange County Business College, where he was given an excellent practical training of just the kind that he soon needed.

At the age of eighteen, Mr. Kogler entered the employ of the Pixley Hardware Company of Orange, and from that time until 1906, he spent most of his time as a hardware clerk. In the latter year, with his older brother Paul, and his twin-brother, William J., Mr. Kogler formed a copartnership, buying out the Pixley interest in the hardware department of the Pixley Hardware and Furniture Company; and in 1914, the Kogler Company erected a modern store building on the property bought, and are at the present time carrying on the largest hardware business, with the most complete line, of any house in the county. Indeed, their business has grown to such proportions that they require two large floors and the entire basement, for among other commodities of real service, they handle bee-keeper's supplies, a kind of wares first provided for in a department installed about five years ago. Such has been the response of the agricultural public to this effort to meet the wants of a growing and prosperous class, that the Koglers now have the only complete stock of bee-keeper's supplies in Southern California outside of Los Angeles or San Diego.

At Orange, Mr. Kogler was married to Miss Eva Geiger, born at Kankakee, Ill.; daughter of Peter Geiger, whose good wife died while Eva was an infant. She was reared in and attended school at Orange, and naturally supported, with her husband, all the Red Cross and other war work. She has a brother Edwin who for two years served as a mechanic at Rockwell Field, and now has his honorable discharge. Five children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Kogler, and all promise to be as popular as their parents. The oldest two, Inez and Elmer, attend school in Orange; and the younger ones are Ildha, Evelyn and Carolyn.

GALE S. BERGEY.—A wide-awake business man who has had much to do with the development of commercial affairs at Huntington Beach, is Gale S. Bergey, one of the enterprising firm of T. B. Talbert and Company, dealers in real estate and authorized agents for the Ford Automobile Company, covering the territory in particular of Huntington Beach. He was born at Los Angeles on June 26, 1888, and was educated in the public schools of Long Beach and at the Fountain Valley school. He followed farming in the Talbert district, in Orange County, and so naturally came to work for and be associated with T. B. Talbert. After he had tried farming for himself for a couple of years, he went into partnership with Henry Talbert in the San Luis Rey district, in San Diego County engaging in farming two years.

In 1913, he entered the employ of the T. B. Talbert Real Estate Company, and later he was made a member of the firm. He gives most of his time to exploiting the Ford motor interests, and there are few men in all Orange County who know the local automobile trade better than does Mr. Bergey. He also knows the Ford automobile, and that is saying a good deal, despite the popular impression that the machine is so simple one need not trouble to get acquainted with it. In 1917, Mr. Bergey was appointed constable of Huntington Beach, in the fall of 1918 was elected to the office for a four-year term, and it is safe to say that no one has ever given greater satisfaction in that difficult office. He is efficient, alert, affable and blessed with human sympathy and common sense, two qualities of inestimable service in the administration of any such public office.

When Mr. Bergey was married, he took for his wife Adele H. Crockett of Los Angeles, but a native of Iowa, and their fortunate union has been blessed with two children, Frances Adele and Gale Le Roy. Huntington Beach may well congratulate itself on numbering among its expanding firms this one represented by Mr. Bergey, and on being able, at the same time, to get such an honest and satisfactory public officer.

SAMUEL HUFF.—The experiences of the early settlers in any new country are not appreciated by the younger generation for they know nothing of the dangers encountered nor the hardships endured by those who have blazed the way for our present day civilization. When Samuel Huff, now a prosperous and highly respected citizen of the Anaheim district of Orange County came to California in the closing year of the great boom, 1887, he first located in San Diego, where he remained for three years getting on his feet in order to branch out in agricultural pursuits and establish himself permanently. This he accomplished in 1901, when he purchased his present ranch of twenty acres, to which he added as he prospered until he now owns thirty-three acres of as fine ranch land as there is to be found in the county. This land was a barley field and was bare of improvements, but by unceasing hard work and good management he has seen the dawn of a better day and has prospered beyond his expectations, considering the difficulties he overcame in putting his land in condition to yield satisfactory returns. He now has ten acres of walnuts and eight acres of citrus fruits; all his trees he set out himself and they are now producing increasingly large crops year by year.

Samuel Huff was born in Kosciusko County, Ind., March 5, 1849, the year of the great rush to the gold fields of California. His father was Frederick Huff, a California gold seeker in the famed year of '49, when he left his home and family and crossed the Isthmus to seek the golden lure. He was more successful than the ordinary miner and after he had "made his pile" he returned to wife and babes in Indiana. He married Eva Angel, by whom he had eight children. By two subsequent marriages he became the parent of nine more. Of the first family, two are still living and residents of California, Samuel of this review and his brother, Eli Huff, of the Sacramento Valley.

Samuel received a common school education and was inured to hard work from an early age. When he left home he migrated to Kansas and there he owned a farm of 170 acres, which he devoted to stock raising and general farming. At the outbreak of the Civil War he tried to enlist in the service of his country but was denied the privilege on account of his youth. He bided his time, however, and later found a friend in an officer who was able to vouch for his age and he became a member of the Sixteenth Kansas Cavalry and for the ensuing eighteen months he was on duty and participated in many skirmishes and was on scouting duty until his honorable discharge at the close of the war. Samuel Huff comes from fighting stock, for his great-grandfather served in the War of the Revolution, thereby entitling our subject to membership in the Sons of the Revolution; his grandfather saw service in the War of 1812; his uncle, Peter Huff, was in the Mexican War; and himself and brother, Eli, were in the Civil War. Nor does this patriotic spirit stop here, for the son of Samuel Huff, Lewis Huff, served six months in the Spanish-American War, and the youngest son, Ralph E. Huff served for twenty months in the late World War, when he was through the campaign in France with the Ninety-first Division of the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Infantry. This direct line of fighting stock is a rare occurrence in the families of today and one in which any family may take a just pride.

In 1868 Samuel Huff was united in marriage with Miss Olive D. Smith, a native of Illinois, and six children resulted from this union: Lewis N., now of Long Beach; Ivy D., is deceased; William F., is also a resident of Long Beach; Effie G., is the widow of William S. Lang and lives in Reedley, Cal.; D. Eyman, is a well-known authority on citrus culture and is a resident of Orange County, as is Ralph E., who is living at home and assisting his father with the cares of the ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Huff have given their children the best advantages within their reach and they are proud of the success that all have attained, due in large measure to their home training.

Mr. Huff is a member of Buena Park Lodge of Masons; a member of Fullerton Post, G. A. R., of which he has served as commander; and he is a member of the Garden Grove Walnut Association. His ability and integrity are recognized by his friends and neighbors and he is beloved for his true worth to his family and the county. He has always been found ready to aid by giving advice and in a more substantial manner, those less fortunate than himself, and there are many who owe their success in life to his wise counsel and patient assistance. In all his trials and joys his good wife has ever been his companion and shares with him the esteem of all who have the pleasure of knowing them.

CHARLES A. BEMIS.—A wide-awake, helpful citizen of Yorba Linda who had a valuable experience in responsible public office in Iowa before coming to California, is Charles A. Bemis, the rancher of Ohio Street in Yorba Lane. He is a member of the Friends Church, and has been a Republican all his life, and was a hundred per cent supporter of the Red Cross and war loan drives during the recent World War. Born in Vermont on January 20, 1854, the son of Benjamin S. Bemis, Charles grew up on his father's farm, the eldest in a family of three children. His mother was Miss Mary Whitney before her marriage, a descendant of New Englanders who settled in America as early as 1635. He attended the public school of the district and a private academy, and when he was twenty-one years of age, he began to teach school and so instruct others.

On June 15, 1881, Mr. Bemis was married to Miss Ellen L. Perrin, a daughter of Louis L. Perrin, a native of Mansfield, Mass., and an expert machinist. He was justice of the peace and a member of the city council while he lived in Lowell, Mass., and in 1853 came out to California, remaining two years. Miss Perrin was born at Lowell on March 27, 1862, and in that city she attended public and high schools. She has a twin brother, George B. Perrin, who is living in Howard, Kans. Her maternal grandparents were born on Cape Cod, Mass., and England, respectively.

Mr. Bemis took up machine shop work, and stuck at it for ten years. He lived in Rhode Island for ten years; and in 1892, he moved west to Hawkeye, Fayette County, Iowa. He clerked in a store, and later farmed there, raising grain and stock. In 1906, he sold out and came to California. At first, he started ranching for himself; but later on, he became foreman of the Murphy ranch of 400 acres, having charge especially of the orchardist department, and was with them for five and a half years.

In 1911 Mr. Bemis with his son-in-law, O. W. Holland, purchased twenty acres, barley fields and open country in Yorba Linda, which has been developed into a citrus orchard. Mr. Bemis' land is now leased for oil. He is a member of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association, and also of the Water Company. Three children blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Bemis, two of whom are living. Mary E. is Mrs. George E. Le Fever, and lives at La Habra; and Clara L. is Mrs. O. W. Holland of Santa Monica. Mr. Bemis is a member of the Odd Fellows and with his wife is a member of the American Yeomen.

FRED W. SCHMIDT.—A well-posted, enterprising business man who has done much to advance agriculture in Southern California along scientific lines is Fred W. Schmidt, the wide-awake and accommodating distributor for Orange County of the Reo and Dort automobiles and the Fageol walking tractor. He is a native of Austria, where he was born near Vienna on July 8, 1890, and with his parents, Moritz and Marie Schmidt, he came to the United States when he was eleven years of age, locating for a while in North Adams, Mass. He attended the Berkshire schools, and later entered the employ of the Hallet and Davis Piano Company of Boston, learning in their factory all the branches of piano-making. From Boston, he removed to New York City, and there he was one of the reliable men of the Aeolian Piano Company. After mastering all the branches of the piano business, Mr. Schmidt came a step or two West, to Youngstown, Ohio, and was for two years in the employ of a retail piano house.

In January, 1914, Mr. Schmidt reached California and Anaheim and formed a partnership with C. T. Webber for the handling of all kinds of musical instruments; and, later he bought out his partner and formed the Schmidt Music Company, which is so well known to the residents of North Orange County. He carried on this business alone until March, 1919, when he sold out and entered the automobile and tractor field. He has been so successful with the celebrated Reo and Dort automobiles and the Fageol tractors that he has recently erected a new garage at 234 South Los Angeles Street to accommodate his rapidly growing business. He belongs to the Board of Trade, and never misses an opportunity to advance all other commercial interests, for the welfare of the community generally.

The Fageol walking tractor utilizes a distinct and radically different, yet practical and efficient method of traction. Its grousers, or "legs," mate with the ground—acting as a gear or cog—and give positive traction in every soil, and that, too, without surplus weight, loss of power through slippage, and without packing the soil. These are strong features of economy, and mean both less consumption of fuel and oil, and less wear and tear on the tractor. The action of the tractor wheels—walking in and out of the ground—allows the grousers to go just deep enough to reach ground solid enough for positive traction. The Fageol tractor weighs less than three horses, is only half as high as one, and does the work of six or eight. It has a short turning radius of seven feet, made possible by the use of a separate clutch for each traction wheel—and no differential. It is adaptable to a variety of work, being especially suited to the orchard, where it walks in and out among the low-hanging trees, and it is also suited to grain cultivation. Farmers, therefore, are using this light, economical-running tractor for practically any work done with horses. Mr. Schmidt handles Reo motor cars and speed wagons and Dort motor cars and has complete garage and service equipment for the care of autos and tractors. In January, 1920, he associated G. P. Siemann with him in business and formed a copartnership as the Anaheim Motor Company, so now the two are giving all their time to the business.

Elizabeth M. Hathaway

When Mr. Schmidt married, he chose for his wife a most accomplished woman, Miss Beatrice Reeks of Los Angeles, and now they have one daughter, Marjorie L. Schmidt. He owned a five-acre orange grove of six-year-old trees, two miles west of Anaheim on West Broadway, and there he erected a new home. This he recently sold and purchased a ten-acre Valencia orange grove seven years old, on Placentia Avenue and there he makes his home. He is musically inclined, and an accomplished performer on the violin, and while in the music trade often played the violin for church concert work, and he also established the Schmidt orchestra. He belongs to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, Elks, and was made a Mason in Anaheim Lodge, F. & A. M., and with his wife is a member of Chispa Chapter, O. E. S., and both enjoy an enviable popularity.

HIRAM HELM HATHAWAY.—The prominent rancher and successful lima bean grower at Wintersburg, Hiram Helm Hathaway, comes of good old Southern lineage. He was born at El Monte, Cal., January 26, 1863, and has resided in Los Angeles, San Bernardino and Orange counties all his life. His father, Jefferson M. Hathaway, a native of Missouri, came to California from the northeastern part of Texas in 1853, working his way by driving an ox team. When he arrived at his destination he had only his blankets and one dollar and seventy-five cents in his pocket. In January, 1860, he was married at San Bernardino to Miss Martha Marzee Russell, a native of Texas. They were farmers and became the parents of nine children, six boys and three girls. The father, who was popularly called "Uncle Miner" Hathaway, held the office of justice of the peace in San Bernardino County several years, being reelected several times. He and his wife were members of the Baptist Church.

Hiram Helm, the second child in order of birth in the parental family, recalls the time when the townsite of Santa Ana was first platted and the wiseacres predicted it would never make a town. He was reared on the farm, educated in the common grammar schools, and has followed the occupation of farming all his life. His marriage occurred at Azusa, Cal., on December 17, 1885, and united him with Miss Ann Elizabeth Meredith, a native of Gainesville, Sumter County, Ala., daughter of R. A. Meredith, a lawyer of Gainesville, and Ann Elizabeth (Harwood) Meredith, both natives of Virginia who were married in Alabama. There were ten children in Mrs. Hathaway's parental family, five boys and five girls. Three of her brothers served in the Civil War. The oldest, Reuben A., was in the Confederate army, and came to California after the war, in 1868. He died at Covina on September 27, 1920. Another brother, Samuel H., a sister, Mary K., and Mrs. Hathaway came from Alabama to California in 1884 to join their brother Reuben A. Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway lived two years at Azusa, removing thence to Pomona, where they lived eighteen years. In 1906 they came to Wintersburg and built a home which they moved into January 1, 1907. Mr. Hathaway had purchased ten acres of land in October, 1906, which he improved and sold, afterward purchasing another twenty acres at $500 per acre, which he still owns and farms.

In their religious convictions Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway are members of the Baptist Church at Huntington Beach. Politically Mr. Hathaway is a Democrat. He is an ardent admirer of President Wilson and favors the League of Nations. He is a capable business man and a hard and efficient worker, and their two-acre home place in Wintersburg is set to fruit trees, grapes, vegetable garden, etc. He and his good wife are genial and hospitable, and highly respected among their friends and neighbors.

L. P. DAMEWOOD.—An enterprising business man of Orange whose "hustling" qualities alone would place him in the front rank of progressives, and whose strong and pleasing personality makes him popular among a large circle of friends, is L. P. Damewood, of the well-known firm of Damewood and Garroway, dealers in tires and automobile supplies, and agents for the Mack truck. They are among the leading dealers in both Goodyear and Goodrich tires, and in their various enterprises have done much to forward the best interests of the motorists. Born at Kingman, Kans., Mr. Damewood is the son of Powell Damewood, who moved from Iowa to McPherson, Kans., in 1865, and there homesteaded 160 acres of land, coming in time to Kingman. There he lived and worked as a farmer, and there he died. He had married Miss Millie A. Brownell, and she still resides in Kansas. Their union was blessed with the birth of one child, the subject of our interesting sketch.

Brought up at Kingman until he was nine years of age, Mr. Damewood then removed to Aspen, Colo., where he attended the public school, continuing his school work at Canon City, in which town he graduated from the high school. When old enough to get into business, he opened shop in Denver, and as the representative of the Goodyear Rubber Company, sold tires on Sixteenth Street. After that he removed to Fort Collins, Colo., and for a year was a tire agent at that place. In 1914 Mr. Damewood came west to California and locating at Orange, entered the employ of Mr. Lush, who had a garage and tire business. Soon afterwards, he bought of Mr. Lush an interest in the business, and a year later bought out Mr. Lush altogether. When he had managed the affair for a while alone, he took into partnership E. M. Chapman, and the firm became Damewood and Chapman; and they soon started a branch at Fullerton, and since then opened another branch at Santa Ana. Last year A. J. Garroway bought out Mr. Chapman's share, and of late the firm has been styled Damewood and Garroway.

The headquarters of this enterprising firm are at the corner of North Glassell and Maple streets, Orange, but in each establishment they carry a large supply of tires and trucks. They have also installed a hydraulic press for mounting truck tires, and in that particular enterprise were the pioneers in the county. Expensive as this outfit has been, they have installed one at each of the branch stores, and are thus able quickly and conveniently to put on tires for all kinds of trucks, the nearest other station for the same service being at Los Angeles. The Mack truck, which they represent, may be had through them, in varying sizes from one to fifteen tons. Mr. Damewood organized the Orange Merchants and Manufacturers Association, of which he is now president, and he is the Orange representative of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the county. He was also one of the originators of the Orange County Automobile Trades Association, and is today its vice-president.

At Canon City, Colo., Mr. Damewood was married to Miss Bertha R. Smith, a native of that state; and by her he has had one daughter, Edith A. Damewood. He belongs to the Woodmen of the World, and finds pleasure, with his good wife, in responding to worthy appeals of all fraternal and other organizations seeking to better the community and the county in which he lives and prospers.

WILLIAM H. HOLLOWAY.—Prominent among the thoroughly trained scientists in the field of California horticulture who have made the most important contributions to the development of that new and delicious fruit, the more than popular avocado, should be mentioned William H. Holloway, whose fame has extended far beyond the vicinity of his handsome ranch at Yorba Linda. He was born near Severy, Greenwood County, Kans., on May 31, 1873, and when nine years of age came to the Northwest with his parents and settled in Washington. In 1891, he moved on further and came south to California and Whittier, where he attended the public schools and finished his studies at the Whittier Academy. These institutions have deserved their reputation as the best places in which to train inquiring youth; and when his school days were over our subject was ready to fill more than one position of responsibility.

His first venture was to buy a fourth interest in the Whittier Hardware Company, and while he was active in that line, he learned the plumber's trade. In two years he disposed of his hardware interest and started a business of his own, known as the Whittier Variety Store. In 1907, however, he located in Long Beach, and there embarked in plumbing for himself. He made a specialty of installations of a superior quality in fine houses and first-class apartments, and within six years handled over $60,000 worth of business. In 1913, when Yorba Linda was just starting, he located here, bought a lot and erected a store building, two stories high. It had apartments on the second floor, and was an ornament and a convenience to the place. He conducted a general merchandise business, and disposed of that only three years ago. He had just completed another apartment house having four apartments, and on the adjoining lot, he had also erected a modern bungalow.

On coming to Yorba Linda, Mr. Holloway had purchased a ten-acre tract on which he planted lemons and avocados. He grew three varieties of the latter—Ganter, Harmon and Dickenson—and these are now in full bearing. The Ganter is green in color, has a thin skin, and weighs from eight to twelve ounces each, and is altogether the best bearer. It seems to give the most satisfaction to many and has become very popular; and it is also cheaper than the thick-skin variety, selling from fifteen to twenty-five cents each in the market. The Harmon also has a thin skin, while that of the Dickenson is thicker and sells for seven dollars a dozen. The Ganter's are especially nice in salads, and they have been introduced more widely through the work of demonstrators in grocery stores, who show patrons the different ways of preparing them, and convince even the skeptical of the advantages in their regular use as food. One-half of Mr. Holloway's crop goes to San Francisco, one-fourth is sold locally, and the remainder is handled by the E. A. White Fruit Company, of Santa Ana, who send the avocados to various cities in the county, and ship some to Arizona and even as far east as Kansas City. Mr. Holloway has his own packing house on his ranch where the selected avocados are packed in excelsior for shipment and each box labeled with his purple and gold brand on a tri-colored lithograph with photo of two avocados. In 1920 he purchased eight acres in La Habra Heights tract at La Habra which he is arranging to set to avocados. He has a nursery where he raises stock for his own use, as well as for sale. He is a member of the California Avocado Association.

Chas F W Rensch
Frieda K. S. Rensch

In Whittier Mr. Holloway married Miss Donna J. Carter of Iowa, and they are now the parents of four children—Louise, Helen, Paul and William. The family attend the Friends Church at Yorba Linda, and Mr. and Mrs. Holloway, as honored, influential pioneers of the town, never lose an opportunity to advance its material growth and its development on lines needed for tomorrow.

CHARLES F. W. REUSCH.—An old-time rancher early resident in Orange County who has many interesting and highly instructive stories to tell, is Charles F. W. Reusch, whose well laid out and equally well-managed ranch is entered from Placentia Avenue, south of Ball Road in Anaheim. He was born near Sterling, in Whiteside County, Ill., April 10, 1877, the son of Henry and Antone Reusch, Illinois farmer folks, who removed to Sanders County, Nebr., when our subject was two years old. There the worthy parents purchased 120 acres of land, which they devoted to general farming, and there also Charles attended the public school.

In 1889 the parents came out to California and purchased a ten-acre grove on Collins Avenue, northwest of Orange; and Charles helped to set out the vacant land to walnuts and oranges. He attended first the grammar school at Orange and then the high school; and at sixteen years of age left home to care for himself. For a couple of years he worked on the Adams ranch northwest of Orange, and then he learned the miller's trade at Olive, and was with the Olive Milling Company for eleven years, the last four years serving as head miller. While there, he pursued a course of study with the International Correspondence School in steam engineering, and when he had finished he went to work for the Santa Fe Railroad, and was with them as engineer for four years.

In 1912 he purchased thirty-five acres on Placentia Avenue, southeast of Anaheim, paying only thirty-five dollars an acre; it was considered waste land and was covered with cactus and brush, but he had the same cleared; after which he ventured into mining near Mojave, Cal., for a time. On his return he located on his farm and engaged in ranching. His mother owns twenty acres of the original thirty-five, and he has twelve; and his portion he has divided up so that he devotes two acres to walnuts and ten to oranges, irrigated by their own private pumping plant. He belongs to the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association, and not only profits by their service, but energetically supports their excellent work. When his people came to Orange, there was only one house between Collins Avenue and Olive Road, and only one house on the avenue now called Taft, and so Mr. Reusch is able to compare the past with the present. He picked the first oranges gathered on the Fletcher Place, and received in payment one and one-half cents per box for his labor; and it cost him twenty-five dollars an acre to have his thirty-five acres cleared and leveled. There was considerable game on the land at that time, and he remembers to have killed there two mountain lions, several wildcats and one brown bear.

On May 16, 1904, Mr. Reusch was married to Miss Anna Timken, daughter of Jacob and Martha (Tinken) Timken, who was born in Kansas, and they have four children: Paul, Ernest, Henry and Bertha, all of whom are at home and students at the Anaheim schools. Mrs. Reusch came to California with her parents in 1891, and for a while lived at Acton, Cal. Then the family moved to Paso Robles, and in 1904 came to Southern California. On April 19, 1911, to the sorrow of all who knew her, she passed away. On June 16, 1916, Mr. Reusch married a second time, choosing Miss Wally Neuhoff for his companion, a native of Saxony, Germany. She was the daughter of Arthur and Minnie Neuhoff, and came to the United States in 1909; and ten years later, on July 20, 1919, she, too, passed to the Beyond.

On September 7, 1920, Mr. Reusch was again married, the ceremony taking place in Anaheim, when he was united with Mrs. Frieda S. (Kopfer) Swanson, a daughter of Adolph and Theodora (Stahl) Kopfer, farmers in DeKalb County, Ill., until they passed away. Frieda Kopfer received a good education in the excellent schools of northern Illinois, and there she, too, was married to Theodore Swanson, a farmer in DeKalb County until his death, in January, 1919, leaving his wife and four children: Catherine, Dorris, Edgar and Theodore. Having two sisters living in Anaheim, on being left on her own resources, Mrs. Swanson came hither, and thus it came that she met Mr. Reusch, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage, a union that is proving very happy and congenial to both. Mr. Reusch appreciates his wife's encouragement and assistance in his ambition as an horticulturist and pronounces her a most excellent helpmate. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, and marches under the banners of the Republican party. From 1916 to 1918 he served as deputy sheriff of Orange County, and no one who knows his geniality, his fearlessness and his desire to do justice to all needs to be told that Charles Reusch was a very efficient and impartial officer.

LEON C. HISERODT.—A rancher who has not only prospered in the Golden West but who has the satisfaction of knowing that his long-honored parents contributed their share to the development of this corner of the great American commonwealth, is Leon C. Hiserodt of 423 North Claudina Street, Anaheim. He was born in Whiteside County, Ill., on June 25, 1869, the son of Edward D. Hiserodt, a farmer, who married Miss Elizabeth Chatfield. He purchased 320 acres of land in Howard County, Nebr., and while his good wife and our subject, for the sake of the boy's schooling, removed to Fulton, Ill., Mr. Hiserodt took up his residence on the farm, and there lived alone until, in 1884, his family joined him. Then St. Paul was the nearest railroad town; but later the B. and M. came through that part of Nebraska, and the town of Cushing was founded. As early as 1853, Edward Hiserodt crossed the great plains with an ox-team, and when he returned East, he traveled by the Isthmian route. He died in 1910, at the age of eighty-six. His widow is still living in Fullerton, hale and hearty at the still more advanced age of eighty-eight. A sister of Leon Hiserodt in 1886 married L. C. Vanderburg, a Nebraskan farmer, and eight years later, Leon traded his farm with him, the Vanderburg place having many improvements, while there was only a sod house on the Hiserodt farm, and Mr. Vanderburg wished to come out to California. In 1897, Mr. Hiserodt sold the Nebraska farm, and came out to eastern Oregon, where he lived for a couple of years.

On October 2, 1890, Mr. Hiserodt married Miss Hattie M. Dickenson, a native of Dakota, whose parents came to Iowa, so that she received her education in that state. Mr. Hiserodt, by the way, studied first at the Northern Illinois College at Fulton, and later at Northern Nebraska College at Central City. Two sons have blessed this fortunate union: Elmer Guy is on a ranch in Orangethorpe; and Earl Orlo is on a ranch in the Magnolia school district. While in Oregon Mr. Hiserodt had some interesting experiences, hauling lumber and logging in lumber camps. At Burns, he was in Harney Valley, which is thirty miles wide, sixty miles long and 5,000 feet in elevation; and he drove a four-horse team out of the Valley in 1899. When he came South to settle, he purchased ten acres on West Orangethorpe, and set the same out to oranges; and in 1905 he purchased another ten acres adjoining on the east, where he also planted Valencias. This land is under the excellent service of the irrigating system of the Anaheim Union Water Company, and the soil is very productive. The Hiserodt ranch is, in fact, one of the best twenty-acre groves for miles around. In national politics a Republican, in his support of local movements nonpartisan and generous, Mr. Hiserodt is, in fraternal affairs, popular as a Woodman of the World.

ARTHUR R. MARSOM.—Prominent among the names of the successful men of affairs of Orange County is that of Arthur R. Marsom, a resident of Fullerton since 1910, and one of the most progressive of the citizens of the growing city. A native of Michigan, he was born at Detroit on July 14, 1871, the son of Henry and Susie (Mays) Marsom. Of their family of five children Arthur R. is the third in order of birth and he received a substantial education in the public schools of his native city. At an early age he learned the trades of carriage painter and decorator and followed the former in his home city until 1898.

In the above-named year Mr. Marsom came to California hoping to find a broader field for his operations and in this he was not disappointed. He began contracting to build houses in Los Angeles, taking them from basement and walls to a home complete and ready to move into. As he succeeded he opened a store in 1903, wherein he carried everything to be found in a well-ordered establishment carrying paint, artist materials, draperies, tapestries, pottery, etc. His trade of decorator was of great assistance to him in finishing houses ready for occupancy by furnishing hangings, rugs, tapestries to make complete and cosy the homes he constructed. These homes varied in prices from $2,200 to $35,000, and he did much to build up the western section of Los Angeles with its fine homes. Besides doing a general contracting business, for which purpose he kept from forty-five to seventy-five men on the payroll, Mr. Marsom bought property and subdivided it into building lots and erected homes and sold at a satisfactory advance in price. In the meantime he opened a branch at Long Beach and thereby was enabled to demonstrate his ability in that beach city. He met with more than ordinary success in his business ventures and in 1910 disposed of his interests in Los Angeles and came to Fullerton and cast in his lot with the embryo city.

That his coming to this place has meant much to the city is demonstrated by his erecting the first apartment house "The Marwood," in the town and some of the first bungalows. He invested his money in lots and buildings and entered into the life of the community with his characteristic energy and in a very short time he was considered the leader in expansion and development. His investments today represent over $200,000 in Fullerton, while he also owns a business block in Anaheim. Mr. Marsom is an extensive dealer in real estate and is a fine judge of values. His home, which he built, at 441 East Commonwealth Avenue, is one of the finest to be found in northern Orange County.

The marriage of Arthur R. Marsom with Miss Marie Warrington was celebrated in 1893, in Detroit, Mich., where she was born. Of this union there have been born three children—Earl John, Ivy F. and Blanche Marie, who with their parents have an ever-widening circle of friends. Mr. Marsom is a staunch Republican in national affairs but in local matters he is nonpartisan, believing it best for the greatest number that the man and not the party be recognized. The family are members of the Catholic Church and Mr. Marsom is a member of the Knights of Columbus, having taken the third degree. He is a member of the Fullerton Board of Trade and is a hard worker for all progressive measures for civic improvement and uplift of Fullerton. It is to such men as Mr. Marsom that California owes a debt of gratitude for they have entered heartily into all movements for the upbuilding of the greatest state of the union, knowing that when others profit they will garner their own share, and at the same time pave the way for posterity to enjoy the fruits of their labors and thereby build a monument that will last for all time.

JOHN McFADDEN.—Among the most prominent old-time merchants to whose well-merited prosperity Santa Ana owes much of its steady progress must be mentioned John McFadden, who died on June 23, 1915, leaving for his heirs and posterity a record of honesty and industry such as is always of the highest credit to individuals or to nations. He was born at Scotch Mountain, near Delhi, in Delaware County, N. Y., in 1843, the son of John McFadden, a native of Perthshire, Scotland, who migrated to America and settled in New York. He was a farmer, and as an agriculturist, made his mark in Delaware County. His wife was Effie Lamont before her marriage and she was a native of the Isle of Wight. Of their eleven children, four sons and a daughter came out to California: Mary (Mrs. Alvin Palmer) died at Redlands; James closed his life at Altadena, to which place he had removed on account of Mrs. McFadden's health; Archibald passed away in Santa Ana, and so did John McFadden, our subject; while Robert McFadden, the only one surviving, still resides at Santa Ana.

John McFadden was educated in the public schools of Delaware County, N. Y., and later the academy at Delhi, N. Y., where he prepared for college, then entered Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., from which he was graduated in 1867 with the degree of B.A. In his senior year he was elected to the honorary scholarship society, Phi Beta Kappa. Soon after that he came to California and engaged in teaching at Vallejo, Solano County, and later in a military school at Oakland. Next he moved to Santa Ana, then a small place, and with his brothers, James and Robert, embarked in the lumber business at Newport. This satisfied him for only a few years, however, and then he sold out and, in 1879 started in business in Santa Ana. He began on West Fourth Street with M. J. Bundy and when their partnership was dissolved he moved to 111 East Fourth Street, where he erected the John McFadden building. Later, for six or seven years, he was located at 112 East Fifth Street, and then moved back to 113 East Fourth Street, in the John McFadden building. He established the oldest and largest general hardware establishment in Orange County. At his death the estate was incorporated as the John McFadden Company, and since that time the family have carried on the business: Edwin McFadden is president; Clyde Walker, vice-president; Lamont McFadden, treasurer; and Miss Mabel McFadden, secretary. Mr. McFadden was one of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Santa Ana until his death, and also for years a director of that institution.

At Santa Ana, on April 9, 1883, Mr. McFadden was married to Miss Elizabeth Walker, a native of Oakdale, Washington County, Ill., and the daughter of Thomas and Sarah (McClurken) Walker, natives, respectively, of South Carolina and Illinois. The father was a farmer in Illinois and early settled in Orange County. Soon after his marriage Mr. McFadden erected the large, comfortable residence at 906 North Main Street, where the family still make their home. Mr. and Mrs. McFadden were blessed with five children: Mabel, Edwin and Lamont are giving their time to the success of the hardware establishment of the John McFadden Company; Ada is a teacher at the Claremont high school; and Flora is a student at Pomona College, from which institution Mabel, Ada, Edwin and Lamont in turn graduated.

Mr. McFadden was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, one of the earliest and most prominent of churches here, and for thirty-five years he served as clerk of the congregation, and for many years of that time was also its treasurer. He believed in aiding people in the most practical manner, in the great work of assisting them to help themselves, and so was one of the founders, and for many years president of the Home Mutual Building and Loan Association, which has made it possible for many people to acquire property for themselves, and to get into the self-respecting habit of saving. Intensely interested in civic matters, he was a prominent member of the city council of Santa Ana, serving as its president for a number of years; he was also active in the Chamber of Commerce and in the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, serving as president of those bodies for several years. In connection with the separation of Orange County from Los Angeles County, he took a prominent part. He was fond of fishing and hunting and with his boon companions Messrs. M. M. Crookshank, A. J. Crookshank, Clarence Crookshank, Z. B. West, Cubbon and Visel, often went to the mountains for that recreation and sport found in the great wilds of the Sierras. Mrs. McFadden, like her husband, was much interested in the growth and development of her adopted city and has always favored and aided all movements that have for their aim the building up of the city and county and enhancing the comfort and happiness of its people. She is an active member of the Ebell Club as well as the Ladies' Aid and Missionary societies of the United Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, of which she has been a member since 1878.

JOHN E. SCOTT.—There is no better proof of a town's business prosperity and progress than the kind of business men it attracts. The cashier of the Placentia National Bank and the Placentia Savings Bank, John E. Scott, is a man who has had much experience in banking business. He is possessed of keen business ability, and talent fitting him especially for the position he occupies. A Canadian by birth, Mr. Scott was born in Dunnville, Ontario, January 20, 1885. He is the son of John E. and Sophia (Galbraith) Scott. The father, who is deceased, was government overseer in Canada, and in the paternal family of five children John E. is the youngest child. He was educated in the public schools of his native country, attended high school two years, and supplemented this with a three years' course at Saint Andrews College, Toronto. He afterwards worked for the Bank of Hamilton, at Dunnville from 1903 to 1908, as chief teller. In 1908 he came to California, and in 1909 located on an orange grove at Upland. In 1914 he disposed of his holdings and came to Placentia temporarily to assist in the bank, but was induced to remain permanently, and on September 1, 1919, he was made cashier. He is also a director in both banks and is president of the local Chamber of Commerce, is vice-president of Orange County Bankers Association.

Mr. Scott's marriage occurred December 2, 1908, uniting him with Miss Lillian May Krick, also of Dunnville, and they are the parents of three children: John E., 3rd, William Winston and Lawrence Lauchlin. Mr. Scott is a member of the Episcopal Church and in his political views is a Republican, and lost no time after his location in the land of the Stars and Stripes to become a citizen. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Fullerton Lodge, No. 339, F. & A. M., and is a member of Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M. Like most of his countrymen he is fond of outdoor sports, fishing being one of the means of relaxation he enjoys from the cares of business life. As a live wire in the interests of Orange County he is a decided acquisition to the community, and is held in high esteem by his large circle of friends and acquaintances, among whom he is a favorite socially.

GEORGE ESMAY.—The life of George Esmay, the efficient and popular assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Fullerton is related in a very interesting manner to those who could boast of pioneer experiences and pioneer deeds, and reminds one how much of the progress of today is due to all that has gone before. His great-grandfather, John Esmay, and his grandfather, Thomas Esmay, both moved from Marathon, Cortland County, N. Y., westward by team, and passed through Chicago, Ill., near Fort Dearborn, where they had to ford the river because there were no bridges. They settled in Iowa on the western bank of the Mississippi River and were pioneers of the eastern part of the Hawkeye State. At Sabula, Jackson County, Iowa, George Esmay was born on April 30, 1859, the son of Francis Esmay, who married Miss Nancy Seeber, both of Cortland County, N. Y.

Growing up in Sabula, George attended the country school of that period and locality, learned the carpenter's trade and worked until 1879 in his father's sash, door and blind factory. Then he became a railroad operator, and was cashier and ticket agent on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad in Lyons and Clinton, Iowa, until 1907. Resigning, he came to California in 1907 and became cashier of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad at Fullerton, leaving in April, 1913, to accept a position on the staff of the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Fullerton.

At Marshalltown, in Marshall County, Iowa, on March 28, 1883, Mr. Esmay was married to Miss Ettie May Garlick, the daughter of James Platt and Henrietta E. (Dodge) Garlick. Mr. Garlick was born in Tintwisle, England, on March 7, 1825, and at the age of ten sailed from Liverpool on the "Ambassador," on what proved to be a long and dangerous voyage across the Atlantic. Delayed by three weeks of fog off the Irish Coast, the voyagers met stormy weather and once saw their ship afire; but after being out from land for seven weeks and five days, they landed at New Orleans on November 11, 1835. Mr. Garlick was one of the many who came across the plains to California in 1849. Before the Civil War he was active in organizing the "underground railroad." He ran the first "train" from Missouri to Canada, and was once in a house where a posse was searching for him, and heard his pursuers offering a reward of $500 for him, dead or alive. Mr. Garlick died at Fullerton on December 2, 1916, and Mrs. Garlick passed away at the home of her daughter on July 14, 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Esmay have had five children: Vora Lorena Esmay is Mrs. James Earl McCulley; Anna Leona Esmay; George Leffingwell Esmay married Miss Esther E. Kropp; Mary Lilah Esmay is Mrs. Alvin L. Ford; and Ruby LaGrille Esmay is Mrs. Frank A. Treadwell. The family attend the Baptist Church, and Mr. Esmay is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and the banker of the lodge here from 1917 to date. He belonged to Pioneer Camp No. 1, Modern Woodmen of America, at Lyons, Iowa, and was a charter member there, and paid every assessment up to date; and in 1909 he was transferred to Camp No. 8260 at Fullerton, Cal.

A Republican in national politics, Mr. Esmay looks back to active participation in civic duties. He was bugler of Company L of the First Regiment, Iowa National Guards of Lyons, Iowa, from 1892 to 1894, and was also a bugler of the Home Guards at Fullerton from 1916 to 1919. With his family he is intensely interested in Orange County and naturally has a preference for everything pertaining to the development and future of Fullerton.

THOMAS GRUSSING.—A very successful horticulturist under Southern California conditions who has set an excellent example in "boosting" for Orange County and thus wishing to share with others the superior advantages he has found here, is Thomas Grussing, who was born near Champaign, Ill., on January 31, 1875, the son of John Grussing, a pioneer of that state. He bought eighty acres of raw land at nine dollars an acre, resolutely broke the prairie, and harvested such excellent results that he continued to buy more until he had about 700 acres in a body. He improved it in every desirable way and raised grain and stock, and eventually divided what he had among his children. After he retired he resided in Gifford, Ill., until his death, July 1, 1920, at nearly eighty years of age. A leader in local Republican councils, an ex-member of the board of supervisors of Champaign County, he was for years a pillar in the Lutheran Church of his neighborhood. When he married, he took for his wife Miss Trentje Esterman, who proved an indispensable helpmate, and she is still living to enjoy the affection and esteem of those who know her. Nine children were granted this worthy couple; and seven are now living.

The fourth eldest in the family, Thomas from a boy learned to farm, while he attended the local public schools, held chiefly in winter. He remained home to assist his father until he was married to Miss Anne Flesner, a popular belle of that vicinity. After that he bought, operated and then sold a farm of eighty acres; then he purchased 160 acres nearby, and later increased his holdings until he owned in all 320 acres, which he devoted to raising stock and grain, chiefly corn and oats; and with this first-rate agricultural plant he continued until 1912. While living there he responded to the urgent invitation of his neighbors to act as school trustee.

In 1912 he was persuaded that he would do best by removing to California; and having sold a part of the ranch, he came West and located at Anaheim. He bought thirteen acres at the corner of East and Santa Ana streets, and he improved the land by the addition of a new and handsome residence. In 1919, he sold the balance of his eastern property and bought ten acres adjoining his first purchase, most of which were in Valencia, and two acres in Navel oranges. He joined the Mutual Orange Distributors Association, and as a Republican, he did what he could to elevate civic affairs, but in local movements he always gave a generous, nonpartisan support.

On February 15, 1920, to the sorrow of a large circle of friends, Mrs. Grussing passed to her eternal reward. She was the mother of four children—Tinie, Henry, Hannah and Herman. With his family Mr. Grussing is a member of Anaheim Lutheran Church, of which he has for some time been a trustee.

PETER D. BRADY.—A successful orange and walnut grower who is enjoying prosperity as the reward of industry and the maintenance of right principles in the conduct of his business, is Peter D. Brady, the owner of a forty-acre ranch, devoted to oranges and walnuts, situated two and a half miles east of Garden Grove. Mr. Brady was born in Marshall County, Ill., January 28, 1866, a son of Peter and Julia (Welch) Brady, natives of Vermont and Kentucky, respectively. Peter Brady was born July 6, 1832, and was united in marriage with Miss Julia Welch on December 1, 1859, the ceremony being solemnized at Peoria, Ill. He was a railroad man of marked ability and filled the responsible post of division superintendent of the Rock Island Railway Company in Illinois; while living in Kansas he was connected with the Santa Fe Railroad. He became the owner of 160 acres of land in Rush County, Kans., also a quarter-section in Greenwood County, that state.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Brady were the parents of nine children, three of whom are living: P. D. Brady, the subject of this sketch; E. W. Brady, a rancher living near his brother; and Mrs. Essie Lighthall, who resides at Lindsay, Cal., where she is in the orange business. In 1890 the family moved to California and in 1912 the mother passed away at the age of seventy-three years; Peter Brady survived until February 11, 1920, having passed the advanced age of eighty-seven.

P. D. Brady was four years old when his parents moved to Kansas. He received his education in the public schools of Great Bend, graduating from the high school in 1885. He followed farming in Kansas, working on his father's farm in Rush County. In 1891 he migrated to California, locating in Buaro precinct, Orange County, afterwards settling in Garden Grove precinct, where he purchased ten acres of rough land. This he cleared and leveled and has made subsequent purchases, one of ten, the other of twenty acres, making his total holdings forty acres, half being in walnuts and the balance in Valencia oranges; three acres of the oranges are now nine years old and ten acres of the walnuts are ten years old. He has a 200-foot well with a pumping capacity of eighty inches. Mr. Brady is an indefatigable worker and his enterprising efforts have been richly rewarded. His career furnishes a striking example of what energy and resourcefulness can accomplish, when one has set his mind on a definite goal and judiciously manages his financial affairs. From a humble beginning in ranching he has successfully attained his goal—the ownership of a well-improved and profitable ranch and a beautiful, modern bungalow residence. For about twenty years Mr. Brady ran a hay-baling press in Southern California.

In 1917 Mr. Brady was united in marriage with Miss Alice Shoemaker, a native of Ogle County, Ill., and the daughter of Jasper and Lydia (Purcell) Shoemaker. Jasper Shoemaker passed away in Ogle County, Ill., at the age of sixty-seven years; Mrs. Shoemaker is living at San Pedro. They were the parents of thirteen children, eleven of whom are living.

Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Brady are the parents of one child, Barbara Jean. Mr. Brady is a member of the Orange Growers Association, also of the Walnut Growers Association at Garden Grove. Mr. and Mrs. Brady are very popular in their locality, where they have a large circle of friends.

JOSIAH JACKSON.—A hard-working rancher whose flourishing grove of choice fruit shows the desired-for results of proper, scientific attention, is Josiah Jackson, who has been wrestling with the world and the problems of life since he was nineteen years of age. He was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, on July 25, 1866, the son of John W. Jackson, a stock raiser whose land was devoted to general farming. He had married Miss Martha Dickenson, one of a pioneer family, like his own, of the early days when it was necessary to settle among the Indians in order to open up the paths to civilization. Josiah attended the Westboro district school and left home when he was nineteen years of age, to work on farms in Iowa. He went to Washington County and stayed for two years, and then he removed to northern Minnesota and North Dakota, where he spent a few months. In 1885 he returned to Ohio; and when his father died, the following spring, he took charge of the home farm for a year, after which he went to Garden City, Kans., and spent a year and a half. Then he went to Colorado and was three months at Fort Florsend, a station on the early Colorado and Midland Railroad, now abandoned.

In 1888, at the height of the famous realty boom, Mr. Jackson came to California and settled in San Diego, where he accepted work in the large stone quarry between Murrietta and Fallbrook; but he was only three months there when he came on to Whittier, where he lived with his sister until he was married on May 26, 1898, to Miss Emma L. Heaton, who was born near Kokomo in the Hoosier State. Her father was Nathan Heaton, and her mother, before her marriage, Miss Huldah J. McCoy and they also were early Californians, having settled near El Modena where they assisted in developing and building up the neighborhood. When she was twelve years of age, in 1886, Mrs. Jackson came to California with her father and attended the El Modena school; and later she was a student at Whittier College. In 1903, Mr. Jackson purchased ten acres of the Beach subdivision of the Toler tract, and first set the land out to walnuts. Then he grubbed out the walnut trees and set out four acres of the land to Valencia oranges and six acres to lemons, and this has proven a more satisfactory investment. The land is irrigated by the La Habra Water Company, and the La Habra Citrus Association disposes of all of our subject's products.

Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Jackson: Thomas M., died aged two years and seven months; then comes D. Howard Jackson, a junior in the Whittier high school; and Dorothy A. is a sophomore there. In national politics preferring to march with the Republicans, Mr. Jackson is as nonpartisan and as broadminded as any in local movements, and always is willing to put the best interests of the community in which he lives above party principles. He is also ready to do his ordinary duty as a citizen, and has served on the jury.

WILLIAM W. PERRY.—A conservative business man whose whole-hearted nature makes him love the great outdoors, such a feature of the ideal in California life, is William W. Perry, a native of North Carolina, where he was born near Burlington, on May 25, 1867, the son of Peter Perry. He was born in North Carolina in 1843, and was a landowner and farmer who later moved with his family to Indiana, and four years later, in 1877, to Nebraska, where he was a farmer. He once came to California, for a winter visit, and died in Nebraska in 1910. Mrs. Perry was Catherine Glenn before her marriage and was highly honored as a descendant or early English settlers on the Virginia Coast. Eleven children, all now married and doing well for themselves, were born to this worthy pioneer couple; and among these William Perry is the oldest son.

He attended the grammar schools in the country districts of Nebraska, and later took a year at the Normal School in that state. His spare time he devoted to working on a farm, and a large part of his earnings he put aside for the future. Having married, he came out to California with his family in 1903, and spent fourteen months in the Golden State; and in 1907 he sold his farm in Nebraska and came back to live.

He bought twenty acres on East Collins Avenue, two and a quarter miles north-east of Orange, and in April, 1907, moved onto the same. He improved the balance of the place, making of the ranch a fine grove of oranges and lemons; and in 1913 he built a fine modern residence of nine rooms with an up-to-date garage. He joined the Villa Park Orchards Association, at one time serving as a director, and became a member of the Central Lemon Growers Association of Villa Park, also holding stock in the same. In 1909, he sunk a well on his ranch, and uses the water from it for irrigation as well as for domestic purposes, although he gets the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He has a Sampson tractor, farms scientifically, and is not the least sorry that he cast his lot in Orange County.

On May 12, 1892, Mr. Perry was married to Miss Harriet Smith of Weeping Water, Nebr., a native daughter of that state, from parents who were sturdy farmer folk. Two children were born to them: Gertrude P., who is the wife of L. F. Douglass of Orange, and the mother of three children, Herbert P., Theodore R., and Robert A., who died at the age of six months. Maurice A., who is a rancher at Hemet, married Leila Culter in August, 1920. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church at Orange, and were active as committee members in the various war loan drives; and Mr. Perry belongs to the Odd Fellows of Orange, in which he is a past officer. In national politics he is a Republican.

EDWIN BULA.—A successful rancher who has become a substantial financier and, as a deep student, is interested in the bringing about of the best legislation for the greatest good to the greatest number of people, is Edwin Bula, a director of the Central Lemon Growers Association, of Villa Park, who was born in London, England, on November 3, 1866, the son of Samuel Bula, a native of the British Isles. The father was a contractor and builder, and as such became of note even in the great city of London. He had married Miss Elizabeth Farren, who was also a native of Great Britain, and who proved to be a wonderful wife and mother. They had three sons, and Edwin was the second in the order of birth.

In 1881, Mr. and Mrs. Bula came with their family to the United States and settled at Boston, where Mr. Bula continued to ply his trade of a builder; and Edwin, having already received good common school educational advantages in England, went out to work, at various kinds of labor. He was wide-awake and observant, and so caught not only the real spirit of American institutions, but posted himself as to the trend of the century, and particularly as to political moves in the New World.

In 1888, Mr. Bula was married to Miss Madelina Gondy, a native of Switzerland who had come to New York and soon afterward with his wife he migrated west and never halted until he had reached Los Angeles, arriving here in 1905, and later embarked in the laundry business in Santa Ana, continuing four years.

In 1909 they bought eighteen acres of raw land, fourteen acres of which is in the corporate limits of Orange and located two miles northeast from the city. Mr. Bula began making improvements on the place by building a barn, in part of which they lived while they were planting orange and lemon trees on their ranch. In 1916 he had so prospered that he erected a modern and comfortable house in which they live. Their location is one of the favored ones of the county, being situated in the frostless belt where soil and climate, and extra good care have made of the Bula ranch one of the show places in this section of the county. Mr. Bula is a member, and since 1915 has been a director of the Central Lemon Growers Association of Villa Park; is also a member of the Villa Park Orchards Association, and of the Rural Farm Bureau. He is also a director of the California Citrus By-Products Company of Corona.

A stand-pat Republican, Mr. Bula maintains his live interest in civic affairs, and is always ready, without partisanship, to support the best man and the best measures making for the building up and also the upbuilding of the community and the county in which he lives and thrives.

JAMES T. WHEDON.—A railroad man of many years' experience, James T. Whedon can recall with interest the fact that he had charge of the first train to enter Los Angeles in 1876, and it has been his privilege to witness the marvelous changes that have come to this metropolis of the Pacific Coast since that date. A native of Indiana, Mr. Whedon was born at Madison, in that state in 1846. The country round about his birthplace was still in a comparatively primitive state at that time and the educational opportunities were limited, so that when a mere youth of ten years, Mr. Whedon started out to earn his way, working as a water boy on the Madison and Indianapolis Railway for only fifty cents a day, although that was not considered a low wage for a boy at that time, as brakemen were paid but a dollar per day.

Although but fifteen years of age when the Civil War broke out, Mr. Whedon enlisted in Company E, Third Indiana Cavalry and saw three years of hard service in the great conflict. After the close of the war he returned to his home and went to work as a brakeman on the J. M. and I. Railroad, and continued in this line of work until 1868, when he went to Wyoming, where he served in the capacity of baggage master for the Union Pacific Railroad at Laramie, which was the end of the line at that time. When the East and West road was connected at Promontory Point, 1869, Mr. Whedon went to San Francisco and was employed as a conductor on the Old Central Pacific, Western Pacific division, between Sacramento and Oakland, for ten years. It was during this period that the Southern Pacific line was extended to Los Angeles and in 1876, when the road was completed Mr. Whedon had charge of the first train that came over the road, an event that was the beginning of the wonderful growth that has taken Los Angeles past the half-million mark.

In 1880 he accepted the position as general yardmaster for the Texas Pacific and also the St. Louis and Iron Mountain at Texarkana, and in 1882 was appointed trainmaster for the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad at the same point. In 1884 he was made superintendent for the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad, at Little Rock, and had charge of the road from Texarkana to Poplar Bluff. In 1886 during the first big railroad strike he demonstrated his ability to cope with the strikers and received the following telegram of which he is very proud:

"St. Louis, March 17, 1886.

J. T. Whedon, Supt., Little Rock.

I congratulate you upon being the first superintendent that has run a freight train successfully since the commencement of this causeless strike. Continue in your good efforts. You are on the white list for all time to come.

(Signed) H. M. HOXIE, General Manager."

Coming back to California in 1887, Mr. Whedon was associated with the opening of the Mt. Lowe Railroad and for the first four years of its operation he had charge of the road during Prof. Thaddeus Lowe's ownership. The following clipping from the Pasadena Star shows the appreciation in which his services were held:

"Mr. Whedon has tendered his resignation as superintendent of the Mt. Lowe Railway, to take effect April 30. The tourist season being over Mr. C. W. Brown, in addition to his duties as receiver and general manager, will also look after the superintendent's duties. Professor Lowe showed his good judgment when he selected Mr. Whedon for the responsible position of superintendent in charge of operating, as the results have shown. During the three years and ten months the road has been in operation, and which time Mr. Whedon has had charge, not a single accident of any kind has taken place whereby a passenger has been injured or the company lost one dollar. This speaks very highly for the Mt. Lowe Railway and its management.

"Apropos of the above we take pleasure in republishing an article which appeared in the Little Rock Gazette, at the time of Mr. Whedon's resignation of the position of division superintendent of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad, some years ago, and which was headed 'A Faithful and Efficient Officer.' 'In the resignation of Mr. J. T. Whedon, division superintendent of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railroad, the state of Arkansas, and the city of Little Rock especially, lose a good citizen, and one of the best and most efficient of its railroad corps. He is a man of few words, but quick to act, and with good judgment. His personal bravery is something remarkable, while his impartiality among deserving employees is as strict as his regard is warm for true friends. During the great railroad strike he was here, there and everywhere, guarding with the greatest faithfulness the interests of the corporation he represented. It is to his efforts, assisted as he was by Sheriff Worthen, that so little damage resulted to persons and property. It is believed he will continue in the service of the Missouri Pacific system, but it is known to his friends that for months past he has had a strong desire to locate in California, and possibly he may go there. No official stands higher with the management, and the Gazette hopes to see him promoted to a better position. However that may be, the people of Little Rock (and the Gazette voices them) wish him great success, wherever he may be stationed.'"

Mr. Whedon finished his long and successful railroad career in 1902, under the employ of ex-Senator Clark of Montana, and for the next few years was interested in mining in Arizona. Coming back to Los Angeles in 1909, he resided in Los Angeles. He first purchased five acres of land at South Santa Anita, but in 1913 deciding to grow avocados he sold this and purchased his present acreage at Yorba Linda, a tract of five acres on a hillside which is practically frostless. In March, 1914, Mr. Whedon set out 350 avocado trees, the Fuerte variety predominating, and since that time he has given practically all his time to the care and development of his orchard and has made it a most profitable enterprise. The demand for his fruit is greater than he can supply and the larger part of it is used by the Alexandria Hotel at Los Angeles. A member of the California Avocado Association, Mr. Whedon is very prominent in its circles and he is nationally known as the "Fuerte avocado man" as the first fruit of this variety ever exhibited was displayed by him in 1916 at the San Diego meeting of the association.

Mr. Whedon's marriage, which occurred in Oakland, Cal., in 1872, united him with Miss Henrietta T. Tappan, and four children were born to them: Their two eldest children died in infancy and those living are Amy Frances, wife of Lieut.-Col. A. W. Bradbury, U. S. A., at Camp Lewis, Wash., and Maude Tappan, wife of Albert Wilson of Monrovia. Mr. Whedon is a member of Bartlett-Logan Post, G. A. R., Los Angeles, and is a Mason of Royal Arch degree. An estimable citizen, whose busy life has been filled with interesting experiences, Mr. Whedon stands high in the estimation of the citizens of his community.

WALTER De WITT LAMB.—The descendant of two generations of California pioneers, Walter D. Lamb can well take pride in the achievements of his progenitors, for it is to their unbounded faith in the future of this part of the country and their many years of arduous labor, not unmixed with hardship, that much of the present prosperity of this generation is due. Mr. Lamb's grandfather, Anson D. Lamb, and his father, William D. Lamb, came to California in 1869 and a record of their lives will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Walter D. Lamb was born November 28, 1878, on his father's ranch in Fountain Valley and grew up there, attending school in the Newhope school district and later at Santa Ana. From his early youth he was gifted with unusual mechanical ability, and has always been especially successful in operating farm machinery of all kinds, a decided asset in these days when more and more of the farm work is being performed mechanically. Under his father's supervision he early acquired a thorough knowledge of agricultural processes and when quite young went into celery raising, operating on an extensive scale when that industry was at its height. As his father always kept a great many cattle, horses, mules and hogs on his large ranches, Walter Lamb became accustomed to their care in his boyhood and thus became familiar with every detail of the live stock business, especially in feeding and fattening steers on sugar beet tops. He makes a practice of feeding a large drove of cattle for the market each fall and in this he is expert and has few equals in judging beef cattle in Southern California.

In 1917 Mr. Lamb purchased his extensive stock ranch comprising 1,000 acres, 160 acres of which is leased to an oil company, located ten miles southwest of Chino, and here he has a herd of high grade Whiteface cattle, headed with thoroughbred stock. His first holdings consisted of a tract of twenty acres in Fountain Valley, near one of his father's ranches, and this he farms to alfalfa. He also cultivates a ranch of 144 acres in this locality; this is still the property of his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Lamb, but she has given each of her children this amount of land for their use. On this ranch Mr. Lamb raises large quantities of sugar beets, lima beans and barley, and in the production of all of these crops he has had signal success.

On March 14, 1900, Mr. Lamb was married to Miss Gertrude DuBois, the daughter of Valentine DuBois, one of Orange County's well-known and influential citizens. Mrs. Lamb, who is a native of Indiana, came here in 1897, graduating later from the Santa Ana high school. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lamb; Velda May graduated from the Santa Ana high school in the class of 1919; Inez Loretta died at the age of two years and five months; and Walter Kenneth. For a number of years Mr. and Mrs. Lamb resided on their twenty-acre ranch in Fountain Valley, but since October, 1916, they have made their home in Santa Ana, in the attractive residence which Mr. Lamb purchased at 415 West Walnut Street.

HENRY T. RUTHERFORD.—Prominent in banking circles of Orange County for a number of years, at the time of his decease Henry T. Rutherford was cashier of the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank at Santa Ana, having been connected with banking circles for a number of years. His parents were Shelby T. and Mary J. (Bridgman) Rutherford, pioneer residents of Orange County. The father was born in Kentucky in 1847, and when he was but a babe he was taken to Missouri by his father, his mother having died in his infancy. Shelby was early thrown upon his own resources and consequently had practically no opportunity to acquire an education. At the age of twelve he went to work on a farm, near Fort Smith, Ark., continuing in that locality for a number of years. He finally was able to purchase a tract of land for himself, which he cleared and put in crops. He was fifty miles from a railroad, however, and there were many other hardships in this new and undeveloped country, so, having heard of California's better opportunities, he decided to locate here. He first went to Westminster, but later located on the San Joaquin ranch, leasing land there on which he farmed for many years, at one time operating 1,000 acres; on retiring from active ranching life he moved to Santa Ana and there he still makes his home.

Shelby T. Rutherford was for many years keenly interested in the organization of school districts, realizing his own lack of educational opportunities, and determined that his children should not be handicapped in this way. For nineteen years he served on the board of trustees of his home district in Washington County, Ark. On coming to California, during the first years of the family's residence on the San Joaquin ranch, the children had to go six miles to attend the Tustin school; Mr. Rutherford was instrumental in the organization of a district in that locality, serving as a member of the board as long as he resided on the ranch. Mr. Rutherford's marriage in Arkansas had united him with Miss Mary J. Bridgman, a native of that state, and four children were born to them: Henry T., the subject of this sketch; Myrtle, Harriet and Lillian.

Henry T. Rutherford was born at Fort Smith, Ark., August 28, 1877, spending his boyhood days in that locality. In December, 1887, he came with his parents to Orange County, and grew up on the San Joaquin ranch. He was educated in the public schools and graduated from the Santa Ana Business College. He started out quite early in life to make his own way in the world, his first employment being with the Santa Ana Produce Company. Later he was with the W. F. Lutz Implement Company for some time. At the time of the organization of the Farmers and Merchants Bank he started in with this institution as teller, later advancing to assistant cashier. He was the prime mover in the consolidation of this bank with the Commercial Bank, and he remained there as assistant cashier until January, 1915, when he became connected with the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank, becoming cashier of the latter, which position he held at the time of his death, which occurred January 13, 1917.

Industrious and devoted to his business, Mr. Rutherford, although a comparatively young man at the time of his passing away, had made a marked success and occupied a place of high esteem in his large circle of friends. He was one of the organizers and a director of the Chamber of Commerce; president of the Orange County Bankers' Association; a member and director of the Orange County Country Club, and when the Elks' Hall was erected he was a member of the building committee. Prominent in fraternal circles, he was a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M.; Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Rutherford's marriage, on June 20, 1907, united him with Miss Susie M. Halladay, an adopted daughter of the late Daniel Halladay, a sketch of whose life is given elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Rutherford is a member of the First Presbyterian Church and is prominent in club circles, being secretary of the Ebell Club.

DWIGHT E. MAGILL.—The owner of one of the trimmest ranches in all the Buaro precinct—Section 34, a tract of ten acres, which he bought in 1911—is Dwight E. Magill, a native of Kansas, where he was born on August 9, 1886. He was four years old when his father, Cyrus Newton Magill, and his mother, who had been Matilda Brady before her marriage, settled in what is now the Buaro precinct, near Garden Grove. Thus Dwight grew up in the Garden Grove district, where he attended the grammar school. He put in a year also in the Orange high school, and then worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-one. After that Mr. Magill worked for the Brady Bros. on their hay press, and after learning the business, ran a hay press of his own for six years. He gave general satisfaction in baling hay, and was successful beyond that of the ordinary man.

When he was twenty-three years of age, on July 14, 1910, Mr. Magill was married to Miss Edna Davis, of Los Angeles, the daughter of Frank M. Davis, the well-known real estate operator of that city. Mrs. Davis, who was in maidenhood Augusta Hagg, died in the fall of 1919, and since then her husband has lived in Ukiah, Cal., where he formerly lived when he crossed the great plains in early, romantic days. Besides Mrs. Magill there is a son, F. Clifford. By a former marriage there is a daughter, Mrs. R. N. Lake of Los Angeles. In 1911 Mr. Magill bought his ten acres, and for three years he farmed the land to beans. At the same time he raised hay on 400 acres of land at Yorba Linda. Three successively dry years, however, made that industry unprofitable, and since then he has set his ten acres out to walnuts, of late interplanted with oranges and lemons. He has a deep well and a first-class pumping plant, and abundant water for irrigation, as the result of which his farm is one of the most promising of all the acreages roundabout.

Three children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Magill—Marjorie, Dwight E. and George. Unhappy to relate, the second in the order of birth, on February 27 last, was severely burned through the explosion of a can of gasoline ignited from a near-by bonfire. At the time of the accident, the mother and the other two children were at the home of Cyrus Newton Magill; but the response and subsequent devotion of Dr. C. C. Violet saved the lad and alleviated much suffering. In days of prosperity, no family has enjoyed a larger measure of hearty esteem; and in this trying hour, the sympathy of the community could not fail to flow to the afflicted.

JAMES ALBERT TIMMONS.—A busy man of affairs, whose public services, on account of both their immediate good and their far-reaching benefits to posterity, deserves the grateful remembrance of generations to come, is James Albert Timmons, a native of Oakland, Coles County, Ill., where he was born on June 22, 1864. His parents were A. Jackson and Lydia Timmons, and they came as farmer-folk from Indiana to Illinois in early days. Our subject was sent to the common schools of the district, while he helped on the farm, and then continued his studies at the Gem City Business College, Quincy, Ill. When his father embarked in the hardware business at Oakland, he also helped in the new field. In 1888 he went to Kansas and in Winfield, Cowley County, engaged for several years in the clothing trade. When he sold out, at the beginning of the century, he moved from Kansas to California and came to Santa Ana. He purchased a ranch of thirty acres southwest of the town, six acres of which had a variety of fruit trees, and went in for general farming. In 1906, he disposed of this property and moved into town.

Since 1906, Mr. Timmons has engaged in buying and selling ranch and town property, and doubtless this experience led to his bringing about one of the greatest of all local advancements. After repeated efforts had been made to organize for protection to the land holders along the Santa Ana River in the Newport and Talbert districts, Mr. Timmons took hold of the project and formed what was known as the Newbert Protection District—a name derived from the "New" in Newport and the second syllable in Talbert—called, in 1905, the First Street Land and Improvement Company. Mr. Timmons was president, and W. T. Newland of Huntington Beach was vice-president. This company threw up levees on both sides of the Santa Ana River for a distance of one and a half miles south from First Street, Santa Ana. On February 23, 1907, they succeeded in passing a bill in the California Legislature, permitting communities to organize for the purpose of protecting land along rivers, washes and canyons, from the overflow of streams. At that time E. E. Keech was attorney for the protection district, Clyde Bishop the assemblyman, and John W. Anderson, state senator for the district. The old First Street Land and Improvement Company was disorganized, and the Newbert Protection District came into existence. On August 24, 1907, a board of directors of the Newbert Protection District issued bonds to the extent of $185,000, to aid in the district's development, and Mr. Timmons served as the head of that organization for the first year, and during the ensuing year and a half was its secretary; and only when it was thoroughly organized, did he resign. This organization threw up levees for nine miles on both sides of the Santa Ana River, including the first mile and a half of development of the First Street Land and Improvement Company, which protects the ranches along the river, saving the crops against the flood waters.

On January 12, 1892, Mr. Timmons was married to Miss Lulu R. Cash, a native of Oakland, Ill., and the daughter of L. S. and Rowena (Sargent) Cash. She attended the graded schools of Oakland and later attended the Wesleyan University at Bloomington, Ill.; her father was a Virginian, while her mother came from Ohio. Two sons blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Timmons: Howard C. is a teller in the First National Bank of Santa Ana; and J. Herbert is associated with his father in the real estate business. Both of these promising young men have military records of which they may well be proud, having served in the same company during the late war. Mrs. Timmons is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Santa Ana, while Mr. Timmons is a well known figure among the Elks. In national politics he is a Republican and has been a director in the Chamber of Commerce, and always worked to secure enterprises that would aid the building up of Santa Ana. Mr. Timmons' enterprise is not only directed to the development of Orange County, but extends into other portions of California. Thus we find him an organizer of the Oak Ridge Orchards Company, of which he is president. This company acquired nearly 1,000 acres adjoining Templeton, San Luis Obispo County, on the southwest, which they are improving and developing to orchards of pears, prunes, apples and almonds.

MRS. LYDIA A. HEMENWAY.—A thoroughgoing business woman who is making a splendid success in her ranching activities is Mrs. Lydia A. Hemenway, who maintains a partnership with her brother, Aaron Buchheim, on the Santa Margarita ranch, southeast of El Toro. Mrs. Hemenway was born near Melrose, Minn., the daughter of Frank S. and Carolina (Zymon) Buchheim. Her father was a native of Germany, having come to the United States when he was but eleven years old. He settled in Minnesota prior to the Civil War and had enlisted in the Union Army and was ready to serve, when the war closed. The mother was born in the same part of Germany as her husband, and came to America when she was seventeen years of age, their marriage taking place in Minnesota.

The eldest of twelve children, seven of whom were born in Minnesota, Mrs. Hemenway came to California with her parents when she was nine years old. The family settled near Santa Ana, having purchased a twenty-acre ranch on Seventeenth Street, which is still a part of the Buchheim estate. Frank S. Buchheim died in 1904, at the age of sixty-one, the mother passing away eleven years later, being seventy-one at the time of her decease. Mrs. Hemenway spent her girlhood days on the home ranch, and received her education in the Santa Ana schools. Her first marriage occurred in 1890, when she was united to John Rumbould, a native of England, three children being born to them: Mabel is the wife of Hiram Whisler, a rancher on the Irvine ranch, and they are the parents of two children—Irene and Elmer; Ralph Rumbould, a rancher near Westminster, married Alice Skinner of Santa Ana, and they have one son, Robert; Roy Rumbould married Adelle McDonald, and two children, Margaret and Barbara, were born to them. The second marriage of our subject united her with Rupert Hemenway, and one child was born to them, a daughter, Ruth.

In 1908 Mrs. Hemenway formed a partnership with her brother, Aaron Buchheim, and they now operate 1,300 acres of the Santa Margarita ranch. Together they own their buildings, implements and work stock and equipment. In 1919 they had 250 acres in wheat and 800 acres in barley, 300 acres of which was cut for hay, the remaining 500 acres being harvested for grain, and the year 1920 they harvested 13,465 sacks of grain. They have also been extensively engaged in raising beans. They find the best results are obtained by summer fallowing, thus letting the ground rest a year and materially increasing the yield. The motive power for operating the ranch is furnished by five eight-horse and mule teams.

A woman of unusual energy and business acumen, with the faculty of getting on harmoniously with all her employees, Mrs. Hemenway is highly regarded in the whole community, and her generous, kindly spirit leads her to take a public-spirited interest in all the neighborhood affairs. She is endowed by nature with a strong intuition and is a very accurate judge of human nature; thus she is able to select help that she can depend on, and with the success that comes to her she is more and more enjoying the increasing business, and apparently does not mind the cares that big business brings, but, on the other hand, she is not content unless she is actively at the helm guiding and directing the operations. She is well read and well posted and is an interesting conversationalist. Would we had many more women like Lydia Buchheim Hemenway!

Lydia A. Hemenway

WILLIS F. MITCHELL.—A hard working, highly intelligent, successful young ranchman, whose honors have been increased through a meretorious naval record in the service of his country, is Willis F. Mitchell, son of Superintendent W. G. Mitchell, in charge of the great Irvine or San Joaquin ranch. He is really best known by the familiar name "Bud" Mitchell, and as such is about as welcome a native son, wherever he goes, as anyone in Orange County. He was born at Tustin, on August 11, 1896, one of three children, and enjoyed the most favorable home advantages under the loving care of his mother, who was Emily Sarah Green before her marriage. His older brother was Ralph John Mitchell, who served in the World War as a sergeant in the the U. S. Army, in time honorably discharged; a sister, Florence Margaret, who is now in the Orange high school, is the youngest of the family.

Willis Frederick, the second in order of birth, grew up on the San Joaquin ranch, and helped his father farm when he was yet a youth, at the same time that he attended the local public schools. In June, 1917, he was graduated from the Orange high school, and in the following September he enlisted in the U. S. Navy at San Pedro, and served as a seaman gunner on the Cruiser U. S. S. "Seattle," convoying troops overseas and later on the oil tanker "Wico," crossing the Atlantic six times. On their last trip over, they accompanied the Italian ship, "Silvia," and he was an eyewitness to her being torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine, and beheld the Silvia, which had a cargo of a million dollars worth of steel, plunge down to her watery grave. He himself had the pleasure of firing six of the fifteen shots sent at the submarine, 100 miles from the Straits of Gibraltar; and whether through expert handling of their own vessel, or merely good luck, the United States steamer delivered its cargo of gasoline safely at the various Mediterranean ports. He was seven months in actual service, and finally landed at Philadelphia on November 10, 1918, and was honorably discharged at the Brooklyn Navy Yard on January 23, 1919. Arriving home, he lost no time in doffing his naval uniform, cherished though that was, for the ranchman's garb. Now he is an active member of the American Legion, at Orange. He has always been interested in athletics, particularly baseball; was a member of the Orange high school team that won the Southern California championship in 1914. He is now captain of the Orange baseball team.

Mr. Mitchell is farming 180 acres in lima beans, and on seventy-five acres he is raising barley hay, so that he is cultivating 255 acres in all. He operates as far as possible according to the last word in science, and profits by careful observation and comparison with previous experiences. It is likely to be only a question of time for him to be among the leading ranchmen of his district.

FRED H. WEISEL.—A horticulturist of Anaheim who very worthily represents, as the son of the late Peter Weisel, another citizen of prominence, one of the broad-minded builders of the community, is Fred H. Weisel, who came to Orange County in the early nineties, when he was one year old, and who has therefore been identified with Southern California all his life. He was born at Milwaukee, Wis., in 1890, the son of Peter Weisel, a native of Germany who came to Milwaukee when he was seventeen years old and there learned the machinist's trade. He followed the building of steam engines until 1892, when he came out to California, bringing with him his family, and soon after bought the old cannery. This he enlarged, and he was one of the first here to make a success of canning fruits, managing it for several years.

When he came here, Peter Weisel bought twenty acres on Ball Road, now the Royer ranch, which he improved with walnut trees, and where he made a home place; later he bought more land and, after bringing that to a high state of development, sold all that he had and in 1903 located in Anaheim. After a while, he took a trip back to his old home in Germany; and there, in 1906, having fulfilled his mission as an industrious mortal who had been permitted to enjoy some of the good things in life, he passed away, in his seventieth year. His body was sent on to Anaheim for interment, and he was buried in the local cemetery. Mrs. Weisel, who long resided at Anaheim, died here in 1919, at the age of seventy-two.

Nine children blessed the mating of this worthy couple. Della is Mrs. Larsen of Hollywood; Josephine is Mrs. Krastle of Anaheim; P. J. Weisel lives at Santa Fe Springs; Flora is the wife of Joseph Hiltchen of Anaheim; Elsa is Mrs. Schellens of Olive; Hettie is the wife of Dr. Houck of Anaheim; Hans V. is the well known attorney of the same city; Gretchen is the wife of Dr. Syer of Los Angeles; and Fred H. of this review. Reared and educated in Anaheim, he was duly graduated from the Anaheim high school, in 1909, and began ranching with eleven acres of his own at the corner of Olive and Sunkist, which he set out to Valencia oranges; with others he sunk a well and formed a water company, and in 1919 he sold what he had and bought twenty acres on South Sunkist Avenue, already set out to Valencia oranges. He built his residence, sunk a well and then joined the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Association, in which he has always been especially interested.

On August 15, 1912, and at Anaheim, Mr. Weisel was married to Miss Margaret Tedrick who was born near Hutchinson, Reno County, Kans., the daughter of George and Belle (Duckworth) Tedrick, natives respectively of Ohio and Iowa. Her father was engaged in educational work, teaching in Kansas, and in 1908 came with his family to California, where he followed ranching. He then entered the civil service, and has been so engaged ever since. The eldest of their three children, Mrs. Weisel was graduated from the Anaheim Union high school in 1911. She belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

ROBERT B. JOHNSON.—A substantial citizen of Orange County who enjoys good reading, is interested in local annals and takes pride in family ancestry, is Robert B. Johnson, who was born in Stark County, Ill., on a farm northwest of Peoria, on July 12, 1870. His father was Andrew Jackson Johnson, a native of Illinois, who had married Miss Margaret Campbell, a native of Pennsylvania. As a farmer, he had 240 acres of rich corn land, which he sold in 1888, when he went to Nebraska. Eight of their children survived, and Robert is the youngest son.

He enjoyed a thorough, common school education in Illinois, and later graduated from the Norfolk, Nebr., high school. In 1896, he entered the Rush Medical College, from which he was graduated with honors as a member of the class of 1900. He spent his vacation at home, and the same year, 1900, began practicing medicine at New Salem, Ill.

After a couple of years, however, Mr. Johnson decided that he preferred mercantile life, and he became a partner in a dry goods business at Norfolk, Nebr. On September 23, 1903, he was married to Miss Nelle F. Ingalsbe, a native of Illinois, who was a teacher. One child, born in Nebraska on September 27, 1907, and christened William B. Johnson, was born of this happy union.

In 1908 Mr. Johnson came to California and in the summer of the same year bought eight and a half acres of oranges and apricots near Orange. Soon afterward, he purchased eleven acres in the far-famed frostless belt at Villa Park. He erected buildings there, and made other improvements. Now, with the help of a nephew, Harlan S. Johnson, who lives with him, Mr. Johnson is operating forty-four acres. He belongs to the Villa Park Orchards and the Central Lemon associations, contributes what he can by a live, intelligent interest, in the advancement of the citrus and walnut industries, and under the banners of the Republican party works hard for higher civic standards—better citizenship.

DAVID OLIVER STEWART.—Among the native-born sons of California who for years has occupied a place of prominence, particularly in the Huntington Beach district, is David Oliver Stewart, who possesses in a large measure those qualities that make for success in the upbuilding of a country, enterprise and determination, which he no doubt inherited from his father. The latter, Oliver C. Stewart, a native of Utah, came to the state as a pioneer in the early days, and farmed for many years in San Bernardino County. In 1869 the family removed to Ft. Worth, Texas, where they remained until 1879 when they returned to San Bernardino and in 1880 came to Orange County and settling in the famous peat lands near Westminster, being among the first settlers in that locality. Oliver C. Stewart died at the age of sixty-six, his wife, Martha (Brush) Stewart, born in Illinois, also being deceased.

Of their four children, David Oliver was the eldest. He was born in San Bernardino County on July 31, 1867, and when a babe of two years removed with his parents to Ft. Worth, Texas, where they remained till 1879 and in 1880 they came to Westminster, now Orange County, where he received his education in the public schools. He began to learn the rudiments of farming at an early age, helping his father on the home place. Until he was twenty years of age he continued to assist his father, who was at that time extensively engaged in general farming. On the land which the father had purchased was a tule swamp which was practically worthless. They inaugurated a system of drainage, however, that was very successful and proved to be the beginning of reclamation work in that district. The rich land thus made available was found especially adapted to the raising of celery and they were very successful in its production.

In 1888, David Oliver Stewart began farming for himself and on a tract of land that he purchased he began raising potatoes, corn and barley. He was unusually successful and never had a crop failure in the long term of years that he continued in this field. For a time he gave up his active farming interests, going to Huntington Beach to live. He was one of the first to recognize the value of beach property and bought sixty acres at the low price of thirty dollars an acre, afterwards disposing of forty acres of it for $300 an acre. For about ten years Mr. Stewart has been vice-president of the First National Bank of Huntington Beach and he appraises practically all the loans on lands made by that bank. His ability and many years of experience as a rancher and his long and intimate knowledge of men and acres in Orange County make his judgment authoritative in these matters, and there is perhaps no man in this region so well informed on land values as he. Mr. Stewart is also again actively engaged in ranching, raising sugar beets and lima beans. Notwithstanding his responsible duties in connection with his banking interests he is not afraid to roll up his sleeves and work and he does practically all the cultivating and planting on his twenty-seven-acre ranch in the Del Mar district, adjoining Huntington Beach.

In 1887 Mr. Stewart was married to Miss Alice Nixon, the ceremony being performed at Westminster. She is a native of Cedar Vale, Kans., and came to California with her parents when only two years old. She is the daughter of Andrew and Hannah (Conklin) Nixon, natives of Kansas and Ohio, respectively. The father was drowned on the coast where Huntington Beach now is, being probably the first victim. He came here and took up land on the present site of Huntington Beach, but was dispossessed by the Stearns Rancho Company, the family being ousted soon after the father's accidental drowning. There were three daughters in the Nixon family: Alice, Mrs. David Oliver Stewart; Ella, Mrs. John Graham of Bolsa; and Lilly, the wife of John Slayback of Hemet, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are the parents of four children: Earl, who married Miss Gladys Abbott, died November 27, 1919; Sylvia is the wife of Daye Compton of Monroe, Mich.; Maud is Mrs. Clarence Shermer of Pasadena; Rena is the wife of Harry Lindsay of Ogden, Utah. Mr. Stewart has always been very active in the municipal affairs of Huntington Beach, having helped to incorporate the city; he was a member of its first board of trustees and has since served two additional terms. His opinion is always highly regarded for it is to such progressive and far-seeing men as he that the city is indebted for its growth and development.

A. B. and L. S. HAVEN.—Prominent among the industries of California that have proven of the greatest benefit to Santa Ana, and so have added greatly to the wealth, prosperity and progress of Orange County, must be rated that of the Haven Seed Company, which expends over $100,000 annually in the town for labor and supplies. The business was organized and founded by E. M. Haven, an Ohioan and a member of a family of English origin. The progenitor of the family in America was Richard Haven, who came from the west of England and settled in Lynn, Mass., in 1644. He sought neither the wealth of the Incas, nor did he hope to find mines of gold, nor did he pant for the conquest of a new world, but as an humble artisan, a carpenter by trade, he hoped to find here an opportunity to pursue his calling in the freedom of a sincere Christian heart. The great-great-grandfather of A. B. Haven, Elisha Haven, married at Warwick, Mass., in 1792, into the Goodell family, of French descent, members of whom sailed from a port on the west coast of England to America on the ship "Elizabeth" in 1634. John Haven, great-grandfather, was a native of New Hampshire, but had resided in Vermont, Eastern New York and Ohio. He married, in 1820, at Shalersville, Ohio, into the noted English family of Sanford. Grandfather, G. W. Haven, was born in Shalersville, Ohio, September 18, 1831; and at North Eaton, that state, in 1854, married into the Wilmot family, also of English descent. He was a pioneer farmer in the Buckeye State. The Haven ancestors were numbered among those pioneers who made farm homes by clearing forests and doing the hardest kinds of labor to accomplish their objects. E. M. Haven grew up in Michigan, to which state his parents removed in 1863, when he was a lad of eight years. There he married, on February 27, 1878, Miss Ludema PeLong, a lady of French extraction, born on March 14, 1859, in South Lyons, Oakland County, Mich. At Bloomingdale, Van Buren County, Mich., E. M. Haven started the Haven Seed Company, in 1875.

The business grew and expanded, and in 1891 Mr. Haven moved to South Haven, Mich., and there built up a wholesale trade, making a specialty of tomato, radish, beans, cucumber, sweet corn and other vegetable seeds, the farmers growing them under contract and Mr. Haven selling to seed dealers. In the autumn of 1903, the Haven family moved out to California, and for a season settled in San Luis Obispo County. From 1905 to 1909, they operated in San Joaquin and Stanislaus counties, and in 1910 put in their first year in Orange County at Tustin, where they conducted a seed farm. In September, 1917, E. M. Haven died, mourned by all who knew him, esteemed his winning personality and admired his extraordinary ability. Since then, Mrs. Haven has resided in Santa Ana.

A. B. Haven, the president and manager of the Haven Seed Company represents the ninth generation in America and was born at Bloomingdale, Mich., on August 25, 1881. He bought forty acres, in 1917, adjoining the city limits of Santa Ana—a fine tract since then increased to 100 acres—and there had built a large warehouse of hollow tile, 55 x 72 feet in size, three stories high. Together with another warehouse, the company has some 13,000 feet of floor space; they also have finely-equipped offices, and have laid no less than thirty miles of tiling for drainage purposes, the exact value of which is being slowly tested and demonstrated. The water from their wells is lifted by pumps operated by electric power, furnishing an abundant and ample supply for irrigation. In 1918, also, a fine barn, 52 x 120 feet in size, was erected, to care for the twenty-four head of horses and mules, with additional buildings for the Holt caterpillar tractor, and other high-grade farming paraphernalia. This barn, erected after A. B. Haven's own plans, with many novel features all ingeniously arranged, is said to be the most up-to-date in all the county. In 1914, the Haven Seed Company was incorporated under the laws of the state of California.

Mr. Haven and his brother, L. S. Haven, who was born in South Haven, Mich., on July 8, 1895, and is secretary of the Haven Seed Company—with C. E. Utt of Tustin, as treasurer—have spent their entire lives in the seed business, and are decidedly practical men. They make a specialty of tomato seeds, and grow upwards of eighty varieties, being in that respect the largest growers of tomato seeds in the world. Two-thirds of their 600 acres are given up to tomatoes, and their seeds go to every civilized country on the globe. Part of their success is undoubtedly due to the originality of their improved methods, one of which is the most approved means of separating the seed—an invention that is the outgrowth of original ideas of members of the corporation and perfected by A. B. Haven. Besides the eighty varieties of tomatoes grown, the Haven Seed Company also produce several varieties each of eggplant, pepper, cucumber and special crops of other vegetable seeds including lima beans. Great care is taken that only the best seed is distributed to anyone.

A. B. Haven was married August 23, 1911, at Tustin, Cal., to Miss Lizzie H. Brown, by whom he has had five children—Mary, Archibald B., Jr., Annie, Elizabeth and Hilda L. In 1918 he built for himself and family a bungalow residence on the seed farm. L. S. Haven was married at Santa Ana, his bride being Miss Cammie B. Mitchell, with whom he now resides on Broadway, in Santa Ana. Two children have blessed their union, Ralph L. and Earl M. The Havens attend the Christian Church at Santa Ana.

MRS. MAUDE H. CHASE.—A highly cultured lady whose interest in art, especially painting—in which she herself, blessed with exceptional talent, is very proficient—has enabled her to contribute much for the edification and happiness of others, is Mrs. Maude H. Chase, the widow of the esteemed Charles H. Chase, living at 1701 North Bush Street, Santa Ana. She was born in West Side, Iowa, the daughter of LeRoy and Lottie L. (Rowland) Hall, who took her, when she was a mere baby, to Crawford, Nebr. There her father, a banker by profession, had the Commercial State Bank of Crawford, and he lived there for thirty-five years.

Maude Hall attended the public schools of Crawford, matriculating in time at the Nebraska State University; and after a course of study in that thorough institution, she later studied at the Armour Institute of Technology in Chicago. From time to time, she also studied painting in water colors and on china, and attained to a pleasing fame among her friends. In Chicago, Miss Hall was married to Charles H. Chase, a native of Akron, Ohio, where he was born on June 21, 1871, the son of a physician, Dr. Byron Chase, who had married Miss Henrietta Sabin. He attended the schools of Akron, and later graduated from the law school of the Western Reserve College.

After their happy marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Chase removed to Denver, Colo., where Mr. Chase was associated for a year with the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. Then they removed to Crawford, Nebr., and there Mr. Chase was in the mercantile trade. He was also elected and reelected the first mayor of Crawford, holding that responsible office for two consecutive terms. He was also affiliated with the Commercial State Bank of Crawford, and while in the bank was a member of the state legislature, representing the sixth district. His business was wholesale fruit and produce; and he was busy in that line, as one of the commercial leaders of the city, when he passed on, June 21, 1914, a member of the Congregational Church.

Mr. Chase was a member of the Akron Lodge of B. P. O. Elks, and had just taken his first steps in Masonry. Mrs. Chase is an active member of the Eastern Star, and also a prominent member of the local Ebells Club, the Santa Ana Chapter, P. E. O., and the Laguna Art Association. As a Christian Scientist, she belongs to the Mother Church of that organization at Boston, Mass.; and she takes an active part in public welfare work, and was an active participant in all war work expected of women. Four children have given joy to Mr. and Mrs. Chase: Henrietta H. is a student in the Santa Ana high school; Charlotte E. attends the Intermediate school, as does also Charles H.; and Bryon L. is in the second grade.

ALMON GOODWIN.—A successful rancher who never fails to interest, as an experienced old settler, the traveler looking for early California stories, is Almon Goodwin, whose uncle, Maj. C. M. Goodwin, was on the expedition with General Fremont when he was putting down the Indian uprisings and clearing the country for the white settlers. As an old-timer, he has had much to do with the development of Orange County, and few are assured of longer or more delightful remembrance by an appreciative posterity. A native son naturally proud of his association with this Pacific commonwealth, Mr. Goodwin was born near Stockton, in San Joaquin County, on June 24, 1854, the son of Almon D. Goodwin, a native of St. Lawrence County, N. Y., who had married a daughter of Vermont, Miss Martha Brosee. As far back as 1852 his parents came to San Joaquin County, and Almon was sent to the San Joaquin district schools and to the Stockton high school. One of his fellow students in those early, rawer days was James H. Budd, popularly known as "Jim," who afterward went to Congress and then became governor of California.

Almon Goodwin spent the early days with his father on a wheat ranch of 1,080 acres in the San Joaquin Valley, and in 1875 he and his brother George bought his father's ranch, where he remained until the fall of 1880. He then sold his holdings, came south and settled in Tustin; and there he purchased ten and one-quarter acres of old Mr. Moorehead, which he set out to oranges. At the same time, he bought 552 acres in the Los Bolsa district, and also ninety-seven acres near Fairview, which he leased out for a while and then managed for himself. He planted 200 acres to alfalfa the first year he came South, and started a dairy farm, becoming in time sole owner, and also raised horses, mules and hogs. He built the first cheese factory hereabouts, five miles from Santa Ana, west of where the Bolsa store now stands on section No. 18; and he had his young stock on his farm at Fairview, all this time making his home on his seven-acre grove on First Street, in Tustin. In January, 1886, he sold out his seven-acre grove and moved into Santa Ana; and, while residing here, he ran the two ranches at the same time. During the boom in 1888, however, he sold his holdings in Bolsa and Fairview.

While living in Santa Ana, Mr. Goodwin started orange grove development in Orangethorpe, and in 1890 set out fifteen acres of oranges on Commonwealth Avenue in Fullerton. In 1891 he planted fifteen acres of walnuts and five acres of oranges in West Orangethorpe; moving up to Orangethorpe in 1898. He sold the fifteen acres at Fullerton the second year after he set out the grove, and in 1907 disposed of the twenty acres in West Orangethorpe. He lived in Fullerton, and in 1910 built a home on his ranch on East Orangethorpe Avenue. At the present time he has eighteen acres in his ranch, and this is devoted to the culture of oranges. He has a well of sixty-two inches of water with a private pumping plant, where he installed a Lane and Boller pump.

On February 14, 1874, Mr. Goodwin was married to Miss Katherine Vilinger, a native of the same district in San Joaquin County in which he first saw the light of day. She attended the San Joaquin County schools, and became the mother of four children: Jesse is on the ranch adjoining his father at Orangethorpe; Pearl is Mrs. Parker and lives on a ranch on East Orangethorpe Avenue; William A. is in Fullerton; and Florence E. has become Mrs. Howard and resides in Shasta County. Mr. Goodwin is a public-spirited man, as might be inferred from such a career affecting the destinies of others beside himself; and he has served three terms on the city council of Santa Ana—two terms for two years, and one for four. He is a member of Lodge No. 236, I. O. O. F. of Santa Ana, and Mrs. Goodwin is a member of the Methodist Church in Fullerton as well as of the Rebekahs.

MISS BERTHA D. PROCTOR.—Not everyone, perhaps, who enjoys the high degree of popularity with which Miss Bertha D. Proctor, the very efficient librarian of Huntington Beach, is favored, so well deserves the honor and good will of their fellows, for she is both a young woman of exceptionable ability, and an indefatigable worker, ever having the best and most permanent interests of the community at heart. She was born at Janesville, Wis., the daughter of Joel Proctor, who had married Miss Della Scott; and with them she resides at 242 Fourteenth Street, Huntington Beach. A younger and only brother has the responsibility of the Saltville salt works near Randsburg, Cal.

Having graduated from the Janesville high school, and removed to the Pacific Coast, Miss Proctor attended the Los Angeles Normal School and secured a certificate to teach. For two years she was assistant principal, and for two years principal of the Riverside grammar school; but believing that in still another field lay her true mission in life, she went to Long Beach and there took the librarian's course under Miss Munson, the cataloguer, of the State Library. On finishing this course, she came to Huntington Beach, and has been closely identified with the growth of the town ever since.

The library, one of the youngest but among the most promising in Orange County, has been erected on six lots, at the corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, valued at $2,350. It was established through the library association which was formed on February 9, 1909, and which became a public library association on June 14, 1919. The library is well patronized, as may be seen from the fact that in ninety days the circulation was 9,360 volumes, taken out by 1,062 cardholders. Besides the collection of books, the library has over 800 very attractive stereopticon views.

The basement of the library structure is used by the Chamber of Commerce, of which Miss Proctor is the assistant secretary; and there a superb exhibit of the many varieties of Huntington Beach products of the soil is maintained. At the last Orange County Fair, Miss Proctor was in charge of the County Library exhibit, and a recent issue of The Golden West describes what was seen there as follows:

"A large and artistically arranged booth, decorated with flowers and plants, housed the exhibits of Santa Ana, Orange, Fullerton and Huntington Beach, each of which was both creditable and interesting. Books, magazines, papers and pictures told of the attractions and benefits of the various libraries, and Miss Bertha Proctor explained to all questioners the system and many avenues of library work. Miss Proctor is the librarian of Huntington Beach Carnegie Library, which is strictly up-to-date as to equipment and furnishings, while the circulation is exceptionally good for the size of the city. Gardens of flowers, walks, a fountain, a flagpole and ornamental lights surround the building, and adjacent lots have been converted into croquet courts and quoit grounds, while Nature has provided the sea beach only a block away for an outdoor reading room. The library is one of the most valuable assets of Huntington Beach, and is the pride of the little city."

Miss Proctor has a well developed artistic sense very useful to her in her public work; and this is shown in her displays as an amateur kodaker, and also a painter and a decorator—a field in which she has taken rank among the best of local amateurs. Her own popularity has contributed much to make the library a more popular and a more serviceable institution—a good example of the value, in sociological work especially, of character and the trained intellect.

HUNTINGTON BEACH CARNEGIE PUBLIC LIBRARY.—Among the liveliest agencies long and most effectively working for the upbuilding of Huntington Beach must be rated the Carnegie Public Library, since 1911 in charge of Miss Bertha D. Proctor, librarian. In 1909, R. M. Blodget and Mrs. R. H. Lindgren aroused the interest of both the Board of Trade and the Woman's Club, and a library organization was formed by Mrs. Lindgren, Mrs. Blodget, Mrs. Mary Manske, Mrs. C. D. Heartwell, Mrs. Minnie Nutt and Mr. Blodget. One dollar was fixed as the membership fee, a "drive" brought in many new supporters, and an entertainment by the Woman's Club netted fifty dollars. Mr. Reed guaranteed fifty dollars for the purchase of an old building that was being moved from the present site of the Collins Block to the southwest corner of Walnut and Main streets; carpenters and painters donated services to assist in making the affair, a mere shell, habitable; secondhand furniture was painted up and varnished; Mr. H. Gibbs furnished the fuel for the first winter, and the Huntington Beach Company the electricity and water until the library moved to its present building.

In 1909, the city agreed to provide for the library, and the first board of trustees was chosen with the appointment of A. W. Everett, Mrs. Lindgren, Mrs. S. L. Blodget, Mrs. Manske and Mrs. Ida Vincent, all of whom served the community with rare fidelity. So did the first librarian, Miss Edith Brown, whose highly-intelligent work lives after her. In 1910, Miss Maude D. Andrus succeeded Miss Brown, who was deceased, and then the library building was removed to the southwest corner of Third and Walnut streets, and enlarged.

In February, 1911, Miss Proctor took charge of the library, which had now come to be in greater demand, owing to the establishing here of the Holly Sugar Factory. Soon after, four lots on the corner of Eighth and Walnut streets were bought as a site for future library purposes, and on February 13, 1913—a red-letter day in the history of Huntington Beach—the glad tidings was received from New York that the Carnegie Corporation had given the city of Huntington Beach $10,000 for the erection of a public library building. In November of the same year, fitting ceremonies attended the laying of the cornerstone, and on May 7, 1914, the library was moved to its new home, a dignified structure faced with red tapestry brick, trimmed with a brick of light gray, and having a mission tile roof. It is 35 x 61 feet in size, and has a basement ten feet deep. It contains a large lecture room, a reference room, a work-room and a furnace room, while on the first floor is the general reading room, the children's room and the librarian's room. The furnishings are steel, and battleship linoleum carpets the floors. A tall grandfather's clock stands at the entrance, the gift of the high school graduates in 1914.

*E. C. Franzen
Constance Franzen*

Largely because of the broad and liberal spirit of the city fathers toward this meritorious institution, much has been done to beautify the library grounds, from time to time, and the library itself has been steadily augmented. When Miss Proctor took charge, there were only 300 volumes, but now she and her assistant, Mrs. E. J. Harlow, are responsible for over 6,500 well selected works in all fields of knowledge. Popular magazines and the leading newspapers are also to be found here. The present board of trustees consists of the president, H. T. Dunning; secretary, J. H. Eader, and A. M. O'Brien, Mrs. Ed Manning and Mrs. S. A. Moore.

EMANUEL C. FRANZEN.—There is always something inspiring to the historian in writing of a man who has made his own way in a successful battle with the world, despite, too, the moments when the issues depended altogether on the pluck and tenacity of the contestant. Emanuel C. Franzen, who owns a beautiful ranch and home site at the corner of Fairhaven and Yorba avenues, is one of those whose intelligence and hardihood have carried him through to the goal, and one with whom it is ever a pleasure to come into close contact.

He was born near Flensburg, Schleswig-Holstein, November 13, 1867, and is the son of Asmus Franzen, also born there of an old Danish family, who married one of his countrywomen, Miss Dorothea Schmidt. In 1879 the family came to Sycamore, DeKalb County, Ill., and in 1880 to Columbus Junction, Louisa County, Iowa, where he followed farming until 1889, when they came to Orange, Cal., and was engaged in horticulture until he retired. He had served in the Schleswig-Holstein War in 1864-66, and also in the Franco-Prussian War. The mother died in March, 1913, while the father died in 1916. They had four children, among whom our subject is the only son. Besides Emanuel C. Franzen, who is the eldest, two are living: Mrs. Christine Cox of Santa Ana, and Mrs. Minnie Rohrs of Orange.

Emanuel C. Franzen was twelve years of age when he came to the United States, and he attended the public schools in Illinois and Iowa, and during spare time worked on his father's farm. In 1887 he came to Orange, arriving on November 7 of that year. He began work in orchards, so has been associated with citrus growing since 1887. As was the custom, his wages went to his father until he was twenty-one years of age, when he engaged in farming for himself. He worked on a farm nine months, was employed for two years on a ranch in Villa Park, when he went to Los Angeles and worked for Phil Hirschfeld and Company (now Zellerbach). While there he attended the Los Angeles Business College at night after work was over. After being employed for two years at Hirschfeld & Company he returned to Orange. In 1890 he bought his present ten acres of land on Fairhaven and Yorba avenues. He grubbed out the deciduous and eucalyptus trees and raised farm produce. In 1894 he set five acres of apricots, but when they began bearing the price of apricots was so low it did not pay, so he took them out and set out Valencia oranges, and now he has a splendid bearing orange grove of ten acres under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He has built a large modern residence, as well as improved it with other suitable farm buildings.

At Orange on July 11, 1895, Mr. Franzen was united in marriage with Miss Emilie Engelbert, a daughter of Rev. William P. and Catherine (Deitz) Engelbert. William P. Engelbert was a graduate of Concordia College, Fort Wayne, Ind., and was a minister in the German Lutheran Church, preaching in one congregation in Ohio for eight years, then was called to Racine, Wis., where he founded St. John's Lutheran Church, and under his guidance it became a power for good, and he continued as their much loved pastor for seventeen years, until his death December 30, 1878. His widow spent her last days in Los Angeles, and died September 26, 1890. They had ten children, eight of whom grew up and three are still living. Besides Mrs. Franzen there is a sister, Mrs. Pauline Eifler of Los Angeles, and a brother, Rev. Ferdinand Engelbert, pastor of the Lutheran Church at Braddock, Pa. Mrs. Franzen was born in Racine, Wis., and there received a good education, coming to Orange County, Cal., with her mother in 1887, and it was here she met Mr. Franzen, their acquaintance resulting in their marriage, and of their union three children have been born, Lillian, Alma and Herman.

Mr. Franzen has been a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association from its organization, and being interested in the cause of education, has served as a trustee of the El Modena school district for eight years. The family are members of St. Peter's Lutheran Church at Santa Ana, Mr. Franzen being a member of its board of trustees, while Mrs. Franzen is an active member and ex-secretary of the Ladies' Aid Society and an active Sunday School worker, and their daughter, Mrs. Alma Reusch, is the organist.

WILLIAM T. NEWLAND.—A pioneer settler of Orange County who has watched and aided its growth from a primitive condition to its present state of perfection, is William T. Newland, since 1882 a resident of California. A native of Adams County, Ill., Mr. Newland was born at Camp Point, a short distance from Quincy. He is descended from Revolutionary stock and his father, John Newland, a native of Pennsylvania, served in the Third Missouri Cavalry in the Civil War, and died during his service. John Newland had married Mary Wortick, also a native of Pennsylvania, and of the six children born to them, William T., the subject of this sketch, was the eldest. He was only eleven years old when his father left home to enlist and his death a little more than two years later left him the practical head of the little family and it became necessary to assist his mother in caring for the younger children; but this seeming handicap only developed his self-reliance and gave him the determination to succeed. When Mr. Newland was seventeen years old he went to Morgan County, Ill., and began working on the farm of John M. DeLapp for thirteen dollars and a half a month, sending this money home to his widowed mother until her death two years later. When Mr. Newland was twenty-five years of age he was married to Mary Juanita DeLapp, the daughter of his employer.

After Mr. Newland's marriage he continued to farm in Morgan County until 1882, when he sold out his holdings there and removed to California. The first eight months were spent at Half Moon Bay, and then he came to Los Angeles and bought an eighty-acre farm one mile west of Compton. In 1886 he came to what is now Orange County and leased land from James Irvine, where Mr. Newland cleared and broke the land and put in the first large crop of barley raised on it. Afterwards he came up to his present location near what is now Huntington Beach and bought a tract of 520 acres; mostly tule land, and for the most part considered valueless. But with the native perspicacity and foresight which has always insured his success, Mr. Newland saw its possibilities and with his neighbors cut a ditch system, cleared and improved the land, and for some time made a very profitable venture in the raising of celery. Later he engaged extensively in the raising of sugar beets, in one year netting $35,000 from this crop, and of late years he has devoted quite an acreage to raising lima beans.

Mr. Newland was at one time president of the First National Bank of Huntington Beach. Always appreciating the necessity and importance of good roads, he has served on the county highway commission, and it was during his tenure of office that the county bond issue went through, appropriating the sum of $2,500,000 for 146 miles of road in Orange County. He is a trustee of the Huntington Beach high school. At present he is a director and one of the largest stockholders of the Huntington Beach Linoleum Company. In July, 1916, accompanied by Mrs. Newland, he made a trip to Astanchia Valley, N. M., and there bought a tract of 2,500 acres of land.

Mr. and Mrs. Newland are the parents of ten children: Clara is the wife of P. A. Isenor, a rancher at Talbert; Wilmuth is the wife of Irving Thompon, who lives at El Toro; Mary Frances resides with her parents; Idelpha is the wife of Colson McConahy, a broker at Seattle, who served his country in the late war; John D. was in the U. S. Army and served in Siberia until his discharge; Jessie is the wife of John W. Corbin, and they reside on Mr. Newland's ranch at Astanchia, N. M.; William T., Jr., married Miss Hazel Fox and rents a part of the home ranch; Clinton C. married Miss Annie Hill and also rents a part of the home ranch, he also served during the war in the Signal Corps; Helen H. and Bernice M. are attending the Huntington Beach high school. Mr. Newland is prominent in I. O. O. F. circles, having been a member of that fraternity for many years.

LARS TOBIAS EDWARDSON.—A worthy couple who have done their share to develop the natural resources of the Placentia section of Orange County are Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Edwardson, who now live retired from active business cares at their comfortable home in a beautiful, well-kept Valencia orange grove, highly esteemed for their enterprise, liberality and kindness of heart. The picturesque west coast of Norway was the birthplace of both Mr. and Mrs. Edwardson, Soggendal being their native town. There on February 14, 1841, Mr. Edwardson was born, and six years later, on April 1, 1847, was recorded the natal day of Mrs. Edwardson, who in maidenhood was Miss Anne Tolena Jacobsdatter. They were both reared and educated in the neighborhood of their birth and on March 6, 1868, were united in marriage. Reared to agricultural pursuits, Mr. Edwardson followed farming in his native land until 1885, when they came to America. They stopped for the summer at La Crosse Wis., and in the fall of that year came west to California, locating on a farm in what is now Orange County. Two years later they came to Placentia and purchased two and a half acres, which they improved and set out to oranges; later they purchased twenty acres north of Placentia and this is set to walnuts, now bringing in a splendid income. This place has been leased for oil and one well has already been sunk on the property. They also own a home at East Newport, where they frequently go for recreation. Always deeply interested in the progress of the community, Mr. Edwardson is a member of the Placentia Orange Growers Association and the Fullerton Walnut Growers Association.

Six living children complete the happy family circle of Mr. and Mrs. Edwardson, who have journeyed together along life's pathway for more than fifty years. Anna Bergitte is the wife of John Lemke of Placentia; Carrie is Mrs. John Hetebrink of Fullerton; Ludvig is a rancher at Placentia; Hanna is Mrs. William Kennedy of Anaheim; Mary is Mrs. Frost of Boston, Mass.; Jacob is engaged in ranching at Placentia. The two sons look after the ranches, giving them the best of attention, and thus relieve their parents of all unnecessary responsibility and care, so that they can enjoy the reward of their well-spent years. They spend many pleasant days at their Newport Beach home, where Mr. Edwardson especially enjoys the fishing. In the spring of 1920 they made an extended tour of three months, traveling east as far as Boston, where they visited their daughter, Mrs. Frost, returning by way of Wisconsin, where they visited old friends, and thence through British Columbia, down to Seattle and home, taking in many points of interest all along the way.

Residents of Orange County for thirty-five years, Mr. and Mrs. Edwardson can well take pride in the accomplishments of the past years and in the fact that they have done their part in bringing them about. They have prospered because of their industry and good management and are today well-to-do and in comfortable circumstances, which they well deserve. They, in turn, are always ready to aid those who have been less fortunate and show their hospitality in many ways. Reared in the Lutheran faith of their forbears, they are still active in its good works; in political matters they are firm believers in the principles of the Republican party.

PAUL TREYDTE.—Coming to America to seek success, feeling that the opportunities here were greater than in his native land, Paul Treydte was indeed successful in reaching his goal, despite the short span of his earthly existence. He was born in Eisleben, Germany, on August 22, 1879. His boyhood days were spent in the neighborhood of his birthplace and he received his education in the public schools of that locality where he learned the baker's trade. As the years went by he became desirous for wider fields than the land of his birth seemed to afford so he accordingly set sail for America, reaching New York June 26, 1904. For the succeeding two years Mr. Treydte worked at his trade in and around New York City and at various places along the Jersey Coast, and it was during that period that he took out his naturalization papers. Feeling that the Pacific Coast presented a broader scope for his activities, Mr. Treydte set sail in 1906 with San Francisco as his destination, coming by way of the Isthmus of Panama, reaching there shortly after the disastrous earthquake of that year. He first established himself in the baking business in St. Helena, continuing there about eighteen months, and then going to Roseville, in Placer County. There he established and operated a bakery with good success for two years and he is still the owner of the buildings occupied by the bakery and drug store in that city. Seeing the benefits of a good English education, Mr. Treydte spent much time studying at night and the diligent effort put forth by him has since been of great service.

After leaving Roseville he engaged in the bakery business in San Francisco, at 141-147 Eddy Street, and from there removed to Whittier, in Los Angeles County and ran the Whittier bakery for three years, making his manufactured product popular in Los Angeles and Orange counties. In 1916 Mr. Treydte became the owner of sixteen and a half acres of citrus land at Yorba Linda and later acquired an additional tract of nine and a half acres, making twenty-six acres in all, ten acres of the property being in oranges and sixteen acres in lemons. After oil was struck in the vicinity he leased the places to the General Petroleum Oil Company, who are now sinking a well on his place, making the ranch more valuable than ever. Besides his ranch property in Yorba Linda, Mr. Treydte owned real estate in Riverbank, Stanislaus County, and at Lynwood, Los Angeles County.

At St. Helena, Napa County, Mr. Treydte was married on December 24, 1907, to Miss Emma Kueffer, a daughter of G. and Margaret (Romig) Kueffer, who migrated from Falls County, Texas, to Napa County, Cal., in 1895, and located at Calistoga, where they were engaged in horticulture and viticulture. The father died in 1905, being survived by his widow, who resided on the old home place until 1919, when she disposed of it and now makes her home at Yorba Linda. Of their three children, Mrs. Treydte is the youngest and was born in Falls County, Texas; coming to California, she received a good education in the Calistoga schools. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Treydte, all of them native sons and daughters of the Golden State:

Paul, Jr., Ella M., George S., Myrtle D., and Raymond. They all attend the school at Yorba Linda.

A loyal citizen to the land of his adoption, Mr. Treydte was an enthusiastic supporter of all progressive movements in Orange County. He was a member of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association and the Yorba Linda Water Company. With his family he was a member of the Lutheran Church in Whittier. A self-made man, he made a genuine success of all his undertakings after his arrival in this country and in all of this he gave due credit to his wife, who was a real helpmate to him in all his enterprises. Mr. Treydte passed away December 2, 1920, deeply mourned by his family and friends, who appreciated him for his many virtues.

LEWIS W. BLODGET.—Prominent among the rising young attorneys of the state, is Lewis W. Blodget of the law firm of Blodget and Blodget of Los Angeles and Huntington Beach. The family of Blodget is one of the old and honored Puritan families of Massachusetts and has figured prominently in the history and development of Massachusetts and America. The first representative of the Blodget family in America was Thomas Blodget, who with his wife and two sons, came to Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1635. He was born in England in 1605 and left Suffolk, England, with his family, sailing from Plymouth on the ship "Increase" in 1635. He died in Cambridge, Mass., in 1641. The great grandfather of Lewis W., was Arba Blodget, who was born in Massachusetts in 1789. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and in the Indian Wars, and died in 1837. His father was Solomon Blodget, a soldier in the Revolutionary War, who was born in 1756 and died in 1844. Solomon Blodget's grandfather, Joseph Blodget, fought in the Indian and Colonial War in 1725. On his father's side, Lewis W. represents the tenth generation in America and on his mother's side the eleventh generation.

As progeny of the first Blodget, there are now 60,000 Blodgets in the United States, according to the genealogy of the family from their personal investigation. William Oren Blodget, the grandfather of Lewis W. was a first lieutenant in the One Hundred Fifty-first Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War, and fought at Gettysburg, where he was severely wounded. His whole company was ambushed on the first day of that battle and seventy-five per cent were annihilated within fifteen minutes. He lived and died in Sugar Grove, Pa. The father of Lewis W., Spencer Langdon Blodget, was for thirteen years an honored citizen of Huntington Beach, where he came to take a position as cashier of the First National Bank in 1906, and he later became associated with the Holly Sugar factory. He moved to Los Angeles in September, 1919, and is now office manager of the Los Angeles office of the Motor Vehicle Department of the State of California. His first wife, whose maiden name was Carra M. Belnap, was born in Warren, Pa., and was a descendant of a pioneer Pilgrim family that also came to America in 1635. She died in 1893, the mother of eight children, six of whom are living: Claude Raymond, in the real estate and insurance business in Bakersfield, Cal.; Percy Langdon, a mining engineer in Darwin, Cal.; Rush Maxwell, now the city attorney of Venice, was the first city attorney of Huntington Beach; Marian Bernice, wife of Cash C. Ramsey, oil man at Bakersfield; Ward Belnap, chief geologist for the Santa Fe Railway; and Lewis William. The four brothers of Lewis William are all graduates of Leland Stanford University. Spencer L. Blodget was married a second time, to Miss Florence Langdon of Chautauqua County, N. Y.

Lewis William Blodget was born in Bakersfield November 27, 1893, and lived there until he was twelve years of age, when he came to Huntington Beach. He was graduated from the Huntington Beach union high school in 1911, and entered the College of Law of the University of Southern California from which he was graduated in 1915 with the degree of LL.B. He opened a law office in Huntington Beach and when his brother, Rush M., who was in Arizona at the time, returned to California, the two brothers opened their law offices in Los Angeles and Huntington Beach. He enlisted in the Reserve Officers' Training Camp at San Francisco in August, 1917. He was commissioned a second lieutenant on November 27, 1917, and first lieutenant August 1, 1918. He served thirteen months with the Thirteenth Infantry Regulars, and was under overseas orders and ready to sail from Hoboken, N. J., when the armistice was signed. Later he was assigned to special duty in Washington, D. C., and was honorably discharged January 9, 1919, at Washington. He was elected city attorney while yet in service and was notified by wire of his election, on the strength of which he secured his discharge. He lost no time in getting back into practice.

Mr. Blodget was married September 3, 1919, to Miss May M. Ball of Morristown, N. J. He is a member of the Delta Chi (legal) Fraternity of the University of Southern California Chapter; Sons of the American Revolution; is a Mason, being senior wärden of Huntington Beach Lodge No. 380, F. & A. M.; and is commander of the Joseph Rodman Post, American Legion, at Huntington Beach. He is a member of the Los Angeles County Bar Association, the Orange County Bar Association and the City Attorneys' Association of Southern California. He is a member of the Republican Central Committee of Orange County. Both Mr. and Mrs. Blodget are popular with a wide circle of friends and take an active part in social affairs.

HARRY E. ZAISER, M. D.—Orange County takes pride in its County Hospital, and looks with confidence and satisfaction upon the daily responsible and trying work of the well-trained officials in charge. A leader among these is naturally Dr. Harry E. Zaiser, the physician selected to superintend the institution, upon whose experience, foresight and common sense judgment, as well as sympathy and tact, so much depends. A Hawkeye by birth, he first saw the light at Burlington in December 16, 1880, the son of John and Margaret Zaiser, the former since deceased, while the mother is living at the fine old age of eighty. There were nine children in the family, and Harry was the youngest of them all.

Having attended the grammar school, he was graduated in 1897 from the Burlington high school, and then began a clerkship of two years in the iron mill in that city. After that he took a business college course, and was employed as clerk in a wholesale office until 1898, when he went to St. Louis to study medicine. He matriculated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, studied there for four years, and was graduated in 1902. At the conclusion of his strenuous work in Missouri, he went abroad for post-graduate work, and then practiced in Burlington until 1909.

Removing to California, Dr. Zaiser settled in Orange County and established a practice at Santa Ana, which he continued until he was appointed to his present position in 1914. His record as county physician in Burlington, Iowa, doubtless had much to do with his being selected for one of the important posts of its kind in California. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Orange County Medical Association and of the Southern California Medical Society. In national politics a Republican, Dr. Zaiser adheres to party politics in local affairs only when they promote and do not hinder nor defeat the important goal to be attained.

Dr. Zaiser was married at Burlington, in 1909, to Miss Ida Thompson, a native of that city and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Ihrer. They attend the First Methodist Church. Since he has taken charge of the work, Dr. Zaiser has done much to bring the County Hospital to the front, and while regarding his own part in a very modest light, he is naturally proud of the good that has been accomplished there. Not only are the sick cared for to the best of human ability and with every scientific aid, but the poor proven indigent are also received, and enjoy equal care. Thus the good name of Orange County, that has poured out so lavishly to those in distress, is protected and enhanced by these faithful public servants, Dr. Zaiser and his excellent staff.

EVAN DAVIS.—An admirable man who left behind him both a blessed memory and an equally admirable woman, for years his devoted wife, was Evan Davis, who first came to Orange towards the middle nineties. He was born at Edgerton, Wis., on January 24, 1858, the son of Percival Ferdinand Davis, a native of Western New York, who settled in Wisconsin in early days, and was a merchant at Edgerton. Evan was reared in Edgerton, where he attended the public schools. He completed his studies at Milton College and then engaged in manufacturing at Milton, Wis., making a punch and die machine. After a while he engaged in real estate and fire insurance at the same place, and at Emerald Grove, on December 12, 1883, married Miss Ida E. Ransom, a native of that place and the daughter of Asa G. Ransom, who was born in Middlefield, N. Y. He came to Wisconsin and as a pioneer farmer broke the prairie. Mrs. Ransom was Martha Hubbell before her marriage, and she was born in New York state. She became the mother of five children, among whom Ida was next to the youngest, and is now the only one living in California. She also was educated at Milton College and there she met Mr. Davis.

In 1894, Mr. and Mrs. Davis located at Orange, Cal., and here, on South Glassell Street, he opened an office for the transaction of a real estate and insurance business. Soon after this he became an oil broker in Los Angeles, and with an office at 104 Stimson Building, he bought and sold crude oil. He sold oil to gas plants as well as other manufacturing establishments, and being an expert machinist and engineer built up a good trade. At the same time he made his home in Orange; and inasmuch as he was musical and had been leader of the Wisconsin band at Milton, he was naturally made the leader of the Orange Band and Orchestra, and he also sang in the Presbyterian Church choir. He joined Orange Lodge of the Odd Fellows and became a past grand, and was a member of the Encampment and Couton in Santa Ana, being a past chief patriarch in the Encampment, and is a member of the Rebekahs, the Modern Woodmen of America, the Royal Neighbors, and the Fraternal Aid Union, and was also an elder in the Presbyterian Church at the time of his death, on July 16, 1917. After his death his son, Percy R. Davis, conducted the business, and then, when he was called to the war, Mrs. Davis discontinued the business.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Davis. Leon died at the age of twenty-seven; Percy R. served in the Three Hundred and Sixteenth Engineer Corps, Ninety-first Division, overseas, and on his return here took up his residence in Orange; and Arline, who graduated from the Orange Union high school and also the Library School in Riverside, before going to Pomona College, where she was assistant librarian, was graduated from Pomona with the Bachelor of Arts degree, and is now librarian of the Girls' School at Riverside.

Mrs. Davis is a member of the Presbyterian Church and the Ladies' Aid Society, and is active in the missionary work of that organization. She is a member of the Rebekahs, and is a past noble grand and is an ex-representative of the same order, and a past district deputy president. She is also a member of the Veteran Rebekahs, where she is a past president; and she belongs to the Royal Neighbors, and has passed all the chairs.

BENJAMIN KRAEMER.—One of the oldest settlers of the Placentia district, having come here with his parents in 1867, is Benjamin Kraemer, who was born in Belleville, Ill., in the year 1867. His father, Daniel Kraemer, was born in Bavaria; he came to the United States in 1842, arriving in New Orleans, then came up the Mississippi River to St. Louis and walked out to Belleville, the county seat of St. Clair County, Ill., where he obtained employment on the farm of Mr. Schrag and became acquainted with his daughter Eleanora Schrag, resulting in their marriage. They became owners of a farm there and resided there until nine children were born to them. As early as the fall of 1864 Daniel Kraemer made his first trip to California, visiting Southern California and purchased 3,900 acres of land a part of the Rancho San Juan Cajon de Santa Ana; the land was then a wilderness of mustard, brush and cactus. In 1866 he made a second trip to his California possessions and in 1867 he brought his family out and located on his ranch. Each trip he had come via New York and Panama to San Francisco and thence by boat to San Pedro, from which place he came overland to Anaheim. His was the first white family in the Placentia district and our subject was the first white baby in what was then the Cajon school district. A few years later Daniel Kraemer's friend, Mr. Kossert, came out to Santa Ana and was associated with Messrs. Spurgeon and McFadden in Santa Ana real estate; when he sold out he went to Mesilla, N. M., and was never again heard from by them.

Daniel Kraemer was active in irrigation matters and was one of the builders of the Cajon ditch, when it was first attempted, but it proved a failure at that time and he lost what he had put into it. Later, however, the Cajon ditch was carried through under the Bush Act and was later merged with the Anaheim Water Company, now the Anaheim Union Water Company. Daniel Kraemer was, however, the first individual to irrigate in Orange County from a ditch taken out of the Santa Ana River. He received twenty shares of stock in lieu of his old water right of fifty inches from the Anaheim Union Water Company, which is non-assessable stock. This stock is now owned by our subject. Daniel Kraemer engaged in ranching and set out vineyards and the first walnut orchard here; he was very optimistic for the future greatness of this region and said that this part of California would be the garden spot of the United States and also from the Brea deposits he predicted it would some day develop into an oil field. He died in 1882, aged sixty-five years; his wife surviving him until 1889. All of their nine children are living but one.

Coming to Placentia in his first year, Benjamin Kraemer's earliest recollections are of the place he still owns and has resided on since 1867. Here he learned ranching from the time he was a lad and attended the local public school. Desiring to obtain a higher education he worked his way through St. Vincent's College in Los Angeles, as well as Woodbury's Business College, graduating from the latter in 1886, when nineteen years of age, and then returned to the old home ranch, where he took up his residence in the old house built by his father, and here he lived until he completed his new residence in 1919; he has the unique distinction of living longer in one house than any other one person in Orange County—over fifty-two years. His ranch comprises sixty-seven acres of which thirty acres is devoted to raising oranges and twenty acres to walnuts, having set out every tree in his orchards. He was one of the organizers of the Placentia Mutual Orange Growers Association, of which he was a director for eight years until he resigned; he is also a member of the Fullerton-Placentia Walnut Growers Association.

Mr. Kraemer was married in Anaheim, where he was united with Miss Mary Allec, who was born in France, and they have been blessed with twelve children: Mary, Mrs. Victor Reis of Whittier; Emma; Elizabeth, deceased; Gladys; Jennie, deceased; Lucy; Benjamin, Jr.; Louisa; Annie; Jonathan, deceased; William and Rosa Belle. Mr. Kraemer is a great reader, is well posted on early history and is a very interesting conversationalist; he has been a life-long student and is a linguist, speaking several languages fluently, and he has frequently been selected as interpreter in different capacities.

ROY D. TRAPP.—A native son of the Golden West, born at the old home place at Ninth and Lemon streets, Los Angeles, October 28, 1882, the late Roy D. Trapp was a very successful rancher and business man, accomplishing more in a few short years than many men do in a long lifetime. By his energy and optimism he accumulated a competency as well as contributing very materially to the building up and improving of Orange County, thus contributing his share towards making this one of the most important agricultural and horticultural counties on the Pacific Coast. His father, Frank M. Trapp, was a native of Missouri who crossed the plains with his parents in an ox-team train over the old Oregon Trail in 1849. Grandfather John M. Trapp was a rancher in Oregon until about the year 1860, when the family came to Los Angeles and located at the corner of Ninth and Lemon streets, where Frank M. Trapp and his father farmed together, raising oranges, limes and lemons as well as grapes and small fruits with success, so much so that at the Centennial Fair held in Los Angeles Frank M. Trapp received the first award for his exhibit. He was married in Los Angeles on November 4, 1869, to Elizabeth Pierce, also born in Missouri, a daughter of James Pierce who brought his family across the plains to San Bernardino, Cal., in 1849.

After he left the old home at Ninth and Lemon streets, Los Angeles, Frank M. Trapp engaged in farming at Artesia, then for a few years engaged in raising cattle on the Toler ranch near Whittier, after which he spent five years at Compton. He then returned to Los Angeles and there his wife died in 1901, while he survived her until December 23, 1905. They were the parents of nine children: Wm. C. is a business man in Los Angeles; Chas. E. was a successful farmer in Florence until his death; Ida E. is Mrs. Levreau, residing at Florence; John M. died at Huntington Park; Geo. O. a farmer at Buena Park; Lillian C. is the wife of Edward E. Chapella of Hollywood; Roy D., our subject; Frank M. resides at Florence; and James B. who served in the U. S. Army overseas in the World War is now a farmer at Norwalk.

Roy D. Trapp was reared on his father's farm, so from a youth became familiar with farming operations as well as the marketing of the produce. During these years his education was not neglected for, after completing the public schools, he took a course and graduated at the Woodbury Business College in Los Angeles, accumulating a knowledge that was of so much assistance to him during his business career as a rancher. His marriage took place in Los Angeles, March 10, 1906, when he was united with Miss Elfrieda Warnke who was born in Berlin, Germany, and came to Chicago, Ill., with her parents, Fred and Minnie Warnke, when she was a very small child. In that city she received a good education; when she was sixteen years of age her father passed away and soon afterward the family came to Los Angeles and it was here that she met Mr. Trapp, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage, and was a union that proved exceedingly happy to them both. With youth, health, energy and ambition they started out to gain a competence; Mr. Trapp by this time had saved enough to own a team of horses, a plow and cultivator, so full of hope he started out and leased twenty-seven acres, which he devoted to raising wax beans and watermelons, the beginning of his success as a vegetable grower, gradually increasing the number of acres he farmed each year. In 1912 his home at Eightieth and South Park avenue, Los Angeles, was destroyed by fire and the next year they removed to San Jacinto for a year, and then located in Orange County, purchasing ten acres on Brookhurst Avenue, which he improved to Valencia oranges and which he afterward sold at a good profit. At the same time he leased ninety acres of the Bastanchury ranch, raising cabbage and beans and cleaning up $90,000, as prices were then at their highest level. He then leased 350 acres of the Irvine ranch near Tustin, where he engaged in intensive farming, raising hay and vegetables, specializing in cabbage and cauliflower, which he was able to market at a large profit, so that he was able to purchase forty acres on West Commonwealth Avenue in the west end of Fullerton, which he proceeded to improve, grubbing out a few acres of walnuts and setting the whole place to Valencia oranges. He also purchased a citrus grove of about two acres on an elevation overlooking the city and here he and his wife planned and built a beautiful residence where they were enjoying life to the fullest, when on July 14, 1920, the horrible tragedy occurred which resulted in his death, an incident that is very fresh in the minds of the people of Southern California. This same year he was also farming the Norwalk ranch of 275 acres. Such had been his success, his optimism was strengthened so that his plan was another five years of close application on the large scale he was undertaking and he would quit and arrange his affairs so he and his devoted wife could travel abroad and enjoy the scenes of other countries. In all his plans he always included his wife, who had ever entered heartily into his business operations, assisting him in every way she could and encouraging him in his ambition so that he always gave her much of the credit for his success, but he was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors for he was cut down by an assassin while still in the prime of life.

He was a splendid type of man, of a pleasing and attractive personality that drew men to him, so he counted his warm friends by the thousands who esteemed him for his good fellowship, kindness and honesty of purpose and appreciated him for his integrity and worth. Since his taking away Mrs. Trapp is caring for the property they accumulated in the way they had talked and planned and thus she is carrying out, as far as she is able, his plans and ambitions for the place. Mr. Trapp was a great home man, was a member of but one lodge, Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

GEORGE W. WELLS.—Well known in Orange County for years as the proprietor of the Santa Ana Soda Works and the pioneer in that industry in the county, George W. Wells is now the owner of a fine citrus ranch at Yorba Linda, having developed it from the very beginning. Born in Kirkwood, Warren County, Ill., August 27, 1861, Mr. Wells is the son of W. J. and Doratha (Berican) Wells, and his forbears were well-established tradesmen of Pittsburgh, Pa. W. J. Wells, who was born in 1820, at Pittsburgh, Pa., was a veteran of the Civil War, having been a member of the Eighty-third Illinois Infantry, and for a number of years he farmed in Illinois. The mother, who was born in Germany, came to the United States in 1856, her marriage to W. J. Wells being solemnized at Quincy, Ill. The district schools of Warren County furnished George W. Wells his early education and when still a lad he accompanied his parents, with their family of five children to Wellington, Kans. These were the early pioneer days in that state and the country was sparsely settled, and Mr. Wells keenly remembers the hardships of that period, many times the only available food being buffalo meat and cornbread.

Until he was nineteen years of age Mr. Wells worked on his father's Kansas farm, then taking up an apprenticeship in harness and saddle making, to which he gave three years, later becoming the manager of a branch house in this line of trade, buying out the interest and establishing the business under his own name. During his residence in Kansas Mr. Wells also became heavily interested in the stock business, but during the extreme cold in the winter of 1900 he was frozen out and suffered a discouraging loss. The next year he came to California with his family and located at Santa Ana, where he began the manufacture of soft drinks. He began on a very modest scale, doing all his own work, but year by year his business grew until it reached such large proportions that he was employing six men and buying his bottles by the car load, his products being sold all over Southern California. Mr. Wells made a scientific study of his enterprise and was the originator of Wells' Orange Phosphate and other fruit punches.

In 1912 Mr. Wells purchased a tract of ten acres at Yorba Linda, which he soon began to improve. His nursery stock came from orange seeds which he planted himself, later budding them and setting out his own orchard, which he developed into a very attractive ranch. This ranch is in the center of the famous Richfield oil fields and is leased to the Union Oil Company, which is now operating on it. In 1917 Mr. Wells sold the Santa Ana Soda Works to Albert Biner and with his family removed to the Yorba Linda ranch, where they have since made their home. In addition to the home place. Mr. Wells is also managing forty-four acres of citrus groves.

Since coming to Yorba Linda Mr. Wells has taken an active interest in all the affairs of the community and has served two terms as director of both the Yorba Linda Citrus Association and the Yorba Linda Water Company, and is also a promoter of the good work being accomplished by the Farm Center. During the war he was prominent in all the drives and war loans, giving both of his time and means to further all the Government programs. In fraternal circles Mr. Wells is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically he espouses the platform of the Republican party.

Mr. Wells' marriage, which occurred in 1885 at Caldwell, Kans., united him with Miss Clara L. Stearns, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William W. Stearns. Her father, who was a successful farmer in that part of Kansas for a number of years, was born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1834, and in 1861 he was married at Hornellville, N. Y..

to Miss Mary Sharp, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1841. Four children were born to them, Mrs. Wells being the only daughter. She was born in 1865 at Canisteo, N. Y., her childhood being spent near Traverse City, Mich., where Mr. Stearns was in the lumber business. When she was fifteen years of age the family moved to Wellington, Kans., and it was here that she met Mr. Wells. For some time previous to their marriage she was engaged in teaching school in Kansas. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wells: Glenn W. married Miss Jessie Ross of Santa Ana, and they are the parents of three children; they now reside in Richfield, Cal., where they are interested in the oil business; Leta is the wife of Dr. Edward Abbott of Los Angeles, and is the mother of two children; Clara is Mrs. Ray Lambert of Lemon Cove, near Santa Ana, and they have one child; George C. is in the confectionery business at Fullerton and is also interested in the oil industry.

WILLIAM E. OTIS.—A banker distinguished for his high sense of honor and his straightforward, intelligent methods of transacting business is William E. Otis, president of the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank of Santa Ana, whose keen intuition, enabling him to accurately and justly judge men, coupled with a pleasing personality, has well fitted him for years to be the head of a large financial institution. He was born in Framingham, Mass., on March 29, 1852, the son of John M. Otis, a native of Tunkhannock, Wyoming County, Pa., where he first saw the light in 1822, a descendant of an old Pennsylvania family. In 1835, he removed with his parents to Chicago, and thence to Elgin, Ill.; and on attaining his majority, he engaged in mercantile business in Lancaster, Wis. He married Sarah Georgiana Eaton, a native of Framingham, Mass., whose grandfather, Eben Eaton, was born on the same farm in 1789. He was of the third generation on the old Eaton estate at Framingham, and was a deacon in the Congregational Church for over fifty years. The ancestors on the Eaton side came from England to Massachusetts in 1635; and his father, Ebenezer Eaton, was an officer in the Revolutionary War and in command, with others, at the Battle of Lexington. He also followed the British on their retreat to Boston, and took part in the battle of Bunker Hill; and when General Warren fell, Mr. Eaton was one of those detailed to carry him from the field. He fought both bravely and with daring persistency to the close of the war, after which he returned to his farm at Framingham, and resumed the pursuits of peace.

In 1852, John M. Otis concluded to come out to the California gold fields and returned East to Framingham, Mass., where he left his wife and children while he made his way via Panama to California; and soon after their return to Massachusetts, William E. Otis was born. For five years, Mr. Otis engaged in mining at Michigan Bluff, on the American River, and then, in 1857, he returned to Massachusetts by way of Panama. The family then migrated to Illinois; but after a short stay there, they continued on westward to Bentonsport, Iowa, where John Otis embarked in the grain and forwarding business and established himself as a dealer in agricultural implements. Finally, when the Des Moines Valley Road, now the C. R. I. R. R., reached that city, in 1866, he located there and engaged in the grain business, dealing as well in agricultural implements; and at Des Moines this worthy couple passed away.

The second eldest of six children, William E. Otis attended both the grammar and the high schools of that locality, and having completed his studies in June, 1867, he entered the First National Bank at Des Moines as collection clerk and was soon advanced to the more responsible position of teller. In March, 1871, he removed to Kansas, and there at Thayer became cashier of a bank called the Southwest Loan and Land Company. In November, 1871, he removed to Independence, Kans., where he was appointed cashier of J. O. Page's private bank; and he remained in that position until the fall of 1873, when Mr. Page sold his banking institution to William F. Turner and William E. Otis, whereupon Mr. Otis conducted the bank under the firm name of Turner and Otis until October, 1879, when he purchased Mr. Turner's interest and the name of the firm was changed to William E. Otis and Company. In September, 1883, he organized the First National Bank of Independence, retaining nearly the entire stock; but in April, 1886, he disposed of his holdings and removed to Kansas City, where he embarked in the land business, purchasing considerable real estate.

In October, 1891, he bought the controlling interest in the Winfield National Bank of Winfield, Kans., and served as cashier until about 1903, when he was elected president of the bank and his son, E. G. Otis, was elected assistant cashier. In 1901 he organized the Dexter State Bank at Dexter, Kans., and owning the control for several years, was also president. In January, 1902, he acquired control of the Farmers State Bank of Arkansas City, Kans., and became its president. In 1907 he sold his interest there, and the following year purchased a third interest in the National Bank of Commerce of Wichita, Kans., where he was a director for a number of years, being the largest stockholder, in fact, in the bank. In 1909, he bought the Bank of Commerce at Udall, Kans., became its president and his son-in-law, C. A. Vance, was made cashier. In 1911 he sold his interest in the Winfield National Bank, having decided, after several visits to California, to locate on the Pacific Coast.

In 1911, therefore, Mr. Otis came west to San Diego, and in December of that year he purchased a large interest in the University Avenue Bank of that city, and was elected vice-president; and in June, 1912, E. G. Otis severed his connection with the Winfield National Bank and joined his father in San Diego, as cashier. In 1913, Mr. Otis was elected a director in the Bank of Commerce and Trust Company of San Diego. In January, 1917, he disposed of a part of his interest in the University Avenue Bank and removed to Santa Ana; and here he purchased a large interest in the Farmers and Merchants National Bank and the Home Savings Bank of Santa Ana, and was elected vice-president of both banks. At the same time, in connection with his son-in-law, C. A. Vance, he bought a large interest in the First National Bank of Tustin, where Mr. Vance was made cashier. In the fall of 1917, he sold the balance of his interests in the San Diego Bank and in the fall of 1918 sold his interest in the Farmers and Merchants National Bank, and the Home Savings Bank of Santa Ana, and on January 1, 1919, retired from the vice-presidency, at the time of its consolidation with the First National Bank. On February 1, 1919, he purchased a large interest in the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank, and was elected president of that well-established institution.

During all the years of his residence in Kansas, Mr. Otis had been interested in agriculture, and in the development of Western lands, and at one time he owned thirteen farms in Kansas and engaged extensively in the stock business at Winfield, even carrying it on for several years after coming to California. In the seventies, he also had an agricultural implement store in Independence. It is natural, therefore, that since coming to California, Mr. Otis should have the same spirit and faith in lands, hesitating neither to advise others to invest nor to invest himself. He owns two citrus orchards, totaling sixty acres, in San Diego County, and 110 acres adjoining Santa Ana on the south, where on exceptionally rich soil he is raising alfalfa, but will soon set the place out to walnuts.

Mr. Otis has been twice married. At Cairo, Ill., in September, 1880, he became the husband of Miss Daisy H. Robbins, who was born in Chicago in 1857, a daughter of Chandler Robbins and a member of an old Boston family. Her grandfather, the Rev. Chandler Robbins, was a pastor of one of the Congregational Churches in Boston for many years, and she was a graduate of Ferry Hall Seminary, Chicago. She passed away, a sweet memory to all who knew her only to love and esteem her, in Kansas City, in April, 1891, leaving five children: Lillian is the wife of C. A. Vance of Tustin; William E. Otis, Jr., lives at Fort Worth, Texas; E. G. Otis is assistant cashier of the California Bank of Los Angeles; Clara has become the wife of A. S. Cosgrove of the Southern Trust and Commerce Bank of San Diego; Mildred, who passed away in 1918, appreciated by a circle of admiring friends, was the wife of Eugene Ferry Smith, an attorney of distinction in San Diego. On the occasion of Mr. Otis's second marriage, at East Orange, N. J., in September, 1916, he was joined to Mrs. Emma (Gould) Whipple, a native of Andover, Mass., and a representative of another old New England family who have been prominent in American history, being a descendant of Capt. Joseph Gould, who served as a captain in the Revolutionary War, raising a company of twenty men at Topsfield, Mass., and marching them to Boston where they fought with the Continental forces. He was one of Paul Revere's men who rode out and gave the alarm. On her maternal side Mrs. Otis is descended from the Cogswells of Westbury, England, who came to Massachusetts in about 1635 and settled at Andover, and she now owns the old Cogswell homestead, a quaint old New England home. She is an active member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, having served as regent of the Santa Ana Chapter. Mr. and Mrs. Otis are members of the First Congregational Church of Santa Ana, where Mr. Otis is chairman of the board of trustees, an office of honor and responsibility which he also most creditably filled for years during his residence in Kansas.

WALTER ALBERT STORTZ.—One of the most loyal residents of Seal Beach who is always pleased to extoll the advantages of its climate and beach attractions, is Walter Albert Stortz, a native of Ohio, born at Newark, April 24, 1883, the son of John C. and Elizabeth (Hershman) Stortz, also born in Ohio. His father was a moulder until cement construction came into general vogue when he followed cement contracting until he came to California, his wife passing away in Los Angeles, and he now lives retired in Seal Beach.

Walter A. is the second oldest of their four children, being reared and educated in Newark. When his school days were over at the age of eighteen years he was apprenticed at the plumbing and steam heating trade; completing the trade he continued as a journeyman for several years. Wishing to come to the Pacific Coast, he came out to Los Angeles in 1909, later on going to San Francisco and afterwards on to Portland, Seattle and Vancouver, working at his trade in the different cities for about three years. On account of the damp climate his health became very poor and he came to Los Angeles and laid off for two years. He could get no relief, the physician finally telling him he could not live very long, so in his desperation he determined to come to the beach and enjoy the few days he had remaining. Coming to Seal Beach, then Bay City, he went in bathing, rested on the sand, basked in the sun, and ate shell fish; he started to pick up and in less than one year he went to work. There was no local plumber here and he was soon in great demand and opened a shop, since which time he has engaged as contracting plumber. He has done the principal plumbing and steam heating jobs in Seal Beach and vicinity. Mr. Stortz owns eighty acres of government land near Victorville in Luzerne Valley.

The marriage of Mr. Stortz and Inez Devenney occurred in Seal Beach. She was born in Anaheim, being a daughter of John and Elizabeth Devenney, old time settlers in Orange County. Their union has been blessed with one child, Tenney. Mr. Stortz is serving his second term as a member of the board of trustees of Seal Beach, being chairman of both police and street committee. He is also an active member and director of the local Chamber of Commerce. In national politics Mr. Stortz is a Republican of the progressive type. He is a member of the State Master Plumbers' Association.

HENRY WINTERS.—A pioneer of Orange County whose enterprise is connected particularly with Wintersburg, the town that bears his name, Henry Winters is a conspicuous example of a successful agriculturist, and notably associated with the advancement of the country during the past thirty years of his residence in California. Born in Trumbull County, Ohio, July 12, 1855, he was reared in his native county, where he attended the public schools and learned the carpenter's trade, at which he served a three years' apprenticeship. Mr. Winters is of German lineage. His father, Frederick, who came from near Hamburg, Germany, was a miller by trade, in the old country, and owned one of the quaint, picturesque old mills run by wind-mill power on the River Elbe. He married after coming to the United States, in Ohio, and worked five years for Governor Todd in the coal fields. In 1879 he removed from Ohio and settled in Saline County, Kans., where he became the owner of an eighty-acre farm, and lived practically retired until he died in Kansas at the age of seventy-two. His wife, in maidenhood Margaret Hardman, emigrated from Germany with her parents' family in 1830, and belonged to the first generation of boys and girls of Girard, Trumbull County, Ohio. Her father had seen active service in the French army as a soldier under Napoleon. She was the mother of eight children, six of whom were by a former marriage with John Krosinger, a tanner by trade. She attained the advanced age of eighty-nine and died in Kansas.

Henry Winters married Miss Ella Eckenrode, in Ohio, and with his wife and family lived at different places in Ohio, Kansas, Washington and Oregon. His wife died on their first visit to California, in 1883, survived by one child, a daughter named Blanche, who is now the wife of Peter Lauer of Sharon, Pa. For thirteen years Mr. Winters followed his trade in Ohio and Kansas, and did a great deal of construction work in the latter state. He made four overland trips, moving back and forth to various places, and finally settled in Orange County thirty years ago. In 1895 he again entered the state of matrimony, being united with Miss Cordelia Wilson, daughter of John Benjamin and Sarah (Ivy) Wilson of Pasadena, who came to Orange County and engaged in farming and dairying. Later they moved to Modesto, where the father died in 1916. The mother is living at Modesto. Mrs. Winters is the oldest child in a family of eight children, six of whom are living. She was educated at Lamanda Park, Cal., and was nineteen years old when the family moved to the Wintersburg section of Orange County. Mr. and Mrs. Winters are the parents of six children: Bonnie H., a stenographer with the Western Union Oil Company at Los Angeles; Josephine, the wife of Dale Elliott, residing at Santa Ana; Walter and Wallace, twins, and sophomores in the Huntington Beach high school; Hazel M.; and Homer A. After coming to California Mr. Winters turned his attention to agriculture, and his profound faith in practical development of the soil has not only convinced scores of his undisputed good judgment, but has been the means of their taking advantage of the conditions which he has turned to good advantage. In the earlier years of the county's history, Mr. Winters purchased twenty acres of land in Ocean View where his home is situated in what is now the great celery district, and turned his attention to raising corn and potatoes. To this he added in 1917, another twenty adjoining, giving him forty acres of the best land in the district, for which he refused $50,000 in September, 1920. His land yielded 137 bushels of shelled corn and 100 sacks of marketable potatoes to the acre the first year, and these were grown in close proximity to tons of pumpkins, which naturally absorbed much of the richness of the soil. Samples of this remarkable showing were placed on exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, and created a great sensation. Probably this exhibit, more than any other display from California, had a tendency to place the resources of Orange County in the proper light before the world in general. It was said by J. C. Joplin, who had charge of the exhibit, that the fact of this exhibit having been grown in conjunction on the land the same year created the interest. Mr. Winter's name appeared on the exhibit and resulted in a large correspondence from incredulous and inquiring observers, which he personally answered. The next year his acreage exceeded the former production. Another of his exhibits created wonderment at the Chamber of Commerce at Los Angeles, and he has made a number of creditable exhibits at the county fairs. He was the first man in Orange County to bring knowledge of the wonderful peat lands at Wintersburg to the world's attention. He cut a piece of peat two by twelve by fifteen inches in dimension, and encased it in a glass container, so that the wonderful composition could be carefully viewed and examined. Not content with past success, Mr. Winters began to branch out in agriculture on a larger scale. He purchased twenty acres where Wintersburg now stands and followed the purchase by another twenty acres in the Fountain Valley district, four miles southeast of his present home, which he sold.

He was among the earliest celery raisers in Orange County, and for several years grew and marketed, on an average, twenty acres of celery per annum. About the same time he became the owner of 1,280 acres of land in Nye County, Nev., and has bought and sold land at various times since that, in most instances to good profit. Owing to his knowledge of the culture of celery, he was chosen president of the California Celery Company in 1898. He served in this capacity two years, and placed Orange County celery on the New York and other Eastern markets. In 1897, when the railway was built through what is now Wintersburg, by James McFadden, he cooperated with Mr. McFadden and donated the right of way for station and yardage. He also donated ground for other town site purposes. In recognition of his valued services his fellow-townsmen, headed by James Kane, circulated a petition that the town be named Wintersburg, in his honor, and it was so named. Mr. Winters has recently built a beautiful and commodious bungalow residence in the suburbs of Wintersburg, where he and his family reside and keep up the old-time hospitality for which California of olden days was renowned. Their guests are treated to the best there is in the culinary line, and Mr. Winters, who keeps up the old Ohio idea of a family orchard and vegetable garden, takes pride in the fact that the major portion of the meats, fruits and vegetables served in his dining room are the product of his orchard and vegetable garden, in which he grows fifty varieties of fruits. Mrs. Winters is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Westminster. Mr. Winter's energy, keen judgment and efficiency, in combination with his versatility and thoroughly disinterested progressive spirit, entitle him to the high esteem which his friends and fellow-townsmen accord him, and the wealth and success he has wrested from crude but promising materials commend itself to the consideration of the younger generation who may be imbued with ambition and possess the adequate energy and continuity of purpose to surmount the obstacles that lie in the pathway of success.

SIMON TOUSSAU.—A pioneer who has seen much of California grow from a wilderness and who is, therefore, a natural lover of the Golden State, is Simon Toussau, a native of France, where he was born at Oloron, in the Basses-Pyrenees, on November 12, 1877. His father, John Pierre, was a farmer who died in October, 1919; and his mother, Marie Sarthou, in her maidenhood, passed away the same month. They had seven children, six of whom are now living, and four are in California. John is a cement worker in Anaheim; Rose is Mrs. Sesima, of the same place, and conducts the French Laundry there; Pierre is a grain farmer, residing near Fullerton; and the youngest is the subject of our review.

He was brought up as a farmer's boy, and in 1898 performed the military service expected of him as a member, for a year, of the Eighteenth Infantry. On getting his honorable discharge, and thus securing himself as a patriotic citizen in good standing for the future, he came to America, and in April, 1901, arrived in California.

He located in Fullerton, where he was employed by August Toussau a sheepman for three years, and he ranged his sheep where now acres of improved, fruitful ranches may be found. For four years he was in the employ of the Southern California Lumber Company in San Pedro, and while there built the residence which he sold.

Mr. and Mrs. David F. Sharratt

again, in 1920. He was two years with the Anaheim Lumber Company, and when he quit their yard he bought this ranch of ten acres on the Ball road, now handsomely set out to Valencia oranges in full bearing. He also cares for forty acres or more of other orchards. In 1920 he completed a large two-story modern residence, where he lives with his wife and two children, Madeline H. V. and Albert.

At Anaheim, on February 11, 1904, Mr. Toussau was married to Miss Marie Poyet, a native of Los Angeles, of French parentage. Her father, Jean B., was born in Lyons, France, became a marble cutter, and did superb work on cathedrals in France, and in 1871 came out to Los Angeles, where he engaged in ranching in the Verdugo. Then he moved to Fullerton, where he bought land, and there he died. His wife was Victorine Amet, a native of Paris, and she died at Santa Ana. They had three girls and one boy, and the son and two of the daughters are still living. Believing that growers must organize and unite to market their product, Mr. Toussau is a member of the Anaheim Orange Growers Association.

DAVID F. SHARRATT.—Among the most interesting pioneers of Orange County must be mentioned D. F. Sharratt, a retired citizen of Wintersburg, who was born at Waterford, Maine, on April 18, 1838, the son of Frederick Sharratt, a native of England. As a sailor he came to New England, and in Maine married Elizabeth Whitcomb, a native of that state. He became one of the under-officers of a trading sailing-vessel, which ran into a tropical gale; the vessel foundered, and Mr. Sharratt was drowned. Besides a widow, he left two sons, the subject of our review and an older brother, William Frederick, who has resided in the Hawaiian Islands since 1855.

Mrs. Sharratt later became the wife of George W. Cummings, and with them Mr. Sharratt moved from the state of Maine to Wisconsin, in 1850, and settled at Oasis, Waushara County. He squatted on Government lands on the Menominee Indian Reservation, and from his fourteenth to his twenty-seventh year worked at lumbering. In 1865 he was married to Miss Mary Dwyer, a native of Ireland, who was brought to America in her mother's arms.

Mr. Sharratt left Wisconsin in 1870 and went to Kansas, where he settled at Blue Rapids, Marshall County, and bought railway lands. He improved his holding and then sold out at a profit, and after that worked in a flour mill at Blue Rapids for three years. In 1881 he came with a covered wagon and his wife and children to Montana, and went into the Bitter Root Valley.

In the fall of 1895 Mr. Sharratt said goodbye to Montana and pushed westward to California, and in the spring of 1896 he arrived at Big Rock Creek, in the Antelope Valley. Later, he came down to Wintersburg and bought twenty acres of land; and noticing wild celery growing here, he became the pioneer celery grower in the Smeltzer district, and was one of the most successful celery growers in this section, where, at one time, over 6,000 acres were devoted to celery culture. This incident alone in the life of this observing and aggressive pioneer will furnish a cue as to his real character and the spirit of advancement which has long actuated him.

Mr. and Mrs. Sharratt have four children still living. Emory F. is in the Bitter Root Valley, Mont.; Edith E. is the wife of S. H. Atkins, a rancher in the Imperial Valley; Wallace F. now works on the Sharratt home ranch, although he also has lands at Watsonville; and W. H. Sharratt lives at the latter place. A twin-brother to Wallace died in Kansas when he was two years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Sharratt attend the Baptist Church at Huntington Beach and participate in such good works for social uplift and the general improvement of the community as they can devote time and labor to. He is a Progressive Republican, and is never weary in contributing to raise the standard of civic ideals.

BLUFORD C. BAXTER.—An interesting example of one man's struggle toward success in this, his native state, and his unaided achievement of that end after many discouragements and ups and downs may be found in the life story of Bluford C. Baxter. Born February 25, 1866, in Mendocino County, Cal., he is a son of John and Mary (Taylor) Baxter, the former a native of Tennessee, and the latter of Missouri, both now deceased. The father crossed the plains to California in 1849, coming from Missouri, and cut timber in Mendocino County, later ranching in Los Angeles County in the early seventies, near Compton. He also took up Government land two and one-half miles south of Anaheim, and still later located at Wilmington, before the city of Long Beach was started.

Bluford C. Baxter attended the country schools in Mendocino, and then at Little Lake, near Whittier, Los Angeles County, and also at Los Nietos. As a young man he worked for wages on ranches in Kern County. Locating in Los Angeles he ran a transfer business for fifteen years in that city. He finally decided on the Placentia.

district for further endeavors, and rented land for ranching activities, and was the second man to plant and raise sweet potatoes on a large scale, cultivating as high as 150 acres of that edible and producing from 100 to 250 sacks to the acre. He was called the Sweet Potato King and had a special brand, of first quality, which sold readily at advanced prices, being shipped in carload lots to the mining district of Arizona. In 1906 Mr. Baxter bought twenty acres of raw land on East Orangethrope Avenue and raised sweet potatoes at first, then, in 1910, he planted his acreage to Valencia oranges and now has a finely producing grove, improved with cement pipes and laterals for irrigating. He owns his own home in Placentia and is a stockholder in the Placentia Mutual Orange Association. Among his interesting reminiscences of earlier days in the county is the fact that he helped haul the first load of lumber for the first oil derrick erected in Orange County; this was located at Olinda, and Doheny, the present oil king, was the man who drilled for oil, in the interests of the Santa Fe Railway. The present scope of the oil industry in this district was beyond the wildest dreams of those days and is but an instance of the wealth still to be unearthed in this wonderful county.

The marriage of Mr. Baxter, which occurred November 25, 1914, united him with Margaret Hurless, a native of Iowa, and one daughter, Phyllis, has been born to them; they also cherish an adopted daughter, Claudine. As a self-made man who has succeeded against obstacles, Mr. Baxter is a fine example of an American and Californian, and with characteristic loyalty he adheres to the theory that the man who grasps his opportunities can hardly help but succeed in this truly Golden State. Mr. Baxter is at present residing in Beaumont, Cal.

WILLIAM WINFRED BUSHARD.—How the ever-interesting traditions of an estimable family are perpetuated in the successful career of the younger generation is pleasantly illustrated in the life story of William Winfred Bushard, one of the four children—three sons and a daughter—of John B. and Mary V. Bushard, well-known residents of Orange County. John B. Bushard belonged to an ancient family of French origin, established in Canada by John Bushard, who was the first to emigrate to America. He developed a farm near Rosser Point, and in the homestead that he himself built, he passed away at the ripe age of three score and ten. One of his most virile children, born at La Kedze, Canada, near La Prairie, was James Bushard, who grew up in his native land, but later removed to the States and became an extensive farmer in Clinton County, N. Y. He married Miss Amelia Trombley, granddaughter of John Trombley, such a pioneer settler there that his name was given to an indentation called Trombley's Bay. The old man used to tell of his long tramps through dense timber to Saranac or Plattsburg, with a sack of corn on his back, to the nearest mill, and then the tramp back again with the bag of flour. John B. Bushard was one of a large family of nine—four sons and five daughters—born of this union, his advent into the circle occurring at the old homestead in Clinton County, N. Y., on March 20, 1843.

John B. grew up to follow agricultural pursuits and as a young man pushing westward to Minnesota, he may have anticipated Horace Greeley in his advice to youth. He tarried for a while in St. Paul, and then went to Brown County, where his parents had bought a quarter section of land for himself and brothers. He had hardly commenced to cultivate his share of the investment when the awful contest between the North and the South broke out in all its fury; and in 1861, he enlisted for two years. The war not having yet come to an end, Mr. Bushard reenlisted, joining Company A of the Minnesota Cavalry, and becoming quartermaster of Major Hatchie's battalion, he was stationed, first at Fort Snelling, and then at Fort Abercrombie, and served until 1866, when he received his discharge at the former place. He participated in several battles, among them Mail Springs, Somerset, Ky., when the Union Army won one of its first victories; and later he was at other battles, including that of Gettysburg.

When the Civil War was ended, John B. Bushard came out to California, and some time afterward, five sisters and two of his brothers followed him. He arrived in the period prior to the railroads, when teaming and hauling being prime necessities, were well paid enterprises, and he engaged in transportation from Cerro Gordo to Bakersfield and Los Angeles, and also between the latter city and Prescott, Ariz. There was plenty of money for the risks involved, but the wild depredations of Indians, and the often unrestrained lawlessness of some of the miners contributed to rob the venture of its permanent attraction. When he gave up teaming, Mr. Bushard went back East for a year, and on his return to Los Angeles, entered the real estate field there, and acquired some valuable property in East Los Angeles and elsewhere. He came down to the "Gospel Swamp" district in what is now western Orange County, and bought a squatter's claim of 1,800 acres; but the Stearns Rancho contested his title, and he was dispossessed. He then went to Ventura County and bought some two thousand acres, which he improved and sold at such a profit that he was able to return to the "Swamp" and purchase the land, once lost to him, from the Stearns Rancho.

Gen. S. Bishop

Nellie G. Bishop

On June 11, 1876, John B. Bushard was married at Los Angeles to Miss Mary Virginia Page, a native of Michigan and the daughter of Louis E. Page, for many years well-known as a resident of Los Angeles, where he died on September 25, 1906. He was born at Rochester, N. Y., in 1831, and forty years later came to Los Angeles, where he was a carriage manufacturer and the senior member of the firm of Page and Gravel. John B. Bushard's death was the result of a runaway team accident, and occurred on January 1, 1905, in his sixty-first year. He was buried in Santa Ana Cemetery. Four children were born to the honored couple—a daughter, Marie Junette, residing at 1340 West Twenty-third Street, Los Angeles, with her mother; and the sons, George H., William W. and Louis J.

These three brothers live on their respective ranches two and a half miles east of Huntington Beach, each owning sixty acres of the original John B. Bushard estate. The land, which is in a very fertile district near the ocean, is devoted to the growing, principally, of lima beans and sugar beets, and also celery. Once it was covered with willows and tules, and was very marshy; but the elder Bushard, with the aid of his sons and good neighbors, W. D. Lamb, W. T. Newland and Casper Borchard, all early settlers, drained the morass, transformed the "Swamp" into one of the most productive and attractive parts of the county, and laid out the Talbert Road.

William W. Bushard resides on the old John B. Bushard home place, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation, assisted by his devoted wife, who was Miss Addie J. McGowan before her marriage. She was a native of Texas, and a daughter of the John McGowan so well known in that state, where he was a doughty county sheriff. Mr. and Mrs. Bushard have one child, William Winfred, Jr.

FERN S. BISHOP.—Noteworthy among the prominent contractors and builders of Orange County is the name of Fern S. Bishop, who has the distinction of erecting and equipping more walnut packing plants than any man in the state. Although a native of Story County, Iowa, where he was born January 5, 1876, he has been a resident of Orange County since the age of five years. His parents were Amos D. and Anna (Knight) Bishop, natives of Michigan and Vermont, respectively. His father is still living, his mother having passed away in 1905. The family migrated from Iowa to Santa Ana in 1881.

Fern S. Bishop received his early education in the public schools of Orange and while quite young started to assist his father on the home ranch. Later he learned the trade of a carpenter with C. McNeil of Santa Ana, with whom he remained for five years. Mr. Bishop is a natural mechanic, and his ingenuity has led to many clever inventions now used in the walnut packing industry, among which is a labor-saving device used in packing walnuts; he also invented and patented a vacuum culling machine which eliminates the light weight nuts, or culls, through a blower system under high pressure of air; also he has invented an all concrete walnut bleacher or washer. His aim has been to invent such machines to be used in walnut packing houses that will increase the capacity of a plant and lessen the expense. Another machine invented and patented by Mr. Bishop is known as the cleaning machine for mouldy walnut meats and all of his machines have been demonstrated a marked success. Mr. Bishop is considered an expert on matters pertaining to the packing of walnuts and is frequently called into consultation when important questions are to be considered. While in the employ of Mr. McNeil he was foreman of construction on the packing plant of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association.

In September, 1914, Mr. Bishop entered the building and contracting business for himself and has erected and equipped the following packing houses: the Guggenhime packing house and the Gowen and Willard packing house of Santa Ana; the Anaheim Walnut Growers Association packing house; the Fullerton Walnut packing house; the Golden Belt house of Fullerton (now the Benchley Packing Company); the Walnut packing house at Walnut. In Ventura County Mr. Bishop built and equipped the Satcoy packing house and reequipped the Santa Paula plant. At Whittier, Los Angeles County, he built and equipped the Whittier Walnut Growers Association house. It has a daily capacity of sixty tons. He also has to his credit the erecting and equipping of the packing houses at Irvine, at San Juan Capistrano, the Cudahy plant at Huntington Park and the Chino Walnut house. In 1920 he completed the packing house for the La Puente Valley Walnut Growers Association, the largest house of the kind in the world, with a capacity of 150 tons in ten hours, and it is the consensus of opinion that it is the most modern house for packing walnuts now in use, being fully equipped with machinery and appliances invented and patented by Mr. Bishop. He is now building a plant for the California Walnut Growers at Vernon for the manufacture of charcoal from walnut shells. In addition to these buildings, Mr. Bishop has erected many fine residences in Orange County, among which we mention those of John W. Hetebrink, Fullerton; E. A. Bastian, Placentia; Mrs. C. W. Curry and Ray Bishop, in Santa Ana.

In Santa Ana, on December 12, 1894, Mr. Bishop married Miss Nellie Deck, who was born at Upper Alton, Ill., a daughter of J. H. and Lavina (Short) Deck, who were natives of that state. Her father served in the Civil War as a member of an Illinois regiment. The Deck family came to California in 1882, locating at San Pedro, but soon afterward moved to Santa Ana, where they improved a ranch and where Mr. Deck still resides. His wife died here in March, 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Bishop are the parents of two children: Clara, who is the wife of H. C. Hibbard of Santa Ana and the mother of one son; Harold Bishop married Miss Lela West, and they are the parents of one daughter. Harold Bishop is associated with his father in business, being his foreman of construction. The successful career of Fern S. Bishop is a striking example of what energy and resourcefulness, wisely directed, and centered on a definite goal, can accomplish.

MRS. IDA J. HUGHES.—A most estimable woman of high ideals, pleasing personality and an interesting conversationalist is Mrs. Ida J. Hughes, the widow of the late M. F. Hughes, a progressive rancher who passed away in September, 1918. Mrs. Hughes was born in 1856 in what was then the Territory of Kansas. She is the daughter of Jehu and Sarah H. Wilson, natives of Ohio and North Carolina, respectively. Mrs. Hughes was reared and educated in Kansas and attended the University of Kansas, after which she conducted a millinery business for three years in Lawrence, Kansas.

On January 4, 1882, she was united in marriage with M. F. Hughes, a native of Missouri, born in 1854, where he was reared and educated. He followed farming throughout his life, and although always a busy farmer he never neglected his duties to the state and nation, but always manifested the deepest interest in political matters, in which he was an ardent supporter of the Republican party.

On December 1, 1911, Mr. and Mrs. Hughes located on their ranch in Orange County, Cal. At that time the land was in a poor and unproductive condition and the buildings were small, but with his usual enterprising spirit Mr. Hughes began to improve and develop the place. He installed a splendid water system by sinking a well to the depth of 315 feet, securing thereby sufficient water to irrigate 100 acres; he also built a modern seven-room residence. Today the ranch is in a high state of cultivation and is chiefly devoted to raising oranges, although some walnuts and lemons are produced.

Mr. and Mrs. Hughes were the parents of three sons: Elmer J., the superintendent of a large ranch near Seal Beach, married Miss Delia Mulvihill, and they have a son, Paul V.; Charles F., also a rancher, married Miss Melba K. Allen; Everett V. married Miss Catherine Reynen, and they are the parents of two children, Joseph E. and Elizabeth A. Mrs. Hughes is affiliated with the Friends Church and the entire family are greatly esteemed in the community.

MISS BLANCHE L. DOLPH.—A talented, public-spirited and generous lady, who feels a fond interest for California, for here she regained her health, is Miss Blanche L. Dolph, whose musical tastes and gifts have contributed toward the happiness of others, and whose fortunate investments since she came here have enabled her to assist others in their difficulties or distress. Miss Dolph was born at Scranton, Pa., the daughter of Edward Dolph, one of an early French-American family, whose name was originally De Wolf, later contracted to Dolph. His father was Alexander Dolph, a farmer near Scranton. Becoming a coal operator at Scranton, Edward Dolph became well posted on coal formation and thus discovered the outcropping on his father's farm, which proved to be a rich vein of coal, which has been and is a source of wealth to the family. In time, therefore, Mr. Dolph became a large and influential coal operator in Scranton, and there, too, in earlier days he had married Miss Elizabeth Wadhams, descended from an old English family. They had five children, two sons and three daughters, and the youngest, Edward S., is manager of the Dolph's interests at Scranton. Lewis Cass was the oldest son and third child of the family, and he died when he was twelve years old. The eldest born is Miss Florence Dolph, who resides at 2021 Ocean View Avenue, Los Angeles. Another sister, Mrs. Josette N. Robertson, lives at Scranton. Mrs. Dolph outlived her husband eight years and died in 1898 at Scranton. Senator Dolph of Oregon is a relative.

Miss Dolph attended the common schools of Scranton and later the University at Lewisburg. Having a natural talent and love for music she studied the violin, cornet and piano, and came to be in much demand, especially for churches and societies, which she was always glad to help, and she also frequently favored communities of other cities in that region. Thirty-four years ago, on her first visit to California, in 1886, she first saw the neighborhood of San Juan-by-the-Sea, where she now resides. She had traveled extensively throughout the United States and Europe as well as the Orient, and her experienced eye enabled her to pick the site of her home on account of its beautiful view and natural beauty, commanding as it does a view of the broad Pacific as well as the beautiful San Juan Valley, while in the background are the Temescal Mountains in their grandeur. She still held, until two years ago, the old home at Scranton, but six years ago she built her beautiful mansion near Serra or old San Juan-by-the-Sea, one of the most picturesque mountain homes by the ocean in all California. Then she wisely invested in ranch land near San Juan Capistrano, and while she gives it the proper oversight, her main interests in life are humanitarian and charitable. Miss Dolph is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and she participated in Red Cross and other war activities. She has crossed the Continent sixty times, and on her trips in 1902 and 1908 crossed via the Isthmus of Panama. Her friend and companion, Miss Lucella McGaughey, who was pastor's assistant at the Second Presbyterian Church at Scranton for eighteen years, a well-posted Bible student, has joined her in some of these transcontinental trips, and in 1917 they motored the entire distance from New York City to their home at San Juan-by-the-Sea. She has had other places constructed for her, and among them a pretty residence at Arch Beach, nine miles north from San Juan Capistrano, along the coast.

Laura Reed Ford

Aside from her musical ability Miss Dolph also displays much talent as an artist and has a large circle of friends among the colony of artists who make their home part of the time in Southern California. Thus her rooms are replete with beautiful paintings from the hands of some of the best-known modern painters. Of a pleasing personality and hospitable nature it is indeed a pleasure to know and share Miss Dolph's friendship.

MRS. LAURA REED FORD.—A distinguished resident of East Villa Park is Mrs. Laura Reed Ford, the widow of John Critenton Ford, whose handsome residence is one of the attractions of Park Road. She is a native daughter, born near Downey, Cal., the daughter of Robb R. and Antonia (Troll) Reed. Her father came from Pennsylvania to California in pioneer days, while her mother crossed the plains in an ox-team train with her father in 1849 to San Francisco. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Reed came to San Luis Obispo, then to Downey and later still to Julian, San Diego County, where they were engaged in merchandising until their death. Mrs. Ford is the second oldest of three children born of this union. John Critenton Ford was born at Benton, Franklin County, Ill., on November 7, 1861, the son of John P. and Louise (Young) Ford, old settlers of Illinois. John P. Ford, who came to California in 1885, was a prosperous farmer, with a splendid tract of 160 acres in Illinois, and very expert in the raising of corn, cattle and hogs. John Critenton attended both the grammar and the high schools at Benton, Ill., and lived on his father's farm until 1881, when he and his brother Theodore pushed west to California and settled at Santa Ana. John Critenton joined another brother, George W. Ford, and went into the nursery business. After a while, John Critenton moved to the Julian Mountains in San Diego County and went into the nursery and apple industry for himself.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Reed moved to Julian when Laura Reed was a child, and there she attended the grammar school. There, also, she met Mr. Ford, and they were married on May 11, 1892. Thereafter for eight years they lived in Julian, at which place Mr. Ford continued to develop his well-known nursery.

In 1900, however, Mr. Ford sold out and removed to a place northeast of Garden Grove, where he spent a year in raising beets. Then he moved onto a dairy farm on Fifth Street, in Santa Ana, and two years were spent in dairying on a ranch of fifteen acres. In 1903, another change was made, and the family moved to Edinger Street, south of Santa Ana, where Mr. Ford rented a ranch of 125 acres. He put in grain, and had a dairy. In the four years that he was there, he kept twenty-four head of cattle and seven head of horses.

In 1907 he sold out and bought the present Ford homesite on Park Road, in East Villa Park. It comprises about eight and a half acres, one-third of which is set out to Valencias and two-thirds to lemons. It is watered by the John T. Carpenter Water Company, in which the Fords have twenty-three shares. Under Mr. Ford's skillful hand, this place was being nicely developed, when, on October 8, 1914, he was called upon to lay aside the cares and responsibilities of earthly life. Mr. Ford took an active part in the work of the Villa Park Congregational Church; and in this commendable work the esteemed widow and her family continue a live interest.

Two sons and two daughters are a comfort and pride to Mrs. Ford. Homer F. is living on the old homesite, and is married to Ruby L. Kreschal. George C. Ford is an electrician and machinist, who lives at Orange and is married to Alma Ziesnig of Illinois. Annie L. is a graduate of the Orange high school; and Myrtle May is also a student there. Both daughters are interested in the study of the piano, playing well, and Myrtle also plays the cornet in the high school band, an organization of sixty pieces. Both sons belong to the Orange Lodge of Redmen. Mrs. Ford is a member of the Central Lemon Association of Villa Park and the Villa Park Orange Association.

Since Mr. Ford's death Mrs. Ford, with the aid of her children, has continued to care for and develop the ranch according to the plans which they had laid out, and it is now a full-bearing orchard. On March 23, 1918, she met a severe loss, her home being destroyed by fire. She immediately rebuilt, erecting a modern bungalow, as stated above, the pride of the community, and attracting the attention of the passers-by. Mr. Ford always insisted on giving much of the credit of bringing their ranch to such a high state of development to Mrs. Ford, for by her assistance and help, not only in the home, encouraging him in his ambitions, but also in the starting of the orchard she worked by his side in the care of the trees, whether in cultivating, irrigating or pruning of the same. The citizens of Orange County can be proud to have a native daughter of Mrs. Ford's capability, energy and progressive ideas as one of its citizens and boosters.

JOSEPH YOCH.—Recognized as one of the leaders in all forward movements of the organization and early upbuilding of Orange County, Joseph Yoch is living practically retired from active business cares. He was born May 17, 1844, near Berlin, Germany, from which country his parents set sail to America in 1847. His father was a stonemason by trade and a contractor after landing in the United States. He was also engaged in agricultural pursuits which soon occupied all of the time of father and sons. The mother was Katharine Glorius before her marriage, and she became the mother of John, Joseph and Bernard. When the family left Germany, they brought with them all of their household belongings as well as their wagon and farming implements and seeds. They landed at New Orleans and from there took a river boat up the Mississippi River to St. Louis, Mo. For ten years the family farmed and then the father sold out and engaged in coal mining, and so successful was he that he established one of the largest individually owned fields in the coal region. His wife died in 1863, and he lived until 1885, dying at Belleville, Ill.

From the age of nineteen, Joseph Yoch controlled the business, allowing his father to retire. Under the firm name of Joseph Yoch and Brothers the three sons worked and were prosperous. While Joseph was the chief executive of the company, he ascribes its great success to the invention by his brother Bernard of the road engine, known as the B. Yoch engine, which is self-propelling. Joseph Yoch handled over three and one-half million bushels of coal annually. On the line of the Indianapolis and St. Louis Railway, near Litchfield, he had a coal field of 400 acres. The firm also had coal mines on the Louisville and Nashville Railway, on the Southern Illinois, and in the various counties and employed 300 to 400 men in the operation of their fifteen mines. One of the many interests built up by this company was the building of a transfer boat for the purpose of transporting coal from the east to the west side of the Mississippi River. This ferry attracted the notice of the Jay Gould interests that in 1886 bought out the company of Joseph Yoch and Bros., together with the Consolidated Coal Company, in which Joseph Yoch was prominent, and which controlled the output of coal in the zone for fifty miles about St. Louis. After the Jay Gould syndicate purchased these coal properties, they offered Joseph Yoch a position, but he remained only one month to help the new managers to become acquainted with this field.

In 1886, after disposing of his interests in the Illinois coal business, Mr. Yoch made a trip to California, returning with his family in 1887 to Santa Ana, where he purchased the present home place at 1012 North Main Street. He had become financially interested in the Black Star Coal Mine of Santiago Canyon in 1887. Later he invested in other mining property in the Santiago, and for a number of years worked these two mines. The Black Star, however, has been inactive for more than twenty years. In 1889, Mr. Yoch established a brick yard in Santa Ana. In 1895 he became interested in ranching at El Monte, Los Angeles County, and sunk the first successful irrigating well in that vicinity; this property was disposed of some time ago and it is now owned by J. S. Killian.

The Laguna Beach territory claimed Mr. Yoch's attention in 1895, when he bought the hotel and store. Soon after he was appointed postmaster, which office he held for ten years. Besides a large amount of real estate in the town of Laguna Beach, which is under lease, Mr. Yoch also owns a fine ranch of 1,000 acres in Laguna Canyon, some of which is now leased for oil. It is due to his enterprise that this section had its early water supply and its first telephone line, which Mr. James Irvine generously allowed Mr. Yoch to construct over ten miles of the Irvine ranch.

On May 14, 1878, Mr. Yoch was united in marriage with Catharine Isch, whose parents were natives of Lorraine, France. Her mother's family the Pfeiffers, came to America from France in 1825, and were pioneers of Illinois. John Nicholas Isch, her father, was a soldier of France in 1836, and on coming to America, in 1840, located in St. Clair County, Ill. There were then a number of Indians in the vicinity and he established friendly relations with them, which always continued. Mrs. Yoch received her education in the public schools of that neighborhood, with a two years' course at the State Normal School at Normal, Ill., afterwards teaching at the school at Center-ville, which she had attended in her girlhood. Mr. and Mrs. Yoch are the parents of six children: Josephine is a teacher of languages in the Los Angeles high school; Bertha is the wife of Thomas Doyle, a stockraiser at Phoenix, Ariz., and they have six children; Elizabeth is the wife of Captain Theodore Lewton, chief engineer of the Coast Guard, U. S. N., and they have two children; Caroline is the wife of Redmond Barnett of New York, and they have three children; Agnes is the wife of Eliot West, the owner of a large confectionery manufacturing company at Norfolk, Va.; Florence, a graduate of the University of Illinois, resides in Los Angeles, and is a landscape architect of national fame.

Joseph Yoch was twice on the Santa Ana Board of Trustees, and was a supervisor for one term, during which term was built the first bridge across the river on Fifth Street, and the term when the present court house was located, serving as chairman during the entire period. In politics he has always been a Democrat both "in and out of season," but in local affairs adopts the wise measure of supporting the best men regardless of party lines. Mr. Yoch was a director of the First National Bank of Santa Ana for twenty years, and also its vice-president. In his character he is kind and has always scorned to speak ill of any person he knew. He is one who has devoted himself generously in public service to the land of his adoption.

RANCHO CAÑON DE SANTA ANA.—One among the few remaining large ranches in Orange County, is Rancho Cañon de Santa Ana, well watered by the Santa Ana River flowing through, and it is equally well served by the Santa Fe Railway, on its route from San Bernardino to San Diego. There is a switch and signal station on the ranch known as Gypsum from which the products of the farm are despatched, and where the home imports arrive. There is also a station named Horseshoe Bend. The farm is at the extreme eastern end of the Yorba precinct, in the northeastern part of Orange County. Its manager is Mrs. S. B. Bryant, of Los Angeles—whose maiden name was Bixby, explaining that the place was formerly known as one of the Bixby ranches, the property of John Bixby, now deceased, at present owned by his two children, Mrs. S. B. Bryant and Fred Bixby. It still comprises 6,000 acres, beautifully located in the cañon of the Santa Ana River, and running clear up to the mountains, forming the boundary line between Orange and Riverside counties.

The principal product of the rancho is citrus fruit, of which there are 140 acres in all, sixty-three acres being given up to Valencia oranges, thirty acres to Navels, and forty-seven acres to lemons. The trees are, for the most part, seven years old, and are just coming into profitable bearing. There are, besides, forty-five acres in pears. During the season of 1919 a carload of Bartletts was shipped from this ranch, bringing eighty-five dollars a ton. The ranch has also sixty acres of budded walnuts. There are twenty acres of alfalfa, partly for ranch use and partly for sale; and 200 acres of barley for hay, and sixty acres of black-eye beans. There is a great deal of pasture land. Forty-five head of horses and four mules are used for the work of the farm, and a Sampson sieve-grip tractor is employed for plowing and cultivating. From fifteen to twenty men are also employed on an average, and since January, 1916, Ernest R. Johnson, superintendent, has had charge of these interests.

ARTHUR FRANK WALKER.—As an example of what may be accomplished by persistent energy, the life of A. F. Walker, known to a host of friends as Frank Walker, presents lessons of encouragement to young men starting out for themselves without the aid of means or influence, for starting without money, he is now the owner of 160 acres of choice land in the Bolsa district. Born in Santa Barbara County, November 18, 1881, Frank Walker is the son of Albert F. and Lottie (Stice) Walker, the father passing away when Frank was about six years old. There were two other children in the Walker family: Gillis A., a stock raiser at Red Bluff, and Edna, the wife of W. L. Ross, a rancher in the Bolsa precinct. Mrs. Walker later married J. A. Ross, a rancher, and they reside in the Bolsa precinct. Three children have been born of this marriage: Ralph, who resides at Red Bluff; Amelia, the wife of Cecil Combs, an oil man at Fullerton; and Vena.

Mr. Walker attended school in Santa Barbara County and at Bolsa, the Ross family moving here in 1893. Even while he was living in Santa Barbara County, then but a mere lad, he started to work out, saving his money year by year, and instead of buying a horse and buggy, as many of the other boys of his age did, he invested his savings in work stock, renting land for a number of years. As a boy he worked in the first celery field in Orange County. In 1904 he bought his first piece of land, a tract of fifteen acres, which he improved and sold, and he has at various times bought, improved and sold farming land in the Winterburg, Westminster and Bolsa precincts. He was one of the first in this locality to go into the raising of sugar beets on an extensive scale, and was the first to introduce the system of fall dry plowing of the land to be planted to sugar beets the next season, and this method has brought very successful and satisfactory results. He began raising sugar beets for the Los Alamitos Sugar Company and later for the Co-operative Sugar Company at Santa Ana. Mr. Walker still farms eighty acres of his land, devoting the acreage to lima beans, and the other eighty he rents out to Earl Gardner.

In 1905, Mr. Walker was married to Miss Lelah Kirk, a native of Iowa and the daughter of Charles Kirk, now a rancher in the Bolsa district. One daughter, Velda Marie, has been born to them. Mrs. Walker is a member of the Adventist Church and shares with her husband a just popularity in the community. Of strong physique, full of energy, determination and force of character, Mr. Walker has early in life achieved through his own unaided efforts a success in every way deserved.

HARRY W. STANLEY.—A tireless worker and an unusually aggressive man, fortunate in the possession of ability, energy and enterprise, is Harry W. Stanley, one of the upbuilders of Anaheim, who is now engaged in the building of bungalows on his own property. Born near Bowling Green, Pike County, Mo., Mr. Stanley is the son of Samuel and Sarah Stanley. The father was a native of Virginia, and during the Civil War he served four years in the Confederate Army, being wounded five times in different engagements. After the close of the war he came to Pike County, Mo., where he was married to Miss Sarah Martin, a native of that state. When Harry W. Stanley was but four years old the mother passed away and the responsibility of rearing the family rested on the father. He continued farming, making a good success of growing tobacco and raising stock, and he still continues to reside on his Missouri farm in the enjoyment of comfortable circumstances.

From a little boy, Harry was taught to work and was never allowed to be idle; he has always been an inveterate worker and this has proven the secret of his success in later years. At the age of sixteen he struck out for himself, and going to St. Louis, Mo., he attended a trade automobile school for two years, where he made a thorough study of auto and tractor mechanism. The first eighteen months of that time he worked on an estate in his spare time, taking care of the lawn and doing odd jobs for his room and board. From St. Louis he went to Devil's Lake, N. D., and for five years worked at his trade in garages, remaining there until 1906, when he came to California. For the first five years he was employed on the Stanford University farm at Vina, Tehama County, where as master mechanic he had charge of all the repair work in their garages, repairing autos, tractors and farm implements, and all steam plumbing and boiler work. He next located at Wasco, Kern County, and here he built and opened a garage, which he conducted for a short time, later going to Downey, Los Angeles County, where he engaged in the garage business, and here he was very successful, selling the business for three times what he paid for it. About this time he was taken ill and confined in a hospital at Anaheim for three months, and all the money he had saved was consumed in this experience. When he recovered he had only a capital of $42.50, but he started in business again, this time in Anaheim, purchasing a small garage and shop called the Central Garage, located on South Los Angeles Street, giving his note for $1,000 to close the deal. In three months he had paid off all indebtedness and disposed of the business for $2,500. He was again taken ill, this time with influenza, and again his money vanished for expenses. On regaining his health he opened up a small repair shop at 133 North Lemon Street; this was called Stanley's Buick Repair Station and here he made an unprecedented success. An addition was built on to the building in the rear and he bought out a tenant who occupied the other half of the building. He built up the business from a room 10 by 20 until he used a space 55 by 175 and had the largest repair business in Anaheim, and with his well-equipped machine shop was ready to take care of anything in the line of automobile repairing, ignition and battery work, as well as brazing and welding. In addition he carried extra parts for the Dodge and Buick cars, and was agent for the Philadelphia battery. On March 4, 1920, Mr. Stanley disposed of this business at a lucrative figure, and then bought a confectionery store at Newport Beach. With his customary zeal he built up a fine business there and in six months sold it at a big profit. He then moved back to Anaheim, where he owns a number of lots, and is now engaged in building and selling bungalows. He has just finished a colonial bungalow at 112 North Olive Street, furnished complete with all modern conveniences, including electrical appliances for the household. The rooms are elegantly furnished with mahogany; as elaborate a home as can be found in the county.

Mr. Stanley's marriage, which occurred at San Bernardino, August 24, 1920, united him with Miss Lulu B. Putnam, the daughter of Edward and Estella Putnam, who came to California in 1908. Mrs. Stanley was born in Homer, Mich., and is a graduate of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Business College. Mr. Stanley has had his ups and downs, and has made and lost more than one fortune, but nothing daunted, he works all the harder and fortunately he has regained his fortune and now has a competency. He has indeed been fortunate in his helpmate, for his wife is well educated, cultured and refined and an encouragement to his ambition, as well as assisting him in business, for she is endowed by nature with excellent judgment and much business ability.

IRA E. PATTERSON.—A resident of California who has been active in the building business is Ira E. Patterson, who was born near Annawan, Henry County, Ill., March 30, 1865, where he was reared and received a good education in the excellent public schools of that locality. When eighteen years of age he began learning the carpenter's trade, continuing in this line in Illinois until 1885, when he removed to Iola, Kans. He followed his trade a short time and then began in the mercantile business. He was first engaged in the grocery trade but later he had a hardware store and lumber yard and he also ran a plumbing and sheet metal works at Iola for seven years when he discontinued and for one year was superintendent of the city water and light plant.

In 1905 Mr. Patterson came to South Pasadena and became bookkeeper and cashier for the Live Hardware Company of that place. In 1908 he resigned this position to engage in contracting and building in South Pasadena and Pasadena, and was busily engaged in building residences in both places. In 1910 he began spending his summers at Anaheim Landing, where he followed contracting. In the summer of 1915, after having completed a large addition to the residence of A. C. Billicke, he came to Seal Beach for a month's vacation, but he liked it so well he remained here, engaging in contracting and building. In his contracting business he draws his own plans and superintends the construction.

Mr. Patterson was married in Iola, Kans., November 18, 1888, being united with Miss Susie B. Waters, born in Lawrence, Kans. When ten years of age her parents moved to Iola, Kans. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Patterson: Arthur E. is in business in Los Angeles; Lyford M. served in U. S. Army overseas in the World War and now resides in Portland; Helen Ruth is Mrs. Thomas of South Pasadena. Mr. Patterson is greatly interested in civic matters having served two years as city treasurer of Seal Beach. He is now a member and clerk of the board of school trustees in the Bay City district. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Seal Beach, Mr. Patterson having been a member for thirty-five years. They were among the original organizers of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Seal Beach. He had charge of the constructing of the church, is one of its most liberal and enthusiastic members, being a member of the board of trustees from its organization and is also superintendent of the Sunday school; he is now one of the oldest settlers of the town. Mr. Patterson is a leading member of the Chamber of Commerce and in politics is a Republican.

FRED LIEFFERS.—An enterprising rancher who has been able to make such improvements on his valuable property that he is now both successful and influential, is Fred Lieffers, who first came to Orange in the early eighties. He was born in Hanover, Germany, on February 2, 1861, the son of the Rev. William Lieffers, a minister of the Lutheran Church, and was brought up in the kingdom of Hanover, and educated at the public schools and the Hildesheim Gymnasium, or high school. When only fifteen years of age, he came out to the United States and in 1876 located at Omaha, where he continued his studies for a year at a private institute. Then, for eighteen months, he became a clerk in a grocery store, and later in Goodman's drug store; and there he studied pharmacy, serving the most practical apprenticeship to that important line for five years.

About that time, in 1883, Mr. Lieffers came west to Orange, accompanied by his mother from Omaha, and they bought a ranch half way between Orange and Tustin, and he went to work to improve it. He planted it to Muscat raisins, but they died out; again he set out the same kind of vines, but once more they withered away. He then set out the twenty-one and a half acres to walnuts and apricots and engaged in farming.

At Orange, too, in 1892, Mr. Lieffers was married to Miss Amelia Gatzke, a native of Posen, Germany, who came here with her parents in 1883. He then leased a ranch in Olive and ran it for four years, after which he bought the thirty-three and a half acres, set out to walnuts, and added some apricots. These he later grubbed out and set out oranges instead, and is now raising high-grade Valencia oranges. In the spring of 1919, he turned the management of the ranch over to his son and bought a home in the town of Orange, where he resides with his wife. Two children have blessed this fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Lieffers. Walter conducts the home ranch; and Gertrude has become Mrs. Boehner of Olive.

Mr. Lieffers and family have attended several churches, according to circumstances. Beginning with the second year of its organization, Mr. Lieffers belonged to the St. John's Lutheran Church at Orange. When he moved to the neighborhood of Olive, he was a charter member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church in that place, and for many years he was a trustee and the secretary of the church board. When he moved back to Orange, he again became a member of St. John's Lutheran Church.

In national politics, a Republican, Mr. Lieffers takes a live interest in nonpartisan endeavor for the advancement, development and uplift of the community in which he lives, and he is at all times first, and last, an American for America.

HON. CLYDE BISHOP.—An eminent representative of the legal profession in California who has twice served a satisfied constituency as a member of the state legislature, is the Hon. Clyde Bishop, who first came to California in the early eighties. He was born in Chicago, Ill., on May 23, 1875, the son of A. D. Bishop, a native of Ohio, who came to Chicago with his father, Umphry Hine Bishop and there built the first ice house on South Water Street erected in that city. Later, they lost everything by the great conflagration of 1871, after which they assisted in rebuilding the city. A. D. Bishop removed to Story County, Iowa, where he was a pioneer settler, engaging in contract painting at Nevada, but in 1881 he brought his family to California and located a mile south of Orange, where he now lives. Mrs. A. D. Bishop was Miss Annie Sabin Knight before her marriage. She was born on North Hero Island, Lake Champlain, Vt., a member of an old New England family, and died in California on the home ranch. These worthy parents had four children, all boys. Roy Knight is an orange rancher near Orange; Clyde is the subject of this review; Fern Sabin is a contractor at Santa Ana; and Umphry Holmes is also an orange grower at Orange. He graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, but prefers the life of an orange grower.

Clyde Bishop was brought up at Santa Ana and was educated at the public schools of Orange. He assisted his father on the farm until he was twenty and then, as an actor, he joined a company and traveled through both the West and East and as far south as Mississippi. He served several years in the National Guard and when the Spanish-American War broke out he enlisted as a volunteer and was mustered in at San Francisco as a member of Company L, Seventh California Volunteer Infantry. He was stationed at the Presidio and was honorably discharged as a corporal. After the war he continued in the National Guard and at the close of fourteen years of honorable service had risen to the rank of first lieutenant. In May, 1899, Mr. Bishop began the study of law in the offices of C. S. McKelvey and Victor Montgomery at Santa Ana and on April 15, 1902, he was admitted to the California Bar. Four years later, on November 26, he was admitted to all the United States courts. In 1902 he opened the same office he has today, with the same desk, and is now the second oldest practicing attorney in Orange County with one of the largest and most lucrative practices in the county, and an ever-increasing clientele.

In 1906 Mr. Bishop was elected on the Republican ticket to the assembly of the California legislature and served during the winter of 1907 and he wrote, among other measures, the Newbert Protection District Bill, designed especially for the safe-guarding of Santa Ana. Having been elected again to the assembly in 1910, he was chairman of the committee on counties and county boundaries and a member of the judiciary committee and the committees on constitutional amendments and municipal corporations. In 1915 he wrote the act under which county bonds were voted for the improvement of the harbor at Newport Beach and spent his time and influence at the capital to see that it was passed. For two and a half years Mr. Bishop was city attorney of Orange and conducted the first bond issue, by which Orange bought the present city water works. He was also attorney for Newport Beach and conducted the proceedings creating Newport Beach. This office of city attorney he has held since September 1, 1906. In criminal and civil procedures Mr. Bishop has attained distinction. It can safely be said there has not been an important case in the courts of Orange County in last two decades that he has not been retained on one side or the other. A prominent Republican, but too broad-minded to be ultrapartisan in local affairs, Mr. Bishop is an honored member of the Orange County Bar Association and he also belongs to the Spanish-War Veterans' Association.

At Santa Ana he was married to Miss Ana Young, a native of New Jersey who was reared in Orange County. He is a Knights Templar and thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and is also a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in Los Angeles, the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks, Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias, in which he is a past officer. Mr. Bishop is truly a self-made man, having risen through his own efforts to the high place he holds among the California Bar. He is very thorough and painstaking and is not satisfied until he gets to the bottom of the case in hand. He is an indefatigable worker and is never idle. With his pleasing personality and affable manner together with his integrity and honesty of purpose it is not to be wondered at that he has attained a standing of such eminence.

JOSEPH F. VOLLMER.—A successful contracting painter is Joseph F. Vollmer, the principal sign writer of Orange, pleasantly identified with the town for almost a decade. He was born in Mascoutah, St. Clair County, Ill., in 1879, the son of Wendel Vollmer, born in Germany, who came as a young man to Illinois and St. Clair County, and was married at Mascoutah to Miss Anna Goodwein, a native of that place. He was a farmer there, and later removed to East St. Louis, where he was in business until he died. He had nine children, seven of whom grew to maturity, and six of them are still living.

The eldest of these, Joseph attended the public schools in East St. Louis, and having obtained a place in Van Houten's paint shop, in East St. Louis, was apprenticed to learned the painter's trade. At the end of four years, he left there, and from 1907 for the next three years he was in the service of George A. Watts at St. Louis. Returning to East St. Louis, he worked at his trade under Mr. McNitt; but in 1912 broke away from the East, came to California and located at Orange.

Here he formed a partnership with Frank Pister, under the firm name of Pister & Vollmer, and together they undertook contract work in painting. In 1914, however, he sold out to Mr. Pister and took a trip East. Returning, he started in business for himself, and soon was in great demand as a sign writer. He did the painting of the El Modena School, the Center Street School and the Lemon Street School; the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Newport Harbor Yacht Club House, the N. T. Edwards residence, the house of the Foothill Valencia Growers Association, and all four of the Acme stores in the county, and numerous residences, including many bungalows. He belongs to the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, and is always glad to do what he can to advance the best interests of both city and county. A Republican in matters of party politics, Mr. Vollmer stands shoulder to shoulder with his fellow-citizens, without regard to party affiliations, in the support of every good measure likely to benefit the community. He is the father of three children—Jack, Otto and Roch Vollmer.

RUDOLPH W. MILLER.—One of the ablest contractors and builders in Orange whose success is doubtless in part due to the fact that, in addition to a valuable technical training, he has been favored with a well-developed sense of the artistic, is Rudolph W. Miller, familiarly known by his many friends as "Doc" Miller, a native of Fort Dodge, Webster County, Iowa, where he was born on May 24, 1874. His father, C. G. Miller, came to Iowa in the late fifties, while still a youth in his teens, accompanying an uncle; and although he was only eighteen on the breaking out of the Civil War, he immediately enlisted and throughout the great struggle served in the Thirty-second Iowa Volunteer Infantry. After the war, he learned the cabinetmaker's trade in Fort Dodge, and later started a furniture factory; and still later, he was engaged in contracting and building. He had married in Iowa, Pauline Loescher; and in that state he continued business until 1880, when he removed to Norfolk, Madison County, Nebr., and continued as a contractor, and thus helped to build up that town.

Rudolph Miller, having come to Orange in 1905, the parents followed two years later; and here, in comfort and peace, they ended their days. In 1911 Mr. Miller died, and six years later, Mrs. Miller breathed her last. She was the mother of eight children, of whom Rudolph was the third eldest. He received all the educational advantages afforded by the Norfolk public schools, and then learned the carpenter trade under the guidance of his father. As soon as possible, too, he studied architecture during his spare moments, and so became skilled as a draftsman as well as a carpenter. In 1905 he located at Orange and here entered the employ of the Ainsworth Lumber and Milling Company, working in their cabinet department, and continuing with them until they sold out.

Mr. Miller then took up contracting and building for himself. His first contract was entered upon with two partners, H. W. Duker and Emil Loescher, with whom he erected the St. John's Lutheran Church in 1913, the largest structure in Orange, and after that he formed a partnership with Emil Loescher and Fred T. Volberding, and engaged in contracting and building. A year later, these enterprising gentlemen put up a planing mill on North Lemon Street, and they also engaged in manufacturing. In January, 1919, Mr. Volberding and Mr. Miller bought out Mr. Loescher, and since then they have carried on the business together, styling themselves the Orange Contracting and Milling Company.

Having equipped their establishment with electric power and the latest and most modern machinery for doing mill and cabinet work, they have laid in a large stock of hardwoods, cedar, white pine and finishing lumber, and for those clients who desire them, they make plans, designing bungalows and more pretentious residences. They have thus acquired a reputation for the highest class of work, and a sample of what they can do may be found in Mr. Miller's own residence on East Palmyra Street, one of the finest finished homes in the county. Mr. Miller is naturally a member of the American Contractors Association.

At Orange, on July 4, 1916, Mr. Miller was married to Mrs. Fay (Casner) Meehan, a native of Ventura County, Cal., and the daughter of Thos. J. Casner, who was born in Texas and crossed the plains to California, in his twenty-first year, with his parents. They settled in San Diego County, where her father married Texanna Lester, also a native of Texas, and moved to Ventura County. There they farmed, later removing to Santa Paula, in which place Mrs. Casner died. The father now resides in Selma. There were eight children in the family, and Fay, as the second eldest, was educated at Santa Paula. She was first married at Orange, in 1897, to Jack E. Meehan, a native of York, Nebr., who came to Orange and was proprietor of the Plaza Market for many years, in partnership with N. T. Edwards; when they dissolved, Mr. Meehan went in for wholesaling meat, and in that line of trade he was engaged when he died, in August, 1912.

THOMAS L. McFADDEN.—It is interesting to chronicle the life of a native son who has had the ambition to acquire a wide and comprehensive knowledge of the law and, combined with high ideals, bring it into practice and make a success of his profession, commanding the confidence and respect of the people in the community where he was born and reared. Such is the case with Thomas L. McFadden, the son of pioneer parents, William M. and Sarah J. (Earl) McFadden, prominent in the development and building up of the Placentia section. Of their six children that reached maturity, five of whom are living, Thomas L. is the fourth eldest. A native son of Orange County, he was born at Placentia April 24, 1878. He was reared on the farm and early acquired habits of industry, laying the foundation of his physical strength, that is of such great assistance to him in everyday life.

He received his preliminary education in the Placentia schools and the Fullerton Union high school, where he was graduated in 1896, when he entered Stanford University, graduating in the class of 1900, with the degree of A.B. During his university course he was for two years a member of the varsity football team, playing left end. He then studied two years at Stanford Law School, and taking the examination at San Francisco, was admitted to the bar in 1903. After practicing law in San Francisco for a year, he located in Bellingham, Wash., engaging in the practice of law. He served as city attorney of Bellingham, from 1908 to 1912. On account of the death of his brother in that year, he returned to Placentia, where he opened a law office and practiced until 1920, when he formed a partnership with H. G. Ames, as Ames and McFadden, with offices in the Odd Fellows building at Anaheim. Aside from his practice, he is interested in his father's estate, incorporated as the Pioneer Ranch Company, of which he is secretary.

Mr. McFadden established domestic ties by his marriage June 19, 1912, to Miss Lucana Forster of San Juan Capistrano, a daughter of Marco Forster, the pioneer of that place, and they are the parents of one daughter, Ysidora. Mr. McFadden achieved considerable success as a member of the varsity football team at Stanford, becoming a well-known coach, so that while at Stanford, he spent two seasons as coach for the Pacific University team at Forest Grove, Ore., then of the Oregon Agricultural College at Corvallis a season, and then his first year at Bellingham he spent a season as coach for the football team of De Pauw University at Greencastle, Ind. Fraternally Mr. McFadden is a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias as well as past exalted ruler of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. He is a popular member of the Fullerton Club, the Hacienda Country Club of La Habra, the Newport Harbor Yacht Club and the Union League Club of Los Angeles, as well as the state and county bar associations.

WILLIAM FALKENSTEIN.—A merchant who has attained an enviable success through having built on a foundation of unremitting industry, broad experience and the highest integrity, is William Falkenstein, proprietor and director of Falkenstein's Department Store. He was born in Germany, of an historic German family, on March 16, 1866, the son of Selmar and Anna (Furstenheim) Falkenstein, both of whom are dead. Five children were born to them, and five grew up to do them honor; and fourth in the order of birth was William, the subject of our interesting review.

He enjoyed the best of educational advantages in his native land and not only attended the grammar grades, but also studied at the high school. He worked for several years in Germany, and at the age of twenty-six came to the United States. For awhile he stayed in New York City, but in 1893 he decided to push on to the great West.

Coming to California, he located at Fullerton, where for three years he was in the service of Messrs. Stern and Goodman. He went to Phoenix for a couple of years, but came back to Fullerton again; and in 1899 removed to Anaheim where, with a partner, he helped form the firm of Harris & Falkenstein. After several years he bought out his partner, and since then has conducted alone a very successful trade. He has, very naturally, become an important factor in the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and in the Board of Trade.

On September 16, 1900, Mr. Falkenstein was married to Miss Regina Harris, of Santa Ana, and they have had two children—Stanley M., who is attending the University of California, and Edith Ruth. He belongs to the Mother Colony Club, and is a past master Mason in Lodge No. 207 of Anaheim. Having served for a year in the German army, and thus done his full duty in that respect by his native country, Mr. Falkenstein has been the more ready and experienced in performing his civic duties here, and as a Republican has taken an active interest in national politics, and has always worked hard for civic improvements. He has prospered in his adopted country, and has ever striven to give back from that which he has thus bountifully received.

WALLACE B. DENNIS.—A highly esteemed citizen of Orange who was for four years president of the school board and has long been a leader in his vicinity, is Wallace B. Dennis, a native of Iowa, where he was born near Iowa City on August 16, 1866. His father, Milton Dennis, was a native of Ohio, a member of an old Eastern family, and he became a pioneer of Iowa, when he came there with his parents and settled in Johnson County. The youngest son, he followed farming there and raised grain; and also went in for lumbering, operating on the Iowa River. He had a steam sawmill and made up lumber of ash, oak and hickory; and he became prominent in the lumber trade, being a sawyer and understanding the manufacture of just what was wanted. In 1875 he removed to Shelby County and became a farmer there; and after four years moved again to Villisca, Iowa. Then he went to Scribner, Nebr., still active in agricultural pursuits; and having retired, he died there, at the age of eighty-two. He had married Miss Eliza Crawford, a native of Ohio or Illinois; and she died in Nebraska on the same day as did her husband, under pathetic circumstances. She was in her seventy-ninth year in 1907, and had been ill for some time; and when the old gentleman was told that his companion of so many years could not live, he fell dead. They were the beloved parents of eleven children, eight of whom are still living.

The youngest child of all, and the only one living in California, W. B. Dennis was brought up on a farm in Iowa and there attended the public schools. Then he went to Atlantic, Iowa, and completed his schooling, after which he commenced to work, with his brother, on his father's farm. At the end of a year, he went to Scribner, Dodge County, Nebr., and continued farm work, and at the age of twenty-one, began to farm for himself.

In Nebraska, on January 23, 1895, Mr. Dennis was married to Miss Mae Evelyn Neff, a native of Fremont, Dodge County, Nebr., and the daughter of Lewis H. and Lydia A. (Marshall) Neff, born respectively in Ohio and Iowa. When fifteen years old her father ran away and enlisted in the Civil War; and as a member of an Illinois regiment, he served throughout the great conflict. He then went to a business college in Davenport, and after that came out to Dodge County, Nebr., and was married at Fremont to Lydia Marshall. Then he engaged in the harness and saddlery business until 1912, when he sold out and, coming to California, located at Santa Ana, where they now reside. Mrs. Dennis is the eldest of the four children. The Dennis boys and their father had formed a partnership, but they dissolved the same in 1896, and W. B. Dennis leased a farm and engaged in raising cattle and hogs. He finally removed to Plainville, Rooks County, Kans., and bought a farm of 160 acres. He also leased land and raised wheat and corn. He was the first one to grow corn at Plainville, and having propitious rains that year, averaged sixty bushels to the acre.

Two years later, he sold his farm and moved to Cody, Wyo., where he bought a ranch and also engaged in contracting to do teaming during the building of the great Shoshone dam, hauling all the coal for the engineers, and handling the same as a broker. This work required sixteen four-horse teams. Two years later, when the work had advanced that far, he took the contract to haul all the cement, and then used fifty four-horse teams, hauling all the cement and the coal. This had to be hauled over a mountain, and it took five years to complete the dam. On the completion of his contracts, Mr. Dennis sold his stock and in 1910 came west to sunnier California.

Locating at Orange, he soon afterwards bought his present ranch of thirteen acres on East Chapman Avenue along Santiago Creek. It was partly set out to orange trees, and the remaining three and a half acres he himself set out, mostly in Valencias and the balance in Navels, and this he cares for himself. He is one of the original members of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association, and is also a director in the same and he belongs to the Commercial Club.

Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis. Marie June is a graduate of the University of Southern California and now doing post-graduate work, and Jean is a graduate of the Orange Union high school and a freshman in the University of California. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Dennis was a school trustee of the Craig district for four years, and during this time they built the Intermediate school on North Glassell Street, and he was president of the board the entire four years. He was a Mason in Cody, Wyo., and is now a member of the Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, at Orange. With Mrs. Dennis, he is also a member of Scepter Chapter No. 163, O. E. S., where Mrs. Dennis is a past matron.

MRS. METTE HANSEN.—One of Orange County's capable, progressive women, who deserves much credit for her devotion and ability as a mother and business woman, is Mrs. Mette Hansen, widow of the later Charles Hansen. A hard-working, self-made man, conservative in his business relations and yet progressive to a high degree, he struggled long as a pioneer, and started the ranching that has since his death been made a success, thanks to his devoted wife. One of two sons of Hans Hansen, he was born near Varde, Denmark. He came to the United States and spent a short time in the East and then came to California, where he had a brother, Peter Hansen, living in the Placentia district, Orange County; there he purchased some land to the northwest of that town. After a while, he went back to Denmark for a visit; but the lure of California made his stay there short, and the same year he again trod the soil of the Golden State. He did not come alone, however, for he brought with him Miss Mette Nielsen, the daughter of Niels Andreassen, a farmer of Varde, Denmark, whom he married, on their arrival at Placentia in 1877, and they began housekeeping on his ranch of fifty-three acres.

The countryside was open and wild in those days, only a few scattered dwellings and settlers marking the growth of the territory from the time when the Indians predominated; and many hardships were experienced and had to be borne as best one could. Water was wanting; and Mr. Hansen was one who helped to construct the Cajon ditch, later known as the Anaheim Union Water Company, the cost of which was shouldered by the few ranch owners then in that area. So far had Mr. Hansen progressed in establishing something worth while for himself and his family that he had set out his land to vineyards, and had harvested two crops when on June 5, 1886, at Fullerton, he passed away, lamented by all who really knew him.

After Mr. Hansen's death, his widow pushed on bravely alone with the great additional responsibility of rearing the four children which had blessed the happy union; and how well she got along may be judged from the fact that she had occasion to consult an attorney only once or twice. Now her holdings include sixteen acres of the original tract which she has set to Valencia and Navel oranges, which is managed by her son-in-law, Lee O. Myers, who himself owns another twenty acres. In addition, Mrs. Hansen owns a fine cotton and alfalfa ranch of sixty acres in the Palo Verde Valley, and this is made profitable by the wise management and personal attention of Mrs. Hansen's oldest son.

The four children referred to are Mettinos, Lena, Mette and Emma; and all but the latter are still living. Mettinos is a rancher at Palo Verde and has six children; Lena is the wife of John E. Wagner; and Mette is Mrs. Lee O. Myers. Each child has some particular accomplishment of which any parent might well be proud, and each has profited by the Christian example of their lamented father, whose walk in life was simple, unassuming and just. In religion Mrs. Hansen is a Lutheran and believes in the golden rule of doing to others as you would be done by. She is now one of the few remaining pioneers of the Placentia section and has very materially helped to build up the county.

Mette Hansen.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN DIERKER.—Few orange orchards in all California can show a higher state of improvement, for the time devoted to it, or a more promising development, than the tract of ten acres, brought to its present level through the experience, insight and industry of its owner, Benjamin Franklin Dierker, who came to Orange for the first time in the early nineties. He was born in Monterey, Cuming County, Nebr., in October, 1877, the son of the esteemed pioneer, Henry Dierker, and the seventh oldest of the family. He attended the public schools there until he was fifteen, and then came to Orange, Cal., where he continued his school work. After that he pursued a commercial course at the Orange County Business College, at the conclusion of which he worked with his father.

He bought forty acres at Olive, at $100 per acre, and set out oranges and walnuts; and at the end of four years he sold it for $14,000. Then he spent a year in the employ of the Pixley Hardware Company, but selling his residence, he returned to Nebraska, where he bought a farm of 280 acres, on which for three years he raised corn and stock. Disgusted, however, with the cold winters, and longing for the balmy climate of California, he again disposed of what he had and returned to Orange.

In 1909 Mr. Dierker bought his present place, some ten acres on West Palmyra Street, at that time mere vacant ground; and he set out Valencias now doing well. He laid cement pipe lines, built a two-story, ten-room house, and made it one of the show places of the county. He also joined the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and helped along the excellent work of that live organization.

During this later residence at Orange, Mr. Dierker married Miss Rozella Kloth, who had moved with her parents from Minnesota to Orange. They attend the Lutheran Church, as do also their children, Nelson, Alfred; Thelma and Marie, and undertake their share of both church and civic work.

AMANDUS W. BEACH and MRS. AUREL BEACH.—A member of the Christian Science faith and practice whose influence in these days of rapid modern advancement has been effectual and helpful to many, is Mrs. Aurel Beach of Orange. Her husband, who passed on in 1913, was widely known as a good and farseeing man; and when he was called to lay aside the toil and responsibilities of this world, his faithful helpmate continued the good work he had begun.

He was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, on August 5, 1838, and moved to Nebraska in 1857, where he located at Weeping Water, in Cass County. He resided there until the fall of 1862 when he enlisted in Company H of the Second Nebraska Cavalry and was mustered in for nine months' service against the Indians. He really served thirteen months, and in November, 1863, was honorably discharged. Then he started back to Ohio, and on December 24, 1863, arrived at Painesville, in Lake County. The next day—Christmas—he was married there to Miss Aurel Paine, who was born near Painesville, Ohio, in LeRoy Township, on January 26, 1839. Her great-grandfather, Eleazar Paine had served in the Revolutionary War, and in 1802 moved with his family to Connecticut Western Reserve in Ohio, and there in what was then Geauga, and later, Lake County, he founded Painesville. At that time, the grandfather, Hendrick E. Paine, a native of Connecticut, was fourteen years old, and he served in the War of 1812. About 1855, Hendrick Paine removed from Painesville to Monmouth, Ill., and there he died. Henry Paine was Mrs. Beach's father, and he was a native of Ohio, where he was born in 1810. He was a forge man and manufactured Paine's Plows and later was a farmer in LeRoy Township, and also a justice of the peace and a commissioner of Lake County. His wife was Harriet N. Tuttle, a native of Austinburg, Ashtabula County, Ohio, and her parents came from Connecticut in 1811. Great-grandfathers Tuttle and Mills were Revolutionary soldiers. The grandfather, Ira Tuttle, was a farmer and a brick manufacturer. The parents, who died in LeRoy, were blessed with ten children; eight of these are still living, and six are over seventy years of age. Mrs. Beach was educated at the public schools and at Madison Seminary, and from her seventeenth year taught school in Lake and Geauga counties. She then went to Monmouth, Ill., to rest, but again taught for eighteen months, after which she returned to Ohio, in which state she was married.

In the spring of 1864, Mr. Beach returned to Nebraska with his bride and located at Weeping Water. There were only three log houses in the little burg at that time, and a grist mill, and the Beach dwelling was a log house. For a while he did teaming for the mill, hauling flour to Nebraska City and bringing back lumber, and there, in her own house, Mrs. Beach taught school for a few weeks. In the meantime, while they improved their homestead, they began farming. In November, 1865, Mr. Smith, their brother-in-law came out and bought eighty acres of Mr. Beach; and a year later Mr. Beach's brother bought the balance of the property. For about eight years Mr. Beach was busy as an agriculturist on the Bellows farm, and while there Mrs. Beach was severely injured through the overturning of their buggy. They then went back to Ohio for her health but remained for six years, and then returned to Weeping Water, where he was a clerk for several years. They also bought a farm near Weeping Water, which they conducted from 1880 until 1900, when they sold out. In the meantime, the Missouri Pacific Railway built in, and Mr. Beach sold the company twenty-three acres; and then, when the branch was built to Lincoln, he sold more of the land. They continued to reside in Weeping Water until 1910, when they came to Orange and located on South Center Street.

Mr. Beach died on July 3, 1913, and Mrs. Beach sold the house and lot and took a trip back to Weeping Water, where Mr. Beach was buried. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, and was past commander of the post at Weeping Water, also past commander of Gordon Granger Post, at Orange. Two children passed away in Nebraska, Henry Paine, who died when he was twenty months old, and Harry Paine, who lived to be four and a half years old. In November, 1913, Mrs. Beach returned to Orange, and she has made her home here ever since. Mr. Beach was a Republican, and both husband and wife were ardent Christian Scientists.

This interest in Science work arose and developed largely because of personal experience. Mrs. Beach was in very poor health from an accident, having been injured in the overturning of their buggy, and she was given up by the local physician. She went to Omaha, where she was healed by a Christian Science practitioner, in 1886. Mr. Beach had consumption, and was also healed in the same year. That same year they took instruction and began to practice. In 1888, while in Ohio on a visit, she found her oldest sister thought to be passing away with heart failure. The sister requested Mrs. Beach to treat her, and she recovered and lived for fifteen years. The healing brought so many cases that Mr. and Mrs. Beach remained there for several months. Mr. Beach was successful in particular to a wonderful degree as a practitioner, but they had to return to Nebraska to look after business affairs. In 1902 they made another trip back to Leroy, Ohio, and traveled throughout the East, and after another sojourn in Nebraska, they came to Southern California.

GEORGE HILL PIRIE.—An enterprising, progressive citizen who understands the many problems of citrus-growing, is well informed on earlier days, and very enthusiastic for the building up of Orange County, is George Hill Pirie, a native of New York City, where he was born in 1857. His father was George Pirie, a native of Scotland, who came to New York as a stonecutter, became an American citizen, and married Christina Hill, also a native of Scotland. Moving to Cedar County, Iowa, he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and there both he and his good wife died. Of the four boys and two girls in the family, three sons and one daughter are still living and of these, George and a brother Alexander are the only ones in California.

Brought up on a farm in Iowa, George Pirie was educated at the public schools, and in 1882 came to California, where he located in Orange County. For a while he worked at ranching, and for a time he owned a ranch; then he was foreman for Dr. I. Adams ranch, and directed the extensive operations there in the growing of walnuts, oranges and other fruit, continuing there for eighteen years. When his health was impaired, he resigned and then purchased a ranch which he still owns.

Mr. Pirie has been very successful each time that he made a "buy," and one of his fortunate purchases is the corner of Olive and Chapman streets, where he has reconstructed the buildings, and has built up other properties in town. He laid out ten acres on North Lemon Street, and sold the same as the Pirie Home Tract, disposing of it in lots; and he also sold at an advantage some ten acres he once owned on North Glassell Street.

A Republican in national political affairs, Mr. Pirie takes a live interest in civic life, and strives to do what he can, under Republican auspices, to elevate politics; but in local matters he recognizes no such political bonds or partisanship differences, and always tries to support the best men and the best measures.

HENRY W. DUKER.—An enterprising contractor who has abundantly demonstrated that he can both successfully build houses and cultivate citrus fruit, and who has thus shown his desire to build up the town and community to the highest standard possible, is Henry W. Duker, who first came to California in the latter part of 1904, and who has been more and more identifying himself with the Golden State ever since. He was born at River Park, Chicago, Ill., on October 27, 1868, the son of Henry Duker, who was for a while a contractor and then a farmer at River Park. He was a native of Hanover, Germany, and there married Miss Caroline Ude. In 1886 they removed from Chicago to Iowa; and in that more western home-land they died. They had eight children, among whom Henry was the second eldest, and is now the only one living in California.

J. C. Waverham.
Esther A. Waverham

He was reared on a farm, and at the same time attended the local public schools; and removing with his folks to Fort Dodge, Iowa, he continued to assist his father on the farm until he was twenty-three years of age. Then, on October 27, 1892, at Fort Dodge he was married to Miss Elizabeth Bartsch, a native of Chicago and the daughter of William and Rose (Straus) Bartsch—the former, a carpenter and builder who died there, the latter a gifted domestic woman, who had come to settle in Iowa, and there was educated. For a while Mr. Duker continued farming, owning a nice farm four miles north from Fort Dodge; but in 1904 he sold out and located at Orange, Cal.

For the first three years he lived at the corner of Washington Avenue and Shaffer Street, and then he built his extensive house on East Palmyra and Shaffer streets on a lot he had bought when he first came here. Since 1904 he has been engaged in contracting and masonry, and he has done the masonry work on many notable structures including the Jörn Building, the Ehlen and Grote Building, the Barker Building, and various machine shops and garages. He was associated with R. W. Miller in the erection of the Lutheran Church here, and he has also carried through much good contracting in other parts of Orange County. In 1919, he completed his own new cement residence, on Batavia Street, a fine location with an orange grove of three and a half acres. This type of building is the latest word in home-structure and the most durable of any kind. He is interested also in horticulture, and has an orange grove of seven acres elsewhere, a miniature "show place" in itself. His interest in citrus culture has made him, naturally, a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association.

Nine children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Duker. Amelia lives at Santa Ana; Emma is at home; Otto is in the San Fernando Valley; Walter assists his father; Ada is also at home; and there are Edna, Reinhold, Martin and Ernst. Mr. Duker belongs to the Lutheran Church, where he has served as a trustee.

J. C. MAUERHAN.—An old settler in Orange County who may point with pride, as the result of long years of hard labor, to his having improved what is now some of the most valuable acreages of the district, is J. C. Mauerhan, who was born in Wuerttemberg, Germany, in 1861, the son of J. C. Mauerhan, Sr., who was a general farmer and a viticulturist and brought his family in 1872, following the death of his wife in 1871, out to America and Holton, Kans. He had four children, and cared for them tenderly; and not satisfied with the Middle West, he came on with them to California in 1875. For a while he was a florist at San Francisco; in 1882 he came south to Anaheim and there he cultivated a farm of twenty acres on the Ball Road until his death, on January 6, 1910, aged seventy-one.

J. C. Mauerhan was brought up in Kansas from his eleventh until his fourteenth year, when he came to California and worked at various things. In 1883 he came to Los Angeles and in 1885 to Anaheim, and then went to Santa Ana in 1886, and was in the employ of the Santa Ana Soda Works. He continued in the manufacture of soda water for seventeen years, and while thus occupied built a residence on Sixteenth and Spurgeon streets. He also owned half a block lying between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets on Spurgeon which he improved. In addition, he had title to three acres on C Street, set out in trees.

During these years, Mr. Mauerhan was engaged in general farming on the Mayberry tract near Tustin, and on February 12, 1904, confident of the future of the Anaheim agricultural lands, he bought his present ranch of fifty-five acres, clearing away the brush and the wild cactus, leveling and otherwise improving the property. He sunk a well and installed a gas engine. He set out walnuts and some oranges, and later bought another twenty acres of raw land, making seventy-five acres which he has improved from the wild state. Now he has forty-five acres in walnuts, and thirty in oranges and lemons.

At Los Angeles January 2, 1884, Mr. Mauerhan was married to Miss Esther Schulz, a native of Milwaukee, Wis., who came to California with her parents when she was sixteen years of age, in 1880. Her parents, J. C. and Mary A. (Martin) Schulz were farmers in Wisconsin and later in Blackhawk County, Iowa, and in 1880 they came to San Francisco. In 1882 they located at Anaheim and were farmers on the Ball Road where the father died; their mother still lives in the old home, eighty-four years old. Mr. and Mrs. Mauerhan have six children as a blessing to their fortunate union. Charles is a contractor and builder in Los Angeles, and is married and has three children. Frank, who is also married, is a neighboring rancher, living next to our subject. Conrad, married and the father of two children, assists his father. Gertrude is Mrs. Nelson of Placentia; she is the mother of five children. James and Ralph are employed in the oil fields; all the sons but Charles, who was employed in Government ship yards, were soldiers in the World War, and one of them, Frank, served over seas.

HARVEY HILE.—A far-seeing, enterprising young man whose energy, tenacity and hard work have enabled him to convert a wild stretch of raw land into a fine, productive property, is Harvey Hile, who has been identified with Orange County for the past decade. He was born in Logansport, Ind., in 1878, the son of Daniel Hile, a native of Germany, who came to Indiana when a young man of eighteen or twenty, became a farmer at Logansport, where he retired, and died near Goodland, Ind. He had married Miss Dora Kiese, and she, too, passed away in the Hoosier State. They had four girls and five boys, all of whom, save one of the sons, are now living; and of the boys, two are in California, one in Mackay, Idaho, and one in Florida.

The second youngest, Harvey Hile was brought up on a farm at Logansport, and remained at home until he was sixteen, when he began to paddle his own canoe. He worked on a farm for four years, and then he was in the car shop of the "Big Four" Railway at Indianapolis. During three years of apprenticeship he learned the car-builder's trade, and then, for six months, he was a blacksmith in the Atlas Engine Works in that same city. In 1903, he went to Boise City, Idaho, and for two years was with the Graves Transfer Company, when he took up concrete work and became a finisher of sidewalks, curbs and foundations. After that, he was one of the workmen at the Big Giant Gold Mine, and he was next in the employ of the Government as foreman of concrete work in the building of the New York Canal in Idaho.

Induced by the accounts of a sister-in-law, who had been here and liked California, to try his fortune in the Golden State, Mr. Hile came here in 1910, settled at Anaheim, and with his brother, John H., who has a ranch adjoining his own, rented land and raised sweet potatoes. For a couple of years he did well, but too much competition ruined the market. In 1910 he bought his present ranch, raised sweet potatoes for a couple of years, and in 1914 set the acreage out to Valencia oranges, and planted potatoes and beans. He now has some twenty-two acres set out. He belongs to the Anaheim Citrus Association, and takes a very live interest in all the problems pertaining to horticulture in Southern California.

At Boise City, Mr. Hile was married to Miss Lucy Dove, a native of Indiana, a charming lady of accomplishments, who came to enjoy a circle of devoted friends; and she died on June 12, 1917, mourned by all who knew her worth. In politics a Socialist, Mr. Hile belongs to the Woodmen of the World at Anaheim.

JACOB W. CARRIKER.—A fine old gentleman with an enviable war record is Jacob W. Carriker, one of the very successful orange culturists of Orange, to which enterprising town he came in 1902. He was born at Statesville, in Cabarrus County, N. C., April 13, 1842, the son of Daniel Carriker, who was also born there. In 1850, he brought his family to Hillsboro, Montgomery County, Ill., where he broke up a stretch of prairie he had purchased and made of it a first-class farm. He continued there in agricultural pursuits until 1874, when he removed to Nebraska; and at Harvard, in that state, he died. Mrs. Carriker, who was Miss Sophia Sides before her marriage, was a native also of Cabarrus County, N. C., and died in Illinois in 1866. She was the mother of seven children, four of whom are living; and among them, Jacob was the youngest.

Reared in Illinois from his eighth year, Jacob Carriker attended school held in a log house with puncheon floor and having slab benches and desk; at first a private, and then a public school. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company D of the Hundred Twenty-six Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was mustered into service at Alton, Ill., on September 4, 1862. He went on to Columbus, Ky., slept between corn rows, and had the measles; then to La Grange, where he again had the measles and a relapse, and where he almost died. Recovering, he fought with his company at the Siege of Vicksburg, at the taking of Little Rock, Ark., and at Duvall's Bluff, Clarendon, and continued his service in Arkansas until the close of the war. At Pine Bluff, Ark., on July 12, 1865, he was mustered out of service.

Returning to Illinois, Mr. Carriker bought and improved land, and built for himself a house, hewing the logs he needed in the construction; and at Jacksonville, Ill., he was married to Miss Mary J. Taylor, a native of that state, after which he followed farming. In 1874, he sold out and located in Hamilton County, Nebr., where he homesteaded 160 acres, and laid claim to 160 acres of timber, all of which he improved. He was the pioneer farmer there in the raising of grain and stock, but with such obstacles as grasshoppers, droughts and hail storms, he found the going at times rather uphill.

In the fall of 1902 Mr. Carriker came to California and located at Orange, and here bought the eight corner lots at Center and Maple streets, then a grain field. He built his residence at the corner, and then sold the balance of the lots. Later, he bought a lot at the corner of Grand and Maple streets, and there he owns four houses.

*Henry W. Buchheim
Maudie A. Buchheim.*

He also bought an orange ranch of nine and a half acres at McPherson, took four crops from it, and then sold it for $12,000 more than he paid for it.

Mr. Carriker's first wife died in Nebraska in 1882 and left him with six children. Elmer resides at Orange; Nora, Mrs. James Benson, at Hastings, Nebr.; Cordelia, Mrs. Soward, and Cornelia, Mrs. Howard Benson, are in Giltner, Nebr.; Frank lives at Burwell, Nebr.; Mattie, became Mrs. Frost and lives at Santa Ana.

When he married a second time, Mr. Carriker chose Miss Maggie Risk, a native of Point Pleasant, W. Va., as his wife; she was the daughter of William Risk, who had married Elizabeth Kennedy, and the ceremony was performed at Hastings, Nebr., in 1889. Both of her parents died in West Virginia. One son, Howard Judson, resulted from this second union, and he now has a motorcycle store in Orange, and another at Santa Ana.

Mr. Carriker is a Republican in national politics, though nonpartisan in his support of all local issues and movements of a worthy nature, and belongs to the Orange post of the Grand Army of the Republic. Both Mr. and Mrs. Carriker are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and there Mr. Carriker was a steward, as he has been for years a class leader. He was also a class leader in Nebraska, and in Orange he has served on the building committee and in other ways has advanced the growth of the congregation, its property and its work.

HENRY WILLIAM BUCHHEIM.—A member of one of Orange County's worthy pioneer families whose members have contributed so largely to the agricultural development of the county, particularly in the San Juan Capistrano district, Henry W. Buchheim is carrying on the good work of his family, being extensively engaged in ranching at Serra or San Juan-by-the-Sea.

The fifth of a family of twelve children, Henry Buchheim's parents were Frank S. and Caroline (Zymon) Buchheim, hard-working and industrious farmer folk who made their home in Minnesota before coming to California. The following are the other children born to these worthy parents: Lydia, the eldest of the family, now Mrs. Hemenway, is engaged in ranching on the Santa Margarita ranch, where she is in partnership with her brother, Aaron, who is the second in order of birth, and whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. John is engaged in growing sugar beets near Garden Grove; Jacob is a rancher at Downey; Emma is deceased; Josie is Mrs. Van Whisler, the wife of a rancher at El Toro; Paul assists his brother Aaron in his ranching operations and is also interested in the orange and walnut industry in Ventura County; Frank is married and resides in Santa Ana; Fred passed away at the age of twenty, leaving a son, Carl, and a widow; Emil has also been engaged on Aaron Buchheim's ranch since receiving his honorable discharge from the army. During the World War he made an enviable record serving as first gunner on a French "75" during his period of service in France with the light artillery of the Sunset Division; Minnie, who is the wife of Henry Hoeffner, resides in Nebraska. Frank S. Buchheim passed away in Santa Ana in 1904, at the old home place on East Seventeenth Street, where Frank Buchheim now lives, the mother surviving him until January 20, 1915.

Henry W. Buchheim was born at Sauk Center, Minn., October 13, 1875, and so was a lad of barely six years when his parents arrived here on October 11, 1881. His early years were spent at Santa Ana, where the family had settled, and there he attended the public schools. As is frequently the case in a large family, however, it was necessary for the children to start in when quite young to share the responsibilities of the family, and so Henry Buchheim's school days were not of long duration. Going to work on the home farm, he early learned those habits of industry and thoroughness that made for the success he has enjoyed in the years of his maturity. When his older brother, Aaron Buchheim, began his ranching operations, he joined forces with him and they continued together for a number of years. Later he began farming on his own account, and his interests in that field have grown from year to year, until he now leases four tracts of land near Serra, comprising 1,000 acres, and this he is cultivating with splendid success. The land lies, for the most part, on the Santa Fe Railroad, along the coast road to Laguna, and is devoted to grain and beans. Mr. Buchheim is also the owner of a fine tract of twenty acres in Ventura County, part of this being a thriving walnut orchard.

Mr. Buchheim's marriage, which occurred December 6, 1910, at Santa Ana, united him with Miss Maude Reeder, a native daughter, born at Moreno, Riverside County. She is the daughter of William and Bertha (Johnston) Reeder, born in San Bernardino and Riverside counties, respectively. The Reeder family came from Illinois to California in early days, and the Johnstons came from Indiana to California across the plains at an equally early period. William Reeder was for some years engaged in farming and then began fishing, having his headquarters at San Juan-by-the-Sea, and fishing from Point Conception to San Diego. He died in August, 1916, his wife having preceded him twenty-two years, her death occurring in 1894. They had four children; Thomas is engaged in fishing at San Juan-by-the-Sea; Rose, Mrs. Arthur Buchheim, resides at Santa Susanna; Maude is the wife of Henry Buchheim, our subject; Bertha passed away in childhood. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Buchheim have three children to brighten their home, Floyd, Henrietta and Florence, but the family circle was saddened by the death of the oldest child when he was but eleven months old.

Industrious and capable, Mr. Buchheim is one of Orange County's dependable citizens, and he may well look back with satisfaction upon the results of his work, for it is to men of his type that Southern California owes the marvelous transformation that the past few decades have brought.

LEWIS F. COBURN.—A man peculiarly well-fitted for the important office of city attorney of Orange is Lewis F. Coburn, who is an enthusiastic "booster" of both town and county, and believes both to be the best sections in which he has ever lived and worked. He came to California in the late seventies, and so has had the best opportunity for observing and judging the gradual development of neighboring counties and most of the Golden State.

He was born at Newberry, Vt., on May 21, 1854, the son of Calvin P. Coburn, a native of New Hampshire hailing from the same home district as Salmon Portland Chase, the statesman. He was a farmer in Vermont and in 1858 removed to Brunswick, Maine, where he died in 1910, at the age of eighty-six. His ancestors were lineal descendants of Edward Cockburn, who came from England to Massachusetts in 1635, and built the first house north of the Merrimac River, in Massachusetts—an historic structure still standing. The spelling of the name was then changed to the way in which it was pronounced, with a silent c. Major Silas Coburn, the great-great-grandfather, and Captain Asa Coburn, the great-grandfather of our subject, were both soldiers in a New Hampshire regiment in the Revolution. Asa Coburn removed from Massachusetts to New Hampshire, and was a farmer there. The mother of Lewis Coburn was Rachel R. Ferrin before her marriage; she was born at Bath, Maine, and died in that state in 1915. Grandfather Lazarus Ferrin was a sea captain who made four voyages around Cape Horn to San Francisco. Lewis F. was the elder of two children, and his brother, Edward Everett, is still living at the old home.

Educated at the local public schools, Lewis F. continued his studies at the University of Maine, at Orono, from which he was graduated in 1875 with the degree of civil engineer. He taught school for a while, and then began the study of law under Judge Keniston of Boothbay Harbor.

In 1877 Mr. Coburn came to California and was for a while in the employ of Hobbs, Wall and Company, at Crescent City, helping them to build a railway and bridges across the Smith River, a distance of fifteen miles. All the time while so employed, however, Mr. Coburn was still studying law, and in 1880 was admitted to the bar in California. He practiced law in Del Norte County, and in 1884 was elected district attorney for a term of two years, and was then reelected for a second term; he was also assistant United States attorney for the northern district of California—a position which he filled with credit for four years.

Having had several law cases at Yreka, an opportunity presented itself to practice law there, and he removed to that city, and was active as an attorney in that section from 1891 until 1918. He was city attorney for Yreka for nine years, and was also city attorney for Etna and for Sisson, filling for each a term of three years. He assisted in giving the impetus to various public improvements through which these towns attained some desirable reputation for progress.

At the solicitation of Attorney W. R. Garrett, an old-time friend, Mr. Coburn came to Orange in 1918 and entered into partnership. The following July, Mr. Garrett retired, and since then Mr. Coburn has practiced law alone. He is now serving as city attorney of Orange, to the satisfaction of the entire community. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Coburn knows no partisanship in matters affecting the locality in which he lives and thrives.

In Del Norte County, Mr. Coburn was married to Miss Ella C. Anthony, a native of Smith River and the daughter of Joseph G. Anthony, a pioneer farmer and a cousin of U. S. Senator Anthony. Three children have blessed their union. Lew Ella is the wife of Major L. H. Taylor, a resident of Dunsmuir; Kate is the wife of E. J. Adams, and resides at Orange; and Herbert Anthony is an electrician in the employ of the Irvine ranch, and was for two years in the World War, and for nineteen months overseas.

Mr. Coburn was made a Mason in Howard Lodge No. 96, F. & A. M., Yreka, in 1892, and is a past master, and now belongs to Orange Grove Lodge, No. 293, F. &

L. D. Zeel

A. M.; is past high priest of Cyrus Chapter, No. 15, R. A. M., Yreka, and is now a member of Orange Grove Chapter, No. 73; belonged to Mt. Shasta Commandery No. 32, Knights Templar, where he was commander in 1889 and 1890, and was captain-general and drill master for seventeen years; now he belongs to the Santa Ana Commandery, and is a member of the Santa Ana Council, R. & S. M. He also belongs to the Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in San Francisco, and with Mrs. Coburn is a member of the Eastern Star at Orange, and was a member of this order at Yreka.

SAMUEL DAVID TEEL.—Among the native sons of Orange County, S. D. Teel has the distinction of being the son of Garden Grove's first permanent settler. He follows the occupation of ranching, and specializes in raising sweet potatoes, having purchased ten acres which he devotes to that purpose. He also owns ten acres in the Bolsa Precinct which is planted to Valencia oranges, and now has an exceptionally fine grove just coming into bearing.

He was born in Orange County, December 23, 1875, in what is now Buaro precinct, one mile north of his present home, this section in those early days being a part of Los Angeles County. His parents, George Milton and Catherine (Harris) Teel, were born in Tennessee and Kentucky, respectively, and were married in Texas, whither both had gone when young people. They came to California in 1870, settling in what is now Garden Grove. When Mr. Teel first arrived in California, coming from Texas with an ox team, he took up his residence on what is known as the Dr. Head ranch, where he planted potatoes, and from one sack of seed he harvested 120 sacks—equal to six tons. He hauled lumber from Anaheim Landing to build his house and hauled lumber to Anaheim as a teamster. The elder Teel, besides being the first settler in Garden Grove was the first man to develop artesian water in this district. He struck an artesian flow in 1871, and was one of the early orange growers and fruit men demonstrating that the best of fruit could be grown here. His death occurred at Garden Grove in 1903 at the age of seventy-six. He was a Mason, retaining his membership in Texas. His widow survived him until March 31, 1920, when she passed away aged eighty-three. Mr. and Mrs. Teel were the parents of eight children: Georgia is Mrs. John Davis of Garden Grove; Charles lives at Ukiah; Harris is a resident of Coalinga; Edward, at Wintersburg; Samuel D., of this sketch; Alice is Mrs. W. E. Wells and lives on the San Joaquin ranch; Ida is Mrs. Claude Blakesley of Garden Grove; George M., Jr., the next to the youngest of the family, died on November 5, 1918, during the influenza epidemic.

S. D. Teel is the fifth child in the parental family of eight children, and was reared on his father's ranch. He attended the common schools and after attaining his majority went to San Francisco and became an employe of the California Electric Company, working for them at their power house in San Francisco for three years. He afterwards returned home and turned his attention to ranching. His marriage, which occurred in 1908, united him with Miss Josephine Kemble, a native of Colorado. The four children resulting from this union are Joseph Kemble, Audrey V., Samuel David, Jr., and Genevieve M.

Mr. Teel has built a very cozy, modest home, to which he is constantly adding conveniences, and the substantial improvements he is ever on the alert to make on the ranch adds to its attractions materially. He is a self-reliant, industrious, intelligent man, and makes his influence felt for the common good. He was interested in getting the Buaro Drainage District organized, and deservedly ranks among the enterprising and resourceful citizens of his community. Fraternally he is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and politically is a staunch adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Democratic party.

OSCAR ERNST GUNTHER.—A prominent young man of Orange who in more fields than one has made a good record, distinguishing himself in particular through his broad-mindedness and patriotic aggression, as a conscientious city trustee, is Oscar Ernst Gunther, who was born at Fort Dodge in Webster County, Iowa, on January 4, 1889. His father is L. D. Gunther, the well known contractor and builder of Orange, who had a good home at Fort Dodge, from which Oscar was sent to both the grammar and the high school. During vacations, he began to learn the harness maker's and saddler's trade, making more progress by putting in his Saturdays also at the bench, and when he came to California and Orange with his parents in 1904, he continued at the trade in Santa Ana, in the service of Bryden Brothers.

In 1908, he set up a harness business for himself at 60 Plaza Square, Orange, and continued there very successfully until August, 1918, when he sold out and accepted an appointment as inspector of leather equipment in the ordnance department of the Quartermaster's Corps, of the U. S. Army.

While in business for himself, Mr. Gunther had been appointed city trustee of Orange in April, 1914; and two years later he was elected for a four-year term, and was chairman of the finance committee and a member of the fire and water committee. When he accepted appointment in the U. S. Army, he resigned as trustee, in August, 1918, to the regret of many who had come to appreciate the qualities he had shown in his public acts. After the armistice was signed, he tendered his resignation in order that he might return to civil life; and he was honorably discharged with the proper recognition from his military superiors.

Now Mr. Gunther is engaged in ranching, and owns a fine ten-acre grove of Valencia oranges at the corner of Yorba and Fairhaven avenues, and one on North Batavia Street; and inasmuch as he is satisfied with nothing short of the best methods, measures, implements and results, the new venture occupies all of his time. In 1911, at Orange he was married to Miss Dora Struck, a native of Orange and the daughter of Fred Struck, once supervisor of Orange County; and two children have blessed the union—Dolores and Walter. The family attend the Lutheran Church of Orange. As a most complimentary testimonial, Mr. Gunther's fellow-citizens in 1920 again elected him a city trustee of Orange, for a four-year term; and he is again chairman of the finance committee, and a member of the street committee.

WILLIAM C. MAUERHAN.—Not many ranches in Orange County are more presentable through their well and systematically cultivated soil and modern buildings than that of William C. Mauerhan, residing on the Katella Road in the vicinity of the Katella schoolhouse, near Anaheim. This particular ranch has been his home since 1912, and here he set out Valencia oranges and walnut trees that are among the best of producers in this part of the county. His forty acres are growing to be one of the "show places" of the Anaheim district and he has refused flattering offers for the ranch by persons seeking a well-developed home place.

Mr. Mauerhan is a native son of the Golden State and was born in San Francisco, on September 4, 1875, the son of John C. and Sophia Mauerhan, pioneers everywhere esteemed for their progressiveness, integrity and industry. They were natives of Germany and emigrated from their native land in 1872, bringing with them those virtues of German domestic and industrial life which have contributed so much to the formation of some of the most desirable features of American daily life. They came from San Francisco and settled near Anaheim on a ranch of nineteen acres in 1882, in the immediate vicinity of the present home of the son, William C. Here the elder Mauerhan carried on farming until his health became so poor that the care of the place was turned over to his son. He died in 1909 and Mrs. Mauerhan passed away in January, 1918, the mother of eight children, five of whom are still living and all residents of California.

The old home ranch was first set to vines but the blight that killed all the other vineyards in the Anaheim district, also killed this vineyard and the vines were dug out and walnuts set out in their place. About five years before the death of the elder Mauerhan, William C. took over the management of the place which he later purchased, and he pulled out the walnut trees and planted chili peppers, being among the first in this district to venture in that field; he was also the pioneer in the drying of peppers, and also had the first mill in the state for grinding chili for commercial purposes. Another movement in which he took the lead was in the development of water for irrigation. At present he has on his place two wells, with ten-inch bore, one 108 and the other 130 feet deep operated by a thirty-horsepower electric motor and capable of producing water enough for 100 acres. Every improvement seen on the ranch today was placed there by Mr. Mauerhan himself.

On June 21, 1906, W. C. Mauerhan and Miss Anna Schroeder, a native daughter of Santa Ana, were united in marriage. She was born on July 30, 1884, the daughter of Frederick and Verena Schroeder, pioneer settlers of what is now Orange County. This fortunate union has been blessed by the birth of six children, four of whom are living—Mildred Verena, Clarence William, Grace Lillian and Anna Clare. The two that died are Elmer Frederick, known by all the friends and relatives as "Fritzie," and Marian Sophia. The family are members of the Evangelical Church at Anaheim. Mr. Mauerhan has been one of the trustees for several years and for twenty years he was superintendent of the Sunday School, a mark of distinguished recognition in itself. He has been a member of the board of trustees of the Katella school district, which is erecting one of the most modern of schoolhouses in the county, since 1915. Mr. and Mrs. Mauerhan have shown their public spirit in every way and have given their support to all measures that have been presented to them that had as their aim the upbuilding of the county and the betterment of social and moral conditions of the people. They have an ever-widening circle of friends who esteem them highly for their Christian character and good citizenship.

CARL A. PISTER.—A business man whose steady stream of success has given great satisfaction to his many friends is Carl A. Pister, popular through the Pister Transfer and Oil Company. He was born at Abingdon, Knox County, Ill., in 1891, the son of Charles Pister, who was a manufacturer at that place of brick and tile. He did a large business in central Illinois and eastern Iowa, and made for himself, by his enterprising methods and fair dealing, an enviable reputation which followed him to California, when he came here in 1909. He is now engaged in the raising of oranges at Orange.

Carl was educated in the public schools, and was graduated from the high school at Abingdon in 1909. During his high school course, he worked, in summer time, at the butcher trade, learning from his uncle, F. Ehrenhart at Lewistown, and when he came to Orange, about ten years ago, he was employed for a while in Sweet's Market. Then he went to the Morrison Market, and when the Ehlen and Grote Company opened a market in their store he was employed by them. His engagement there lasted eighteen months; and after that he joined his brother, who was a contract painter, and worked at the painter's trade.

In 1918, with Paul Clark as a partner, Mr. Pister started in the truck business; and in August of the same year he bought the service station at the corner of Chapman and Olive streets from Mr. Bay, and continued the business under the firm name of the Pister Transfer and Oil Company. In 1919 Mr. Chaffee bought a third interest with Mr. Pister and the company was continued under the same firm name. Since then, they have erected a new building and installed a complete equipment; and they enjoy the best location in Orange, and one of the best trades in Orange County. They also handle tires and automobile sundries. They have four large trucks for heavy hauling; and the operation of the trucks, as well as the service station, is looked after by Mr. Pister himself. As might be expected, he is a live wire not only in the field covered by these operations, but in the cooperative work of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

At Orange, Mr. Pister was married to Miss Agnes Ensign, a native of Michigan; and they attend the First Presbyterian Church, and reside at the corner of Sycamore and Grand streets, where they dispense a liberal hospitality to those fortunate in admission to the home circle.

MICHAEL ELTISTE.—A successful business man and horticulturist of Orange is Michael Eltiste, a native of Bavaria, Germany, who was born there November 21, 1865. Mr. Eltiste received a splendid education as a foundation for his future endeavors, and finished with a course in an industrial college in Germany. In 1883, at the age of eighteen, eager for new fields and greater opportunities, he came to the United States, and located in Connecticut. Later, he started westward by degrees, and after visiting Iowa and Nebraska, for twenty-three years he followed stock raising near Phillipsburg, Phillips County, Kans., operating on a large scale and meeting with the success assured by his thorough training and the business principles which he applied to his farming operations. During these years of residence in Kansas he also interested himself in the advancement of his district, and served as township trustee and also on the school board.

In 1908 Mr. Eltiste decided to come further west, and that year located at Orange, Cal., where he bought land and developed a sixty-acre orange and lemon grove. From time to time he bought and developed other ranches, and at present is the owner of a young orchard of thirty acres, twenty-five acres of which is planted to Valencia oranges and five acres to lemons, in the city limits of Orange.

About one year after taking up his residence here, with customary energy and business acumen, Mr. Eltiste opened up a business establishment in Orange and engaged in selling farm implements, and the success of the undertaking may be imagined from the fact that within ten years his business was doubled six times, notwithstanding that during this time six competitors in his line entered the field in Orange and have all gone out of business. His early experience with ranching and the practical knowledge gained while on his Kansas farm have been utilized in his business career, and he laid the foundation for his success in square dealing and satisfied customers, which is the real foundation for all success in business, be it large or small. As agent for the International Harvester Company's motor trucks and tractors, and also carrying a full line of farming implements, his output has increased at a marvelous speed and to facilitate the business he has opened a second store, this one located at Fullerton, and with his son, August Eltiste, as manager of the Orange establishment, and W. C. Egly in charge of the Fullerton house, the concern has developed into one of the leading business establishments in Orange County and an example of the type of men who choose this locality for their home community and bring to it the benefit of their experience and their public-spirited work for the upbuilding of this section. The business throughout the county has become so large it was necessary to have a third branch store, and they have secured a suitable location on East Fourth Street, Santa Ana, where they will carry a line of implements, trucks and tractors, at each place doing business under the firm name of M. Eltiste and Son.

The marriage of Mr. Eltiste united him with Kuni Beyerleim, and six children were born to them: George, an orange grower in Orange; August, in partnership with his father; John who saw service in the U. S. Army in France as a member of the replacement division, and is now interested in the business with his father; Anna also a member of the firm is their bookkeeper; Emma and Karl. The family are members of St. John's Lutheran Church at Orange and for seven years Mr. Eltiste was president of the board of trustees and helped build the new church.

Deeply interested in all progressive movements here, Mr. Eltiste served one term as trustee of Orange, and he was one of the founders of the new sewer and water system, and active in street improvements in the city, helping carry these important projects through to completion, in spite of opposition. He is a director in the First National Bank of Orange.

O. V. KNOWLTON.—A highly-esteemed citizen of Fullerton who has the distinction of having been commander of the Southern California Veterans Association, is O. V. Knowlton, also widely known on account of his connection with the State Mortuary Office. He was born in McKean County, Pa., on February 26, 1848, the son of Charles and Cornelia (Potter) Knowlton of old New England stock. On the maternal side his ancestry is traced back to Roger Williams. When he was a babe of three weeks his father was murdered. So in 1851 his mother took him, he being the only child, to Marengo, McHenry County, Ill., where she had a brother living. She passed away in 1854 and O. V. was left alone at six years of age. He continued residing on the farm with his uncle and attended the public schools until 1863, when he enlisted in Company B, Seventeenth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, serving in the Army of the West in the Civil War, taking part in the battles with Price's army in Missouri. In the spring of 1865, they were sent on the plains on a campaign against the Indians and helped build the first line of stockades across the plains so Butterfield's stages could go through the badly infested Indian country. On December 15, 1865, he was mustered out and honorably discharged in Leavenworth, Kans. During the war he was badly wounded in the thigh and also received four other gunshot wounds. After the war he returned to Illinois, remaining until March, 1866, when he went to the oil fields of Pennsylvania, and for seven years helped to advance what has since become such a gigantic industry.

He next returned to Illinois and located in the vicinity of his old home, and there, engaged in contracting and building. When he removed from that section, he went to Jewell County, Kans., and stayed for a year; and after that, he went to Thayer County, Nebr., where he again followed the building business.

In 1886 Mr. Knowlton left the Middle West for the Pacific Coast; and arriving in California, proceeded to Anaheim and for a time followed contracting. In course of time, he acquired five acres in Fullerton which he set out to Valencia oranges, and this trim little ranch of richest soil, thanks to the care and hard work of its industrious and progressive owner, is now in a highly productive state.

Mr. Knowlton's love of country, justice and right naturally led to his assuming public office in order to assist in effecting certain reforms or results, and to do his share of the world's work such as somebody must worry about, and during his residence here he served as commander of the Southern California Veterans Association, and also as state mortuary officer for Orange County for eighteen years and as such has done much good in the county and is serving without pay.

When he married, Mr. Knowlton took for his wife Miss Julia A. Huntington, a graduate of the University of Illinois, and a teacher at the time of her marriage; and five children blessed their fortunate union: Charles is a rancher at Fullerton; Avis presides gracefully over her father's home; Kent was a sergeant in Company A, Three Hundred Nineteenth Engineers, and saw service overseas; he is now horticultural commissioner of Orange County; Hollis was gunnery sergeant and expert instructor in the U. S. Marines and also served overseas; Ruth, who graduated from Los Angeles State Normal, is now engaged in teaching.

In 1901 Mr. Knowlton was bereaved of his wife, who was mourned by her family and friends. He is a member of Malvern Hill Post No. 131, G. A. R., at Fullerton, of which he is past commander and of which he has been adjutant for eighteen years past. He has served as aide-de-camp on both the department and national commander's staff, with the rank of colonel. Intensely interested in civic matters, he is a strong Republican and has much influence in local matters.

O. V. Knowlton

OTTO LOESCHER.—An enterprising, public-spirited and successful man who likes the superb climate of California and the superior folks of Orange County, and who in turn is equally esteemed, is Otto Loescher, a native of Koenitz, West Prussia, Germany, where he was born in 1859. He was brought up in the village, where his father was a miller, and sent to the public schools and when fourteen he was apprenticed to a miller and began to learn his trade. At the end of three years, when he was pronounced a journeyman, he worked at his trade; and in 1885 he crossed the ocean and came to the United States.

Settling for a while at Goshen, Ind., he worked as a miller; but feeling the lure of the Pacific West, he came out to California, in the "boom" year of 1887, and went to Selma, Fresno County. He was made foreman of the Selma Mills, and for many years continued there in that capacity. While there, he bought twenty acres of land, raw and unsightly; and that he improved by setting it out to Muscat grapes, and making of it a first-class vineyard.

Later, Mr. Loescher was miller at the Reedley Mills, and there he bought another twenty acres of land, which he set out to Muscat and Thompson seedless grapes, having forty acres of vineyard in all. These vineyards he managed until April, 1917, when he came to Orange and retired. Here he makes his home in a beautiful residence which he built on Palmyra Street, devoting his time to looking after his property.

Mrs. Loescher was Miss Lena Miller, a native of Fort Dodge, Iowa, who came to Norfolk, Nebr., with her parents when a child, and was there reared. Some years ago she came to Orange, and here she and Mr. Loescher met and were married. Both are members of the Lutheran Church. In national politics Mr. Loescher is a Republican; but when it comes to lending a helping hand in local political affairs, his patriotism knows no partisanship.

HUGH T. O'CONNOR.—A representative citizen of the Los Alamitos section of Orange County who won recognition for his locality during the various drives for loans and other allied needs, is Hugh T. O'Connor, who served as chairman of the committee that brought their section "over the top" in every drive in record time, thereby winning for Los Alamitos the medals and banners offered for efficiency.

Mr. O'Connor is a successful merchant in Los Alamitos, and has served as the postmaster since 1914, and since 1916 under civil service rules. He was born in New Orleans, in 1865, a son of Daniel and Eliza (Sheffield) O'Connor, the former born in Ireland and the latter in New Orleans. Hugh T. was the third in order of birth in a family of five and is the only one living in California. He received a good schooling and launched out in his business career when a young man and by strict attention to business has gradually worked his way to a position of trust and responsibility.

Mr. O'Connor has been a resident of Los Alamitos for a number of years, spending six years as bookkeeper and cashier for the Felts Company, at the same time serving as postmaster. In 1918 he opened up in the grocery business for himself in a structure he erected on the boulevard, in dimension 66x50 feet, and well stocked with an assorted line of goods suitable for the needs of the community. Mr. O'Connor served as a justice of the peace, being appointed to fill a vacancy.

In 1905 occurred the marriage of Hugh T. O'Connor and Miss Florence Shattuck. After two years of happily worked life Mrs. O'Connor passed away. Mr. O'Connor is a genial, courteous gentleman and has won the esteem of a large circle of friends in the county. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

LE ROY D. PALMER.—A man unusually posted in all that pertains to his field of activity is Le Roy D. Palmer, whose natural endowments together with a pleasing personality make him very acceptable, as manager of the Orange County Fruit Exchange, to a large circle of busy and progressive folk. He was born in Sedalia, Pettis County, Mo., on September 13, 1880, the son of L. D. Palmer, a native of Ohio, who settled at Sedalia and was in the employ of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway as engineer. He married Marietta C. Emery who now lives at Los Angeles. Mr. Palmer died in 1900 at Sedalia leaving his widow and four children.

After finishing with the grammar and high schools of Sedalia, Le Roy went into a railroad office at St. Louis, that of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, and afterward entered the employ of the Government in the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, now Oklahoma. It was a land office, where lands were allotted to the Indians; and he was the enrollment clerk.

In 1909 he resigned and came to Los Angeles, and for five years he was employed by the California Fruit Growers Exchange. He arose from a clerkship in the claim department to be assistant sales manager, and then he resigned. He was in charge of both the Southern and the Northeastern markets, a position of responsibility affording continued experience of a valuable nature; and it is no wonder that when D. Eyman Huff resigned as manager of the Orange County Fruit Exchange in 1915, Mr. Palmer was tendered the position. Just what this compliment means may be estimated from the fact that this exchange is made up of eleven different local associations, and in 1919 alone it shipped 3,200 cars of fruit. It is, therefore, one of the largest fruit exchanges in Southern California.

At Tahlequah, Okla., in 1904, Mr. Palmer was married to Miss Georgia Trent, a native of that section but the representative of an old Eastern family, and a daughter of Dr. Trent, a well-known surgeon of the U. S. Army, located at old Fort Gibson. Two children were born of this marriage—Madalyn and Marjory. Mr. Palmer is a popular member of Santa Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks and Orange Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M. Orange may well be proud of such public-spirited citizens as Mr. Palmer, and the Orange County Fruit Exchange, in particular, is to be congratulated on the captain at its helm.

DAVID JESSURUN.—A man whose scientific knowledge and thorough experience in the sugar industry has proven especially valuable to Orange County, and whose successful career should inspire the youth of this and other countries, is David Jessurun, superintendent of the Anaheim Sugar Company. Born in Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, a Holland colony, October 11, 1867, he was reared in the city of Haarlem, Holland, receiving his education in the public and high schools there. After graduating from the high school he entered the Mechanical Engineering school at Amsterdam, Holland, where he was graduated in 1887; he then entered the School of Technology at Brunswick, Germany, and in due time graduated from there as a chemist. Then he did post-graduate work in the sugar school in the same city, perfecting himself in this line, thus laying a firm foundation for his future work in the world. His first experience in the sugar industry was in a sugar factory at Amsterdam, as a sugar chemist. Then to Germany, where for one year he was chief chemist in the sugar factory at Linden, and superintendent of the same factory for the next year.

Arriving in the United States in 1892, Mr. Jessurun was superintendent of the Sinclair Central Sugar Factory at West Baton Rouge, La.; next he was chief chemist of the Henderson Sugar Refinery of New Orleans. Then for three years he was superintendent of the Magnolia Sugar and Railroad Company of Lawrence, La., going from there to Minneapolis, Minn., where he became operating superintendent and built the plant of the Minneapolis Sugar Company. Alma, Mich., was his next location, and there he was operating superintendent and built the plant of the Alma Sugar Company, and his next move was to Wallaceburg, Canada, where he was in a like capacity with the Wallaceburg Sugar Company of that place. He next rebuilt the factory for the National Sugar Manufacturing Company of Sugar City, Colo.

In 1913, Mr. Jessurun was called to Anaheim to take charge of the Anaheim Sugar Company's factory, and in 1917 he remodelled the plant, increasing the capacity from 600 to 1,200 tons of beets daily. The plant is now a model sugar refinery, modern and up-to-date. Mr. Jessurun has invented and installed a number of labor-saving devices, which were first used in the Sugar City, Colo., plant, and have since come into general use in factories throughout the United States. The Anaheim Sugar Company owns four large ranches, comprising approximately 2,900 acres, which are leased to tenants for raising sugar beets. Aside from this the company purchases the product of another 10,000 acres, and they manufacture annually about 10,000 tons of refined sugar; they also manufacture, as a by-product, dried molasses beet pulp for cattle feed. The company also operates the California Fruit Products Company, manufacturers of orange marmalade and jelly.

Mr. Jessurun is also interested in horticulture, and has set out and improved an orange grove on North Street, and has built a residence on North Lemon Street, where he resides with his family. He has also greatly improved the grounds of the sugar factory, planting an orange grove of twenty-two acres, which is in a thriving condition.

The marriage of Mr. Jessurun united him with Mrs. Johanna Van Eek, a native of Haarlem, Holland, and four children have blessed their union: Elizabeth, William, Johanna and Jeanette. William was sergeant in the Quartermaster's Department, Motor Truck Corps, stationed at Jacksonville, Fla., during the World War. Mr. Jessurun was appointed by the general headquarters at Washington, D. C., as chief of Orange County in the American Protective League. He organized Orange County into districts, with each town as a center, and appointed his assistant chiefs in each of eighteen districts. So closely did he follow the work that from the time of his appointment until December 31, 1918, when the League was disbanded, he did not spend one evening with his family. This was all done because of his loyalty to the country of his adoption and without remuneration. But the satisfaction of having done his duty when the country had need of his services, and the fact that Congress afterwards passed an act commending the different chiefs and extending to them a vote of thanks, and that each be mailed a copy of the resolution, made him feel fully repaid for his time and efforts. He served acceptably and impartially as chief of Orange County until the close of the war. Mr. Jessurun was on the board of directors of all the bond drives, as well as all kindred war drives in Orange County.

Believing that protection is the fundamental principle in American politics, Mr. Jessurun has always been a Republican, and has taken an active part in the affairs of that party in the various states in which he has been a resident, though he has never aspired to or wished for public office, his time being entirely taken up with his profession. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church, and fraternally Mr. Jessurun is a Knights Templar and Scottish Rite Mason, and is also a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. Mr. Jessurun also takes much pleasure and pride in his membership in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, as well as the Association of French Chemists. He is a director in the Anaheim National Bank, and his broad vision and keen business experience have proven him a man of worth in the community, and one whose "footprints on the sands of time" are worth emulating.

WILLIAM A. HAZEN.—A young man of estimable qualities, who has not always toiled in the sunshine of life, but whose native ability notwithstanding, or perhaps because of, the shadowy places, has been able to assert itself, is William A. Hazen, now residing on Glen Avenue, Tustin, near where he has an eight-acre ranch on Ritchey Street, devoted to budded walnuts. He has owned the property since 1916, and since that recent date has worked wonders with the comfortable holding.

A native of Des Moines, Iowa, where he was born in October, 1895, Mr. Hazen's father was accidentally killed in a coal mine at Des Moines in 1897. His mother, now Mrs. Frank Long, resides at Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Hazen was reared in the family of Hugh McQueen, a farmer at Quinter, Kans., but he was not received into their hearts and treated like a son and when a mere youth of sixteen was thrust out upon a cold world to shift for himself. His opportunities, therefore, were very limited, but he made the most of every favoring wind and has been able to attain both comfortable affluence and position with influence as a reward for his steady, honest efforts.

In a life devoted thus far for the most part to agricultural pursuits, Mr. Hazen migrated to California in 1908, and located at Tustin, and there with Mr. and Mrs. Will C. Crawford he enjoyed the comforts of a good home. In addition to the Ritchey Street ranch he also owns five acres planted to Valencias on McFadden Street, adjacent to the Crawford ranch. He is an active member of the First Baptist Church of Santa Ana and seeks to lead an exemplary life and has been treasurer of the Men's Club and Sunday School.

ROBERT B. WEITBRECHT.—A well-educated, well-prepared "hustler," whom no one envies the fruits of his wide-awake labors, is Robert B. Weitbrecht, who took up his residence in Orange in the early nineties. He was born at St. Paul, Minn., on August 27, 1885, the son of George F. Weitbrecht, a native of Pittsburgh, Pa., and a graduate of Yellow Springs College, Ohio. He did graduate work at Harvard for a couple of years, and then came to St. Paul, where he founded and was principal of the Mechanic Arts High School, one of the first high schools in the United States to have a department of manual training and mechanical drawing. He came to California on his vacations, for the first time about 1890; and in 1893 he established his family in Orange County, and he himself intended to locate permanently here. However, the school he had founded was so dear to him that each year he would return to it, saying that that year would be the last of his active service; and being prevailed upon to remain as the principal—while he was developing it so remarkably that even Europeans came to inspect and study the results—he finally died in the harness, in February, 1916.

Mrs. Weitbrecht, who was Miss Mary Beals, a native of Providence, R. I., before her marriage, continued to manage the property on Walnut Avenue where Mr. Weitbrecht had started improvements, and in this difficult but highly interesting work, she was assisted by her children, of whom there were three. Susan resides now in San Diego; Robert is the subject of our review; and George is in Santa Ana. Robert B. was reared in St. Paul until 1893, and it was on account of his frail health that the family moved out to California in that year. His health luckily improved at once, and he became strong and hearty, and fit for any kind of work. Mrs. Weitbrecht died on the Orange ranch on April 6, 1918.

From the home ranch, beginning with 1893, Robert went to the local public schools, but at the end of six years, the family returned East to St. Paul. There he studied at the Mechanic Arts high school, and was graduated in 1904 as a civil engineer. He then entered the University of Minnesota and remained until the close of his junior year, when he quit the lecture room to go to Idaho and enter the service of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad in their engineering corps. This was when that railroad company was building its Idaho division, and so he helped to construct the road from South Dakota to Seattle.

At the end of three hard and very fruitful years, Mr. Weitbrecht resigned from his railroad post, and came back to Orange for a visit; but on looking over the old home ranch, he concluded to take up its management, and he has remained here ever since conducting that property. He is engaged in raising Valencia oranges, and since his ranch is under irrigation from the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and also the Aid Water Company, the twenty-six acres at the corner of Handy Street and Walnut Avenue are most productive. He is, naturally, a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association. The ranch, by the way, is owned co-jointly with his sister, Susan, already referred to. Mr. Weitbrecht is also interested, with his brother-in-law, John Haig, in heavy trucking, owning a five-and-a-half-ton Mack truck, capable of carrying fifteen tons, with the aid of a trailer.

In the pleasant town of Alhambra, Mr. Weitbrecht was married to Miss Winifred Haig, a native of England, having been born at Liverpool of Scotch parentage. Mr. and Mrs. Weitbrecht attend the Episcopal Church, and Mr. Weitbrecht is a Mason, affiliated with Orange Lodge No. 293, F. & A. M.

DR. JOHN D. THOMAS.—An aggressive, successful organizer, whose fortunate handling of enterprises has made him exceedingly popular, is Dr. John D. Thomas, the president of the First National Bank of Olive, a native of Philadelphia, where he was born on February 8, 1850. He was the son of Richard W. Thomas, a Methodist Episcopal divine who filled various responsible charges at Philadelphia and elsewhere in the East. He died in the harness of his Christian ministry, being stricken with paralysis while he was delivering his sermon on a Sunday morning in the Fifth Street Methodist Episcopal Church at Philadelphia. He was forty-seven years old, and the father of six children; he was a native of Philadelphia, and the paternal grandfather, David Thomas, was born in Wales, and migrated to Philadelphia, where he became a shoe manufacturer, employing from thirty to forty men. Richard W. Thomas married Elizabeth H. Rouse, a native of New Jersey, who lived to be eighty-three years of age. Our subject, the youngest of his family, is now the only one to survive.

He was seven years old when his father died, and then he went to Allentown, Monmouth County, N. J., to attend the common schools. From his tenth to his fifteenth year, he lived on a farm. His first marriage made him the husband of Mary T. Middleton, of the Society of Friends. Later, he married Mrs. Elsie L. P. Hamuck, nee Passmore, daughter of William Passmore, owner of the excellent and celebrated Passmore ranch. She died in February, 1918.

After attending the Philadelphia Dental College, from which he was duly graduated with honor, Dr. Thomas practiced dentistry in Philadelphia for forty-five years, during which time he filled the position of lecturer upon Nitrous Oxide Anesthesia and Oral Surgery at the University of Pennsylvania. Upon his advent in California, he retired from the dental profession. He resides at the Passmore ranch on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard immediately above Olive, and is now president of the Olive Heights Citrus Association, and is president of the Olive Improvement Association. He is the best kind of a "booster," for his invaluable experience and common-sense views, together with his breadth of vision and contagious sympathies, enable him to make all that he sets in motion roll on to the desired-for goal. In other words, the Doctor "makes it stick."

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF OLIVE.—California may well be proud of the large number of financial institutions of exceptional strength and prosperity contributing vastly to her monumental wealth, but she is equally to be congratulated upon the smaller, yet eminently sound and vigorously progressive banks such as the First National of Olive, which has done so much, and is still doing, to stabilize and develop the commercial life of that part of the great commonwealth in which it is its destiny in particular to operate. With one hundred or more visitors from Orange, Santa Ana, Los Angeles and Anaheim as especial guests, this bank was opened on Saturday afternoon, October 21, 1916, with a formal and fashionable reception, long to be pleasantly remembered by all who had the good fortune to attend.

With its shining mahogany and marble, the new bank presented an attractive and stimulating appearance of which cities much larger and older might have been glad to boast. The visitors, therefore, some of whom were naturally, by long experience, more or less critical, were greatly impressed with the inviting air of the quarters, the convenience and liberality of which promised success.

Not only was the interest of the bank, as was readily to be seen, designed to satisfy an advanced architectural taste, but the convenience of both the operatives and the public was studied in the application of practical and common sense devices; so that in addition to the handsome mahogany and the marble bases, there was a thoroughly up-to-date, spacious vault, containing the manganese steel time-lock safe.

At noon the Bank entertained the stockholders and their wives at a luncheon at the Olive Hall, when some fifty guests were present. A delicious chicken dinner was served by the ladies of the Olive Sewing Circle, amid the most tasteful decorations that could be devised. President J. D. Thomas made the opening address of welcome and discussed community development, while he urged the broadest and utmost cooperation for the advancement in every way of Olive. Cashier K. V. Wolff also spoke with the same cordiality and fervor, emphasizing business cooperation in particular, and by easily understood illustrations, pointed out the various ways in which the business interests of the community are related.

In every respect, the reception and the dinner constituted an unqualified success, and reflected the highest credit upon the management of the new Olive institution, at the same time inspiring confidence in the bank's future. How well that confidence was placed, to what an extent the rapidly-developing First National has realized every anticipation and hope of its backers and friends, may be seen from the attested report of its condition made at the close of business four years later, on February 28, 1920. According to that sworn statement made by Cashier K. V. Wolff and attested by the directors, J. D. Thomas, A. M. Lorenzen and J. D. Spennetta, the bank had, as part of its resources, loans and discounts, including rediscounts, to the amount of $122,793.85; over $23,000 of notes and bills; some $15,000 worth of U. S. Government securities; $2,250 pledged as collateral; over $14,000 in still other bonds and securities; $22,026.63 cash in vault and net amounts due from other national banks, and over $1,100 of earned but uncollected interest, making a total resources of $170,682.72. Among its liabilities are $25,000 of capital stock paid in; $15,000 in outstanding circulating notes; $74,447.11 of individual deposits subject to check; some $12,000 in state, county or other municipal deposits secured by pledge of the bank's own assets; over $9,000 in other certificates of deposits, and $24,371.61 in other time deposits, and $2,000 in bills payable with the Federal Reserve Bank.

The high standing of each of the officers of the First National Bank of Olive, their known personal character, their experience and their ability, and the reasonable conservatism thus far demonstrated in the progressive programs of the institution, give a double assurance to patrons and public alike as to the present healthy state of the bank, and its inevitable promising future—a matter of such moment to progressive and would-be healthy Olive itself, with all its commendable ambitions requiring cash and financial credit. It will be seen, therefore, to what an extent such a sound and sanely developed institution plays in the history of a young town, and what enviable opportunities for good are at the disposal of the men at the guns. Olive is proud of the First National Bank; and the bank looks proudly toward the city of Olive of tomorrow.

KADJA V. WOLFF.—It must be a source of peculiar satisfaction to Kadja V. Wolff, the efficient and popular cashier of the First National Bank of Olive, to look back upon his uninterrupted association with that well developed and substantial institution of finance; for he has served in his present official capacity since the bank first threw open its doors for business. He helped, in fact, to organize the First National Bank, in 1916, when its home was temporarily in the Olive Mercantile building, directly across the street from its present-day location; the first bow was made to the public on the sixteenth day of August of that year; and ever since the public, with encouraging approbation, has been bowing genially in return.

Mr. Wolff was born at Morris, Minn., on September 30, 1884, the only child of Henry G. Wolff, an honored and prosperous merchant in that town, and who still lives there with his devoted wife, who was Miss Inez M. Little before her marriage. From Morris, when Kadja was sixteen years old, the parents moved over to Lead, S. D., and there he finished the course of study in the Lead high school, from which he was graduated with the class of '01. He then entered the employ of the Harrison Telephone Company, starting with the construction gang, and arose to be emergency man; and he was with that company from 1901 to 1903. He next went south to Vosburg, Miss., where he busied himself for a year as hotel clerk, bookkeeper and cashier, but in 1904 he "saw the light" and made straight for California. He pitched his tent for a while in the City of the Angels, and for five years was employed as cashier in the Los Angeles office of Fairbanks, Morse and Company.

On account of failing eyesight, however, he left that employment and came to Orange, where he clerked for a year in a clothing store. There, on October 5, 1910, he was married to Miss Helen A. McCarty of St. Louis, who was sojourning in Southern California with her cousin, Mrs. K. Watson, of Orange. Soon after, he bought a ranch of eight acres, three quarters of a mile west of Olive, and planted the same to Valencias. He continued to ranch for two or three years, when he joined the National Bank of Orange, in 1913, and as teller served that wide-awake establishment until he came up to Olive and organized the First National Bank. He resides, for the time being, on one of his ranches, being also the fortunate owner of a beautifully located farm of twelve or more acres, now coming into bearing, half a mile up the Santa Ana Canyon. Mr. and Mrs. Wolff have two attractive children—Elizabeth or "Bettie," and Eileen. He belongs to the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks, and there is no more popular member.

The building of the First National Bank of Olive was erected by its owner, H. C. Myers of that city, who is also a stockholder in the bank. It is of pressed brick, two stories high and 25x50 feet in size. It has a modern, reinforced concrete vault, which houses the Ely Norris fire and burglar proof safe; and the bank is fully protected by insurance of the Royal Indemnity Company. It has a capital of $25,000, with $5,000 surplus; and in three years has grown from nothing to be a strapping youngster with $225,000 in its pockets. The first officers in the history of this institution were: President, Dr. J. D. Thomas, Olive; vice-president, J. D. Spennetta, Orange; and cashier, K. V. Wolff. Its present officers include the directors: Dr. J. D. Thomas, J. D. Spennetta, D. P. Crawford, H. T. Moennich and A. M. Lorenzen.

As a conservative, yet very progressive manager of finance, and as a public-spirited citizen very successful as chairman of all the Liberty Loan drives, Mr. Wolff has always shown his most marked characteristics: efficiency, with high standards of character; deep insight into economics, of which he is a careful student; philanthropic tendencies, with an especial leaning toward the idealism of "home-making"—all of which have easily made him one of those naturally popular business men who could not fail of success if they would.

CARL W. MARTIN.—The United States, and California in particular, offers men of foreign birth many opportunities they were unable to enjoy in their native land. The Golden State has received her share of these thrifty and enterprising men, who have adapted themselves to their new surroundings and aided in the upbuilding of the horticultural and agricultural interests of the state.

Carl W. Martin, the successful rancher of Garden Grove Boulevard, was born on March 16, 1878, in Rhine Province, Germany, a son of Ludwig and Catherine Martin. At an early age he developed a strong desire to live in the United States that he might embrace the splendid opportunities offered here to ambitious young men. In 1890, he immigrated to America, locating in Orange County the following year. His parents, with their five living children, left Germany for "the land of the free and the home of the brave" in 1893 and settled in Los Angeles County. In 1896 the family settled in Orange County, where both parents died and now the children are all in Los Angeles County except Carl W. Of the twelve children born in Germany, only five are living.

In 1912, Mr. Martin purchased ten acres of unimproved land, his present home, and by hard labor and close attention to details he has succeeded in bringing the land up to a high state of cultivation and it now produces an abundant crop of the best variety of oranges and walnuts. In addition to these crops he has been successfully engaged in raising and selling young orange trees.

Mr. Martin's marriage in 1908 united him with Miss Clara M. Rust, a native of San Francisco, whose parents, Gustaf and Clara Rust, settled in Anaheim in 1866. Fraternally, Mr. Martin is a Mason, being a member of Los Angeles Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M.; he belongs to Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., and the Santa Ana Council.

EUGENE S. SARGENT.—A public-spirited man who believes it to be both the duty and the privilege of the citizen to contribute in every way possible to both the building up and the upbuilding of the community, is Eugene S. Sargent, a native of Watertown, Jefferson County, N. Y., where he was born on Washington's Birthday, 1850. His father, Richard Sargent, was also born there, and his parents, William and Mary Sargent, were English folk who settled in Jefferson County. Richard Sargent was a carriage maker, long at LaFargeville, N. Y., who moved west to Iowa in 1868 and settled at Monticello, Jones County. There he engaged in blacksmithing and carriage building until his death, in 1869. Mrs. Sargent was Phoebe Sage before her marriage, and she also spent her last days in Iowa. They had two children: Eugene, the subject of our interesting sketch, and his sister, Florence E. Sargent, who became the wife of E. C. Renken, a druggist. They lived together in Iowa, until he passed on, and since 1907 she has resided in Orange.

E. E. French

Eugene S. Sargent was educated in the public grammar schools and at a private academy in La Fargeville, N. Y., and in 1868 removed to Iowa, where he learned the trade of the wheelwright under his father. In 1869 he began work as a carpenter, and later clerked for a while in a store. In 1876 he removed to Galena, Cherokee County, Kans., where he set up as a contracting builder; and he also went in for prospecting and mining for lead. He opened several new mines and sold them, and later removed to Carbondale, Osage County, Kans., where as a contractor he did general building. Then he pitched his tent at Onaga, Pottawatomie County, Kans., and continued to build extensively. He resided there from 1879 until 1904, and was instrumental in influencing building laws and customs of the state.

In 1904 he came to California and located at Anaheim, where he bought a ranch devoted to the cultivation of oranges and walnuts. Three years later he sold out and located at Orange, where he purchased a twelve-acre ranch at the corner of Tustin and Walnut streets, and set it out to oranges. He also came to have a ranch of two and a half acres on North Shaffer Avenue; and with his sister, Mrs. Renken, he owned another ranch of five acres at the junction of Cambridge and Palm avenues, which they had set out to oranges and walnuts. All these desirable properties have recently been disposed of.

Mr. Sargent now makes his home with his sister, Mrs. Renken, at 280 North Shaffer Street; and in his leisure hours devotes some attention to politics, marching under the banners of the Republican party. Mrs. Renken is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and also of the P. E. O. chapter in Orange; and she belongs to the Orange Woman's Club.

EUGENE EDMUND FRENCH.—Closely identified with Huntington Beach, Orange County, since 1906, Eugene E. French was one of the most active of its settlers in its upbuilding until in March, 1920, when he removed to Santa Ana, having been appointed under-sheriff of Orange County. A native of Illinois, where he was born July 9, 1863, at Tuscola, Douglas County, a son of Wm. T. and Julia (Edmunds) French, natives of Steuben County, N. Y., and Ireland, respectively, Eugene French was reared in New York. His mother died when he was but an infant, and he was brought up by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Sluman T. French, who resided near Corning, Steuben County, in that state. Here he was educated in the public schools, learning the trade of a carpenter when quite young. He decided to take up railroad-ing, however, and followed this line of work for sixteen years, starting in as a brakeman and working up to the position of conductor. During these years he was with the Chicago and Northwestern, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul and the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern railroads.

Becoming the owner of a ranch in Carroll County, Ark., Mr. French located there in about 1900, and followed farming for some time, later going to Wagner, then in the Indian Territory, where he took up his early trade of carpentering. In 1906 he decided to try his fortune in California, and on his arrival here located at Huntington Beach. This was shortly after the town was started, and Mr. French thus became one of its pioneer residents. He formed a partnership with H. B. Crozier, under the name of Crozier and French, and they became actively engaged in contracting and building. This partnership continued for seven years, Mr. French afterwards continuing in the contracting business alone. He has always been very successful in his business, making a specialty of fine residences, and many of the beautiful homes at Huntington Beach stand as examples of his superior workmanship. He has, indeed, been a big factor in the upbuilding of the city.

Mr. French's interest in his chosen place of residence was not limited to its material advancement, for despite his busy life as a contractor, he has always been keenly interested in all the civic affairs of the city, and has taken an active part in them. For six years he served as a member of the board of trustees of Huntington Beach, and for two years was chairman of the board, this office corresponding to that of mayor. During his term of office many important improvements were made; the beautiful concrete pier was built, a sewer system installed, and many of the streets were paved. Mr. French thus witnessed a marked change in the appearance of the city during his residence there, as when he arrived there was not even a paved street there. He was also enthusiastic in the work of the Huntington Beach Chamber of Commerce, being one of its organizers and serving as its president for four years, until his removal to Santa Ana. In 1919, Mr. French resigned his office as chairman of the board of trustees to become city marshal of Huntington Beach, holding this position until March 12, 1920, when he was appointed under-sheriff of Orange County by Sheriff Calvin E. Jackson. This appointment was a fitting recognition of Mr.

French's capabilities, as there were a number of applicants for the office, and he was selected as the man best fitted for the post.

Mr. French's marriage united him with Miss Estelle D. Bradley, who was a native of Edgar County, Ill., and they are the parents of five children: Homer E. is engaged in concrete highway construction in Northern California; Gladys is the wife of Roy Labodie of Huntington Beach; John B. is associated with his brother in highway construction work; he enlisted for service during the World War, serving for fourteen months in the quartermaster's department in France; he was top sergeant of his company, and at the time the armistice was signed was attending an officers' training school in France; Julia and Margaret are under the paternal roof.

Politically, Mr. French has always been a staunch adherent of Democratic principles and active in the councils of that party. In fraternal affairs he is prominent in the circles of the Odd Fellows, being a member of the Huntington Beach Lodge, No. 183, of which he is a past grand; he has also served as District Deputy Grand Master of District No. 69, California, and he is also a prominent member of the Encampment and Canton at Santa Ana. He was made a Mason in Huntington Beach Lodge No. 380, F. & A. M. Besides, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Since coming to Santa Ana he continues to show his deep interest in civic and business affairs with the same energy he showed at Huntington Beach, and is now a member of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce.

WILLIAM E. CLEMENT.—A successful business man who is also an experienced horticulturist, and who in both undertakings has displayed unmistakable talent as a systematic manager operating according to the latest and most approved methods, is William E. Clement, one of the best city officers Orange has ever had. For fourteen years he has been manager of the Griffith Lumber Company, for ten years he was chief of the fire department, and for eight years he was responsible for the town finances.

A native son very proud of his association from the beginning with the Golden State, Mr. Clement was born in Garden Grove, Orange County on December 5, 1876, the son of Johnson Clement, a native of Missouri, who came with his parents to California, crossing the great plains as a boy, and finally locating in Orange County. He married Miss Cassie Morrell, a native of Texas who also came to California with her parents, and settled at Bolsa, where the Morrells were farmers. The grandfather, Lafayette Morrell, was one of the pioneer founders of that settlement. Johnson Clement was married in what is now Orange County, and with his devoted wife commenced to farm at Garden Grove. Later, they removed to Santa Ana, where Mr. Clement engaged in real estate; and today he is a very successful realty operator at Orange. Mrs. Clement, it is sad to relate, died at Los Angeles in 1914. They had three children—two girls and a boy; and of these William was the oldest.

Brought up in Orange County, William attended the public grammar school and also the Santa Ana high school, and then took a stiff course at the Orange County Business College in Santa Ana, from which he was graduated with honors in 1894. Then for three years he was with the Newport Lumber Company at Riverside, when he returned to Santa Ana, and was employed in the Exchange Bank as a bookkeeper, until it was consolidated with the First National Bank, when he continued in the same responsible capacity.

Having resigned, Mr. Clement accepted his present position, on March 15, 1906, as manager for the Griffith Lumber Company, at Orange, and he opened their yard here, and has been in charge there ever since. The yard is located on North Cypress Street, and there the company carry lumber, mill-work, doors, windows, cement, roofing and wall-board. They also maintain a planing mill, and this alone has proven of great service to the community.

Mr. Clement, while never an office seeker, has responded to the calls of his fellow citizens and has done his full duty as an office holder. In 1910, he was elected the second chief of the fire department of Orange, reelected each year and served until he resigned, on January 1, 1920. During that period, with the loyal cooperation of others, he built up the department so that from the condition with only a hose cart, the city now has a Seagreave combination motor truck with its full equipment. In 1912, he was elected the city treasurer of Orange, and he has been reelected ever since, for terms of two years. In respect to party preferences, Mr. Clement is a Republican; but this party affiliation never operates to prevent him from entering heartily into whatever seems best for the development and prosperity of the community.

Mr. Clement has been twice married. On the first occasion, the ceremony took place at Riverside, and Miss Mabel Russell, a native of California, became his bride. Her health failing, she was taken to the mountains; but she died at Riverside. She left two children, Margaret and Virginia, both of whom are in the Orange Union high school. The second Mrs. Clement, whom he married at Orange, was Miss Nora Miller in maidenhood; she was a native of Kansas, and has become the mother of three children: Lois, Melvin and Clarence. Mr. Clement owns a fine residence in town, and a fine ranch west of the town, which he devotes to the raising of Valencia oranges, on which account he is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association. He belongs to the Orange Lodge of the Odd Fellows, and the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks.

WILLIAM ABPLANALP.—In making mention of those men who have made a success of ranching in Southern California and who, at the same time, have cooperated in all movements that have had for their aim the building up of the state, and Orange County in particular, William Abplanalp of the Anaheim district is to be found worthy in every way. For twenty years he has made his home on the ranch on Lincoln Avenue, west from Anaheim, improved the property from a barley field, and has set out walnut, peach and apricot trees that are now in full bearing, and with the development of water in 1913, and the installation of an irrigating system, bids fair to make of this eighty-acre ranch a veritable show place in the near future. For thirteen years he carried on dry farming, and even in that line of agriculture demonstrated that a success could be made by the man of enterprise and thrift. It is said by many who know that Mr. Abplanalp has gained a financial reward through his own efforts and hard work, assisted in all that he has undertaken by his wife and helpmate, who shares with him the esteem of all who know them.

Mr. Abplanalp was born at Sunman, Ripley County, Ind., August 27, 1864, the son of Jacob and Annie (Stahley) Abplanalp, the former a native of Switzerland and the latter of Indiana. Mrs. Abplanalp had two children, William and Emma, now Mrs. August Michael, both of whom are residents of Orange County, this state. When William was four years old his mother died and his father married again, and by his second marriage was the parent of three children. The father made five trips to California from his Indiana home—the farm, by the way, on which he is still living was improved by his father in 1852, was operated by himself until he turned it over to his son, who still conducts it, and with whom he makes his home when in Indiana. He spent about six years in California at various times and was highly respected by all who came to know him for his kindly manner and charitable deeds.

William was educated in the public schools of his native county, and followed farm work there until 1886. When the "boom" struck California he came West, and ever since that time has been closely identified with Orange County, though it was a part of Los Angeles County when he first located at Orange and worked at any honest employment until he could make a stake, which he did, and then invested in ranch land, believing that such investment was the surest way to wealth, and so it has proven to him.

On May 25, 1895, in Orange County, William Abplanalp and Miss Ruth Goodrich were united in marriage. She was the adopted daughter of Brainerd and Susan (Williamson) Goodrich, and was born in Taylorville, Ill., in 1870. Her mother died when she was a babe and she was taken by Mr. and Mrs. Goodrich and reared in their home as a daughter. Her girlhood was spent at Hartford, Conn., where she attended the public school until she was fourteen, then accompanied her parents to Orange County, Cal., and settled with them at Orange, where Mr. Goodrich was for thirteen years connected with the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company as its secretary, and was widely known throughout the entire county. He died in 1910, leaving two daughters: Mrs. Ruth Abplanalp and Mrs. Alice Sproule. Mrs. Sproule taught school in Orange County for about eighteen years, and is now teaching at Hemet, Riverside County, her home since her marriage. Two children have come to bless the home of Mr. and Mrs. Abplanalp, Wilton B. and Lucy A. The family are members of the Fullerton Baptist Church, and both Mr. and Mrs. Abplanalp belong to the Fraternal Aid Union.

During the World War the family assisted in every way to aid the Allied cause, Mr. Abplanalp spent much of his time in working for the various Liberty Loan drives, the Red Cross and the Salvation Army drives, and bought to the limit of bonds himself, even refraining from making needed improvements on his ranch in order to invest in securities of the government. Mrs. Abplanalp and her daughter worked in the Red Cross and the Junior Red Cross. For more than seven years Mr. Abplanalp has shown his interest in matters of education by serving as a school trustee, and in national politics he is a staunch Republican. Both he and his wife were residents here before there was any Orange County, and they have watched the development of this wonderful county with great interest and have done their share to assist in making it the banner county of this state.

FRED T. VOLBERDING.—A self-made young man who has long ago proven to his fellow-citizens his qualities as a loyal American and an enterprising man of business, intent both on building up his private interests and also in contributing what he can for the general building up of Orange County, is Fred T. Volberding, partner in the Orange Contracting and Milling Company. He was born near Reinbeck, Grundy County, Iowa, on April 5, 1882, and reared on a farm, while he attended the public schools; and when seventeen years old, he commenced to learn the carpenter trade, also working on his father's farm. At twenty-one, he began working out at his trade, and at that time his parents moved into Reinbeck.

In December, 1908, Mr. Volberding came west to California and located in Orange County where he was employed by the Ainsworth Planing Mill, and later he was with the Griffith Planing Mill at Santa Ana. At the same time, he followed contracting and building, returning to the mill when he had completed his job. He built bungalows and other structures, and helped to finish the interior of the St. John's Lutheran Church. In December, 1914, Mr. Volberding became associated with Messrs. Miller and Loescher, and they built a planing mill, and entered actively into contracting and building; and four years after this triple alliance was formed, Mr. Volberding and Mr. Miller bought out Mr. Loescher, and since then they alone have owned the Orange Contracting and Milling Company. They employ ten men, do all their own mill work and custom work, make their own designs, and cater only to the highest class trade.

At Orange, Mr. Volberding was married to Miss Martha Anschutz, a native of Saginaw, Mich., by whom he has had one child, Helen. The family belong to St. John's Lutheran Church, and Mr. Volberding is a member of the Lutheran Men's Club, and interested in all that makes for moral uplift in the community—an interest actively shared by Mrs. Volberding. Orange congratulates itself on such good and highly progressive citizens.

JOHN W. STEELE.—Garden Grove is indeed fortunate to number among its residents so capable a man as John W. Steele, the principal contractor and builder there. A man of ability, force of character and strict integrity, he learned his trade very thoroughly in his native England. As a master workman in his line, that of interior finisher, in point of fineness of work he has few equals in Southern California.

Mr. Steele was born on December 21, 1866, at the little town of Hyde, near Manchester, England, the son of Jabez and Rebecca Esther (Carrington) Steele. The father, who was a master plumber and contractor, died when John W. was only three years of age. He was the ninth child in a family of ten children and the youngest of six brothers. The death of the father made it necessary for the children to become the breadwinners of the family, so when John was but eight years old he went to work in a cotton mill in Hyde, his small wages going to support his mother, and he continued to work in the mills until he was fifteen years old. In the meantime he had secured a common school education and he now began to learn the cabinet maker's trade, serving an apprenticeship of five years. In England at that time the trade of cabinet making included interior finishing and Mr. Steele became an expert in that line, working on the interior woodwork of several of the fine churches and residences at Barrow-in-Furness, Lancashire.

In the meantime Mr. Steele's oldest brother, William Steele, had immigrated to America and was foreman for a large plumbing firm in New York City. On a visit to his family, in the old home place in England he related such glowing tales of the opportunities to be found in America that Mr. Steele was enthused with the idea of seeking his fortune here. Accordingly on June 27, 1887, he sailed from Liverpool on the S. S. Brittanica, landing at Castle Garden nine days later. His brother, meanwhile, had removed to Cleveland, Ohio, so Mr. Steele was thrown upon his own resources. He went to work at West Rutherford, N. J., as a carpenter and builder, also helping do the finishing work on one of the large churches of Passaic, N. J. In the fall of that year he went to Cleveland, Ohio, and remained there for more than a year. Later he went to Salem, Columbiana County, Ohio, and worked at organ building and interior finishing for a period of about nine months, when he returned to Cleveland, remaining there until 1895, working at his trade.

In 1889 Mr. Steele was married in Cleveland, Ohio, to Miss Annie Askin of that place. She was born and reared in Sheffield, England, and came to Cleveland as a young lady in 1885. In April, 1895, Mr. and Mrs. Steele, with their two children, removed to California, and after remaining a few weeks at Los Angeles, they came out to Katella precinct in Orange County and there bought ten acres of land. His brother, William Steele, also purchased a ten-acre tract, but went back to New York, where he passed away four years later. Mr. Steele improved his land, planting it to walnuts and building a residence on it, where he made his home for several years. He still continued, however, in his occupation of contractor and builder, and during this period he became connected with D. M. Donald and Son, leading contractors at Redlands. He removed there with his family and bought three lots on which he erected a cozy residence and made this his home for five years. During this time he had charge of all the interior finish work for all the fine residences in Redlands and vicinity made in the planing mill of Donald and Son.

In 1910 Mr. Steele moved to Garden Grove and built his commodious residence there which has since been the family home. During the ten years he has thoroughly established himself as the foremost contractor and builder of this district, and besides building most of the handsome homes in Garden Grove and the surrounding locality, he has built the two-story brick business block of J. D. Price on Ocean Avenue, the Hardware Store block, owned by A. E. Emerson, the warehouse for the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association, the Vegetable Unions' warehouse and the Lima Bean Growers warehouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Steele are the parents of six children: Edith is the wife of William Abbott, a rancher living near Garden Grove; Reba is Mrs. Elmer Launders and lives at Garden Grove; Clara is engaged with the Pacific Telephone Company at Santa Ana; Grace E. is now Mrs. Wesley Hien and resides on an orange ranch at Olive; Ruth is also employed by the Pacific Telephone Company at Santa Ana; John is a student at the Santa Ana high school. Mrs. Steele is a member of the Methodist Church at Garden Grove. Miss Sarah A. Steele, Mr. Steele's only sister and relative in America, is a resident of Los Angeles, and follows the profession of nursing.

WILLIAM E. CASE.—The proud owner of a fine twenty-acre walnut grove on Euclid Avenue, between Garden Grove and Anaheim, William E. Case is one of the early settlers in this locality, and he devotes his entire time to producing the best of nuts from his grove, having set out the trees with his own hands, as well as having made all the improvements seen on the ranch.

Mr. Case was born at Oaks Corners, Ontario County, New York, on April 10, 1844, and was a lad of twelve years when his parents moved to Defiance County, Ohio, consequently he was privileged to attend school in both states. At the outbreak of the Civil War, then a young man of eighteen, he demonstrated his patriotism by enlisting in the service of his country, in 1862, for a short term, in the Eighty-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry. He was taken prisoner at Harpers Ferry, but was soon paroled, and as soon as his parole expired he again enlisted, this time with the Ninth Ohio Cavalry, Company I, for "three years or for the duration of the war." He participated in many skirmishes and some sharp engagements, was with Sherman on his famous March to the Sea, and at the close of hostilities was honorably discharged at Lexington, N. C., in 1865.

After his discharge he returned to Ohio, where he spent the winter, then went to Chicago, where he was engaged in various lines of activity until 1880, when he removed to Boone County, Nebr., and followed farming until 1890, when he first came to California and spent a year. So pleased was he with conditions as he found them here that he returned to his home in Nebraska, raised two crops from his farm, which he had broken from the original prairie sod, made arrangements to sell out, and in the spring of 1894 again landed in California and settled in Orange County. The ranch he bought was a barley field, and at that time property hereabouts was selling at the high price of from $100 to $150 per acre. At considerable expense he has improved his holdings until he has one of the best walnut groves in his locality, with a fine well which he uses for domestic purposes.

In Chicago, Ill., on November 2, 1870, occurred the marriage of William E. Case with Miss Catherine Spellacy, a native of Ireland. They have had five children, four now living: Mrs. Alice Reynoldson, of Albion, Nebr.; Mrs. Louisa Irene Clark, of Puente, Cal.; John B., deputy state oil inspector, with headquarters at Taft, Cal., and Mrs. Loretta Farris, of Baldwin Park, Cal.

As a man, citizen and friend, no one stands higher in the esteem of all who know him than does Mr. Case. For many years he was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, but is now demitted; he is an esteemed member of Sedgwick Post, No. 17, G. A. R., at Santa Ana, and in political views votes with the Republicans. He makes friends wherever he goes and retains them as well, and though over seventy-six years of age, his years rest lightly upon him, and he is to be found in active management of his productive ranch and wide-awake to anything that tends to benefit his community. In all his operations he has had the active cooperation of his good wife, who has shared his joys and his sorrows for half a century. Now in the evening of a life well-spent they can look back upon the years that have passed with but few regrets, for they have lived by the golden rule as nearly as it has been possible.

DRUCE BROTHERS.—The poultry ranch of Druce Brothers at Stanton is widely known for its production of the finest White Leghorn fowls in Southern California. Their strain of chickens is produced from the best laying hens and finest male birds, which have been carefully selected from a large assortment of White Leghorns. Their selected hens have a record of 280 eggs per season, this being far in excess of the general average and is evident proof of the splendid care that Druce Brothers give to their flock of 2,000 to 3,000 fowls.

The firm of Druce Brothers consists of Sidney H. and Campbell H. Druce, natives of England. Sidney H. Druce, the older brother, was born in London, England, on August 6, 1872, the son of Herbert and Louise (Reeve) Druce. He emigrated to the United States in 1889 and settled in California. For four years he operated a nursery of five acres at Fullerton and for eight years filled the important position of dairy inspector for Los Angeles. He was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Fitz Henry, who passed away in 1912.

Campbell H. Druce was born in London, England, on March 20, 1878, and left his native land in 1903 for America, coming directly to Orange County, where he has continued to reside ever since. In 1915 he was married to Miss Emma Waters, a native of Illinois, and they have been blessed with one daughter, Mary L.

Druce Brothers are members of the Southern California Poultry Producers Association and the Garden Grove Farm Bureau, Sidney Druce having been a director of the former. They have facilities for hatching 5,000 baby chicks and brooders to accommodate 3,500. Their plant consists of four houses with cement floors; one is 120 by 20; another 110 by 20; a smaller one, is 50 by 18 and another 20 by 40 feet. These furnish shelter for 3,000 chickens. The brothers do their own grinding and also raise their green feed. Their ranch is situated in the city of Stanton, where it has been located since 1908 and it is one of the most important enterprises of the community.

HARRY JENTGES.—The enterprising proprietor of the cement pipe works at Garden Grove, Harry Jentges, is a man whose force of character and determination has overcome many obstacles in reaping the success in life that is deservedly his. Born in the grand duchy of Luxemburg, he learned to speak, read and write the French and German languages in addition to the vernacular of his native country. His father, Peter Jentges was a farmer in the old country, owned a twenty-acre farm, a large amount of land for one person to own in Luxemburg. His mother was Mary Ann Engels before her marriage and both parents were born, married, lived and died in Luxemburg.

Harry grew up on his father's farm, on which he worked until he was twenty-five years old; then his mother, who had been a widow eight years, died, and thinking to better his condition by coming to America, where his brother Jack had preceded him, he sailed from Antwerp via England, crossed that country and embarked on the White Star line for the new world, landing at New York City May 25, 1907. He brought $900 with him from the old country, $700 of which was his inheritance from his parents' estate. After stopping at Le Mars, Iowa, for two years, where he was employed as a farm hand, he came to Orange County, Cal., in 1909, and joined his brother Jack at Westminster. He worked for his brother three months, and when the celery season came on loaded celery into box cars for the Celery Growers Association. He worked out eighteen months, then rented the old Trevoli place of sixty acres at Wintersburg, in partnership with C. C. Johnson. They planted eight acres to celery, twenty acres to sugar beets, twenty acres to lima beans, and put the remainder in hay. After the first year their landlord raised the rent, and they moved to Los Alamitos and rented and farmed ninety acres there for three years, putting the entire acreage into sugar beets. Mr. Jentges came to Garden Grove in 1916, and purchased the old Paulson place, two miles north and one mile west of Garden Grove. Here he encountered his first reverse; his well gave out, water for irrigation failed, and he spent $2,000 to deepen the well and get water. Going into debt, he was forced to trade the place for 160 acres at Barstow.

Through this misfortune he figures that he lost $10,000. He then began to work for his brother Jack in the cement business, and in 1918 bought the business from his brother. In time Mr. Jentges paid the last of his debts, paying one hundred cents on the dollar. He does a large business, is prospering, and employs from twelve to twenty men, keeping seven steadily the year around. He takes contracts from the farmers to put in irrigation pipe lines, the cement tiles of which are his own make. In 1918 he laid about four and a half miles of pipe; in 1919 he laid seven miles of pipe and the prospect for 1920 looks as if this year would be the banner year. He is also a general contractor, and builds cement walks, foundations, porches, etc. He has a cement mixer, power for which is provided by a Fairbanks-Morse gasoline engine, moulds and cores, and the necessary appliances for making the various sizes of cement pipe, and owns a G. M. C. two-ton auto truck for hauling the pipes. The trenches are dug by hand labor and his excellent work satisfies his many customers, one job always bringing another. Despite reverses Mr. Jentges has made a success of the chances offered him on the coast, and it is to men of his intelligence, indomitable courage and perseverance that our country is largely indebted for its prosperous condition. Fraternally he is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Westminster. A naturalized citizen, he takes an active interest in the welfare of the country and the community in which he lives.

JOHN B. ZIEGLER.—In the passing of John B. Ziegler on July 17, 1919, Anaheim suffered the loss of one of her most valued citizens—one who was ever ready to give of his time and talents in any worthy undertaking that would aid in the upbuilding of the community. His death brought to a close a life of usefulness, which reflected credit not only upon himself, but one which had done much for the betterment of his fellow-citizens. Born on May 1, 1863, in Alsace-Lorraine, when the tricolor of France still waved over that little country, his boyhood days were spent there. After the Franco-Prussian War, when this territory had unwillingly passed into the hands of the Germans, Mr. Ziegler received his education in the German schools established there. However, when he had reached the age of seventeen he decided to seek his fortune in the New World, and the year 1880 found him in New York. Here he entered the restaurant business in Maiden Lane, a thoroughfare famed throughout the country for its association with the jewelry trade. Later Mr. Ziegler established himself in the same line of business at Paterson, N. J., the family making their home at Jersey City Heights, where they lived for a number of years.

In 1905 Mr. Ziegler came to Anaheim, hoping to improve the health of his son John, but this was, unfortunately, unavailing, for the son later died. Soon after locating in Anaheim he purchased the southeast corner of West Center and Lemon streets, on which the Commercial Hotel stood. After conducting it for a number of years, he tore down the building in 1915 and on the same site erected the beautiful new Valencia Hotel, the finest hotel in the county, which opened its doors to the public on April 1, 1916. This hotel, which has for its slogan, "The only first-class hotel between Los Angeles and San Diego," was erected at a cost of $75,000. It is a modern four-story brick structure, which would be a credit to any city, and has been a great factor in the rapid growth of Anaheim in the past few years, and was the impetus that started the town a rolling, and since then others have built and patterned after it. Mr. Ziegler was also the first to build a residence in the Deutch tract, and now it is already well built up. He was a prominent member of the Chamber of Commerce, and was popular in the lodge of the Eagles, while politically he was an ardent Republican.

Always far-sighted and progressive, Mr. Ziegler was the first man to build when Center Street was widened, and then others followed his lead. Keenly alive to the importance of improving and beautifying the city, especially in the business district, he was the leader in every civic movement that had this for its aim; he was the first man to advocate the use of the cluster light system on the east side of Center Street, in the business district. The beautiful hotel he erected will always stand as a monument to his memory.

While living in New York City, Mr. Ziegler was married to Mary Murer, who was born in Paris, France, where she was reared and educated, and they became the parents of four children: Lucy, now the wife of Frank M. Anderson of Placentia; John, who is deceased; Elsie and Mabel.

GLEN E. HUNTINGTON.—A mile and an eighth east of Garden Grove is located the orange ranch owned by Glen E. Huntington, an energetic young man of superior business qualifications. Although a native of Owosso, Mich., born February 19, 1890, his life has been spent in California whither his parents, Frank and Cora (Faylor) Huntington, brought him at the age of nine months, settling at Redlands. His parents who were natives of Illinois, were married in Michigan. When Glen E. was seven years old his mother was called to the Great Beyond, and the father, who still resides at Redlands, married again and Glen's boyhood days were clouded by the unduly harsh treatment of a stepmother.

Relief from oppression came in the friendship of Lewis Dezendorf, now deceased, who befriended the lad and saw that he had the advantages of schooling. He attended the Redlands schools in his boyhood days and later Mr. Dezendorf paid his way to Woodbury's Business College at Los Angeles, afterwards helping him secure a position, and as a bank clerk he held important positions with the Citizens National Bank and the American Trust and Savings Bank at Los Angeles, and also with the Hollywood National Bank at Hollywood. The warm friendship of Lewis Dezendorf for Mr. Huntington was evidenced by the will he made bequeathing his young friend twenty acres of land, the ranch upon which Mr. Huntington settled when he came to Garden Grove in 1912. He is a member of the Garden Grove Chamber of Commerce and the Farm Center, and was appointed deputy constable under Constable Clark of Garden Grove. He keeps in touch with all movements for the betterment of Garden Grove and Orange County in general and is one of the leading and progressive citizens among the younger men. He is planting and making substantial improvements upon his property and will soon have a valuable Valencia orange grove.

Mr. Huntington's marriage occurred at Los Angeles in 1911, and united him with Miss Louise Nusser, who was born at Lankershim, and two years of whose school days were spent in Garden Grove. They are the parents of two children, Glen E. Jr., and Lewis Sydney. His wife is a social favorite and shares his popularity and success.

FRITZ RUHMANN.—In the passing away of Fritz Ruhmann, on September 3, 1917, Anaheim lost one of her earliest settlers, as he had been associated with this district since 1875. The youth of Mr. Ruhmann was spent in his native town of Etzehoe, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, where he was born February 5, 1838, his father, Henry, a gardener by occupation, being a native of the same place. His mother was Louise Noritz before her marriage. In Germany the family name was spelled Ruehmann, but the "e" was omitted by Mr. Ruhmann on coming to America.

When scarcely twenty years old, Mr. Ruhmann left his home and went to sea on a sailing vessel which plied between English and German ports. In 1860 he again shipped on a sailing vessel, the Lorenzo, bound for San Francisco by way of Cape Horn, and at the expiration of this journey set sail, this time on an American craft which rounded the Horn and finally reached New York City. After that he became interested in the coasting trade along the West Indies and was in Galveston, Texas, from 1866 to 1868. Shortly after this he returned to Germany for a visit with his relatives, remaining there for more than a year. On his return to America he came to Hoboken, N. J., and while there he was shanghaied aboard a sailing vessel bound for San Francisco. For a time he was employed in Los Angeles, and during the latter part of the year 1875 he located at Anaheim, and with Max Nebelung was associated with the Anaheim Lighter Company as a freight clerk, helping to load and unload steamers that came to Anaheim Landing on the river. Following that Mr. Ruhmann worked on a bee ranch for some time and in 1877 he opened up a liquor store on North Los Angeles Street and called it "Germania Halle," and operated it until 1906, when he sold out to J. D. Heitshusen, and retired from active business.

Mr. Ruhmann was very active in the upbuilding of Anaheim. He owned the block on North Los Angeles Street from Chartres to Cypress Street and on this property he built a row of stores which Mrs. Ruhmann still owns. He also built three brick store buildings on North Los Angeles Street between Center and Chartres, but these were afterwards sold. Generous and charitable, he gave freely to the Lutheran and Catholic Churches, and gave much help to the poor and needy.

In 1897, Mr. Ruhmann was married to Mrs. Helena Boege, a native of Brooklyn, N. Y., whose maiden name was Krein. Mrs. Ruhmann is a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Messer) Krein, who passed away in New York. Helena Krein had an uncle living in Los Angeles, so she came to California in October, 1874, and there she married Henry Boege and they located in Anaheim in 1876. Mr. Boege was a painter by trade and did the painting on the homes and business blocks in the early days and was a prominent man until his death in 1888. Mrs. Ruhmann, who is an active member of the Catholic Church and of the Altar Society, relates many interesting incidents of the pioneer days of Anaheim, when the streets were lighted with lamps and there were no pavements nor sidewalks. Since her husband's death she continues to reside at the old home surrounded by her many friends, and is looking after the affairs left her by her husband, and being a good manager she is giving a good account of her stewardship.

FRANK E. LAUNDERS.—As pioneers of the Southland, Frank E. Launders and his wife have lived at Garden Grove since 1893. Their ten-acre ranch lies a quarter of a mile south of Garden Grove, and its well-kept acreage, devoted for the most part to the culture of lima beans, grown between the rows of their orange trees, bespeaks the ability and energy of its owner.

Mr. Launders was born at Fond du Lac, Wis., April 15, 1864, and is the son of Samuel Launders, a carpenter and builder by trade, and Maria (Cobb) Launders, a niece of Silas Cobb, the Chicago pioneer and millionaire street railway man. Mr. Launders' grandfather Cobb, was a pioneer of Wisconsin, and the courageous spirit that is the heritage of the sturdy pioneer is manifest in Mr. Launders. As a child he accompanied his parents when they removed to Sauk County, Wis., and thence to Mitchell County, Iowa, where the father farmed and where young Frank attended the common schools, grew to young manhood, and from Mitchell County went to Des-plaines, Cook County, Ill.

On December 6, 1885, he was married at Norwood, Ill., to Miss Lena Blass of Niles, Ill., where they lived until coming to Garden Grove in 1893. In 1892, her father had purchased twenty acres on which they lived until they sold the west ten acres in 1909. Mrs. Launders acquired the property from her father upon his death. Mr. and Mrs. Launders are the parents of nine children who are living. Two of their children died in infancy. Raymond is married and has four daughters and follows the former trade of his father, a lather, and lives on a five-acre ranch south of Garden Grove; Clarence is single, lives at home and is a lather by trade; Elmer, a carpenter and builder, is married and lives at Garden Grove; Myrtle is the wife of George Hobbs, a carpenter and builder who resides at Santa Maria, they have two children; Mildred married Robert McDonald, a machinist, and they live at Garden Grove, they have one son; Maimie is the wife of Chris Kortner, and they live at Santa Maria, Cal., and have one daughter; Mabel is at home and is attending the Orange County Business College, at Santa Ana. Mina and Marjorie, students in the grammar school, are at home. In 1915 Mr. Launders built an attractive bungalow on his ranch, and there the family have since made their home. Politically he is an adherent of the principles advocated in the platform of the Republican party. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Santa Ana, and he and his wife are members of the Fraternal Aid Union. The family are highly respected in the community in which they live.

ROBERT F. HAZARD.—A native son both of California and Orange County, Robert F. Hazard of Westminster precinct belongs to the third generation of the Hazard family in this locality, his grandparents, Robert S. and Betsy Ann Hazard, having been pioneer settlers of Westminster, a sketch of the latter, who still resides on the old home place, being given elsewhere in this work. Both born in Erieville, N. Y., the grandparents became pioneer settlers of Blackhawk County, Iowa, going there in 1860, remaining there until 1881, when they removed to Westminster, Cal.

Robert F. Hazard is the son of the late Frank Hazard, a prominent farmer who owned 120 acres of land near Westminster, and who was born in Blackhawk County, Iowa, coming here with his parents in 1881. He was married to Miss Alice Marden of Westminster precinct, who passed away in 1900, leaving three children: Harry is a rancher and resides near Lancaster; Robert F, the subject of this review, who was born September 30, 1885; and Luella, who married Gifford Giles and resides at Santa Ana; she was reared by her grandmother, Mrs. Betsy Ann Hazard, her mother having passed away when she was but two weeks old. Frank Hazard died January 22, 1916, at the age of fifty-seven years.

Beginning ranching on his own account when but a young man, Mr. Hazard has prospered in everything he has undertaken. Ten years ago he purchased the first forty acres of his ranch, which is attractively located on the Santa Ana-Huntington Beach Boulevard west of Bolsa. He has added to his original holdings until he now has 112 acres of choice land, which he devotes to sugar beets and alfalfa. Recently he has built a commodious bungalow and a large barn, with well, pumping plant and tank house, the improvements in all costing nearly $10,000. In addition to his own holdings he farms the forty-acre home place of his grandmother, Mrs. Betsy Ann Hazard.

Mr. Hazard's marriage, which occurred in 1904, united him with Miss Mabel Deakins of Westminster, and they are the parents of three interesting children, all boys: Roland, Clyde and Kenneth. A hard and efficient worker, Mr. Hazard is a very energetic young man, never doing things by halves. A capable manager, he has unusual executive ability, and his generous, liberal disposition has won for him a host of friends. Mrs. Hazard is in every way an excellent helpmeet and shares her husband's popularity. Politically, Mr. Hazard is an adherent of the principles of the Republican party, and gives it his loyal support.

CURTIS HENRY HICKMAN.—That specialization in any line will bring success, when accompanied by intelligence and persistence, is clearly shown in the experience of C. H. Hickman, who has for the past seven years devoted his ranch in the Bolsa district to the production of sweet potatoes, and has achieved splendid results. Mr. Hickman was born in Orange County, December 19, 1885, on the farm adjoining his own. His parents were James H. and Georgia Ann (Caraway) Hickman, the father being a native of Virginia, where he was born in 1845, while Mrs. Hickman was born in Linn County, Iowa, March 14, 1854. Her parents, Joseph and Delila (Scott) Caraway, born in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, were among the early settlers of Linn County, Iowa. James H. Hickman passed away in 1903 at the age of fifty-eight years and Mrs. Hickman still resides on the old Hickman place, which adjoins the farm of her son, C. H. Hickman.

James H. Hickman was an early settler of O'Brien County, Iowa, where he took up a homestead and farmed it for some time after his marriage, which occurred in 1871. About 1878, the family crossed the plains to California, and settled in the Bolsa district and Mrs. Hickman is now one of the oldest settlers of that locality. Mr. and Mrs. James H. Hickman were the parents of six children: Robert died at the age of nineteen months; Irene Belle is the wife of Frank B. Ireland, a rancher at Murrietta; Carrie May is the wife of John Newell, a rancher at Stockton; Jessie is the wife of Eugene De Vaul, a field boss for the Anaheim Sugar Co.; Curtis Henry, of this review; and Stella, wife of Archie Morgan, a rancher at Wildomar. Henry Hickman, as he is popularly known, grew up on the home farm, attending the schools of the neighborhood, at the same time learning the practical side of agriculture. In February, 1919, he purchased his present home ranch of ten acres, lying three miles west of Santa Ana on the Santa Ana-Huntington Beach Boulevard, and here he has developed a profitable and well-kept property. In addition to his own land he farms his mother's place of ten acres, the land adjoining his, and both tracts he devotes to the production of sweet potatoes, and which yield him attractive returns.

In 1909, Mr. Hickman was married to Miss Alice Galbraith, the daughter of Nelson L. and Helena (Yeakel) Galbraith. One of a family of seven children, Mrs. Hickman came to Santa Ana with her parents from Louisburg, Kans., when but a year old. Mr. and Mrs. Galbraith reside in Santa Ana, where he is a carpenter and builder. Mr. and Mrs. Hickman have three children: Helene Marguerite, Georgia Blossom and Walter Henry.

ADOLPH DITTMER.—A very successful business man whose valuable experience, coupled with broad views, enabled him as chairman of the board of trustees of Orange to cast a weighty influence in favor of improvements, and so to help the growing town to make young giant strides in the direction of permanent progress, is Adolph Dittmer, the popular proprietor of Dittmer's Mission Pharmacy. He came to Orange a decade and a half ago, an advent equally lucky for himself and the community.

He was born in Chicago in 1872, and three years later removed to Fort Dodge, Iowa, where he was educated in the grammar schools. When school was over, he entered the office of the Fort Dodge Messenger and, beginning as printer's devil, worked up as a printer in the job department.

Arrived at the decisive age of seventeen, he began as an apprentice in a drug store in Fort Dodge and later completed the study in the drug store owned and conducted by Senator Oleson. In due time he became a registered pharmacist. It was in 1905 that he came west to California and landed at Orange. Here he started Dittmer's Mission Pharmacy, in a building especially erected for him at 131 South Glassell Street; and when the opportunity was afforded, in 1909, to secure the corner of South Glassell and Plaza Square, he immediately made the move to the better location. Since that time he has conducted a general drug business there.

He makes a specialty of putting up prescriptions, in which responsible work he is assisted by his son, who is a graduate in pharmacy as well as a licentiate pharmacist; and their conscientious application to what is more and more regarded as of extreme importance, particularly with the advance of science and the introduction of new and powerful drugs, is fully appreciated by the patronizing public. He is a member of the State Pharmaceutical Association, and also of the Los Angeles Retail Druggists' Association.

While at Fort Dodge, Mr. Dittmer was married to Miss Louise Gunther, a native of that place, by whom he has had four sons, three of whom are still living. Adolph is a graduate of the pharmaceutical department of the University of Southern California, and Arthur and Harold are both attending school. Mr. Dittmer is a member of St. John's Lutheran Church, and is president of the Lutheran Men's Club of Orange.

For six years he served the city of Orange as a trustee, and for four years was chairman of the board, presiding during the period when the town put in paved streets and curbs, and the sewer was started, the sewer farm was purchased, and new water mains were added to the public works. This was a crucial time for the city, and only those who passed through the days and months of responsibility, when much opposition had to be overcome, and a good deal of unpleasant responsibility assumed by individual citizens for the public, know how valuable was the service to contemporaries and to posterity rendered by the doughty city fathers. Intensely interested in civic and business affairs he is a charter member and ex-secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Orange.

Mr. Dittmer has always advocated investments in local realty, and as an evidence of the faith that is in him, has come to own a fine orange and lemon orchard situated east of Olive in the Peralta Hill district.

HORATIO C. DAWES.—One of Santa Ana's best known citizens, now living retired after an active business life of many years, is Horatio C. Dawes, who has been a resident of that city since 1891. Mr. Dawes is a Canadian by birth, having been born near London, Ontario, on August 27, 1863, the son of Thomas and Sarah Louise (Allen) Dawes. Thomas Dawes was a physician, prominent in his profession, and he passed away in 1884. Mrs. Dawes, who is still enjoying life at the age of eighty-two, lives at Santa Ana; she is a sister of H. A. Allen of Tustin and Prescott Allen of Santa Ana.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dawes had a family of six children—three boys and three girls, and Horatio was next to the eldest of the family. Enjoying an excellent education in the schools of his native place, he began in early manhood to make a place for himself in the world. He became interested in the general merchandise business, learning it in all its details, and for thirteen years he was engaged in this line of work, part of the time in London and later in Montreal, being associated with the well known firm of W. E. Sanford, clothing manufacturers, in the retail branches of their business. For some time having had a desire to come to California he left his native home in 1891, made the long trip across the continent and located in Santa Ana, where he at once entered into the commercial life of the city. For six years he was with the Huff Dry Goods Company and later with Huff Brothers Clothing Store for a period of two years. With a partner he then engaged in the clothing business for himself under the firm name of Dawes and Huffman, and after five years he bought out his partner's interest and continued as sole proprietor until 1909, when he closed out his business. During this time he was also interested in the Stewart-Dawes Shoe Company, of Los Angeles.

In 1910 Mr. Dawes, accompanied by his family made an extended tour of Europe, visiting the principal capitals of the old world and the noted places of interest, a trip that was filled with many interesting and pleasurable recollections. During his years of business Mr. Dawes was very successful, and while now not actively engaged in commercial pursuits his time is largely occupied in looking after his interests principally in Southern California. For a number of years he has been a director of the First National Bank of Santa Ana. He also gives generously of his time to civic affairs, now serving on the Board of Education.

Mr. Dawes' marriage which occurred on June 6, 1899, united him with Miss Florence A. Donahue, a native of Afton, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Dawes are the parents of three children: Roberta attends Pomona College at Claremont; Truman is a student in the Santa Ana high school; and Charles. The family attend the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana. In politics Mr. Dawes is an adherent of the Republican party, and in his fraternal affiliations he is a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks and the Independent Order of Foresters.

JOHN M. WARD.—The twenty-acre ranch owned by John M. Ward located southwest of Garden Grove, is the fourth ranch he has owned and improved in Orange County. Mr. Ward was born February 14, 1880, at Glen Elder, Mitchell County, Kans. His parents, Elanson and Cordelia Ward, now deceased, were natives of New York and Iowa, respectively; they located in Kansas in 1870, and the father became the owner of two farms, one comprising 160 acres and the other 120 acres. John M. is the youngest child in a family of seven children and his experiences in early life were such as commonly fall to the lot of lads reared on a farm. He was educated in the common schools and graduated from the high school at Glen Elder, Kans., with the class of 1897.

His marriage, which occurred in his native state in 1900, united him with Miss Winnifred Weethee, a native of Ohio but reared in Kansas, and they are the parents of four children. Neva and Wilma were born in Kansas, and Elmer and Ruth are natives of the Golden State. Mr. Ward owned an eighty-acre Kansas farm, and town property at Iola and Logan, Kans., and also 160 acres in Red Willow County, Nebr. He was taken ill and came to California for his health, with the intention of remaining one year, but his health improving, California's charms were sufficient to cause him to settle at Orange, where he became the owner of a two and a half-acre place, which he improved and lived upon eighteen months, when he came to Garden Grove in 1912. In addition to ranching Mr. Ward follows the occupation of spraying, being a duly licensed sprayer, in which he is the pioneer at Garden Grove. He has a portable spraying outfit, driven by a gasoline engine, and gives the business his personal attention, employing two men besides himself, and covering a territory within a radius of six miles from Garden Grove. He has sprayed as high as 2,000 acres in a single year. He owns an acre of land in Garden Grove just north of the grammar school on which he raises nursery stock. He has 1,000 Valencia orange trees and 1,500 walnut trees; also has seedlings which were budded in 1920.

He has set his home place to Valencia oranges and further improved the ranch with a good dwelling house and suitable outbuildings for his needs and hopes to convert it into one of the finest places west of Garden Grove. He is a member of the Garden Grove Orange Growers Association, and he and his wife are active members of the Mennonite Church, and consistent and earnest Prohibitionists. A man of good physique, strong and muscular, he is not afraid of hard work, and is possessed of excellent judgment and business acumen, successfully accomplishing all tasks he undertakes. His efforts are ever toward the advancement of all movements calculated to enhance the general welfare of Garden Grove, and his fellow-townsmen esteem him highly for his many excellent qualities.

WILL C. CRAWFORD.—One of the foremost men of his day in the business life of Orange County was the late Will C. Crawford, who established the first wholesale grocery store in Santa Ana, and started the First National Bank in Tustin, as well as improving lands to citrus orchards. He was very liberal and enterprising, and few have accomplished more in the short space of time than he did. He was born near Burlington, Iowa, in 1862, the son and eighth child of W. D. and Margaret (Chapman) Crawford, who were born in Iowa and England, respectively, although the father was of Scotch descent.

Will C. Crawford received a good education in the public schools of Iowa. He was married at Middletown, Iowa, in 1884, to Miss Effie Lindley, born in Green County, Pa., a daughter of Alvah and Rachael (Van Syoc) Lindley, natives of that state. They removed from the Keystone State to Iowa in 1865, locating near Middletown, where they followed husbandry until their death. After his marriage Will C. Crawford followed farming in Iowa, until he came to California in 1898, selecting Orange County as his permanent home, and here he purchased the ranch on Glen Avenue, which was improved to a walnut and orange grove, where his widow still resides. He purchased land near Olive and there improved a fifty-acre orchard to Valencia oranges. He also purchased forty acres on the Newport Road and Santa Fe Railroad at the foot of Glen Avenue, which was devoted to general farming. However, this was not the limit of Mr. Crawford's capabilities, for he was a live business man and saw a great future for Santa Ana and Orange County, so he conceived the idea of starting the first wholesale grocery store in Santa Ana, and incorporated the Santa Ana Wholesale Grocery Company, of which he was president and manager. He selected the site on East First Street and the Santa Fe Railroad and built a large two-story brick building with basement, the largest store building in Santa Ana. He continued actively as president and manager until his death. He also organized and was the president of the First National Bank of Tustin, a position he filled acceptably, having the entire confidence of the people, putting it on a paying basis, a task more easily accomplished by him, for he was a man of tact and rare business acumen and wide influence.

While attending the Baptist Association, held at Hemet, as a delegate, he died November 18, 1912, having been sick only three days, mourned by all who knew him. In his death Santa Ana lost one of her most enterprising and public-spirited citizens, whose place never can be filled. Mr. Crawford was intensely interested in mission work, and particularly in home missions. In his will he left a bequest of $25,000 to build and equip a chapel car for use on railroads, so constructed that a minister or evangelist and his wife could live in the car, the other part being equipped as a chapel with seating capacity for 125, and so could be moved by rail from state to state. Mrs. Crawford, following in the footsteps of her husband's desires, carried out his ambition, and has endowed the chapel car with a fund, the interest of which is sufficient to pay the salary of the minister or evangelist, as well as his expenses. She has also endowed a chair of Ethical, Biblical and Missionary Instruction at the University of Redlands. It is known as the Will C. and Effie Crawford chair of Ethical, Biblical and Missionary Instruction.

Mrs. Crawford continues to reside at the family home on Glen Avenue, but has sold the other ranches and made the endowments stated above. She still holds her interest in the First National Bank of Tustin, as well as in the wholesale grocery business, its corporation name having been changed to Smart and Final Company. Cultured and refined, she is a very liberal and benevolent woman, and is a devout and active member of the First Baptist Church, as well as its missionary and women's societies. Mr. Crawford was a worthy and ardent member of the First Baptist Church of Santa Ana, the president of its board of trustees and a most valued member, being very active at the time of his death in the movement for raising the funds to pay for the building of the new church, so he was naturally mourned by a large circle when, in the prime of life, he passed to the beyond.

DAVID E. JESSEE.—An industrious, prosperous rancher and a citizen of high ideals, who has been blessed with a worthy helpmate and a family of capable children, is David Jessee, who owned two ranches, one place of twenty-nine and a half acres being near the New Hope schoolhouse, while the other ranch, which consists of seventeen and a half acres lies east of Talbert where they now live. A native of Virginia, Mr. Jessee was born in Scott County, October 23, 1857. His parents were Archibald and Mary Ann (Purcell) Jessee, the father having been a farmer all his life, and although both were native Virginians, they remained loyal to the Union during the Civil War. One of a family of nine children, David Jessee's earliest recollections are of the Rebel soldiers foraging and skirmishing near his home, taking their corn, hay and horses for their troops. He attended subscription schools in the neighborhood and while still a lad went to live with his grandfather, David Jessee, for two years, running a grist mill and helping his grandfather on the farm.

In 1877, he went to Kansas, settling in the northwest part of the state, in Smith County. He remained there for five years, farming and raising stock, and then went back to Virginia to visit his old home. He came back to Kansas the next year, and the year following, the young lady who was to become his wife, whom he had met during his visit at home, Miss Maggie E. Godsey, came out to Smith County and their marriage occurred there on October 27, 1884. Mrs. Jessee was also a native of Virginia, as were her parents, Samuel and Sarah E. (Morgan) Godsey. She was born and reared in the same neighborhood as Mr. Jessee and received her education in the public schools there.

Mr. Jessee continued to farm in Smith County, Kans., for eleven years after his marriage, selling out there in 1895 and coming to California, locating in Orange County. His father, Archibald Jessee, had come out to California the year before and settled in the Bolsa precinct, where he lived until 1912, passing away at the age of eighty-two years. In 1900 they purchased a place in the New Hope district which was then a salt grass pasture. At first they put down a small two-inch well, later a seven-inch well and a pumping plant with a ten-horsepower engine, which furnished from forty to seventy inches of water, an abundance for the ranch. Mr. Jessee has also put in 1200 feet of cement pipe for irrigation, built a residence, barns and made many other improvements. This ranch was sold on June 17, 1920. On their other ranch, which he also improved in the Talbert district, there is a seven-inch flowing well, and Mr. Jessee has also installed a pumping plant there for use in exceedingly dry seasons. He raises grain, alfalfa, sugar beets and pimentos on his holdings, and has been very successful in growing the latter. They also own property at Manhattan Beach.

Mr. and Mrs. Jessee are the parents of four children: Charles Palmer resides in Santa Ana and is in the transfer business there; Lizzie Ellen is the wife of W. O. Ater, a cotton and alfalfa grower at Blythe, she is the mother of three sons living and a daughter deceased; William is a plumber at Santa Ana; Earl Randolph is a sophomore at the Santa Ana high school. Mrs. Jessee's mother, now the widow of Thomas Fowler, makes her home with them and is now past seventy-six years of age and blind. Public spirited and progressive, Mr. Jessee has for years taken an active interest in advancing the educational and material interests of his district, and in this he has been ably seconded by his wife, a woman of great force of character who has proved herself in every way a faithful helpmate.

WILLIAM LEHNHARDT.—Although newcomers to Bolsa precinct, the family of William Lehnhardt have already made for themselves a very definite place in the community, for they are indeed an acquisition to the moral, intellectual and industrial life of the neighborhood. A native of Michigan, Mr. Lehnhardt was born at Montague, Muskegon County, August 21, 1873. His parents were William and Mary (Hendricks) Lehnhardt, both born and married in Germany, coming to America about 1865, and settling in Michigan. The father died in Muskegon, and when William was twelve years of age he came with his mother and the rest of the family to Chicago. He received his education in the public schools of Muskegon and Chicago and then learned the trade of cornice maker and sheet metal worker. During the stringent times succeeding the World's Fair at Chicago in 1893, he found it very difficult to get steady work there, so in 1897 he went to South Dakota and began working in a hardware store at Tyndall, Bon Homme County, and while working there he also learned the tinsmith's trade. For many years he ran the hardware business of John Weisser, his father-in-law, afterwards becoming the proprietor of a store of his own, which he conducted successfully for a number of years.

In 1907 he sold out his hardware business at Tyndall and came to California, settling at Long Beach, where he remained until 1908, when he bought twenty acres of land in the Bolsa district and here now owns forty-five acres of well improved land, ten acres being set to Valencia oranges. He has made many improvements here, putting in a well and pumping plant. He has gone in quite extensively for truck gardening and has been very successful in growing pimento and chili peppers, cabbage, sweet and Irish potatoes. He also rents ten acres in addition, which he farms.

On April 25, 1900, Mr. Lehnhardt was married to Miss Elizabeth Weisser of Tyndall, S. D., a daughter of John and Eva Weisser, the father being born in Odessa, Russia. Mrs. Lehnhardt, received an excellent education, being a graduate of the Tyndall high school and after that a student for two years at the University of South Dakota, at Vermillion. Mr. and Mrs. John Weisser came to California in 1907, later settling in the Bolsa district, Mr. Weisser passing away in May, 1916, at the age of seventy-one years. Mrs. Eva Weisser is the owner of a ten-acre ranch just across the road from the Lehnhardt home, and here she resides, having recently erected a fine bungalow on the place. Mr. and Mrs. Lehnhardt are the parents of nine children: Robert, a graduate of the Santa Ana high school and now attends the University of Redlands; Walter and Laura attend the Santa Ana high school; Emma, Elizabeth and Margaret are in the New Hope grammar school; and John W., Carl Edward and Ruth Anna are at home. Keenly alive to the importance of giving the best possible educational advantages to the coming generation, Mr. Lehnhardt is serving as school trustee of the New Hope district. Politically he inclines to the principles of the Republican party. The family are members of the Baptist Church at Garden Grove. Intelligent, industrious and progressive, the whole family are indeed a welcome addition to the community. The excellent education received by Mrs. Lehnhardt is made manifest in all the details of their home life, and she is a model wife and mother. Of a jovial disposition, Mr. Lehnhardt makes friends wherever he goes and he is always ready to give of his time and energy to any good cause.

JAMES A. MORRIS.—A late-comer to California and to Huntington Beach who has amply demonstrated his experience and ability as both an agriculturist in general and a horticulturist, and also as a successful business man, is James A. Morris, the resident and managing superintendent of the great Huntington Beach Company ranch of 1,500 acres, one and a half miles north of the beach city. His father was Thomas J. Morris, a native of Northumberland County, Pa., and a descendant of Robert Morris, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and also Superintendent of Finance for the Colonies during the Revolutionary War. He came to Ohio in 1854, and was sheriff of Athens County. He was also an extensive coal operator, and owner of valuable coal lands. He married Elizabeth Hooper, a native of Ohio, and a near relation to the late Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, the distinguished naval commander. She is still living at New Madison, Darke County, Ohio, well and hearty at the age of seventy-eight. Thomas J. Morris died in 1891, at the age of sixty-seven, the father of seven children, five of whom are now living.

James A. Morris, the second child, was born at Athens, Ohio, on September 29, 1869, and in that city completed the course of the Athens high school. Later he was graduated from the Agricultural Department of the Ohio State University, as a member of the Class of '92, having previously completed the law course in 1889—a choice of study undertaken, perhaps, because his maternal grandfather was the well-known Judge Hooper of Athens County, Ohio. He was admitted, as a matter of fact, to the Bar when he was nineteen years of age, and was the youngest member of his class that graduated. He still owns his grandfather's law library, which is large and valuable, and although well qualified and equipped as a lawyer, yet the practice of law did not appeal to him.

At the age of twenty-one, therefore, he took the management of his father's farm of 1,800 acres, in Hocking County, Ohio, and successfully conducted it, as long as his father continued to own it, or until about 1888. His father was a man of the most progressive type, by the way, and installed the first electric drills and machinery for mining coal ever used in the state of Ohio—as a result of which the miners struck. The elder Morris owned and operated the Morris Coal Company, serving as its president and general manager, and as a coal operator often was in conference with John J. Mitchell, at that time president of the miners' union. He died in 1891, but as early as 1888 disposed of his farming lands, and when he sold his coal-mining interests, they were taken over by the Morgan Syndicate. He was always a staunch Republican and active in Ohio politics, and counted as his personal friends President Wm. McKinley, Governor J. B. Foraker, Mark Hanna and other natives of the Buckeye State who were also of national repute.

James A. Morris came west to California in 1910, and settled at Los Angeles, where he soon established himself so successfully that he now owns two ranches in the San Fernando Valley, and one in the San Joaquin Valley. One of those in the San Fernando Valley is the celebrated "Toluca Rancho," recently disposed of for

J. Morris

$80,000, consisting of some 200 acres of the finest fruit land in the state. Mr. Morris also owns a ranch of forty acres, which is situated not far from Sunset Beach, between that place and Huntington Beach. In September, 1917, he had the great misfortune to be accidentally poisoned from arsenic of lead, and for a whole year he was sick in consequence.

In 1919 Mr. Morris became managing superintendent of the Huntington Beach Company's ranch, being a practical as well as a professional and theoretical agriculturist; and it is hardly necessary to say that he is making good. This ranch contains 1,500 acres, planted mainly to lima beans and barley. Some 250 pigs and hogs are raised here annually. The farm is really one of the show-places of Orange County, and of Huntington Beach in particular; there are beautiful drives, lined with Monterey cypress trees, and the yards are ample and symmetrically laid out.

Mr. Morris has twice been married. At Athens, Ohio, he was joined in wedlock to Miss Ida M. Whitmore, who died suddenly from appendicitis, leaving a son, Herrold Morris, now twenty-one years of age, assisting his father on the Huntington Beach Company's ranch. In July, 1909, Mr. Morris was married a second time, his bride being Miss Margaret Starr of Lexington, Ky. Two children have blessed this union—Helen and James.

JOHN WINTERS.—A veteran nurseryman, John Winters is thoroughly conversant with the conditions under which citrus trees thrive to best advantage, and has raised all the trees on his ten-acre orange orchard from seed and budded the trees to Valencias, the first plantings of which, made eight years ago, are now coming nicely into bearing. He has lived on his ranch near Garden Grove for seventeen years.

A native of England, Mr. Winters was born twelve miles east of the city of York, famed for its historic cathedral. His father, Charles, and his mother, Sarah (Buttle) Winters, lived and died in England, the father dying when John was nineteen years old. The mother died in 1917 at the age of ninety-two. They were the parents of eleven children, of whom John is the third child in order of birth, and the only member of the family in California. He has one sister living in Massachusetts, and two in England. Reared in his native county, the cream of England's farming section, he learned to read, write and figure before he reached the age of ten, after which his opportunities for schooling ceased. At the age of eleven he began working out for his board and twenty-five dollars the first year, buying his clothing out of this meagre wage. Notwithstanding the lack of his early schooling Mr. Winters is one of Garden Grove's well-informed men, his education having been acquired in the school of experience and actual business life, supplemented by reading and studying the best standard books, journals, magazines and other publications, and a daily reading of the Bible, the greatest of all books. He lived in England until he was twenty-one years of age, then bade farewell to old associations and friends and sailed for America from Liverpool on the Cunard liner, Cuba, April 13, 1872. After a pleasant voyage of ten and a half days he landed at old Castle Garden, New York City, April 23, 1872, his destination being Malvern, Iowa, where he arrived the last week in April. The first season in his new home he worked on the farm of his uncle, John Buttle.

Mr. Winters was married in Iowa on February 21, 1880, to Miss Alice Newman, a native of Page County, Iowa, and daughter of Nelson and Malinda J. (Fraday) Newman, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively. Mr. Newman died in Iowa in 1892; his wife is living, and makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Winters. By a singular coincidence Mr. and Mrs. Winters were married just twenty years to a day after Mr. and Mrs. Newman were married, and the same minister officiated at both weddings. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Winters farmed one year in Iowa, then went to Nebraska, where they purchased a sixty-eight-acre farm in Saunders County, upon which they lived two years, then bought another place nearby and stayed there three years. Disposing of the Nebraska property they went to Phillips County, Kans., and purchased a homestead of 160 acres six miles southeast of Long Island, in that state. Of their eight children three were born in Nebraska and five were born in Kansas. They are: Charles N., a machinist and rancher residing at Golita, Santa Barbara County; Jennie, the wife of Purl Talbott, a rancher near Modesto, Stanislaus County; Nellie, the wife of A. L. Griffin, a carpenter and builder and auto salesman residing at Garden Grove; John Stanley, a machinist on the Conway ranch in Glenn County; Fred B., of Lowell, Ariz., resigned a position with a jeweler and optician in Los Angeles and enlisted in the Coast Artillery, then took the radio course, went to France and was there but a few weeks before the armistice was signed. He reached home, after an honorable discharge, in April, 1919, resumed his former position and later went to Lowell, Ariz., where he had worked some years earlier as a jeweler and optician; Mattie, the wife of Fred M. Shumway, a rancher at Creston, San Luis Obispo County, Cal.; Frank W., an orange and lemon grower at Garden Grove; and Carrie, who died in California, aged five. There are thirteen grandchildren.

Mr. Winters farmed in Kansas from 1886 to 1900, then Dr. A. Bennie, of Long Island, Kans., who had come to California, induced him to come to Santa Ana in 1900, where he worked at various occupations, finally removing in 1902 to Garden Grove. At that time there was only one store, the postoffice building, about a dozen houses, and three churches in the place. In 1903 Mr. Winters purchased his present ten acres, which was planted to grain, and a grove of eucalyptus trees. He was engaged in the nursery business at Garden Grove, and grew and budded Valencia oranges, lemons, etc., disposing of his nursery in 1919. Mr. Winters helped organize the Garden Grove Citrus Association, the officers of which are: Milo B. Allen, president; E. M. Dozier, secretary, treasurer and manager; J. O. Arkley, vice-president; Fred Andres, James Henry, Claude Crosby and John Winters, directors. Mr. Winters' early experience developed the qualities of independence and self-reliance, and his career has been marked by energy, thrift, frugality and economy. His ranch is well equipped with the appurtenances necessary to operate it successfully, and he has a comfortable house, and necessary outbuildings, a well for domestic and irrigation purposes, pumped by means of a centrifugal pump and a five-horsepower gasoline engine. His home is presided over by his estimable helpmate, who is an ideal housewife, hospitable, motherly and kind, a noble-minded woman who makes all who come within her domain welcome. Always a booster for Orange County, Mr. Winters' interest in Garden Grove is demonstrated in no unmistakable manner. No worthy project for its betterment is ever presented that does not receive his sanction and assistance. His citizenship papers were taken out while he lived in Kansas, and politically he is a Socialist.

ED. MANNING.—A live, far-seeing and, therefore, an experienced and successful business man, who is also president of the board of trustees of Huntington Beach is Ed. Manning, an Illinois boy who is now the oldest business man in the town. He was born near Lanark, Carroll County, of the Prairie State, the son of Albert Manning, also a native of Illinois, who was a Carroll County farmer. He died when the lad was five years old. Mrs. Manning was Miss Huldah C. Lindsley before her marriage; she was born in Ohio, and is now living at Azusa, Cal. Grandfather Ashley Manning was a Carroll County pioneer, widely esteemed for those sterling qualities characteristic of the typical American. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Manning had five boys and two girls, and all the family, with the exception of the father and a son, Baden Manning, a plasterer at Milledgeville, Carroll County, Ill., are now in California.

The fourth in the order of birth, Ed. Manning first saw the light of day on March 20, 1872, and grew up on a farm until he was eighteen years of age. Then he made a trip to Minnesota and Dakota, and returned to Illinois. On attaining his twentieth year, he came farther west to California, in the spring of 1892, and for a year worked at farming at Azusa, Los Angeles County.

When of age, Mr. Manning went to Los Angeles and for three years served as an apprentice to the plumber's trade. Returning to Azusa, he worked at his trade in the San Gabriel Valley, especially at Azusa and Covina and vicinities, for eight years.

In 1904 Mr. Manning went to Huntington Beach, a year ahead of the "boom," and having the foresight to invest, he now owns some very good beach property. In his business, which has become of much importance to the growing community, he employs from three to nine men, according to the season.

While in the San Gabriel Valley, Mr. Manning was married to Miss Carrie V. Preston, with whom he lives in a neat bungalow residence at the corner of Geneva and Delaware avenues. The happy couple have three children—Pauline and Mildred, who are in the high school, and Nona, who is in the grammar school.

An active Republican and an honored member of the Republican County Central Committee from Huntington Beach, Mr. Manning has participated considerably in public affairs, serving his community as a good patriot in the most nonpartisan fashion. He was elected a member of the first board of trustees of Huntington Beach, in 1909, and served for three years, and lately he has been appointed to fill a vacancy in that body. During his early service, he was president of the board for two years, a position to which he has again been selected. He stands for good and better roads, and has always been in favor of the various state and county bond issues for improving highways. He helped secure the municipal pier at a cost of $70,000, and favors a municipal pavilion and bath house. He voted for the issue of $500,000 worth of Newport Harbor bonds, and in many other ways has sought to express on all occasions his public-spiritedness. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow and is past grand in Huntington Beach Lodge No. 183, and is a member of the California Master Plumbers' Association.

STEVE PAGE.—Three and one-half miles west and north from Garden Grove is situated the twenty-five-acre dairy ranch of Steve Page, well known in and about the thriving little town. He was born in Dalmatia, Jugo-Slavia, on February 26, 1879, the son of the late Louis Page, who was born in 1844, in the same section of country, and who came first to the land of sunshine and gold in the year 1860, a lad of only sixteen. Upon his arrival in San Francisco he went to work in a fruit store, then as he became more familiar with the English language and the ways of the country, became a prospector and miner. He remained in America about twelve years, during which time he became a naturalized citizen, then returned to Dalmatia to marry the girl of his choice, Miss Annie Andriyasevich. He was then twenty-eight years old. After their marriage they settled down and were in Dalmatia several years, and there their first four children were born. Mr. Page left his family at their home and once more came to California and mined for three years in Amador County and was preparing to have his family join him when he had provided a home. He was taken with yellow fever and returned to Dalmatia in 1884. After he had recovered he became manager of copper mines at Zagrab in Croatia, and he died there in 1916, at the age of seventy-three. He was a fine linguist, and had command of six languages. His widow survives and is living in her native country at the age of seventy-one. They had thirteen children, nine still living.

Steve Page is the fourth child of those living, and besides himself, there are four brothers living in Southern California. He attended the schools of his native land and in 1905 left home and arrived in Butte, Mont., where he was employed in the copper mines, having obtained some knowledge of that business under his father. Eleven months later he arrived in Los Angeles and worked as a car repairer for the Southern Pacific Railway until 1911.

In 1909, in Los Angeles, Mr. Page was united in marriage with Miss Vice Kurtela, daughter of Nick and Katie Kurtela, old neighbors of the Page family in Dalmatia, where she was born. She came to America with her brother, Martin Kurtela, now of San Francisco, and three days after her arrival in Los Angeles was married. Of this union there are five children: Louis, Nicholas, Mike, Steve, Jr., and Katrina. In 1911 Mr. and Mrs. Page moved to Gardena, where they ran a dairy for three years. In 1914, Mr. Page bought his present place, which he has greatly improved by putting in over 2,000 feet of cement irrigating pipe, built two silos and stocked the ranch with cattle for his dairy. He had to level the ground before he could put in alfalfa and corn and other crops, but he has kept busily at work and the fine condition of the place is seen today by the crops produced. In all his work he has had the cooperation of his wife and they have won a large circle of friends in their new home. They are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Page is a believer in progressive methods and works for all good movements that will build up Orange County. He has had his "ups and downs" but is optimistic and knows every cloud has its silver lining. To such men and women of foreign birth the State of California owes a debt of gratitude for they show their loyalty in the good work they do towards making it a better place in which to live.

ROYAL B. RICHEY.—One of Garden Grove's most energetic business men is Royal B. Richey, who conducts a prosperous transfer business there, using two good auto trucks, and who also is very busy as field agent for the Curtiss Corporation of Long Beach, organizing the planting and delivering of pimentos in this district for that company. A native of Nebraska, Mr. Richey was born at McCook, Red Willow County, that state, on March 21, 1879, and is the son of David N. and Sarah J. (Campbell) Richey. The father, who was born at Marshalltown, Iowa, died when Royal was nineteen years of age, and Mrs. Richey is now a resident of Hollywood. There were seven children in the Richey family and five are living: Mrs. Ed Davis of Hollywood; Royal B. of this review; Mrs. J. R. Hook resides at Los Angeles; Ross C. lives at Los Angeles; and Mrs. Jack Hall of Hollywood.

Mr. Richey spent his early years at Wymore, Nebr., receiving his education in the public schools there, and when quite young he began railroad work. He worked as switchman, brakeman and engine foreman for the B. & M. Railroad, living at Wymore, Nebr., later becoming yardmaster at Beatrice for the same system. In 1904 he came to California, and settled at San Bernardino, working for the Santa Fe as switchman and yard foreman. He was soon transferred to Winslow, Ariz., where he held a like position. In 1907 he was returned to San Bernardino and he continued there with the Santa Fe until 1910, when he moved onto a walnut ranch of ten acres in the Anaheim district, remaining there for three years. In 1913 he came to Garden Grove and started in the transfer business. He built a residence in Garden Grove where he and his family lived until he sold it, and then purchased five acres south of the Pacific Electric depot. He paid $1,100 an acre for the raw land in 1914, and after setting it out to Valencia oranges the next year and improving it with buildings costing $3,500, he disposed of it in December, 1919, for $13,500, showing the rise in land values in this vicinity. He now owns thirteen acres a quarter of a mile north of Garden Grove, where the family make their home, and here he set out ten acres to Valencia oranges. He has spent considerable money improving this place, especially for irrigation. He has laid much cement pipe and has installed a K. T. valve for each tree row, thus reducing the hard labor connected with the irrigation process to a minimum.

As field agent of the Curtiss Corporation, Mr. Richey makes contracts with the farmers for the growing of pimento peppers, and for the season of 1920 he has 650 acres under contract in the vicinity of Garden Grove and Westminster, this having proved a very profitable industry for the farmers. These peppers are canned by the Curtiss Company and a large part of their product is taken over by the big cheese makers for flavoring pimento cheese. It is during the canning season that Mr. Richey is particularly busy and his two trucks then run night and day, with three shifts of men to each truck. He has established the following central or receiving stations—two in the Bolsa district; one at Garden Grove; one at Stanton; one at Artesia; one at Norwalk; one at Westminster and one east of Artesia. From these stations he rushes the peppers to the large canning factory of the Curtis Corporation at Long Beach, hauling from ten to fifteen tons at each load. His auto trucks are also used for general hauling and transfer business after the press of the canning season is over. In his many years as a railroad man, Mr. Richey learned the value of accuracy and strict business methods and this he makes use of to good advantage in his growing transfer business.

Mr. Richey's marriage occurred at Winslow, Ariz., January 2, 1906, when he was united with Miss Isa May Rice, a native of Blue Springs, Nebr., the daughter of J. W. and Phoebe Katherine (Pike) Rice, who are now residents of Los Angeles; one brother, Charles Rice, is also a resident of Los Angeles, being engaged in the hay and grain business there. J. W. Rice was the first hardware merchant at Blue Springs, Nebr., and there Mrs. Richey received her early education in the grammar schools, later attending the high school at Wymore, Nebr. She came to California in 1901 to attend an art school at San Francisco and was a student there for a year. Her step-grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. G. G. Godfrey were among the early settlers of Tustin. Mr. and Mrs. Richey are the parents of two children—Benjamin and Katheryn.

Garden Grove has no more optimistic and untiring booster than Mr. Richey. He was the moving spirit in reorganizing the Business Men's Association and changing it to the present Chamber of Commerce and he is now second vice-president of that organization. He has also served as a trustee on the Board of Education since 1917. Fraternally, he is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and the local treasurer of that lodge.

OREL C. HARE.—One of Westminster's rising young business men who has by his enterprise and force of character made a leading place for himself in the commercial life of the community is Orel C. Hare, proprietor of the up-to-date garage and machine shop there. A native of Kansas, Mr. Hare was born at LaCygne, Linn County, in that state on June 30, 1886. He is the only child of Euphrates A. and Amy (Copeland) Hare, the father being the popular blacksmith at Westminster and the joint owner with O. C. Hare of a whole block in the center of the town, the father's blacksmith shop occupying the east part of the block, while the machine shop, garage and office occupies the remaining two-thirds of the block.

Euphrates A. Hare was born in Ross County, Ohio, March 22, 1851, his parents being Pleasant G. and Susanna (Moomaw) Hare; her father came from Europe (probably from Holland) and settled in Pennsylvania in the early days, later moving to Ohio, where he followed the trade of a tanner. While yet a young man Euphrates A. Hare moved to Linn County, Kans., right near the Missouri-Kansas state line, and at Mulberry, Mo., he served an apprenticeship in the blacksmith's trade, working there for nearly five years. After his marriage in 1883 to Miss Amy Copeland he continued in the blacksmith business, and at the same time became the owner and proprietor of several saw mills, operating three different mills at various times. In 1891, he removed to Blaine, Wash., and conducted a bicycle shop and also a shop where he manufactured tools and implements for the fish canning industry. In 1905 he moved with his family to California, remaining at Los Angeles until 1908, when he came to Westminster where he has operated his large, well equipped blacksmith shop ever since, and where he may be found every day actively and busily engaged at his trade, and although he has nearly reached his three score years and ten he is efficient, strong and capable and enjoys perfect health. Mr. Hare is a Mason, belonging to the lodge at Huntington Beach. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows, but retains his membership in the lodge at Blaine, Wash., where he formerly resided. In political matters he has always been a consistent Democrat.

From his father Orel C. Hare learned the blacksmith trade when he was but a young man. His early boyhood days were spent at Blaine, Wash., and he received a good, public school education. When the family came to Westminster he soon began to branch out for himself in the automobile business. He has the Ford service station for this vicinity and has a thoroughly equipped machine shop, where he is prepared to repair all makes of cars, having in his employ several capable machinists besides himself, at all times. He also does repair and mechanical work for tractors, trucks, pumps and engines, all of which requires the equipment and expertness found only in first-class machine shops.

Mr. Hare's marriage on August 6, 1912, united him with Miss Marie Larter, a native daughter of California, whose father is R. E. Larter, a prominent financier and capitalist of Westminster, a review of whose life is given elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Hare are the parents of two promising children: Orel Edwin and Mary Louise. Like his father, Orel C. Hare is a member of the Masonic Lodge at Huntington Beach and also votes the Democratic ticket.

JOHN H. McCARTY.—How much of the satisfaction felt by the San Juan Capistrano public with the splendid service of the Santa Fe Railroad is due to the ability and affability of the company's agent at this point, only those who have had personal and continued dealings with the courteous and reliable John H. McCarty, the representative of an excellent old Scottish-American family, will fully realize. He is unusually well-posted, a hard worker, and a most faithful employee, and is very naturally highly respected at San Juan, where he has lived and served as station agent for the past twenty years. He owns both a ranch and some living-house property, and has, therefore, some reward for his years of strenuous, prosy application to daily duty.

He was born at Dexter, Meigs County, Ohio, on August 29, 1856, not far from old Fort Meigs, on the Western Reserve, the son of Jonas and Sarah (Jordan) McCarty. Jonas McCarty was mechanically inclined, and was a worker in wood, iron, brass and steel. The McCarty family hailed originally from Scotland, and Grandfather George McCarty was born in Greenbrier County, Va. As a planter, he left his farm to become a soldier in the War of 1812; and having been honorably discharged, he was duly pensioned. Later, he moved from Virginia to the vicinity of old Fort Meigs on "the Trail," before there were any regularly traveled roadways from the Old Dominion to the Buckeye State, and he took shelter under the eaves of Fort Meigs. He was thus a pioneer in all verity, and contributed at real personal sacrifice something for the welfare of posterity to come after him. Settling on land near Fort Meigs, he became prominent both as a progressive agriculturist and as a politician with statesmanlike ideas and ideals. Mr. and Mrs. Jonas McCarty reared a family of ten children—four boys and six girls, and among these John was the seventh in the order of birth. John H. McCarty has only one living brother, Miles I. McCarty, who conducts a drug store at Fallbrook, California; he has a sister in Nebraska, one in Wisconsin, one in West Virginia, and two in Ohio. Growing up in Meigs County on his father's farm, he so busied himself in his father's workshop and sawmill that he became a sawyer, and for eight years ran a portable sawmill for his father. He worked alternately in the mill, the shop and on the farm, saying, laughingly, that when he did so he was only keeping up a habit he had formed when he was three years old!

After attending the common schools of his district, he went to the Wilkesville Academy, four miles from his home, to supplement his rudimentary studies, and soon thereafter was married, on June 12, 1881, at Salem, Ohio, to Miss Addie F. Edmundson of that state. Then he learned telegraphy at the Valentin School of Telegraphy at Janesville, Wis., and he began his railway career by working for the Santa Fe Railway as station agent at Wichita, Sedgwick County, Kans. At the end of a year, in 1882, he was taken ill with the typhoid fever and nearly died, as a result of which he went back to his old home in Ohio to recuperate. On his recovery, he went to work for the Ohio Central Railroad, and for a year held the position of station agent at Carpenter, Ohio; and then, for twelve years, he had the same responsibility at Albany, Ohio.

Owing to Mrs. McCarty's impaired health, Mr. McCarty came out to California in 1895, and was first located at National City, San Diego County, as agent for the Santa Fe Railroad, and at the dawn of the present century he was transferred to San Juan Capistrano, to his own satisfaction and that of those who could foresee in him just the kind of a person of experience and temperament needed at this historic and much-visited town. And, having made more than good, he has been here ever since. He is, of course, a member of the Order of Railway Telegraphers.

Four children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. McCarty. The eldest of the family is Earl E. McCarty, trainmaster for the Santa Fe on the run from Needles to Barstow.

Dale is in the automobile business, and is traveling agent for a firm in Texas. Fay has become the wife of LeRoy R. Cook, and Marie A., the youngest of the three children born in Ohio, is the wife of Dr. Charles Swanson, the veterinary and rancher living in the Coachella Valley.

Mr. McCarty is a Mason, belonging to a lodge at Athens, Ohio, and is also a member of the Odd Fellows' Lodge at Albany in that state, where he was its first noble grand. He is also a member of Capistrano Camp, W. O. W. Mr. and Mrs. McCarty are members of and very active in the Community Presbyterian Church at San Juan Capistrano, for which the congregation will soon have a fine edifice. He is a Democrat in matters of national politics, but otherwise votes for the best man and the most appealing principles.

CHARLES E. GUPTILL.—One of Garden Grove's highly respected citizens is Charles E. Guptill, who came to this locality in 1912, bringing with him his family and considerable means from South Dakota. Mr. Guptill is a native of Rockton, Winnebago County, Ill., born September 22, 1852, of good old New England lineage. His father, John B. Guptill, was a native of Maine, and his grandfather, Amos Guptill married Miss Hannah Bickford in the old Pine Tree State, and migrated to Winnebago County, Ill., in pioneer days before the building of the railway. John B. was a young man when the family came to Illinois from Maine, and he married Miss Emily Warren at Rockton, Ill., who was born and reared in Ogle County, in that state.

Charles E. Guptill was six years old when his father moved to Shirland, Winnebago County, Ill., and is the eldest of a family of two boys and two girls. Velona is the wife of Benjamin D. Goldy, and resides in Florida; Seymour is a rancher at Palo Verde, Cal., and Lilly died at the age of sixteen; the father attained the age of sixty before his demise. Charles E. grew up on his father's farm at Shirland, and acquired his education in the district school. At Newark, Rock County, Wis., he was united in marriage with Miss Aurila Jane Hoyt, a native of Rock County, the daughter of Otto Hoyt, one of that county's pioneer farmers. After his marriage Mr. Guptill continued farming on the Hoyt farm in Rock County, Wis., until 1888, when he went to South Dakota, then a territory, and settled at Canton, Lincoln County, where he improved a 120-acre farm, and continued to reside there until 1901. He then removed to Springfield, Bon Homme County, S. D., and purchased 480 acres of land, which he improved and became a prosperous and successful stockman. In 1913 he came to California and purchased sixty acres of land in the Garden Grove precinct; this he has since divided up among some of his children, retaining the home place of ten acres.

Mr. and Mrs. Guptill are the parents of six children: Pearl, the wife of Thomas J. Kane, a rancher at Alamitos; John O.; Charles H., a rancher in the Palo Verde Valley; Mary, who is single and at home; and Benjamin A., who operates ten acres three miles west and a half a mile north of Garden Grove, which was given him by his father in 1918. He was born in Canton, S. D., July 28, 1900, and reared in Springfield, that state. Coming to California with the family in 1912, he became a student at the Alamitos school, and still resides at home with his father. The youngest son, Thomas, died at the age of ten. Mr. Guptill has built a comfortable country home of the bungalow type, with several attractive features and thoroughly modern. He is regarded as one of the substantial, and upright men who are maintaining the stability and dignity of Orange County, where he and his estimable family are highly regarded. Mrs. Guptill is hospitable and charitable to a fault, a Christian woman who has many friends in the community in which their lot is cast. In politics Mr. Guptill is independent in his views.

CYRUS B. PULVER.—One of the substantial men of his district who in his day worked untiringly for the betterment of conditions in Orange County, and who, as the result of his foresight, integrity and industry, builded far better than he knew, was the late Cyrus B. Pulver, a native of Pine Plains, Dutchess County, N. Y., where he was born April 18, 1835, the son of Nicholas and Margaret (Righter) Pulver, both descended from old York State stock.

When twenty-one years of age, Cyrus B. Pulver moved to Champaign County, Ill., and there improved a farm from the prairie. In 1869 he went to Tuscumbia, Ala., where he remained until 1872, and then located in Coffey County, Kans.; in 1876 he moved to Wichita, Sedgwick County, the same state, and there on April 13, 1881, he was married to Miss Isabel S. Hatch, who was born in Jacksonville, Fla., the daughter of Chauncey and Eliza (Huntington) Hatch. The father was born in Craftsbury, Vt., in 1799, and the mother in Greensboro, Vt., in 1808. Chauncey Hatch removed to Florida in 1838, intending to engage in orange culture, and purchased seventy acres of land near Mandarin, and began setting out oranges. But when the Seminole Indian War broke out and massacres occurring they were obliged to leave everything and fled to Jacksonville, where Mrs. Hatch taught school and kept a hotel; later the family moved to Key West and there the parents passed away. Mrs. Pulver, the youngest of their five children, and the only one now living, received her education in the private schools of Key West. After spending several years in the North and then awhile in St. Louis she came to Wichita, Kans., in 1878, on a visit, and it was there she met Mr. Pulver, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage, and soon afterward they came to California.

Mr. Pulver located first at Newport, where he remained for a time, but in 1884 he removed to the property upon which his widow now resides. This is a ranch of nine acres which was brought to a high state of cultivation during Mr. Pulver's life time, and is now a valuable estate. Mr. Pulver for many years devoted himself to citrus culture, and was looked upon as an authority upon many disputed points.

He passed away in January, 1919, mourned by his family and friends; he had been for many years a faithful and highly honored member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and was also a worthy member of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana. Mrs. Pulver worthily represents her pioneer ancestry, and the good old town of Santa Ana which, in its time, has welcomed so many pioneers. Like her husband, she is a member of the First Presbyterian Church and is also a staunch Republican and member of Santiago Orange Growers Association and the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association.

ROBERT J. THOMPSON.—A highly-progressive rancher of the type that always profits from experience, and so enjoys today according to the labor of yesterday, and while building for tomorrow, is Robert J. Thompson of Orange Avenue, Santa Ana, favorably known through his successful land dealings, in which he has always operated in the fairest manner. He was born at Romney, Hampshire County, Va. (now West Virginia), on the south branch of the Potomac River, on March 2, 1847, the son of Robert Thompson, a farmer, who married Zulemma Taylor, and was sent to the private schools of that locality, as there were then no public schools there. In 1865, when he was eighteen years old, he moved near Pawpaw, Lee County, Ill., where the elder Thompson had already purchased Government land, but did not join his son until 1868. He finished his schooling in the Prairie State, and when he put aside his books, he engaged in farming at Pawpaw.

In Lee County, on March 15, 1870, Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Evelyn L. Flagg, a native of Vermont and a daughter of Lucius and Elmyra (Chittenden) Flagg, and the great-granddaughter of Thomas Chittenden, the first governor of Vermont, and a grandniece of Martin Chittenden, who was governor of Vermont in 1813 and 1814, and had attained the rank of major-general of militia at only the age of thirty-three. Her parents moved to Pawpaw, Lee County, Ill., when she was three years old, and she was educated there, finishing her schooling at Pawpaw Academy. She taught school for six years in Lee County, prior to her marriage, and was thus able to assist in directing the course of education in that part of the fast-developing Middle West.

Having added by purchase to some land that he inherited, Mr. Thompson ran a farm of 310 acres, until he sold some eighty acres, after which he still continued to be an extensive stock feeder. He came out to California in 1900, at the very beginning of this century, and once at Santa Ana, and familiar with the superior advantages of the country, he disposed of his Illinois farm for good. Seven days later he purchased a home at Santa Ana, at 303 Orange Avenue, but he sold that in the fall of 1901 and the next spring erected the home at 402 Orange Avenue, in which he has since resided.

Mr. Thompson has a half-interest in 515 acres in Kings County which is leased for grazing. In 1912 with three others he purchased 308 acres west of Orange and the Dawn Land Company was incorporated with Mr. Thompson as president and Harry W. Lewis as secretary. Here they sunk two wells and installed pumping plants, sold seventy-two acres for the site of the present Orange County Farm and Hospital, and forty acres to others. The balance they divided between themselves and disincorporated the company. Mr. Thompson had forty-seven acres, and of this he set twenty acres to oranges and twenty to walnuts and has since sold his orange grove and now owns twenty-seven acres of budded walnuts. Thus he has taken an important part in the development of the county. He belongs to the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association and his land is irrigated by a private pumping plant owned by a concern incorporated as the Dawn Water Company. It has two wells, one with a capacity of 150 inches and the other of sixty inches, while a third, designed as a check emergency well, has been recently finished, but not yet tested.

Mrs. Thompson, who passed away on March 3, 1904, was the mother of five children: Guy A., a graduate of the University of Illinois, later of Harvard College and still later a graduate of the University of Chicago with a Ph.D. degree, was professor of English literature in the University of Maine for the last eighteen years and now professor of English literature at Occidental College; George P., is a builder at Anaheim; Nora B., married Seth F. Van Patten of Los Angeles; Blanche E., is the wife of Walter Vandermast, the clothier, of Santa Ana; Edward H., the fourth in the order of birth died in infancy.

On March 27, 1907, Mr. Thompson married Miss Ida May Garrett, a native of Iowa, who came to California in 1903. She was born at Brighton, Washington County, and was the daughter of James W. and Mary C. Garrett, who brought her to the Pacific Coast. Her father lives retired in Santa Ana, but the mother passed to her eternal reward on September 1, 1918. Mrs. Thompson had received a high school training at Victor, Iowa, and is a bright, companionable lady. Mr. Thompson is well read and this, coupled with a retentive memory and an intellectual alertness, makes him an interesting conversationalist. A Democrat in matters of national political import, he served on the board of city trustees of Santa Ana from 1907 to 1911. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, having served for many years as a trustee, and is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He was one of the freeholders that framed the charter for Santa Ana, but at the election it was not ratified by the people.

ORVIS U. HULL.—A representative and successful citizen of Orange County who has become one of the most enthusiastic "boosters" of this section of the state, is Orvis U. Hull, dealer in real estate, with offices in Orange, and a citrus grower in the immediate vicinity. Mr. Hull was born in Boonesboro, Boone County, Iowa, in 1855, a son of Philip and Sophronia (Holcomb) Hull, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively, who became residents in Boone County, Iowa, as early as 1850, before any railroads had been projected into that state. This worthy couple had nine children, eight of whom are still living and all residents of California, as is Mrs. Hull, now in her eighty-sixth year, hale and hearty and in the possession of all her faculties. Mr. Hull died in Iowa, having lived to see Boone County grow into a modern farming community.

Orvis U. Hull is the only member of the family living in Orange County, whither he came in 1909, having disposed of most of his holdings at that time to locate here. His boyhood and young manhood were spent in Iowa, attending the common schools of his locality and growing up on the farm of his father at Boonesboro. In 1885 he went to Lincoln County, Kans., entered upon a career of a stockman and farmer when that was a sparsely settled and wild country. As the years passed he became closely identified with the development of the region, saw Lincoln Center grow from a straggling village to a city of fair proportions and was elected its mayor, serving one term. He also took great interest in every forward movement of that section and became well and favorably known, in time acquiring some 2,000 acres of land which he farmed and used as a stock range. He went through some thrilling experiences with others of that part of Kansas—drouth and high winds that destroyed his crops and necessitated his mortgaging his property to "hang on" and try to win out. He became a well driller and operated in Nebraska, where people had money to pay for such work, for several months with success, enabling him to return and once more take up his work in Lincoln County. While living there he served for years as a school director, working hard to maintain a high standard of education.

His mother had come to California in 1905 to visit some of her children who had preceded her, and once in the Golden State she decided to remain, so in order to see her again it was necessary for Orvis to come out here. He came, and like thousands of others, was so thrilled by what he saw that he decided he would dispose of his holdings and locate here permanently. This he did, and he has never entertained one regret of that determination. Here in Orange County he decided to pitch his tent and he bought his first ranch in 1912; this consisted of nineteen and one-half acres of raw land and he at once set to work to make it productive by setting out oranges and lemons, and made of it a fine income property. In 1918 he bought another ranch, located on Fairhaven Avenue, and this bears fruit in abundance. Besides looking after his ranch interests Mr. Hull has been dealing in real estate and has been the means of many settlers locating within the borders of Orange County. In all his transactions he believes in a square deal, backing up his sales with all he possesses and thereby maintaining the confidence of his clients, who advertise his methods to their friends.

Mr. Hull was married in 1881, in Iowa, to Miss Clara R. Mitchell, a native of that state and daughter of Daniel R. and Sarah (Miller) Mitchell, born in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, but who became residents of Polk County, Iowa, in 1865. Of their union six children have been born: Ralph W., is a resident of Orange County and the father of two children; Flora M. has become Mrs. Walter Taylor and is living in Orange at the present writing; she has two children: Grace G., is the wife of Dr. R. C. Thompson of Chicago; Daniel R., was in the government service for nineteen months during the World War, is now superintendent of the Western Division of U. S. National Parks, a position that calls for ability and tact. He is the father of one child. Clara R. is Mrs. Harold Girton, and they reside near Orange; Evangeline is the wife of William F. Kroener, former secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Orange, but now living in Chicago. They also have one child. These children have been given every educational advantage in the reach of their parents and all have won recognition for themselves. A business man of progressive ideas, Mr. Hull holds membership in the Central Lemon Growers, the Villa Park Orchards, and the Santiago Orange associations. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and he and his good wife participate in all civic enterprises for the good of the county, and have an ever-widening circle of friends throughout Orange County who appreciate them for their worth as builders-up of the community.

Mr. Hull has, for many years, taken a firm stand for national prohibition, as was shown in 1918, when the liquor interests held their convention in Fresno, at which time the convention took such action that every voter in the state would be compelled to support a liquor measure or lose their right of franchise. Mr. Hull, seeing the viciousness of this action, at once started a movement to give to the people of California an opportunity to exercise their rights and privileges. Because of his efforts there was a measure called the "Bone Dry" law placed on the ballots for the people to vote on. No petition had ever been presented to the people for signature that was so eagerly signed as was this "Bone Dry" petition. It was not carried, but it did defeat the most vicious measure ever presented to a people. This was largely due to the indefatigable efforts of Mr. Hull.

JACK McINNES.—An enterprising citizen of Orange, whose great success in buying and selling citrus fruit is undoubtedly due to his apprenticeship to mercantile trade in old, but thorough Scotland, is Jack McInnes, who began at the bottom of the ladder, long ago, and through years of unremitting industry, worked himself up. He was born at Glasgow on September 5, 1865, the son of Hugh McInnes, a native of Scotland, who was a wholesale merchant in Glasgow. Jack was educated in the schools of that city, and under his father was indentured to learn the wholesale drygoods business. Then he went to the great city of London and was a salesman in the wholesale drygoods establishment of George Brettle & Son.

In 1893, Mr. McInnes, attracted to America especially on account of the Columbian Exposition at Chicago, came out to "the States," and after visiting the World's Fair, went on to Edgerton, Rock County, Wis., where for a couple of years he was in business with his brother. He found the climate too cold, however, and in 1895 came to California. He was fortunate in having his attention directed at once to Orange County, and in pitching his tent at Santa Ana, where he started in the fruit business with the Ruddick-Trench Fruit Company, beginning there at the bottom, and mastering every detail. In time he became a foreman, then an estimator, then a buyer, and later he was in the employ of other fruit companies. Finally he became manager for the Altland Fruit Company at Orange, and that position he held for several years, or until he resigned to engage in business for himself.

Since then Mr. McInnes has been actively engaged in buying and shipping fruit, and has built up his present large trade. He has an extensive packing house along the Santa Fe tracks, and conducts business as J. McInnes, of which he is the sole owner. The packing house is 78 x 282 feet in size, and there are sorted, graded and packed from 500 to 600 car loads of oranges and lemons, which he buys, and sells for cash F. O. B. Mr. McInnes has the distinction of being one of the oldest fruit men in Orange County, and has witnessed the transformation of the county in all its various lines of endeavor.

At Los Angeles—where Mr. McInnes now resides—he married Mrs. Minnie A. Lyon, a native of Kansas, who has readily adopted the Golden State as her own, and is now, both in loyalty and good works, almost a native daughter.

VOLNEY V. TUBBS.—Among sturdy Californians who have added to the great wealth of the Golden State by completing the improvements on more or less raw land is Volney V. Tubbs, the rancher, who resides at Tustin and First streets, in the Tustin district, where he owns and operates a fine farm containing twenty acres devoted chiefly to oranges. This ranch he purchased in 1889, at which time it was only partially improved; so that the present high state of his acreage is largely due to his experience with and knowledge of Coast husbandry, and an untiring industry through which he has made a transformation almost miraculous. He has, among other features of his excellent plant, a modern water system, with a well 220 feet deep, lifting thirty-five inches of water per minute and removing all possibility of danger from a scarcity of water.

Mr. Tubbs was born in Iowa in 1868, the son of Judge L. W. Tubbs, who had married Sibyl J. Wheeler, a native of Michigan. Hailing originally from Connecticut, Judge Tubbs migrated to California in 1849, and for the next three years tried his luck at mining. His health giving way, he went to Hawaii to recuperate; and during that time, his partner cleaned out the claim and absconded with the funds. He then returned to Iowa, where he owned 3,600 acres, and became a large producer of stock and grain. He held the office of judge in Mills County, Iowa, for several years, and reared a family worthy of his name. The eldest son, William L. Tubbs, is now deceased; the other children are Mary D., Hattie M., Volney V., Bertha M., and Ray B. Tubbs, a physician. The only one of the family who resides in Orange County, Volney V., was reared and educated in his native state, and followed agricultural pursuits all his life. He moved to California after a while, settled in Orange County, and in 1888 located on his present place. He was united in wedlock to Miss Lillian M., daughter of George H. Dixon, in 1890, and of this union four children were born. Eileen is now Mrs. C. L. Cotant; and there are Mabel L., Margery and Dixon, who served in the World War and was commissioned as second lieutenant in the Field Artillery. Mrs. Tubbs, who is a native of Illinois, and an accomplished lady, attends with her husband the Presbyterian Church of Tustin. Mr. Tubbs is a charter member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

Always prominent in civic endeavor, Mr. Tubbs served as chairman of the board of exemption during the late war, and for fourteen years was on the board of directors of the Santiago Orange Association. In many ways, therefore, Mr. Tubbs has done much to advance the best interests of California, and to assist in developing, as fast as possible and on the most permanent lines, California's most favored section, Orange County.

HON. WALTER EDEN.—The dignity and integrity of the California Bar have been maintained by such scholarly practitioners as the Hon. Walter Eden, senior member of the law firm of Eden and Koepsel, who maintain their offices at 411½ North Main Street in Santa Ana. Mr. Eden was born at Sullivan, Moultrie County, Ill., on July 14, 1862, a son of John R. and Roxana (Meeker) Eden. The Hon. John R. Eden was a well-known attorney in Illinois who served for ten years in Congress and ably represented his constituents. He is now deceased, as is his good wife, by whom he had eight children, four of whom are living—three daughters and one son, the subject of this review, who was the fourth in order of birth. One of his sisters is now a resident of Riverside, Cal.

A product of the public schools, Mr. Eden carried his studies further at the Georgetown University at Washington, D. C., after which he studied law in his father's office. In 1889 he was admitted to the Illinois Bar and for ten years, with the exception of three years spent in California, he practiced his profession in his native city. While there he was prominent in politics, served as treasurer of Moultrie County for a term, and for two terms was mayor of Sullivan. It would seem that any man who could become mayor of his own town, where he was born and reared, must be capable of almost any attainment among strangers later. He also belonged to the National Guard of Illinois. The next ten years were spent in Springfield, where he made a speciality of the title business, owning the only abstract of title books in that city, and making a success of that line of business. From the year 1896, having given up public life and until coming to California, Mr. Eden devoted himself to hard work, and thereby laid the foundation of his financial success.

About thirty years ago Mr. Eden first came to California with his family and located in Fresno, where he had a cousin living, and when that place was but a city in embryo, and he was interested in the Fresno County Abstract Company for the next three years, when he sold out and returned East. In February, 1909, he once again came West and stopped in Fresno for a year, then spent two years in Los Angeles, and in December, 1912, he removed to Santa Ana, where the scenes of his activities have since been laid.

As a Republican in politics he was elected in November, 1919, to the State Assembly and one of his important positions was that of chairman of the Committee on Rules. Among the excellent measures proposed by him was the law giving tide lands to Newport Beach, and those outside the corporation to Orange County; he also helped ratify the Prohibition amendment and the Woman's Suffrage amendment. As a resident of Orange County he is always to be found in the van when movements for the public good are in question, and to favor the projects that mean the greatest good for the greatest number of citizens.

At Tacoma, Wash., in June, 1910, Mr. Eden was married to Miss Margaret Fitzgerald, a native of Texas, but reared in California from girlhood. She shares with her esteemed husband the good will of all who know them. By a former marriage Mr. Eden is the father of three children. The oldest is Mrs. Martha Odiorne; the second is John R., a newspaper man who became a major of infantry and saw service in France in the World War and who is now in the publicity department of the Firestone Tire Company of Akron, Ohio; and Walter, former city editor of the Springfield, Ill., State Register, but now with the publicity department of the Firestone Tire Company. Mr. and Mrs. Eden attend the First Methodist Episcopal Church and Mr. Eden is a member of the Lodge, Chapter and Commandery of Masonry in Santa Ana, and the Shrine in Los Angeles, and to the B. P. O. Elks in Santa Ana, in which he is the Esteemed Leading Knight.

HERMAN ENDERLE.—When one considers the important part played by irrigation in the development of Southern California, the enviable status of Herman Enderle will be apparent, for he is one of the well-known citizens of his district, honored especially for his mechanical skill and its fruits in the development of water for irrigation. He himself owns a fine, productive ranch of twenty acres devoted to oranges and English walnuts, which he purchased in 1904, and he has been the means of many another rancher making the most possible of his land holdings.

A native of Burlington, Iowa, Mr. Enderle was born on April 25, 1864, the son of William Enderle, a native of Germany, who married Miss Barbara Scharr, also a native of that country. Attracted by the far greater opportunities in the young American Republic, Mr. and Mrs. Enderle came to the United States in 1846, settled in Iowa and bought a farm, where they reared a family of ten children. Nine of them are living, and six are living in California—Clara, Katherine, Frank, Mrs. Rose Shaner of Los Angeles, Matilda and Herman, the subject of this sketch.

Herman was reared and educated in his native state and there learned the machinist's trade, which he followed until a few years ago, while he carried on his ranching through the services of others. He came west to Orange County, Cal., in 1892 in the employ of the Santa Fe, and located in Santa Ana, where he operated, for about six years, a foundry and machine shop. He began the business in a building opposite where the City Hall now stands as Enderle & Tracy, continuing as stated above. He built a residence at the corner of Washington and West streets.

Having purchased his present place in 1904 he set to work to improve it and bring it to its present productive condition. How well he has succeeded is evidenced by the ranch itself, the buildings and premises generally. A truly patriotic citizen, Mr. Enderle is a member of the Fraternal Aid Union, a worthy organization that has accomplished great good.

At Burlington, in 1889, Mr. Enderle was united in marriage to Miss Emma Benham, the daughter of George W. Benham, who was born in Burlington, Vt., and passed away at Tacoma, in February, 1918, while visiting their son, Maurice F. Enderle, when he was in the training camp there. A graduate of Stanford University, he was admitted to the California bar in 1913, and is now practicing law in Los Angeles. When the war broke out he volunteered his services to his country and was sent to the officers' training camp. There he was commissioned first lieutenant and was assigned to Company E, Three Hundred Sixty-second Infantry, and as such served in France in the Ninety-first Division. For four successive days in taking the Argonne Forest he fought with his fellows, and was wounded four times, but he still lives to tell the story and to carry the scars as marks of his courage and valor on the field. As a proper recognition, he was promoted to the rank of captain, and as Captain Enderle is known both for his manliness and his modesty.

HON. JOE CHARLES BURKE.—From the very beginning of Orange County, when the sagacity, intelligence, common-sense and courage of its political leaders and the rank and file of its citizenry were in immediate and perpetual demand, the Orange County Bar has played an important role in the destinies of a people proud of the state as a whole, but especially enthusiastic about that portion of the great commonwealth more closely associated with the concept of home; in this regard the career of Joe Charles Burke is all the more interesting, for his fame as a level-headed, scholarly attorney was established some years ago; and since then he has come to enjoy more and more of the confidence and patronage of his fellow-citizens.

Joe C. Burke was born at Downey, July 3, 1876, the son of Samuel W. and Lizzie A. (Davies) Burke, natives of Tennessee and Ohio respectively. They came to California in 1875 and in time four children—one son and three daughters—made up the family. The father died in November, 1912, but the mother is still living at Rivera, Cal. The oldest child in the family, Joe C. Burke, attended the local public school and then Woodbury Business College. Having decided to enter the legal profession, he studied law privately in the county clerk's office, and on September 27, 1911, was admitted to the California Bar. From 1907 to 1912, Mr. Burke was deputy county clerk; but from 1912 to 1914, he was city clerk of Santa Ana. On November 3, 1914, he was elected a member of the California State Assembly from the Seventy-sixth District and such was his record that he was re-elected in 1916. During these sessions he served on the committees of Irrigation, Oil Production, Municipal Corporations, County Government and Fish and Game, and in many ways he participated in sessions that have come to be historic. A Republican in national politics, he has always been above blind partisanship when the question was the best man and the best measure.

Mr. Burke has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Ida Wierbach, a native of Illinois, who bore him two sons—Russell A., a graduate of the Whittier high school and now a teller in the First National Bank of Whittier; and Marshall, who attended the Santa Ana high school and is now employed by the Standard Oil Company in their refinery at El Segundo. Mrs. Burke died in April, 1900. On August 1, 1914, he was united in marriage with Miss Amber P. Brackney, a native of Pennsylvania and the daughter of Frank P. and Emma A. Brackney, residents of Santa Ana.

Mr. Burke is a member of the Santa Ana lodge of Masons; the Santa Ana lodge of Odd Fellows and the Encampment at Anaheim; is Past Exalted Ruler of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and District Deputy Grand Exalted Ruler of California South of the Elks and was a delegate to the Grand Lodge of Elks at Chicago in 1920. In all the war drives he was an active participant, served as a four-minute man and a member of the County Council of Defense of Orange County. In all projects for the upbuilding of the county he has always been a supporter and worker and is one of the solid "boosters" of this great state.

HERMAN STERN.—A foremost citizen of Orange County, Herman Stern of Anaheim, occupies a distinct position among his fellow-citizens as a progressive, public-spirited and philanthropic man. He was born in Coburg, Germany, June 17, 1870, the son of Marcus and Rosetta (Goodman) Stern, who became the parents of nine children, of whom Herman is the seventh in order of birth. He received the benefit of a high school and college education and lived in his native country until he was twenty-three years of age, when, in 1893, he left to join his brother, Jacob Stern, in the United States, he having settled in Fullerton in 1888. After spending one year in that town, in 1894, they opened a store in Anaheim, conducting business under the name of Stern Brothers until 1908. In that year Herman purchased the interests of his brother, discontinued the various departments with the exception of that devoted to agricultural implements, and this he expanded by judicious advertising in unique manner. To meet the demands of the ranchers in the county he formed the Pacific Farm Implement Company in 1909, and has been very successful in his particular line of business.

To Jacob and Herman Stern must be given the credit for the development of hundreds of acres of arid desert land east of Anaheim, and to his real estate enterprise, more than to his commercial business, perhaps is due his greatest success. The brothers secured land that was practically worthless, extending from Placentia Street east to the foothills, and this they wanted developed, as they could see the future of the little city depended upon making a fertile region out of bare land, thereby drawing to this district those energetic men and women who were the real home-makers. They sold this land on contract to any who would agree to develop it, the initial price being from $25 to $50 per acre, according to location. A very small amount was asked to be paid down upon the signing of the contract, and the balance when the land would produce the necessary products to enable the person to pay up, Mr. Stern even advancing the funds, in many cases, to clear and develop it, also supplying the family with groceries and provisions. In this way were developed hundreds of acres that are now valued at from $3,000 to $5,000 each, and tracts that are the homes of responsible people, all of whom are independent, made so by the increased prices of their land and the wonderful orange groves that now cover the arid region and have drawn a host of home-loving citizens to this part of Orange County.

Herman Stern, being young and vigorous, threw his whole heart into the enterprise with his customary enthusiasm, and has lived to see his dream come true, and the friendships that have resulted from his generosity are of the most lasting kind. Many of the original purchasers are still living on their properties, and accord to Mr. Stern the credit for their success. He has been one of the most public-spirited men of this locality, and has spent his money with a liberal hand to make Anaheim and Orange County a better place in which to live. It was he who named Yorba Linda, his brother and others owning the tract. He started many enterprises that would employ labor and thereby establish a payroll for the energetic. Among these was the Anaheim Cooperative Canning Company, of which he was the first president. He was also one of the organizers of the Chamber of Commerce and its first president; also helped to organize the Mother Colony Club, and was the first president there; was instrumental in starting the home for Odd Fellows, also for the B. P. O. Elks, serving as president of the board of the latter. These and many other civic movements have felt the guiding hand of this experienced, though modest, man. Mr. Stern served as a member of the National Guard of California, and was captain of Company E, from 1902 until 1908. During the World War he spent his time in drilling the recruits from this district prior to their being sent to their various training camps. He worked in all the Liberty Loan drives, and as captain of his committee, was the means of taking Anaheim "over the top" in them all; he also served as chairman of the Red Cross and the Salvation Army drives for funds for war purposes, in fact, no citizen was more patriotic than he to assist those at the fighting front.

Herman Stern was married on June 11, 1906, to Miss Marie Nicolas, of Fullerton, and for twelve years she shared with her distinguished husband the esteem and good will of his friends. She passed away on August 17, 1918, mourned by a wide circle of friends. Mr. Stern is a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks and the Masons in Anaheim. In politics he is a staunch Republican. At all times he is ready and willing to support all measures for the advancement of the interests of the people of the county, and numbers among his warmest friends the best element of the county.

SAMUEL JERNIGAN.—Orange County has many popular public officials, but none perhaps enjoys a larger share of the combined esteem and good-will of her experienced and appreciative citizens, than Samuel Jernigan, the able and doughty City Marshal of Santa Ana. A native of Wayne County, Kentucky, he was born at Monticello on November 3, 1876—a fall period memorable in the annals of our country, as it marked the close of the first century of American progress and the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, at which Kentucky, among others, had done herself proud.

Mr. Jernigan's father was James Jernigan, a native of Illinois, but a stockman of Monticello who had married Miss Betty Bertram, a native of Kentucky, and the daughter of Rev. Jacob Bertram, a Baptist minister. Samuel was the second child in a family of six. He attended the ordinary public schools of his neighborhood, and after that completed his education in the great school of experience. From boyhood he was active, a live wire that made itself felt and kept others alive; and until his nineteenth year he remained with his father and helped care for the stock.

Leaving home, Mr. Jernigan went to Hill County, Texas, and soon after took to police work, and in that field he continued to advance until he came to California in 1902. He located at Orange and there served as city marshal until 1911. Then he resigned to become under sheriff.

A Republican in national politics, but especially broad gauged on all local issues, Mr. Jernigan was appointed City Marshal of Santa Ana in 1912 to fill the unexpired term of George Wilson; in 1915 he was elected for a four-year term; and in 1919 he was re-elected for another four years, receiving a large majority over two opponents. Mr. Jernigan not only enjoys the respect and confidence of the people at large, but he is well liked by those working under him, perhaps the surest testimonial to his real worth. While in Texas in 1899, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Pritchett, by whom he has had one daughter—Maydell. He is a Mason, a member of the York Rite and a Shriner; and he belongs to Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

ROY E. VINCENT.—A progressive young business man, who now has the satisfaction of seeing the products of his factory sold all over Southern California, is Roy Everett Vincent, proprietor and manager of the Vincent Manufacturing Company. He was born at Clay Center, Kans., on August 3, 1891, and his father was Emerson E. Vincent, born at Topeka, Kans., president of the California National Bank of Santa Ana. His mother's maiden name was Julia Smith and was a native of London, England, coming to Kansas with her parents at the age of three. Emerson E. Vincent was a hardware merchant in Clay Center, Kans., and in 1908 he brought his family to Santa Ana, engaging in the hardware business until he turned his attention to banking. He was one of the organizers of the Citizens Commercial and Savings Bank, which later consolidated with the California National Bank and he was made president of this organization.

Roy E. Vincent, the only child in the family, was educated at the grammar schools, partly at the Clay County Union high school and then at St. Johns Military Academy at Salina. After this he came to California in 1908 and managed his father's hardware store at Santa Ana for a number of years, and managed it well. Later he bought a half interest in Dale & Company, manufacturers of well casing, which was soon incorporated as the Dale-Vincent Manufacturing Company; then they bought out the well-casing factory of the Crescent Hardware Company and combined it with his present business, and in 1916 he bought out his partner, H. H. Dale. He disincorporated the company and continued the enterprise as the Vincent Manufacturing Company. The firm specializes in the manufacture of water-well casing in sizes from four inches to thirty-six inches. The product enjoys such a reputation for excellency that it reaches all first-class markets everywhere along the southern Coast country and the San Joaquin Valley as well. The factory is located on East First Street and the Santa Fe spur. It is equipped with power shears, punches and rolls. Each joint has to be fitted, as all riveting is done by hand to accomplish perfection. So extensive is his trade that he employs not less than ten men regularly. Republican party ideals appeal to Mr. Vincent most, but no one can outdistance him in nonpartisan co-operation.

In Santa Ana on February 5, 1912, Mr. Vincent was married to Miss Ethel Campbell, daughter of G. D. and Margaret Campbell, a native of Nebraska, and their happy union has been crowned with the birth of one son, Ronald Emerson. Hunting and fishing are among the pleasures of which Mr. Vincent is most fond, and when he is not in the great outdoors, he spends some of his leisure time with the Elks, belonging to Santa Ana Lodge No. 794. He supports vigorously the Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM WRIGHT PENMAN.—A splendid example of the typically genuine American, who, despite various ups and downs, has finally triumphed over all obstacles, is afforded by William Wright Penman, senior member of the widely known firm of William W. Penman and Sons, Orange County's largest individual sugar-beet growers, who will this year harvest a crop worth, very probably, $120,000. Their farm lies three miles to the southeast of Tustin, off the State Highway, and is a part of the famous great Irvine ranch.

Mr. Penman was born in Bloomsburg, Columbia County, Pa., on January 2, 1849, the son of John Penman, a native of Edinburgh, Scotland. He came to Pennsylvania, and at Bloomsburg was married to Miss Mary Ann Wright. They had nine children, six boys and three girls, and William was the oldest. His father was a teacher, and gave instructions in manual training in the night schools. Later, he became an inspector of distilleries, and during the Civil War he served, first in the Pennsylvania State Militia and then in a Pennsylvania regiment of the Union Army, campaigning at Roanoke. He rose to be a corporal and was honorably discharged. He was a man of splendid character—although an inspector of liquors, he was a teetotaler—and was a thirty-second degree Mason. Two brothers of John Penman had migrated to California in 1862 and were mining in Placer County, so he joined them in 1868.

In 1869 William W. Penman came out to California to join his father, who was then a partner in the Morning Star Gold Mine at Last Chance, at the head of the American River in Placer County. He had been apprenticed to a blacksmith and carriage maker by the name of Andrew Crossley at Bloomsburg, Pa., but when the latter failed in business it seemed best for the lad to come West and start again. He arrived in Auburn, Placer County, November 4, 1869, and was, therefore, one of the first passengers to make use of the new transcontinental service of the Central & Union Pacific Railroad.

He went into the mines and worked with his father at gold-mining, and finally became the owner of a third interest in the said "Morning Star" mine, and at Last Chance, in 1873, he was married to Miss Effie Ann Jansen, a native daughter, born at El Dorado Canyon, in Placer County, and therefore a member of California's first generation of native white girls. Her father and mother were pioneers of 1852. In 1880 Mr. Penman sold his interest in the mine, but in the meantime he owned and operated various hotel properties. He had a half interest in the Gold Run Hotel at Gold Run and a quarter interest in the Independence Hotel on the borders of Independence Lake in Nevada County.

In the fall of 1882 Mr. Penman came to San Luis Obispo County and bought a preemption claim of 160 acres on the Huero, five miles east of Paso Robles, engaging in farming and stock raising. He added to his holdings until he had 360 acres in this place, and also owned a stock ranch of about 500 acres in Keyes Canyon, north of the Estrella River. This ranch is still known as the Penman Ranch. After farming in San Luis Obispo County for thirty years, with varying success, he removed to Orange County in the autumn of 1912 and settled on the Irvine Ranch—the wisest move he ever made, although it did not at first seem so. He was $6,000 in debt when he came here, but he had thirty head of horses and a full equipment, valued at $12,000, for the cultivation of sugar beets. The very first year proved disastrous, and he lost $6,000 more, but since then they have been more and more successful each year. Now the firm has 625 acres planted to sugar beets and 200 acres to barley and hay; the acreage was mostly all tule land only six years ago, which they cleared and broke up and brought to a high state of cultivation, and they have the largest beet crop in for the Santa Ana Sugar Company. In the operation of the ranch they use the latest improved machinery and methods, using a Holt sixty-five horsepower tractor, as well as a Fordson tractor and a three and a half ton truck, besides twenty head of horses. A switch has been built through the district from the Santa Fe with a beet dump adjoining their place, which saves much time in delivering the beets to the Santa Ana Sugar Factory.

It is to men of Mr. Penman's type that California owes much of its present development and greatness, for with his energy and optimism he has always pressed forward, and, being a man who is never idle, is never satisfied unless he is helping to increase the yield of the soil, thus aiding materially in the progress of the commonwealth. Mr. Penman takes a keen interest in politics, especially in such measures as have their bearing on the development and maintenance of important business interests, and as might be expected, he is a Republican and a protectionist.

Mr. and Mrs. Penman have had nine children and, with four of them, reside on their ranch. Newton, the eldest, who is a partner with his father, married Mrs. L. Wallenberg, nee Hubbert; Gertrude died three years ago in Nevada County, Cal.; Robert is also a partner with his father; Minnie is a teacher at Orange; Marian has become Mrs. Paulson, and lives in the San Fernando Valley; Lalla became the wife of Julian Gray, a rancher at Lemoore, Kings County, Cal., and passed away; Viola, the seventh in the order of birth, is at home; Lawrence died when he was twenty-six years old; and Leland is at home. The family are members of the Episcopal Church.

ABRAHAM GUSTLIN.—A hard-working, highly intelligent man whose desire to escape the frigid East fortunately led to his making for the Pacific Slope and landing in the Golden West, is Abraham Gustlin, now retired and living on the Edgewood Road in Santa Ana. He was born in Batavia, Ill., on April 5, 1855, the son of Abraham and Katherine Gustlin, and his father was a railroad man who served his country in the Civil War. When his father returned from the battlefields, he decided that, inasmuch as he was away a good deal of the time railroading, Batavia was not a good place in which to rear a boy, and so Abraham, Jr., was sent to Tipton, Iowa, to grow up on the farm of Mr. Gustlin's sister. Two years thereafter, the father brought his family out to Webster County, Iowa, and began to farm for himself; and when, still later, he removed to Boone County, in that state, our subject joined him and remained at home helping until he was eighteen years of age.

It was then that Abraham left home to work for various railroad companies in the capacity of a boiler maker, serving the Chicago & Northwestern for twenty years, then the Iowa Central at Marshalltown, Iowa, next the Illinois Central and also the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul at Dubuque, Iowa, during which time five years were given to the last three companies. In the fall of 1898, Mr. Gustlin made a flying trip to California, but returned East rather disgusted, instead of charmed, with what he saw here.

Luckily for him, as well as for California, in the autumn of 1900 he and his son made a second trip to the Coast, and this time he spent the winter working at his trade in San Bernardino. The next year he brought the rest of the family to California to enjoy the good things he had discovered, and they took up their residence at Santa Ana. In 1902, Mr. Gustlin returned East and settled his business affairs by selling his estate, preparatory to locating permanently in the Far West.

At first the family lived at the corner of Sixteenth and Main streets in Santa Ana, but Mr. Gustlin sold his holding there, and lived for a while on Lyon Street. Then he removed again to his ranch on Greenleaf Street, where he lived until 1900, when he turned the ranch over to his son, Walter F., and purchased a beautiful home on Edgewood Road. Besides the site of his home, he has an acre of land devoted to walnuts, and there are no better, of the kind, for miles around.

On April 19, 1883, Mr. Gustlin was married to Miss Lovina Feathers, a native of Prairie City, Jasper County, Iowa, the daughter of Otis and Belinda (Record) Feathers, New York farmer folk, born and reared not far from Saratoga, N. Y. They had five sons and ten daughters—six daughters living, five in California. Two children crowned the blessings of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Gustlin. Clarence A., the elder, is a musician highly esteemed in Santa Ana, who studied both in Berlin, and Florence, Italy. Naturally, he profited greatly from the advantages which so long made the German capital one of the greatest centers in the world for musical culture, and he became especially fond of the quieter, more ancient city of Florence, with its innumerable traditions and an atmosphere certain to draw out of one any spark of genius. Mr. Gustlin returned to America and Orange County one of the accomplished musicians of the day. Walter F. Gustlin, the second son, is an experienced, enterprising business man and is now living at the old homestead on Greenleaf Street. He keeps abreast of the times in all that pertains to agriculture, and contributes his share toward the development of the promising Southland. He is the father of a son, Paul Raymond Gustlin.

JOHN LANDELL.—A former trusted and efficient public officer, who is making good as a rancher and expert walnut grower, is John Landell, the pioneer, who also is proprietor of the oil and auto-service station near Serra, two and a half miles south of San Juan Capistrano, on the State Highway. This station is just seventy-one miles north of San Diego and sixty-four miles south of Los Angeles, and is so situated that it cannot fail to be more and more in requisition.

He was born at Philadelphia, Pa., the son of James Landell, also of that Quaker city, a manufacturer of engines and boilers. His grandfather was John Landell, a Philadelphian, who was a dealer in lumber there; while his great-grandfather was Captain Landell, sailing master, a seafaring man who was born in England and finally settled in Philadelphia. The maternal ancestors are to be traced back to sturdy emigrants who ventured into wild America with William Penn. Mrs. Landell's maiden name was Sally Moore, and she was born in Philadelphia. Originally, the Landells were French Huguenots, and their name was spelled Landelle.

The oldest in a family of six children, four of whom are living, John Landell was born at Philadelphia on April 2, 1866, and the year before the opening of the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia came west to California with his parents in the fall of 1875. After a very short stay in Los Angeles they located in Anaheim the same fall, while it was still a part of Los Angeles County. John's Grandmother Moore had married a second time, becoming Mrs. Hughes, and resided in Los Angeles, so for some time he lived with her and went to school at Second and Spring streets. After his school days were over he returned to the home ranch and took up farming. His father, after a time, sold his ranch in Anaheim and purchased one in Buena Park, where he resided until his death, after which his widow made her home with her mother, Mrs. Hughes, in Los Angeles until her death. Mrs. Hughes was a very prominent woman in Philadelphia, as well as in Los Angeles. In the former city she was a member of a committee in connection with the Centennial Exposition, and our subject now has a certificate for one share of its stock which she gave him. He had an uncle, John Landell, who was a first sergeant in Company A, One Hundred Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry, in the First Brigade, First Division, Fifth Army Corps, and was a dispatch rider under General Chamberlain. He came to Los Angeles, where he served many years in the fire department, and was also deputy county assessor under Smythe.

For a while he was city marshal of Anaheim, and then, for years he was deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County under Martin Aguirre. When he had been Anaheim's marshal for five years, he went into the sheriff's office at Santa Ana under Sheriff J. C. Nichols, and he was there for four years.

In San Juan-by-the-Sea, now Serra, April 6, 1898, Mr. Landell was married to Miss Soledad Pryor, a daughter of Pablo Pryor, a large landowner at San Juan Capistrano, and three children blessed their happy union. Charles T. is a graduate of the Santa Ana high school, and now helps his father in business; and there are Gladys J. and John P. Landell.

Mrs. Landell is a daughter of Pablo and Rosa (Avila) Pryor, and was born in Los Angeles. Her grandfather, Nathaniel Pryor, was an eastern gentleman who came out to California in 1828 and became one of the prominent men in the pioneer days of Los Angeles, where he was known as Don Miguel, and owned a ranch inside the limits of the Pueblo. Pablo, or Paul, Pryor owned the Rancho Boca de La Playa (Mouth of the Beach or San Juan-by-the-Sea), an area of 7,000 acres; most of it was sold after his death, but a very small portion of this ranch is still the proud possession of some of his children, and on it are a few pear trees still bearing that are over 100 years old, having been set out by the natives in very early days. Pablo Pryor was also interested in the Palo Verdes Rancho at San Pedro, as well as the old Don Miguel place in Los Angeles. Mrs. Landell is a sister of Albert Pryor, who is also represented in this work. A year after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Landell came to their forty-acre ranch at San Juan-by-the-Sea, where they are engaged in raising walnuts. Mr. Landell is a popular member of the Elks of Santa Ana.

At the auto service station Mr. Landell sells canned goods suitable for lunches, soda water, tobacco and cigars, while he carries a full line of Eastern and Western oils, and the Union Oil Company's gasoline. He also has a large assortment of tires and automobilists' sundries.

Jack Landell, as he is familiarly known by his friends all over Orange County, was justice of the peace in San Juan Capistrano for twelve years, and is a trustee of the school district, and also of the San Juan Capistrano Union high school, in which they have succeeded in voting $65,000 for a new high school building, to be started immediately. He is greatly interested in the cause of education, and as a director he is giving it much of his time and efforts. Mr. and Mrs. Landell thoroughly enjoy their beautiful ranch at San Juan-by-the-Sea.

CHARLES F. MITCHELL.—There is something always very interesting in the success of both father and son in practically the same field, and that, perhaps, is what makes Charles F. Mitchell, the dealer in wall paper and paint, a subject of more than passing moment, for his father, John Wesley Mitchell, was long a well-known Santa Ana contractor in wall paper and painting. He was born in Waverly, Ohio, on November 25, 1857, the son of John Morrison and Sarah (Howard) Mitchell, the father passing away in Kansas and the mother in Illinois. To the latter state the family came from Ohio in 1863, and there John Wesley attended school until he was eighteen years of age, when he decided to go in for farming on his own account. Later, for two years he worked a claim he had bought in Kansas, and for four years he was engaged as a clerk in a store. In 1888 he opened at Santa Ana a painting and paper hanging business, and soon afterward began as a contractor; and still later he opened a store of his own, being the pioneer in that line in Santa Ana. In 1885 he married Miss Sarah Ella Holly, who was born in 1866, the ceremony taking place at Red Cloud, Nebr., and three children were granted the worthy couple, of whom Charles F. was the eldest. John Wesley Mitchell was a firm believer in Orange County, and in many ways demonstrated his faith in its future.

Charles Franklin was born at Salem, in Jewell County, Kans., on November 16, 1886, and came to Santa Ana in January, 1888, the year following the advent here of his father. When his schooling was finished, he engaged in the paint business with his father, and from a modest start he has developed the largest business of its kind in the county. He does contracting and employs from fifteen to thirty men. Full of public spirit, and deeply interested in Orange County, he is a member of the board of health and thus seeks to serve his fellow-men. In national politics he is a Republican. For three years he served in Company L of the Seventh Regiment, National Guard of California, the first two years as bugler and the last year as corporal.

At Santa Ana on December 24, 1906, Mr. Mitchell was married to Miss Irene Robinson, by whom he has had two children—Veda Irene and Geneva Eleanor. He is a Knights Templar Mason and Shriner, belongs to both branches of the Odd Fellows, and is an Elk. Santa Ana is to be congratulated on such a finely stocked establishment, under such experienced and liberal-minded management.

HERMAN J. MACHANDER.—Among the many successful ranchers who have found it necessary to abandon one field of industry in order to enter upon the one most profitable and for which they seem destined, is Herman J. Machander, a resident of Santa Clara Avenue, where his flourishing ranch of twelve acres is devoted to citrus fruit. He purchased the land in 1886, when it was set out to vines, but after the discovery that the soil of the vicinity was not well adapted for vineyard purposes, Mr. Machander and all the neighboring ranchers rooted out their vines and set out citrus orchards of Navels and Mediterranean Sweets and apricots instead. After they were bearing he found that more money could be made in Valencias, so reset the whole acreage and now it is a full-bearing Valencia grove. Mr. Machander has found by experience and investigation that Orange County's climatic and soil conditions are the most suitable for Valencias of any citrus section of California. The Machander acreage now presents one of the finest orange groves in California, its yield, in quality and quantity, coming up to his expectations.

It was in 1889, just after the great Southern California "boom" that he took up his residence on the ranch. A believer in cooperation he was one of the organizers of the Santiago Orange Growers Association at Orange. Mr. Machander was born in Frankfort-on-the-Oder, Prussia, on November 15, 1862, the son of Ludwig Machander, a native of Prussia of Scotch parents. At the time of the War of the Revolution Mr. Machander's grandfather, a native of Dundee, Scotland, whose name was Mackander, was serving in the English Navy, but did not believe in war on the Colonies, so left the English Navy at Danzig and located in Prussia, where he became a citizen and spelled his name with an h instead of a k. Mr. Machander's grandfather, as well as his father, was a farmer. He was also a trusted government employee for several years, and a prominent and influential business man. Mr. Machander's father was united in marriage to Emily Simon, who survives her husband and is now eighty-eight years of age. They are the parents of eight children, five of whom have come to live in the United States, the other three remaining in Germany and are still in the Government service.

Herman J. Machander was reared and educated in his native country and enjoyed many advantages not vouchsafed his neighbors. He emigrated to the United States in 1882 and first located in Morris, Stevens County, Minn., where he resided on a farm for two and a half years. In 1884 he abandoned farming, came to San Francisco, was employed as ship contractor, worked on the Cruiser Charleston, and then took up mining in Amador County, Cal., later cinnabar mining in Lake County and then went to Arizona, where he mined for several years until his health failed. In 1886 he had purchased raw land on Santa Clara Avenue, Santa Ana, and in 1889 located there.

In Santa Ana in 1890 Mr. Machander was married to Miss Edna R. Moyer, who was born in New York and came to California with her parents in 1887. Two children have blessed the union, Ernest R. and Nelda R. Mr. Machander is a loyal citizen to his adopted country, but is not afraid to tell what he believes to be the truth, and as a deep thinker, fluent speaker and one well versed in ancient European and American history, he is at all times entertaining and instructive. In 1914 he fulfilled a long-felt desire to visit his home, so he left New York in April for Europe, where he found his mother alive and spent about two months there visiting relatives, returning to New York only two days before the assassination of the Austrian Crown Prince. He descended from a long line of Protestants, and he favors the Baptist Church, and under its banners seeks to supplement good civic work and to make this old world the better for having lived in it.

THOMAS M. ROBERTSON.—One of the early ranchers of California who owns a fine grove of interset walnut and apricot trees is Thomas M. Robertson, who was born near Pella, Marion County, Iowa, on November 1, 1853, the son of T. W. and Clarendia Robertson. The latter passed away in Iowa, after which the father, with his three children, in 1856, came west to California.

For a while he farmed in Tulare County, and then in 1869 he came to Gallatin, near the present location of Downey, and there engaged in farming. In 1871 he removed to Delhi and pitched his tent where there is now the beet sugar factory. He bought thirty-five acres there, and raised corn. In 1888, he, too, died.

Thomas had lived with his father at Delhi, aiding him in the farm enterprise, and in 1897 he removed to Texas, where at Midland, in the Panhandle, he engaged for a couple of years in the cattle business. He returned to California, however, as thousands of other folks have done, in 1899, and purchased forty acres near Wintersburg, and there he raised potatoes and celery. For four years he lived at Wintersburg, and when he sold his property there he resided for three years at Santa Ana, where he engaged in the harness business. This, also, was disposed of in time, and then he purchased the ten-acre estate of the late Paul B. Matthews, on North Flower Street.

Mr. Robertson was twice married, his present wife having been Miss Blanche M. Matthews before her marriage, which took place on September 19, 1900. Her parents were Paul B. and Annie M. (Thompson) Matthews, and they were early settlers of Salina, Saline County, Kans. Mrs. Matthews died in 1892, and in 1894 the family moved to Santa Ana, and Mrs. Robertson's father came to acquire the choice property on which they are now living. One daughter and three sons have blessed this union of Mr. and Mrs. Robertson. Goldie Florence, James S. and Gordon Marion are students at the Santa Ana High School, and Boyd Lawrence is a pupil in the grammar school. The family attend the United Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, and Mr. Robertson prosecutes his national political work under the banners of the Republicans. He is also a member of the Santa Ana Odd Fellows.

BERTRAM C. ROBERTS.—A modest, energetic business man who seeks both to create and to hold his patronage by according to all customers the "squarest" of treatment, is Bertram C. Roberts, whose first-class millinery establishment at 417 North Main Street, Santa Ana, is the Mecca of a large clientele. He was born in Eureka, Humboldt County, on December 1, 1870, the son of Melvin P. and Chastina Roberts, and grew up in an environment of the cattle business, in which field, in Humboldt County, his father was engaged. He was married in Los Angeles on October 28, 1911, to Tena, the daughter of William and Louisa Homan, a popular belle born at Mitchell, Iowa, in March, 1871. Her parents were well-to-do Iowa farm people, who moved to Denver in 1885, where they are now living retired. Miss Homan received her early education in Denver, and there she attended both the graded and the arts schools.

Bertram Roberts left home when he was fourteen to "dig" for himself, equipped with only a district school training, and for several years clerked for the Wells Fargo

W. F. Newton

Express Company. With his wife he came to Santa Ana in August, 1914, and they then and there established a millinery business that has since developed into the finest concern of the kind in Orange County. The store is up to date in every respect. Not only is it not possible in this or other neighboring cities to find a more complete line of fine, approved creations, but the latest word of Paris or New York promptly finds expression here. Much of their success is due to the fact that Mrs. Roberts was an expert milliner with twenty-six years of experience before coming to Santa Ana. She first acquired reputation in Denver, and since then she has had various stores throughout the Middle West and California.

Mr. Roberts is a Republican in national political affairs, but a good community man, devoid of partisanship, when something worth while needs to be done. In such work, as in the various activities of the recent war campaigns at home, Mrs. Roberts gives invaluable assistance.

WILLIAM F. MENTON.—In his twelve years of residence at Santa Ana, William F. Menton has taken a distinctive place in the legal circles of this vicinity, and now occupies the position of deputy district attorney, a position he is ably qualified to fill. Mr. Menton is a native of Iowa, a state that has sent so many of her sons to take part in the upbuilding of California. He was born at Boone on September 13, 1874, being the son of John and Johanna (O'Leary) Menton, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Menton were the parents of nine children and William was next to the youngest of the family.

William Menton's early education was gained in the public schools of Boone, and after he had completed his courses there, he engaged in newspaper work for several years, working on the Boone County Democrat until he became one of the proprietors as well as its editor.

In 1907 Mr. Menton decided to take up his residence in California and on September 8 of that year he arrived in Santa Ana, finding employment on the Santa Ana Register. Although he had a natural aptitude for journalistic work, his leanings were always toward the legal profession, so he began the study of law, gaining a wide, comprehensive understanding of the subject by reading and studying in private offices. On July 22, 1915, he was admitted to the California Bar, and began the practice of his profession in Santa Ana, and through the steady integrity of his work and his wisdom as a counselor, he has won for himself an honored standing, as is evidenced by his appointment to the office of deputy district attorney on April 1, 1917, a position whose duties he has fulfilled to the satisfaction of everyone.

On October 15, 1918, Mr. Menton was united in marriage with Miss Helena F. Browning, a native of Tonawanda, N. Y. Mr. Menton is a member of the County Bar Association and also of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks, and in politics he adheres to the platform of the Republican party. Fond of outdoor life, he takes a good part of his recreation in playing golf. While the greater portion of his time and energy is occupied by his legal work, he is always deeply interested in all public-spirited movements that make for the betterment of the community.

BENJAMIN R. FORD.—An enterprising, likeable business man of Santa Ana who has readily demonstrated his capacity for success in commercial circles of another city, is Benjamin R. Ford, the cement contractor and road builder of 417 West Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana. He has one of the best equipments for cement road construction obtainable, and takes orders for, or gives estimates upon all kinds of work. He was born at Asheville, N. C., on April 21, 1856, and spent his boyhood there amid the privations of the Civil War period. His father was James M. Ford, captain of Company D, Sixtieth North Carolina Regiment, an old-line Whig who was impressed into the Confederate Army as a lieutenant and was promoted to be a captain; but he forced his way through to the Federal lines (taking his men with him—no small compliment to both them and him) and joining the Northern forces, fought through to the close of the war for the cause of the Union. When the war was over, his father entered the Government revenue service, and after twenty-five years, under the Federal Government, died at his home in North Carolina. Mrs. Ford was Sarah Ward before her marriage, a granddaughter of General Ballew of North Carolina and Revolutionary fame; and she died in North Carolina, the mother of eight children, among whom our subject was the eldest.

With his wife and children, Benjamin R. Ford migrated west to Washington Territory in 1885, buying and selling wool; and coming to Pasadena in 1906, he remained there and engaged in the hardware business on North Lake Avenue. In 1875 he had been married at Greenville to Miss Ella Norton of South Carolina, and they became parents of five children. Etta is married and resides in Oregon; Vernon died in infancy; and E. H., M. M. and C. M. Ford are in Oregon. Mrs. Ford died at Redondo in 1916. Mr. Ford married a second time, choosing for his wife Mrs. Matilda C. Boebinger, nee Stewart, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

It is only recently that Mr. Ford has taken up cement-work contracting and the building of roads, but he is doing very well in the new field. He has just completed the Magnolia Avenue Road at Buena Park, in Orange County, and also one and three-quarters miles of road for the county at Los Alamitos, both stretches being concrete; and he has recently built one and seven-tenths miles of road at Garden Grove Avenue, Bixby Hill and Ross Street in Santa Ana, county contracts. Besides these he has completed four other contracts for county and city roads. One is on Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana; another on Collins Avenue, Orange; a third, the highway or county road at Olinda; and the fourth at Orangethorpe, from the highway on, west to Placentia Avenue, on the east. These 2.7 miles cost $65,000, and the county furnishes the materials; from which the reader may see what Orange County is at present doing to contribute her share of that unsurpassed chain of public highways which long ago made California a world-paradise for the tourist.

What makes Mr. Ford as a successful man of business and industrial enterprise of especial interest is his academic preparation and professional career. He was educated in North Carolina at the Peabody School and the State School at Chapel Hill, from which he was graduated with the class of '76, and later pursued both law and medical courses, and was duly graduated. He also practiced medicine successfully in both Kansas and Colorado. It is not surprising, therefore, that he should have been intimately associated with many persons of note, including his particular friend, Z. B. Vance, once governor of and senator from North Carolina.

JOHN H. HARMS.—A young apothecary who has succeeded so well that he has one of the finest-equipped drug stores in Orange County, is John H. Harms, who was born near Lynn, Kans., on January 18, 1889. His parents are John P. and Rosina Harms, and they are now honored residents of Orange.

He commenced to receive his education in the grammar schools of Orange, after which he was graduated from the Orange County Business College; and having decided to study pharmacy, he took a night-school course and also served as an apprentice under K. E. Watson of Orange. He also remained in that well-known pharmacy until November, 1917, when he purchased the business and good will of the Orange Drug Company, now known as the Harms Drug Company, at present doing one of the largest volumes of trade of any similar house in the county. He uses only the most scientific, up-to-date methods and apparatus, and carries only the purest and freshest stock in all departments.

On March 7, 1918, Mr. Harms was married to Miss Nettie E. Pogue, a daughter of the late Mrs. Viola Pogue of Glendale, a charming and gifted young lady who came to Los Angeles in 1908 with her widowed mother. She received her early education in the usual graded schools, and took up the study of music under the instruction of Professor Andres of Santa Ana, becoming an artist on the piano. On account of her natural gifts and her willingness to use her talent for the benefit of worthy causes, she became widely known, and as a musician is today one of the local favorites. Mr. Harms belongs to the German Lutheran Church, while Mrs. Harms is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He is a standpat Republican, an ardent American, and took an active part in all of the Liberty Loan drives.

MARTIN H. SHIELDS.—A resident of Santa Ana who had attained prosperity, both as a farmer and as a business man, and who has, besides, the satisfaction of having reared a large family, is Martin H. Shields, who was born near Sedalia, Pettis County, Mo., on January 3, 1864, the son of Edward and Sarah Shields. The father, a native Ohian, was brought up a farmer and moved to Missouri in 1860. Five years later he moved back to Ohio and there, in Susquehanna County, he again farmed. He stayed a couple of years and then moved on to Benton County, Mo. He died when Martin was two and a half years old, whereupon his mother married John Wesley Dick, and our subject was reared by his stepfather.

He attended a grade school in Benton County, and afterward went to the State Normal School at Warrensburg, Mo., where he studied for a couple of years. For the next two years he was employed as a clerk in the large establishment of Blair Brothers, dealers in clothing at Sedalia, and for the first time came to California in 1884, settling in Mono County. He purchased an alfalfa ranch of 240 acres, situated at an elevation of 5,000 feet above the level of the sea, and raised cattle, hogs and horses. It was a cold country in winter, and he had two cuttings a year from the alfalfa grown there. The ranch was located in Antelope Valley and at first his trading center was Carson City; but this was later changed to Minion, Nev.

Henry Seidel

On April 11, 1887, Mr. Shields was married to Miss Florence Warfield Crapster, who was born near Florence, Md., the daughter of William and Ellen A. Crapster. Her father was a graduate of Yale, Harvard, and a theological college at Gettysburg, and he taught for a while in Yale College. Afterward he established a school of his own at Lisbon, Md., at which place he died in later years. Mr. and Mrs. Shields had a dairy of more than thirty milch cows of the Holstein strain on their Mono County ranch, and they bred and raised their own stock.

In 1911 Mr. Shields sold out and removed to Santa Ana, and here he purchased twenty acres of open land on Irvine Boulevard, which he sold in the short period of a year. In 1919 he bought what was known as the William F. Lutz home, and this is only one of many pieces of land and property which he has owned since coming to California. He has a full-bearing orchard of twenty acres of oranges in Villa Park to which he gives part of his attention.

Five boys and four girls have blessed this fortunate marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Shields: Raymond C. is at home, working on the ranch; Lela F. is also at home; Cecil R. is serving in the Navy at Guam; Hazel V. is deputy auditor for Orange County; Sylvia S. is employed by the Southern California Edison Company; Gladys C. is at Woolworth's in Santa Ana; Ivory T. is a high school student in the same town; Dally—whose name was made up from the last letter of the first name of each of the older brothers and sisters—is a pupil in the intermediate schools; and Martin, Jr., is in the grammar school.

Cecil R. Shields volunteered for service at Santa Ana, and was enlisted at Los Angeles on June 5, 1917. He trained at Goat and Mare Islands, and entered as ship-yeoman, but was transferred as an electrician to the S. S. "Illinois," at Norfolk, Va. Again he was transferred to Philadelphia, and from there he sailed for Brest, France. He did convoy duty in the English Channel and returned to the United States on December 30, 1918, landing at Hampton Roads. He was then sent to the submarine base at New London, was transferred to Newport News, and still later sent to the Island of Guam, where he is at present.

Mr. Shields is a Mason and also an Elk, in affiliation with the lodges at Santa Ana; he is a Republican in matters of national politics, and his family are active participants in the work of the United Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana.

HENRY SEIDEL.—An example of the perseverance and determination to succeed which overcomes every difficulty is found in the life of Henry Seidel of Santa Ana, who, by his own unaided efforts, has made a success in his line of business. He was born in New York City on March 1, 1884, the son of Frank and Anna (Tine) Seidel, the father being a shoemaker in the early days. In 1893, when Henry was nine years of age, the family came to California, locating at Monrovia, and in 1894 coming to Santa Ana. Here the father died, leaving a family of six small children. Henry attended the public school of Santa Ana, but his education was cut short by his father's death, as being the eldest of the family, when he was only twelve years of age he had to go to work, and with the help of one of his brothers he supported the family. In fact, he had already begun to look out for himself when he was a small lad in New York, having sold papers on the streets of that city.

From this time up until the year 1898 Mr. Seidel was engaged in various occupations, spending some time in ranching, working two years on a celery farm and for some time laying sewer pipe. At this time, because of an unusually rainy season, making outdoor work difficult, he entered the butcher business, working under Theodore Kling. For the first six months he received $3.50 a week and after that $4.00 a week for a few months and then gradually more wages, and here he continued for five years, learning all the details of the business at first hand. It was in 1905 that he then determined to go into business for himself, and with but little except indomitable pluck and the determination to succeed he made the venture, starting in a little ten-foot room with a capital of only $7.20. His integrity and strict attention to business have won for him a well-deserved and unqualified success, and he has just completed one of the finest and most modern markets in Orange County. He employs eight people and has the largest business in this line in the city. In addition Mr. Seidel owns a market, just as well appointed, in Balboa, where he has the largest business in that seaside resort. He can well claim the title of the pioneer butcher, for there is no other in his line of business here now that was here when he started his shop.

Politically Mr. Seidel is a Republican and in his fraternal relations he is a member of the Elks and Odd Fellows. He has also been a member of the National Guard of California. Especially fond of outdoor life, Mr. Seidel finds his most enjoyable recreation in hunting, fishing, and particularly in trapshooting. He is an enthusiastic believer in the future of Orange County and is ever ready to aid in any movement that makes for its progress.

WALTER A. SUTTON.—A progressive, practical and scientifically disposed rancher sure to attain to such results as will mark some real progress in local agriculture, is Walter A. Sutton, of North Flower Street, West Orange, who was born there, a native son proud of his association with the Golden State, in the old Sutton home on what was called the County Road, on September 19, 1886. His father was James V. Sutton, a native of Adair County, Mo., where he was born on March 18, 1848. When he was nineteen years old he moved to Nebraska with his parents, and for two years lived in Plattsmouth, Cass County, after which they migrated to Collins County, Texas, where they farmed. In May, 1869, he was married to Anna, Collins County, in that same state, to Miss Elizabeth C. Talkington, a Kansas girl, and three years later, or in 1872, he came west to California and at Orange built the fourth house in the town east of the Santa Ana River. In 1875 he returned to Texas and there farmed for the following seven years, when he returned to Orange and purchased a sixteen-acre ranch, setting out the entire acreage to walnuts. This ranch, of exceptionally rich soil, is under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. Some years ago he leased the farm to his son Walter, and now lives in Orange. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sutton. Alice C., the eldest, is Mrs. Walton of Orange; Victor is a telegrapher near Sacramento; Herbert is employed in the pipe-organ factory at Van Nuys; Walter is the subject of our sketch; and Sadie, Mrs. Ritter, lives at the home of her parents.

Walter Sutton was educated in the Orange schools and then served his apprenticeship in mechanics under Ben Davis at Orange, after which he worked for Messrs. Kolberg and Gardner in the Orange Buick works. On the last day of the year in 1912 he was married to Miss Maude Belt, the ceremony taking place at Garden Grove. She was a native daughter, also, having first seen the light at Westminster, and her parents, who came to California fifty years ago, were James and Susan (Brown) Belt. She attended the common schools of Garden Grove, and later graduated from the Santa Ana high school. After their marriage, Mr. Sutton lived at Santa Ana for five years, when he was with Kolberg and Kenyon, and then he spent a year with Charles Davis in his garage.

The next five years were given to the Studebaker Garage, under Mr. Lutz, and it was in 1918, while he was unloading a car of autos, that he had his back broken, the result of an auto falling and pinning him down. Everything possible was naturally done for him after the accident, and he was nursed back to health through scientific and loving care at the home of Mrs. Belt, in Garden Grove.

Since his miraculous recovery Mr. Sutton, who had been such a skilled mechanic from 1904 to 1918, has lived on the old Sutton ranch, where he has built for himself a home. Ten acres are in his father's title; three and a half in his own; while another two and a half belong to his brother, Victor W. Sutton, but Walter has the care of the entire ranch. He has there a pumping plant with a capacity of forty inches; and with the exception of three and a half acres, which are set out to Valencias, all the ranch is in walnuts. He is a member of the Orange Walnut Growers Association, and takes a keen interest in its problems.

Two children were granted Mr. and Mrs. Sutton, but one, Susan Aileen, passed to the spirit land when she was seventeen months old. The other, Fae Lanair, is now a promising youngster in her second year. Mr. Sutton gives some attention to the great game of politics, but believes in nonpartisan support of the best men and the best measures.

CHARLES W. McKEEN.—A modest, unassuming, but talented gentleman, now a successful walnut grower at San Juan Capistrano, whose family history is associated with interesting chapters in American annals, and who was himself connected with the development of other parts of the Golden State, is Charles W. McKeen, who lives about two miles east of the town on the Hot Springs Road. He was born at Litchfield, Meeker County, Minn., on June 16, 1867, the son of John W. McKeen, a native of Portland, Maine. His grandfather, John V. McKeen, was a ship carpenter in that famous port, and as John W. grew up, he learned ship carpentering. Mrs. Hannah E. McKeen, the mother of our subject, is still living, on Birch Street in Santa Ana, aged seventy-four years. A brother of Charles, Roy A. McKeen, is agent for Orange County for the Savage Automobile Tire Company with headquarters in Anaheim.

Charles W. grew to maturity at Litchfield, and when fourteen, went with his father to Dayton, Ohio, where the latter worked as a millwright. The young man stayed with his father and learned the trade thoroughly. He made Dayton, Ohio, and Indianapolis his headquarters for several years during which time he helped build numerous flour mills, from Texas to Canada. Clever at drafting, he drew up plans for many of the most noted mills on this continent. This fact may be readily understood when it is known that Mr. McKeen, as one of the foremost mill builders in America, constructed the "A," "B" and "C" mills for the Washburn-Crosby Company at Minneapolis, the Pillsbury "A" Mill at Minneapolis, and the "Palisade," the "Cascade" and "Cataract" at the same place. He also put up the mills for the American Mill Company at Nashville, Tenn., the George C. Urban Mill Company at Buffalo, the Dallas Milling Company at Dallas, Texas, and the Imperial Mill at Duluth.

In 1894, Mr. McKeen came to California and settled at Bolsa, and there he embarked in the celery business, owning 127½ acres of peat lands. About 1908, he went to Garden Grove, and there he bought forty acres of walnut orchard. His next move was to San Juan Capistrano, where he expects to remain—for some time to come.

At Santa Ana Mr. McKeen was married to Mrs. Annie A. Davis, and so became stepfather to her one son, Paul O. Davis, a well-known architect of Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. McKeen take a live interest in all that bids fair to develop Orange County permanently and along the best lines; and they are ever ready to "lend a hand" when hard work needs to be done or funds subscribed.

CONRAD OERTLY.—Among the many good citizens of foreign birth Conrad Oertly, who resides on Euclid Avenue, Garden Grove, is worthy of note. A native of the canton of Appenzell, Switzerland, he was born November 25, 1858, the son of Conrad Oertly, a dealer in lumber, who was born, lived, married and died in his native country, Switzerland. Mr. Oertly's mother was also a native of Switzerland, and before her marriage was Miss Anna Encler.

Conrad Oertly's life was spent in his native country until the age of twenty-two, and there he learned the trade of carpenter, afterwards traveling as a journeyman carpenter. He was a resident of Paris, France, one year, then, in 1882, came to America, locating in the Mohawk Valley, at Little Falls, New York, where he remained three years working at his trade. He also worked in Utica and Buffalo, going thence to Covington, Ky., where he was united in marriage with Miss Elisa Wiedmer, whom he first met in Little Falls, New York. She also is a native of Switzerland, and was born in the canton of Berne, at Dientigen, the daughter of Jacob Wiedmer, a stockman, and her mother was in maidenhood Magdalena Werren. When twenty years old, in 1882, just three months later, and upon the same ship, the "La France," in which Mr. Oertly crossed the ocean, she joined an older sister in New York. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Oertly removed to Lexington, Ky., where he worked at carpentering four years, and there two of their children were born.

In 1889 Mr. Oertly took his family on a trip to their old home in Switzerland, remaining two and a half years, although they did not intend to make so long a visit. While there Mrs. Oertly was injured in an accident, which prolonged their stay. Returning to America, they came at once to California and settled in Los Angeles in March, 1892, and there Mr. Oertly was employed at his trade for two years; afterwards he worked in the dairy business for two years, then engaged in the dairy business on his own account for three years. Having been successful in this business, he purchased nine acres of land at the corner of Figueroa and Forty-eighth streets, Los Angeles, and remained in that city until 1906, when he removed to Garden Grove and purchased a twenty-acre piece of property which he improved into an orange and lemon grove, and afterward sold to his son.

Mr. and Mrs. Oertly are the parents of four children, Soule C., who is mentioned on another page in this work; Bertha, the wife of J. G. Allen; Bernhard, who died at Nobleford, Alberta, of the influenza, when it raged so relentlessly throughout the country in 1918, and George M., who is in the fuel and feed business at Long Beach, Cal., and who was also at Nobleford, Alberta, from which place he entered the U. S. service and trained at Camp Lewis, then went to the aero squadron at Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas. From there he went to Pittsburgh, Pa., where he attended the Carnegie school for quick repairing of aeroplanes; returning thence to Kelly Field he entered the chemical department, and in time was promoted to the head of the department. It was his duty to analyze the lubricating oils and gasoline and O. K. all the purchases of oils; he stood in line for promotion to a lieutenantcy when the armistice was signed. He is a well-known football star.

Mr. Oertly has a clear brain, is an interesting talker and a loyal American. Of friendly disposition, warm hearted and genial, he has led an active, moral and useful life, and given his children excellent educational advantages. Gifted and successful, they stand among the most prominent people in the county, and they, as well as their parents, take an active interest in the betterment of the community in every possible way. In their religious convictions Mr. and Mrs. Oertly are members of the Baptist Church at Garden Grove, where Mrs. Oertly is active in Sunday School work.

HANS GATJENS.—The popular proprietor of the Orange County Soda Works at Anaheim, Hans Gatjens, is a native of Schleswig-Holstein, where he first saw the light of day July 21, 1872. At the early age of sixteen he migrated to America and located first in Iowa, working on farms in Scott and Benton counties for five years. In 1893, attracted by the greater opportunities on the Pacific Coast, he came to California, where he chose Orange County as the scene of his future operations. At first he found employment on a sugar-beet ranch. Being very thrifty and industrious, he saved his money and by 1904 he was able to lease 120 acres of land, upon which he raised sugar beets and successfully continued in this business up to 1912.

In 1913 Mr. Gatjens returned to the scenes of his boyhood days in Germany and after a pleasant visit he returned to Orange County, where he entered the employ of the Orange County Soda Works, which was then located at Anaheim. Being a man of enterprise and initiative he soon gained a thorough knowledge of the soda business and in 1918 purchased the works and later erected a plant at 400 South Claudina Street. He has installed new machinery and otherwise improved the plant so that it is up to date in every way and capable of handling his large and increasing business, which now extends all over the county. At present he makes twenty different kinds of soft drinks, his orange flavor being especially popular. He uses two auto trucks in his business.

During his first trip to his native land, in 1902, Mr. Gatjens was united in marriage with Johanna Gatjens, a native of the same district in Germany where Hans was born, although not a relative. Mr. and Mrs. Gatjens are the parents of three children, all born in California, Hattie, Effie and Harry. Hans Gatjens is recognized as a self-made man, of which honor he is justly proud. He is a member of the Concordia Society of Anaheim.

W. LESTER TUBBS.—An interesting representative of one of the worthiest pioneer families of California, members of which have frequently been identified with the really stirring and epoch-making events in the annals of the Golden State, is W. Lester Tubbs, who was born at Emerson, Iowa, on July 10, 1894, the son of William L. Tubbs, a native of Flowerfield, Mich. His father was Judge Lewis W. Tubbs, who came to California with an ox-team in 1849, leaving Iowa on March 1 as captain of a train which took six months to get across the desert and mountains. He was a native of New York, where he was born in 1829, and brought with him from the Empire State some of that natural spirit of leadership which led his fellow-citizens to send him as a delegate to the first California legislature after California's admission to the Union. Later he made many trips back and forth between the Coast and the Middle West. He married a daughter of William Wheeler, of Michigan, who became colonel of a regiment of volunteers that served the cause of the North in the Civil War. William L. Tubbs married Miss Alice N. Tomblin, and coming to California in 1901, they lived on a small ranch in Tustin for the first seven months, after which they moved into Santa Ana, and Mr. Tubbs became one of the most active organizers of the Santa Ana community. He was the first to be exalted in Lodge No. 794 of the Santa Ana Elks, and was a Mason and a Shriner. When he passed away, on July 11, 1911, his going was mourned by a large circle of devoted friends.

W. Lester Tubbs attended the grade schools of Santa Ana, and afterward went to the Shattuck Military School at Faribault, Minn., from which he was graduated in 1912. He had attained the captaincy of Company C, and was presented with a beautiful silver loving cup by his fellows in the company.

His first venture in business was with the Security Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles, where he remained for three and a half years, traveling back and forth each day between Santa Ana and Los Angeles. He was in the loan department of that fine institution, and there demonstrated his capability in caring for the insurance. On February 15, 1917, he became teller in the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank of Santa Ana.

When the recent war broke out, Mr. Tubbs went to San Francisco and took the officer's examination, and on April 9, 1917, was recommended for a commission; but he was later held back on account of being under weight. On November 2, 1917, he was finally admitted to the service, and served at Camp Lewis in the Ninety-first Division, in the enlisted men's ranks. In August, 1915, he was commissioned second lieutenant and was held as instructor in the Thirteenth Division at Camp Lewis. On December 3, 1918, he was honorably discharged. He is treasurer of Santa Ana Post, No. 131, of the American Legion. On his return to civilian life, Mr. Tubbs resumed his position with the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank. On June 1, 1919, he accepted the responsibility of representing the Auto Club of Orange County as office manager at Santa Ana.

J. A. Knapp

On July 5, 1919, Mr. Tubbs was married to Miss Dorothy L. Hendrie, daughter of I. R. and Alice (Dakan) Hendrie of Santa Ana. She began her education in the public schools of Long Beach and continued her studies at the Santa Ana high school, and received private instruction in music and the drama. During the recent war, Mrs. Tubbs served as a nurse in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Los Angeles, disengaging herself therefrom when hostilities ceased on November 11, 1918. Mr. Tubbs is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and a life member of the Elks, and few if any enjoy a more deserved popularity.

JAMES ALLAN KNAPP.—A Californian of more than ordinary interest, both on account of his personality and his varied life story, is J. A. Knapp, one of the foremost citizens of Garden Grove, and popularly spoken of as the "Chili King." His face and figure have become familiar to many non-residents who have attended the afternoon lectures by D. W. McDaniel, the capable representative of Orange County at the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Knapp was born seventy miles north of Toronto, Ontario, Canada, and ten miles northwest of Barrie, the county seat of Simcoe County, on his father's farm of 100 acres, on December 23, 1879, the third child and the second son of Peter B. Knapp, who had married Christina M. Livingston. Peter Knapp was of Scotch origin, and belonged to the loyal Tory stock in Pennsylvania, who returned to British soil, that is, removed to Canada, at the outbreak of the Revolutionary War. He was reared at Kingston, Ont., and became a farmer, and he died on January 6, 1903, aged fifty-two years, in California, to which milder region he had come for his health in 1898, with his eldest son, George Knapp. He had stopped first at Weiser, Idaho, from June until September, 1898, and from there he came to Anaheim, where he remained until March, 1899, when he went back to Canada, leaving his son here. He straightened out his affairs and returned to Anaheim, and there bought land, and made many friends; so that today he is favorably remembered in the neighborhood of his demise.

Seven children blessed the union of Peter and Christina Knapp. George was the eldest and died at the age of twenty-six, at Anaheim; May is the wife of George W. Dorr, the chief clerk of the U. S. Railway Mail Service running out of Los Angeles to El Paso, Texas, and resides at 235 East Adams Street, Eagle Rock; James Allan is the subject of this review; Annie died at the age of twenty; Rachel J. is the wife of E. M. Christensen, a farmer and cement contractor, living two miles northeast of Garden Grove, and Elmer C. and Robert L. are both single and live with their mother on the original Knapp farm of fifty acres, purchased in February, 1900, and now planted to oranges.

James A. was twenty years old when he came to Garden Grove. He had attended the public schools at Minesing, Canada, and the Collegiate Institute at Barrie, and so was well equipped for a successful tussle with the world. On his arrival in California, he lost no time in going to work as a farm hand on an orange ranch at eighteen dollars a month. At the end of the month, however, he quit to try his hand at walnut culture, and for three-quarters of a year he was on a walnut ranch. Then he went to work on the home ranch, where he remained until he was thirty years of age. While working at the walnut grove, he watched his neighbor grow a two and a half acre patch of Chili peppers, for canning, and since these were the first of that edible he had ever seen, the process interested him not a little. His father had thirty acres of idle land, and Mr. Knapp soon conceived the idea of utilizing it for pepper growing. The following year, therefore, he and his father put in eight acres, with good results, netting them about $200 an acre, and the second year they planted fifteen acres, and each year planted more and more, until now Mr. Knapp has 1,000 acres of peppers, leased land, all of which he supervises himself. The peppers are grown on contract, and he uses Mexican, Jap and white labor. In busy harvest seasons he employs about 500 people. He owns the largest chili warehouse in Garden Grove, and Garden Grove is the largest and most important initial Chili pepper market in the United States, if not in the world.

The varieties of peppers grown from seeds of Mr. Knapp's own raising are as follows: The Mexican type, Chili pod (parent stock being imported from Old Mexico), this type being first grown by Mr. Knapp in 1907, and his first crop was sold at St. Louis in the same year; the California long red pod Chili, which is native; the Pimiento, or sweet peppers, the seeds of which were imported from Spain in 1910, and brought over by various canning companies.

Mr. Knapp and his father built at Anaheim, in 1901, the first evaporator in Orange County used for drying peppers artificially, and now he has a number of drying houses, one plant containing eight separate buildings, or units. He has devised a type of evaporator, which has been very generally adopted by all the rest of the growers.

The pepper contains at least ninety per cent of water, which is more than that generally found in vegetables, and this renders it necessary to have a special form of dryer. In 1915 natural gas fuel for generating the necessary heat for the evaporators was adopted in place of oil, and this was an important step forward.

Mr. Knapp's chili warehouse is a large frame structure, 40 x 100 feet, situated on the right of way of the Pacific Electric Railway, and was built by him in 1917. He works up his own markets for chili peppers, and has done so from the start. He does his own selling, and ships direct to his many customers in car load lots. The Latin races of California, New Mexico, Arizona and Texas were the first to use chili peppers, but his trade now includes the Mississippi Valley, and is traveling rapidly both East and North. In 1919 he even invaded New York City with a car load of that year's crop, and this shows how, under such splendid leadership as that of this captain of industry, the pepper market has been expanded.

In 1910 Mr. Knapp became interested in some other business affairs in Garden Grove. The previous year he had helped to organize the Garden Grove State Bank, when he became its first vice-president, and later its president, and this solid institution has now become the First National Bank. In 1916 he was elected president of the Garden Grove State Bank, and he is still a stockholder.

Seventy acres of land belonging to Mr. Knapp are given up to Valencia oranges, and he also grows beans. He helped to organize the Garden Grove Bean Growers Association in 1915, and has served as the president ever since. In 1914 he helped to organize the Garden Grove City Water Company, a private enterprise, of which he is both president and manager.

On December 19, 1911, Mr. Knapp was married to Miss Nina Frances Richardson, of Sibley, Iowa, where she was born and reared, the daughter of Robert and Catherine (Bremmer) Richardson, both of whom are still living in that place, where the father is a meat packer. She was educated at the Sibley high school and the State Teachers College, at Cedar Falls, Iowa, and coming to California, taught in the Garden Grove schools. They have one child, Dorothy Mae, and have lived at Garden Grove since their marriage. They belong to the Baptist Church of Garden Grove, and Mr. Knapp was on the committee which had charge of the erection of the fine edifice, which seats 300 people, and was remodeled in 1914. He is now chairman of the church board of trustees, and was also superintendent of the Sunday school for several years, resigning in 1917. Mrs. Knapp is a teacher in the Sunday school, and is an officer in the missionary society. Mr. Knapp is a Republican in national politics, and both he and Mrs. Knapp were participants in all the various war activities. He was made a Mason in the Anaheim Lodge, F. & A. M., in 1907, and is still a member there, being a past master.

FRED K. GRESSWELL.—The leader in his line of work, that of sign painting, window lettering, and the making of glass and metal signs, Fred K. Gresswell of Anaheim is noted for the excellency of his work and its artistic qualities. A native of England, Mr. Gresswell was born at Grimsby on October 9, 1855, but for many years he has been a loyal citizen of the United States, having taken out his final papers on November 4, 1898. He received his education in private schools and the Methodist College of his native land. In England, in those days, the training of the trades was very thorough, and Mr. Gresswell served as an apprentice at the painter's trade for seven years, and for one year as an "improver" which is slightly higher than an apprentice, and with advanced wages. In those days the colors for paints were ground with a muller and stone and the oil was taken from the cake mill and boiled. This work was done in the winter, preparatory for the summer season, and Mr. Gresswell did a great deal of this primitive paint making and this thorough grounding in all the details of his work has added greatly to his proficiency.

In 1879 Mr. Gresswell came to the United States, locating in Chicago, where he followed his trade for some time. He went back to England, but returned to Chicago, later coming west. He arrived in California in 1903, engaging in his line of work at Los Angeles and Long Beach until 1907, when he came to Anaheim. Here he established himself as a painting contractor, continuing in this until he took up his present work of sign painting, window lettering and glass and metal sign making, and in this work he has been most successful. He makes a specialty of gold lettering on glass and has done all the work of this kind on the First National Bank Building, the Anaheim National Bank Building and the Golden State Bank Building, and part of the work on the First National Bank Building of Fullerton and the First National Building of Victorville. He also does all the lettering for the city of Anaheim. For a number of years he has had the decorating contract for the Orange Show held in San Bernardino each season. One of the most enthusiastic boosters Anaheim has ever had, even during his vacation he carries his paint pot with him, and on rocks, fences and buildings paints the number of miles from Anaheim, which has proved very convenient and helpful, especially to strangers driving through this part of the country. In addition to his own line of work, Mr. Gresswell has also been interested in a number of real estate operations. He sold the land on which the Anaheim Sugar Factory is located for the owner, W. F. Patt of Los Angeles. He owned twenty-four lots next to the site, on which he established a Mexican colony, thus segregating them from the city proper, and at one time there were 300 Mexicans living there. He has also dealt in other Anaheim property and erected two houses.

During the war Mr. Gresswell was very active in the Liberty Loan drives, helping Anaheim go over the top. He designed the Statue of Liberty used in the Third Liberty Loan and painted the signs for the Fourth Loan which were placed in the public square. Both the above were fine and artistic in their concept and attracted much attention. For his work in the Victory Loan he received a medal from the United States Government. He has always been prominent in the work of the Chamber of Commerce, being a director and chairman of the advertising committee and of the exhibits. He designed the exhibit now being used in the Board of Trade rooms.

In his early days in England, Mr. Gresswell was much interested in natural history, being a member of the Naturalist Society of Grimsby, and the curator for five years of the Marine Fisheries of England. In 1882 the latter was taken over by the English government. Fraternally, he is a member of the Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

While still living in England, Mr. Gresswell was married to Rebecca Reed, a native of that country, who passed away in Los Angeles. She was the mother of four children: Herbert, a bookkeeper in the Los Angeles postoffice is married and has two children; Ada is Mrs. David Pryor of Huntington Park, and she is the mother of four children; Clara married Gage Owen of Pasadena and has one child; and Ella, who is Mrs. William Schmitt of Los Angeles, has two children. Mr. Gresswell was married a second time to Mrs. Eliza Bowles, born in England, who passed away in Long Beach. In Anaheim, in March, 1920, Mr. Gresswell was married a third time to Mrs. Emma G. White, also a native of England, and they reside at 317 Clementine Street. In national politics Mr. Gresswell is decidedly Republican.

BERNARD J. DRESSER.—It is peculiar to Orange County, and particularly to Anaheim, that the men engaged in business there are men who have had years of experience in their special lines, and have brought to this section the benefit of their knowledge, as shown in the many fine business establishments in the county, equal to those in any of the larger cities of the state, and with the most modern methods used in carrying on their various lines. Among these may be mentioned that of Bernard J. Dresser, proprietor of the White Lily Bakery, at 307 West Center Street, Anaheim.

Mr. Dresser is a native of Missouri, born in Osage County, June 22, 1860. The family moved to Portland, Ore., in 1874, when he was a lad of fourteen, and there he finished his education. In 1884 he and his father came to Anaheim, where they remained until 1893, and Bernard J. assisted his father in developing his twenty-acre orange ranch, and also clerked in grocery stores in the city. In 1893 they returned to Portland, and Mr. Dresser became a member of the grocery firm of F. Dresser and Company, remaining in the firm for over twenty years, during which time he became very active in affairs pertaining to the grocery business in Portland; for three years he was president of the Retail Grocers Association of that city, and in 1908 attended the National Convention of Retail Grocers as a delegate, held in Boston, Mass. He was also one of the founders of the Portland Grocers and Merchants Magazine, and helped to put it on a sound financial basis; the periodical is still published and is now one of the influential and popular publications of the northern city.

Anaheim and its beckoning opportunities had never faded from his mind, however, and in 1915 Mr. Dresser came there to reside, and purchased the White Lily Bakery, since which time he has built up an actually phenomenal business in a short space of time, and made many improvements. When he took over the business one baker and one helper were employed; fifteen people are now employed and a large wholesale and retail trade supplied, three delivery trucks deliver bread to all the surrounding towns in the valley, and new agencies are constantly being added. His retail trade is growing rapidly, as the fame of White Lily bread has spread from household to household, and it is a case of "the proof of the pudding is in the eating." A full line of cakes and fancy pastry is also made, and this bakery is the only one in the county with two ovens, the combined capacity of which is 8,000 loaves daily, with a daily output at present of 3,600 loaves. All the new and modern machinery is used; after the dough is put into the moulds, they are put on racks and wheeled into the steam room, after which they are ready for the ovens. The bakery floors are cement, and the walls and ceilings in white enamel paint, with the entire plant as clean and sanitary as a good housekeeper could keep her kitchen.

The marriage of Mr. Dresser, in Portland, Ore., 1895, united him with Elizabeth C. Heitkemper, a native of Iowa, and two children have blessed their union: Bernard H., and Catherine. A true helpmate in every sense of the word, Mrs. Dresser has been of great assistance in carrying on the business, and like most women of today, keeps in touch with current events and with the business and civic, as well as the social life of the community. The family attend the Catholic Church, and Mr. Dresser is a member of the Anaheim Council No. 1154, Knights of Columbus. He is also a member of the Anaheim Lodge of B. P. O. Elks No. 1345, and of the Woodmen of the World. Prominent in business circles in the county, he stands ready at all times to aid in every way the best interests of his community, and as a member of the Anaheim Board of Trade, and the Merchants Association, he does his share in all movements for the further advancement of Orange County.

FRANK E. PARTRIDGE.—Among the bright, far-sighted and promising young men of his district, to whom Orange County naturally looks for much of its future development and prosperity, must be noted Frank E. Partridge, the progressive rancher who cultivates a productive orchard of oranges located on Fairhaven, between Yorba and Prospect avenues, which he has brought to a high state of perfection. He has owned his acreage only since 1906, and in the intervening years he has made all of the improvements which mark the property as a choice estate.

Of an old Eastern family, Frank E. Partridge was born in Philadelphia, Pa., September 12, 1889, his parents being Joseph A. and Mary H. (Freeman) Partridge, both natives of Brooklyn, N. Y. Joseph A. Partridge was well known in the mercantile circles of New York City, having established the firm of Partridge and Wilcox, wholesale dealers in notions and dry goods, the business still being conducted under this name although he passed away over twenty years ago.

The youngest of a family of five children, three of whom are living, Frank E. Partridge was educated in the public schools, later attending the Vermont Military Academy at Saxton's River, Vt., for two years. In 1903 the Partridge family came to California, spending a year at San Diego. Coming back in 1905, they went to Pasadena to look over property with a view to buying, but returned to their Eastern home without purchasing. In the spring of 1907 Frank E. Partridge came to Ocean Park and then to Santa Ana, and in the fall of that year, with his mother he purchased a tract of ten acres on Fairhaven Avenue, near Orange. To this ranch he has given intelligent and careful attention, increasing the planting from 210 to 640 Valencia orange trees, and the orchard is now in a thriving condition and is an excellent producer.

On October 11, 1919, Mr. Partridge was married to Mrs. Josie (Stearns) Jamar, the daughter of William and Lillie (Richie) Stearns; her parents were ranchers at Orange, but now reside in Arizona. Since his first residence here Mr. Partridge has shown himself to be public spirited and progressive and he stands high in the regard of the community for his willingness to cooperate in advancing the welfare of this section in all lines. He is a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association and the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and in political matter is a staunch adherent of Republicanism. While devoted to business, Mr. Partridge still finds time to enjoy outdoor sports, of which he is fond, and which the climate of California makes so attractive the year round.

WILLIAM H. BOON.—To be recognized as a self-made man is the honor accorded to William H. Boon, the popular agent for the Harley-Davidson motorcycles at Anaheim. His career presents a striking example of what industry and resourcefulness, coupled with thrift and an indomitable will to succeed, can accomplish even in the face of seemingly insurmountable difficulties.

William H. Boon was born in Parsons, Kans., August 22, 1888. In 1904 his parents migrated to California, locating at Randsburg, Kern County, where William finished his school days and afterwards for a short time was employed in a book store. His next employment was with the Yellow Aster Mining Company where he remained seven years during which time he rendered faithful and efficient service in various capacities until he worked his way up to the important position of fireman in the large mill.

After leaving the Yellow Aster Mining Company Mr. Boon was at Colton, Cal., for a short time where he was connected with the Pacific Fruit Express Ice Company; afterwards, for three months, he was employed by the Fontana Company at Fontana, Cal. During this time he formed the acquaintance of J. W. Smith, who had the contract for sinking wells for the Fontana Company in Lytle Creek, and entered his employ for two years. In 1910 Mr. Boon came to Anaheim, in the interests of J. W. Smith who had contracted to sink wells for the Anaheim Union Water Company at Anaheim. While engaged in this work in Orange County, he was so greatly impressed with Anaheim as a business center that he determined to make it his home and as soon as practicable he entered into partnership with John Kemper and operated a bicycle shop under the name of Boon and Kemper at 205 South Los Angeles Street. Soon afterwards Mr. Kemper sold his interest to Charles Griffith, who later sold out to Fred Minyard. He remained but a short time when Mr. Boon bought his interest and became the sole owner of the business.

By his judicious management, Mr. Boon has greatly increased the business and now occupies new and modern quarters at 147 South Los Angeles Street. He has the agency for northern Orange County for the well known Harley-Davidson motorcycles, his sales averaging twenty-five new machines annually. He also carries in stock a line of American bicycles, does repair work, has a complete welding outfit with which he does the welding for the automobile companies of Anaheim.

The marriage of Mr. Boon united him with Launa Whittaker, a native of Colorado, and of this happy union three children were born: Iona Ray and Iola May, twins; and Robert Harry. Mr. Boon is a member of the Anaheim Board of Trade and the Merchants Association. Ever since he was twenty years of age he has made his way in the world and although coming to California originally for his health's sake, he is now strong and vigorous and one of Anaheim's successful business men.

ERNEST HENRY RURUP.—A successful rancher who has so well prospered in California that he is naturally very devoted to the Golden State, is Ernest Henry Rurup, of North Flower Street, Santa Ana, the fancier of and authority on Percheron horses. He was born in Onhausen, Prussia, Germany, on June 28, 1849, and came to America in January, 1866. For four years he worked in Cottage Grove, Dane County, Wis., and then leased a farm in the same vicinity and engaged in general farming for seventeen years. In 1889 he removed to Nebraska, where he farmed from 300 to 400 acres near Aurora, in Hamilton County. He soon purchased half a section of land in the same locality, and this he used for general farming until 1903. While there he made a specialty of raising short-horn cattle and Percheron horses.

In that year, having made up his mind to remove to California, he came direct to Santa Ana and bought twenty acres on North Flower Street. This is now devoted to choice walnuts, and is under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. The land has always been rich, and since Mr. Rurup has brought it to a very high state of cultivation, it makes one of the choicest ranches in all Orange County.

On September 22, 1871, Mr. Rurup married Miss Johanna Grote, a native of the Duchy of Braunschweig, or Brunswick, Germany, who came to America with her parents in 1871, and settled in Wisconsin. Nine children blessed their happy union. Charles L. is in the implement business in Judica, Nebr.; William is on a farm in Hamilton County, in the same state; Clara married Louis Holland and lives at Orange; Henry is living in Arizona; Minnie resides at El Centro; Walter works in the oil field at Newport Beach; Emma is now Mrs. Miles Hill and lives at home; Flidia is Mrs. C. Irwin of Brea; and Ernest George lives at Phoenix, Ariz.

Mr. Rurup takes a live interest in civic affairs, losing no opportunity to set forth the advantages of always choosing the man best fitted for office, rather than standing by party candidates. California and Orange County, therefore, have always profited through such high-principled citizens as Mr. and Mrs. Rurup, and no greater wealth has come to the great commonwealth than in such worthy families as theirs.

WAYLAND WOOD.—An aggressive, whole-hearted and thoroughly public-spirited citizen, who made a reputation in Montana as a pioneer before he came to California and led the way in successful subdivision of some of the choicest Santa Ana property, is Wayland Wood, the scientific and progressive walnut grower of 1524 North Broadway. He was born in Atchison County, Mo., on January 16, 1869, the son of William Henry and Isabel E. Wood. The elder Wood was a pioneer Baptist minister, having a wide circuit in western Missouri; but this did not prevent him from giving our subject a high school education in Maryville, Nodaway County, Mo.

For twelve or thirteen years Wayland Wood was busy as a contractor and builder in Maryville, but in 1900 he went to Custer County, Mont., whither came also Miss Delia J. Baker, who was born near Maryville on March 25, 1870, and went to the same school, at the same time, in that town. And at Terry, Mont., on March 25, 1900, they were married. She had taught school in the vicinity of Maryville for a number of years, and became an agreeable companion and a most helpful mate. As a happily married couple, Mr. and Mrs. Wood lived together in Montana until November, 1914, when they came west to California. They have four children—Carrie E. and Charles H., students in the Santa Ana high school, and Mary Margaret and Isabel O. Wood, pupils in the grade schools. Mrs. Wood died in 1915 at Santa Ana. The family attend the First Baptist Church at Santa Ana.

Mr. Wood was the pioneer grain grower of the country between Powder River and Fallon Creek, in Montana, and now he has fifteen acres of walnuts in two groves near Santa Ana, under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. When he purchased the Barton Tract on North Broadway in 1915, he had the foresight to subdivide and develop the tract, and he rapidly sold city lots there and even built several houses, adding greatly to the value and the attractiveness of North Broadway property.

A Democrat in matters of national political import, although nonpartisan in his attitude toward local candidates and measures, Mr. Wood also belongs to the Masons and Knights of Pythias, and among the most popular of live-wire fraternity men in their circles.

EDGERTON B. SPRAGUE.—An influential citizen of Santa Ana who has worked his way up by intelligent, hard and honest effort and so has become prominent in financial circles, is Edgerton B. Sprague, the popular cashier of the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank of Santa Ana. He was born near the Connecticut River, at Windsor, in Windsor County, Vt., on November 25, 1880, one of the ninth generation of Spragues descended from Edward Sprague whose two sons, Ralph and William, came from England to Boston in 1630 and helped to establish here those American branches which later included such celebrities as Daniel Chamberlain Sprague, the missionary to the Sandwich Islands; Alfred White Sprague, the scientist and author; Charles Sprague, the poet; John Titcomb Sprague and John Wilson Sprague, the soldiers; Peleg Sprague, the jurist; William Sprague, Sr., and William Sprague, Jr., governors of Rhode Island; and William Buel Sprague, the clergyman widely known in Europe as well as in the United States, who collected over 100,000 autographs of note and published many interesting volumes of travel and essays. Great-great grandfather Jonathan Sprague drifted to Hanover from Massachusetts, and erected there the first school building, out of which later grew Dartmouth College.

The father of our subject was Clarence M. Sprague, the shoe manufacturer at Windsor, Vt., and Kennebunk, Maine, who later removed to Grundy Center Iowa, and became a farmer and a stock raiser. He is still a resident of that place, but lives retired. He had married Miss Abbie E. Weston, a native of Plymouth, Vt., and a member of another old Massachusetts family proudly tracing its ancestry back to Plymouth. She died in Iowa. Grandfather Weston was a farmer in Vermont, while Grandfather Edgerton Sprague was a farmer in Vermont and also owned a fine tract of land in Iowa. Clarence M. Sprague had three children; two of whom are in Iowa, and one in California.

The second eldest, Edgerton Sprague was brought up at Windsor and at Kennebunk, and when a boy of four came to Iowa. He went to school at Grundy Center; assisted his father on the farm, and then entered Cornell College, at Mt. Vernon, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1903 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He next entered the law department of the University of Michigan, where he remained until his senior year when, in 1905, he made a trip to California and the Coast, and what he saw here, he liked so well that he concluded to remain.

On November 5, 1906, Mr. Sprague entered the service of the Orange County Title Company of Santa Ana, having previously been employed in surveying at Laguna Beach, where he became acquainted with Mr. Mansur, who persuaded him to enter the employ of the Title Company; and he resigned from the escrow work of that concern only because of an offer from the California National Bank, whose assistant cashier he became on March 1, 1915. On the first of October, two years later, he was made cashier of the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank to the satisfaction of all the patrons. He is a stockholder and a director in the bank, and a stockholder, director and vice-president of the Home Mutual Building and Loan Association of Santa Ana.

In 1910, at Santa Ana, Mr. Sprague was married to Miss Agnes McBride, a native daughter born in Sacramento; and their fortunate union has been further blessed through the birth of their two children—Clarence Edward and Weston Finley. The family attend the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. Sprague is a trustee. He is a Mason, associated with Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, Santa Ana Chapter No. 73, Santa Ana Council No. 14, and Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, K. T.; and he also belongs to the Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles.

In addition to his banking responsibilities Mr. Sprague is interested in horticulture, and he has business property interests in Santa Ana. He has owned various pieces of property at different times, and has never failed to identify himself in the most helpful manner with the growing city and county.

OSCAR ROSENBAUM.—A highly intelligent, well-educated rancher who, despite various handicaps inherited through financial reverses of his father, has succeeded in attaining for himself and his family a considerable degree of affluence and comfort, is Oscar Rosenbaum, the progressive owner of the fine acreage on the State Highway about two and a half miles north of San Juan Capistrano. He was born in the San Juan precinct on May 24, 1869, the second oldest child of Henry George Rosenbaum, a pioneer cattleman at San Juan Capistrano, contemporary with Don Marco Forster and Judge Richard Egan, who came to California in 1850 around Cape Horn. He married Susan Bolton, a native of England, who was reared in Australia and came to California in 1861. He came to San Juan Capistrano about 1868 and had a rich pioneer experience. He was extensively engaged in the raising of cattle, but met with reverses, leaving little or no property for his children, of whom there were nine. Broken down, he retired to Los Angeles, where he died; and in that city, also, Mrs. Rosenbaum, a devoted mother and wife, passed away, neither of this worthy couple having been granted the pleasure of knowing how well their children would succeed in their struggle with the world.

Oscar grew up on his father's ranch in what is now San Juan precinct, near San Juan Capistrano, and attended the grammar schools in that old town; and when sixteen years old, he left home and finally drifted to Colorado. He worked at anything that his hands could find to do—ranch work at first, but later in the mines; and after a while had succeeded so well that he could take the next important step in life.

He was married at San Bernardino, Cal., to Miss Ella May Brumbly; and their union, the happiness of which was assured through the bride's genial and winning personality and her industrious habits, has been further blessed in the birth of eighteen children, fourteen of whom are living and honored as active American citizens. Three of their sons were in the war: Clarence Homer who was in the Mobile Ordnance department, is now operating the Imperial Valley ranch; Frank Oscar, who served overseas in the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Infantry, is now attending the Davis Agricultural College; Fred George served in the Second Engineers until the armistice and is now in charge of his father's upper ranch.

As a result of their hard work and frugality, Mr. and Mrs. Rosenbaum are now the owners of two excellent ranches, one two miles, and the other four miles north of San Juan Capistrano, including a combined area of 1,000 acres besides acreage in Santa Ana and Imperial Valley. This last-mentioned ranch, further to the north, is managed by one of Mr. Rosenbaum's sons, Fred George. Mr. Rosenbaum himself is both an experienced farmer and an able business manager; and while for the most part following stock-raising or mixed farming, he has planted much of his land to walnuts and oranges, and is now developing an excellent orange grove on the ranch two miles north of San Juan Capistrano. At the same time, he finds it possible to enlarge his culture and keep up his reading and general studies so that as a conversationalist he is always able to attract and hold his own.

WALTER D. LEDFORD.—Six of the eight years that Walter D. Leford has owned his seven-acre ranch, which he purchased in 1912, has been devoted to the business of poultry raising, and he is one of the promising and progressive poultrymen of his section of Orange County. The ranch is situated on the Santa Ana branch of the Pacific Electric Railway, north and west of Cypress. Mr. Leford was born in Cherokee County, Kans., on June 16, 1873, a son of Calvin T., born in Indiana, and Welmet (Hobson) Leford. The mother was born in Iowa and is a cousin of Richmond P. Hobson. There were six children in the Leford family, four living and all residents of California, and two, Walter and Charles, live in Orange County. The father died in Indiana, in 1877, and when Mrs. Leford married again she chose for her husband Calvin Luther Newlin, by whom she had a daughter, Stella G., now the wife of Espy Hawthorn of Fresno County.

Mr. Newlin and family started from the Kansas homestead en route for California via Texas, but stopped two years in Colorado, from which place, in 1891, they landed in the Golden State. Walter resided in Redlands, after his arrival here on May 5, 1891, and for seventeen years he worked at the trade of carpenter. He had learned the trade earlier in life and was capable to do any and all kinds of work in his line and helped to build up the city of Redlands as well as the surrounding country. In 1908 he came to Orange County and bought his present ranch and upon this he has placed all the improvements. He began in the poultry business in a small way and gradually increased his production of eggs and his broods, now having some 2,000 laying hens of the single-comb White Leghorn breed. He raises chicks for commercial purposes as well. His housing pen is 200x20 feet, and that and other buildings necessary for the conduct of his business have been built by himself, and it was here that his knowledge of carpenter work has stood him in good stead. He has gradually built up a profitable business and become an authority on raising chickens.

Mr. Ledford was united in marriage in Parker County, Texas, May 15, 1896, with Miss Martha E., a daughter of Thomas B. and Martha A. (Martin) Callison, the latter a cousin of Congressman John D. Alderson of Virginia. Mrs. Ledford was born in West Virginia and came to California after her marriage and this has since been her home. Mr. and Mrs. Ledford have had eleven children, nine of whom are living: Calvin T., served in the World War in the heavy artillery and was in training at Camp Lewis when the armistice was signed. He is married and has two children, Margaret and Elizabeth A., and the family live at Buena Park. The others are Muriel A., George L., Walter D., Carl H., Gladys M., Dora L., Grace A. L., and Robert C. Politically Mr. Ledford is independent of party and casts his vote for the men and measures that he deems most important for the good of the county and people. He is a member of the Masonic order, Buena Park Lodge, No. 357, F. & A. M., and is held in high esteem by the members of that order.

WILLET S. DECKER.—One of the most successful and, therefore, one of the best-known contractors and builders in Orange County, who has also demonstrated his ability to manage and maintain a fine lemon grove, is Willet S. Decker, who was born at Newton Center, near Scranton, Pa., on May 21, 1862, the son of Amzi and Sophia (Shoemaker) Decker. His grandfather, on his father's side, was a pioneer of Luzerne, later Lackawanna County, Pa., and had much to do with the history of Newton Center, being one of its leading citizens.

Willet S. Decker learned the art of building in Pennsylvania, and as foreman for C. F. Ward, Taylor and Company, and also Conrad Schrader, broadened his experience into contracting. On June 22, 1897, he landed in California, and started to work for George E. Preble at Santa Ana, and in sixty days he was made foreman, with such satisfactory results all around that he remained for thirteen years with Mr. Preble. He had the building of the Masonic Temple, the First Presbyterian Church and the Congregational Church, and in May, 1910, he was appointed deputy state engineer and placed in charge of the construction of the additional buildings at the Whittier State School, as well as the repair of the buildings of that institution. In August, 1912, he was appointed building inspector for the board of education of Santa Ana, and superintended the erection of the new Polytechnic high school, and also the Spurgeon school, both of which were completed in the fall of 1913.

The next four seasons, from 1913 to 1917, Mr. Decker was house foreman for the Santa Ana Valley Walnut Growers packing and shipping establishment, and spent from September to December in the packing house, while he did contracting and building for the rest of the year. Since 1917 he has busied himself mostly with general contracting. Mr. Decker also has another absorbing interest, a beautiful lemon grove of ten acres, at Yorba Linda, lying in the new gusher oil district, which he purchased in January, 1912. All the trees are about nine years old and in excellent bearing, the grove having a record of being one of the best producers for its age of any in the district.

On September 23, 1897, Mr. Decker was married to Miss Jettie M. Winslow, the daughter of J. B. and Hannah Winslow, who are at present residing amid a circle of devoted friends at 1119 North Main Street, Santa Ana. While Mr. Decker was superintending the construction of the new additions to the Whittier State School, Mrs. Decker was the school's popular assistant matron. The family attend the Congregational Church at Santa Ana, and Mr. Decker is an enthusiastic Mason, having been made a Mason in Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M. He is also a member of Santa Ana Chapter No. 73, R. A. M., Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M., Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, K. T., and with his wife is a member of Hermosa Chapter No. 105, O. E. S. He is also a life member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Los Angeles. One son, James, blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Decker. In national politics Mr. Decker is a Republican, but in local affairs he is properly non-partisan in his views.

WILLIAM I. WALLER.—Probably the largest individual rancher in Orange County, and also one of its most successful, is William I. Waller, who is operating 3,500 acres at present, practically the whole acreage being devoted to grain farming. Mr. Waller was born at Conway, Ark., August 18, 1876, and the following year the family moved to California, settling near Santa Ana. His parents were Samuel R. and Emma (Holderfield) Waller, both natives of Arkansas. Samuel R. Waller crossed the plains to California with his parents in 1849, afterwards returning to Arkansas. When eighteen years of age he enlisted in the Confederate Army, serving in the Civil War, during which time he was wounded in one of the battles in which he participated.

Stellat Shlecker

After the war he was married and engaged in farming. His wife died in 1882 and in 1885 he brought his children to California and he is still living and makes his home with the subject of this review, who is the only one living of a family of two girls and two boys.

William I. Waller started out at an early age to make his own way in the world, his first employment being on the San Joaquin ranch, where his wages were twenty dollars a month. The years that followed were filled with long hours and hard work, but he finally accumulated sufficient to start to ranching for himself. He leased 320 acres of the San Joaquin ranch and here he went through three dry years in succession, an experience that would have daunted one less courageous, but Mr. Waller stayed right by his project, even being compelled to go into debt for his seed. He then removed to the Whiting ranch, farming there three years, and in August, 1911, he leased the present place, a part of the Santa Margarita ranch. As the years went on, however, he began to prosper and gradually added to his acreage until he now cultivates 3,500 acres, 2,000 acres being in wheat this year. A large part of this acreage is Trabuco Mesa ranch of Jerome O'Neill, ten miles above El Toro. Each year Mr. Waller summer fallows 500 acres, keeping 3,000 acres in grain crops, and thus the land lies fallow one year in every seven, in this way keeping the soil fertile and capable of producing a full crop.

Mr. Waller has his places splendidly equipped with the latest machinery, and he has at least $40,000 invested in horses, mules, tractors, headers, mowers, threshers, etc., and he has a well-equipped blacksmith shop that is ample to handle all his work. He resides in Trabuco Canyon on the Mesa ranch and here he uses a seventy-five horsepower Holt tractor and a Holt combined harvester and thresher, besides about sixty horses and mules, in taking care of his immense grain crops. The other ranch, which is known as the Governor Adour ranch, and which is also a part of Santa Margarita ranch, consists of 1,200 acres. Here Mr. Waller uses two headers and for his threshing a Rumely separator.

Mrs. Waller was in maidenhood Miss Pearl Johnson, a native daughter of California, who was born in Santa Ana, whose parents were pioneers of Santa Ana, and she presides over their ranch home with grace and dignity. Two children have been born of this union: Vivian and William. By his first marriage Mr. Waller has one child, Eula.

Starting in life with no financial assistance, Mr. Waller put in many years of hard work in order to get the capital which would enable him to begin his own ranching operations, but he has made a splendid success and now ranks high among the prosperous agriculturists of Orange County. In politics, Mr. Waller has always been consistent in his allegiance to the Democratic party.

GEORGE M. ROSS.—The real estate business presents opportunities for the exercise of the best efforts and energies of representative men of the community and George M. Ross, secretary of the Orange County Realty Company and secretary and manager of the Anaheim Walnut Growers Association has gained a position of prominence in this line of enterprise. He was born on a farm near Moran, Allen County, Kans., on June 29, 1879, and is the son of William A. and Ella (Southard) Ross, natives of Ohio, the father being reared in Missouri and Wisconsin and in the latter state he was married in La Crosse where his father and his grandfather, James H. Ross, were engaged in lumbering and logging until they located in Allen County, Kans., and in that country went through the days of the drought and grasshoppers. Grandfather Ross died in 1910 at Pasadena, Cal. He had served in a Missouri regiment in the Civil War and from there they moved to Wisconsin. Of Southern lineage the Ross family trace their ancestry back through the early settlers of New England to England and Scotland. William A. Ross now resides in Anaheim and is president of the Orange County Realty Company. In 1903 the family came to California and located at Anaheim.

The oldest child in a family of three boys, George M., attended the rural and high schools in his native state and graduated from business college at Ottawa, Kans. After this he was employed in the bridge and building department of the Missouri Pacific Railroad one year and then came to California in 1903, where he was with a fruit company at Los Angeles for six months. Following this he went to Anaheim and engaged in the dairy business for a year and a half. Disposing of his interest in the dairy he helped organize the Anaheim Gas Company, of which he was secretary and manager for three years. He then sold his interest to the Southern Counties Gas Company and engaged in his present line of work, selling realty. After seven years in business in 1915 with his father, William A., and brother, Walter J., he incorporated the Orange County Realty Company to carry on the business on a larger scale, and of which he is secretary and an active partner. The firm are dealers in real estate and build residences in Anaheim which are sold to homeseekers and they have met with increasing success. He is secretary, director and manager of the Anaheim Walnut Growers Association and a great part of his time is claimed by his duties in this capacity. He is also a director of the California Walnut Growers Association and takes an active part in its deliberations.

In establishing domestic ties he chose Miss Marion Johnston of Ontario, Canada, as his life companion, to whom he was united in marriage June 12, 1912, the fruit of their union being a son named Donald Livingston. In his religious associations he is a member of the Presbyterian Church of Anaheim and was superintendent of the Sunday school for eight years. He is also active in the Y. M. C. A. work and was treasurer of the first county Y. M. C. A. organization west of the Rockies. Politically he casts his vote with the Republican party and in his fraternal relations is identified with the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Anaheim Chamber of Commerce, having served as a director and is an enterprising, progressive, public-spirited citizen who takes a warm interest in Orange County's welfare and is active in the civic improvement of his home town, where his sterling integrity has won the esteem of many friends.

ALFRED W. FINCH.—A highly-esteemed member of the Maccabees of Santa Ana, and a successful rancher, is Alfred W. Finch, who was born in Bedford, Ohio, on June 7, 1884, the son of Charles and Elizabeth I. (Robinson) Finch, born in Cambridgeshire, England, and Cleveland, Ohio, respectively. The mother was the daughter of Alfred and Nelga (Bruce) Robinson, who trace their ancestry back to Robert Bruce of Scotland. Great-great-grandfather Robinson made the trip with ox-teams and wagons from Connecticut, coming to the site of Cleveland, Ohio, and camping in the heart of what is now that large and beautifully built-up city. Alfred Robinson became a navigator on the Great Lakes, and for many years sailed as a captain on lake vessels. Charles Finch, a brother of the late John A. Finch, of Spokane, Wash., who became a millionaire miner in the Coeur d'Alene district, was a groceryman in Bedford, and when he removed to Cleveland in 1886, entered the employ of the American Wire and Steel Rolling Mill Company. At the end of seven years, however, he moved onto a farm near Elyria, Ohio, and there Alfred attended school.

The young man had other tastes than those of agriculture, and so went in for interior decorating, evidencing his talent in the execution of commissions in his home vicinity. He commenced to work for himself, in fact, when he was fifteen years old, and he remained an interior decorator in Ohio until he came to California, in 1904. Then, in partnership with his father, who had also come here, he established a grocery and meat market at the corner of Sixteenth and Arlington streets, Los Angeles. When his father died, on March 7, 1908, Mr. Finch continued the business alone until the following February.

With his mother and his family, he came to Santa Ana in 1909, and purchased a ranch of ten acres, seven of which were set out to oranges and three to walnuts and apricots, interseted. They installed a pumping plant with a Layne-Boller pump and a Westinghouse motor having a capacity of seventy-five inches, for irrigating their orchard, selling the surplus to adjoining orchardists.

On February 24, 1913, Mr. Finch was married to Miss Frances Rawson, a native of Wabasha, Minn., and the daughter of George and Nellie Rawson. Mr. Rawson was a conductor on the first train to pass over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad from Wabasha to Faribault, and he helped to develop that valuable system. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Finch moved onto a walnut grove of five acres on San Juan Street, Tustin; but a year later he removed to Los Angeles and entered the employ of Albert Cohn on West Washington Street, still later working at their downtown store. In 1914, he moved back to Santa Ana, where he was employed by the Santa Ana Sugar Company.

While busied there, on October 22, 1918, Mrs. Finch, who had become the center of a large circle of appreciative friends, passed away, and on the eighteenth of the following month, Mr. Finch's mother died, having succumbed to influenza. One child, Harold W. Finch, died in infancy. Not long after these sudden afflictions, Mr. Finch visited his wife's people in Minnesota, and then went to Utah to sell a ranch of 240 acres. Since then, he has made his home on the North Main Street ranch, living with his brothers and sisters, and assists in managing the old homestead. Besides himself, Raymond C. Finch is operating the home ranch; John A. is with the Western Union Telegraph Company in Santa Ana; Leonard B. is with the Beach Manufacturing Company, Los Angeles, and Jennie I., Mrs. Marion Hopkins of Santa Ana. Leonard served in the United States Army auto school in Los Angeles during the late war. Fraternally, Mr. Finch is a member of the Knights of the Maccabees.

Alfred William Finch.

EDWARD D. MARION.—For over thirty years the ranch property now known as the E. D. Marion orange grove, on the Garden Grove-Anaheim Boulevard, has been in the possession of the Marion family. It was purchased in 1887 by E. D. Marion, Sr., upon the arrival of the family here from Denver, Colo. He had but limited means and this he invested in six acres of unimproved land located near the Fairview schoolhouse, to which their children were sent until that district was discontinued and a better and larger building erected at West Anaheim. Improvements were immediately started to make a comfortable home by the erection of a house, which at that time was the only one between Anaheim and Garden Grove, and they kept cows and chickens and did farming on a small scale, at the same time adding improvements from time to time, for Mr. Marion believed it the best policy to "pay as you go," which he always did. He was a native of New York state, but in early life went to Colorado where he was united in marriage, in Denver, with Miss Mary Davis, a native of England, who had come to Colorado early in her life. In Denver Mr. Marion conducted a nursery and greenhouse for many years. They became the parents of four children, all born in Denver: Mary, was married to James Johnson in May, 1901, in Los Angeles; they went to Needles, where he died on February 23, 1916, and there his widow still lives; Anna, died on March 31, 1894; George K., was born on February 21, 1881, and died May 30, 1890; and Edward D., of this review, who was born on May 14, 1880. The father died on April 1, 1906, and the mother lived about a year, passing away in 1907, both highly esteemed by all who knew them.

After the death of the father, E. D., Jr., began to make further improvements on the property by setting out Valencia oranges, having to go to San Dimas for his stock because there was none nearer. His were the first trees to be set out on the Garden Grove highway; soon others followed and today this section has become the center of the Valencia orange district of the county. He is a member of the Orange Growers Association at Anaheim. This grove has proven to be one of the best of producers and his ranch is recognized as one of the show places in this locality. He replaced the original house with a modern structure in 1919 and now enjoys all the conveniences of city life.

Having spent nearly all his life in Orange County, where he attended the grammar and high schools of Anaheim, it is but natural that he should take a just pride in the advancement of the locality where he has lived for so many years and he has given his support to all movements for the betterment of social and moral conditions that have been brought to his notice. On December 4, 1914, in Anaheim, he was united in marriage with Miss Pauline Domke, a native of Iowa and the daughter of August Domke. Their union has been blessed by the birth of a daughter, Anita. Mr. Marion is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, also of the Masons and the Knights of Pythias. In politics he is a Republican and the family belong to the Presbyterian Church.

ANAHEIM FEED AND FUEL COMPANY.—Among the old established business firms at Anaheim is that of the Anaheim Feed and Fuel Company, located at 242 West Center Street. The business was established by R. W. McClellan, and was conducted under his name until 1917, when W. D. Grafton became interested in the business and the firm name was changed to The Anaheim Feed and Fuel Company. September 29, 1919, A. V. Vail bought Mr. McClellan's interest in the business and became a partner of Mr. Grafton. The business, established a number of years ago, has gradually grown to its present dimensions, and is the largest in its line in Orange County. The new home of the firm fronts on Center and Oak streets, and they have the only public weighing scales in the town. They do a large business in orchard supplies, are agents for the Pacific Guano Fertilizer Company, and also deal extensively in seeds and poultry supplies. Both members of the firm have been successful orange growers and are widely known, and have been actively connected with the growth of Orange County for many years.

William D. Grafton, the son of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Grafton of Cambridge, Iowa, was born in Story County, Iowa, July 6, 1875. He completed his education at the Cambridge, Iowa, high school, and took a course in business college at Des Moines, Iowa. He was afterward assistant department manager for the Harris Emery Company, the largest department store in Des Moines. He was with the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, at Anaconda and Bonner, Mont., for sixteen years, and from there came to Los Angeles, Cal., and engaged in the hay and grain business. Later he came to Orange County and became an orange grower in the Orange district, and in 1919 became a partner in the Anaheim Feed and Fuel Company. His marriage with Miss Lois Newport has been blessed by the birth of three children, namely, William W., Helen and Nelly Kathryn. Fraternally he affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and is a member of the encampment.

The junior member of the firm, Albert V. Vail, is a native of Muscatine, Iowa, where he was born April 30, 1882. His father, now deceased, was a native of New York state. His mother, who survives her husband, was in maidenhood Bertha Mouché. She is of French parentage and was born in Austria. The father came to California first in 1886, then he returned to the East and in 1888 brought his family to California with him, arriving at Anaheim, March 3, of that year. For many years he was engaged in ranching, raising grain and vegetables in the Fullerton district. In politics he was a Democrat, and was active and very prominent in the politics of his party. He was a member of the Orange County Democratic Central Committee.

Albert V. attended the public schools of Fullerton, and supplemented this with a course at the Santa Ana Business College. He followed the occupation of farming and was engaged in the transfer business at Fullerton, and was also an orange grower in the Fullerton district. He now owns two orange and lemon groves on which oil is being developed. He was the founder of the El Camino Water Company, one of the best irrigation systems in the county, and September 29, 1919, became a member of the firm of The Anaheim Feed and Fuel Company. His marriage with Miss Freda Backs, a native of Anaheim, resulted in the birth of two children, Frederick and Albertha. Mr. Vail was formerly a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks, and when the Anaheim-Fullerton lodge of the order was instituted he became a charter member of it, and was the first tyler of the lodge.

PERRY MILLER.—To develop a productive and profitable ranch from desert land, construct commodious and substantial buildings and in every way to equip the place for successful general farming—to accomplish all this in a few years bespeaks an enterprising and experienced rancher. This is an epitome of Perry Miller's thirteen years of ranching in Orange County. He was born on February 5, 1857, in Sandusky County, Ohio, a son of Jacob and Mary Miller, who were both natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were the parents of five children, Perry being the only one residing in California. When he was one year old his parents moved to Michigan and in that state he received his early education, and there his parents died before he was nine years of age.

In 1889 Mr. Miller migrated to Fremont County, Iowa, where he followed general farming until 1906, when he came to Southern California and in 1907, located in Orange County, Cal. A year previous he had purchased fifty-six acres of unimproved land located on what is now West Orangethorpe Avenue, at the Los Angeles County line. With his characteristic energy and progressive spirit he at once began to improve and develop the land until today he possesses a splendid homestead as the fruit of his industry and enterprise.

In Branch County, Mich., in 1883, Mr. Miller was united in marriage with Miss Belle Baker, a native of Michigan, and the daughter of John and Parthenia (Dutcher) Baker, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively. One son, C. L., was born to them; he is married to Lucy Ball of Downey, Cal., and two children have blessed their union—Dorothy and Perry. In religious matters Mr. Miller is a Spiritualist and in politics he is an Independent, giving his voice and vote to the men and measures he conscientiously believes the best for the welfare of the community and nation.

HARVEY F. HARTMAN.—One of the best posted men in his special line of endeavor, and a recognized authority on the cultivation and propagation of chili peppers is Harvey F. Hartman, of Buena Park district, Orange County. He devotes one-half of his thirty-acre ranch to raising the popular Mexican, Anaheim and Pimento chili peppers, so much used, in both their green and ripe state, in canning, pickles and cookery. Mr. Hartman was born in Toledo, Ohio, on December 3, 1881, a son of Frederick C. and Anna Hartman; the father being a native of Germany, the mother of the Buckeye State. Mrs. Hartman passed away in 1882, when Harvey was but nine months old. F. C. Hartman brought his family to California in 1894; he followed the trade of a cabinet maker but in later years took up horticulture. He passed to his eternal reward in 1911, in Pasadena.

Harvey F. Hartman received his early education in the public schools of Ohio and after removing to California attended the splendid schools of Pasadena. Later his education was supplemented by a special course in a correspondence school, after which he pursued a special study of the science of horticulture and seed selection, in which he has attained signal success and made for himself a prominent place in the horticultural and agricultural circles of his community. In addition to his specializing in chili peppers Mr. Hartman devotes half of his ranch to general farming; he thoroughly understands the cultivation and peculiarities of the soil in this vicinity and is an authority on the most suitable crops to be propagated. He has resided on his ranch near Buena Park since 1909 and has greatly improved the place.

Frank R. Lagougue
Mary Lagougue

On May 1, 1906, Harvey F. Hartman was united in marriage with Miss Rose Bastady, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Imanuel Bastady and this happy union has been blessed with four children: Rosalie Marie, Helen Esther, Ida Mae and Frank Christian. Mrs. Hartman is a native of Basel, Switzerland. The family are members of the Congregational Church of Buena Park. During his residence in Orange County, Mr. Hartman has contributed his share to the substantial development of agriculture and horticulture in the county and is an honored member of the Farm Bureau of Buena Park. Having been interested in floriculture while living in Pasadena, he still retains his love for the beautiful by his membership in the Floricultural Society of that city. Believing there is a great future for the dahlia, he is beginning the cultivation of special varieties on a small scale on his ranch.

FRANK R. LAGOURGUE.—A successful rancher and an influential member of the Anaheim Citrus Union, Frank R. Lagourgue has more than one interesting story to tell of the past as it affected either himself or his forebears. He was born in Sac City, Sac County, Iowa, the son of William V. and Elizabeth (Austin) Lagourgue. His father was born in Jamaica, West Indies, where the grandfather William Lagourgue, who was a native of France, was a large sugar planter. In time he disposed of his holdings in Jamaica and located in Cleveland, Ohio, where he was a lumberman until his death. William V. Lagourgue as a young man sailed on the Great Lakes, then located in Iowa and was one of the first one-half dozen settlers of Sac County. Here Frank received his early schooling at Sac City, and when sixteen years old moved to Gage County, Nebr. His father purchased school land near Beatrice and also some land from the Otoe Indians, and he had a large farm where he raised wheat and corn. Frank continued his studies for a while after coming to Nebraska, and more and more caught the spirit of the West which was to lead him on to his greater accomplishment on the shore of the Pacific.

On November 30, 1882, Frank R. Lagourgue was married to Miss Mary Latta, a native of Minnesota, and a member of a family that moved to Indiana and then to Nebraska, in 1880. Her parents Robt. S. and Mary Latta, natives of Illinois and Ohio, respectively, came of splendid old Eastern stock, her father being a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, very highly esteemed for his earnestness and devotion to his calling. After his marriage Mr. Lagourgue engaged in the drug business in Odell, Nebr., and later in Imperial, Chase County, Nebr. In the fall of 1901 he drove overland with a team and wagon to Stillwater, Okla., and there lived for a winter. On April 1, 1902, he came to California and settled at Anaheim, and here purchased a home on East Center Street, in which he lived for a few years. In 1908, he bought ten acres on Placentia Avenue, cleared the land, developed water and set out Valencia oranges. In 1914, however, he sold out and purchased a ranch on Liberty Lane, north of Anaheim, and since then he has made that farm his home ranch, dispensing there to all who come an acceptable hospitality. All these years he has engaged in contracting and painting in Anaheim and vicinity, his work being most excellent and highly appreciated. Five children were granted Mr. and Mrs. Lagourgue: Carl R. lives in Wasco, Cal.; Alta is a bank clerk of Glendale, Ariz.; Robert V. resides in Pomona; Bernice has become Mrs. E. L. Hartwell of Long Beach; while Frank died at the age of nine years. Mrs. Lagourgue is a member of the Free Methodist Church in Garden Grove. Mr. Lagourgue is vice-president of the Northeast Water Company, from which he irrigates his ranch. A member of the Masonic fraternity he is affiliated with Anaheim Lodge, F. & A. M.

Mr. Lagourgue's father recalls with interest the fact that in early days the very Indians that massacred the settlers of New Ulm, Minn., used his farm in Iowa as their camping ground. He treated the Redmen kindly, and they in turn never molested him or his family. And when one of his horses followed the Indians' horses as they took their leave, an Indian, discovering the wandering beast, brought it back and tied it in his father's yard.

EDWARD CHAFFEE.—The son of honored pioneers of Orange County, Edward Chaffee, of Garden Grove, is a Californian in all but birth, having been a resident of the state since he was five years old. He was born on the Chaffee farm near Elgin, Ill., March 16, 1876, the son of Albert J. and Susan (Ambrose) Chaffee, who are mentioned elsewhere in this volume. In 1881 the family removed to California, settling at Garden Grove, then Los Angeles County. Here the lad grew up, attending the public schools at Garden Grove, and later taking a two years' course at the State Normal School at Los Angeles. In the meantime he was brought up to do hard work on his father's grain and dairy farm, learning thoroughly how to master all the problems that go with making a success in agriculture. When he reached manhood he began farming on his own account, and he is now the owner of a profitable ranch of forty-five acres, half a mile northeast of Garden Grove. In addition he farms eighty-five acres of rented land in the vicinity. Always progressive in his ideas, Mr. Chaffee has kept pace with the changes brought about by the successive steps in the progress of the country. At one time he was interested in the production of celery, but when other crops became more profitable he at once turned his attention to them and has made a marked success in raising sugar beets, lima beans and alfalfa. He has erected a comfortable country residence on his ranch, and also improved the place with barns and other buildings. Some time ago he set out four acres of apricots and they are now bearing profitably. For the past six seasons he has operated a bean thresher in partnership with R. A. Oldfield.

Mr. Chaffee's marriage, which occurred on July 10, 1902, united him with Miss Carrie S. Pullen, who was reared at Arcola, Ill., and came to California in 1896. Six children, all boys, have been born to them: Clare S., Harold E., Milton A., Robert A., Walter B., and John D. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove. Mr. Chaffee takes an active interest in the development of Garden Grove, particularly in furthering the interests of the Garden Grove Lima Bean Growers Association, which he helped organize, and of which he is the secretary. He is also a member of the Garden Grove Farm Bureau and Chamber of Commerce, and for six years was secretary for the Orange County Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Mrs. Chaffee justly shares her husband's popularity in the community and the whole family is highly esteemed.

FRED DORN.—A liberal-minded, kind-hearted, sterling fellow, who has proven both a builder up and an upbuilder of Anaheim, is Fred Dorn, who was born in Alsace-Lorraine, on March 31, 1867, the son of George Dorn, a native of that country and a stonemason, and also a member of an old family. He married Caroline Smith, a model woman of her land and generation, and one who influenced most helpfully the subject of our sketch. Both parents are now deceased.

Fred, the only one in the United States, to which country he came when he was fifteen, in 1882, attended the public schools of his locality, where he received a good grounding in the essentials of education. When he reached Ford County, Ill., he began to work on a farm, and continued his schooling in the winter time. Two years later, he removed to Adams County, Nebr., where he continued to work as a farm hand. He there rented land, raised grain and stock, got more and more familiar with American conditions, and both in his successes and failures prepared himself for the next great step in his career, his removal to the Pacific Coast.

This was effected in 1890, when he removed to California and settled for a while at Fillmore, in Ventura County where he secured ten acres and went in for general farming. At the end of seven years, however, he sold out and moved south to Los Angeles, where he was in the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad Company. He next engaged as a contractor in cement construction, and for another seven years followed that line of activity.

In 1907 he bought his present place of eighteen acres at Anaheim—raw land, where he had to grub out the eucalyptus and the apricot trees from three or more acres. He set out a vineyard, raised stock, had orange trees which he budded to excellent Valencias, so that with the exception of an acre and a half of lemons, he has devoted much of his land to oranges of that type. He belongs to the Mutual Orange Distributors Association, where his experience carries weight.

JOHN C. ELBINGER.—A progressive rancher, who owns twenty well-improved acres, devoted to oranges and walnuts, in the West Anaheim district of Orange County, is John C. Elbinger, a native of Germany, where he first saw the light of day on August 24, 1849. His parents, George and Mary Elbinger, were also natives of Germany and their family consisted of two children, John C. and Elizabeth.

When twenty-six years of age, John C. Elbinger immigrated to the United States so he could enjoy a greater degree of liberty in the pursuit of life and happiness and where so many great opportunities were offered to enterprising and ambitious young men—opportunities such as they could never hope to enjoy in their native land. After his arrival in this country Mr. Elbinger resided for a short time in Kankakee County, Ill., but in March, 1877, migrated to Nebraska, farmed there four years in Saunders County and in 1881 he went to South Dakota where he took up 320 acres of land and engaged in general farming and stockraising. The land was located in territory formerly occupied by Indians. He improved the land, developed the place into a good paying farm and remained in South Dakota for twenty years. Mr. Elbinger's superior business ability and expert knowledge of land values were recognized by his fellow-citizens in his election to the important position of county assessor of Douglas County, a post he filled with credit to himself and great satisfaction to the tax-paying public for the period of fifteen years.

Mr & Mrs Joseph P. Mayhew

During the year 1901, John C. Elbinger moved to the Pacific Coast, coming directly to Riverside County, Cal., where he purchased ten acres, slightly improved, and devoted the ranch exclusively to oranges. Ten acres soon became too small for such an ambitious and progressive man as Mr. Elbinger, he sold it and removed to Orange County where he purchased his present ranch in 1908. The land was partly improved when he took possession, but he began more extensive improvements, setting out walnut and orange trees and in due time developed his place into a most profitable ranch where he has a comfortable house and most pleasant surroundings. His career it but another illustration of what thrift, frugality and well-directed effort, coupled with the judicious management of one's financial affairs, can accomplish.

In 1877 Mr. Elbinger was united in marriage with Miss Marguerite England, this happy union being blessed with a son, George Elbinger, who married Miss Catherine Haas, and they are the parents of twin girls, Elizabeth and Agnes. In 1910 Mr. Elbinger was bereft of his loving and faithful helpmate. During his residence in Orange County he has filled minor offices of trust and responsibility and always manifested a deep concern in the development of the best interests of Orange County.

JOSEPH P. MAYHEW.—A self-made, very successful man whose public-spirit-edness has actuated him to share with others some of his successful opportunities and, more than once, to point the way so that his fellow-citizens might attain to the same sort of prosperity his foresight enabled him to divine, is Joseph P. Mayhew, who returned to Anaheim and the Orange County country, notwithstanding his good luck further east, because he had received such a favorable impression of Southern California when he first came here to look around. He was born at Calumet, N. Y., on December 13, 1852, the son of Mark A. Mayhew, who was born and reared in England, followed a seafaring life for sixteen years, and before he left Great Britain, married Miss Sarah Young, also English by birth. After their eldest son, William A. Mayhew, later a resident of Danville, Ill., had been born, Mr. and Mrs. Mayhew migrated from England, and in 1850 located at Calumet, N. Y., Mr. Mayhew turning his hand to anything which would enable him to support himself and family. Three years later, he moved west to Illinois and settled near Sheldon, in Iroquois County, and there bought forty acres of raw land upon which he put up a log cabin. He steadily improved his farm and also added to it, until he had 120 acres; prospering to a happy degree, save in the death of his devoted wife, in 1866. Just forty years later, on April 21, he closed his own career in death.

These worthy British-Americans had six sons and one daughter, and Joseph was the second in the order of birth. He was reared near Sheldon, attended the primitive schools of that locality and period, and assisted his father at home until his twenty-first year. Three days before Christmas, in 1873, at Clifton, Ill., he married Miss Nancy A. Karnes, a native of Momence, Ill., who was reared in Illinois, receiving most of her education in Kankakee County, Ill. Her father was John Karnes, while the maiden name of her mother was Mary Reynolds. After marrying, they rented land for three years in Iroquois County, and then purchased and developed eighty acres of prairie land which Mr. Mayhew in two short years made highly productive.

Having rented his farm, Mr. Mayhew in February, 1879 joined the Rinehart family, his wife's adopted parents, and removed to Nebraska, where they located in Seward County, and there for a while again rented land. Then he purchased eighty acres, which he improved and lived upon until the late eighties. About that time, he came out to California and to Anaheim, and what he saw here so favorably impressed him that he decided to remove to the Coast as soon as he could afford to do so. He returned, however, to Nebraska, devoting his time to buying and shipping live stock to South Omaha and Chicago; his headquarters were at Beaver Crossing, Nebr.; here he continued with success until 1907, when he came out to Anaheim for good.

While on a second trip to California in 1893, Mr. Mayhew had purchased forty acres of unimproved land, and on his return he bought a number of town lots and a ranch of fifteen acres east of Anaheim, now rich with full-bearing Valencia oranges. When he started in Nebraska as a young man, Mr. Mayhew had less than ten dollars in his pocket; but by hard, honest work and care to look ahead, he built up a large trade shipping stock and poultry, averaging as much as $13,000 worth a month. Since his advent in Orange County, Mr. Mayhew has speculated a good deal in real estate, and has always been phenomenally successful. Mr. and Mrs. Mayhew are members of the First Christian Church at Anaheim, and he is a Mason, retaining his membership in Prudence Lodge No. 179, A. F. & A. M. at Beaver Crossing, Nebr. A brother of Mrs. Mayhew, John E. Karnes, has been a well-known business man of Santa Rosa.

WESLEY C. HEFFERN.—A far-seeing, well-posted oil man, whose good judgment is appreciated by all who have to do with him, is Wesley C. Heffern, who was born near Oil City, Venango County, Pa., on October 6, 1875. His father, George Heffern, of Scotch-Irish descent, was born near Meadville, Crawford County, Pa., and was for some years a farmer and stock raiser engaged in the wholesale cattle business. Then he became an oil man—an oil producer and a contractor in the oil fields, and still later, he took up the wholesaling of cattle again, and made his headquarters at Oil City until he died. Sad to relate, he met his death in a tragic manner, gored by an infuriated bull. Wesley's mother, Rebecca Bishop before her marriage, was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born near Pittsburgh; and she now resides in Oil City, the mother of fourteen children, thirteen of whom grew up, while eleven are still living.

Wesley was the seventh eldest, and was sent to the public schools of Oil City. From a lad, however, he learned the oil trade, and when only twelve years of age entered the office of the Standard Oil Company, in the beginning running an elevator in their first building in Oil City, and then acting as office boy in the company's offices. Then he went out to work on their lease, beginning with the wells from the bottom up.

In 1902, the company sent Mr. Heffern to Bakersfield, Cal., and for six years he worked for them in this state. He operated, by contract, the pipe lines, stations and reservoirs and tanks between Bakersfield and Coalinga, and also between Bakersfield and Point Richmond for the Standard Oil Company.

In 1908 he left the Standard's service, and struck out into the Lost Hills and other places, where he made several locations which later were demonstrated to be good gas and oil territory. Among others, he located the land that eventually came in as the Lake View Gusher, and tried to interest Bakersfield capital; but they laughed at him and turned him down, and he had to let it go back—could not hold it. He finally succeeded in selling some of his locations, and settled in San Diego, where he bought a residence. He also purchased a ranch in the Imperial Valley, and one near San Diego, devoted to fruit and vegetables.

In 1914, Mr. Heffern went to Texas and leased 110,000 acres of land for oil prospecting; but he could not get capital interested in them, and again he had to let the opportunity and fortune go, for wells are now as thick as peas in that same great field. As early as 1912, he had come to Orange County to look over some oil property for certain San Diego parties; and, becoming especially interested, he made several trips here, and from personal observation and investigation, chose the territory east of Placentia as best of all for oil prospects.

In 1916, Mr. Heffern removed from San Diego to Orange County, and now resides on his orange grove ranch southeast of Placentia. It was Mr. Heffern who first selected the location, and interested the Union Oil Company in the Chapman well area. He obtained leases here, and in 1919 formed the Heffern Oil Company, which is now drilling for and developing oil on his own property. Having thus run the course of this thirteen years of very valuable experience, Mr. Heffern has become one of the best-posted oil men in the state, and one in whom the small and the large investor may well have confidence.

At San Diego, Mr. Heffern was married to Miss Pauline Schnepf, a native of that city, and a lady of accomplishment; and they have had three children, Marie, Dick and Margerie. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Heffern in national political campaigns marches under the banners of the Republican party.

CHALMERS T. FOSTER.—One of the attractive ranches for its size in Orange County, which until 1910 was a mere beet field, is that owned by Chalmers T. Foster, who resides on South Brookhurst near Anaheim, where he cultivates sixteen acres devoted to citrus fruits. The first thing that he did, on acquiring the land, was to set out orange trees of the choicest and most promising variety he could find; and today, in the large yield of the most luscious products, he is reaping the reward of his foresight, confidence and intelligent labor.

He is a native of Indiana, where he was born in 1856, a son of William L. Foster. His mother died when he was an infant. He was reared and educated in Indiana, and in 1903 removed from the Hoosier State to Washington, and there in the Palouse country engaged in mercantile business. Aside from that venture, Mr. Foster has always been identified with farming, or some feature of the agricultural industries. During his stay in Washington, for example, he also shipped veal and poultry to the market, and this added considerably to his experience.

Mr. Foster belongs to that superior, although unpretentious class of farmers who are willing to make some sacrifice to establish themselves on the best basis, and who then take pride in keeping their places in apple-pie order. He has an adequate well, sunk to the depth of 180 feet, with a ten-inch bore, affording seventy-five inches of water, and a first-class pumping plant, easily operated and dependable. He has a full complement of machinery and implements, and aims to keep everything in the best of order. He is a member of the Garden Grove Orange Association, the Orange County Produce Association, and vigorously supports any movement for the development of California husbandry, especially within his particular fields.

The marriage of Mr. Foster occurred in 1881, when he was united with Miss Catherine McClurkin, a native of Indiana, and three children have blessed their fortunate union. They are W. Vern, who assists his father; Rachel, a graduate from the Indiana State University and living at home; and Homer Foster, the latter a teacher in the Anaheim high school. He is a graduate of the Washington State College. As a citizen of standards and attainments, Mr. Foster is also a model to others in good citizenship.

THOMAS JOHN McCARTER.—The cultivation of English walnuts and Valencia oranges, now among the important industries of Southern California, giving much promise of further advancement, has been greatly promoted by just such experienced, aggressive and progressive agriculturists as Thomas J. McCarter, who owns and operates two ranches near Santa Ana, one of fifteen and the other sixteen acres, devoted to the growing of the above products. The exclusion of other products is due to Mr. McCarter's conviction that the heavy rich soil of the locality is better adapted to the growing of walnuts and citrus fruits than the general run of deciduous varieties.

Thomas McCarter was born in Guernsey County, Ohio, on July 10, 1850, a son of Joseph McCarter, a native of Scotland, who came to the United States and in this country married Eleanor Jane Reed, who was born on board a vessel on the Atlantic Ocean of Scotch-Irish parents. They had three children, and of these three, our subject and a sister, Mary Jane, survive. Mr. McCarter, the only one of the family residing in California, was reared and educated in Branch County, Mich., having removed there with his parents when quite young. In 1866 the family removed to Monroe County, Iowa, and later to Dade County, Mo., and finally to Cloud County, Kans., in 1872. Here Thomas McCarter homesteaded 160 acres of land and turned the first furrow, but the first crop was destroyed by grasshoppers. Nothing daunted, he persevered and succeeded in improving the place so that at the end of ten years he sold it to advantage. He then purchased eighty acres near Clay Center, Clay County, where he farmed until 1894, when he sold it and returned to Cloud County and bought a 200-acre farm adjoining his old homestead, where he continued general farming.

Mr. McCarter and his wife had always had a desire to make their home in California, so in February, 1903, they arrived in Orange County and were so delighted with the country that they sold their Kansas farm the next month. Having $4,000 to start with, he made a payment on thirty acres of raw stubble land on Ritchey Street, southeast of Santa Ana. By hard work, close application and economy, and aided by his wife and children, he has become a substantial and well-to-do man. He sold half of the acreage, so has fifteen acres left, which he has improved and beautified and now he has a comfortable home, which with its surroundings is just such a homestead as has always been a show place for those wishing to see what California can do for the settler. He also owns sixteen acres on McFadden and William streets, both places being devoted to raising walnuts and oranges. Aside from his present places Mr. McCarter bought and improved forty acres on the Newport Road, also twelve and a half acres on East McFadden Street, as well as improving half of his first ranch, which were sold at a good profit. In addition to the above, Mr. McCarter owned and improved about 100 acres located ten miles northwest of Fresno, where he resided with his family for about two and one-half years, setting it to figs and erecting a comfortable residence as well as other necessary buildings. However, having a decided preference for the climate in Orange County he sold the fig garden at a good profit and retired to his homestead in 1919.

In Dade County, Mo., in 1872, Mr. McCarter was married to Miss Mary Ellen Dunn, born in Iowa, the daughter of John and Elizabeth (Tedford) Dunn, natives of Pennsylvania and Tennessee, respectively, who spent their last days in comfort with Mr. and Mrs. McCarter in their California home. The father died in October, 1919, at the age of ninety-two and a half years, the mother preceding him, having passed away in 1916, at the age of eighty-six. Thirteen children blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. McCarter as follows: James Ira, who is residing in Fresno County; Etta Dell, deceased; Thomas R. of Whittier; John G., deceased; twins, who died in infancy; Ida May is Mrs. Binkley of Fresno; Frank of Santa Ana; Eugene L. of Tustin; Elizabeth M. is Mrs. Hatch, who lives near Tustin; Mary, who assists her mother in presiding over the home; Irving of Fresno; while Albert, the youngest, is manfully assisting his father to care for and enhance the value of their ranch property.

Mr. and Mrs. McCarter never regret having selected Orange County for their permanent home, for it has made life more pleasant to them and has not only crowned their efforts with success, but has enabled them to secure for their children the education their ambitions had planned and desired. Mr. McCarter and his family have always endeavored to stand for the highest and best in social and civic life and are among those whose influence for good in any community is of the most desirable, for it affects not only the generation in which they live and move, but also posterity coming after and inheriting the good or the evil sown by those who have gone before. A Covenanter—that is, a member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Mr. McCarter has also been a prohibitionist of the most pronounced type and has never swerved when called upon to do his duty in the councils of the church and state. Santa Ana could not felicitate itself, therefore, with more assurance and satisfaction than in the coming to Orange County of this fearless and broadly progressive pioneer.

THOMAS R. MORRIS.—Ten years' experience in the business of poultry raising has given Thomas R. Morris, of Cypress district, a thorough knowledge of this vocation, yet, withal, experience has taught him that there is always something to learn in the business.

His ranch, situated about one mile west of Cypress, comprises ten acres, and he owns in addition eight acres in another place. His hens, single-comb White Leghorns, are first-class layers, and number 1,800, with sixty males. He buys his feed by the carload, does his own grinding and raises his green feed, as well as some corn. His houses cover an area of 5,000 square feet. He sells eggs and does hatching for commercial purposes.

Mr. Morris, who is a native Kentuckian, was born on February 23, 1883, and is the only child of Allen G. and Henrietta Morris. He acquired his education in his native state, and has since been engaged principally in agricultural pursuits. He came to Orange County, Cal., in 1904, and in 1910 was happily united in marriage with Miss Juliett Hobbs, a native of Texas. Two children, Virginia and Marion by name, have blessed this union. Mr. Morris's love for the work in which he is engaged has played an important part in bringing the success which he has deservedly won. He is among the progressive poultrymen of his district and enjoys the full confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens.

MAAG RANCH.—Whoever is looking for a "show place" in Orange County will find himself well rewarded by a visit to the famous Maag Ranch, jointly and equally owned by the three brothers, William H., Joe A. and George W. Maag, widely known as belonging to the most progressive and most representative of Southern Californians. It lies four miles north of Olive, on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, and includes 124 acres in the Santa Ana Canyon.

Joe A. Maag, the eldest of the three enterprising young men, was born a native son, proud of his association with the Golden State, and of whom California may well be proud. at Orange, on June 20, 1890, attended the usual schools in Orange, and completed a course at the Orange County Business College. He spent his boyhood days at home, and contributed his full share to the "life" of the community in which he grew up. He could not fail to attain social popularity, and he is a popular member of the Santa Ana lodge of Elks.

William H., his brother, was also born at Orange, his birthday falling on February 6, 1894, and having attended the grade schools of Orange, he also went to and completed a course at the Orange County Business College, having in the meanwhile snatched at and secured fame in athletic sports. He ranched with his father until 1915, and on July 11, 1917, was married to Miss Katherine Kramer, a native of Illinois, who is a fine musician. This fortunate union has been blessed with one child, a little girl, Edwina Mary. Mrs. Maag's parents are residents of Santa Ana, and her father, M. Kramer, is a builder and carpenter of acknowledged ability.

George William Maag was born at Orange, and enjoyed the same educational advantages as his two brothers, and he also helped at home until he was twenty-one years of age. All three of these "good fellows" are valued members of the Knights of Columbus in Santa Ana.

Fifty of the 124 acres of the Maag Ranch have full-bearing Valencia orange trees, while forty acres are planted to full-bearing lemons. The wide-awake brothers, who believe in the old motto, "In union there is strength," have succeeded because they understand modern business methods, share the burden of all responsibility, and link their experience with hard work. Successful disposition of their crops is obtained through the Olive Heights Citrus Association at Olive. The remaining thirty-four acres of their beautiful farm is on the Santa Ana River, and is used for general farming. An interesting feature, and a very profitable one, is the source of their irrigating water. This is obtained from three wells, situated about fifteen to eighteen feet apart, and sunk near the river, which gives a never-failing supply lifted in a steady stream of seventy-five miner's inches, by a Gould suction pump, an indispensable part of the farm plant that is kept in action throughout the summer months. Then the concrete pipe line running throughout the citrus groves evenly distributes the water. Besides two head of horses and two mules, the Maag Brothers use a couple of up-to-date tractors.

William H. Maag lives in a beautiful modern bungalow, nicely located on the north side of the Santa Ana Boulevard, with a yard that is laid out symmetrically, and is an ornament to the place. A well there supplies the best of water for domestic use.

Orange County is fortunate in such progressive, aggressive young citizens as the Maag Brothers, with their ambition to attain only the highest results in their field, and to contribute something worth while to the development of the state in which they live and thrive.

VARD W. HANNUM.—A well-trained and thoroughly efficient public official is Vard W. Hannum, the city electrician and superintendent of the Municipal Power House at Anaheim. He was born in Hart, Oceana County, Mich., on June 28, 1883, and reared and educated there, duly graduating from the local high school. Then he went to New York City and took the excellent courses at the New York Electrical School; and from 1910 he was employed in the electrical department of the Union Carbide Company at Sault Saint Marie, Mich., after which he was a year with the Algoma Steel Company on the Canadian side.

In the fall of 1911, Mr. Hannum came to California and entered the service of the Pacific Electric Railroad Company, Los Angeles, giving them a year in their electrical department, in installation work at the substation. On August 12, 1912, he came to Anaheim and commenced to work for the municipality. He began in a somewhat subordinate capacity, as one of the engineers, then as foreman, and gradually and properly worked his way up to his present responsible post, to which he was appointed in February, 1917.

Mr. Hannum has charge of the operation of the power plant, and is also responsible for electrical inspection of the city so that, with the necessity of keeping thoroughly apace with the last word of science and mechanics, and the actual labor of installing, repairing and renewing parts of the system, it will be seen that he is a very busy man. Fortunately for the city of Anaheim, he had years of most valuable experience before he came, to which his day and night labors are constantly adding, and he is fond of hard work, and both mentally and physically able to bear the strain.

In December, 1912, Mr. Hannum was married to Miss Bessie L. Palmiter of Hart, Mich., a charming lady capable at all times of creating for herself a desirable circle of devoted friends, and herself devoted to others, and ready for any good work. Mr. Hannum belongs to the Wigton Lodge No. 251, F. & A. M., at Hart, Mich., and to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345 of the Elks.

THEODORE GREGER.—A valued employe of the Pacific Electric Railway for many years who, by improving a grove of Valencia orange trees until it is now one of the finest for its size in the county, has proven himself a successful man in another field, is Theodore Greger, who was born in West Prussia, Germany, on May 13, 1870, and, after the death of his parents, came to America at the age of nine, accompanied by his little sister, then only seven years of age. His father, Arthur Greger, had followed farming, and was killed in a distressing accident when a load of hay toppled and the tine of a fork entered his body, so that he died a year later, in 1879, from the wound. The very next year after this disaster befell Mr. Greger, his wife died from a fall. These worthy people had five children; and as Theodore and Bertha were the youngest, they were sent to an uncle, the other three coming later.

They arrived in Baltimore in January, 1881, and then traveled on to Milwaukee, and there they were received by their uncle, August Greger, who lived at Ripon, Wis. They found a good home there, helped what they could by day, and went to school at night. At the end of six years, when Theodore was in the middle of his teens, he came on to Washington and found work in a sawmill. Then he clerked in a grocery store at Tacoma, and after that went back east to Augusta, Wis., and worked for a year as a clerk.

His next move was to Milwaukee, where he became a motorman on the Milwaukee Street Railway; and for twelve years and a half he gave them his best service, and was lucky in not having a single accident. In 1907, he swung away from his Wisconsin moorings, and reached Los Angeles, where he found no difficulty in obtaining a post as motorman on the Pacific Electric Railway. After six years, he was made assistant depot master at the Main Street station; and that additional responsibility he met to the satisfaction of everyone for two years.

On May 1, 1917, Mr. Greger resigned, to give all his attention to the ranch of eight acres he had bought in 1909, and had since handsomely improved. It was located at the corner of Olive and Sunkist avenues in East Anaheim, and was raw land when he first took it. He had it leveled and set out Valencia orange trees, put in a cement pipe line and otherwise improved it, and during his busy railroad life, he never lost a tree. He built a residence, and was soon envied by his friends on account of his trim little estate. He also owned a residence at the corner of West Forty-eighth Street and Second Avenue, in Los Angeles. In addition, he owns another five acres near his place, which he also set out to Valencia oranges, and ten acres on North Street with Valencia orange trees six years old.

At Cooperstown, Wis., Mr. Greger was married to Miss Hulda Voeltz, a native of that city, and their fortunate union was blessed with the gift of four sons. Henry is ranching on his father's place; Arthur is a conductor on the Los Angeles Street Railway; William is office man for Richards' Express, in Los Angeles; and Elmer also assists his father.

Mr. Greger is a Lutheran in his preference for congregational worship, a Republican in matters of national politics, and a member of the Independent Foresters of America in Milwaukee; and first, last and all the time, he is an American, who finds his highest pleasure as a citizen in standing for American institutions, and in boosting Orange County and California.

MRS. OTTILIE HENNING.—A very interesting woman of exceptional business ability who has unlimited faith in the future of Orange County is Mrs. Ottilie Henning, a daughter of Rev. Adolph and Juliana (Dinkler) Weinknecht. Her father was for nineteen years a minister in the German Lutheran Church. Although a comparatively young man, he had attained some reputation for unusual ability, and his death, when our subject was about three years of age, was widely deplored. Three of his children grew to maturity, and among them Ottilie was next to the youngest. She was reared at Hertzfelde near Berlin, Germany, and early had the best of public school educational advantages, and in 1899 came to California and Anaheim, where she met and married Louis Henning. Seven children resulted from their union, and each has won a place in the hearts of those knowing them. Walter assists his mother in the problems and work of ranching. Of the twins, Henry is in the Anaheim high school and Martha assists her mother to preside over the household; Otto is also a student at the Anaheim high school; and there are Arthur, Annie and Richard. Mrs. Henning belongs to the Anaheim Lutheran Church, and is active in the Ladies' Society of that congregation, and she is also a Republican with strong Protectionist views.

Since her marriage, Mrs. Henning has been deeply interested in agriculture and especially in horticulture, and she now owns three fine ranches devoted to the culture of Valencia and Navel oranges, lemons and walnuts—property as fine as any highly-cultivated ranchland in Southern California. On the home place, located on Olive Boulevard, she has just completed a large, beautiful modern residence of mission style of architecture built of concrete, making it one of the most beautiful country homes in the county. In this age of the new woman, the scientific and commercial accomplishments of Mrs. Henning are of such exceptional interest that Anaheim cannot fail to be proud of her as one of the representative citizens of town and county.

A. F. PLEGEL.—A prominent and influential orange grower, whose success in contributing definitely toward the development of Orange County is undoubtedly due to the investment of his foresight and hard labor in clearing the land of cactus and sagebrush, and thereby producing some very valuable acreage for orange groves, is A. F. Plegel, who came to Orange County in the early nineties. He was born in Germany in 1887, the son of a worthy burgher of that country, who died there. Later, his widow, the mother of our subject, brought her only child to America, and arrived in California in 1892. At Orange, Mrs. Plegel married a second time, taking Emil Krueger for her husband; and they improved a ranch and followed farming, in East Orange. This first place of theirs, where they now reside, consists of twenty acres; and when they had made a success of that, they improved several other places.

A. F. Plegel was reared in Orange, attended the local public schools, and from a lad learned horticulture and nurserying, and for four or five years he was employed by George B. Warner in Santa Ana, in the work of grafting and budding. By 1907 he had sufficiently advanced that he was able to buy his place of twenty acres on Commonwealth Avenue, near North; like so many other places hereabouts at that time, it was merely cactus and sagebrush, but he settled there, built a dwelling, cleared and leveled the land, and sunk a well which is now pumped out by electrical power, irrigating his own place and 140 acres more. His plant has a stream of 100 inches, and he has been able to raise from 2,000 to 3,000 sacks of potatoes a year.

Mrs. Olive Henning

Mr. Plegel has a thorough knowledge of horticulture and the nursery business, from its first stages up, and at first commenced his nursery solely for himself. His output, however, was in excess of his needs, and the reputation he acquired for skill traveled abroad, until others insisted on his giving them the benefit of his experience. He belongs to the Mutual Orange Distributors Exchange, and is often a leader in its activities.

At Orange, Mr. Plegel was married to Miss Paula Simon, a native of Germany, and three children have blessed the choice. They are Carl, Arnold and Emil, and with their parents they attend the Anaheim Lutheran Church. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Plegel allows no partisanship to interfere at any time with his "boosting" of local projects meeting the approval of the intelligent portion of the community.

FRANK NELSON GIBBS.—The development of Anaheim and, indeed, neighboring towns as residential and business centers is due in part to the excellent facilities for building afforded by such concerns as the Gibbs Lumber Yard, of which Frank Nelson Gibbs, the city trustee, is proprietor. He was born in Evanston, Ill., on March 9, 1880, and his father was Oscar L. Gibbs, well known in the business world, and chairman of the Evanston Board of Trade. He had married Miss Lillian N. Goodenow, a lady of attractive personality, who survives him. There were five children in the family, and Frank is the oldest now living.

His schooling began in Arizona, but when his father died and the family moved to California, he attended the schools of Los Angeles. In 1893 he began work in a planing mill, and then, still in that city, he went into the dry goods business. Afterward, he took up the handling of lumber, and in 1911 came to Anaheim, where he built his lumber yard. Soon afterward, he opened a yard at Fullerton and one at Placentia. He employs five men, and they are kept busy serving an ever-increasing number of patrons. The fact that Mr. Gibbs is, on the one hand, so well posted in the lumber trade, and that, on the other, he is intensely interested in the growth and expansion of Orange County, and has abundant faith in its future, and is always willing to cooperate in the advancement of the region, operate to his rendering the greatest service possible to his townsmen and business establishments and movements making for progress here. His election, in 1918, to the city council for a term of four years is a testimonial evidencing the confidence of those living near and dealing with him. In national politics a Republican, he is at all times above petty partisanship.

On September 4, 1906, at Los Angeles, Cal., Mr. Gibbs married Miss Elsie L. Goodhue, a native of Vermont, and the daughter of W. T. and Ellen E. Goodhue, and they have had three children—Oscar L., Ellen E. and Caroline A. The family attend the Presbyterian Church, of which Mr. Gibbs is an elder, and where as superintendent of the Bible School, he is deeply interested in Sunday school work. He belongs to the Masons, Lodge, Chapter and Council, and the Mother Colony Club.

HENRY MARQUART.—Among the Wisconsin boys who are coming rapidly to the front in Orange County, Cal., is numbered Henry Marquart, a successful citrus grower and the owner of twenty-five acres in two places in Olive precinct. He was born at Lomira, Dodge County, Wis., of German and French lineage. His grandfather, Peter, was a tailor in the old country and continued the occupation after coming to America. The father, Ferdinand Marquart, was born in Westphalia, Germany, and was seven years old when he accompanied his parents to the New World, where they located in Dodge County, Wis. Ferdinand grew to manhood, was a farmer, and married Miss Mary Schultz, and they became the parents of eight children, five of whom grew to maturity—three boys and two girls.

Henry is the oldest son in the Marquart family, and was reared on a southern Wisconsin farm. He passed the teacher's examination and taught school in his home county in Wisconsin, putting in his time between terms working on his father's farm, until coming to California in May, 1906. For nine months he worked in various places, familiarizing himself with orchard work, all the while looking for a good place to locate and buy a ranch. He saw the fifteen-acre ranch that he now owns and resolved to buy it. Five acres of the ranch were planted to Navel oranges, which he has budded over to Valencias. The other trees were at that time affected with the San Jose scale, and it took some time to get them back into bearing. The five acres of Valencias are in good bearing, and the remainder of the place is planted to lemons, walnuts and Valencia oranges. In 1919 Mr. Marquart bought a ten-acre Valencia grove about half a mile from his fifteen-acre home place. It is now five years old and is just coming into bearing. His place is in first-class shape, well kept and a model in every way.

His marriage occurred in 1917 and united him with Miss Lillie Schroeder, daughter of Fred Schroeder of Santa Ana, and they have a son named Wesley Martin. Mr. Marquart is a young man of excellent educational attainments, and is giving his best efforts to the citrus and walnut industries. He is not afraid of work and knows how to work to the best advantage. He has built a beautiful and commodious country residence upon his fifteen-acre ranch, where he resides with his wife and child. The residence is located on the north side of Taft Avenue, west of Tustin Street, in the very heart of the citrus belt of Orange County. Mr. Marquart is an indefatigable worker and possesses a streak of dry humor. He is well liked, and his quickness of perception enables him to see and to grasp an opportunity at the opportune moment. He is a member of the Santiago Orange Association and of the Evangelical Church of Santa Ana. In national politics he is a Republican.

PHILIP KOZINA.—A worthy representative of the foreign-born American who is thoroughly Americanized, assimilates American ideas and associates with American citizens is Philip Kozina. His fine twenty-acre ranch on Santiago Boulevard in Villa Park Precinct is planted to sixteen acres of Valencias, three acres of Navel orange trees and one acre of lemon trees. He has lived on the property for the past seventeen years, has prospered, and is satisfied with his environment amidst the orange trees and roses.

A Czecho-Slovak, Mr. Kozina was born in Pilsen, Bohemia, February 15, 1855, the son of John and Annie (Suckop) Kozina, who were married in Bohemia and were the parents of four sons. By a singular coincidence, Philip Kozina is also the father of four children, all boys. Mr. Kozina received a good education in the local schools, after which he learned the wagonmaker's trade. From the age of twenty to twenty-three he served in the Austrian army as a corporal in the Fourth Heavy Artillery, after which he followed the carpenter's trade until he came to America in 1883, and settled at Portage City, Wis., where his uncle and aunt were residing at that time, and here he embraced the first opportunity to become a naturalized American citizen. He worked at the carpenter's trade five years in Portage City, then went to Green Bay, Keweenaw County, Wis., where he met and married Miss Katie Kulhanek, also born in Bohemia, who came when two years old with her parents to Wisconsin. The four sons resulting from their union are: Jacob, a stock raiser at Philipsburg, Mont.; Henry, a rancher in Olive precinct, who married Mrs. Antonia Blazac, and is the father of two children; Joe, who is on the Orpheum and Pantages vaudeville circuits, entertaining as a song and banjo artist, and traveling all over the Union, and Albert, who is at home, and who was in the aviation service from which he was honorably discharged.

After his marriage Mr. Kozina continued the vocation of carpentering at Ashland, Wis., and afterwards went to Stanleyville, Keweenaw County, Wis., and took charge of the farm of his father-in-law, who was getting along in years. He operated the farm for fifteen years, then sold out and came to California in 1904, first locating at Tustin. Becoming acquainted at Villa Park, he purchased and located on his twenty-acre ranch, which he has improved. His father-in-law, Mr. Matthis Kulhanek, who has attained the advanced age of eighty-four, makes his home with Mr. Kozina. On July 4, 1920, Mr. Kozina was bereaved of his faithful wife, who was mourned by the family and friends. Mr. Kozina is a member of the Central Lemon Growers Association, and in politics affiliates with the Democratic party. Though reared in the Catholic faith, the family attend the Community Congregational Church at Villa Park. They are gifted musically and the children are favorites in social circles.

DAVID MITCHELL.—Of Scotch birth and lineage, David Mitchell was born in County of Fyfe, Scotland on January 4, 1860, the son of David and Elizabeth Mitchell, natives of that country, who lived and died in the land of their nativity. Of their family of five children David is the only one living in California. He resides south of Buena Park on his forty-acre ranch, which is devoted to general farming, including the raising of chili peppers and tomatoes and has the best of facilities for realizing the greatest returns from a minimum amount of labor. There are two wells for irrigation upon the place, one with a depth of 500 feet, and the other 250 feet.

When he was twenty-five years of age, Mr. Mitchell left his native land and went to Canada where he worked in the stone quarries for about four years, then he made a visit back to his home and spent the winter. He then came to the "States" and located in Cleveland, Ohio, where he was in the employ of the Cleveland Stone Company for two years. Leaving there he next went to Iowa and worked for a St. Louis firm as a quarryman until he migrated to Flagstaff, Ariz., to accept the position of superintendent of the Arizona Sand Stone Company's quarries. This company was made up of Orange County, Cal., men and they had met Mr. Mitchell through a recommentation from his former company in Cleveland. This company employed as many as eighty men in their quarries and they got out the stone that was used in the construction of the Orange County court house, the Los Angeles County court house and the city hall of that city. The last big job that Mr. Mitchell filled was the stone for the present postoffice building in Los Angeles. The stone for the Spreckels mansion in San Francisco also came from this company, in fact they shipped stone all over the country where high class material was required.

Mr. Mitchell became interested in Orange Country ranch land through his visits to the members of the company by whom he was employed and he bought forty acres, in 1893, south of Buena Park and located his family on it and began developing the tract. He made frequent visits to his family and in 1910 left the employ of the company and located permanently on his ranch and began development on a sound basis and has made of his place a valuable ranch and a good producer. He has also taken a live interest in the affairs of the county and can be counted on to help with all movements for the betterment of conditions in general and has made a host of friends who appreciate his true worth.

His marriage with Miss Mary Vangendern in 1890, daughter of John Vangendern, resulted in the birth of nine children: David, Ira, John, William, Elizabeth, Jennie, Cornelius, Edna and George, all single and educated in the schools of Orange County. David and Ira were in the U. S. service during the recent World War. David was in constructive work continually during his two years' service with the Twentieth Corps of Engineers in France. Ira served in the Engineers' Corps of the spruce squadron at Washington.

J. B. HEARD.—An experienced, competent man in the truck-hauling business, who is kept busy transporting merchandise to and from the oil fields, is J. B. Heard, who was born in Ava, Douglas County, Mo., in 1870, the son of John Heard, a native of Tennessee. He was reared in that state, and when twenty-one, removed to Missouri. He campaigned with the Union Army through the Civil War, as a member of a Missouri regiment, and later followed farming until his death. Mrs. Heard was Rachel McIntosh before her marriage, and she, too, was a native of Douglas County. There were eight children in the family, and our subject was the fourth eldest in the order of birth. Brought up on a Missouri farm, he attended the public schools of Douglas County, after which he learned the carpenter's and the blacksmith's trade. Then he followed farming on his own account in Douglas County, learning a good deal that was worth while from the methods of the Eastern agriculturist. Not until 1915 did he come to California; and then he settled for a while at Taft.

He did some blacksmith work for the Associated Oil Company, and then he entered the employ of the Head Drilling Company as tool dresser, continuing with them for thirteen months. Returning to Missouri, he brought out his family to stay; and then he reentered the employ of the Head Drilling Company. After that he was with the St. Helen Oil Company at Taft.

On February 14, 1919, Mr. Heard located at Orange and bought three acres of land. He remained a tool dresser on the Richfield-Yorba lease until May 10, and then he entered upon his latest enterprise, that of hauling for the oil companies. He belongs to the Oil Workers' Union, and is already well-posted on conditions in the oil fields.

While in Missouri, Mr. Heard was married to Miss Artie Goforth, a native of that state, and a member of the Baptist Church, an accomplished woman capable of assisting her husband in many ways. They have had eight children. Virgil and Clay are in the oil fields; Gracie is Mrs. Rhodes of Placentia; Jewel is also an oil developer; and there are Ira, Lester, Floyd and Burrell. Mr. and Mrs. Heard are Republicans.

WASHINGTON I. CARVER.—Spending the retired years of a profitable life amidst the pleasant surroundings of his orange grove, Washington I. Carver, despite his more than four score years, is alert, progressive and up-to-date in his political views, keeping abreast with the times and holding marked views on all the questions of the day.

His parents, Donald and Amanda (Skidmore) Carver, were pioneer settlers of Auburn, Cayuga County, N. Y., coming there when this was considered by New Englanders as an outpost of civilization, the father engaging in the grocery and meat business there. Washington I. Carver was born here on January 18, 1839, the youngest of a family of five children, and when he was four years old the family removed to Wisconsin, settling at Delavan, where they remained until 1850. Going to Reedsburg, in Sauk County, Wis., the father purchased a prairie and timberland farm, and this was the family home until 1885.

When the Civil War broke out Washington I. Carver offered his services in the defense of the Union April 15, 1861, and enlisted in Company B, Fifth Wisconsin

Infantry, and was mustered in for three years, taking part in the campaigns of Generals McClellan, Burnside, Hooker, Meade and Grant, and passing through many hard experiences in those crucial days. He was mustered out July 28, 1864, as sergeant. In October, 1864, he was married to Miss Emily Frances Medbery, the daughter of Hiram and Nancy Medbery, the father being prominent in the public life of Mrs. Carver's native state, New York. After his marriage Mr. Carver farmed in Sauk County until 1884, when he removed to Dakota territory, took up a quarter section of land near Gettysburg, Potter County, and later took up an additional tract of 160 acres under the timber claim act. He remained on this land until he had proved up on both claims, and then disposed of them and migrated to California.

Coming to Anaheim in 1897, Mr. Carver established a photographic business there, his wife being engaged in the millinery business, continuing in this line until 1905, when he purchased a tract of twenty-two and a half acres at North and West streets, Anaheim, paying only $1,000 for the whole tract, and this has since been the family home. Some time ago he divided his property, deeding one-third to his son-in-law, W. P. Quarton, of Anaheim, and one-third to L. C. Blake of Anaheim, another son-in-law, retaining a third of the acreage for himself. Since this division Mr. Carver has sold another five acres, so that he now has, two and a half acres in the home site. This is set out to Valencia oranges and is a valuable piece of property.

Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Carver, three of whom, Irving, Caroline and Emery, are deceased. Those living are: Marian C., who is the wife of L. C. Blake of Anaheim; they are the parents of a daughter, now Mrs. Walter J. Jewell, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work, and she is the mother of two children—Richard and Mary; another daughter, Mrs. Helen Perry has one son, Raymond; Walter resides in Minnesota; Katherine is the wife of W. P. Quarton of Anaheim and is the mother of three children—Dale, Irving and Dorothy Fern; Marvin resides at home; Mrs. Alice Booth has one son, Eugene, and assists her mother in presiding over the home.

Always a great thinker and a man of progressive ideas, Mr. Carver's prime interest has ever been for the masses rather than the classes, and he has for some years been a Socialist, as he was an early abolitionist. A man of highest integrity, he can look back on a busy life that has been well spent, and filled with many deeds of kindness for his fellowmen.

FRANK W. WALTON.—A pioneer citizen of the Los Alamitos section of Orange County and a man who is devoting his time and talents to the study of Nature's processes in propagating, experimenting with buds and grafts and in cross pollenization to bring out new varieties of fruits, is Frank W. Walton, whose results have been phenomenal in the field of his chosen endeavor.

A native of Hancock County, Ill., Frank W. was born on May 22, 1869, the son of John and Mary (Southwick) Walton, natives of Kentucky and Massachusetts, respectively, but long residents of Illinois. In 1884 the family removed to Kansas and there improved a farm, but not feeling satisfied with the conditions found in that state the parents returned to Illinois in 1892. There the father passed to his reward in 1917, at the age of eighty-five, and Mrs. Walton died there in 1919, having attained to the age of seventy-five. They were the parents of seven children, six of them still living, and two of these are in California. Frank W. is a distant relative to the late Abraham Lincoln, as his grandmother Walton was a second cousin to the father of the martyred president and she came from Kentucky to Sangamon County, Ill., at the same time Mr. Lincoln settled there.

Frank W. Walton attended school in Illinois and Kansas and in his youth became a woodworker, doing fine cabinet work and also made musical instruments, such as violins, guitars and banjos. After his parents went back to Illinois he remained in Kansas, operating a fruit farm that belonged to his mother. During this time he made several trips to California, the first one in 1888, just after the big boom. He spent some time at Santa Rosa, then returned to Kansas and continued farming until 1893, when he moved to Portland, Ore. Three years later he came down to Los Alamitos, Orange County and secured employment with the Los Alamitos Sugar Company as a pattern maker, continuing with them for twenty years. During all the years that he was engaged in other lines of work he kept closely in touch with Nature, for even as a mere youth he was much interested in plant and tree life. He began making experiments in cross pollenization and he now sees the results of his many years of study, and some of those who know his work best consider that he has even surpassed the world-renowned wizard, Luther Burbank, in some of the varieties he has propagated. He has developed a quince, a cross between an apple and a quince, which can be eaten, cooked or treated as an ordinary apple; his varieties of pears have been so developed that they can be eaten every month in the year without having been placed in cold storage; he has several species of grapes, propagated by himself, that surpass the standard varieties in point of excellence of flavor and they can be grown without fumigation or spraying; the "Gold Dollar" apple, his specialty, will be put on the market in 1921; numerous varieties of peaches, pomegranates, figs and persimmons are all of superior quality. Mr. Walton is enthusiastic over the climate and soil conditions of this section and declares that nowhere in the state is better to be found raising pears.

His home place at Los Alamitos is systematically and artistically arranged with fruit of his own propagation, and is the show place of the section, where the visitor is well repaid for the time spent with the proprietor, who is deeply in love with his work. Not having room enough on his home place to expand his work, Mr. Walton has his nursery on the ranch owned by C. D. Clarke, near Santa Fe Springs, in Los Angeles County, where visitors are always made sure of a warm welcome.

By Mr. Walton's marriage in 1891, with Miss Josephine Watson, daughter of John and Martha Watson, two children were born, a son and daughter, the latter dying in childhood. The son, Vern H. Walton, is a mechanic in the employ of the Lord Motor Company in Los Angeles. He married Miss Dorris Terril, a native of Arkansas, while living in the state of Washington. Frank W. Walton is deeply interested in the welfare of the people of Orange County and is ever ready and willing to support all movements for the public good. Devoted to his work, yet he never shirks the civic duties of a loyal American citizen.

ALBERT A. LEE.—Among the men who have proved citizens of worth and public spirit and have rendered valuable service to Villa Park Precinct is Albert A. Lee, who traces his lineage to old Virginia, and whose family were prominent in that state among the F. F. V.'s. Mr. Lee was born near Des Moines, Iowa, October 24, 1862. He is the son of David L. Lee, and his grandfather, David R. Lee, was a second cousin of the famous General Robert E. Lee.

Albert A. Lee was seven years old when he accompanied his parents in their removal from Iowa to Kansas, the family arriving at Baxter Springs, Kans., in 1870. He was educated in the common schools of Kansas, and taught three terms of school, after which he followed carpentering and bridge building. Coming to Orange County November 9, 1887, Mr. Lee first engaged in the restaurant business at Santa Ana. Afterwards he rented land for years, then purchased four acres, which he disposed of to advantage, and bought his present place of ten acres at Villa Park.

Mr. Lee's marriage, which occurred in 1884, united him with Miss Birdee M. Martin, a native of Missouri, whose parents migrated to Missouri from Kentucky. Two children were born to them: Edna, who is now the wife of Willard Smith, a prominent rancher of Villa Park, and George M., who served with the Fourth ammunition train in France in 1918 until his discharge in August, 1919.

In educational matters Mr. Lee has rendered most valuable service. In 1900 he was elected a member of the board of trustees of the Villa Park school district, serving as clerk of the board for eighteen years, and was also a member of the board of trustees of the Orange Union high school for thirteen years. Mr. Lee is a high-minded and useful citizen, who is highly respected by his friends and neighbors.

EDWIN J. BROWN.—The beautifully located fifteen-acre ranch at the corner of Santiago Boulevard and Tustin Avenue in Olive Precinct, four miles northeast of the city of Orange, is owned by Edwin J. Brown. Lying up against the foothills of the Santa Ana mountains, its sunny situation abundantly justifies the appropriateness of its name, "Rancho Cuesta Alegre," the euphonious appellation given it by Mr. Brown's daughter, Clara L.

Mr. Brown was born near Lansing, Ingham County, Mich., and is the son of Albert and Josephine (Lowe) Brown, of Orange, Cal. Both parents come from well-known pioneer families of Ingham County, Michigan, where they were for many years engaged in farming, became well-to-do and were rated among that large class of prosperous people who till the soil of Southern Michigan. The paternal grandfather, Jabez Brown, a native of England, who became a seafaring man, came to America as a young man, stopped in New York City for a while, and satisfied his taste for adventure by sailing up the Great Lakes, finally becoming a pioneer settler in Ingham County, Mich. He was married in Michigan to Miss Jane Burgess, a native of the Empire State. On the maternal side the family were also pioneers of Ingham County. The maternal grandfather, Richard R. Lowe, was born in New York state. He came to Michigan as a young man and was elected to be the first sheriff of Ingham County. He and his brother took up government land in Stockbridge Township, Ingham County, and were among the leading citizens of that neighborhood. Lake Löwe, of that place, was named after them and still bears their name. The maternal grandmother's maiden name was Mahala Newkirk, and she was a native of Ohio.

Edwin J. Brown acquired his education in the district schools of his native county, and later supplemented this with a business college course at Ypsilanti, Mich. His marriage, which occurred in Michigan, October 27, 1892, united him with Miss Phoebe A. Proctor, born in Stockbridge Township, Ingham County, Mich., a daughter of Asa J. and Alvira (Pierce) Proctor, farmers in Michigan, now living retired in Pasadena. Their union has been blessed with three children: Clara L., a student at Pomona College; Donald A. and La Verne W. both attend the Orange Union high school. Mr. and Mrs. Brown came to California in January, 1897, and lived in the Chula Vista district, San Diego County, and in 1902 they located in Orange. Mr. Brown has built up and improved several residence properties in the city of Orange, and planted and improved two ranches before coming to his present home place, which he purchased in 1911. He has brought Rancho Cuesta Alegre to a very high state of cultivation. Mr. Brown is a member of the Villa Park Orchards Association and the Lemon Growers Association at Villa Park. He and his family are members of the First Methodist Church at Orange, and Mrs. Brown is a pillar of strength to the ladies' aid society and other Christian projects.

HARVEY H. HOSSLER.—A prosperous Californian who is thoroughly able to appreciate the success with which his efforts have been crowned since he came to the Golden State is Harvey H. Hossler, who looks back upon years of hard, poorly-requited labor in Nebraska in the days when it was mighty hard to make a farm there pay. He came from Iowa, where he was born in Springville, on February 14, 1857, the son of Michael and Katherine (Bowers) Hossler, and his father was by trade a carpenter. He was sent to the common schools at Springville, and for a while worked at carpentering with his father. When he was eighteen, however, he hired out as a farm hand, and at twenty he embarked in farming for himself.

He secured a quarter-section of school land in Hall County, Nebr., and lived there for thirteen years. On September 23, 1880, at Aurora, Nebr., he was married to Miss Beatrice E. Wheeler, the daughter of John Thomas and Electa (Palmer) Wheeler, also farmer folk of that state, although the bride was born in Wisconsin.

When he sold his school land, in November, 1890, Mr. and Mrs. Hossler came to California, and he secured employment on the Santa Ana and Newport Railroad, serving for a time as fireman, and later advancing to be an engineer. He remained with the railroad company for eight years, and then he resumed carpentering, at which he worked until 1917, and during the years he followed his trade he worked on buildings all over Orange County, and for a period of three years followed contracting himself. In that year Mr. Hossler entered the employ of the Orange County Ignition Works, one of the most important establishments of its kind in Southern California, and having been tendered a good post there by E. P. Matthews, and so well satisfied has he been with the concern, and so satisfied apparently has the company been with him, that he has remained there ever since.

Five children have blessed the union of this couple. Thomas L., the eldest, died in 1902; Hutoqua is Mrs. J. C. Gaylord of South Pasadena; Kate has become Mrs. Walter Runkel of Los Angeles, and has two children—Evelyn and Melvin; Geneva who is Mrs. Wilson, lives at home with her father and mother, and is the mother of one child, a daughter, Ellamay, and Harry is in the state of Washington. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Santa Ana, and both Mr. and Mrs. Hossler are Maccabees of the same town. In national politics, Mr. Hossler marches under the banners of the Republican party, but in local affairs he never favors partisanship, believing that it is detrimental to movements for the best men and the best measures for a small community.

DONALD S. SMILEY.—Throwing the energy of youth and a resolute spirit into the work of growing citrus fruit successfully, Donald S. Smiley refutes the old saying that you cannot put old heads on young shoulders. His choice and well-cared for ten acres of Valencia oranges, located on Alameda Street in El Modena Precinct, was purchased in February, 1919.

Mr. Smiley is one of the native sons of Santa Ana that she has reason to be proud of, having been born in that city November 12, 1892. He is the son of E. M. and Hattie L. (Scott) Smiley, and was reared in Santa Ana, graduating with the class of 1911 from the Santa Ana high school. He afterward continued his studies at Occidental College, where he pursued an economic course, graduating from that institution in 1915 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Two years later he established family ties by his marriage with Miss Flippen, daughter of T. M. and M. J. Flippen. A son has been born of their union, named Donald E. Mr. Smiley is a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association, and he and his wife are a distinct addition to the refining influences of the neighborhood, and with others of like taste and culture assist in forming a social center of high standard.

Elbady

Penelope Lady

EUGENE C. CADY.—Among the pioneers of Buena Park, Orange County, the names of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene C. Cady have long been recognized as prominently identified with every movement for the benefit of the community. Mr. Cady was a native of Ohio, born near Warren on February 17, 1847, the son of Edmond D. and Marie (Besley) Cady, who were born in New York and Connecticut, respectively, and descendants of pioneer Eastern families. Of the five children born to this worthy couple, but two are living: Freman Cady of Los Angeles and an employe of that city for the past forty years; and another brother of Marion, Ohio. Eugene C. was reared and educated in Ohio; early in life he learned the trade of bricklayer, which he followed intermittently for fifty years, in conjunction with farming. He even did some brick work after coming to Orange County. He spent six years in Virginia and nine years in Pittsburgh, Pa., following his trade. In 1893 he went to Chicago, took in the Columbian Exposition and for eleven years made that city his home, coming to California in 1904. He bought forty acres near Buena Park, developed the property and farmed it, in connection with the forty acres that was the property of his wife. He conducted a dairy for five years, selling out on March 9, 1920, to take a much-needed rest after many years of activity. He and his wife had reached Los Angeles and there he was taken ill with pneumonia and passed away on March 22. He was a Mason, having joined the order at the age of twenty-one in Warren, Ohio, where he served as worshipful master of New Erie Lodge. He had demitted to Buena Park Lodge No. 357, F. & A. M., after locating there, and he was a past patron of Buena Park Chapter No. 240 O. E. S. Mrs. Cady served as worthy matron of the chapter during 1911-12.

Eugene C. Cady was twice married. His first marriage, which occurred in 1868, united him with Miss Adelaide Forbes, of Warren, Ohio. They had seven children, all living: Mary A., wife of T. W. Williams of Los Angeles; Florence M.; Edmond D. of Delta, Utah; Jennie C., widow of William Noble and a resident of Warren, Ohio; Grace, a nurse in Hollywood; Helen, wife of Dr. Frank Cunningham, of Hollywood; and Eugene W., of Los Angeles. The latter was in the Government service during the World War as instructor in the motor department and stationed in Los Angeles. Mrs. Adelaide Cady died in Los Angeles in 1904. On February 8, 1905, Mr. Cady was united in marriage with Mrs. Penelope L. Calder, born in Nova Scotia, the descendant of Scotch parents named Cameron, representatives of the Cameron clan of Scotland. At the age of twelve Miss Cameron was taken to Boston, Mass., and there was reared and educated, and there her first marriage occurred on April 23, 1893, when she was united with Jacob L. Calder, and they had a son Alexander James Calder, born in Los Angeles, after their removal to this state. This young man, known by his intimates as James Calder, served a year in the Coast Artillery at Fort Scott, during the World War. He is now living with his mother and ranching on her property, and with his wife, enters heartily into the social life of their section of the county.

In April, 1894, Mr. and Mrs. Calder moved to Orange County and bought forty acres of bare land near Buena Park, developed it and carried on general farming until Mr. Calder died in 1898. They planted alfalfa, put down three three-inch wells which furnished an artesian flow sufficient to irrigate their property, but when more wells were put down in the neighborhood it became necessary to install a pumping plant to lift the water to the ditches. This forty acres adjoined the forty that Mr. Cady later purchased, and after Mr. Cady and Mrs. Calder were married, Mr. Cady farmed both tracts and, with the aid of his wife, met with gratifying success.

Mr. and Mrs. Cady were well known in the northern part of Orange County and enjoyed the esteem of an ever-widening circle of friends. She is very active in all forward movements and is a member of the Buena Park Ladies' Club. As a pioneer of this section she is deeply interested in elevating the social and moral plane of the citizens and can be counted upon to do her part in charitable work. After the death of Mr. Cady she made an extended visit through the East, visiting Boston and other interesting parts of the country, but was well satisfied to return to California.

MRS. WILDA BOBST.—One of Orange County's public-spirited women, the owner of a splendid grove of Valencia oranges, is Mrs. Wilda Bobst, the widow of the late Daniel Bobst. Mrs. Bobst, who before her marriage was Wilda Van Hise, was born near Pontiac, Livingston County, Ill., her parents being William H. and Margaret (Cox) Van Hise. Her father, who was a well-to-do farmer of Livingston County, was one of the early settlers there. When Mrs. Bobst was fourteen years of age she accompanied her parents to Thayer County, settling near Hebron, Nebr., and there she finished her schooling, and it was during her residence there that her marriage occurred, when she was united with Daniel Bobst on January 27, 1878.

Daniel Bobst was a native of Pennsylvania, his birth taking place near Logansville, in Clinton County, October 28, 1842. He was the son of David and Elizabeth Bobst, the father being engaged in the lumber business in this neighborhood, and here his boyhood days were spent. When a young man of twenty, Daniel Bobst left his Pennsylvania home and came west to Stephenson County, Ill., taking up farm work near Freeport, in that county, and here his parents joined him a few years later. Attracted by the possibilities of the large tracts of government land that could then be obtained in Nebraska, Mr. Bobst removed to Thayer County, in that state, and took up a homestead there. Here his marriage occurred, and shortly after that happy event the young couple moved to Frontier County, Nebr., and took up a preemption claim of 160 acres, which they proved up on, engaging in general farming there until 1897, when they disposed of their claim and came to California.

Settling in Orange County, Mr. and Mrs. Bobst rented a small ranch southwest of Anaheim, where they farmed for the next three years. In 1900 they purchased seventeen acres of land on Burton Avenue, which was at that time a barley field. They began at once to improve this ranch, and the entire acreage is now devoted to Valencia oranges, seven and a half acres being thirteen-year-old trees in full bearing, while the remainder is in young trees. The place is all under irrigation and is equipped with an excellent private pumping plant. The whole ranch is in the finest condition and is producing splendid crops, the fruit being marketed independently.

Mr. and Mrs. Bobst had eight children. Irvin was employed in the Brea oil fields and lost his life on December 13, 1918, while fighting fire in the canyon; Delbert is married and is a driller in the Brea oil fields; Albert, a twin of Delbert, lives at home, he owns an orange ranch of ten acres on Broad Street, Anaheim; Raymond was working at home when the United States entered the war and he enlisted in the Navy and was stationed at the sub-bases at San Pedro and San Diego until he was honorably discharged at the signing of the armistice; he is now employed as a mechanic in Los Angeles but lives with his mother; Vernon is on the home place assisting his mother; Iva is the wife of Harry Allen of Los Angeles; Cassie married Don Green of Anaheim, and Arline is now employed at Los Angeles. The family attend the Christian Church at Anaheim. The family circle was saddened by the passing on of the husband and father on January 4, 1919, his death occurring at the home place; since his decease there Mrs. Bobst has taken up the responsibility of the ranch, and with the aid of her sons is carrying on the work with encouraging and increasing success. Loyal to the state of her adoption and deeply interested in its development, particularly of her home neighborhood, despite her busy life she takes an active interest in all measures for the local advancement. Both Mrs. Bobst and her husband were strong advocates of Prohibition.

EUGENE M. SALTER.—A placer-miner pioneer of the Golden West who became one of the early-timers of the Gospel Swamp district and so, despite the hard times of those path-breaking days here, saw much of the "good old days," also, is Eugene M. Salter, who was born in Maquoketa, Jackson County, Iowa, on October 21, 1850. His father was Horace Salter, and he had married Miss Sarah Pangborn, of a well-known pioneer family of Iowa. They moved to Shakopee, Minn., in 1858, and there our subject attended the common school of the district, while he grew up with Indian boys, and could count in the Sioux language as easily as he could in English. In Minnesota his father took up a quarter section of Government land, but in the spring of 1862 he sold his relinquishment.

Eugene and his father then crossed the great plains with a company of white men, in a train of 100 wagons; the lad being then only twelve years old and the youngest of the party. No women were allowed to join the train, on account of the hostility at that time of the Indians along the way. The 130 men in the party broke a new trail from Fort Abercrombie, Dakota territory, to Fort Benton, which at that time was the head of navigation of the Missouri River. They took the Mullen Road across the mountains through Deer Lodge Valley and Bitter Root Valley to Walla Walla, Washington, and arrived in Sacramento in the fall of 1862. Eugene stayed with his father until 1864, engaging with him in placer mining.

In the latter year, when Horace Salter went to Helena Mont., to meet his wife, who had come across the mountains and plains with another son and a daughter, Eugene was left in Boise Basin, Idaho. The father thereafter took up land in Gallatin Valley, Mont., and Eugene joined his parents there in 1866. Before he took up land, Horace Salter tried placer mining in the vicinity of Virginia City, but in 1865 he disposed of his mine.

Some of the experiences of the Salters are instructive as affording a glimpse at the real conditions then prevalent in the "great West," and what the sturdy pioneer had to contend with. Horace Salter sent two men to the Bitter Root Valley from Gallatin Valley in 1866 to purchase seed wheat; but they could buy only one and a half bushels of wheat, and paid fifty dollars a bushel for what they got, so that the cost of this trip was $300. Eugene's father also paid $500 for a brood sow and the following year he sold the litter of ten pigs at seventy-five dollars per head as soon as they were old enough to be taken away. He paid $100 for a sack of white flour, and when he ran a dairy farm, in 1867-68, he sold butter at $1.25 per pound. He paid $6,000 for an eight-horse threshing machine, and charged twenty-five cents a bushel to thresh grain grown in 1868. He sold barley for brewing at twenty-nine dollars a hundred weight.

In 1869 Eugene Salter came to San Juan Capistrano and rented a ranch; and three years later, his father having taken up a quarter-section of land, he also took up a quarter-section in the Gospel Swamp district, but eventually they were beaten out of it. In 1879 Eugene Salter went to Colorado, where he stayed until 1888, farming a homestead in the Dolores River district. In 1888 he returned to Santa Ana, and for the next seven years rented a ranch at El Toro. He has a good record as a hunter. On one occasion he went out from Capistrano with nine cartridges and a 44 Winchester rifle, returning the next afternoon with a deer and a grizzly bear and seven cartridges.

In 1895 he went to Benson, Ariz., and was there married to Miss Mamie Higgins, who was born and educated in Cumberland, Md. She had come on a visit to Arizona, and was residing with her cousins when the happy event took place. His wife's health gave way, however, and in 1901-02 they spent a year in travel, hoping to benefit her. Despite all the efforts made, she passed away on a farm twenty miles north of Palestine, Texas, on November 5, 1902.

Mr. Salter returned to Santa Ana in 1904, and bought three lots at 1221 Fairview Avenue, where he has lived ever since. He raises a little domestic stock, and has about 400 chickens. Part of his spare time is devoted to the study and dissemination of Socialist doctrine, in which, from study and wide observation, he has come to have most faith. Six children were born to honor Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Salter: Roba is now Mrs. Armfield of Los Angeles, and is the mother of three children; Kathleen also lives in Los Angeles; Jason, Margaret and Jennie are at home, and Rose is living at Casa Grande, Arizona.

LOUIS HENNING.—A hustling, enterprising and successful rancher and business man, whose far-sightedness has been of service to others as well as himself in noting the trend of modern affairs, and making the most of conditions as they are, is Louis Henning, who came to Anaheim in 1899, having formerly resided in Chicago. He engaged in farm work at Placentia for some years, and then purchased a ranch where he was lucky in producing large crops of potatoes. In 1904 he bought forty-five acres on Olive Road and immediately improved the land there.

Since then, with the enterprise for which he is now so favorably known, he bought twenty acres in the Kraemer tract in 1906 and a year later eighty acres in the Golden State tract, which he soon cleared of cactus and brush. He also leveled the same, sunk wells and put in a first-class pumping plant, driven by electrical power, and now he has a capacity of 125 inches of water. He raised orange nursery stock from seeds and budded them to Valencia oranges and lemons, sufficient to set out 135 acres and in all those operations demonstrated special gifts for this kind of scientific work, and expert knowledge of the field of science of today. He owned the entire 135 acres which he had brought to a full-bearing orchard in 1918, when he divided it, giving one-half of it to his wife, retaining sixty-four acres, fifty-four acres of it being in Valencias and ten acres in lemons. He has given it excellent care, so that it is considered one of the finest full-bearing groves in Orange County. He uses the latest and most modern equipment, including tractors, in operating his ranch.

With the Wagner Bros., Mr. Henning was the first to begin to improve land in East Anaheim; to sink wells and obtain the water needed for irrigation; they cleared the land and had such success with their crops that they gathered from 100 to 150 sacks of potatoes to the acre. Others saw what they were accomplishing and also began to buy and improve land in that section, and the land values were soon considerably raised.

Mr. Henning was one of the first in his vicinity to set out oranges, and was ridiculed for what seemed to be a fatal error in judgment; but despite the wisecracks of his time, he has now in that acreage one of the finest Valencia groves in the state. Mr. Henning is very optimistic for the future success of the oil industry in this section as he was in the early days regarding orange growing, when he first set out his grove. Thus he is again not afraid to back his judgment and we find him a large stockholder in the Placentia-Richfield Central Oil Company and in two large oil companies in Texas; he also carries a big oil lease in San Juan County, N. M. His own ranch having splendid indications for oil, he expects later on to form an oil company to drill a well on the property.

At Anaheim Mr. Henning was married to Miss Ottilia Weinknecht, a lady of accomplishments who had come to Anaheim in 1899. Mr. Henning is a believer in protection and nationalism so is naturally a staunch Republican in politics, and an American in his nonpartisan support of everything likely to build up the community in which he lives, and a member of the Anaheim Lutheran Church.

It is to men of Louis Henning's type that Orange County owes much of its present development and greatness, for without their optimism and energy the transformation that has come about in the past few years could not have taken place. He was never afraid to spend his time and money to improve and develop the land once considered almost worthless, but which is now one of the finest citrus sections in the world. Mr. Henning has always been a very hard worker and has applied himself very closely to the task of improving the land and he is now enjoying the reward of his years of labor in the fortunate ownership of one of the finest citrus properties in the county, or for that matter, in the whole state.

WILLIAM L. DUGGAN.—A busy, successful commercial man, who has nevertheless found time to gratify his public-spirited desires and to serve his fellow-citizens efficiently in the handling of a public trust, is William L. Duggan, the well-known and popular insurance agent of 222 South Sycamore Street. He was born near Macon, Ga., on April 13, 1862, the son of J. B. and Nancy Duggan. His father was both a doctor of medicine and a farmer; so that, while William enjoyed the comforts of a well-stocked country home, he also had the advantage of growing up in a cultured circle.

He was graduated from Mercier University, at Macon, with the Bachelor of Arts degree, and there engaged in teaching until, in 1893, he came out to California. For three years, in the northern part of the state, he worked for the long-established New York Life Insurance Company, and in 1896 came south to Santa Ana. Since then he has made his home here, residing at 222 South Sycamore Street, where he had built for himself a home as early as 1905.

He continued with the New York Life Insurance Company, and his work has made that favorite concern even more popular with would-be policyholders. He has contributed in particular something to stabilize insurance conditions in the county, and to render that form of commercial activity a far greater sociological service than it ever originally was dreamed likely to become. In insurance circles he is a Senior Nylic and a member of the $200,000 Club.

On April 12, 1899, Mr. Duggan was married in Santa Ana to Miss Clara Clyde, a native of Utah, who was educated in that state, and came to visit relatives in Santa Ana. She soon grew to be a favorite, so that when she met Mr. Duggan she was already a popular local belle. Two daughters have brightened the Duggan home and assisted in extending its widely-appreciated hospitality. One is now Mrs. Roscoe G. Hewitt of Santa Ana, and the other is Miss Dorothy Duggan, a high school student of Santa Ana. Mr. Duggan belongs to the Masons, and is certainly not the least popular in that representative circle.

A Democrat in matters of national politics, but never partisan when it comes to acting upon strictly local measures or men, Mr. Duggan was president of the board of education of Santa Ana in the very formative period from 1911 to 1915, and looks back with pride to the work of the trustees associated with him, who then built the well-constructed and well-equipped Polytechnic high school there.

FERDINAND H. WESSLER.—A resident of the United States for close to a half century, Ferdinand H. Wessler has taken a public-spirited interest in every community in which he has lived, and he has ever been glad of the decision that led him to make this his adopted land. Born at Bresen, West Prussia, January 7, 1848, he is the son of Henry and Paulina Wessler, who were farmers in that vicinity. Educated in the schools of his native country and serving his allotted term of enlistment in the army, Mr. Wessler determined to seek a land that offered more freedom and greater opportunity, so the year 1873 saw him on his way to the United States.

For five years after his arrival he worked in a machine shop at Philadelphia, Pa., having started to learn the trade in Bresen, then removed to Lincoln County, Kans., where he purchased 160 acres of railroad land, later buying another tract of 160 acres of school land near Wilson, Kans. Mr. Wessler raised cattle and grain on his Kansas farms and became well-known in the agricultural life of that community, where he continued until 1897. Coming to California that year he spent two years in Pasadena, locating at Anaheim in 1899.

Purchasing twelve acres on the Garden Grove road west of Anaheim, Mr. Wessler set to work to improve it, and it now is a thriving citrus orchard. Six acres of it are in seven-year Valencia oranges, while the balance of the trees are three years old. Mr. Wessler has been unusually successful in developing his property, and he still does practically all the work of caring for it, having now eleven acres. In 1919 he erected a beautiful residence on his ranch and here with his family he resides in comfort.

In May, 1879, at Wilson, Kans., Mr. Wessler was married to Miss Amy Babcock, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Babcock. She was a native of Missouri, where her father was extensively engaged in the cattle business, the family later living in Illinois and Nebraska before their removal to Kansas. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wessler: Mabel is Mrs. H. D. Meyer and resides at Pasadena; she has five children; Grace; Verne; Erse is Mrs. Albert C. Meyer, and makes her home in San Gabriel. Mrs. Wessler passed away in 1893 at their Kansas home. Five years later, on July 2, 1898, while living at Pasadena, Mr. Wessler was there united in marriage with Mrs. Lena Blach, a native of Kansas, who had been a resident of California some time before her marriage. One son, Lloyd, has been born to them; he is a graduate of the Anaheim high school and resides with his parents. Mr. and Mrs. Wessler are members of the Fullerton Baptist Church.

Always taking a lively interest in civic affairs wherever he has lived, Mr. Wessler was constable of Highland Township during his residence in Kansas, and later was treasurer of the same township. A Republican in politics, he has always given his loyal support to the candidates of that party. A member of the Cooperative Fruit Association, he takes an active part in every movement that will help in the progress of the neighborhood and county, and his sterling character and fine traits of citizenship have made for him an assured place in the community.

FRED SCHLUETER.—A prosperous farmer of the West Orange precinct, who has two groves of such high standard and value that he very naturally feels he has done well in America, is Fred Schlueter, who was born in North Hanover, near Bremen, on November 28, 1858. His parents were William and Sophie Schlueter, steady-going and highly-esteemed farmer folk, who sent the lad to the best schools in their district so that, while he helped his father on the home farm, he also received the foundation of a good education.

In 1881 he decided to leave his native land and cross the ocean to America, and in March he landed at Castle Garden. Pushing on west to Toledo, Ohio, he worked for a year and a half on a farm not far from that city, and there first became Americanized. In the fall of 1882, however, he came still further west, to California, and here worked as a farmhand on various ranches.

After a while, he purchased two ranches in West Orange, one made up of twenty acres and the other having fourteen acres, for which he supplied a pumping plant with a capacity of forty inches. In the former, there were twelve acres of walnuts, five acres of apricots and three of oranges; while the latter was devoted to walnuts alone.

On July 3, 1893, Mr. Schlueter married Miss Maria Burfind, who was born in Hanover, near Hamburg, and came to America in 1888 to stay with her brother in Los Angeles. She had been well educated in the schools of Hanover, and so was able from the start to be of the greatest help to her husband. Seven children were born to this happy couple. William F. is a Lutheran minister in Texas; Sophie and Henry H. are at home; Carl is an agent for the Ford automobiles in Los Angeles, in which city Eddie S. is also employed; Clara is a high school student at Orange, and Arthur goes to the parochial school in the same city. The family attend the Lutheran Church.

Mr. Schlueter is a patriotic American, with preferences for the Republican party, and this spirit of patriotism has also been shown by his family during the recent war, and notably by his son, Henry H. Schlueter, who enlisted in the U. S. Navy in July, 1918, and helped to guard the great battleships.

ALBERT L. HEIM.—A highly intelligent, energetic and progressive young man of a very representative family, who has proven himself both a good worker and a good manager, is Albert Heim, a native son whose capital has been partly in his gifted and equally enterprising wife, also representing one of the best of Orange County families. She is more than an excellent housekeeper—she has always been an invaluable helpmate; so that their prosperity, a source of satisfaction to their many friends, is the result of their own common, united efforts.

Mr. Heim was born at Orange when his parents were living at the southern end of South Glassell Street, where they rented land. His father was Herman F. Heim, a native of Germany, who had married there Miss Hanna Mueller, a sister of Jacob Mueller, also well known in California; and when they first came to the United States, they settled in the Middle West. Later, they went to Kansas, where they farmed; and then, in 1885 they came on to California. For a while they rented at Orange; then, while still renting, Herman Heim came up to Olive and bought the property now owned by his son. Five children were born to the worthy couple. Mary has become the wife of Herman Struck, the citrus grower living near Orange; Emma is the wife of Andrew Meyers, the citrus and walnut grower residing on Collins Avenue not far from Mr. and Mrs. Struck; Carl O. is a rancher living along the Anaheim Boulevard, near Olive, where he has an orange ranch of seventeen acres; Annie is the wife of Fred Bandick, the rancher, on North Main Street, and Albert L. is the subject of our review.

He was born on February 11, 1886, and attended the parochial school at Orange. He helped his father until he was married, on April 23, 1908, to Miss Annie Borchard, also a native of Orange, a daughter of John and Augusta (Trettin) Borchard, who migrated to California from Minnesota, and followed ranching here until they retired. Her father died in Orange and her mother now makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Heim. Their eight children were as follows: Charles, a rancher at Orange; Herman died when thirty years of age; Ida died in Orange at sixteen years; Robert resides in Orange; Julius is a real estate dealer in Orange; Fred lives in Anaheim; Anna, Mrs. A. L. Heim, and Martha were twins; the latter died when nine months old. Mrs. Heim also attended the parochial school, she grew up a popular belle; so that their wedding became one of the pleasant social events of the year.

After his marriage, Mr. Heim started for himself in the orange industry, at the end of a year, in association with his father, buying ten acres of vacant land owned by Gottfried Kloth. It was northwest of Orange, on the easterly side of North Batavia Street, and when he had skilfully planted it to Valencias, he sold it in 1915. For a couple of years thereafter he rented land; and finally, in 1917, he bought his present place. His parents, both happily still living, reside at Orange, retired from active ranching.

Mr. Heim has installed all the necessary cement pipe for irrigation and gets his supply of water from the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He has also spent several thousand dollars on remodeling his residence and making various improvements. He has five and a half acres in walnuts and the balance, nearly eight acres, in Valencia oranges. He is a member of the Farm Center, and is also a stockholder in the Mutual Orange Distributors, which wide-awake organization has its own packing house at Olive.

Mr. and Mrs. Heim have three children. Velma is the eldest, then comes Clara, and the youngest is Edna. The family are members of the Lutheran Church at Olive. Mr. Heim is a Republican, but does not allow partisanship to interfere with his duties, either as a loyal American citizen or as a vigorous, unbiased supporter of all that is best for Orange County and its various attractive and growing communities.

FOSTER E. WILSON, M. D.—Noteworthy among the esteemed and influential citizens of Huntington Beach is Dr. Foster E. Wilson, who is the pioneer physician of Huntington Beach and is still prominent among the practicing physicians of that city. The youngest of a family of ten children, Dr. Wilson was born in Davis County, Iowa, March 23, 1853. His parents were born and married in Delaware, came west to Fayette County, Ind., and in the early forties went to Davis County, Iowa. His father, Ebenezer Wilson, familiarly called "Ebby," a courageous, God-fearing man, met an untimely death at the hand of a man with whom he had a dispute over forty acres of land. With his last breath he prayed for the man who assassinated him. This occurred on January 17, 1853, before F. E. Wilson was born. Dr. Wilson's mother, whose maiden name was Ann Mitten, remarried when he was six years old, to J. P. Willis, and the family continued to live on the Wilson farm.

When he was fifteen years of age Foster E. Wilson started life for himself, but being determined to get an education he went to school during the winters and worked out during summers at anything he could find to do, however distasteful it might be. So ambitious and studious was he that at the age of eighteen he began teaching school. The ambition of his life was to be in a position to alleviate the sufferings of humanity, and with this end in view he entered the office of Dr. W. H. Shelton of Pulaski, Iowa. Dr. Shelton, who has now retired from practice and is living at Long Beach, Cal., became interested in this worthy young man and loaned him $500, thus enabling him to enter the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery in 1875, from which he was graduated with the degree of M. D., in 1877, at the age of twenty-four. Returning to Pulaski, Iowa, he entered into a partnership with his former preceptor under the firm name of Shelton and Wilson, continuing there until 1882.

In 1878 Dr. Wilson was married to Miss Mary E. Richey, who was born in Van Buren County, Iowa, near Birmingham, being a daughter of James Richey, a prosperous Iowa farmer. In 1887 Dr. Wilson removed to Pratt County, Kans., practicing medicine; in 1892 came to Westminster, Orange County, Cal., and began to practice. They are the parents of three children, one of whom died in infancy. The other two are Chester A. and Alma Wilson. Chester A., who is a successful oil man of Austin, Texas, married Miss Adele Hostetter of that city, and they are the parents of two children, Mary S. and Joe F. Miss Alma Wilson is well known through her connection with the Los Angeles Play Ground Commission.

In December, 1904, Dr. Wilson moved from Westminster to Huntington Beach, just when that city was getting its start, and with the exception of a few years spent at Monrovia between 1909 and 1914, he has been a well-known resident physician of that city. In fact, as stated above, he was the first practicing physician of Huntington Beach. He maintains offices in the Olson Building, 137 Main Street. Besides building other houses Dr. Wilson is completing a beautiful residence at 312 Fifteenth Street.

Thoroughly absorbed in his chosen profession, Dr. Wilson never lost an opportunity to increase his knowledge along this line, and in 1900 he took a post-graduate course at the San Francisco Polyclinic, and another at the Chicago Polyclinic in 1902. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and also of the State and County Medical associations, being an ex-president of the latter. Much loved by all who know him for his kindly ministrations and upright character, Dr. Wilson richly deserves the prominent place he has attained in the city of his adoption.

GEORGE W. ROLFE.—Prominent among Garden Grove's most honored citizens are the exceptionally interesting pioneers, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Rolfe, for years active participants at the various departmental and national encampments of the Grand Army of the Republic, and widely and pleasantly known in war-veteran circles. Mr. Rolfe was born in Calhoun County, Mich., on September 18, 1848, the son of Orlando H. Rolfe, civil engineer, surveyor and justice of the peace. He was a native of New York state, and came to Michigan with his father, Moses Rolfe, and the rest of their family. The progenitor of the family in America was John Rolfe, who came from England, and of his descendants, George W. is the eighth generation in America. Orlando Rolfe was married in Michigan to Miss Esther De Pew, and lived on the Rolfe place in the township of LeRoy, and he died about 1875 in the same house where he and his wife first began their housekeeping. Mrs. Rolfe considerably outlived her husband, dying about 1900. They had eight children, and among them George W. was the second and the oldest son.

George W. attended the common schools of that period in his birthplace, and when only sixteen enlisted—somebody writing down his age as eighteen—in Company C of the Twentieth Michigan Infantry, for service in the Civil War. He was in the original Grand Review that marched down Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, and fifty years thereafter, when attending the National G. A. R. Encampment, as one of the youngest survivors of the Civil War, again marched along the same broad avenue. He was honorably discharged at Detroit, Mich., in July, 1865. He was stationed with the Union forces near Washington at the time of Lee's surrender and Lincoln's assassination, and vividly recollects the eventful hours.

After the war, until he was twenty-one, Mr. Rolfe remained at home on his father's farm; he ran a threshing machine for fourteen years, in Calhoun and Kalamazoo counties, and in 1873 he was married to Miss Priscilla J. Hopkins, a native of New York, who was reared in Calhoun County. They had no children, and adopted a daughter, Georgina, who is now Mrs. Tony Nelson of Los Angeles. Mrs. Rolfe died in Michigan, and in 1876 Mr. Rolfe made his first trip to California; he took up his residence in Compton in the winter of 1883, and began farming on the San Joaquin ranch in 1884.

On September 17, 1905, Mr. Rolfe was married to Mrs. Amy R. Ford, nee Stevens, the ceremony being performed by Bishop McIntyre; she was a playmate of his boyhood, who was born near Tiffin, Ohio, and came to Calhoun County with her parents, Edward and Mary (Rose) Stevens, both New Yorkers. The former died at Eagle Rock, aged ninety-two, the latter in Marengo, Iowa. Mrs. Rolfe has a brother over ninety years, living at Eagle Rock, and another brother, aged over seventy-six, residing at Pasadena; a sister, Mrs. Affa Wickerd, at Glendale, and another sister, Mrs. Julia Garrison, a widow, of Santa Ana, all members of a family of nine children. A brother, John Stevens, left their home in 1853 and came to California; after that other members of the family migrated to the West, and in 1904, at Compton, Cal., a noted gathering of seven members of the family held a reunion, the only time they had all been together after fifty years of separation. Mrs. Rolfe had three children by her marriage with Mr. Ford: Charles Edward, Effie M. and Julia G.

Mr. Rolfe came to the vicinity of Garden Grove about 1900, and came to own several ranches. He has returned to Michigan, where he has a sister and three brothers living, eight times, but his ninth trip across the continent was directed toward the sunny climate of California. With his good wife he has been a live member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove, and he has been on the official board of that congregation. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Rolfe's local patriotism has forbidden narrow, partisan support, and he has worked hard for the best men and the best measures.

About 1897, Mr. Rolfe joined Sedgwick Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and Mrs. Rolfe is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps of Santa Ana, where she was installed senior vice-president of some three hundred members. Together they have attended every department encampment of the G. A. R. held in California during the past twenty years, while Mr. Rolfe has participated in four national encampments—one held at Los Angeles, another at San Francisco, a third at Cincinnati, and the fourth at Washington. Of late he has sold all his land save his half-acre on Acacia Street, at Garden Grove, where he has his residence.

The Garden Grove News of January 23, 1920, contains an interesting account of the local G. A. R. activities of that time. Under the leading caption, "Two of Garden Grove's Citizens Are Honored," it says:

"At the installation of officers of Sedgwick Post, G. A. R., and the Woman's Relief Corps, an auxiliary organization, which was held in G. A. R. Hall, Santa Ana, January 14th, one of Garden Grove's most respected citizens—Mr. George W. Rolfe—was installed as commander of Sedgwick Post. This position of honor and trust conveys with it distinction in the G. A. R., Department of California and Nevada.

"Mr. Rolfe was not alone in being honored by his comrades, as his wife, Mrs. Amy Rolfe, was also chosen by her sisters of the Woman's Relief Corps to fill the position of senior vice-president of that organization. At the conclusion of the ceremonies, Commander Rolfe was presented with a beautiful gold G. A. R. badge, a gift from his daughter, Mrs. Georgia Nelson of Los Angeles. The presentation was made by Judge E. T. Langley of Santa Ana.

"Mrs. Rolfe was presented by Mrs. Della Bishop with a large bunch of beautiful white carnations, also the gift of Mrs. Nelson, who, with her husband, Mr. Tony Nelson, motored down from Los Angeles to attend the installation ceremonies.

"Mr. and Mrs. Rolfe have both been faithful workers in these patriotic orders for many years, and their home has been the scene of many social gatherings of post and corps, where the generous hospitality of host and hostess has been greatly enjoyed."

GEORGE E. RYAN.—Although George E. Ryan is among the later comers in Orange County, he is a conspicuous example of a successful citrus fruit grower. He came to California from York County, Nebr., in 1911, and in January, 1912, purchased the splendid ten-acre orange grove on Tustin Avenue where he resided with his family until he moved into his new bungalow in Orange. Two acres of his ranch are planted to Navel orange trees and eight acres are in Valencia.

Mr. Ryan was born near Montezuma, Poweshiek County, Iowa, May 11, 1863. His father, W. L. Ryan, who is hale and hearty at the advanced age of ninety-one, lives at Sioux City, Iowa. His mother was before her marriage Miss Athalia Black, a native of Virginia. The father was also born in Virginia, and the parents were married in that state, migrating to Iowa shortly afterward. Of the fourteen children born to them, ten grew to maturity. George E., the fourth son in the family, was reared on his father's farm, experienced the lot that falls to a lad brought up on a farm, and at the age of twelve drove horses and plowed, attending the district school in the meantime. He remained at home with his father until he attained his majority, then went to York County, Nebr., and rented a ninety-acre farm. He raised a bumper crop of corn, but only got eight cents per bushel after hauling it twelve miles to Shelby, Nebr. He continued his agricultural pursuits the following year and harvested another good crop, but the prices were below the cost of production. He then went with a threshing gang, got two dollars per day for the work of his team and himself, and in that way paid for the team and wagon that he bought that spring. His next venture was in the livery business at Gresham, York County, Nebr. After two years he sold the livery business and went into the hardware, pump and windmill business at Gresham. The firm was known as Fuller, Anderson and Company, and for fifteen years did a successful business.

Mr. Ryan was married at the age of twenty-six, in 1889, while in business at Gresham, to Miss Emma Clem, a native of Illinois, who came to Nebraska from her native state the same month and year that Mr. Ryan came to the state. Mrs. Ryan's father was also born in Virginia, and her mother was a native of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Ryan have one child, Clarence, who married Miss Merle Bond. He is cashier of the First National Bank at Loup City, Nebr., and is the father of two children, Frank Arlyn and Lillian Ann. Mrs. Ryan, who is an accomplished pianist, has been greatly benefited by the genial climate of California, as it was largely on account of her failing health that the family removed here. Mr. Ryan has recently completed a beautiful bungalow residence at the corner of Palmyra Avenue and Grand Street in the city of Orange, at a cost of $6,500, and is now prepared to retire from life's active duties. Mr. and Mrs. Ryan are members of the Presbyterian Church at Orange. Fraternally Mr. Ryan is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. lodge at Gresham, Nebr., and is also a member of the Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a Democrat in principle, but is not so hidebound that he will not vote for a man because he is not on the Democratic ticket, if he thinks he is better suited for the office than the Democratic nominee. Mr. Ryan is deeply interested in all that pertains to the public welfare, and is a whole-hearted, whole-souled, companionable man, endowed with the qualities that make and keep friends. He is deservedly popular among his many acquaintances and associates.

JOAB STANFIELD.—An alert and fine old gentleman, whose many years of arduous service, always of benefit to others as well as himself, have brought him many friends, is Joab Stanfield, who was born in Indiana on June 14, 1847, the son of William W. Stanfield, a native of eastern Tennessee. He removed to Indiana and there married Miss Jemima Wright, and in time he was thrice married. He had fifteen children in all, and Joab was the third child by his second wife. The Stanfields descend from an interesting English ancestry, and some of them were among the early Pilgrims who came to Plymouth and settled in the Massachusetts Bay Colony.

Joab migrated with his parents from the Hoosier State in 1851, and for twenty-three years lived in Guthrie County, Iowa, sixty miles west of Des Moines, and there he attended the common schools. In 1874 he came out to the Pacific Northwest and spent the following four years in Northern California, in Humboldt, Trinity and Siskiyou counties. He mined, trapped, worked on farms, and proved up on a homestead of 160 acres in Humboldt County. These years spent in Northern California were among the happiest in our subject's life; for, having inherited his love for the great out-of-doors from his father, who had been an intrepid pioneer of Indiana, Iowa and Kansas, he lived on the frontier, quite unafraid of the Indian, and enjoyed to the fullest both the hunt and the chase. He worked on the ranch of William Olmstead of Humboldt County, and handled about 1,800 sheep for him. He finally got his patent for the 160-acre tract, and then, with a natural desire to see the old home once more, he went back to Iowa in 1878.

In the fall of the same year he journeyed to Kansas, and in Osborne County bought 160 acres of school land. In Kansas he prospered, as usual; but in the summer of 1883 he was tempted to move into Benton County, Ark., and to try his luck there. He found the locality malarial, however, and thereupon moved back to Kansas. With this exception, Mr. Stanfield lived in Kansas from the day when he left Iowa until he decided to take the greater step and locate in the Golden State.

While in Kansas, Mr. Stanfield was married to Miss Gulielma Macy, a native of Hamilton County, Ind., and the daughter of Stephen Macy, who had married Miss Mary Charles. Mr. Macy was born in Ohio, became a farmer, and was also a mechanic. Her grandfather was also named Stephen Macy, and was a well-known homeopathic doctor. The Macys were of English origin, and settled upon Nantucket Island, where they followed whaling. Josiah Macy, sea-captain, who died at Rye, N. Y., in the early seventies, was probably the most distinguished of this branch who went in for the seafaring life. He had made a name for himself among Nantucket sea-captains when merely a young man, and in 1812 enjoyed the distinction of bringing to New York in the "Prudence," of which he was one of the owners, the first news of the declaration of war between the United States and Great Britain. Later he became a very prominent commission merchant in New York City. Those of the Macys who removed to the Central and Middle West became farmers, and they were also consistent members of the Friends' Church. Her maternal grandfather, John Charles, was a farmer at Richmond, Ind. He was a strong Whig and Abolitionist, and played an active part in the conduct of the "underground railway."

Six children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Stanfield: Bertha married Clinton Bales, a farmer of Osborne County, Kans., and has two children; Stanley is the husband of Miss Annie Shipman, and is a farmer at Ramah, Colo., and the father of six children; a daughter, who was the third child, died when she was three months old; Oscar, an Orange County rancher, married Miss Olive Hockett and has six children; Jesse is a minister in the Friends' Church, having been graduated from Penn College, Iowa, and also Whittier College, later taking a four years' theological course at Hartford, Conn. He married Marian Catlin, who died recently, and he is now a pastor at Glens Falls, N. Y. The youngest of the family is Alvin Stanfield, also a neighboring rancher, who married Miss Rose Faris, by whom he has had two children. It will be seen, therefore, how well these offspring of a worthy and highly-esteemed couple have added honor to the family name.

Eleven years ago Mr. Stanfield came to California from Kansas, to spend the balance of his days, and now he resides in the Olive precinct, Orange County, on the west side of Cambridge Street and north of Collins Avenue. He had traded his highly-cultivated farm of 1,000 acres in Kansas for a splendid citrus tract of forty acres here, twenty acres of which were planted as follows: eleven acres to lemons, six acres to Valencia oranges, two acres to Navel oranges, and the remaining acre to walnuts and a yard, while twenty acres were left vacant; ten of these vacant acres he sold, and what was left, namely ten acres, he disposed of to his sons, which were planted to Valencias. He still has twenty acres in full bearing, and he has put in a pumping plant and a never-failing well, although he is also under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company's ditch, and so is certain to be supplied with water. He has remodeled his residence, and maintains his yards in fine, symmetrical shape.

On this model citrus and walnut ranch, therefore, Mr. Stanfield lives with his devoted wife, the calm influence of their peaceful religion giving them a serene temperament and a happy, hopeful disposition. At the age of seventy-three, Mr. Stanfield is in excellent health, and were it not for a runaway accident of several years ago, when he was nearly killed and was in bed for seven weeks, with a leg and foot permanently crippled, he would be an active man yet. Mrs. Stanfield, an excellent Christian lady, also enjoys the esteem and thorough good will of a very large circle of friends, and is ever of interest, as our story shows, as a member of an old-time American family. Mr. Stanfield has for years been a consistent temperance man, and is happy to have lived to see the national prohibition amendment adopted.

California, which has attracted to its borders an army of the most talented pioneers in the world, may well be congratulated on claiming as residents such enterprising, highly intelligent settlers as these; while Mr. and Mrs. Stanfield may almost be envied their lot and share in the wonderful development of the great Pacific commonwealth.

MISS JESSIE LEE TOLER.—A remarkably successful woman, noted for her keen senses and her rational judgment, and distinguished as a representative of one of the best known pioneer families that had so much to do with the development of California, is Miss Jessie Lee Toler, who resides on a real landmark—the oldest ranch in the northern section of the county. She was born in Madrid Bend, Tenn., and is the daughter of William Henry Toler, a native of Goldsboro, N. C., who married Miss Sallie (Hickman) Edwards, born in Madrid Bend, Tenn. Grandfather W. C. Edwards, was of Scotch ancestry and was a wealthy landowner and proprietor of Island No. 10, in the Mississippi River, acquiring thousands of acres of land along the river front, opposite the island. He married Miss Susan Marr, the original owner of Island No. 10, so it was inherited by Mr. and Mrs. Edwards on Capt. W. C. Edwards' death in 1856. Sallie Edwards was educated at the celebrated academy in Cape Girardeau, Mo., and married William H. Toler in Madrid Bend, Tenn. He came of an old and prominent Southern family and served as a major in the Confederate army in the Civil War.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Toler became owners of a part of the Edwards plantation where they raised cotton, corn and stock, which were shipped to the New Orleans and St. Louis markets. Mrs. Toler died in Memphis, Tenn., in 1874. In 1875 Mr. Toler brought the family to Orange, Cal., and purchased land in the Chapman-Glassell tract, and here he brought his household goods, among them a piano, the first brought to Orange, which is still in the possession of Miss Toler and is a square grand with pearl keys, which was made for and presented to her mother when she was a young lady. In 1878, W. H. Toler traded 1,700 acres of Tennessee land for 640 acres at that time in Los Angeles County, but part of which is today within the county limits of Orange. This ranch land belongs to William Worsham, a Kentucky gentleman who came to California in the early sixties, and there still stands on the ranch, close to the dwelling and neighboring buildings, a large fig tree planted by Mr. Worsham, of unusual size and bearing large, splendid figs. The 1,700 acres of Tennessee land traded was covered with timber, whereas on the 640 California acres there were 10,000 head of sheep, which were included in the sale. An old negro shepherd, named Jim North was also attached to the ranch, by long residence, and as he refused to leave, he was allowed to live on the ranch until he died.

William Henry Toler spent many of his early years in California in promoting excursions to the Golden State, and as an active worker in the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, he was instrumental in bringing settlers to California, and especially in inducing them to locate in the vicinity of Whittier and La Habra. When he died,

M. A. Poler

January 13, 1892, widely respected for his high sense of honor, his enterprise and his general capability, the 640 acres were divided among his family of five children, Susan, Jessie Lee, Wm. H., B. E. and Annie H.; 150 acres fell to the subject of our sketch, Miss Jessie Lee Toler, who had studied at the Los Angeles high school and from 1892 to 1900 had enjoyed the advantages of wide travel. In 1900 she began to make her permanent home on her ranch, and eight years later the first house in the northwestern part of Orange County and standing on the Toler ranch, was burned to the ground. This was two years after she had sold off fifty acres of the northern portion.

When Miss Toler began, in her characteristically progressive manner, the energetic development of the Toler ranch, she was told that it was in a dry spot of the county, and that water could not be found there. Despite these predictions, she engaged C. E. Tower, an expert driller, and a well was started in 1915, and although the process proved slow and discouraging, the work was continued, largely through Miss Toler's fortunate persistence, and at a depth of 506 feet water was struck, and when the sand had been pumped out of the well, the test pump showed sixty inches of the desired-for liquid. After that, the flow increased to 100 inches; and when the well was finished, people came from all parts of the county to see the attainment of the well-nigh impossible. The well is equipped with a Lane and Bowler pump, with thirty horsepower electric motor, and Miss Toller operates the plant herself. She has worked out a very flexible irrigation system, covering her entire ranch; the orchards laid with ten-inch cement pipe and all the hundred acres are equally watered according to their needs.

In 1916, Miss Toller set out 1,800 Valencia orange trees on twenty-five acres of the northern portion of her ranch, and now this grove is coming into bearing and promises rich returns. Three years later, she set out the adjoining twenty-five acres to the same popular citrus fruit, leaving the balance of her land open for the raising of grain and hay. Owing to her remarkable business ability, quite equalling that of many successful men, Miss Toler has always secured results, and results of the most satisfactory nature. She takes great pride and satisfaction in the development of her ranch and making of it a beautiful orange orchard in this favored section, pronounced the finest citrus section in the world. This she is doing to the memory of her father who had such faith and optimism in the future greatness of La Habra, and was one of the greatest boosters Southern California ever had. When the Pacific Electric Railway was built through La Habra they located a station on her ranch which was named Toler station.

Miss Toler has been particularly rewarded in the excellent prospects for oil on her land, where it is perceptible in the well water. Years ago, the Standard Oil Company had a lease there and sank a well 4,500 feet, until it struck oil; but for some unknown reason, they never continued the development. The ranch has been proven to be oil land, however, and consequently Miss Toler's holdings are not only valuable, but bound to increase in value as the years roll by. This fact alone will give her more and more a desirable position of leadership and influence, a fortunate circumstance, for Miss Toler's influence for good in the community is always of the best.

ANDREW R. REISCH.—In a natural beauty spot against the foothills in El Modena precinct lies the attractive ranch of Andrew R. Reisch, who through his careful management and industry has brought his acreage up to a very high state of cultivation, so that he is now enjoying handsome financial returns from his years of labor. His birthplace was in the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, that little country which is so intimately and interestingly associated with many of the events of the late war. He was born on May 5, 1872, the son of Frank and Katherine (Webber) Reisch. The father was a shoe merchant at Heiderscheid and he still lives there, having retired from active business. The mother passed away in 1906, leaving five children to mourn her loss.

Andrew Reisch grew up in Luxemburg and attended the village schools of his native town, acquiring French, the court language of that country, German and the various dialects of the district. At the early age of thirteen he started to make his own way in the world, and since that time he has been entirely dependent on his own efforts. He began by working on the farms in the neighborhood of his village home, continuing at agricultural pursuits until he was twenty-one, when he decided to seek his fortune in America, where the opportunities were greater. He left Antwerp on the SS. Slavonia, expecting to land in New York, but smallpox broke out on board ship, so that they were not allowed to make landing there, but were taken on to Halifax, Nova Scotia, where they disembarked in March, 1893. Chicago was Mr. Reisch's destination, and he pushed on there as rapidly as possible, reaching there the first week in April.

Mr. Reisch was not only without funds when he reached Chicago, but was in debt, as he had borrowed his passage money from his father. Nothing daunted, however, he secured work at once with Reinberg Brothers, the largest florists in America.

The firm was composed of Peter and George R. Reinberg, whose parents were natives of Luxemburg; indeed the cut flower business of Chicago and the Middle West was controlled by Luxemburgers. At the time Mr. Reisch went to work for Reinberg Brothers they had forty acres under glass at Summerdale, a suburb of Chicago. He grew much interested in the florists' business and remained with this firm for nine years, learning the business thoroughly.

In 1902 Mr. Reisch came to California and located at Los Angeles, soon going to work for the Bartlett Nursery at Hollywood. In Chicago he had made a specialty of carnations, and he continued in this line for the next eight years, when the encroachment of an alien race into this industry made him decide to become an orchardist, his years of training eminently fitting him for this line of work. He purchased a tract of five acres of land on Santiago Boulevard and Bond Street, there being two acres of oranges, one and a half acres of lemons and one and a half acres of loquats. He erected an attractive residence of the bungalow type on his property, and here he has since made his home.

On August 13, 1910, Mr. Reisch was married to Miss Edith May Killifer, the daughter of Joseph and Matilda (Shoemaker) Killifer; for many years well-known residents of Orange County, where they both passed away, the father at Orange and the mother at Garden Grove. They were the parents of six children: Park resides in Los Angeles; Scott, at Corcoran; Bert, at Pasadena; Edgar in the state of Washington; Edith May, the wife of Andrew R. Reisch of this review, and Miss Lydia D. Killifer, who is principal of the Lemon Street School, having taught in that school for twenty-five years. Mrs. Reisch was born in Illinois, near East St. Louis, but has been a resident of California since she was eleven years old. Mr. and Mrs. Reisch are the parents of one daughter, Lucile L.

In 1919 Mr. Reisch invested in a second ranch comprising ten acres of Valencia oranges near Olive, Miss Lydia D. Killifer being half owner with him in this project. A loyal and enthusiastic supporter of his adopted country, Mr. Reisch was made a citizen in 1902, while a resident of Chicago. Politically he is a believer in the principles of the Republican party, and in fraternal circles he is a member of the local lodge of American Yeomen.

SAMUEL S. WILLIAMSON.—A representative Orange County man who has been a leader in developing the fine acreage along West Commonwealth Avenue is Samuel S. Williamson, to whose own far-seeing efforts are due so many desirable improvements both upon and outside of his own ranch. In 1907 he built there a beautiful home which is a credit to the neighborhood and is just such an addition to realty as is certain to help raise property values. He was born at Phillipsburg near Dayton, Montgomery County, Ohio, on February 4, 1853, in a region to which his grandfather, John C. Williamson, came from Kentucky and his grandmother Mary Croumbach, from Pennsylvania in pioneer days. His father was Peter Williamson, a farmer, who died when our subject was less than three years old; and he married Miss Abigail Thomas, born in Montgomery County, Ohio, a daughter of Wm. and Mary (Farmer) Thomas, natives of North Carolina, who were members of the Society of Friends. Samuel S. Williamson's father died in Ohio in December, 1855, and his mother lived for many years in Kansas and died there in Wyandotte County in April, 1913, aged eighty years.

The only child of this union, Samuel S. Williamson, removed to Howard County, Ind., with his mother, where he received a good education in the public schools, making his own livelihood from the age of twelve years; his mother having married a second time caused Samuel to start out for himself at such an early age. At first he hired out on various farms in his neighborhood, and in 1879, four years after the death of his stepfather, he accompanied his mother to Wyandotte County, Kans., and settled at Piper near Kansas City. He next became an officer at the state prison at Lansing, and continued in that responsible office for three and a half years. The following year he was foreman of the brick works connected with the penitentiary. He then engaged in farming near Lawrence for three years and then removed to Kansas City, where he was in the employ of the Metropolitan Street Railway for another period of three years, when he resumed farming on their old farm in Wyandotte County.

After three years here he decided to locate on the Pacific Coast, so in the fall of 1903 he moved to Everett, Wash., and there passed the following winter and in June, 1904, came to Pasadena, Cal., where he superintended a ranch for three years. During this time he investigated soil and climate in Southern California and decided on Orange County as the most suitable location for his purpose. In 1907 he removed to Orange County and purchased thirty-three acres of vacant land on West Commonwealth Avenue with one-half mile frontage, at that time overgrown with volunteer hay and mustard; and when he had cleared and graded the acreage, he planted it to Valencia the home farm again. He disposed of it finally, when he had decided to move to the Pacific Coast, in 1908. He arrived in Santa Ana in the spring, and a year later built his home at 402 South Birch Street. At the time when Mr. Read built his home there the tract between Birch and Ross streets was a barley field, and his was the first home that far south on the west side of the street.

In 1912 his son, Walter Wilson Read, purchased from Dr. Samuel Stroock a walnut and orange grove of thirteen acres on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard north of Olive, which he still owns. Walter W. Read was born in Kane County, Ill., in 1881, and was a student at Wheaton College, at Wheaton, Ill. He married Miss Mabel E. Chaffee, who was born in Kane County, and also educated there. Three children blessed their union: Charles C., a high school student of Santa Ana; and Morris Wilson and Mary Emily, pupils of the grammar school.

C. C. Read adopted two children in 1879: William C. Katten, nine years of age, and Emily Manning, a year younger. She lives at present in Chicago. William C. Read was born in 1870, and was educated in the common schools of Kane County, Ill. He spent his boyhood and youth on his adopted father's farm, and was married on September 22, 1894, to Miss Maude E. Anderson, a native of De Kalb, Ill., where she was educated in the local schools. He took up painting and worked at that trade until he came to California in 1909. Three children have been born to them. Genevieve C. is now Mrs. A. McConnell of Santa Ana; Rheta E. is a student of the Santa Ana Business College, and Claude C. is a pupil in the grammar school. William C. Read is a member of the Modern Woodmen, and believes in the fitness of man for office regardless of party.

JOHN D. LAVIN.—A highly-esteemed citizen of Orange County, now retired, who has merely continued to operate in California according to the same high standards and approved methods as characterized him in former years, having always been a man of affairs wherever he has lived, is John D. Lavin, who was born in Ireland, came to America with his parents while a babe in arms, lived at Windsor, Ont., until he was thirteen years of age, and ever since then has resided in the United States. He lived for a while in Michigan, and finished his education at Bryant & Stratton's Business College in Chicago.

As a young man he started railroading, in the service of the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway, and after a while became agent for that company at Flint, Mich. In March, 1880, he removed to South Dakota, and at Columbia, then 120 miles from a railroad, established the first mercantile business in Brown County, which he continued for fifteen years. He was mayor of Columbia, and he also served as one of the commissioners of Brown County, part of the time acting as chairman of the board. He and his two sisters owned 1,600 acres of fine farm land in South Dakota, which they leased out to tenants on shares.

For twenty years Mr. Lavin was grand recorder for the state of South Dakota of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, with headquarters at Aberdeen; he was appointed by Governor Herried as a member of the state board of charities and correction, having in charge all the state charitable and penal institutions. He resigned his position with the Workmen in 1909 to come to California on account of his sisters' health. Since locating in Anaheim, he has been active in civic affairs, as he was in South Dakota, although retired from business, merely overseeing the general management of his fine ten-acre ranch in South Los Angeles Street, which he set out to Valencia oranges in July, 1919. For a number of years he was a director in the German-American, now the Golden State National, Bank of Anaheim, and he is now a member of the Anaheim Public Library Board, and was formerly chairman of the same. He is a member of the Catholic Church, belongs to the Knights of Columbus, and also to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

LEWIS G. BUTLER.—A very interesting "old-timer" who, as a pioneer farmer, nurseryman and grower of citrus fruit, has made a definite contribution to the growth and development of Southern California, is Lewis G. Butler, of 1211 Van Ness Avenue, Santa Ana, who enjoys, with his good wife, the high esteem of many friends. He was born at Prairie du Chien, Wis., on February 28, 1851, the son of George H. and Elizabeth (Schoolcraft) Butler, natives of New York State who came west to Wisconsin. His father followed agricultural pursuits, and when our subject was a babe, his parents moved to Iowa, where they settled on a farm, and there the father died when Lewis was only three years old.

After the father's death, Mrs. Butler removed, first, to Belvidere, and then to Sycamore, Ill., taking the four children, among whom Lewis G. was the third in the order of birth. When ten years old, he went to live with an uncle, Peter Lawyer, a farmer at Sycamore, and with him he stayed, working out on farms until he was LEWIS G. Butler, of 1211 Van Ness Avenue, Santa Ana, who enjoys, with his good wife, the high esteem of many friends. eighteen. Then he removed to Iowa and there worked for two years for another uncle, also named Lawyer. Another change brought him to Lincoln, Nebr., where he labored at farm work for a couple of years.

In the fall of 1874, he made still another change, and one calculated to bring him still greater prosperity and happiness. He came out to California and settled at Orange. The year previous he had been married in Nebraska to Miss Martha E. Selby, a native of Ohio and a daughter of George Selby, and Mrs. Butler came along to the Golden State to assist him to win his fortune and to make a comfortable home. He worked for a while for Lockwood on East Chapman Street, cultivated his orange orchard and put out nursery stock for him. He then entered the employ of Dr. Beach, who also had an orange orchard and raised nursery stock, besides practicing medicine. Thus Mr. Butler rapidly extended a valuable experience, and he came to enjoy the reputation of being the boss budder in the county.

He budded, for example, the first Washington Navels in the district of Orange, getting his buds from Tom Covert of Riverside, who had one of the old original trees sent out from Washington. And about this time he started in the nursery business in Orange, first as a partner of Dr. Beach; he planted fifteen acres to oranges and five acres to apricots, and the results attracted wide attention. He also owned twenty acres on East Walnut Street in Orange.

Always, too, a fancier of good horses, a chance acquaintance with the late John Bushard in the Wintersburg district, resulted in his turning his attention to that field, so that he became a partner of Mr. Bushard and bought a ranch of 400 and eighty acres south and west of where Wintersburg is now located. At the end of three years this partnership was dissolved, and then Mr. Butler went up into the San Jacinto Valley, improved a ranch and fruit land, and came to own 160 acres there, and there he prospered for the ensuing thirty years. In March, 1918, he let go his holdings there, and the following November he removed to Santa Ana.

Mr. and Mrs. Butler have had one child, Chester G., who died in September, 1917, at the age of thirty-five, leaving a large circle of steadfast friends. Mrs. Butler belongs to the Christian Church, and both husband and wife find pleasure in supporting movements calculated to make California, and especially Orange County, a better place in which to live.

NIELS JOHNSON.—An honest, kind-hearted and highly esteemed citizen of Placentia, who, while seeking to live a retired life, free from the cares of labor or investment, finds it hard to keep his hands off the plow entirely, and who therefore may often be seen superintending the work of the harvest, is Niels Johnson of East Chapman Avenue, a native of Southern Denmark, where he was born near Kolding, November 5, 1847. His father was a grain farmer, and as the eldest of a family of seven children, Niels had to go to work early in life. He attended the ordinary grammar schools, and when he grew up, served in the Danish army for the required term, until he had obtained his honorable discharge. After that Mr. Johnson went across the border into Slesvig to work at harvesting, as he received better wages there than at his old home in Southern Denmark. He remained there and in due time, met a young lady, the acquaintance ripening into a more lasting tie and she became his wife. She was Miss Metta R. Paulson, born in Apenrade, Slesvig, a woman of attractive personality, and their union was indeed a happy one.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Johnson engaged in farming, but Mr. Johnson's longing for the New World was so strong that they decided to migrate to the land of the Stars and Stripes. When he had saved sufficient funds to defray the expenses of the trip, he sailed with his family from Hamburg, with New York as their destination. Ships traveled more slowly in those days, and it took fifteen days to cross the Atlantic, and fifteen days more before they reached San Francisco. A brother-in-law had already come to California and located in Watsonville, and here the travelers came. For three and a half years Mr. Johnson worked at Watsonville in the lumber yards; then through Peter Hansen, whose wife was a cousin of Mrs. Johnson, and who resided at Fullerton, Mr. Johnson learned about Orange County, and the story of its wonderful possibilities led him to bring his family there. On their arrival, Mr. Johnson purchased four acres near Placentia, and in the following years, as he worked for the Anaheim Union Water Company, he purchased more land and brought the same to a high state of cultivation. About the year 1890, he bought twenty acres from the Stearns Land Company in the Placentia district and later bought eight acres on East Chapman Street, which is now devoted to oranges. The twenty-acre ranch has been leased and successfully exploited for oil, and he now derives a good income from it; he has also leased his home place for oil recently. The balance of his land has been given to his children. In 1920 Mr. Johnson built a modern bungalow on his East Chapman Street property, and here he resides with his eldest daughter, Anna, who presides over his home in a charming manner and shows her devotion by looking after his comfort and entertaining his many friends. The other living children are: George, a rancher at Placentia; Dora, the wife of Frank Trendle of Orangethorpe Avenue; and Raymond, a rancher at Placentia, who served in an artillery regiment overseas during the World War. Mr. Johnson is a stockholder in the Anaheim Union Water Company, and he is a charter member of the Placentia Orange Growers Association.

A sorrow never to be effaced came into the life of this happy home circle in the death on November 14, 1918, of Mrs. Johnson, who passed away after a short illness due to a fall, in her sixty-fifth year. She was operated on at the Fullerton Hospital, and was believed to be progressing toward complete recovery, when she passed away very suddenly. She meant much not merely to her near of kin, but to the community as a whole, and it is not surprising that Mr. Johnson attributes much of his success in life to the inspiration of her noble character and her fidelity as a loving and ever devoted helpmate.

ERNEST A. BEARD.—When we are temporarily deprived of the use of the telephone we begin to realize what an important part that invention plays in our modern business and social life. The telephone system of Anaheim and Fullerton is under the competent management of Ernest A. Beard, a native of Ohio, who was born in Richland County in that state November 16, 1877. He is the son of Charles W. and Charity (Baker) Beard. While living in the East the father was an insurance agent and was also engaged in the implement business. The family came to Santa Ana, Cal., in 1881, where the father engaged in business and for a number of years was one of the city officials of Santa Ana. His demise occurred in 1910.

Ernest A., the youngest child in a family of four children, was four years of age when he accompanied his parents to California. He received a competent education in the schools of Santa Ana, and later attended the Los Angeles Business School, from which he graduated. After taking up the responsibilities of life he was engaged as a telegraph operator, and for four years was in charge of the Santa Ana postal office. He afterwards went north and learned the harness trade, which he followed for six years. After this he was on an eastern farm for two years, and upon returning to California followed the occupation of farming. Following this he engaged in selling tractors and in the automobile business for the next ten years, and in 1918 became interested with the Anaheim telephone company, which is also in charge of the Fullerton system, with headquarters at Anaheim. Since assuming the management of the telephone company Mr. Beard has demonstrated his ability to fill that important position. He still maintains his Valencia orange grove, which is located on East Santa Ana Street about one-half mile east of town. He is a member of Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

His marriage occurred March 8, 1906, uniting him with Miss Anna Morthland, and they are the parents of a daughter named Loma. Mr. Beard, who is musically inclined, finds diversion from the arduous cares of business life in the art of music and is manager of the Anaheim band. He is also fond of the sports of hunting and fishing, but dearer than all else to his heart is his interest in the successful growth and development of the county in which his lot in life is cast. Although a Republican in principles, he does not allow party prejudice to influence his vote, ever seeking to lend his influence for the man best fitted for the office, regardless of party affiliations.

HENRY J. HARKLEROAD.—An important overseer on the Irvine ranch, who has also become a successful tenant and a prosperous landowner, is Henry J. Harkleroad, foreman of the Harkleroad Camp, or that portion of the San Joaquin ranch containing some 815 acres planted to walnut, lemon, orange and avocado trees, and irrigated by means of wells and pumping plants. He is also an individual tenant on the same San Joaquin ranch, leasing 200 acres of bean and barley land individually and in partnerships operating another lease of 600 acres devoted to the same products.

A native son, as one might suspect from his aggressive progressiveness, Mr. Harkleroad was born at Hollister on February 26, 1877, the son of Henry J. Harkleroad, a native of Tennessee, who came to California and here married Miss Caroline Welborn, of Maryland. He was a rancher at Hollister, where he owned 160 acres of land. He died in 1884, when our subject was only seven years old; and Mrs. Harkleroad passed away in 1917. They had four children: Lucy resides at San Jose; Henry J. is the subject of this review; Samuel W. is the manager of the Andrew Mattei Commercial Company of Fresno; and George A. is principal of the high school at Fall Brook, San Diego County.

Henry attended the public schools at Hollister, but being the oldest son, he had a great deal of responsibility thrust upon him through the early death of his father. He managed, however, to get in a good course at the Hollister Business College, and when a young man he went to San Francisco and enlarged his experience as a foreman for three years in the Union Iron Works. There he learned to handle men—now unquestionably his forte. He was foreman in the chipping department of the cast steel foundry, many of their castings being used in the construction of vessels, among them the battleships Wisconsin and Ohio and the cruiser California, as well as some of the first submarines turned out for the government. Next he was in the real estate and insurance business at Hollister and San Jose, through which activity and experience he became a still better judge of human nature. After that he was for several years in charge of his mother's ranch, helping her to successfully handle her estate.

On December 1, 1908, Mr. Harkleroad came to Orange County and for the first two years was employed on the home ranch for the Irvine Company as foreman and since 1910 he has been in charge of the Harkleroad Camp as stated above. He also owns 320 acres in Arizona, eighty acres in Los Angeles County, five acres in Orange County and ten acres in Madera County.

On June 30, 1906, Mr. Harkleroad was married at Hollister to Miss Mae Fowler of Mulberry, San Benito County, a native of Portland, Ore. He is a Republican in national politics and fraternally is a Knights Templar Mason and a Shriner, as well as a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks. Mr. Harkleroad has become a very enthusiastic booster for Orange County and the Southland from observation and experience, and his two boys, Henry J., Jr., and William F. Harkleroad, bid fair to display the same virtues.

WM. OSCAR WILSON.—A native son who has become one of the most successful bean ranchers is Wm. Oscar Wilson, who was born in the city of Ventura on May 19, 1892, the second son of William Wilson, the pioneer lima bean grower on the Irvine ranch. Oscar, as all of his friends call him, was only five years old when, on an October day, he came to Irvine, where he grew up on his father's ranch, and had as good time as any boy in the county. He attended the local public schools at Irvine and Tustin, and applied himself to his studies sufficiently to make it worth the while, later, to take a course in the excellent Orange County Business College at Santa Ana, where he was graduated in 1909.

His father had allowed him a workman's wages since his seventeenth year, and with his studies ended, he went in for some of this world's goods. He had felt very deeply the loss in his fifteenth year of his mother (who was Miss Emma Shepard, of Missouri, before her marriage), but fortunately he was already enthused with certain ideals, and resolved to make his way forward and upward, and to enjoy success. His decision to remain at home with his father until he himself set up a domestic establishment was favorable to the quiet formation of a sturdy character such as those who know him highly esteem. When he was nineteen, at Santa Ana, June 10, 1911, he was joined in wedlock to Miss Lenore Brenot, a stepdaughter of Abe W. Johnson of Irvine. She is a native daughter, born at Irvine.

Mr. Wilson spent some time at Capistrano on his father's lease, and then he worked for three years in Santa Ana. He began farming operations for himself three years ago, and now he has under lease from the Irvine ranch, and planted, about 250 acres. One hundred forty of these are given to lima beans; sixty to blackeye beans; and fifty acres to barley hay. Twelve head of mules furnish for him the motor power for which the mule is famous.

Two children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Wilson, adding happiness to their happy home, a daughter and a son, Elizabeth Adell and William Wesley. Fraternally Mr. Wilson is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 236, I. O. O. F. and of the Encampment, and with his wife is a member of the Rebekahs.

HENRY F. GIBBS.—An enterprising, thoroughly capable ranchman of Huntington Beach, is Henry F. Gibbs, who resides at his ranch two and a half miles northeast of the town, where he devotes thirty acres to the cultivation of sugar beets and berries. He was born on January 9, 1880, in Nodaway County, Mo., the son of Henry Gibbs, now the proprietor of the grocery business at the corner of Walnut and Main streets, which was established by the son. Henry Gibbs was born on November 22, 1850, at Tunbridge in Kent, some thirty miles from London, and his father was James Gibbs, a native of England and a farmer who came to America and settled in Wisconsin. He came out here in 1857, two years before the rest of his family, and in Wisconsin was joined by his wife and a daughter and five sons. Henry Gibbs' mother was employed by Queen Victoria as a housemaid, and in the performance of her duties about the castle, often conversed with the Queen. Mrs. Henry Gibbs was Lucy Latter, a native also of England. When James Gibbs came to Wisconsin, he farmed at Waukesha, and owing to the primitive conditions of that region, Henry's schooling was very limited. Grandfather Gibbs died when Henry was nineteen years old, and three of the ten children of the family having died when they were in England, Henry F. was the next to the youngest. Henry Gibbs worked out on farms at twelve cents a day in harvest time, carrying water to the cradlers and binders—a jug of water in one hand, and a jug of whiskey in the other; harvesting was then done by cradling, and binding was performed by hand.

In Wisconsin Henry Gibbs met and married Jeanette or Nettie Cross, a native of Macomb County, Mich., where she was born on March 24, 1855. She was reared in that state until her twelfth year, and then she came with her parents to southeast Wisconsin. Her father, Leonard Cross, a New Yorker, was kicked by a horse and he died from the injury, passing away a day after Nettie was fifteen years old. Her mother was Elizabeth Woodard, a daughter of Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gibbs were married in 1873, and a year after they removed to Nodaway County, Mo., where they farmed for twelve years.

In 1886, they came to California, and settled in Los Angeles, and there engaged in the sale of staple and fancy groceries. In 1896 Mr. Gibbs bought a ranch of twenty acres at Smeltzer, Cal., and in 1902, he went to Santa Ana, where for two and a half years he busied himself with real estate deals and the management of a restaurant. As a business man at present in Huntington Beach, he is one of the oldest merchants in the city, and he is still ably assisted in his business by his wife.

Henry F. Gibbs was six and a half years old when he came to California with his parents, and his early education was obtained in the grammar schools of Los Angeles, and a year in the Los Angeles high school, after which he took a commercial course at the Santa Ana Business College under Prof. R. L. Bisby. In 1901 he married Miss Viola M. Stewart, the only daughter of O. C. Stewart, a member of a family of early settlers in what is now Orange County, and a sister of D. O. Stewart of Huntington Beach. They have two children—Stewart and Beatrice Nettie.

Few farmers have succeeded better than Henry F. Gibbs in demonstrating the qualities of the soil and environment of Huntington Beach for agriculture of a scientific and aggressive sort; and besides the success thus attained, he and his family enjoy the esteem of all who know them.

STETSON R. JUMPER.—An exceedingly able, first-class official, and a public-spirited citizen in every respect is Stetson R. Jumper, the accommodating postmaster at Balboa, who was born in Maine on July 23, 1859, and lived in that fine old Yankee State until he was twenty-five. In 1884, he came to California and settled at Riverside, and there he kept a cigar and news stand, and was agent for the Los Angeles Times, serving that journal for eight years. He was really a carpenter by trade, and came to East Newport in 1906 to build for the East Newport Town Company, which made him their construction boss. He assumed much responsibility, overseeing, among other works, the erection of the East Newport Pavilion, now used for the Newport Harbor Yacht Club.

After a while, Mr. Jumper established himself in business as an independent contractor and builder, and succeeding beyond his expectations, he became the head of the firm of Jumper and Goodcell, building contractors at Balboa and East Newport, and remained in that relation until Mr. Goodcell, dropped out, and Mr. Jumper continued alone as a contractor. He built the dwelling in which he now resides, and also another residence that he still owns.

This mechanical ability was doubtless inherited, for his father, Royal D. Jumper, who died when our subject was only two years old, and was a native of Maine, was a machinist of the genuine American type. He married Miss Mary Myrick, also a native of the Lumber State, and together they represented descent from English, Irish and Scotch blood. The Jumpers had been residents of Maine for three generations, and on the mother's side they went back to the Bradford family made famous by their trip to New England in the Mayflower. Mrs. Jumper died when Stetson was eighteen years old, so that he has helped himself through the world from early years. He attended the common schools of his home district, and also studied for two years at Kent's Hill Academy, in Maine.

In April, 1914, Mr. Jumper was elected to the council of the town of Balboa, and two years later, he was made chairman or mayor. In 1917, however, he resigned in order to accept the appointment of postmaster of Balboa, receiving his commission on March 16. He was chairman of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, and it is not surprising that he has almost doubled the volume of business of the Balboa postoffice since he took hold—a fact that speaks well for both Balboa and its postmaster.

In 1881, Mr. Jumper was married to Miss Ellen Fabb, a native of England, who is still living, and they have become the parents of five children. Fred T. is an oil man at Ojai. Eva A. is the wife of H. J. Henry, and resides at Balboa. Royal F. is a rancher at Shafter, Kern County, Cal. Harry is assistant city engineer and resides at Balboa. And Albert P. is an automobile mechanic employed by Rodger Bros., and was in France during the war in the One Hundred Forty-fourth Artillery. Harry was also in the naval aviation service, while H. J. Henry was in the machine gun service in the Ninety-first Division, and received the French decoration of the Croix de Guerre.

Reared a Baptist, Mr. Jumper has been a member of the Odd Fellows since he was twenty-one, and has filled all the offices, so that he is past grand of Riverside Lodge No. 282; and he belongs to the Star Encampment of Riverside, No. 73, where he is past chief patriarch. Wherever he is, or whatever he does, but especially when he is busy at beautiful Balboa, he is an optimist of the most practical and helpful kind; and his faith in the fortunately-situated harbor town is rock-ribbed. "This is a good old world," he says, "and I am going to stay in it as long as I can."

WILLIAM TRAPP.—For several years a sailor on the high seas, William Trapp visited many of the principal ports of the world, braving the perils of the deep and encountering many thrilling experiences, and now, in the quiet of his Anaheim home, he can relate many interesting happenings in recalling his seafaring days. One of Anaheim's early settlers, he has seen this locality change from a barren, cactus-covered plain to one of Southern California's beauty spots, with groves of lemon, orange and walnut stretching as far as the eye can reach.

A native of Germany, William Trapp was born on February 13, 1868, at Dortmund in Westphalia, his father, Joseph Trapp, being employed in the mines of the locality at that time. Of the five children of the Trapp family, William was the third oldest and the only one to immigrate to the United States. He received a good education in the public schools of Germany, but when he grew to young manhood he determined to leave his native land, where the military regulations were becoming more and more oppressive. He landed in New York in 1888, and made his way to Memphis, Tenn., where he was employed for the next three years. Attracted to the sea by its life of adventure, he shipped from New York as a sailor on the Timandria, sailing around the Cape of Good Hope to the East Indies, visiting Calcutta, Madras, Ceylon and St. Helena, returning to New York after a voyage of thirteen months. His next berth was on the Sterling, bound for Hong Kong, China, and it was indeed filled with perils and dangers. Mr. Trapp had become steersman of the vessel, and while off the coast of China they were caught in one of the typhoons which have dealt such deadly destruction to hundreds of ships. In the midst of the gale they lost their rudder and were compelled to put back to Hong Kong, where the damage was repaired, returning to San Francisco after a year at sea. For a time Mr. Trapp worked as a longshoreman at San Pedro, returning to the sea again in the coasting service between San Francisco and British Columbia; he was on the first vessel landing at the Long Wharf at Santa Monica.

In 1894 Mr. Trapp met with an accident that resulted in quite a severe injury, and he then determined to quit the sea. Coming to Anaheim, he purchased a small place on North Street, where he raised apricots and vegetables, remaining here until 1900, when he sold the ranch, intending to go to Oregon, but was induced to remain here. He then purchased twenty acres on Sunkist Avenue for the low price of thirty-five dollars an acre, the land then being covered with cactus and sage brush and giving but little promise of its future prosperity. Mr. Trapp at once began to clear and level the land, setting it out to Valencia oranges. He sunk wells, installed a pumping plant for irrigation, improved it with a substantial residence and other buildings, and soon made it one of the most attractive places of the locality. He continued to reside here until January, 1919, when he sold the orchard for $3500 an acre, at that time the highest price that an orange grove had brought in this vicinity. After disposing of his property Mr. Trapp traveled north, with the expectation of investing in land in some other locality, but he found nothing that compared with the attractive and productive lands of Orange County, so he returned to Anaheim and purchased the twenty acres where he now resides. It is set out to Navels and Valencias, and he intends making it one of the show places of the county. He has already erected a handsome residence and made many improvements, and with his long experience as a horticulturist it is only a question of time when it will be one of the most valuable citrus ranches in this district.

Mr. Trapp's first marriage occurred in Anaheim, uniting him with Augusta Schreiber, a native of Bohemia. She died, leaving him four children, two of whom are living: William A. is a cement pipe contractor, and resides at East Anaheim; Henry died at the age of fifteen; Walter assists his father on the home place; Frank died in his first year. Mr. Trapp was married a second time, the ceremony occurring in San Bernardino, Cal., February 13, 1914, when he was united with Frieda Schneider, who was born in Karlsruhe, Baden, Germany. After completing her education in Karlsruhe she came to Chicago on a visit to her brother, after which she came to Orange County, where she met Mr. Trapp, and the acquaintance resulted in their marriage, a union that is proving very happy to them both. Fulfilling a long-cherished desire to visit the old world, and particularly his old home in Westphalia, Mr. Trapp left for France in July, 1920. After visiting Paris as well as other important cities, and the battlefields, they made their way through Lorraine to Germany, where he visited the old home and traveled all over the country, visiting the different points of interest, returning through Holland and sailing from Rotterdam to New York City, being en route on the ship Ryndam fourteen days to New York, and thence came immediately to his home, delighted to get back—Orange County looked better than ever after seeing war-torn Europe, and was glad that destiny had led him when a young man to the land of the Stars and Stripes and the state of sunshine and flowers. In fraternal relations Mr. Trapp has been identified with the Elks for a number of years, being a charter member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345. Politically he is an adherent of the principles of the Republican party. A man of the highest principles and unquestioned integrity, he and his family are held in the highest regard in the community that has been their home for so many years.

FRANK CLAUDINA.—Decidedly a "live wire," and no wonder, for he is widely acknowledged to be one of the best livestock buyers in Orange County, F. Claudina, the capitalist at Newport Beach was long and favorably known at Fullerton, where for many years he had a well-appointed livery stable and a fully stocked feed yard. He is, in fact, a most capable judge of mules and horses, and as far back as his seventeenth year bought cattle on the O'Neill ranch for his uncle, Frank Claudina, and then drove them all the way to Los Angeles where they were shipped to San Luis Obispo.

He was born in East Somerville, near Boston, Mass., on May 15, 1874, the son of Joseph Claudina, a native of France, who came to Massachusetts and served in the Civil War and was a farmer in the Bay State. Our subject, therefore, grew up in the city of baked beans and culture, and came to California with an uncle, Frank Claudina, when he was eight years old, in 1882, and settled in and grew up in Tuolumne County. Then he removed to Fullerton, Orange County, in 1899. He had married in San Francisco, in 1894, Miss Mary Martin, a native of Walnut Creek, Contra Costa County, whose parents were pioneers of Walnut Creek. Since coming to California, he has made nine different trips back to Boston, where his mother, who was Catherine Alameda before her marriage, resided until her death, in 1918, in her seventy-third year. He has also traveled through the United States and in Canada from Montreal to Vancouver. He was very successful as a stock buyer, drover and dealer at Fullerton. During the panicky times of Grover Cleveland, Mr. Claudina lost heavily; but it is eminently to his credit that he paid all of his debts, one hundred cents on the dollar. He owns a quarter of a block on Spadra Street, Fullerton, where he has erected a garage which he rents, and, besides, he owns three residences in the same block.

After such an active life, full of hard work, of benefit to others as well as himself, it is gratifying to Mr. and Mrs. Claudina's many friends that they are to take a well-earned rest in beautiful Newport Beach where they have an attractive home surrounded by flowers and is said to be the finest in town. Mr. Claudina's extended and successful connection with Orange County interests of various sorts leads one to wish that now that he has become a resident of Newport Beach, he may further identify himself with the development of the beach towns.

FRANK P. BORCHARD.—How unremitting, intelligent industry inevitably brings its own reward is well illustrated in the careers of the Borchard family, founded by Casper Borchard, of which Frank P., the subject of this review, is one of the most successful members. His father came from Germany, and applied the lesson of hard labor acquired there to the problems confronting him in the almost primeval country to which he came; and, although a large landowner in several counties, he is today best known in Ventura County, where he is still living at Conejo. The good mother, Theresa Moring, was not permitted to survive and witness the success of the eight children, each of whom reflected credit upon the family name. Rosa is now the wife of Silas Kelley, the rancher, of Conejo; Mary, single, keeps house for her father at the old Ventura home ranch; Leo's story is given elsewhere in this work; Casper is a rancher in Ventura County and lives near Conejo; Anton is a rancher at Greenville, Orange County; Frank P. is now a resident of Santa Ana; Charles is a rancher at Fairview, in Orange County; and Theresa is the wife of Ed. Borchard, the rancher, and resides at Conejo.

Born at Conejo on August 28, 1886, Frank was twelve years old when his mother died. When only eight or nine years old, he began to ride the range; and he drove horses at farm work when he was only thirteen. He saw the beet sugar factory erected at Oxnard, and is proud of the fact that his father early raised beets for the factory, and as a large stockman and cattle raiser for years, was one of the first in California to feed beet tops to cattle in order to fatten them.

When nineteen years of age, Mr. Borchard started grain farming in partnership with his brother Anton, renting 3,000 acres of land on which they raised wheat, barley and oats. He worked seventy-five head of horses, and eight eight-horse teams at plowing, and thirty-two head of horses on a Holt harvester, and he soon took rank among the large grain growers of Ventura County. In 1909 Casper Borchard turned his property into the corporation organized by him and known as the Borchard Land Company, and the Borchard holdings were farmed by that corporation for about ten years; then the company was dissolved, and a division of the land was made among the sons and daughters. At one time his father had as many as 900 head of cattle on the range, and when he came down to Orange County, he displayed equally good foresight and executive ability in buying heavily of "Gospel Swamp" lands. He believed that the district could be drained and made very valuable, and the great task he accomplished, assisted by his sons. Inasmuch as the Borchards understood sugar beet growing, they raised large quantities; and more recently the land has been found very valuable for the production of lima beans, so that it is now worth from $500 to $750 per acre.

In 1912, Mr. Borchard was married to Miss Myrtle Heaston, the wedding taking place in the summer month of August. She was a native of San Diego, but grew up in Los Angeles and Orange counties, and her parents still reside at Huntington Beach. Three children blessed their union—Alice and Alfred, twins, and Barbara. The ranch house at Huntington Beach, where the Borchards formerly lived, having burned down in April, 1919, the family came to Santa Ana, and there Mr. Borchard bought a residence at 415 East Fifth Street, where they now live. They attend the Catholic Church, and Mr. Borchard belongs to the Knights of Columbus and the Elks. Mr. Borchard has worked very hard in his lifetime, but he and his estimable wife are at last able to enjoy the fruits of both labor and sacrifice.

JOHN M. WINE.—In point of continuous service, John M. Wine, of the firm of Wine and Fewell, irrigation contractors and cement pipe manufacturers, is the veteran in his line in Orange County, having been engaged in this work since 1906. A native of Tennessee, Mr. Wine was born near Bristol, in that state, September 25, 1874, his parents being John and Ann Wine. The years of his boyhood were spent at the home place in Tennessee, where he had the advantages of the public schools of the locality. When he reached young manhood he decided to start out for himself, and migrated to northwest Illinois, locating in the neighborhood of Milledgeville, Carroll County, where he worked around on farms from 1894 to 1899.

The Pacific Coast had a strong attraction for Mr. Wine, however, so he made up his mind to try his fortune in California. He arrived here in December, 1899, settling first at El Toro, where he continued to do farm work, later working at Buena Park, Orange and El Modena. In 1906 he came to Santa Ana and became actively engaged in the cement pipe business, to which he has ever since given his time. In 1915 he formed a partnership with Archie Vernon Fewell, under the firm name of Wine and Fewell, and they maintain a cement pipe manufacturing establishment at 1029 East First Street, Santa Ana. Here they do an extensive business, having laid about 200 miles of cement pipe for irrigation in Orange County. They have done much work for such discriminating patrons as Judge Williams, James Irvine and scores of leading agriculturists and horticulturists of the county. The firm is known far and wide as thoroughly efficient and square in all their dealings. They manufacture and carry a large stock of cement pipes of all sizes, from four to thirty-six inches, and valves, gates and other irrigation necessities, so that they are able to handle any contract satisfactorily and expeditiously. They have handled large contracts at Tustin, San Juan Capistrano, Delhi, Harper, Newport, Greenville, Laguna Beach and Santa Ana, and have also done a great deal of road and county work for Orange County.

In 1909 Mr. Wine was married to Miss Lanna M. Jordan, also a native of Tennessee, and the daughter of Thomas and Christene Jordan. They are the parents of one child, Vivian. Mr. Wine is the owner of an excellent ten-acre walnut ranch on Ritchie Street, near Santa Ana, which he planted and improved, and here the family make their home. He purchased this property in 1917 and set out the whole acreage to budded walnuts, so that every year increases the value of the place. The family are members of the Brethren Church at Santa Ana and hold a high place in the regard of their many friends. A self-made man, Mr. Wine has a tremendous capacity for mental and physical work, and he never tires in contributing to the progress of the place of his choice.

THOMAS E. BROADWAY.—An American genius who has both natural aptitude and long, invaluable experience for his difficult and important art, that of up-to-date shipbuilding, is Thomas E. Broadway, the naval architect of Newport Beach, who has recently organized the Broadway Boat and Equipment Corporation, a corporation capitalized at $15,000. No better location could possibly be found in all California than picturesque, popular Newport Beach, with its well-protected bay; and he is undoubtedly the right man in the right place at a decisive hour in the history of this expanding portion of Orange County.

Mr. Broadway was born in New York City on the thirteenth of November, 1876, just when the ambitious American nation was reviewing the wonders of its exposition at Philadelphia and taking stock of what it had accomplished, in science and invention, in the course of the first century. His father was Joseph Broadway, a native of New Jersey, who married Miss Mary Creer, also a native of the metropolis, now living at the age of seventy, in excellent health, in West Hoboken; and he worked at his ship-building trade in the yards around New York Bay. They had seven children, six of whom—two boys and four girls—have grown up.

Thomas, the oldest of these, attended the public schools of Hoboken, to which city he was taken when he was three years of age, and was graduated from the high school of Hoboken, after which he also went to work in the shipyards. He began with ordinary boat and ship work, and in the evenings he studied naval architecture in the night schools in New York. He was employed by Messrs Teigen and Lang, at their Hoboken shipyards, and by William Wall, a ship-joiner and yacht-builder at Hoboken and in New York; and he also worked at the William Rowland shipyards, in New York, the John English Shipbuilding Company, the Tobo Yacht Construction Company in New York, and for the Robinson's Dry Dock Company, and while thus engaged, put in eight months as one of the workmen building the library and stateroom of J. Pierpont Morgan's palatial yacht, "Corsair," costing over a million dollars to construct.

After that, Mr. Broadway traveled as a journeyman yacht and shipbuilder all over the United States, studying various methods and models of construction as practiced or preferred in different sections of the country, and he worked so hard that his health broke down. As a consequence, he came to California and Newport Beach, in 1916, to recuperate; and being a professional yachtsman, familiar with the building and handling of boats and yachts, he soon became an enthusiastic member of the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, and has helped to organize and is a member of the Southland Sailing Club of Balboa. He knows all about the manning of yachts, and has helped the boys to win the coveted cups and other prizes.

Mr. Broadway has incorporated his new and very promising enterprise under the name of the Broadway Boat and Equipment Corporation, with himself as president and treasurer; George Palmer, the mechanical engineer and machinist, as vice-president, and Joshua Mader, secretary; and the company's scope will be to build, repair and equip sea-going craft up to 300 feet in length, turning out yachts, sail boats, power boats, and row-boats to be used in Newport Bay and on the near-by ocean. He has just rebuilt a forty-foot yacht for L. N. Merritt of Pasadena, at a cost of $8,000, and is completing a fifty-foot yacht for W. Starbuck Fenton, of Ontario, at a cost of $15,000; and he was compelled to turn away $40,000 worth of work in 1920.

At West Hoboken, N. J., Mr. Broadway was married to Miss Louisa Oltar, a native of that state, by whom he has had two children, Robert E. and Mary. The family attend the Episcopal Church, and Mr. Broadway joins the Republican party in its campaigning for better citizenship and better government.

ROBERT WARDLOW.—An able business man, good neighbor and friend, who is rapidly coming to the fore as one of the most successful farmers and influential citizens in the Talbert precinct, is Robert Wardlow, a native son born at Downey, Cal., on July 7, 1879. His father was R. B. Wardlow, a native of Iowa, who came to California in 1875 as a young man. At Los Angeles he married Miss Martha E. Draper. Both parents, esteemed by all who know them, are still living at Santa Ana.

R. B. Wardlow was always a farmer, and for a while lived in the vicinity of Long Beach, on the Jotham Bixby ranch. In 1896, he removed to Fountain Valley, in the Gospel Swamp, as Talbert was then called. Now he owns 220 acres of choice land there, and 1,000 acres at Corona, which is operated by his youngest son as a stock and grain farm.

Robert Wardlow grew up in Los Angeles County, and there attended the public schools. He graduated from the ninth grade of the grammar school at Clearwater, and after that, wishing to perfect himself for success in the business world, took a commercial course in the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana, in 1898.

He was married, at Bolsa, in 1900, to Miss Lida Swift, a daughter of A. F. Swift, a rancher in the Talbert precinct. He has spent a life of unwearying labor, and is now well-to-do and widely respected. Five children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Wardlow: Clare, the eldest, now seventeen years old, is in the high school at Santa Ana; and the others in order of their birth are Vance and Gladys, also in the high school, and Muriel and Donald.

Mr. Wardlow farms some 140 acres, of which 110 are planted to sugar beets, and thirty to alfalfa; and he is one of the most successful sugar beet growers and dairymen in the Talbert precinct. He is a member of the California Dairymen's Association and the Orange County Farm Bureau. He has thus been able to contribute a valuable and highly intelligent influence toward the rapid development of California's agricultural interests, and in particular to favor the expansion of the county in which, like so many others, he has had his success.

CLEMENT LINCOLN SLACK.—Interesting as one of the really few men who had an active part in the building of early Santa Ana, Clement Lincoln Slack, the retired contract teamster, is sure to be remembered, and in the pleasantest manner, by those who for many years come after him. He was born in Rushville, Schuyler County, Ill., on May 9, 1863, the son of Nathaniel and Eliza (Berry) Slack, the former a graduate of Galesburg Medical College, who practiced as a physician, and was considered the best doctor of his time in Schuyler County. Faithful in the defence of his country, in an Illinois regiment, he was wounded during the Civil War, and upon his recovery was assigned to hospital work. This strenuous service on behalf of the unfortunate soldiers made him an experienced surgeon as well.

When twenty years of age, in 1883, Clement Slack came to Santa Ana, California, and stayed with his aunt, Mrs. George Minter, for a year, working in the vineyards near Santa Ana. Then for a year he was with Mr. Halesworth. Suffering from somewhat impaired health, he had come to California, and here he found vigor and happiness again. At Santa Ana, too, on April 6, 1886, he married Miss Mary Durant, the daughter of John Durant, a lady born in England, from which country her parents brought her to the United States. For a while they lived in New York state, and later near Waukesha, in Wisconsin.

After marrying, Mr. Slack went in for farming, renting a ranch of twenty acres on East First Street. It was planted to grapes, but the vines died, and then he sowed barley there. Still later it was set out to apricots and walnuts. In 1893 he purchased his home on North Broadway, and there he has resided ever since. He also purchased twenty acres on North Main Street, on both sides of the Santiago Creek, his object being to get gravel for construction work; and after that he began teaming, and for twenty years supplied much of the gravel and sand used here in early building. He hauled gravel over the greater part of Orange County, and contracted to supply gravel and sand for the present Court House and for the Spurgeon Building, and brick for the Pixley Building in Orange. From time to time, he sold portions of these twenty acres, and at present he owns only one acre between Main Street and the Southern Pacific bridge, near the Santa Ana Creek. His first wife died, and some years later he married Miss Ida Seeley, a schoolmate from his old home town, of whom he was bereaved four years later.

Public-spirited and willing at all times to do his full duty as a citizen, Mr. Slack has several times served on election boards; and during the recent war he participated in all the activities.

OSCAR H. MARYATT.—A citizen of Santa Ana who has found that his late coming has been no barrier to attaining popularity throughout the county, is Oscar H. Maryatt, a patriotic veteran of the Civil War, who is serving for the second time as commander of Sedgwick Post No. 17, G. A. R. He was born in Alleghany County, New York, on September 24, 1841, the son of George W. Maryatt, a tanner of leather at Ceres, in Ceres County, Penn., a pioneer who lived to be ninety-nine years and seven months of age. He was a native of Rhode Island, and married Polly W. Maxon, also a Rhode Islander, who attained her eighty-fifth year. The four uncles and two aunts of the Maryatt family stood high in professional life as doctors, lawyers or novelists, and all made names worth conjuring with.

Oscar Maryatt moved to Albion, Dane County, Wis., and there attended the grammar schools. He was graduated from Albion Academy, when only fifteen years old; and from his thirteenth year, and while yet a student, taught penmanship and Latin at Albion Academy, and in that way paid his way through college. He taught school at Woodstock, Ill., and at Fort Dodge, Iowa, where he was for two years, and then he went to Farley in the same state, and became principal of the schools there.

On December 7, 1864, Mr. Maryatt enlisted for service in the Civil War, on the Union side, and was made chief clerk of the district headquarters; and he had served in that capacity for six months before Lee's surrender. Now he is widely known in

G. A. R. circles. While in Colorado he presided twice as commander of Del Norte Post, G. A. R., and in Santa Ana the veterans have been glad to place him on the firing line.

While teaching school, Mr. Maryatt had put in his spare time in reading law, under E. W. Lewis, the attorney at Farley, and in time he was examined for admission to the bar on motion of the late Hon. David Henderson of Iowa, and was examined in Henderson's office, when he passed the bar examinations successfully. In 1867 he was admitted to practice, and he then opened up a law office at New Albion, Iowa, where he became the attorney for the C. D. & M. Railway, continuing in that capacity for sixteen years, while residing at New Albion.

In 1883, Mr. Maryatt moved to Nebraska, practiced law and became a landowner in Harlan County, but ten years later he removed to Del Norte, Colo., where he engaged in gold and silver mining. He was very successful, and remained at Del Norte until November, 1909, when he came to Santa Ana. During six years of his residence in Rio Grande County, Mr. Maryatt was judge of the county court. Since coming to Santa Ana, he has served as city trustee for four years. He served, during 1920, as commander of the Southern California Veteran Association.

The first time Mr. Maryatt was married was before the Civil War, when he and Miss Josephine C. Ervin of Woodstock, Ill., were united in that place. They had two children: Leonore, now the wife of J. A. Bowles, who resides at Hastings, Nebr., and the mother of twelve children; and George A., who married in Nebraska and died at Del Norte, leaving one child, Oscar H., Jr. Mrs. Maryatt died at Farley. Mr. Maryatt's second marriage took place at Lansing, Iowa, when the bride was Mrs. Hannah H. Lindberg, nee Hall, a native of Vermont.

JAMES VERNON McCONNELL.—An interesting man of affairs, is J. V. McConnell, vice-president and general manager of the Martin-McConnell Poultry Farms at Garden Grove, the world's leading breeders of the celebrated Black Minorcas. A good conversationalist, he is never at a loss, as a well-trained man of scientific training, practical ideas and progressive programs, both to entertain and to instruct; and part of his enviable capital is a wide circle of friends.

He was born at Chatham Center, Medina County, Ohio, on August 28, 1878, the son of S. H. McConnell, who was a dealer in lumber and grain, and operated warehouses, elevators and lumber yards in Ohio and Kansas. He was married at Chatham Center to Miss Mary F. Whitney. The McConnells had come to Ohio from Pennsylvania, where they settled in Colonial times; they were of Scotch ancestry, and McConnellsville, Ohio, a town now of 1500 people, was named after members of this branch of the family, who settled there after the Revolutionary War. Three of S. H. McConnell's uncles were killed during the Revolution, and two of his brothers were killed in the Civil War. From this virile, progressive stock have come many merchants and lawyers. Mr. and Mrs. S. H. McConnell had two children, the elder being a daughter, Bessie, now the wife of James Schilling, of Long Beach.

James Vernon McConnell was sent to the public schools in Ohio and Kansas, coming to the latter state when he was a lad of fourteen. His father settled at White City, Morris County, and engaged in buying grain and selling lumber; and in time James attended the University of Kansas at Manhattan, where he was graduated from the commercial course. He was the first of the McConnell family to come to California, in 1907, and soon after arriving here, he settled at Long Beach, and in time bought a ranch of ten acres at Westminster. He bought his present place in August, 1912; and having taken a fancy to chicken raising when a boy, and maintained his interest therein, he embarked in the poultry business under the name of J. V. McConnell. As a matter of fact, he had already operated a poultry ranch with a couple of thousand chickens in Kansas; and he therefore brought to his enterprise at Garden Grove a ripe and valuable experience. While at Salt Lake City in 1910, Mr. McConnell was married to Miss Lucinda C. Evans, daughter of a mining man of that city. One son, Charles Harvey, has blessed their happy union.

Mr. McConnell first became prominent as a breeder of Brown Leghorns and Barred Plymouth Rocks, and with his youthful exhibits, scored many successes, some of his ribbons, representing the awards, dating back to 1889. Perceiving the growing demand for the new breed, the Black Minorca, he turned his attention, while yet in Kansas, to the problems of their breeding, and for the past twenty-two years he has been studying the Minorca, so that he is now the world's foremost breeder of that strain. These are widely known as the McConnell Strain of Minorcas, of which there are two—the Prolific Egg Strain, and the McConnell Premier Strain of Exhibition Minorcas. The poultry press, reporting poultry shows, has given his showbirds the latter name, and he has adopted it.

Selling his ten-acre ranch at Westminster, Mr. McConnell bought a walnut grove of ten acres near Garden Grove, and grubbed out the walnuts for the purpose of devoting it to poultry. He has built a bungalow residence there, and has a full complement of incubator, brooder, stock and work houses, and pens and chicken houses. To him falls the responsibility of buying all the feed; he buys grain by the carload, and spent quite twenty thousand dollars for feed in 1920. He feeds mainly milo-maize, wheat, barley and oats, the highest grade of meat scraps, and some fish meal, and to this, as to the other details, gives the most conscientious attention; so that his sales for the average exhibition showbirds in males run over seventy-five dollars, and females forty dollars each for birds six to eight months old, and during 1919 he sold one hundred birds at from $100 to $250 each. He has even sold some cockerels for $500 each.

The prize-winning qualities of Mr. McConnell's birds are acknowledged throughout the world, and it is no wonder that he sells with a guarantee to win first place. For instance, he will sell a cockerel to Chicago for $300, guaranteed to win the prize at the Chicago Poultry Show; and if the bird fails to take first prize, and wins only the second, he will refund twenty per cent of the purchase price; thirty per cent, if the bird takes third prize; and forty per cent, if it receives only the fourth prize. If it takes fifth prize or lower, he will refund the entire purchase price and still allow the purchaser to keep the fowl. With these inducements, he finds it not difficult to sell all he can raise of Minorca cockerels a year. He has shown at hundreds of fairs and poultry shows all over the United States and England, from the Crystal Palace to the Orange County Fair, and has taken more first prizes for Minorcas than any other man in the world. His stock goes to England, South Africa, Argentine Confederation, Chili, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, and to every state in the Union; and he is a well-known contributor to leading poultry journals, so that he is justly regarded as an authority on Minorcas.

By the organization effected under the laws of California on November 20, 1919, whereby Mrs. E. B. Martin of Downey, the well-known prize winner on White Leghorns, joined Mr. McConnell in business, a corporation with a capital of $125,000, has resulted. The White Leghorns will be bred at the Garden Grove ranch, owned by Mr. McConnell, in addition to his Minorcas, and he will assume the management of the new corporation, of which Mrs. E. B. Martin is the president, and he the vice-president. Mrs. Martin has developed this strain of White Leghorns which, like Mr. McConnell's birds, are in a class by themselves. They are large and vigorous, superb in egg-producing qualities, while Mr. McConnell's strain of Minorcas will average two and a half pounds heavier than the common strains of the same kind of fowl. He has grown cockerels that weigh from twelve and a half to fourteen pounds.

The year 1920 will see a great expansion in this business. The entire ten acres will be built up with poultry pens and poultry houses. His place is well drained by means of cement pipe tiles emptying into cesspools, and everything there is scientifically laid out. He has invented many features in the self-feeding apparatus and drinking fountains, and these have everywhere been installed. There are two water plants on the place; one furnishes a supply for domestic purposes and for the chickens, yielding 4,000 gallons a day, under eighty pounds pressure, according to the Fairbanks system, and the other plant which has a twenty-five-horsepower gas engine, supplies the water for irrigation.

Mr. McConnell employs the best American experts, for all his stock is line-bred and trap-nested. Records are carefully kept; and birds falling below the high standard required are eliminated. He pays one expert $500 a month; $4,000 a year goes to his office force; and six men are kept steadily busy at outside work. He is working under the American Poultry Association rule; is a life member of the International Single-Comb Black Minorca Club, and National Single-Comb White Leghorn Club, and life member of the American Poultry Association.

JOSEPH WARREN CULVER.—As an agriculturist Joseph Warren Culver has attained a position of prominence in his chosen vocation. He is an extensive and successful tenant farmer, and operates 120 acres of the Mrs. Mattie A. Nimock ranch, one-half mile east of Talbert.

Of southern lineage, Mr. Culver was born in Georgia, August 7, 1868. His father, Augustus, a native of Georgia, and his mother, Mary (Ensley) Culver, who was born in South Carolina, were married in Georgia just after the Civil War, and Joseph was an infant three months old when they removed to Arkansas. From Arkansas the family went to Texas, and later, in 1888, removed to California. Joseph received his education in the public schools of Arkansas and Texas, and of the thirty-two years that he has resided in California, thirty-one years of that time has been spent in Orange County. He lived one year at Azusa, going thence to Westminster precinct, Orange County, where for fifteen years he raised celery successfully. After renting many years he came to Talbert, November, 1919, and rented the Nimock ranch, which he planted to sugar beets and beans. An excellent farmer, he is well equipped with horses and machinery to farm the 120 acres with success.

He was twenty-four years of age when his marriage with Miss Bessie Buck, a native of Kansas, was solemnized, and the five children born of their union are named Myrtle, Loraine, Evelyn, Joseph Warren, Jr., and Dorothy.

In politics Mr. Culver is nonpartisan, being governed by principle rather than party, and casting his vote for the man he deems best fitted to perform the public duties. Of brave Revolutionary stock, his relationship to the Culver family who came to America prior to the Revolutionary War, entitles him to membership in the Sons of the Revolution. A staunch adherent for fairness in all of life's transactions, Mr. Culver believes in the rule "live and let live," and his generosity and the sterling qualities of character he displays in all business and social transactions have won the confidence and highest esteem of a large circle of warm and admiring friends, among whom he sustains the reputation of the South for hospitality by the entertainment afforded in his home.

WILLIAM A. RALPH.—A man of pronounced native ability, whose years of ripe experience have made him of exceptional value to the interests entrusted to him, is William A. Ralph, the superintendent of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. He was born in Humansville, Mo., in 1864, the son of William Ralph, a native of Tennessee, who came to Missouri as a young man, and there became a farmer. He married Miss Elizabeth Yost, also a native of Missouri, and during the Civil War served in the Union Army as a volunteer in a Missouri regiment. Nine children were born to this worthy couple, and William was the third oldest in the family. The parents both died in Missouri, and our subject and his brother, Charles F. Ralph, of Porterville, are the only two of the family in California.

William was brought up on a farm and educated at the public schools of his locality. When eighteen years old, he started out into the world for himself, and in 1882 came to Nevada. He mined during the winter, and then rode the range, first on a small, and then on a large cattle ranch. He was there, in the employ of Mr. Hardesty, for six years, and became foreman. In 1888, he returned to Missouri, and for another six years pursued agricultural work, and while there he married Miss Clara Emmett, a native of Rogersville, Tenn. She came to Humansville, Mo., when a child, with her parents, Albert and Elizabeth (Winnegar) Emmett, who were also natives of Tennessee, both representatives of old families of that state.

In 1898, Mr. Ralph came west again to California, and settling at Orange, entered the employ of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, with which corporation he has continued ever since. He began at the lower round of the ladder, and so steadily worked up that in three years he became foreman. He filled that position with his characteristic conscientiousness, and at the end of eleven years was made superintendent of the company.

Mr. Ralph gives his whole time and energy to the problems presented, works out his own plans, and surveys his own grades, thereby saving the company hundreds of dollars yearly. He also superintends the work of the yard where the concrete pipe is manufactured. In this way, he makes certain of only the best product—a matter of the greatest import to both company and patron.

Four children have blessed the fortunate marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph. Meta is Mrs. E. A. Kuechel of Orange; Neva has become Mrs. Geo. Bandick, and also resides here; Jewel, a graduate of the Orange Union high school, is bookkeeper for the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and Esther is still in the high school. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mr. Ralph belongs to the Orange Lodge of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and he and his devoted wife are also numbered among the popular Rebekahs.

ROBERT J. WILEY.—A native son of California whose parents were among the pioneer residents of the state is Robert J. Wiley, who for the past fifteen years has been identified with the progressive development of Orange County. The son of William and Elizabeth (Simmons) Wiley, Robert J., was born at Downey, Cal., February 18, 1873. The father, who was a native of Ohio, came to California in 1854 and in 1858 purchased the place at Downey where Robert was born. He was a successful farmer and continued to live on the home place until his death in 1898, at the age of sixty-six years. Mrs. Elizabeth Wiley was born in Louisiana, but was reared in Texas, where her parents and grandparents had settled in the early days. In 1862 she came with her parents to California and was married to Mr. Wiley when she was but nineteen years old. She is still living and resides on the old homestead at Downey.

W. C. Ralph

The eldest of a family of seven children, all of whom are living, Robert J. Wiley grew up at Downey and attended the public school there. At the age of fourteen, however, he started out to make his own way in the world, doing farm work on the neighboring ranches, continuing in this employment until 1905, when he engaged in the fumigating business, becoming a partner in the firm of Bowman and Wiley. Mr. Wiley is one of the veteran fumigators of Orange County and is one of the few who lived through the experimental stages of the business. He has handled tons and tons of cyanide of potassium without ever having suffered from its deleterious effects, and made a financial success of this business, in which he continued until 1918, when he began farming on the great San Joaquin ranch.

Mr. Wiley is now raising his second crop on the ranch, and has 175 acres planted to lima beans and seventy-five acres of hill land on which he raises barley hay, rotating this with a crop of blackeye beans which serves the double purpose of a paying crop and summer fallow for the land, thus keeping up the fertility of the soil. He also leases an additional sixty acres from Isadore Oliveras, which he devotes to grain and blackeye beans. All of the tenants on the San Joaquin ranch own their own buildings and machinery and Mr. Wiley invested $10,000 in work stock, farm implements and buildings. In 1918 he erected his own residence, a commodious, up-to-date bungalow, and is continually adding to the attractiveness of the surroundings. He also owns a third interest in a pumping plant which supplies water for domestic and stock use for himself and two neighbors.

On June 7, 1896, Mr. Wiley was married to Miss Pilar Ruiz, the daughter of one of Southern California's old Spanish families and they have become the parents of nine children: Elisa is the wife of Frank Monroy, a tractor engineer; they reside at Tustin and are the parents of two children—Sadie and Lawrence; Hazel, Robert, Ida, Sinyda died when seventeen months old; Bertha, Edith died at the age of six months; Glenn, Bernice. Mr. Wiley is prominent in the ranks of the Knights of Pythias having been chancellor commander, his membership being in the Tustin lodge. He ranks in the community as a man of broad intelligence and with a fund of solid information whose success has come through his industry and thrift. Politically he is always found allied with the Republican element of the community and takes a public-spirited interest in all the movements for the general betterment of the county.

MOORE BROS. COMPANY.—Prominent among the enthusiastic “boosters” for Orange County, and among those most ready and also most able to hasten the day when Southern California shall come to its own, are the energetic gentlemen making up the well-known firm of Moore Bros. Company, manufacturers of and contractors for cement pipe, who have had so much to do with the installation of irrigating systems of the latest, scientific patterns, and with the execution of substantial and ornate cement work of various kinds—the last word in one of the highly developed industries of the West. This wide-awake company is composed of John A. Moore and his brother, James F. Moore, two of a family of seven children of William P. and Martha (Skaggs) Moore, and it is quite likely that it is their general reputation for character and experience, backing all that they claim to be able to accomplish, as well as the labor and materials they offer, which has spelled for them their phenomenal success.

John A. Moore was born in Barton County, Mo., on April 5, 1884, three years earlier than the birth of James, on February 2; but the latter was the first to come out to the Pacific Coast. Both attended the common schools of their home district, but received a good part of their most valuable instruction for a wrestle with the world in the “school of hard knocks.” In his seventeenth year, James pushed westward to California seeking broader opportunities, and for a short time after reaching Los Angeles he again attended school, at the same time working at anything he could find to do. In 1906 John joined his brother here and they went to Rialto, in San Bernardino County, where they worked for a year on ranches, when they made their way to the Imperial Valley. They spent four years there, and during that time not only bought land, but they developed an alfalfa ranch, which they later sold to advantage.

In March, 1911, James F. Moore came to Fullerton, soon followed by his brother, John A., and shortly afterward they opened the first cement pipe-yard here, styling the firm Moore Bros. They began on a small scale on West Santa Fe Avenue, and by studying the wants of their patrons, and giving conscientious attention to details, they gradually increased their volume of trade. In 1913, John A. Moore went to Le Grand, Merced County, bought and developed property, and disposed of the same at a satisfactory increase; but he and James F. still own the water franchise and the water system at that place.

In January, 1918, responding to the call of his country for active service in the great World War, James F. Moore enlisted in the Three Hundred Nineteenth Engineers and was transferred to remount station at Camp Fremont, where he remained until he was honorably discharged, in January, 1919. Then he returned to resume the cement business at Fullerton. In September, however, he sold his interest in the West Santa Fe yard to his brother, E. W. Moore, and in the spring of 1920, with his brother, John A., he again formed a partnership and commenced the manufacture of cement pipe for irrigating at 221 East Santa Fe Avenue. The firm not only manufactures cement pipes, but they contract to install such irrigating systems as may be required. They are also well equipped to do all kinds of cement curbing, gutters, and foundations, working in cooperation in this department, with John Osborne, and their thoroughly satisfactory work has given them an enviable reputation, so that they always have all that they can do. They employ from a dozen to fifteen men in all departments of their work. Besides the property at 228 East Commonwealth Avenue, Fullerton, they own some very desirable harbor property on the West Basin at Wilmington.

The cement industry, carried on as it is today with the aid of scientific research, has come to mean a great deal in the development of new towns and their outlying neighborhoods, and Orange County is to be congratulated on such an establishment as that of the Moore Bros. Company.

HENRY SCHAFFERT.—An energetic, successful business man who, although comparatively young, has accomplished much, and whose judgment and advice, therefore, are often sought, is Henry Schaffert, well known at Orange as the owner of the Schaffert Block. Good luck has followed him, as the result of his integrity and industry, ever since in Kansas he commenced to work for a farmer at the low wage of fifteen dollars a month; for, after only six years of steady labor, he owned the entire 190 acres that were the pride of his first employer.

Mr. Schaffert was born in Everbach, Wurtemberg, Germany, and was reared at Asberg, near Ludwigsburg, his birth occurring on January 28, 1874, the son of Michael Schaffert, a farmer, who had married Miss Caroline Miller. She died in 1875, leaving several children. Michael is in Orange; Louis is at Youngstown, Ohio, as is also Fred; while Carl and Mary remained in Germany. Henry went to school at Asberg, but as the idea of military oppression was distasteful to him, he decided to follow his brothers to the land of the Stars and Stripes.

When, therefore, he was about sixteen years old, in the fall of 1890, Mr. Schaffert crossed the ocean and pushed west to Youngstown, Ohio, and he soon found work in the large car shops as a car repairer. Hard times, however, swept over the country, and in 1893 he continued west to Rock Creek, Jefferson County, Kans., where he worked at farming. He was not long in buying a farm of eighty acres, on which he raised corn and hogs. He became a successful cattle feeder and stock dealer, and owned an elevator at Rock Creek on the St. Joe branch of the Santa Fe Railroad, gathering and exporting grain.

Mr. Schaffert also did an extensive land business, buying and selling farms. He sold much hay and grain, and bought, fed and shipped cattle and hogs. He built a corn sheller, so that corn could be dumped from the wagons of the farmers and shelled immediately. When he had reached a comfortable stage, Mr. Schaffert married, and then his father came to America and Kansas to visit him, returning to Germany where his death occurred in 1915. He was born in 1836, and during the span of his busy life he witnessed many interesting developments in Germany and throughout the world, and was privileged to get a glimpse of the wonders of American progress.

Mr. Schaffert's bride was Miss Geneva P. Winslow, a native of Kansas, and the daughter of Josiah Winslow, and as her folks had come to California and had settled at Huntington Park, he decided to sell his land and elevator, and to join these relatives in the balmy clime. In November, 1917, therefore, he and his family cast off from the East and reached the Golden State; and not long afterward he located at Orange and began to deal in real estate. He bought, traded and sold for himself, and he engaged in a general realty business for others. Mr. and Mrs. Schaffert's eldest daughter, Electa, is Mrs. Easton of Lancaster; Hazel attends the Orange high school, and there are Julius and Cecil. Besides setting out and selling several orange groves, Mr. Schaffert now owns a ranch at Lancaster, which he has improved, with a pumping plant, to alfalfa; and he owns the Schaffert Block on South Glassell Street, a fine concrete building worthy of the city of Orange.

A Republican in matters of national political import, Mr. Schaffert lends a hand, irrespective of party ties, to any and every good project likely to benefit the town and vicinity; and in all such civil work, he is ably seconded by his good wife. He belongs to the Santa Ana lodge of the B. P. O. E., the Orange lodge of the I. O. O. F., and to the Modern Woodmen of America.

Henry Schaffert.

MARTIN R. HENINGER.—In the development of the southern section of the city of Santa Ana no one has been more active than Martin R. Heninger, who, in the fourteen years of his residence here, has seen a wonderful transformation in this part of the city—a transformation that he has had the greatest part in bringing about. Mr. Heninger is a native of Missouri and was born in Monroe County, a son of William W. and Eliza J. (Stalcup) Heninger, on November 29, 1851, and was reared on a farm and spent his early years in agricultural activities.

After his marriage, in 1882, he removed to Dakota Territory and there he engaged in the retail lumber business at Ordway, now South Dakota, remaining there for one year, when he moved to Westport, where he remained about twenty years, being one of the town's most substantial business men. He also did the banking exchange business of that town—a boon to the farmers and business men, and owned a farm of 450 acres. Selling out he then located in Aberdeen, where he bought a third interest in the Aberdeen Electric Light and Gas Company, remaining there until 1906. During the many years of Mr. Heninger's residence in South Dakota he was very prominent in Republican politics and in the public life of the State and was a member of the Constitutional Convention held at Sioux Falls which acted in the admission of South Dakota to statehood in 1889. He also served as clerk of the district court of Brown County for two years—1895-96. He was appointed by Governor Sheldon, a member of the State Board of Regents of Education, but resigned on account of his business.

Disposing of his interest in the Aberdeen Electric Light and Gas Company, Mr. Heninger decided to locate in California, and arrived at Santa Ana May 15, 1906. In 1907, with his brother, H. B. Heninger, now deceased, he bought thirty-four acres of the Palmer Tract, south of First Street. They developed and platted this tract, planting trees, putting in sidewalks and curbs; later they bought additional tracts, one of ten and one of eighteen acres, which they platted and improved. These properties are known as Heninger Additions, Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. Many miles of street paving, sidewalks and curbs were put in; $10,000 being paid out for street paving alone in one year.

When Mr. Heninger purchased this property it was a barley field, and the following year a combined harvester was at work on the property, cutting, threshing and sacking the barley. Now it is the finest residence section of the city, built up with fine homes, all of which have been erected within the past twelve years. Mr. Heninger and his brother have erected 150 houses on the property.

Notwithstanding the labor and responsibility entailed by his development operations, Mr. Heninger has also been very active in the development of citrus groves. He has owned three different tracts, one of seven acres on Lincoln Avenue, seventeen acres in Lemon Heights, and five acres within the city limits. Two of these places he has improved and planted himself, subsequently disposing of them at a good profit.

Mr. Heninger's marriage united him with Miss Mary A. Way, a native of Pennsylvania, their marriage occurring in 1882 in Shelbyville, Mo. Three daughters have been born to them: Nora L., Mrs. W. T. Elliott; Mabel H., Mrs. Fred S. Chapman, and Mildred, Mrs. N. S. Rulon, all of Santa Ana. It is quite safe to say that no other man has done as much for the development of the south part of Santa Ana as has Mr. Heninger, and he is still actively at work, many new residences being erected on his properties. It is to men of the character and energy of Mr. Heninger that Orange County owes much for the wonderful progress made in the past few years.

JOHN SIMON FLUOR.—As a man prominent in the upbuilding of Orange County, John Simon Fluor has come to be well known throughout this section of the state. With unswerving faith in the future growth of the county, and the ability and readiness to do all in his power to advance its best interests, he has been an important factor in the development of its resources in the past ten years, and bids fair to be in the future as in the past, one of the men at the backbone of the further development of this garden spot of California.

Born February 4, 1867, Mr. Fluor is a native of Switzerland, where at an early age he took up the trade of contractor and builder. In May, 1888, he arrived in the United States and located at Oshkosh, Wis., where he was one of the founders and was manager of the Fluor Brothers Construction Company. This firm is still in existence and doing business; he built the company up to one of the best in that section, specializing in big jobs, such as factories, warehouses, etc., and erected a number of large manufacturing plants in Wisconsin, and saw and lumber mills in Florida.

In the fall of 1912 Mr. Fluor located in Santa Ana, where he has since followed construction work as a contractor and builder; the following are some of his buildings erected in Santa Ana: the fine mausoleum in the Santa Ana Cemetery; the California National Bank Building; Taylor Bros.' warehouse and cannery; the D. A. Dale Block; four buildings for Oliver Halsell, including a garage and business blocks; and five other large garages, besides other buildings too numerous to mention. In Fullerton he erected two business blocks for George Amerige; a group of high school buildings in South Pasadena; and a school at Niland. All of his building operations bear the stamp of a master hand, with thorough attention to detail and first-class quality of material and workmanship.

The marriage of Mr. Fluor united him with Emma Sonnenberg, a native of Wisconsin, and five children have blessed their union: Peter E. who saw service in the World War in France as a lieutenant in the Aviation Corps; Fred C. in the U. S. Navy during the war; John S. Jr.; Mrs. Esther Gardner and Elsie at home. The sons are associated with their father in business. The family home is at 838 North Ross Street, Santa Ana. Mr. Fluor is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Chamber of Commerce.

EDWARD HENRY DIERKER.—A prominent director of the Santiago Orange Growers Association is Edward Henry Dierker, a rancher who understands the many problems of citrus culture. He was born in Monterey, Nebr., on October 9, 1875, the son of the well-known pioneer, Henry Dierker, and the sixth eldest in a family of ten children.

He was brought up on a farm in Nebraska and went to the local public schools; and having thus made an excellent start in life, he came to California in October, 1892. He settled at Orange and attended the Orange County Business College in Santa Ana, and then, for five years, he was a salesman in the Ehlen and Grote Company's grocery store. Later, in 1902, he bought the twenty acres of bare land at the corner of Lemon and West Palmyra streets, Orange, and the following year set the same out to Valencia and Navel oranges. Of all the fine ranches hereabouts, this is the closest in, and this fact alone adds to its value and prospects. All in all, it has become valuable property, and its worth is largely due to the attention and skill bestowed upon it by its owner.

Mr. Dierker is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, is a director in the same, and was on the building committee when the new packing house, so attractive in its Mission style, was erected. The committee also built an ice plant, one of the finest in the state, where ice is made for precooling the fruit-cars, and for stocking cars with ice. He is also a director in the Orange County Fumigating Company, to which he also gives the same honest and careful attention. Mr. Dierker is also a member of the Richland Walnut Growers Association and of the California Prune and Apricot Association.

At Orange, August 3, 1898, Mr. Dierker was married to Miss Lydia Kogler, a native of Minneapolis, Minn., and the daughter of the Rev. Jacob Kogler; and from her third year she was reared in Orange. Three children have blessed this union: Alvin, a graduate of the Orange Union high school, who is attending Stanford University as a member of the class of 1922, and during the war was a member of the student army; Celeste, who is in the Orange Union high school, class of 1921; and Florence. Mr. and Mrs. Dierker are members of St. John's Lutheran Church, where he has been trustee for fifteen years and also, for the last ten years, as treasurer of the board, a position he filled during the building of the new church. He is also a member of the Lutheran Men's Club, while Mrs. Dierker is equally active in the Ladies' Aid and Missionary societies of the church. Mr. Dierker is very enterprising and progressive, and has always been ready to give of his time and means as far as he is able to aid in the building up of the county's horticultural and agricultural industries. He also applies himself to civic duties, and from time to time, under the leadership of the Republican party.

CHESTER K. LEE.—Among Garden Grove's foremost citizens and successful business men is Chester K. Lee, the efficient manager and secretary of the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association. Mr. Lee was born September 21, 1873, at Alexandria, Madison County, Ind., about forty-five miles northeast of Indianapolis, and is the son of A. J. and Lucy J. (Powell) Lee. The father's people were natives of North Carolina, and the mother's people were natives of Delaware, but she was born and reared in Franklin County, Ind. A. J. Lee owned a farm of 120 acres and residence property at Alexandria, Ind. He frequently visited his children in Orange County, Cal., and in the spring of 1920 disposed of his holdings in the East and purchased residence property on Spurgeon Street, at Santa Ana, where he is now living retired.

Chester K. Lee grew up at Alexandria, Ind., was educated in the public schools and attended Taylor University, at Upland, Ind., two years, afterward being employed in the paper mill at Alexandria. In 1902 he married, at Alexandria, Miss Pareppa R. Houghton, who was born and reared in Indiana, and in 1903 the young people came to Santa Ana, Cal., to make their home. They are the parents of four children: Mary L., Erma R., Ethlyn B., and Merle J. The first year after coming to Santa Ana,

Ed. H. Hiesker

Mr. Lee worked for the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, then became manager of the house. He is the second oldest walnut packer in California, the one man older in the business than he being Mr. Sharp, of Santa Paula. Preferring Garden Grove as a place of residence, Mr. Lee purchased property there, and since 1914 his work has been in Garden Grove. In that year he built the Garden Grove walnut house after plans of his own, a frame building 50x80 feet in dimension, located on the Pacific Electric right-of-way. The association uses Mr. Lee's system in cleaning, fanning, bleaching and sorting the walnuts, and they are packed in new burlap sacks with the "Diamond Brand" of which there are five grades: Fancy Budded, No. 1, Golden State, Jumbos and No. 2. Mr. Lee's reputation as a walnut man has gone throughout the entire state. He is considered an authority in his line, and is often called upon for articles for the leading agricultural and horticultural papers and magazines. He is also frequently asked to go out to different places in California for the Central Association, to instruct and give advice to other walnut growers associations, and his services have often been sought in the matter of devising architectural plans and building, and properly equipping other walnut warehouses. In 1913 he remodeled the warehouse at Santa Ana and installed the machinery; in 1917 he equipped the Santa Susana warehouse with adequate machinery, and in 1919 installed machinery in the one at Puente. In 1920 they equipped a warehouse complete, in Garden Grove, for packing budded nuts. He is an authority on bleaching, and in 1918, when the San Francisco Almond Growers Association had great difficulty in properly bleaching the product Mr. Lee was sent for and solved the matter by prescribing a bleach which did the work satisfactorily.

The year 1919 was the most successful year the association has enjoyed since its organization in 1914; twenty-eight members being added to its list, and about twenty others were added in 1920. The outlook for the association could scarcely be brighter. The production promises to steadily increase, as many young groves are coming into bearing. The oldest trees are only fifteen years old and are located on the Townsend place two miles north of town. As an illustration of the quality of the walnuts produced in the Garden Grove district, two carloads were shipped to Los Angeles, and were of such size and perfection that they were held there and packed in attractive five-pound cartons and sold in the city at fancy prices. In the cull department thirty girls are employed cracking walnuts and preparing the meats for market. The annual meeting of the association was held at the Garden Grove office Saturday, January 24, 1920. It was harmonious and enthusiastic, and all the officers and directors were reelected, viz., William Schnitger, president; F. E. Farnsworth, vice-president; and C. K. Lee, secretary. The other directors are N. I. Rice, Gorge Cook and F. B. Cleveland. In his religious association Mr. Lee is a member of the Baptist Church, and served as one of its trustees for several years. Politically he is a Prohibitionist and he is a charter member of the Garden Grove Chamber of Commerce.

CHARLES H. HOWARD.—A potent factor in the development and growth of the financial and commercial enterprises of Huntington Beach, a man of unusual resourcefulness and executive ability, is Charles H. Howard, a pioneer merchant of this thriving beach city and one of the founders of the First National Bank of Huntington Beach. He was born at Frewsburg, N. Y., January 2, 1862, and there was reared and educated. His school days being over he went to Jamestown in 1877, where he began working as delivery boy, then as clerk, and later as a partner in the same store. Thus he became a prominent merchant in that place, residing there until 1893 when he took a trip to the Golden State, locating for two years at Redlands, where he was engaged in the mercantile business, the first novelty store in that place. Afterwards he returned East, but the lure of the land of sunshine and flowers, with its equable climate, was too strong to resist longer, so in 1906 he returned to California, this time locating at Huntington Beach. He opened a grocery store, becoming one of the pioneer merchants of the beach town.

Possessing keen business foresight and realizing the potential financial and commercial possibilities of the then small town, Mr. Howard became a stockholder in the First National Bank of Huntington Beach, serving as its vice-president and one of its directors. In 1916 Mr. Howard sold his grocery business and assumed the active management of the bank, being one of its largest stockholders. He continued in the banking business until 1918, when he sold out his interest, resigned his position and removed to Covina, where he purchased an orange grove, remaining there until the spring of 1920, when he returned to the city of his choice, Huntington Beach, where as of yore, in the same optimistic way he saw the great commercial opportunities and realizing this laid his plans to again enter business life. With his son, Marcus G., and his son-in-law, Roy K. Smith, under the firm name of Howard & Smith, he has established two general stores. Store Number One is located in a building he owns on the corner of Main and Walnut streets, and Store Number Two in a building he has just completed on the corner of Eleventh and Orange streets. His many years of experience and successful business career, in connection with his high standing as a man of strict integrity and honesty of purpose enabled him to immediately establish a large and ever-increasing trade.

On his return he also became active in real estate development and built three fine residences which he sold; he has just completed a handsome house overlooking the ocean, where he intends to make his permanent home. Another of his successful enterprises is the Princess Theatre, which he built and owns. Among the many enterprises Mr. Howard was instrumental in founding at Huntington Beach, none have given him as much real pleasure and satisfaction as the organizing and building of the First Methodist Church of Huntington Beach, to which he gave freely of his time and financial help and served as president of the church board. He is recognized as one of the most public-spirited men of the city and is always ready to help promote every worthy movement that has as its ultimate aim the upbuilding and fostering of the best interests of Huntington Beach. Mr. Howard has served as president of the Chamber of Commerce and also was one of the original board of trustees of the city.

In 1886 Mr. Howard was united in marriage at Jamestown, N. Y., with Miss Adelaide M. Hazzard, a native of Little Falls, N. Y., and they are the parents of four children: Marcus G., who is manager of one of the Acme Grocery Stores in Los Angeles, married Miss Mabel Elfeld of Huntington Beach; Lillian S. is the wife of J. J. Goetz, a teacher in the Long Beach high school; Frances L. is the wife of Roy K. Smith, the general manager of the chain of Acme Grovery Stores in Los Angeles; Virginia is a student at the Huntington Beach high school.

ROY I. LOVERING.—A successful Tulare rancher who profited by his discovery that, after all, there is nothing to compare with Orange County, and straightway moved hither, is Roy I. Lovering, proprietor of the estate so well known in the Orangethorpe district and a member of a family that has prospered wonderfully in California. He was born in Lucas County, Iowa, on November 26, 1882, the son of Martin Van Buren Lovering, a farmer of that state, and his good wife Mary. He came to California when he was a baby in 1883, so that for all practical purposes, so to speak, he is a genuine native son. At that time his father came to Orangethorpe, and here purchased eighty acres on West Orangethorpe Avenue. It was then covered with wild mustard and sunflowers, and was known as the Baker-Lovering subdivision.

At the present time there are forty acres in the Lovering homestead, and all are in oranges, entirely under the Anaheim Union Water Company's service. The ranch was run by our subject until 1904, when he purchased 560 acres in Tulare County for a cattle ranch, and for the next six years lived there. Then he removed to Mexico, and at Ontagota had a ranch of 123 acres in grain from 1910 to 1911. Returning to Tulare County, he again ran his ranch there until January, 1916, when he concluded to return to the old homestead at Orangethorpe. He joined the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Growers Association, and with his brothers became especially interested in sixteen acres west of the Emery oil fields.

On June 8, 1904, Mr. Lovering was married in Orangethorpe to Miss Nellie Weaver, a native of Kansas and the daughter of W. W. Weaver, who married Miss Flora Birtch. The Weavers came to California in 1887 and settled at Anaheim; and there Miss Nellie went to school. Two children—Norma Doris and Jassmine Evelyn—have blessed the union. Fraternally, Mr. Lovering is a member of the Elks of Anaheim; nor is there in that flourishing society a more active or popular member.

JESSE B. IRWIN.—A faithful public official whose interest in Orange County history is second only to his devotion to duty and his interest in the history of his family, now enhanced by the enviable war records of his sons, is Jesse B. Irwin, the popular custodian of the Orange County Park. He is the son of James and Delila (Ennis) Irwin, old settlers of Ohio, where the father died, and was born near Upper Sandusky, Wyandot County, in the Buckeye State, on September 27, 1851, the fifth child in a family of nine, six of whom are still living, three sons and three daughters.

At the age of seventeen he removed to Monticello, Ill., with his widowed mother and the rest of the family, and there helped on the farm where they raised corn. In 1871, the family moved to Mankato, Jewell County, Kans., and in the fall of 1885, Jesse joined them there and engaged in farming. On September 16, 1886, he was married to Miss Eva E. Talbert, at Salina, Kans., a charming lady born near Monticello, Ill., and there educated in the grammar schools. She is a sister of T. B. Talbert, a member of the board of supervisors of Orange County. After marriage Mr. and Mrs. Irwin went to Colby, Thomas County, Kans., where Mr. Irwin engaged in the real estate business, but in 1890 they moved to Monticello, Ill., and there continued agricultural pursuits for ten years. In 1902 he was appointed deputy county clerk of Piatt County and served until Sept. 1, 1911, working under two administrations.

H. F. Gardner

In September, 1911, Mr. Irwin and family came west to California, principally for his health, settled in Huntington Beach and has ever since worked hard for the advancement of Orange County interests, and is a good "booster" for this section of the great state—an enthusiasm and a work in which his wife and all the family join.

Nine children blessed this union of Mr. and Mrs. Irwin, one child, Nettie, dying at the age of nine. Clyde C., who married on August 1, 1919, lives in Los Angeles and is an expert caterpillar mechanic; Zella was married in 1913 to W. S. Thompson of Garden Grove, at present a rancher with 120 acres at Huntington Beach; Marie D., the fourth in the order of birth, is a graduate of the Clara Barton Hospital of Los Angeles, and was married August 25, 1920, to John H. Carter, an oil worker at Brea. He was a soldier in the World War; Fay F. attended the Huntington Beach high school and is now at home; Fern G., married in October, 1918, Loraine E. Tarbox, who is engaged with his father in the hardware business at Huntington Beach; Rachel is a senior in the Orange high school; Joseph B. in Orange high school, and Esther, a student in the El Modena grammar school. Mr. Irwin, who has been an Odd Fellow since 1884, now belongs to Huntington Beach Lodge.

Mr. and Mrs. Irwin can well be proud of the war record of their sons. Clyde C. served with the Ninety-first Division of the Three Hundred Forty-Eighth Field Artillery, and trained at Camp Lewis from April 26, 1918, to the following July, when he sailed with his division from New York for France. In the latter country, he was in charge of munition trucks, and he also served in the Army of Occupation. In April, 1919, he returned to California, and at Camp Kearny, on the twenty-fifth of the month was honorably discharged. Fay F. Irwin volunteered in June, 1918, for service in naval aviation, and trained at North Island until December, when he was sent with his class to the Great Lakes Station, and there he served, until he was honorably discharged, in April, 1919, when he at once returned to California.

HENRI F. GARDNER.—An early pioneer of Orange who had much to do with the building up and improving of that section was the late Henri F. Gardner, who was born in Jackson County, Mich., in 1852, descendant of a prominent and old Connecticut family. He was educated in the public schools, after which he learned the printer's trade and then entered the University of Michigan, but on account of his health and wishing to seek a more equable climate he came to California. He spent one year working on the Anaheim Gazette and then located in Orange in 1873 and purchased twenty acres on South Glassell Street, which is still in possession of his family.

Orange was then only a country cross roads with a store and blacksmith shop. The place was wild land and with his customary zeal he leveled and improved it, setting out an orchard. He was very prominent in and served as an officer of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, was secretary of the company for some years and afterwards became superintendent of the company until he resigned. He bought other ranches and improved them and then sold them. He also owned valuable property on West Third Street, Los Angeles; he passed away in Los Angeles on October 27, 1918. Interested in the cause of education, Mr. Gardner was school trustee in Orange from the early days, serving acceptably for many years. He was also a prominent member of the board of trustees of Orange and helped materially to shape the destinies of the town. He was, however, most prominent in organizing and building up the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and with his associates he made it one of the best irrigating systems in the state.

Mr. Gardner was married in Downey in 1872, when he was united with Miss Emma Howard, who was born in Pennsylvania, but educated in Rock Island, Ill., where she was a graduate of the Rock Island Normal. She came to San Francisco with her mother in 1872, and soon afterwards to Los Angeles, where she was engaged in teaching, and it was here she met Mr. Gardner, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage. Mrs. Gardner is a lady of culture and refinement and always encouraged and assisted her husband in his ambitions. Their union was blessed with seven children: H. H. is a rancher at Villa Park; Dian R. is an attorney-at-law now residing at Orange; Vera P., a graduate of the University of Michigan with the degree of M.D., saw service with the Red Cross overseas and was in charge of the bacteriological laboratory for the American Commission in Poland, being stationed in Warsaw; she is now the wife of Dr. A. J. Chesley of Minneapolis, Minn.; Mrs. Ora Devereaux resides in Los Angeles; H. Reginald is superintendent of a mine in Plumas County, Cal.; Margaret is a graduate of Stanford University with the degree of A.B.; she afterwards studied law, was admitted to the bar and she was deputy city prosecutor of Los Angeles until the war when she volunteered in the Red Cross, serving overseas one year in France, then in Poland, where she was head of the department of home communication for the American Commission. She is again practicing her profession in Los Angeles; Sydnie is the wife of M. M. Fogel of Santa Monica. Mr. and Mrs. Gardner with Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Tenor were greatly interested in starting the first public library in Orange, which eventually grew and became the Orange County Public Library, of which they were the organizers. Mrs. Gardner continues to make her home in Los Angeles surrounded by her children, who assist her in caring for the interests and property left by her husband. She is now one of the few remaining pioneers of old Orange County.

CLYDE D. BUTLER.—A live, progressive factor in the development of many Orange County interests in recent years is Clyde D. Butler, a native of Goldendale, Wash., where he was born in territorial days on April 6, 1883, the son of J. H. and Lizzie E. (Hasty) Butler, born in New York and Maine, respectively, who located in and have been associated with Santa Ana since 1894. When he was six months old the family moved to Arapahoe, Nebr., and there he was reared until his eleventh year. In 1894 he came to California and Santa Ana and here finished the courses of the Santa Ana high school. While still a student at the high school he was also in the office of the city engineer and there learned enough of engineering to encourage his taking an engineering course in the University of California.

Mr. Butler next became an assistant in the city engineer's office at Santa Ana, and at the end of two years, when the Orange County Highway Commission was formed and the bond issue carried for the construction of highways in Orange County, he entered the employ of the commission, first, in the discharge of office work, later as resident engineer in the field, and lastly, as chief field engineer for the highway commission.

When the new highways had been completed, Mr. Butler helped to form the Orange County Engineering and Construction Company, which was organized on September 21, 1916. From the very beginning it proved a success and its operations, aggressive and extensive, pointing the way and raising the standards of such work, had much to do with the rapid and sound development, not merely of Santa Ana and the immediate outlying districts, but also with Orange County. The company does general engineering and survey work, together with heavy concrete construction, and has built many highways in the county, including miles of concrete paving in Santa Ana, and making a specialty of both rock and oil and asphalt roads. They have also put up some notable structures, such as the beautiful Evergreen Mausoleum in Oakland Cemetery, which cost about $125,000.

He was active in the affairs of the company until January, 1920, when, finding his other interests occupied too much of his time, he sold his interest and resigned and since then is looking after his own affairs; particularly is he occupied with his official duties as deputy city manager of Anaheim as well as deputy city surveyor and department street superintendent of the same city. He still follows surveying and civil engineering, making his home in Santa Ana. He takes the deepest interest in all problems pertaining to the future of both city and county and is ever willing to lend a hand in the most unselfish manner in order to attain the desired ends.

ANDREW J. TEAGUE.—An experienced, enthusiastic, influential and effective "booster" for Orange County, whose services, always freely given, are widely appreciated, is Andrew J. Teague, the special agent for the Union Oil Company at Huntington Beach. A native of Missouri, he was born in Texas County on March 3, 1883, and reared on a Missouri farm, in a flourishing district, where he learned a good deal about the best way of doing things, according to the latest American methods in agriculture. He attended first the district, and then the high school at Houston, Mo., and was eventually graduated from the State Normal School at Ravenden Springs, Ark., in 1906. He received a teacher's certificate and taught for six years in the rural schools of Arkansas.

In 1912 Mr. Teague came west to California and settled at Santa Ana, equipped with a diploma from Draughon's Business College of Little Rock, Ark., and for three years he demonstrated his ability in trade lines as a clerk for the Santa Ana Mercantile Company. Then he became a salesman for the Standard Oil Company, and later acted in the same capacity for the Union Oil Company of Santa Ana.

Having thus gained a thorough knowledge of the commercial side of the oil business, he was naturally the most available man to manage the new plant of the Union Oil Company at Huntington Beach, which was completed in 1917. He has succeeded well with this responsibility, both for the interests of the company and for his own advancement, and his success is undoubtedly due to his having considered the wants of the community as well as the wishes of his employers.

Mr. Teague has always taken a live interest in the affairs of Huntington Beach and has made this interest felt in his work as a member of the Chamber of Commerce. He has been in favor of everything which would make for a larger, more go-ahead and still more prosperous community, and for the most desirable conditions likely to make Huntington Beach the ideal town; believing that the young city already contains a large number of the best sort of families and the most public-spirited citizens.

When Mr. Teague was married, he took for his bride Miss Essie Ulmer of Arkansas; and their fortunate union has been blessed through the birth of two children, Nerna and Jack. When twenty-one years of age, Mr. Teague joined the Odd Fellows in Arkansas, and was secretary of the lodge at Imboden, Lawrence County; and now he is treasurer of the Huntington Beach Lodge No. 183, of this order.

ALCEDAS B. ROUSSELLE.—Among the interesting narratives connected with early American history, none is more absorbing than the adventures of the seven Rousselle brothers who came over to Newfoundland from Boulogne-sur-Mer, in France, just before the battle of Waterloo. They believed in the principles enunciated by the Prince of Peace, and set out to make the mainland of Massachusetts; but they were wrecked and got no further than the coast of Newfoundland, from which they scattered to Canada, New Orleans and New England.

The paternal grandfather of our subject was Xavier Rousselle, who settled in Canada, and his father was Moise Rousselle, who was born there, married there and afterward migrated to Connecticut. The Rousselles had been an aristocratic family in France, intimately connected with the early military history of that country, but opposed to the principles of conquest that followed in the wake of the Napoleonic wars; and hence their movement toward the New World with its more promising future. Moise Rousselle, who was a farmer in Canada, married Miss Armine Bessette, a Canadian by birth, and then moved to Taftville, Conn., where he continued agricultural pursuits on a much large scale. They had eleven children; and Alcedas, the youngest and the only one now living, was born in Taftville, June 17, 1878.

When he was two years old, his mother died, and on his father's removal to Chicopee, Mass., he was sent to live with relatives of his mother at Worcester, kind folks, who did for him what they could. Two of his uncles became priests and he lived with and was reared by one of them—the Rev. J. C. Bessette, for the past twenty-five years rector of Our Lady of Consolation at Pawtucket, R. I. The Bessette family were among the early families of Canada, and in France they had risen to distinction as professional men of literary, scholarly pursuits, being for several generations at the head of college and church affairs. It was the desire of his relatives in Connecticut, therefore, that Alcedas should be a priest, but business appealed to him more strongly.

He attended the public schools, and after school hours and on Saturdays clerked in a large clothing store at Worcester, owned by his family relations. They had, in fact, a chain of stores in New England cities, and he rose to be manager and buyer. Under this severe strain, however, his health broke down, and this misfortune brought him to the Pacific Coast. He spent his first year in Seattle, the next in San Francisco, and in the third year, or 1905, came south to Los Angeles, where he engaged in real estate transactions, making a specialty of beach, oil and mining properties. He was at Tonopah and Goldfield for awhile, and came out of the Nevada gold fields a winner. He also did well at Venice, Ocean Park, Santa Monica and Redondo, and was one of the pioneers in the early development of Southern California beaches.

Mr. Rousselle came to East Newport in 1911, and sold off the tract of 500 acres belonging to Stephen Townsend of Long Beach, thereby handling nearly a million dollars' worth of East Newport, Balboa, Newport and Newport Heights—now called Costa Mesa—property; and he also took over the unsold holdings of the Townsend-Van de Water Company of Long Beach. As a result he himself has invested heavily in all parts of these coast towns and has come to have the interests of the vicinity really at heart, and to enjoy a sublime faith in Newport Bay and Newport Beach and its environs. He organized the Balboa Chamber of Commerce, was its first president, and is now a director and chairman of its harbor committee. He is also a member of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, and a member of its foreign trade club and one of the World Traders.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Rousselle was married to Miss Florina A. Gendron, a native of Worcester, Mass. She is the daughter of Joseph T. and Domitile (Rocheleau) Gendron, natives of the Province of Quebec, Canada, of French parents. Her maternal grandfather, H. L. Rocheleau, became a large merchant, beginning in the Province of Quebec, and finally establishing the nucleus of their present large chain of stores in New England. Joseph T. Gendron was a prominent architect in Worcester, Mass., until he retired, when he spent most of his time traveling abroad. Hence on all sides they are among the early families of Massachusetts. Mrs. Rousselle is a cultured, refined woman, her education having been completed in the Sisters of St. Anne school at Worcester, Mass.

In 1919, Mr. and Mrs. Rousselle made an extended trip to Alaska, and on their return to Seattle took in Yellowstone Park, Niagara Falls and Boston, then motored through Vermont and the White Mountains of New Hampshire, and the balance of the 1,700 miles down the St. Lawrence from Montreal to Quebec and St. Anne de Beau-Pre. When at home, Mr. and Mrs. Rousselle have likewise participated in the best things of social life. He helped to organize the Newport Harbor Yacht Club, of which he is still an enthusiastic member, and was its first fleet captain and a member of its first board of directors. He was also a "booster" for and among the first members of the Orange County Country Club, with its fine golf links, and for ten years has been a prominent member of Lodge No. 99, of the Los Angeles Elks.

Mr. and Mrs. Rousselle left in the fall of 1920 on a tour of eight months, including the Mediterranean and other countries of Continental Europe, their intention being to return through the Suez Canal and visit the Islands of the Pacific thereby materially adding to a knowledge of the world ordinarily not possessed by less favored men.

DANIEL MCKINLEY.—As the special agent for Orange County of the M. M. Cobb Company, packers and shippers of green vegetables, with headquarters at 203 East Walnut Street, Fullerton, Daniel McKinley is numbered among California's native sons who have achieved success in business life.

He was born at Los Angeles, January 19, 1884, and is the son of Daniel McKinley, Sr., a native of Ireland, who was among the Argonauts who crossed the plains in the days of '49 in quest of the yellow metal that lured so many to California's shores in early days. First locating in northern California, the elder McKinley in later days drifted to the City of the Angels when it was a small hamlet, and was among the pioneers of that place in the line of horticulture before the day of the Navel orange. He planted an eighty-acre ranch to seedling orange trees and other varieties of fruit in the South Park district of Los Angeles, between Forty-seventh and Fifty-first streets, followed the nursery business and fruit raising and lived on and developed his ranch until the time of his death.

Daniel McKinley, Jr., was educated in the public schools of Los Angeles, and in 1905, after attaining his majority, came to Fullerton and entered the employ of M. M. Cobb, who had just completed a warehouse at Fullerton, and was entering the vegetable shipping business in Orange County. The M. M. Cobb Company represents one of the oldest vegetable packing companies in California, the business having been started by M. M. Cobb, who has been in the business over thirty years. The company was incorporated as the M. M. Cobb Company about 1913. Their Fullerton packing house was the first one built in the packing house district of that place. During the fifteen years that Mr. McKinley has been with this concern he has worked his way up from the bottom until he has attained the position of the company's special agent, and his example of self-won success should be an incentive to ambitious young men starting life on the road that leads toward the goal of their hopes. Mr. McKinley's marriage, in 1914, united him with Miss Mattie K. Lamb, a native of Chicago, and two children have been born to them, Daniel, Jr., and Alice, both natives of Fullerton. Mr. and Mrs. McKinley have many warm friends and are among Fullerton's respected and honored citizens. Mr. McKinley is a member of Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

ANGUS MCAULAY.—Among the representative and progressive business men of the Fullerton and Anaheim districts in Orange County we find Angus McAulay, whose reputation as a "live wire" is easily demonstrated by his activities in the Fullerton Board of Trade and as the owner and proprietor of Fullerton's undertaking parlors. Of foreign birth he first saw the light in Nova Scotia on April 20, 1886, and as his name indicates his Scottish lineage, the characteristics usually associated with that nationality are not lacking in Mr. McAulay. A strong sense of justice, unswerving integrity and thorough reliability have won the confidence and esteem of his associates in business and social life. His parents, Malcolm and Elizabeth (Scott) McAulay, in searching for a quiet nook in which to spend their declining years came to California in 1895 and located at Anaheim where the father lives retired from the active cares of life. Mr. and Mrs. McAulay became the parents of nine children.

Angus was educated in the public schools of California and in the larger school of experience and for twelve years he was engaged in the furniture and undertaking business at Anaheim with F. A. Backs. In January, 1914, he opened an establishment in Fullerton and in 1915 erected the modern building at 411 North Spadra Street in which his parlors are located. The building is fully equipped with all modern conveniences for the conduct of his business; has a comfortable chapel, display and operating rooms, and full motor equipment. His careful consideration and efforts to please those he is called upon to serve is bringing him the reward his sympathetic and kindly attention deserves.

His marriage October 23, 1912, united him with Miss Suzanne D. Beebe of Anaheim. The children resulting from their union are named respectively, Pearl, Agnes and Jay. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which Mr. McAulay is an elder. Politically Mr. McAulay votes the Republican ticket and fraternally he holds membership in several lodges in Orange County. He belongs to the Fullerton Club, is a member of the Board of Trade, and is actively interested in the growth and development of Orange County.

SHERMAN FOSTER.—A Californian upon whom Dame Fortune has smiled so that now he is one of the most ardent boosters for the Southland, and particularly for Orange County, is Sherman Foster, one of the well-known citizens of Orange. He was born in Aurora, Ill., on October 16, 1864, the son of George S. Foster, a veteran of the Civil War, a native of New York and a blacksmith by trade, who came to Illinois and set himself up at Aurora as a farmer and blacksmith. He served in the Civil War in an Illinois regiment, and in that state married Miss Martha L. Greene, also a native of New York state. In 1868 he located at Hiawatha, Brown County, Kans., driving there with horses and wagons; and after a while he bought a farm on the Kickapoo Indian Reservation, eleven miles southwest of Hiawatha, where he was a farmer and a blacksmith, and there both he and Mrs. Foster died.

The third eldest of the four children in the family, Sherman, was reared in Kansas and attended the local public schools, finishing at the Hiawatha Academy. At Fairview, Kans., on February 11, 1894, he married Miss Nellie Johnson, a native of Brown County, Kans., and the daughter of Arthur Johnson, who was born in Wisconsin. He had married Miss Mary White, a native of Missouri, after which they settled in Brown County, Kans. Miss Nellie was the only child of this marriage, and like her husband, attended the public schools.

For a while, Mr. Foster farmed the old home ranch of 320 acres, planting grain and corn and raising stock; and in 1898 he made a first trip to California. He remained nine months at Orange, and bought a house and lot on East Chapman Street, which he later sold. In 1906, he came again to California and to Orange, and bought twenty acres two miles north of Orange, on Taft Avenue. It had fine orchards of walnuts and apricots, to which he gave a rancher's attention for eighteen months, when he sold the property and returned to Kansas on another visit.

In the fall of 1909, however, Mr. Foster moved to Orange permanently and bought the residence where he has since been living. He also bought two and a half acres on Walnut Avenue, which he set out to oranges, and sold. Then he bought a walnut grove of nine acres on Fairhaven Avenue, managed it for four years, and sold it; after which he bought forty acres at Hemet, which he later sold. Next he purchased a residential place on North Main Street, and that he also sold. Twenty-three acres south of Santa Ana, which he then bought, has very rich soil and an artesian well and pumping plant for domestic use as well as irrigation. This he devotes to the raising of sugarbeets, and has a record of the large yield of fifteen tons to the acre. In partnership with Mr. King, Mr. Foster also bought a lot on South Glassell Street, where he built a business house.

Two children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Foster. Harold is a graduate of the Orange Union high school and now attending Throop Polytechnic at Pasadena; and Gladys is in the class of 1921, Orange Union high school. Mrs. Foster is a member of the Christian Church; Mr. Foster joined the Odd Fellows at Fairview Lodge No. 399, at Fairview, Kans., of which lodge he is a past grand. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Foster believes in the greatest latitude as to local affairs, and in local movements is strictly nonpartisan.

HENRY SCHULTZ.—The city of Anaheim, the oldest city of Orange County, was founded and settled by fifty Germans, all citizens of the United States. They were a sturdy set of pioneers and without their courageous spirit, which enabled them to endure the hardships and discomforts of pioneer life, the great commonwealth of Orange County might have remained for many years longer a wilderness, with barren, sandy plains. The fame of this progressive German community reached the Fatherland and among the later settlers in this section of Orange County is Henry Schultz, who was born in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, February 12, 1847.

To get away from military oppression Mr. Schultz immigrated to the United States in 1871, locating first in Shawano County, Wis., where he bought timberland, three forties of land, fifty of which he cleared himself. While living there he took out his first naturalization papers, and after removing to Orange County, in 1892, he took out his final papers, so that he has been a full-fledged citizen of the United States since 1892. After remaining in Anaheim a short time looking around for a location he purchased a ranch of twenty acres, paying at that time but $65 an acre. The land had been a part of the Stearns Rancho and had been plowed but once. He has made all improvements on the place and now has a comfortable, well-kept ranch, where he engages in general farming and also conducted a dairy business for many years. He sold ten acres in 1916 and on the balance he has four acres of walnuts.

In 1878 Mr. Schultz was united in marriage with Miss Wilhelmina Strasman, also a native of Germany, and three children have been born to them: Mrs. Emma Hein of Brookhurst Road and mother of five children; Mrs. Sarah Gust, living near the Garden Grove Road, who has three children; and one child, who died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Schultz are active in the membership of the Evangelical Church and are highly respected in their large circle of friends and have been supporters of all the movements that have helped make Orange County.

MISS LILLIAN E. YAEGER.—When one considers the astonishingly large number of women who are today using automobiles as more or less expert drivers, often quite familiar with the mechanism of their car, it is not surprising to find a woman dealing in autos; and when one reviews the successful career of Miss Lillian Yaeger, it is quite as natural to learn that she is the agent for northern Orange County, representing the Dodge Brothers motor cars. She was born, a native daughter proud of her association with the great state of California, at Anaheim; and her parents are among the old-timers in that section where they were married. Jacob Yaeger, a native of Germany, married Miss Stella Kelp, born in Anaheim, and both are now living in Fullerton; they had five children—four girls and a boy, among whom Miss Yaeger was the oldest daughter. Mr. Yaeger was a wagon maker, and few craftsmen were more skilled in the technique of their trade. In the light of his handicraft and its relation to the problems of early transportation, therefore, it is more than interesting that his gifted daughter should today carry on, in a more advanced stage, that same work of solving the problems for another generation.

Removing to Fullerton when she was a child, Miss Yaeger attended the public schools and even as a young girl went to work. Step by step she advanced in a knowledge of modern industrial and trade conditions, and in 1909 she engaged in the line in which, as has been said, she has made such a pronounced success, notwithstanding that she started with very little capital. Her shrewd insight into "the great game," and her desire to serve, please and accommodate, while dealing justly in every respect, has placed at her disposal an establishment occupying the building which she erected in October, 1919, carrying a full line of accessories, and manned by no less than fourteen highly-trained people. In addition to representing the fast-selling Dodge Brothers motor cars, Miss Yaeger also maintains the largest garage in the county, the repair department being located on the second floor and equipped with modern appliances and machinery to care for her growing trade. So long as Orange County boasts of such wide-awake promoters of commerce as this enterprising young woman of Fullerton, so long need the county have no worry as to its future.

FRANK J. GOBAR, M. D.—Fullerton has been unusually fortunate in the caliber of the men who have elected to make that city their home and the field for their professional and business efforts. Prominent among these is Dr. Frank J. Gobar, the physician and surgeon who has become well known in the practice of his profession in different cities and now centers his work of relieving suffering humanity in Orange County, which section has for the past fourteen years had the benefit of his knowledge and skill. He was born in Alma, Buffalo County, Wis., June 14, 1860. When he was six years old, in 1866, the family removed to southwestern Missouri, and there the young lad attended the common schools for his primary education. Returning to Wisconsin while still a youth, he located in Durand, and there clerked in a general store, and studied pharmacy; later he conducted a drug store in that town.

The study of medicine was his object, however, and he entered Rush Medical College of Chicago in 1883, graduating in 1885 with the degree of M. D. Then returning to Durand, the young medico practiced his profession in that city until 1901, and while a resident there took a prominent part in civic affairs, serving as mayor of the town, and was a member of the board of health and active in all good works for community betterment; he was one of the promoters and founders of the electric light system and of the telephone company there. He also took an active interest in fraternal orders, joined the Masons in Durand and received the Consistory Degree of that order in Milwaukee, Wis. The Odd Fellows took him into the fold in Durand, also, and professionally he was a member of the County Medical Society. For fifteen years Dr. Gobar was surgeon for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, and a member of the National Association of Railway Surgeons.

In 1901, he removed with his family to western Oregon, locating in Tillamook County, where he practiced his profession and also engaged in the cattle business, and owned a toll road. In 1906, he sold out his interests there and that year marks his arrival in Fullerton, and he has since that date been in general practice and specializing in casualty work. He is surgeon for the Santa Fe Railroad, receiving his appointment in 1913, and his time is well filled with good works for the general welfare.

The marriage of Dr. Gobar, which occurred June 10, 1885, united him with Miss Nellie Hutchinson, a native of Durand, Wis., where the ceremony took place, and the daughter of a prominent surgeon there. Eight children have blessed the union: George H., an attorney associated with Kemp, Mitchell and Silverberg, with offices in the Marsh-Strong building, Los Angeles; he was active in local war work, acted as chief clerk of the exemption board at Santa Ana and also at Fullerton; Elizabeth, wife of Victor A. Porter of Fullerton and the mother of two children, Miriam and Frank; Frank H., a student in the medical department of the University of Southern California, saw service in France during the World War, acting as corporal in the Three Hundred Sixty-first Field Hospital Corps, Ninety-first Division, and saw active service in the Argonne, at St. Mihiel, Meuse, Lys, Scheldt, and in Belgium; since his discharge he has entered Stanford University to finish his medical course. He is married and has one child, Robert Franklin; Julian S., the fourth child, remained at home to care for the Victor Valley ranch; David E. saw service in the war, first as sergeant in a machine-gun company, and later he was transferred to the field hospital at Camp Lewis, and he finally saw service in France in the same company as his older brother, the Three Hundred Sixty-first Field Hospital Corps, Ninety-first Division, in the freighting department with rank as wagoner; Charlotte, a graduate of the Fullerton high school, is a student at Brownsberger College, Los Angeles; Roland K., a graduate of the Fullerton high school; and Eunice, a student at the Fullerton grammar school.

In partnership with his sons, Dr. Gobar, owns a 480-acre cattle ranch in Victor Valley, San Bernardino County; the venture has been very successful. He is a member of the board of sessions of the First Presbyterian Church of Fullerton, and is a member of the American Medical Association, the State and County Medical Societies. A man who stands out from the ranks in many respects, Dr. Gobar has brought much to the community life of Fullerton and Orange County; he has gained the respect and admiration of all who have come in contact with his fine personality, and in rearing and educating his typically American family, he and his wife have proven themselves citizens of inestimable value to their country and the world.

JAMES HERVEY ROCHESTER.—Eminent among the distinguished citizens of Orange County certain to be depended upon for the exertion of a widely-felt and beneficent influence making for both the upbuilding and the building up of California, is James Hervey Rochester, of Costa Mesa, the branches of whose family tree reach out through successive generations and centuries to distant climes and great or notable people. He was born at Owasco, Cayuga County, N. Y., on April 18, 1859, the son of James Hervey Rochester, a native of Bath, Steuben County, N. Y., where he was born on April 19, 1819, and a great-grandson of Nathaniel Rochester, who enjoyed the abiding honor of establishing the now great city of Rochester, N. Y. The family name, Rochester, originated from the city of Rochester, a place of great antiquity in County Kent, England, about twenty-five miles further out than Canterbury from London. The name is a relic of the days of Roman occupation, and means "rock castle" or camp, and besides the ever-interesting cathedral, which gives the place the English status of "town," the remains of the castle occupy a commanding position overlooking the river Medway. The family of Rochester were residents in County Essex in 1558 as is evidenced by the Herald's Visitations when the coat of arms, "or a fesse between three crescents" was confirmed, or allowed to the family.

Nicholas Rochester, the first member of the family to come to America, was born in Kent, England, in 1640; and having settled in the Colony of Virginia in 1689, he purchased, on Christmas Day of that year, 100 acres of land in Westmoreland County. His only son, William, was born in 1680 and died in October, 1750; and his eldest son, John, was born in 1708 and died in November, 1754. Nathaniel Rochester, the third son of John, was born on February 21, 1752, and died on May 17, 1831; and his oldest son was William Beatty Rochester, who was born on January 29, 1789, and died on June 15, 1838. James Hervey Rochester, first, eldest son of William Beatty Rochester died on March 22, 1860.

This association of James Hervey Rochester, 2d, with his pioneer great-grandfather is of more than personal or temporary importance; it is a matter of national and historic interest to recall some of the incidents connected with the founding, by Colonel Nathaniel Rochester, in 1810, of the city which has played a such a role in the development of the Empire State. Many monuments have been erected to perpetuate the memory of eminent men, but none more unique and enduring than this where, by the adoption of the founder's name, the city itself, so long as it shall endure, will keep alive the name of Colonel Rochester.

Nathaniel Rochester was twenty-three years of age at the beginning of the War of the Revolution, but before April, 1776, despite his youth he successively held the positions of members of the Committee of Safety of Orange County, N. C., where he then lived, Justice of the Peace, Major of Militia and Paymaster, and then Lieutenant-Colonel. In May, 1776, he was elected a member of the state convention which adopted the State Constitution, and later, the same year, he was appointed Commissary General of Military Stores—certainly remarkably rapid promotions, without reference to age, and of especial note when this important factor is considered. Severe illness prevented continuous service in the Continental Army, but in 1777 he was appointed a state commissioner to establish and operate a gun factory at Hillsboro, N. C., for the Continental Congress.

The personal history of this energetic patriot illustrates throughout his life the same active and efficient connection with public work. Colonel Rochester was born in the same county in Virginia (Westmoreland) where twenty years earlier George Washington entered upon the stage of human affairs; and after the War of the Revolution he was engaged in the practice of law in Hillsboro, N. C., and Philadelphia, Pa., but soon removed to Hagerstown, Md., where he built and operated mills for the manufacture of nails and rope, and later still erected a flour mill. In 1788 he married Sophia, daughter of Colonel William Beatty of Frederick, Md., and while living at Hagerstown, he successively filled the offices of Member of Assembly of Maryland, Postmaster, and Judge of the County Court, and in 1808 was chosen a presidential elector. He was the first president and founder of the Hagerstown Bank, and a portrait of him painted at that time is in the bank at the present day, and a vignette steel engraving of this portrait is used on the bank's checks.

In 1800 he made his first visit to the "Genesee country" in New York State, where he had previously made a purchase of 640 acres, and in September of that year, associating with him Major Charles Carroll, Colonel William Fitzhugh, and Colonel Hilton of Maryland, he made large purchases of land in Livingston County, near Dansville. In 1802 he purchased 100 acres on the Genesee River which was to be the future site of the city of Rochester. In May, 1810, having closed up his business in Maryland, he first became a resident of western New York, and during the first five years he lived at Dansville. Then, disposing of his interests there, he removed to Bloomfield, Ontario County, and then to this place on the Genesee River at the Falls, which he had previously visited, surveying the land and laying out a townsite, which received the name of Rochester.

In 1816, Colonel Rochester was a second time an elector for president; and in January, 1817, he was secretary of the important convention at Canandaigua, which urged the construction of the Erie Canal. During this year he went to Albany, N. Y., as agent for the petitioners for the establishing of a new county in western New York, known as Monroe County, and he was first clerk of the new county, and also its first representative in the state legislature of 1821-2. Upon the organization of the Bank of Rochester, he was unanimously elected its president. He had always been attached to the Protestant Episcopal Church, and was one of the founders of St. Luke's Church of Rochester. After having opened his eyes to the beauties of this world in Cople Parish, Westmoreland County, Va., he died in Rochester on the morning of the seventeenth of May, 1831, after a long and most interesting career of far-reaching usefulness. When his country had demanded his services, he freely gave them, participating alternately in its arduous financial, military and legislative work; and its exigencies terminating, he was a zealous coworker in all that related to the beneficial uses of free government. Almost constantly filling important public trusts, he at the same time established great business enterprises, promoted in many ways an enduring public prosperity, and finally achieved the enviable and lasting distinction, the founder of a city, and one now more than a century old.

Not less interesting, in its way, is the story of William Beatty Rochester, the Colonel's eldest son, who was born in Hagerstown, Md., on January 29, 1789, and was graduated from Charlotte Hall, in St. Mary's County, Md. He studied law with Henry Clay in Lexington, Ky., and having moved to New York State, in 1818 represented Steuben County in the legislature. In 1821, he was presidential elector from New York State, and was a member of the Seventeenth Congress. In 1823 he was appointed judge of the eighth circuit of New York, but resigned in 1826 to accept the nomination for governor of New York. In 1837, on account of ill health he went to Florida where, at Pensacola, he became president of the Bank of Pensacola and a director in the Alabama and Florida Railroad. In 1838, he started for Washington, D. C., and at Charleston was persuaded by his friends, the Lamars, to accompany them to Baltimore on their new steamer "Pulaski" on her first trip north. On the morning of June 14th, the steamer left Charleston, and that night at 11 o'clock, the starboard boiler exploded, tearing out that side of the boat, which keeled over to the port side and floated about forty minutes, when she parted and capsized. Judge Rochester seized a settee, which hardly buoyed him up; but after he had floated for three hours or more, the first mate's boat came up and took him in. In endeavoring to effect a landing, the frail boat was capsized by the heavy surf, and he was lost within a few yards of the shore. Judge Rochester's career was also remarkable for the rapidity of his promotion to the various offices which he filled to the entire satisfaction of all concerned. Genial and always fond of good company, both as a young man and through life, he deserved and enjoyed popularity.

William Beatty Rochester's son, James Hervey, was married on May 14, 1846, to Miss Evelina Throop Martin, a native of Lyons, Wayne County, N. Y., where she was born on February 11, 1822. She was a niece of Enos Thompson Throop, the intimate friend of President Martin Van Buren, through whom he was made, to the good fortune of New Yorkers, first lieutenant-governor and then governor of the Empire State, was reelected, and served in that high office from 1829 to 1833, when he was appointed by President Jackson naval officer at the port of New York, later still being sent by President Van Buren as charge d'affaires of the United States to the kingdom of the Two Sicilies at Naples. Mrs. Rochester, the mother of our subject, was a lady of rare accomplishment, and of more than passing interest, being a descendant of Robert Bruce, King of Scotland. A direct forefather was William Seaborn Martin, son of Lieutenant Samuel Martin of New Haven and Wethersfield, Conn., who was born in Devonshire, England, and came from Plymouth to America in 1640. Samuel Martin married Phebe Brace; and inasmuch as their son William was born on shipboard, on their way to this country, he was called William Seaborn Martin. On June 25, 1685, he married Abigail Nichols, the daughter of Caleb Nichols; and he was the son of Francis Nichols, who married Margaret Bruce, daughter of Sir George Bruce of Carnock, who was a son of Robert Bruce. He was a son of Edward Bruce (1565), the son of Sir David Bruce (1497), the son of Sir David Bruce who was a son of Sir Robert Bruce (1393), the son of Sir Edward Bruce, who was a son of Robert Bruce of Clackmannan (1367). The latter was a son of King Robert Bruce, who was born on March 21, 1274, crowned at Scone on March 27, 1306, and after a reign of twenty-three years, seldom equalled and never excelled, all things considered, died on June 7, 1329. Four years after his marriage, James Hervey Rochester, Sr., came out to California, and for eight years was a member of the banking firm of Oliver Lees and Company of San Francisco. A brother, William Beatty Rochester, was the first general manager of the Wells-Fargo Express Company, and was stationed at Marysville, the headquarters of the company at that time. Through his mother Amanda Hopkins, he was a cousin of the late Mark Hopkins of San Francisco, Cal.

James Hervey Rochester, 2d, was graduated from the Auburn Academy in Cayuga County, N. Y., in 1877, and as his inclinations favored an art career, he studied under the best teachers at home, and then at the National Academy of Design in New York. A great uncle, Whitfield Hatch, was founder and president of the American Banknote Engraving Company of New York, and this circumstance led James Hervey, on leaving home at the age of seventeen, to take up engraving as the most desirable branch of art work. He went to Buffalo and there worked with the Bureau of Illustration and the Courier Publishing Company; but wishing a more extended field, he went to New York City in 1880, and soon was busy producing the finest class of magazine engravings for Harper's, Scribner's and the Century. As some classes of engraving in particular have been peculiarly at home in America, Mr. Rochester's work could not fail of cordial recognition in the United States and abroad; and he continued in that artistic field until the constant and prolonged strain caused for him serious eye trouble. Through the advice of oculists, he therefore discontinued engraving and since then has devoted himself to portrait and landscape painting. In March, 1908, Mr. Rochester came to California and located at Costa Mesa, in Orange County, where he established a permanent residence.

Mr. Rochester at Lewiston, Me., on June 20, 1895, married Miss Edith Grensted, the daughter of Henry W. Grensted, of Maidstone, the county town of Kent, situated on the right bank of the Medway. She grew up near the old Gothic archbishop's palace dating from the fourteenth century; inspired by an uncle, Frederick Finnis Grensted, canon of Liverpool Cathedral and a writer of considerable note on ecclesiastical subjects, she came to be favorably known as the author of a book of poems on Southern California entitled "From Star to Star," and another volume entitled, "Forenoon, Afternoon and Night," and rich in the esteem and affection of a wide circle of friends, she passed to the life eternal on January 18, 1920. Two children blessed this fortunate union—William Beatty Rochester was born on April 21, 1896; and Nathaniel Norman Rochester on November 8, 1897. During the World War, Nathaniel enlisted in defense of his country and became sergeant of Company L, Seventh Regiment, Santa Ana, Cal., later the One Hundred Sixtieth Infantry when federalized at Camp Kearney; and as one of a replacement unit, Sergeant Rochester was a member of Company B, Three Hundred Eighth Infantry, and so won undying honor when killed spiritedly fighting with the "Lost Battalion" in the French Forest of Argonne, on October 8, 1918, only a short time, comparatively, before the armistice.

Mr. Rochester is a member of the Episcopal Church, for the Rochesters have been Episcopalians, or Anglicans, as far back as may be traced. In Bishop Meade's "Old Churches and Families of Virginia," mention is made of the great-great-grandfather, John Rochester, as one of the vestrymen of Cople Parish, Westmoreland County, Va., serving in 1785 with John A. Washington, an uncle of the Father of his Country. Mr. Rochester has the inherited right to membership in the Society of the Cincinnati, and also in the Sons of the Revolution; and he took the master Mason's degree at Ionic Lodge No. 61, Oviedo, Orange County, Fla., in 1890. In national political affairs Mr. Rochester is an Independent.

SAMUEL N. FULLER.—A representative citizen of Fullerton who has aided much in developing the agricultural resources of that district is S. N. Fuller, prominently identified with progressive movements in Orange County as a dealer in country and city real estate, also a rancher who has made good in putting many acres of unimproved or partly improved land under a high state of cultivation and then sold at a profit to settlers who have chosen this part of Orange County as a home.

Mr. Fuller was born in Greene County, Ind., February 24, 1865, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Darling Fuller, farmer folk of Indiana. His mother died when he was a small child and he was educated in the rural schools of his native state and the high school, and a commercial college at Terre Haute, after which he farmed for a time. He came to California in 1901 and settled at Fullerton where he began improving a ranch by setting out an orange grove and then selling the same. This line of work has occupied almost his entire time since he has been in this state and he has improved many acres in this manner. He has bought land and subdivided it and then sold. With three associates Mr. Fuller purchased ninety-seven acres of what was known as the Benchley Estate and this was subdivided and sold in small tracts; on a part of this land are now located the Fullerton Union high school buildings, which, by the way, Mr. Fuller and others were instrumental in having located in its present location and which is one of the finest group of buildings of their kind to be found in the state and to which every citizen of Fullerton and vicinity point with much pride.

April 8, 1891, he was united in marriage with Miss Jennie McDermont of Indiana, the fruit of their union being two sons, both of whom served in the United States Army in France during the recent World War. Fred is cashier in the First National Bank at Fullerton, and Lloyd L. had the distinction of being wounded while in the service of his country and now is attending a commercial college in Los Angeles.

Mr. Fuller is a director in the First National Bank at Fullerton, and is deeply interested in all that concerns this section of country. He was clerk of the grammar school board and is a member of the Board of Trade and Housing Committee. In his religious convictions he is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and fraternally is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the I. O. O. F. He is a man of strong and forceful character, enterprising and public spirited, and worthily enjoys the respect and esteem of the residents of Fullerton and vicinity.

JOHN R. PARKER.—The high standard of education long ago established and always maintained in Ontario, Canada, has resulted in that commonwealth furnishing the American Republic with many leaders in educational work, and among these have been men and women who have for years helped to shape the educational policies, on broad and advanced lines, of the great state of California. To this well-trained staff belongs the district superintendent of schools of Fullerton, John R. Parker, who was born in Ontario, Canada. His father was Andrew Parker, a well-known business man now deceased. He had married Miss Margaret Cooper, the daughter of Robert Cooper, a Scotchman, and business man of Ontario, Canada. Mrs. Parker, a gifted lady, is still living in Los Angeles. John was the only child of this happy union, and enjoyed the best of educational advantages.

He attended the common schools of Canada, and the Collegiate Institute of Ontario, with its model school and normal school at Ottawa, and afterward accepted the principalship of a school in Trenton. At the end of two years, he resigned to come to California, in 1888. Here, having taken and passed the examinations for both elementary and high school teachers, he taught in Santa Barbara County for thirteen years, and then for three years was principal of a school at Clearwater, Los Angeles County. He next was principal of a school at Long Beach for two years.

In 1911, he took charge of the schools of Fullerton, commencing his superintendency with seven teachers; and since then the schools of the district have so expanded that there were twenty-four teachers working under and with him. He introduced the normal training and the home economics, did good work as a member of the county board of education, and was twice president of that board. In June, 1920, Mr. Parker resigned to devote his time to his orange grove which he has developed east of Anaheim. A Republican in matters of national import, Mr. Parker has never allowed partisanship to interfere with a hearty support of the best men and the best measures for local uplift and development. He is a member of the Men's League and the Board of Trade, and a member whose whole-souled activity counts.

In Santa Barbara County, in December, 1891, Mr. Parker was married to Miss Harriet C. Martin, a native daughter whose parents were Edwin and Mary Isabelle Martin, pioneers of Santa Barbara County, now deceased. Three children—Robert, Isabel and Percy—have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Parker, and have added cheer to the Parker home. Mr. Parker is both an Odd Fellow and a Mason, holding his membership in the former in Santa Barbara and the Masons in Fullerton.

LEON A. SAYLES.—Well and favorably known in banking circles in Orange County since 1915, but since September 1, 1920, a valued employe of the Union Oil Company at Brea, where his influence as a public-spirited and progressive upbuilder has been demonstrated, is Leon A. Sayles, a native of Michigan, where he was born, in Ionia County, on March 5, 1880. His father was A. W. Sayles, who had married Lodema Ayres; and after Mr. Sayles' death, his family came out to California. Leon had preceded the rest, and arrived in Los Angeles in 1902.

He enjoyed the helpful instruction of the Michigan grammar schools and a first-class business college; and on taking up his residence in Southern California was employed in the U. S. postoffice for about nine years. Then, for four years, he had a ranch of his own in the San Gabriel Valley; and, on selling out, he went to San Diego, where he remained until 1915.

In that year, Mr. Sayles came to Brea and joined the staff of the La Habra Valley Bank which had been established three years before by C. R. Thomas. For the first year, he was assistant cashier, and then he was appointed to the responsible position of cashier. During the five years that he had charge of this department of the institution's activities, the bank considerably enlarged its business. On September 1, 1920, Mr. Sayles resigned his office in the bank to accept a very desirable and responsible position with the Union Oil Company at Brea.

On November 25, 1903, Mr. Sayles was married to Miss Maude B. Stedman, a member of a family well known in America on account of its varied accomplishment. His domestic and private life, therefore, is all that might be desired; enhanced with the diversion of attention, from time to time, to a flourishing orange grove.

Ever ready to support any worthy local movement regardless of party lines or creeds, Mr. Sayles is a Republican in national politics and under the banners of the G. O. P. seeks to contribute somewhat to the elevation of standards in citizenship. In fraternal matters, he is a Knight of Pythias.

DR. SAMUEL STROCK.—Attracted to the great spaces of the West and its free, 'out-door life by his love of nature, Dr. Samuel Strock has for the past eighteen years been an enthusiastic resident of the Southland. A scholarly representative of the great science of medicine, although he has retired from its active practice, he still takes a philanthropic interest in humanitarian progress and public affairs and devotes much of his time to reading and research.

A native of New Jersey, Samuel Strock was born at Flemington on February 9, 1857, the son of the Rev. James T. Strock, born in Philadelphia, long honored for his faithful work in the Methodist ministry, who died in the harness in 1881; his mother, who passed away at Flemington in 1857, was Miss Keziah Lamb before her marriage, a native of Philadelphia and a descendant of one of the earliest families that settled in that city. Grandmother Lamb was a Matlack, one of the noted Quaker families, who despite their religious beliefs, served in the war of the Revolution. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. James T. Strock, six of them growing to maturity, Samuel Strock being the youngest of the family.

He took the preparatory course of study at Wyoming Seminary, and for a couple of years was a student in the Pennsylvania State College. Then he matriculated in the University of Vermont and was graduated from its medical department with the class of '89, with the M.D. degree. He practiced at Lake Placid, N. Y., and while there he took a post-graduate course in the New York Post-Graduate College, where so many advantages were open to him.

On October 11, 1892, Dr. Strock was married to Miss Elizabeth Bogart Perry, and one child, Samuel Cornelius, was born to them, living however, to be but two years of age. Mrs. Strock, who was born at Bridgeport, Conn., received her education at Pennsylvania State College; she was the daughter of Rev. Talmon C. Perry, a graduate of Yale College and also of Princeton Theological Seminary, and for many years a minister in the Presbyterian Church. He was descended from an old New England family and was closely related to Commodore Perry, the hero of Lake Erie. Mrs. Strock's mother, Sarah Conger Clark, before her marriage, came of old Knickerbocker stock who were the original settlers of New Amsterdam.

To satisfy his desire for the enjoyment of the out-door life and the grandeur of the West, Dr. Strock, accompanied by his wife, came to California in 1902 and located at Santa Ana on a five-acre ranch; the same year he purchased thirty-six acres in Santa Ana Canyon, one and a half miles north of Olive, which was then a stubble field. This land he has brought to a high state of cultivation, setting out Valencia oranges and walnuts. He has since disposed of part of this and to the balance he is giving most excellent care.

Notwithstanding the active part he takes in horticultural development, Dr. Strock still finds time for intellectual pursuits. Intensely interested in literature, his spare moments are taken up with a wide range of reading, and during these years he has accumulated a large, well-selected library, to which he is constantly adding. Well informed on important questions of the day, he is an interesting conversationalist, and he stands high in the esteem of the community as a neighbor and a citizen.

GEORGE PAUL ELTISTE.—A far-seeing and optimistic young man of remarkable energy, whose "hustling" spirit of enterprise, contagious to others, has brought well-merited success, is George Paul Eltiste, the well-known horticulturist. He was born in Phillipsburg, Phillips County, Kans., on September 7, 1892, the son of M. Eltiste, and the eldest of six children, all of whom are living. He was reared on a farm in Kansas, and attended the local public schools.

In August, 1906, Mr. Eltiste came out to California and settled in Orange County; and being still in his teens, he continued his schooling, topping off with a thorough course at the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana. Then he commenced to work for J. C. Williams in his implement store, and after that in a blacksmith shop, where he learned the trade. He next formed a partnership with Chris Ruehle, under the firm name of Ruehle & Eltiste, and they conducted their business very successfully at their shop on North Glassell Street.

Selling out his interest, Mr. Eltiste engaged in ranching and took care of his father's ranch of twenty-three acres. It was then only partly set out, and he finished the planting; and he conducted it for four years. Then he bought three acres of Valencia oranges on East Walnut Street, to which he added by purchase two acres adjoining and later ten acres more, making him owner of fifteen acres in a body. The ten acres he has planted to Valencia oranges, and the five to lemons. He uses an International tractor in the operation of the two farms, and otherwise employs up-to-date machinery and methods. He belongs to the Central Lemon Association, and is an equally live wire in the Santiago Orange Growers Association.

At Orange, on June 14, 1916, Mr. Eltiste was married to Miss Bertha Schmetgen, a native of Orange and the daughter of George Schmetgen, the local orange grower now retired. Two children have blessed the union—Clarence and Evelyn; and with their parents they attend the Lutheran Church. Mr. Eltiste is a member of the Lutheran Men's Club. In national politics, he is a Republican, but locally is independent and is always interested in promoting the highest American civic ideals.

CARL O. HEIM.—An excellent young man representing one of the good German-American families of Orange, who is rapidly forging ahead as a successful rancher and orange and walnut grower, is Carl O. Heim, of Olive, who married a lady from one of the best families in the social and business circles of Orange. Their home, therefore, on the Anaheim Boulevard, is a happy center of boundless hospitality.

He was born at Bloomington, Ill., on September 13, 1878, the son of Herman F. and Augusta (Mueller) Heim, now retired ranchers at Olive. His father was then a laboring man working at Bloomington, but he later removed to Allen County, Kans., and there bought a farm. When Carl was six years old, the family came west to California; and in 1884 settled at Orange, where Herman Heim worked around for other persons, while he rented land for himself.

Carl grew up on such a rented farm south of Orange, and when twenty years of age engaged to work for C. Lehman, then an expert auditor, on his ranch on Tustin

Geo. Ells

Avenue, east of the Santa Ana Cemetery. At the end of two years, however, he went to the Santa Fe Railroad as a section hand, and next became a clerk in the grocery department of Ehlen and Grote's department store in Orange.

During the ten and a half years when he was clerking for this well-known and progressive firm, he married Miss Emma Grote, a daughter of his employer, Henry Grote, and a general social favorite; and afterward came up to Olive where, for three years, he worked on his father's walnut and orange ranch of twenty-four acres. During the next two years, he maintained a partnership with his brother Albert, and together they managed the home ranch.

In June, 1919, in partnership with his brother-in-law, Alfred Huhn, Mr. Heim bought a Valencia orange orchard of eleven acres, one and a half miles to the south of Olive on the Olive Boulevard; and this ranch Mr. Heim is now operating. He is both a stockholder and director in the Mutual Orange Distributors Association at Olive, which has its own well-equipped packing house, and is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Olive as well as of the California Fig Nut Company of Orange.

Mr. and Mrs. Heim are the fortunate parents of four promising children: Alma is in the Orange high school; Elmer, Florence and Esther attend St. Paul's school at Olive. He and his family are members of St. Paul's Lutheran Church at Olive of which Mr. Heim is a trustee. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Heim is first, last and all the time an American and a "booster" for Olive and Orange County.

PETER D. HAX.—A thoroughly progressive, public-spirited man of business affairs, who has attained to an enviable degree of popularity and possessing a wide and powerful influence, is Peter D. Hax, of the Stein Fassel and Hax Mercantile Company of Fullerton. He was born at Saginaw, Mich., on April 13, 1881, the son of Peter Hax, now deceased, who had married Miss Catherine Spain.

After spending his boyhood in Michigan, during which time he attended the grammar and high schools, he engaged in accounting and followed it until coming West in 1907.

On locating at Fullerton, he became secretary and treasurer of the Stern and Goodman Mercantile Company, the oldest concern of the kind in Fullerton, with which he remained for eleven years. In October, 1918, the Stein Fassel and Hax Mercantile Company was formed, and they have grown so rapidly that they now have three branch stores, and employ fifteen people.

A Republican, with broad views as to the relation of party politics to local issues, Mr. Hax is a member of the Knights of Pythias and also of the Elks. Among his out-of-door pleasures is a good game of baseball.

H. A. STEWART.—An energetic, progressive and very successful rancher whose well-founded judgment and conscientiousness have always commended him to his fellow-men, who stand for uprightness and integrity of purpose, is Henry A. Stewart, the walnut grower living one mile southwest of San Juan Capistrano, where with experienced methods and almost perfect system in his various operations, he gets results such as ought to gratify and reward anyone. His self-made career has given him a self-reliance of great value not merely to himself, but to those neighborhood interests in which his progressive influence is always felt. He has brought his ranch up to a high state of cultivation, and there enjoys a good home presided over by an accomplished, devoted wife.

He was born at Lone Pine, Inyo County, Cal., on February 10, 1873, the son of Henry B. Stewart, a native of Painted Post, N. Y., who early came to California with his brother, driving a mule team across the great plains, and settling for a while at Marysville. From there he removed to Lone Pine, where he entered into partnership with John B. Denari, one of several brothers who had made their mark as pioneer merchants in booming San Francisco when that town had plenty of gold with which to buy things and needed someone of intelligence, honesty and enterprise to supply the necessities of life. Messrs. Denari and Stewart maintained the best store at Lone Pine, and it was while they were doing business together that Mr. Stewart met Miss Catherine Calnan, the daughter of John Calnan, a native of Cork, Ireland, who came to Canada and there he married Miss Annie McLellan. Mr. Calnan was in the South when the Civil War started and he served under General Stonewall Jackson; was taken prisoner at the second battle of Bull Run and paroled to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he was killed by the fall of a limb from a tree during a storm. His widow married again to Norman McLean and the family came to California and Lone Pine, where Catherine Calnan met and later married Mr. Stewart.

When Henry Stewart was only a year old, his parents removed north to Washington Territory, and there the father, a most industrious man whose health had become impaired, died and left three children, two of whom are living today. One is the successful horticulturist of whom we are writing; the other is his sister, Annie, now Mrs. Grohe of Salem, Ore. Owing to this break in their family, Henry's educational advantages were very limited, and he has since had to reach out and acquire what schooling he could get from reading, observation and contact with the world.

With his widowed mother and the other children, he came south again, to San Francisco in 1879, and there Mrs. Stewart married her husband's former partner, Mr. Denari, a native of Italy who was born near Genoa, of an old-established Mediterranean family. As has been stated, these two gentlemen were once partners, in the store at Lone Pine, so Mr. Denari was able, to a degree not usually possible, to enter into the life of the bereaved lady and to afford her the best of companionship and support. When, therefore, Mr. and Mrs. Denari came still further south, to San Juan Capistrano, where Mr. Denari was to become an extensive landowner and farmer, giving up his mercantile interests, the son and stepson came with them. Mr. Denari was elected the first justice of the peace at San Juan Capistrano, but he also continued, with the able assistance of his wife, to farm; and Henry worked on the ranch and very naturally grew up a farmer, too.

At Santa Ana, on July 12, 1911, he was married to Miss Ruth EnEarl, a native of Pipestone, Minn., and the daughter of James H. and Elizabeth (Shaubut) EnEarl, who settled in San Diego County, when Ruth was only five years old. They removed in time to Anaheim, and from the excellent high school of that pioneer town, the young lady was duly graduated. Two children have blessed this union of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart. The elder is a boy, Henry A. Stewart, Jr., and the younger is a girl, Virginia. James H. EnEarl served in a New York regiment in the Civil War, serving until the close of the war. As a young man he went to Minnesota where he was married. He and his wife now live in Anaheim. Their children are Ruth, Mrs. Stewart; Katharine, Mrs. Chamberlain of Chicago; Arnold served in the aviation section, U. S. Army, World War, and is now in business in Fullerton. Mr. Stewart owns some 300 hundred acres of excellent Orange County land, of which thirty-two acres are in full-bearing walnuts. He has 220 acres of lima beans, twenty acres of blackeyed beans, while twenty-eight acres are devoted to pasture, yards, etc.

In national politics Mr. Stewart is a Republican, and it goes without saying that he is both an admirer of and a warm friend of Hiram Johnson, ex-governor and U. S. senator, and the choice of many for president. As a public-spirited citizen, Mr. Stewart has sought to advance the interests of the township and county in which he has lived, in every way possible, and he has always labored in particular for better roads, believing that good highways have much to do with the progress of a nation.

LYMAN AND MABEL VANCE TREMAIN.—A distinguished Orange County couple who are "one hundred per cent Americans," are Lyman and Mabel Vance Tremain. Mrs. Tremain is the earliest and perhaps the most successful osteopath in the county, and her husband, Lyman Tremain, is a well-known railway man from the East. He is well connected with the best of New York State families of lawyers, financiers and other professional and business men, and for years held responsible positions with leading railroads. In their cozy bungalow on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard they are at present rustivating contentedly and so enjoying a much-needed rest.

Lyman Tremain was born at Albany, N. Y., and is a grandson of the late Lyman Tremain, judge of the New York Court of Appeals. His mother was Eliza Martin, a sister of Edward S. Martin, the editor of "Life." She was born and reared in western New York, near Auburn. Mr. Tremain's father was Grenville Tremain, of the well known law firm of Peckham and Tremain, of Albany, N. Y., this partner, Rufus W. Peckham, afterwards becoming justice of the United States Supreme Court. A maternal grandfather of Lyman Tremain was Enos Thompson Throop Martin, a nephew of Grenville Tremain, which occurred when Lyman was seven years old, the widow, with his children, moved up to her father's home, on a farm near Auburn, N. Y. Her four children were as follows: Helen is the wife of William B. Anderson, an attorney in New York City; Lyman, of whom we write; Emily is in the U. S. Public Health Service and has an honorable record for service in France; Mabel is the wife of Robert S. Brewster, a son of Benjamin Brewster, who was John D. Rockefeller's first partner at Cleveland and later became chairman of the executive committee of the Standard Oil Company.

After his father's death, Lyman Tremain grew up on the farm near Auburn, N. Y., later attending the Quincy School at Geneva, N. Y., and then the Groton School at Groton, Mass., and at the latter place he was prepared for Harvard. He was early distinguished as an athlete, especially as a football player, and so enjoyed prestige from the day when he entered Harvard. He matriculated at Harvard in 1889, with the rest of the class of '93, and there pursued the classical course. At the end of two years, however, he entered the railroad business with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Philadelphia, and for twelve years served in the traffic department. He rose to be contracting agent, and made a wide acquaintance with the leading Eastern manufacturers and shippers. Through the influence of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company he secured a position as traffic manager of the Corn Products Refining Company of New York City and served them steadily for six years, after which he resigned and came to California in April, 1909, and went into the traffic claim department of the Santa Fe Railroad, working out from their Los Angeles office. In the fall of 1910, with his cousin, James Rochester, he set out an apple orchard at Harper, Orange County, the first commercial apple orchard there.

On October 10, 1912, Mr. Tremain was married to Dr. Mabel Vance, who was the first regularly licensed osteopathic woman physician and surgeon at Santa Ana. She was born at Mulberry Grove, Bond County, Ill., the daughter of Rev. Thomas Vance, a minister in the Christian Church. He had married Melvina Elam, whose family belonged to the old settlers of that county and owned valuable coal lands there. Of their five children, Mrs. Tremain's twin sister, Mrs. May Reeve, lives at La Mirada; Dr. A. T. Vance is practicing at Los Angeles; Anna is the wife of James R. Coxen, state superintendent of vocational training at Laramie, Wyo.; Joy is the wife of William F. Wakefield of Fresno. When Mabel Vance was twelve years old her parents moved to Indianapolis, Ind., and there she attended the high school and Butler University. She pursued a general scientific course, and thereby laid the foundation for her excellent professional work. She then entered Dr. A. T. Still's School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Mo., from which she was graduated in 1905, with the degree of D.O., when she located at Oneonta, N. Y., and for two years was successfully engaged in practice. In the meantime her people had moved to California and so she also came to the land of gold and sunshine on the Pacific and located at Santa Ana in 1907, and in twelve years has built up a lucrative practice. She is a charter member of the Orange County Osteopathic Society and also a member of the California State Osteopathic Society.

About nine or ten years ago Dr. Tremain wisely purchased five acres of land on Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, about two miles northwest of Olive, which they have improved and set to Valencia oranges which have now come into bearing; and in this beautiful orchard they have built their residence and now make their home.

Mr. Tremain, besides being an experienced railway manager and a successful horticulturist, is a fine vocalist, possessing a rare tenor voice, very pleasing to the ear, and he is a member of the Episcopal Church choir at Santa Ana. In many ways Mr. and Mrs. Tremain have identified themselves with the most notable movements for the welfare and uplift of society, and being devoted to Orange County, never tire of singing its praises and contribute in some way to its development every day.

FREDERICK CHARLES HEZMALHALCH.—The efficiency of the Orange County public service is reflected in the life and work of such well-equipped and faithful officials as Frederick Charles Hezmalhalch, the city clerk of Fullerton, who was born at Leeds, England, an ancient town probably once a Roman station, the largest and most flourishing city of Yorkshire, on the Aire, and the metropolis of the woolen manufacture, on August 3, 1874. His father, Thomas Hezmalhalch, was born in Paterson, N. J., and educated in Chicago. He became superintendent of his father's foundry and during the Civil War moulded shells for the Government. He prepared for a missionary in Leeds, England, and there he was married. In 1884 the family came to Glendale, Cal. Later he went to South Africa accompanied by his wife, who was his able assistant and there they did splendid work and had a very interesting experience.

They now make their home at Monrovia. The mother was in maidenhood Miss Charlotte Best, a native of Leeds, and is a woman of much ability. They were the parents of nine children; four grew up and are living, the eldest of whom is the subject of this sketch. When ten years old Fred C. came to California with his parents and attended both the grammar and high schools at Glendale, while he also enjoyed certain private instruction. He was a member of Troop D, Cavalry, at Los Angeles when the Spanish-American War broke out and he enlisted in Company F, Seventh California Regiment of Infantry, serving until the close of the war. He then began the study of music—both vocal and instrumental—and in time became a teacher of vocal music with his studio in Blanchard Hall; for three years of this time he was the solo tenor in St. Vibiana's Cathedral.

Giving up the profession of music he engaged in business in Glendale until December, 1907, when he located at Fullerton and for two years had charge of the Harris ranch, after which for three years he was in the grocery and meat business and then with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for two years, until April, 1916, when he was elected city clerk of Fullerton, being reelected in 1918 and 1920, the last time for a four-year term, filling the position with much credit and entire satisfaction to all. During the late war Mr. Hezmalhalch took an active part in instructing and drilling the boys who were called to the colors and served acceptably as first lieutenant in the California Military Reserve, Company Seventy-eight, and also took part in all the bond and war drives.

At Los Angeles August 23, 1903, occurred the marriage of Mr. Hezmalhalch to Miss Lottie B. Harris, a native of Orange, the daughter of Chas. T. and Elida (Hale) Harris, pioneers of Orange, of which union have been born the several children: Frederick H., Lillian E., Nance E., Robert and Charles (twins), Jean O and William H. Hezmalhalch. The family attend the Presbyterian Church, where Mr. Hezmalhalch has charge of the music. He belongs to the Odd Fellows, has passed through all chairs, and is a Master Mason, a member of Fullerton Lodge and Chapter. He is an Independent in politics, is fond of out-door sports, and is an adept in fencing. Public-spirited by nature, Mr. Hezmalhalch could hardly fail, even were he not an incumbent of office, to take a deep interest in the rapid and successful development of so favored a section of the Golden State as Orange County.

FREDERIC JOSEPH WAGNER.—Among the ablest machinists in all of Orange County must be rated Frederic Joseph Wagner, who resides with his devoted wife at 306½ East Third Street, Santa Ana, having been born at New Orleans, La., on October 6, 1872. His father was Joseph Wagner, and he had married Miss Marie Hagstette. He came from Alsace-Lorraine, and has been a well-known transfer-man in New Orleans for many years. There Frederic grew up, and as the Hagstettes were machinists from "way back," when fifteen years of age he was apprenticed at the machinist trade in New Orleans. He then branched out as an employe of different sugar mills in Louisiana and served them as both master mechanic and chief engineer.

After working in many of the leading cane-sugar factories of Louisiana, in 1899 he moved north to Minneapolis, to accept the very responsible post of chief engineer of the Minnesota Beet Sugar Factory. In 1904, he set up the machinery for the Chippewa Sugar Company at Chippewa Falls, Wis., from which town he went to Riverside, Ill., and put up the machinery in the Charles Pope Sugar Works, continuing with that concern until he came out to California in 1908.

Coming to Orange County in that year, he installed the machinery for the Southern California Sugar Company plant in the Delhi precinct, and remained with that company for four years as chief engineer and master mechanic. In 1913, he came over to the factory of the Santa Ana Sugar Company, in the same precinct, was made master mechanic, and has occupied that position ever since. The relative importance of the two important and successful factories may be seen from the output of the former, 600 tons of beets a day, and that of the latter, 1,000 tons a day. The intricacy of the highly-specialized machinery naturally calls for unusual ability and wide experience.

The Santa Ana Sugar Factory is said, indeed, to be the best-equipped to produce sugar in the most sanitary and economical manner of any beet-sugar factory in California. It was erected in 1912; the size of the main building is 66 by 266 feet; the length of all buildings is 971 feet; and they are equipped with American machinery. Two hundred twenty-six independent farmers grew beets for this factory in 1912, and the area of their beet-patches aggregated 9,061 acres.

At New Orleans, Mr. Wagner was married to Miss Fredericker Silbernagel, a native of New Orleans, and one child has been granted them—a son, William J., also an expert machinist, who is conducting, however, a general merchandise store at Delhi. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner live at Santa Ana, and attend the Catholic Church. Mr. Wagner is a member of the Knights of Columbus and also of the Elks.

CARL J. GRINNELL.—That it is not necessary for one to have lived long in Orange County to partake enthusiastically of its progressive spirit and to wish to contribute in any way possible to its further development is demonstrated by Carl J. Grinnell, the successful citrus grower of East Orangethorpe Avenue, who has a fine grove and keeps it in excellent condition. He was born near Lansing, Mich., on July 25, 1886, the son of Theron J. and Cora (Craft) Grinnell, natives of Michigan, whose parents came from New York; they were farmers and raised grain, cattle and all kinds of stock, on their farm, where they still make their home. Carl J. is the oldest of their two children and was graduated from the Mason high school at Mason, Mich. He then matriculated at the State Agricultural College at Lansing and was graduated with the class of '10, with the degree of M.E. after which he took up the practical end of mechanical engineering with the Detroit Edison Illuminating Company.

During his engagement there, Mr. Grinnell was married at Kalamazoo on October 26, 1911, to Miss Jessie Dean, born in Rockford, Iowa, a daughter of Rev. J. O. and Helen Dean, who had lived in various communities in the Middle States, as her father was a Baptist clergyman; he is now deceased, while his widow resides at Kalamazoo. She received her training first in the public schools of Michigan and then at the State Normal in Kalamazoo, and for several years she was an instructor in both the graded and high schools at Fowlerville and Pinckney, Mich. After his marriage, Mr. Grinnell spent three and a half years with his father on the home farm near Mason. In November, 1916, he came out to California, and purchased ten acres on East Orangethorpe Avenue. Walnut and orange trees were already interset there, but Mr. Grinnell took out the walnuts and put in Valencias instead. He brought the land under the Anaheim Union Water Company, and in 1917 built his home on the ranch. He markets his oranges through the Placentia Orange Growers Association.

Wm. H. H. H. H.

Mr. and Mrs. Grinnell are members of the Baptist Church of Fullerton, and also of the Eastern Star. Mr. Grinnell who was made a Mason in the Mason (Mich.) Lodge, No. 70, A. F. & A. M., is now a member of Fullerton Lodge, No. 339, F. & A. M.; Fullerton Chapter No. 90, and Santa Ana Council, R. & S. M. In local politics he is an Independent, preferring to vote for the men and measures irrespective of party.

JOHN OBORENE.—England has given many a first-rate settler to the United States and especially has she furnished her sons and daughters for the great work of developing the commonwealth of California, so wondrously rich in her resources. Among these Britons to come here and cast their fortunes in with thousands of others willing to wage in order to win is John Osborne, the successful and well-known cement contractor of Fullerton who was born in Somersetshire, on October 14, 1867, the son of George and Amy (Higgins) Osborne, who were the parents of thirteen children. From the boyhood experience of our subject, who was the third child born to the enterprising couple, it is fair to assume that the number in the family was a lucky one, albeit John got more schooling from the outside world than he did from the class room for he had to go to work as a boy, and that much he certainly learned—how to work.

When only fourteen years of age, the lad crossed the ocean to Canada and for two, and a half years stopped at Woodstock, Ontario; then, crossing the line into the States, he lived in Michigan until 1904, where he worked in timber camps and at farming. In that year he came west to California, and from the first located at Fullerton, although for two years he was in Santa Ana.

For the past eight years, Mr. Osborne has been contracting for all kinds of cement work, and while employing five men or more, he has built most of the Fullerton sidewalks, and among other buildings "poured" by him is the local jail—as ornate as it is substantial and safe. Besides his home place he is developing a five-acre orange grove near Olinda.

On January 11, 1900, at Detroit, Mich., Mr. Osborne was married to Miss Susie Chovin, a native of Detroit, Mich., and the daughter of Frank A. and Hannah Chovin, farmers near Detroit. She is a member of the Methodist Church, while Mr. Osborne clings to his Anglican, or Episcopal Church. Three children—all girls—have blessed their union; and they bear the names of Mary E., Mildred E. and Edith M. Mr. Osborne is a Republican, and also a Woodman of the World and a member of the Protected Home Circle of Detroit, Mich. He and his good wife are deeply interested in Orange County, and ready to cooperate in any civic movement for the uplift of the community, and the furtherance of its progress.

LORENZO A. HAMPTON.—A promising young rancher whose scientific knowledge is likely to assist him in more satisfactorily solving some of the problems of horticulture, is Lorenzo A. Hampton, a native of Iowa, where he was born near West Bend in Buena Vista County on August 13, 1885, the son of Lindley E. Hampton, a farmer who raised stock and also followed general agriculture. He had married Ruia Swartwout, and they removed to Palisade, Colo., when Lorenzo was only eight years of age. He attended the schools of that town, and later graduated from the Denver high school. Lindley Hampton had a peach grove of twenty acres near Palisade, and this had to be irrigated, a work in which father and son both joined.

Once having finished his studies, Lorenzo Hampton came to California in 1906 and studied at the University of Southern California, from which he was duly graduated in 1911 with the degree of A.B. He made a specialty of chemistry and was employed as a chemist by the engineer department of the city of Los Angeles. At the end of a year, he left municipal service, continuing in the line of his professional work with the Federal Chemical Fertilizing Company.

In 1906 his parents came out to California to live, and the following year they purchased a ranch of twenty acres on East Orangethorpe Avenue. Part of the ranch was planted to walnuts, but he took out the walnuts and planted orange trees instead. Now all of the ranch but one acre—in walnuts—is devoted to the culture of oranges. Lorenzo A. Hampton spent three years on the home ranch, from 1912 to 1915, and then he purchased five acres from his father. That same year he returned to the University of Southern California, after which he taught in Burbank for a couple of years. His next move brought him to the Los Angeles high school, and there he is at present, one of the faculty. He teaches chemistry, and in his spare time looks after his five acres of Valencias. He has a private pumping plant and it commands thirty-five inches of water. He is a member of the American Chemical Society and aims to keep abreast of the times.

On June 15, 1911, Mr. Hampton was married to Miss Katherine Twombly, a native of Little Rock, Ark., and the daughter of Sidney S. and Etta Twombly. Her father was professor of agriculture in the University of Arkansas, and her home surroundings had been of the best. Mr. Twombly was made a professor in the University of Utah, and to that state they removed. They came to California in 1895, and having settled in Orange County, purchased a ranch on East Chapman Avenue, Fullerton. There were twenty-eight acres in the ranch, and there they have lived ever since. Two children blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Hampton. The elder is Gordon Francis, and the younger, Katherine Elizabeth. In national political affairs Mr. Hampton is a Republican, but in local movements he does not hesitate to support heartily the best men and the best measures, regardless of party.

HUGH CONGER THOMSON.—A native son, full of the genuine spirit of Americanism, and an ingenious workman of valuable initiative, capable of pointing the way to others and leading in aggressive, bold movements, is Hugh Conger Thomson, the son of Hugh T. Thomson, the well-known and popular manager of the Jotham Bixby estate in Orange County. He was born in Villa Park, on July 6, 1893, and at that place attended the excellent graded school. Later, in 1909, he put in a very profitable year at Throop College, Pasadena, when he entered the employ of Brintnell's ranch at Guadalupe, Cal. He was also employed, for a year, in 1911, by the Jotham Bixby Company, but the next year he became zanjero for the Gray Tract Well Company.

In 1918, Mr. Thomson became foreman for the Jotham Bixby Company, in which position he had the responsibility of improving and developing new acreage. In the fall of 1919, he gave up his position there to try farming for himself, and he continues to ranch on his home place in Villa Park, where he has five and a half acres of Valencia oranges and lemons seven years old.

On November 21, 1910, Mr. Thomson was married to Miss Edyth Popplewell, a schoolmate of days at Villa Park; and three children have blessed their union—Barbara Edyth, Emma Nancy and Hugh Conger, Jr. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Thomson is at all times ready to do nonpartisan "boosting" for the community and county in which he lives. He is also fond of sport in the open, and enjoys hunting trips to Bear Valley and other natural preserves known to the real sportsman.

WILLIAM BAKER.—A successful manufacturer and business man, who has proven of great service to many in need of expert work in the mechanical field, is William Baker, proprietor of the Santa Ana Machine Works, at the corner of First and Sycamore streets. He was born in Ness City, Ness County, Kans., on July 10, 1885, the son of James H. Baker, a native of Ohio, who had married Susan Barker, born in Clearmont, Ky.; they were married in Kentucky and removed to Ness County, Kans., where he was a stockman. In 1904 they brought the family to Southern California and engaged in stock raising, and now reside in Escondido, San Diego County.

William attended the public schools in Kansas until he was fifteen years of age, and during this time helped his father on the ranch, riding the range and driving teams. Breaking away from home, he went to Yuma, Ariz., in 1901, arriving with $1.65 as his entire capital, and for seven and a half years was in the mechanical department of the U. S. Reclamation Service, learning the trade of machinist. Next he put in a year and a half in the oil fields at Santa Maria, Cal., and then went to Douglas, Ariz., where he worked for the El Paso & South Western Railroad. After that he was master mechanic for the Copper Queen Company at Tombstone for three and a half years. He put in eight months at Bisbee, Ariz., still following his trade.

On April 28, 1918, Mr. Baker came to Santa Ana and bought, from E. G. Jenks, his present machine shop, in which he installed new machinery, until it is now a fine establishment, thoroughly modern in every respect, whose equipment for first-class work is such that it serves patrons all over Orange County, and as far as Tacoma, Seattle, Chicago, St. Paul, Minn., and even to the Hawaiian Islands. He gives employment to quite a number of skilled mechanics, and the constant increase in his trade has made it clear that he must soon considerably enlarge his place and equipment. He does all kinds of repair work on farm implements and pumping plants, and among special appliances of his own, makes a specialty, as a partner of S. E. Lane of the firm of Lane and Baker, of the manufacture of the Lane Rod and Tool Coupling for oil well use. The object is a coupling for connecting, detachably, two sections so that they will not be subject to accidental disconnections; and in attending to first-class machine work of all kinds Mr. Baker has been more than successful. He also manufactures eye benders for auto springs for the Kenyon Eye Bender Manufacturing Company, as well as others.

On January 18, 1912, he was married to Miss Camilla Venneman, born in Chicago, Ill., a charming lady and a valuable helpmate. Both Mr. and Mrs. Baker are fond of outdoor life, and in leisure hours make the most of residence in a state unrivalled for its climate, and in a progressive city with the most improved means of communication with the outside world. He is a member of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, and fraternally is a member of Santa Ana Lodge of Elks.

ABE PRITCHARD.—A man of vigorous activities, who knows how to persevere and to give his courage and unusual energy to the accomplishment of the task at hand, Abe Pritchard has for the past fifteen years ably guided the affairs of the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and his wise counsel and efficient execution have greatly aided in its upbuilding. A thoroughly wide-awake, admirably equipped organization, it has done much to advance the individual interests of those engaged in citrus fruit culture, and which has thereby also forwarded the best and most permanent interests of the Fullerton district. During the season, when the two packing houses of which Mr. Pritchard has charge are running to their full capacity, they employ 225 people, so that their operations form one of those enterprises for which any ambitious and progressive community would be glad to make a substantial bid.

A Canadian by birth, Mr. Pritchard was born at Kazabazua, Province of Quebec, on January 17, 1865, the son of James Pritchard, a farmer, who had married Miss Eliza Steenson, by whom he had ten children, nine sons and a daughter, of whom Abe Pritchard is next to the youngest and the only one in California. He was educated in the local schools of his birthplace, and assisted his parents on the farm. After the death of his parents he engaged in farming on the old home place in partnership with his brother Robert, until 1900, when they dissolved partnership, as Mr. Pritchard had decided to try his fortune on the Pacific Coast. Coming direct to Orange County, Cal., in 1900 he liked it so well that he decided to locate here permanently, and fortunately both for himself and the young town, Mr. Pritchard early located at Fullerton, where he found work in packing houses. In time he became employed with the Benchley Fruit Company, and in 1905 he was made manager of the Placentia Orange Growers Association, their house then being located on the Santa Fe Railroad. In 1910 they built a packing house at Placentia, and in 1917, completed the large packing house on East Commonwealth Avenue, Fullerton, Mr. Pritchard being manager of both. They are both models of efficiency, being equipped with the most modern machinery in the line of the orange trade. In 1905, Mr. Pritchard's first year as manager, the association shipped 135 cars of citrus fruit, and in 1919 the shipment reached 1,280 cars, a wonderful growth.

Mr. Pritchard's many-sided business associations have awakened in him an intense interest in the welfare and the future prospects of Orange County, and just as in matters of national political import he seeks to do his full duty as a citizen under the leadership of the Republican party, so in an equally nonpartisan manner he is among the first to put his shoulder to the wheel and to help along any worthy movement likely to hasten the day when Fullerton "comes to her own." He is particularly active in this regard through the channels of the Fullerton Board of Trade and the Fullerton Club, being a charter member of the latter organization.

On November 12, 1912, at Los Angeles, Mr. Pritchard was married to Miss Bertha Wilhite, who was born at Dripping Springs, near Austin, Texas, and three daughters have come to complete the family circle and to further gladden their lives: Carolyn, Marian Louise and Katherine Elizabeth.

BENJAMIN H. COLE.—Numbered among the energetic and successful young business men of Olive is the efficient manager of the Olive Heights Citrus Association, Benjamin Harrison Cole, who has resided at Olive for the past eight years. Mr. Cole is a native of New Albany, Ind., born August 21, 1888, and is the son of Joseph, a disabled Union soldier, and Harriet F. (Moore) Cole, also natives of Indiana, where the father followed the calling of a merchant. In 1899, when Benjamin was a lad of eleven, the family removed to California, settling at Upland in San Bernardino County, where the father died in 1905, survived by his widow, who is still living at Upland.

Benjamin H. acquired a grammar school education and at the age of twelve went to work in the Upland packing house. He is the fourth child in order of birth in the parental family of five children. The oldest of the family, Will, is employed as ticket agent by the Pacific Electric Company at Long Beach; Laura is the wife of Guy Bodenheimer, who is employed by the horticultural commissioner of Los Angeles; Alma is the wife of Charles Perkin, a rural mail carrier at Upland, Cal., and Roy, the youngest of the family, is with the North Ontario Packing Company at Los Angeles. Benjamin Cole resided at Upland for thirteen years and at the age of sixteen became foreman of the packing house, continuing in the company's employ until he came to Olive for a change of climate on account of his health, eight years ago. He was in the employ of the Growers Fruit Company at Olive, and in May, 1915, accepted the position as foreman of the Olive Heights Citrus Association, succeeding Mr. White as secretary and manager of the company in 1916. The company handles the product of 700 acres of fruit, principally Valencia oranges, and market their product in New York and Philadelphia, shipping forty carloads of fruit a year, aggregating $375,000 worth of fruit. The present officers are Dr. Thomas, president; C. A. Palmer, vice-president; B. H. Cole, secretary and manager, and K. V. Wolff, treasurer. The Association's packing house is located on a switch of the Santa Fe Railway and is 70x120 feet in dimension, with a capacity of four carloads of fruit per day. The entire process of taking care of the fruit, excepting refrigeration, is done here.

In 1907 Mr. Cole established domestic ties by his marriage with Miss Mary Barton of Upland, Cal. They have two children—Marian and Robert B. Mr. Cole resides on a twenty-five-acre orange and walnut grove on the Olive-Orange Boulevard, in which he has a half interest. Fraternally he is affiliated with Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, where he is justly popular.

GUSTAVE HEDSTROM.—Much credit is due to those who have succeeded in life solely by their own efforts, and among these, Gustave Hedstrom, the enterprising and up-to-date orange and walnut grower on the Garden Grove-Anaheim Boulevard, is classed as a leader and is in every way worthy of the success he has achieved. What he has in the way of worldly goods has been the result of years of toil, and in all his labors he has had the hearty cooperation of his wife, who shares with him the esteem of all who know them.

A native of Sweden, Gustave Hedstrom was born on May 2, 1858, the son of Charles and Sarah Hedstrom, both natives of that country, whose family consisted of seven children, only four of whom are still living. Gustave received his schooling in his native country and in 1879, thinking to be able to better his condition in the new world, left home and upon arriving in America located for a short time in Knoxville, Tenn. Later he spent six months in Pittsburgh, Pa., then located in Trenton, N. J., for a year. He was looking about for a place in which to cast anchor, and in 1881, he went west to North Dakota, where he took up a homestead and for the four years that he was proving up on his property he engaged in railroad work to make what money was necessary for a living until he could raise some crops. When he disposed of his farm he removed to Joliet, Ill., and for fifteen years he was engaged in the mercantile business, meeting with success in his venture.

He had acquired considerable information about California and its opportunities and he decided to cast in his lot with this commonwealth; accordingly he disposed of his holdings in the East and in 1893 located in Los Angeles. In his younger days he had worked at the trade of carpenter and after his arrival here he contracted for buildings in Huntington Park for four years. He recalls the time when he was offered a lot where now stands the great Hamburger building for $400. He was to pay down $10 and to pay $10 per month till it was paid for, but on account of nothing in the line of improvements in that locality and being practically in the country, he could not see the proposition in the light of a good investment. Orange groves were then scattered throughout the district south of Tenth Street. He worked about Los Angeles at his trade until settling on his twenty-acre ranch, which he bought in 1906, and ever since locating on the place he has spent considerable time at his trade, in all working about twenty-five years at it in Los Angeles and Orange counties.

The place he owns was formerly the property of A. M. Nutt and was appropriately called the Nutwood Ranch, which name is still in vogue, as Mr. Nutt set out the trees. Since becoming the owner of this valuable place, Mr. Hedstrom has added many innovations of labor-saving devices and uses electricity for his fine pumping plant, which has cost him over $5,000, also an automatic pumping device, and continues making improvements in his buildings and grounds until he has made a veritable "show place" of the ranch. The walnuts are interset with Valencia orange trees. He also owns a ranch in the Imperial Valley, which is being improved under his direction.

In 1885, at Joliet, Ill., Mr. Hedstrom and Miss Mathilda Johnson, a native of Sweden, were united in marriage and seven children have come to bless their union: G. Edward is running the Imperial Valley ranch; Jennie M.; Edith and Esther are both teaching school in Orange County; Carl G. took a post-graduate course at the University of California and is now teaching in the Anaheim high school. He served in the World War in the Naval Officers Training School at San Pedro and is still a member of the Naval Reserves; Helen and Grace are both attending the University of Redlands. The family are members of the Baptist Church. Mr. Hedstrom belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and to the Fraternal Aid Union; is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party and believes in cooperation, holding membership in both the Walnut Growers Association and the Orange Growers Fruit Exchange at Anaheim. In every enterprise that Mr. Hedstrom has engaged in he has met with success and he is now enjoying a well-earned rest after many years of toil. He and his family are highly esteemed by all who know them and they have an ever-widening circle of friends. As a progressive citizen and rancher, Mr. Hedstrom tries to make this place a desirable locality in which to invite settlers to help build up the county.

WAYMAN K. JOHNSON.—An experienced and ambitiously aggressive young farmer of much promise is Wayman K. Johnson, who is happily settled on a leased ranch two miles south of Irvine Station, where, having recently married, he is fixing up the buildings, and will soon have a comfortable, attractive home. He was born at Long Beach on June 9, 1900, and from his first year grew up on the famous San Joaquin Ranch. He attended the grade schools at Irvine, and for three years studied at the high school at Santa Ana. He was then compelled to abandon his books, but he has always been a good observer, of studious mind, so that he has already added much from practical experience with the world. He assisted his father on the farm, and when he was only seventeen he was his father's foreman and main assistant.

In 1920 he began farming for himself on the San Joaquin Ranch, and there he is working out his agricultural problems not far from the State highway. He is farming, all in all, 397 acres, sixty being devoted to the making of barley hay, another sixty to the growing of blackeye beans, and 250 acres to the ever-popular lima bean. Taking the greatest care to put into the earth only the best quality of seed, and giving unremitting attention thereafter to coaxing from the earth those superior results and fruits such as always gladden the heart of the tiller, it is almost a foregone conclusion that Mr. Johnson cannot fail to evolve crops of which any ranchman might be proud.

On October 6, 1919, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Jessie Huff, of Santa Ana, and a daughter of Nathan Huff of the same city. Congenial in their tastes and ideas, they are equally interested in making of their experience as Orange County ranchers only what Orange County guarantees to all who will work intelligently, and hope at the same time. Although young, Mr. Johnson seems familiar with most of the many sides of modern California ranching; and what he does not know or at once recall, the helpful intuition of his gifted young, but studious wife is likely at all times to supply.

REV. LOUIS PHILIPPE GENEST.—Among the accomplished and devoted clergy of Orange County who have done so much, through their natural gifts, their industry and unselfish labors, and their high ideals and farsightedness, both to make Southern California what it is as a desirable home place, and what it promises to be, more and more, as the golden years roll by, must be mentioned, and among the first, the Rev. Louis Philippe Genest, the pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church at Huntington Beach. He was born at Sherbrooke, Quebec, Canada, on September 14, 1890, the son of Arthur and Rose de Lima (Dussault) Genest, born in Quebec, whose parents came from France to Canada and were pioneers of Sherbrooke, Quebec. Reverend Genest's father was in the employ of the government civil service for many years until he was retired with a pension, and he and his estimable wife, now reside at the old home in comfortable circumstances.

Father Genest was educated, first at the school of the Brothers of the Sacred Heart, and then at the Seminary of St. Charles-Borromeo. At the former, he pursued the primary studies, and at the latter he received instruction in the classics and matters of theology, according to the teachings of the Catholic Church. Both of these fine institutions are at Sherbrooke, so that he was able, while studying, to remain amid surroundings altogether familiar and helpful in their congeniality to him. On June 29, 1915, he was ordained to the priesthood in the Cathedral at Sherbrooke by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Paul La Rocque, bishop of Sherbrooke, and then he was made assistant pastor of churches, first at Coaticook, then at Richmond, then Weedon, then Asbestos and finally at Wotton. For a few months, also, he was chaplain of Ursuline Convent at Stanstead, Quebec.

Owing to ill health, brought about by overwork in the devotion to his duty, Father Genest obtained leave of absence and came to California; and on January 1, 1920, he became resident pastor of St. Mary's Church at Huntington Beach. The people from Newport, East Newport and Balboa are also attended from Huntington Beach. Greatly to the satisfaction of the community, he took up the work here vigorously, and has endeavored from the first to make its advancement coincide with the expansion of the town itself—now one of the most promising settlements in Orange County. St. Mary's Catholic Church at Huntington Beach was established by and under the charge of Rev. J. A. Reardon of Long Beach. They first rented a building and remodeled it for their use, but in about 1912 they purchased the property they had under lease on the corner of Tenth and Orange streets, Huntington Beach. The first resident pastor was Rev. John Reynolds, then Father M. J. Slattery, and after him Rev. Henry O'Reilly; then came Rev. Francis Woodcutter, Rev. C. Breitkopf and Father Benson until the arrival of Father Genest, who has by his affability, scholarly attainments and kindness greatly endeared himself not only to the members of his congregation, but to all who know him. Aside from his duties as pastor he has found time to accept and fill the position of teacher of French at the Long Beach Catholic high school, a place he is filling with ability. About eighty families make up membership of the church, which is constantly growing, and which, now that Father Genest has put his hand to the helm, will be sure to increase in the healthiest manner.

CHARLES W. OLSON.—The right man in the right place has more than once proven to be Charles W. Olson, the efficient and popular foreman for the Santa Ana Sugar Company, who was born at Denver, Colo., on June 20, 1885, the son of Alfred and Carrie Olson. He was sent to school in Denver, for his parents, who came from Sweden, brought with them as a precious heritage, a high regard for education. They were pioneers in Colorado, and Alfred Olson was an engineer on the old Kansas Pacific, now called the Union Pacific Railroad. Charles W. Olson came to California in 1903, and worked for six months on a ranch west of Santa Ana. Then he returned to Colorado, and farmed north of Denver. He had 240 acres devoted to gardening and dairying, and was for ten years superintendent of that farm.

At the time of the earthquake in 1906 Mr. Olson was in San Francisco, and he came down to Southern California to recuperate after the hardships and shock sustained in that harrowing experience. After a six-months' stay he returned to Denver, carrying with him such pleasant memories of the Southland that in 1912 he decided to locate here permanently. Arriving here, he entered the employ of the Santa Ana Sugar Company, from its first construction, and there, his ability and fidelity more and more appreciated, he has been employed ever since. For the past six years, he has been general foreman of the entire plant, which has a capacity of a thousand tons of beets every twenty-four hours; nor could he have found anywhere a more satisfactory corporation to work for. The sugar is marketed through the Los Angeles brokers, the company making beet pulp and other by-products.

Mr. Olson has always taken a constructive interest in everything pertaining to the advancement of the community and is rated as one of its most dependable citizens. In fraternal circles he is a Knight Templar Mason and a Shriner.

WILLIAM J. RICHARDSON.—An engineer of wide and varied experience who has proven to be very efficient in executive work as superintendent of the Orange Water Works, is William J. Richardson, who first came to California in 1908, two years after he had left England, his native country, in the month of April. He was born in Somersetshire, on April 30, 1872, but reared at Bradford, in Yorkshire, the son of William J. Richardson, a teamster of Bradford. There were seven children in the family, but William is the only one now on the Pacific Coast.

He attended the local public schools, and when sixteen years of age was apprenticed as an engineer and machinist to the manufacturers, the William Ramsden Company. At the end of five years, he entered the service of the city of Bradford, as engineer of the fire department, and later, for four years, he was with the Water-Lane Dye Company, as hydraulic engineer, from which he resigned in order to come to the United States.

Arriving in New York City on May 2, 1906, Mr. Richardson was made master mechanic for the Standard Steel Works at Burnham, Pa., and discharged that responsibility until February, 1908, when he resigned and came west to California. In April, attracted by an offer from the Modern Manufacturing Company of Orange to become their die maker, he settled at Orange; and when the office of superintendent of the water works became vacant, he was appointed to the post, and accepted. He has since remodeled the plant, which had become run down, bringing it up to a high standard.

In 1912, the citizens of Orange voted a bond issue of $50,000; and of that sum $30,000 was spent in supplying cast-iron pipe and hydrants, and $20,000 for erecting new reinforced-concrete buildings and installing boilers, as well as for a 2,000,000 gallon pumping engine, and a 600,000 gallon reinforced-concrete storage reservoir. So wisely was all selected, and so successfully installed, that everything in the plant now works to perfection. During the day, the Holley system of direct pumping is employed; but at night there is storage by high pressure in two 50,000-gallon tanks. Mr. Richardson devotes all of his time to the responsible work in hand, and so is able to give entire satisfaction.

Mr. Richardson was first married in Bradford, England, when he was united with Miss Elizabeth Hannah Holmes. At the Empire Day disaster at Long Beach, on May 24, 1913, she was among those killed when the approach to the Auditorium gave way; at the time she was only thirty-eight years of age and left her husband and two children, John William, now an engineer in the merchant marine sailing out of San Francisco, and Rose Alice, a graduate of the Orange County Business College, and now with the National Bank of Orange.

At Orange Mr. Richardson was married a second time when he was joined to Miss Marie Stine, a native of Illinois, who with him attends the Presbyterian Church. He was made a Mason in Orange Grove Lodge No. 293, and long ago joined the Republican party, and declared himself for protection.

LEO. M. DOYLE.—Prominent among those broad-minded, large-hearted citizens of high ideals and straightforward ways, whose integrity never was questioned and whose judgment was sought and advice followed must ever be mentioned the late Leo M. Doyle, the banker of Santa Ana, a gentleman esteemed for his thorough knowledge of banking in all its details, and also for his ability to size up and appreciate fellowmen. He was born in Gratiot, Wis., on May 27, 1882, the son of M. M. and Joanna (Quinn) Doyle, who were farmers in that state until they removed to Dakota where Mr. Doyle was a banker. Now they make their home at Hollywood, honored by an enviable circle of devoted friends.

Leo Doyle was reared at Darlington, Wis., where he attended both the grammar and high schools, and when seventeen years of age he removed with his parents to Mitchell, S. D., where he matriculated at the Wesleyan University. Having been graduated from that excellent institution, he took a course at the business college in Mitchell, and on completing his studies, entered the Western National Bank in that town, as teller, both he and his father having become interested in the institution. He was also interested in farming, and grew to be a successful dealer in lands.

At Pierre, S. D., on October 30, 1906, Mr. Doyle was married to Miss Rose Collins, a native of Wakonda, in that state, and the daughter of William Collins, who was born in Dubuque, Iowa, and who had married Miss Margaret Mulvehill. Then they moved to South Dakota, where Mr. Collins was a business man in Wakonda, until his death. His widow, Mrs. Doyle's mother, still makes her home there. After his marriage, Mr. Doyle removed to Letcher, S. D., where with his father he started the Citizens Bank of Letcher, acting as cashier, while Mrs. Doyle was assistant cashier; but in December, 1913, when his father had already removed to California and liked it well, he sold his banking interest and also came out to the Coast. He settled temporarily at Hollywood, and entered the Home Savings Bank in Los Angeles to get familiar with California. Then, after traveling the state from north to south, he selected Santa Ana for his permanent location, and immediately started to organize the Citizens Commercial Savings Bank, associating with him his father, M. M. Doyle and others.

In 1917, the Citizens Commercial Savings Bank was merged into the California National Bank, and Mr. Doyle was elected cashier; and he continued active in the bank's management and on January 1, 1920, was elected its vice-president. Unfortunately, the influenza attacked him in October, 1918, and he had only partially recovered when he went back to work; but although he made his home on his ranch at El Modena, he could not regain his strength. Then he gave up regular work in the bank and went camping in the mountains for a while; but in August he purchased a residence in Monrovia and there removed with his family. He tried in vain, however, to call back his old-time strength and vigor, and on March 16, 1920, passed away, widely esteemed and beloved by all who intimately knew him. His body was interred at Calvary Cemetery.

Leo M. Doyle was a devout member of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, and was not only one of the organizers of the Knights of Columbus, but was for two terms a grand knight. He was prominent in civic affairs, and was a member of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and also the Chamber of Commerce, and was active in the bond and other war drives. He was also a popular member of the Orange County Country Club. On the day of his lamented demise, the Santa Ana Register said of him: "Mr. Doyle became well known, and the stamp of his personality has been left upon both business enterprises and in social circles in Santa Ana." Since her husband's death, Mrs. Doyle has moved back to Santa Ana where, surrounded by her former friends and endearing associations, she is looking after the large business affairs left by her husband. A devout Christian, she is conscientiously directing the education of her four children—Rosalie, Dolores, Kenneth and Mary Elizabeth, and is a member of St. Joseph's Church and the Altar Society of that congregation.

JAMES THOMAS STOCKTON.—Born in Jacksonville, Texas, May 8, 1862, James Thomas Stockton was a son of Richard and Sarah (Bugg) Stockton, members of old Southern families and successful farmers. The mother died in Texas in 1867, the family moved to Washington County, Ark., and later to Ozark, Ark., where his father died. James was next to the youngest of the children of this union and was reared a farmer's boy and attended the public school in his district. When twenty-two years of age he began farming for himself.

At Ozark, Ark., December 29, 1887, Mr. Stockton was married to Cener A. Hadley, who was a native of that place, a daughter of John and Agnes A. (Miller) Hadley, natives of Alabama and Tennessee, respectively, who were early settlers of Arkansas. Later they came to Santa Ana, where the mother died. The father went to Wagner, Okla., where he died in December, 1902. There were three children born of this union: Cener, Mrs. Stockton; Minnie, Mrs. Johnston of Whittier; and L. B., a large celery grower on Jersey Island, Cal. Cener Hadley received her education in the public schools of Arkansas.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Stockton started farming and a year later, in 1888, removed to Polk County, Ark., and homesteaded 160 acres, making the improvements and proved up on it. After nine years, in 1897, they came to California and located in Orange County. They purchased twenty acres near Talbert and a few months later sold it at a profit. Next, they bought thirty acres on the Mesa near Wintersburg from Mr. Draper and later traded twenty acres of this for twenty acres adjoining the Draper twenty acres, making forty acres in a body, where they raised alfalfa and corn. Later they sold the original ten acres at a good profit to a Mr. Preston; then they bought fifty acres across the road from their home, making them ninety acres. In 1910 they sold the original Draper twenty acres to Walton Blaylock and afterwards the other twenty acres to a Mr. Pond. In the fall of 1910 they moved to Santa Ana and bought a residence on Parton Street and resided there over one year, in 1912 selling the Parton Street residence and purchasing fourteen acres on West Fifth Street, west of Santa Ana; later they bought twenty acres more across from their place on Fifth Street. In 1913 they sold the twenty acres at a profit and soon afterwards also sold the fourteen acres and bought a residence on North Bush Street, where they resided until the fall of 1914, when they sold and bought a residence at 709 South Birch Street and there they resided until the fall of 1916, when they sold it and moved back to the ranch and bought ten acres adjoining it on the north and there they were farming when Mr. Stockton died, September 14, 1919.

Mr. Stockton was indeed a progressive and enterprising man and was the first rancher to raise sugar beets in that section. With his brother Newton he raised the first crop of lima beans in his section; it was threshed on the ground and tramped out with horses pulling a disc harrow over it. In this way they showed what could be raised. He was also one of the early celery growers and was a good and successful farmer. Since her husband's death Mrs. Stockton manages the sixty-acre ranch with the assistance of her son, Everett; she also owns 320 acres in Nevada. She has lately moved to Santa Ana, where she bought a comfortable bungalow at 801 South Sycamore Street, which she sold in August, 1920, when she made a trip to Oregon and Washington and on her return purchased her present bungalow, 506 South Garnsey Street, where she now makes her home. Mr. and Mrs. Stockton had five children: Everett A. is running the home farm; Effie, Mrs. H. J. Lamb of Santa Ana; Minnie, Mrs. E. R. Porter of Glendora; Eunice T., Mrs. J. H. Sewell of Berkeley; and Gordon Maurice is still at home. Mr. and Mrs. Stockton were members of the Church of Christ, of which she has been a member since she was fourteen years old and is still an active member.

ADOLPH T. HAMMERSCHMIDT.—Some very interesting pioneer history is recalled in the story of Adolph T. Hammerschmidt and his family. He was born in Lombard, Du Page County, Ill., on April 29, 1883, the son of William H. Hammerschmidt, a farmer and the proprietor of the Lombard Brick and Tile Company, as well as president of the Elmhurst Chicago Stone Company, who had married Miss Elizabeth Burdorf. Adolph was the eldest of eight children and while staying with his father on the home farm, he attended first the common schools of Lombard and then the Northwestern College of Naperville, Ill., where he took a business course. After that for two terms he pursued the manual training course of the Lewis Institute in Chicago.

In 1906 he made a trip to California, and at Fullerton, on August 8, 1907, he was married to Miss Marie Burdorf, the daughter of Henry and Dorothy (Wohler) Burdorf. Her father was one of the earliest settlers of Orange County, and came from Hanover, Germany, in 1866 via the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco. He then came down to Orangethorpe and purchased 100 acres south of Fullerton now adjoining the southern city limits, and he built the first house outside the fence at Anaheim, when the embryo town had two sections of land fenced in and it was decidedly a pioneer venture to build in the "wilds" outside the paling, there being no Fullerton at that time. Since then Mr. Burdorf has divided the 100 acres, so bare when he first acquired them, among his sons and daughters; and then ten acres Mr. Hammerschmidt is now living on were given to the latter's first wife. Mrs. Hammerschmidt was thus reared and educated at Orangethorpe.

J. J. Stockton

General A. Stockton

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Hammerschmidt returned to Illinois and lived for a year and a half on a farm near Lombard, but his wife could not stand the more severe climate, and they came back to sunnier California. They settled on the ten acres at Orangethorpe near Spadra, and improved the land by setting out trees. They planted an acre and a half to Navel oranges, three and a half acres to Valencias, and three and half acres to walnuts; and a quarter of an acre they devoted to various other kinds of fruit, and in 1908 built a handsome residence. Mr. Hammerschmidt cultivates with an All-Work tractor and markets through the Fullerton Mutual Orange Growers Association. He has a seven-inch well 175 feet deep with a Johnson Marine pump which yields forty inches of water.

On June 20, 1913, Mrs. Hammerschmidt died, the mother of four children—Doris, Leonard, Marie and Richard. Mr. Hammerschmidt's second marriage united him with Miss Annie Gerken of Santa Ana, the ceremony occurring on August 6, 1914; she was a native of Minnesota, and the daughter of John and Alvina (Eck) Gerken, who came to California when she was a little girl. Three children have resulted from this second marriage, and they bear the names of George, Bernhard and Clara. With his family he belongs to the German Lutheran Church of Anaheim of which he is a trustee, and they are pre-eminent in patriotic work for the upbuilding, as well as the building up, of the community.

In 1913, Mr. Hammerschmidt entered the U. S. mail service and assumed charge of Rural Free Delivery Route No. 2 leading out of Fullerton. This covers twenty-eight miles, and it is known to be the heaviest rural route in the state, requiring Mr. Hammerschmidt to handle over 30,000 pieces of mail a month. Not every man, perhaps, could hope to cope with the problems here presented, but Mr. Hammerschmidt thus far seems to have given satisfaction to everybody.

HARRY F. DIERKER.—Fortunate in a past record of varied and enviable experience, successive, continued successes, and definite, pronounced progress, Harry F. Dierker has easily risen to prominence and influence in the short time in which he has again been a resident of the Anaheim-Fullerton district, and one of the most active workers for the upbuilding, as well as the building up, on broad and permanent lines, of Orange County. He was born at Monterey, Nebr., the son of Henry Dierker, the well-known pioneer whose interesting life story is given elsewhere in this historical work, and when seven years of age came to California with his parents. He attended both the grammar and the high schools at Orange, and was graduated from the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana, thereby topping off an unusually thorough preparation, at home and in the classroom, for a winning tussle with the exacting world.

As a young man, Harry, who from boyhood had been lucky in his helpful friendships, went into Los Angeles, where he became the office boy of the Pacific Tank Company, and later mastered the ins and outs of manufacturing wooden tanks, and two years afterward, while still advancing with that concern, he was transferred to their San Francisco office. When he had served them well for five years, the company sent Mr. Dierker to Washington, to establish their factory at Olympia; and having been made general manager, with the oversight of 200 men or more, he proved his capability in executing several contracts, some for as high as $50,000 and $60,000 worth of work, installing complete water systems where wooden tanks and piping were used. After four years in Washington Mr. Dierker returned to Los Angeles, and for the same period of time assumed the management of the Los Angeles branch of the tank-making enterprise; and continuing to meet with success, giving entire satisfaction to both the company's patrons and to his employers, he firmly established himself in the business world. Mr. Dierker next spent a year in the North Yakima country, in Washington, developing part of some land he had previously bought, and engaging in stock raising; but eventually disposing of all his holdings save forty acres, he returned to Los Angeles and organized the Chapman-Dierker Company, for the building of fine homes in the Wilshire district, in Los Angeles, and he also associated himself with the Chas. C. and S. J. Chapman Company, as superintendent of their operations in building, which have had such a marked effect on the development of the renowned Wilshire district and contributed so rapidly and effectually toward making the West End of Los Angeles one of the most desirable residential districts in all California. This experience alone, it is fair to assume, ought to prove a valuable asset in enabling Mr. Dierker, from time to time, to be of greatest service, in various ways, to the communities with which he now has most frequent relations, and which are continually facing the multiform problems of development and building for the future.

After another four years of successful work in the city of Los Angeles, Mr. Dierker severed his connection there and bought ten acres of ten-year-old Valencia orange trees in the Commonwealth school district in Orange County, not far from Anaheim, effecting the sale in 1919, and there he has built for himself a comfortable, attractive home, made and is still making many improvements, and is farming in the most scientific manner. He owns, besides, a one-half interest in sixty-two and a half acres near Richfield, which have been leased at a handsome figure for oil purposes, and he also has a one-half interest in sixty acres southwest of Anaheim, now being developed with fine prospects to oranges.

At Kokomo, Howard County, Ind.,—the home-town of Elwood Haynes, the inventor, who in the early nineties designed and constructed there the oldest American automobile in existence, now one of the scientific treasures of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington,—on September 25, 1907, Mr. Dierker was married to Miss Flora May Kirk, a native of that city and an accomplished lady, who has always found happiness in sociological and uplift work of all kinds, and who has become prominent in Christian Church circles. Mr. Dierker also has long been a leader in that well-organized communion; and having been superintendent of the Wilshire Boulevard Christian Church Sunday School, in Los Angeles, and active in the programs of the church, he has already participated to the fullest degree possible in Christian Church work at Fullerton, doing what he can to make this desirable section of the Golden State still more attractive as a place in which not merely to labor, but to live.

MRS. CATHERINE J. DANERI.—Interesting and often inspiring, especially to youth and the mind that is ambitious of attaining all that the New West offers to those who will work and hope, is the story of Mrs. Catherine J. Daneri, one of the truly distinguished pioneers of Orange County, and those associated, in one way or another, intimately with her life. She was born in Glengarry County, Canada West, now known as the Province of Ontario, the daughter of John Calnan, a well educated and well-to-do Catholic of the city of Cork, Ireland. He came out to Canada and there married Miss Annie McLellan, a native of Canada West and the child of Scotch Presbyterians. About the time of the breaking out of the Civil War Mrs. Calnan crossed the border into the United States and moved to Willoughby, twenty miles east of Cleveland, Ohio; at this time Mr. Calnan was in the South and joining the forces of the Confederates in the Civil War, he fought under General Stonewall Jackson. He was taken prisoner by the Federals at the second battle of Bull Run and while on parole at Camp Chase, Little Miami, Ohio, during a cyclone was struck by a falling tree limb, lopped off by lightning, and instantly killed and lies buried in the local cemetery. These worthy parents had five children—three sisters and two brothers, all of whom are deceased except the subject, who was next to the youngest in the order of birth, and who was born on May 19, 1849.

Catherine attended the public schools of her district, and came to California with her mother and two brothers, taking the steamer from Cleveland to Chicago, and the railroad from Chicago to Omaha, and a prairie schooner from Omaha to Lone Pine, Inyo County, Cal., where they arrived in February, 1870. They lived through the earthquake at Lone Pine, in 1872, losing everything they had, but escaping with their lives; notwithstanding that twenty-one victims were buried in one grave.

A general merchandise store at Lone Pine was conducted by Messrs. Daneri and Stewart, and Miss Calnan there became acquainted with one of the partners, Henry B. Stewart, and there also, on August 3, 1870, married him. He was a native of Painted Post, N. Y., and came to California with his brother, driving a large mule team across the plains, and then freighting to the various mining camps, settling for a while at Marysville. From there, he came to Lone Pine and effected the partnership which was dissolved in 1873, after the earthquake, when Mr. and Mrs. Stewart and their two children moved north to Washington Territory. There, in Whatcom County, Mr. Stewart began to farm; but he was taken sick, met with reverses, lost everything and died there in 1879, leaving three children—Annie, Henry Alexander and Estella.

Mrs. Stewart married a second time, at San Francisco, in October, 1879, choosing for her husband John B. Daneri, at one time Mr. Stewart's partner. He was one of several brothers who were pioneer merchants at San Francisco and four other places, selling both at retail and wholesale, before John B. Daneri came to Lone Pine, so that he was a man of practical, valuable experience. He was born in Chiavari, near Genoa, Italy, on March 6, 1831, and after having lived for a while at Buenos Ayres, sailed around the Horn, and reached San Francisco on Washington's Birthday, 1849—a genuine Argonaut.

Mr. Denari was, in fact, a merchant all his life until he went to the historic old Mission town of San Juan Capistrano in 1877 and there became a farmer, taking up the special line of the orchardist. He planted walnuts, and brought his ranch up to a high state of cultivation, and accumulated and lost several fortunes. He died, in 1907, while on a visit to his oldest daughter, Mrs. J. N. Grohe, at Sheridan, Ore., at the age of seventy-six years and was buried in the Masonic Cemetery in that place. He left four children: Angela, who owns the beautiful residence at 626 South Sycamore Street, where Mrs. Denari now lives in Santa Ana; John B., the rancher and justice of the peace, and Luigi M. and Achille F., who run Mrs. Denari's farm at San Juan Capistrano.

Mr. Denari also held the office of justice of the peace for many terms until he resigned, some years before his death, for he was not only able to speak six languages, but could read and write them as well, and was a well-read man. During much of their residence at San Juan Capistrano, Mrs. Denari attended to matters of business, and for about twenty years she managed the farm she has now given to her children, retaining only a life interest, or lease. She is a strong and well-preserved woman—a Christian making no profession of special church association; and for years she has found her greatest pleasure in laboring for the common welfare of those about her.

WALLACE EDWIN OSWALD.—One of Fullerton's most energetic young business men, possessed of the qualities that bring success in life, coupled with the ability to rightly apply them, is Wallace Edwin Oswald; and since his advent to Fullerton not only has the city been favored with an automotive battery and electrical establishment worthy of such a progressive, hustling municipality, but the surrounding country as well, which looks to the Oswald establishment for the last word in dependable workmanship, has never needed to journey farther to have its wants supplied.

Born in Sanborn County, S. D., on July 10, 1888, and coming to California with his parents when he was eleven years old, Mr. Oswald, already imbued with the "go-ahead" spirit of the West, has kept pace with his progressive surroundings and so has come to take his proper place in the business circles of Fullerton, a community already widely known for its energy, ambition and productivity. He was educated in the schools of Santa Ana, where his parents had settled, but soon set out to make his own way in the world.

Taking to mechanical work from the start, Mr. Oswald spent some time in machine shops and automotive establishments, among them the Ford Motor Company of Los Angeles, thereby gaining a thorough knowledge of all the details of this work and the indispensable practical experience which has since stood him in good stead. When he returned to Fullerton he opened a small shop from which has grown the present large business establishment opened April 4, 1915. He distributes the Exide battery and other motor accessories and his thorough workmanship and ability to handle every phase of ignition and electrical trouble, and to give first-class automotive service in every particular, have brought him an ever-increasing business.

Mr. Oswald's marriage united him with Miss Pearl L. Ruddock, a native of Wisconsin, whose parents, Charles E. and Lila Ruddock, are represented elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Oswald have two children, Una and Wanda. Mr. Oswald's political preferences are Republican, and fraternally he is a Knights Templar Mason. Always patriotic and public spirited, he is first, last and always for Fullerton and Orange County.

WILLIAM G. PATTILLO.—Numbered among the prominent and rising young business men of Fullerton is William G. Pattillo, proprietor of Pattillo's Truck and Transfer Company. He was born at Hopkinsville, Christian County, Ky., August 3, 1880, was reared on the farm, educated in the public schools, and followed the occupation of farming with his father until 1900, the year he came to California. He first located at Fullerton, where he secured employment with A. V. Smith, general manager for F. and W. Thumb Company, large ranch owners in the Fullerton district and in San Diego County, and was engaged in picking fruit in their citrus groves. After becoming thoroughly acquainted with the business he became foreman, and was in the employ of the Thumb brothers for eleven years, six years of that time being foreman of their large lemon and alfalfa ranch in El Cajon Mesa, San Diego County and later at Lakeside, the same county. He returned to Fullerton in 1911, purchased a team, and began business for himself, taking care of the ranches of other people, some of whom lived in the East. He did contract work and took full charge of the development of the groves, irrigating, cultivating, fertilizing, picking fruit, etc. About two years and a half ago he gave up contracting work and established a transfer and trucking business at Fullerton. Aside from the general transfer and hauling business he is also a dealer in fertilizer and bean straw, which is distributed to the orange growers for use in their groves. His offices and headquarters are at 314 South Spadra Street and four large trucks are continually in use, so it is readily seen he has built up a profitable business.

Mr. Pattillo's father, John Pattillo, was a native Virginian who served four years in a Confederate regiment in the Civil War; he was commissioned a lieutenant, saw very active service and was wounded. After the war he settled in Christian County, Ill. He married Lydia Barbee also a Virginian, and they still reside at the old home. Of their seven children, Wm. G. is the third oldest and the only one in California.

Since coming to California, twenty years ago, Mr. Pattillo was united in marriage in San Diego, October 14, 1909, with Miss Teresa McCarthy, a native of McCook, Nebr. Her father Thomas McCarthy was a native of Lewisburg, Ohio, and was married in Nebraska to Olivia Belle Moore of Iowa. He engaged in railroading until 1890, when he brought his family to Southern California. He was among the first realtors in Long Beach; afterwards he was one of the discoverers of the Tungsten mines at Atolia and was for some years manager of the Atolia Mining Company. He now resides at La Mesa, San Diego County, his wife having passed on in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Pattillo are the parents of five children: Della, Robert, Leo, Virginia and Francis. Fraternally Mr. Pattillo is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

MRS. ELIZABETH EISMANN.—A straightforward, enterprising and altogether amiable and estimable woman, who, having been thrown upon her own resources, proved equal to the emergencies and today has a nice property valued highly, is Mrs. Elizabeth Eismann, who came to Orange at the beginning of this century, and since April, 1903, has been conducting the Depot Hotel. She was born in Westercappen, Prussia, to which district her grandparents came from Holland, the daughter of Frederick Kroener, a native also of Westercappen and a baker by trade. In 1865 he came to the United States, and for twenty-five years had a bakery business at Philadelphia, after which he removed to Lexington, Mo., where he was a farmer, and where he died, in 1918, at the age of ninety-two. The mother, Marguerite Eismann, also died in Missouri, aged eighty years. Five children were born of this marriage, among whom the subject of our review was the oldest.

The mother and her children joined the father in Philadelphia in 1868, and from her fourteenth year, Elizabeth Kroener was brought up in Philadelphia. Inasmuch as her mother was in ill health, it was up to Elizabeth to do most of the responsible work and otherwise mother the family. When, therefore, she was married in the City of Brotherly Love in 1874, to William Eismann, a native of her birthplace and a soldier in the Franco-Prussian War who had just come to Philadelphia, she was equipped with a valuable practical experience; and on their removal to Pittsburgh, Pa., where Mr. Eismann was for eight years in the Painter iron works, she easily established with him a comfortable home. In 1882 they pushed still further west, to Lexington, Mo., where they bought first one, and then another farm; and there they continued successfully agricultural pursuits.

In 1900 Mr. and Mrs. Eismann came to Orange, Cal., and here hoped to have established themselves; but Mr. Eismann was badly injured in a runaway accident, and again it was up to Mrs. Eismann to find a way to provide for the family. In April, 1903, she purchased the lots upon which she now resides, and there built the Depot Hotel, the oldest hostelry in Orange, and one of the oldest in Orange County, for which she has always enjoyed a liberal patronage.

In August, 1911, Mr. Eismann died, mourned by all who knew him, the revered father of five children. Only one is still living—John, a painter and contractor, who is married and has six children. Mrs. Eismann is a member of the Evangelical Association Church in Santa Ana, and extends the moral uplift work commenced there in her civic activities as a Republican.

MRS. ELLEN J. STREECH.—The busy, useful life of a highly successful horticulturist who was esteemed for both his integrity and his industry is pleasantly recalled in the story of Mrs. Streech's equally successful enterprises in continuing to manage the estate she and her husband had together, as hard working helpmates, acquired. She was born at Rio, Columbia County, Wis., the daughter of Frank Gallagher of New York State, an agriculturist who went in for general farming, and who had married Miss Isabelle Halpin, born in Wisconsin, and she attended the public school at Rio. When she was sixteen years of age, her parents removed to Williams County, N. D., afterwards Divide County, and there in 1907 her father homesteaded a quarter section of land, with the result that for four years she experienced the pleasures and the inconveniences of pioneer Dakota life. There she completed her education and there, too, she formed the acquaintance with the estimable gentleman whom she afterwards married at Crosby,

Elizabeth Cismann

August 9, 1911, being united with Fred G. Streech, a native of Minnesota, where he was born on a farm near Renville, the son of Fred and Wilhelmina Streech. He attended the district school of his home place, and spent his boyhood days on his father's farm. He had been in California in 1910 and had purchased ten acres devoted to the culture of Valencia oranges on South Raymond Avenue, south of Fullerton; and as this land was under the Anaheim Union Water Company, the grove was promising in every respect. Prior to his marriage, and when he was only twenty-one, Mr. Streech had also taken up homestead land in North Dakota, and he was thus prepared to develop his new California acquisition. After their marriage they spent a few months in travel until January, 1912; they located on their Fullerton ranch where Mr. Streech cared for their Valencia grove and enjoyed the salubrious climate of Southern California, but unfortunately he was not permitted to see the culmination of his ambitions, for death called him from his labors, on July 1, 1915. He had been a consistent Methodist, and he left a widow and two children, devoted Catholics. The children are Avery V. and Wilbur J., and with their mother they are comfortably situated on their handsome little ranch.

Mrs. Streech has shown unusual ability in the management of her property, marketing her choice fruit through the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and she often looks back with fondness to the six months of travel spent with her husband before they settled down to the more serious responsibilities of life.

WALTER WRAY.—A thoroughly-trained mechanic, whose ambition led him to the higher work of an engineer, and whose ability has been recognized in his appointment to a responsible public office in California, is Walter Wray, a native of Ireland, where he was born on January 4, 1868. His father was Joseph Wray, and he married Miss Jane Farel. They had nine children, and Walter was the youngest.

He began his schooling in Ireland, and continued it in the United States, and in both countries attended the private rather than the public institutions. When the opportunity came his way, he took up mechanical engineering, and for nineteen years followed that line of work, for the most part in Massachusetts. Success attended his labors in the East, but the lure of California drew him more and more to the shores of the Pacific.

In 1909 Mr. Wray came to the Golden State and settled at Santa Ana. He bought a ranch, and became a California orange grower. In October, 1918, the city council of Santa Ana appointed him superintendent of water and sewers, and while still retaining his orange ranch, he entered upon his present responsibilities.

Mr. Wray's marriage united him with Miss Helen Parke Doty, a lady who has demonstrated many times her especial capabilities as a companion and helpmate. Mr. Wray is a Republican in national political affairs, but both he and his public-spirited wife support all local movements for the betterment of the community regardless of partisanship.

A thirty-second degree Mason, he is a life member of the Massachusetts Conistory. He is a Knight Templar, the present commander of Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, K. T., and belongs to Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at Los Angeles. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows. He is still very fond of music, and has an enviable record, from his down-east days, as musician in the First Light Artillery of Massachusetts.

No better person could have been selected for the responsible post of city water and sewer superintendent, and it goes without saying that Santa Ana has a water and sewerage system that is thoroughly up-to-date and satisfactory in every respect.

FRED ROHRS, SR.—An enterprising, progressive and self-made business man, who takes a very live interest in all that pertains to the building up of both Santa Ana and Orange County, is Fred Rohrs, the realty owner and rancher of 1245 East Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana. With Christian standards to guide them, he has reared a family such as would do honor to anyone; and is therefore both a beloved husband and father. He had a truly historic beginning, if dates count for anything, for he was born in Germany on the birthday of Washington, in the memorable revolutionary year of 1848. When eighteen years of age he left his native land, sailing from Bremen for New York, having for his destination Napoleon, Henry County, Ohio. There he hired out as a farm hand, receiving at first only from six to seven dollars and his board a month. Then he removed to Kelleys Island, Erie County, Ohio, and became interested in horticulture, working among the vineyards and fruit orchards, and making wine for years. Two of his brothers followed him to America, and one, Henry W., is at present in Orange County.

On April 17, 1874, Mr. Rohrs married Miss Anna Gobrugge, a native of Germany, who had also come to America to better her conditions. After that, he took up a timber claim in the Ohio forests, and cleared some valuable land, on which he later raised grain and stock. He was not phenomenally successful, however, and could not be said to have much in return for his hard labor. Five children, however, blessed their union. Henry is a rancher in Orange; Fred, Jr., is a rancher in Santa Ana; John also has a ranch in Orange; George is farming on the home place, on Seventeenth Street; and Minnie is the wife of Charles Maier, ranching at the old home. All the sons are married, and are doing well.

When Mr. Rohrs first came to Santa Ana in the early spring of 1881, when there were no roads and no fences, he purchased a barley field of twenty-five acres, his present home place; later he added twenty acres to the home place, and also improved other acreage with the assistance of his sons. He tried first to raise grapes, then grain, then apricots; but he finally set out walnuts and both Valencia and Navel oranges. Now he has many other important interests besides his ranch home on Seventeenth Street, where he has a tractor and horses for his ranch work, and has two residences. He has built a modern, up-to-date brick business block at the southeast corner of Sycamore and Fourth Streets, 44x100 feet in size, two stories in height with a full basement, at a cost of $30,000; and he also owns another brick block, situated on West Fourth Street.

For many years Mr. Rohrs was a director of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and he is at present a member of the Tri-Counties Reforestation Committee. In national politics a Republican, in his religious affiliation Mr. Rohrs is a member of the Santa Ana Evangelical Association and has always been active in promoting better citizenship and a higher class of clean living. When he came here he could ride horseback through the tall mustard to the one brick store in Santa Ana; he has seen the town grow up and has taken an important part in its development, having hauled lumber from Newport for the early buildings in Santa Ana; and has seen the town built to its present size and splendor. He has always aided in the upbuilding of the city and can well exclaim, "All of which I saw and part of which I was."

CHARLES R. NUTT.—The popular and efficient city clerk of Huntington Beach, Charles R. Nutt, is a native son, born August 14, 1869, in Yankee Jims, Placer County. He is a son of Nathaniel and Helen (Keeler) Nutt, natives of Ohio and Michigan, respectively. Nathaniel Nutt was a '49er who crossed the Indian infested plains to the Golden State, where he engaged in mining. C. R. Nutt was reared at Dutch Flat and at the early age of twelve years began to work. His occupations during his career have been many and varied and include mining, saw mill and pulp mill work, railroad telegraph operator and station agent. At one time he was in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railway Company in Placer County; later he was with the San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley Railway, which afterwards became a part of the Santa Fe system. Mr. Nutt became agent for the Santa Fe Railway at Tulare, where he remained until 1898. Later he was associated with the Power, Transit and Light Company, stationed at Bakersfield. In 1907 he located at Huntington Beach, where for three years he filled the position of bookkeeper for the Huntington Beach Company. Afterwards he opened an electric shop and engaged in contract work and did the electric wiring in many of the residences and buildings in Huntington Beach.

In 1914 Mr. Nutt was elected to the important post of city clerk and ex-officio assessor of Huntington Beach. That his duties have been ably and most intelligently discharged to the entire satisfaction of the community is attested by the fact that he has thrice been reelected to this office, his last election being for four years. Aside from his above duties he is also acting as city tax collector. During his term of office many important improvements have been made in public works, paving, sewers and a municipal gas system were installed. Mr. Nutt is especially fond of instrumental music and has the distinction of having organized the Huntington Beach band and his artistic rendition of solos, both on the saxophone and melophone, have delighted the citizens of this up-to-date beach city. He is very public spirited and is always ready to give his assistance to every worthy movement that has as its aim the upbuilding of the best interests of Huntington Beach. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and was clerk of the high school board for five years.

In 1891 C. R. Nutt was united in marriage with Minnie Bond, a native of Massachusetts. She was one of the organizers of the Women's Club of Huntington Beach and served as its first secretary. This union has been blessed with two children: Helen, who is now Mrs. Fountain of Los Angeles; and Charles R., Jr., who for five years has been a musician in Headquarters Company, First Infantry, U. S. Army, having the rank of corporal. Fraternally Mr. Nutt is a member of Huntington Beach Lodge No. 380, F. & A. M.; also of Huntington Beach Lodge No. 183, I. O. O. F., and is secretary of the Huntington Beach Lodge of Modern Woodmen of America.

Chas. R. Nutt.

HENRY LAE.—A native son of Orange County, of French parentage, Henry Lae is making a fine success of ranching near Brea, in partnership with his brother, Louis Lae. He is the son of Joseph and Mary Lae, the father coming to America in 1885 from the Basses-Pyrenees, in the southern part of France. Sheep raising is one of the principal means of livelihood in that mountainous country and being accustomed to that work Mr. Lae became a sheep herder on the ranch of Domingo Bastanchury, known throughout Southern California as the largest sheep owner in this section, having as many as 20,000 sheep in the early days when this great industry was at its height. When the country began to be more thickly settled and the sheep ranges cut up into small ranches, the industry gradually ceased to exist commercially, and for a number of years a flock of sheep has been a rare sight in this county. Like many others who had been engaged in this business, Joseph Lae took up farming, leasing eighty acres from the Union Oil Company on the east side of the Fullerton-Brea Boulevard. Here with his sons he raised large crops of hay, continuing here until his death, which occurred in November, 1918, the mother having passed away in 1896, at their home in Fullerton.

Born at Fullerton, November 4, 1895, Henry Lae has spent all his life in this vicinity. He attended the Fullerton schools, meanwhile assisting his father in the ranching operations and early learning to do all kinds of farm work. After the death of his father, with his brother, Louis Lae, he leased eighty acres of land from the Union Oil Company and the same amount from the Coyote Land Company, this being situated on the Fullerton-Brea Boulevard, across from the tract formerly operated by the father. They have been very successful in their work here and their yearly crop of hay brings them an excellent price.

Two of the Lae brothers served in the World War, Louis being for eight months in the Coast Artillery, while Phillip saw twenty months' service in Headquarters Company of the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Infantry, Ninety-first Division, and went through the big drives of the war.

GEORGE N. WERSEL.—Of French and Dutch ancestry, George N. Wersel has inherited the thriftiness and industry that characterize both of these nations, and this heritage has had no small part in the success that he has achieved. Born in Cincinnati, December 14, 1861, George N. is the son of Frank and Mary (Wagner) Wersel. Mr. Wersel was born in Holland and Mrs. Wersel in France, both of them coming to America when they were children.

One of a family of five sons and two daughters, all of whom are living, George N. Wersel was educated in the public schools and the Academy of the Holy Cross in Cincinnati. His father had for years been engaged in the upholstering business at Cincinnati, and after his schooling was completed George Wersel took up this work, serving an apprenticeship under his father, later going into business with him, and continuing in this line for many years.

Coming to California in September, 1913, Mr. Wersel spent a few months in Los Angeles, coming from there to La Habra, where he purchased the ten-acre ranch on La Mirada Avenue which is now his home. Seven acres of the ranch are devoted to walnuts, while the remaining three acres is set to lemons, and the whole tract shows the gratifying results of intelligent care and painstaking work. Mr. Wersel has established an excellent irrigating system, water being furnished by the La Habra Mutual Water Company. He markets his walnuts through the California Walnut Growers Association of La Habra, and his lemons through the Mutual Orange Distributors. In 1914 Mr. Wersel built a beautiful bungalow on his ranch, and here he resides with his sisters, Agnes and Estella Wersel.

Mr. Wersel is held in high esteem by the people of his locality, who appreciate his many excellent qualities, his integrity and reliability. Nonpartisan in his political views, he is nevertheless interested in the welfare of the country in the largest and broadest sense, and believes in casting his vote for the best men and measures. In fraternal circles he is affiliated with the Elks and the Knights of Columbus.

GEORGE M. EABY.—That a man need not own extensive acreage in order to exercise important influence in a community is demonstrated by George M. Eaby, the proud possessor of a modest but enviable grove of citrus and walnut trees, who has had a hand in the late development of La Habra and vicinity. He was born near Laton Rooks County, Kans., on May 21, 1876, the son of Aaron S. and Cordelia (Gregory) Eaby, early settlers of the "Garden of the West," the father, a Pennsylvanian, having moved there in 1874, a year after the mother, who came from Iowa. Aaron Eaby was a farmer; hence, while he attended the local schools, George spent his boyhood and youth on the home farm. Later, he attended the Kansas Wesleyan University at Salina, there completing his days of schooling.

In 1896 Mr. Eaby came to California and settled at Whittier, where he worked on various ranches. The next year, on September 23, he was married to Mrs. Alice Prentice, a native of Iowa, where she was born near Des Moines. Her maiden name was Alice Hites, and she was the daughter of Joseph and Catherine Hites; and she attended the country school near Des Moines.

In 1906 Mr. Eaby purchased six acres on La Mirada Avenue, west of La Habra, three acres of which were set out to walnuts; and the remaining three acres he set out to Valencia oranges. Seven years later he built his own home there. He buys the water he needs for irrigation from the La Habra Water Company, markets his walnuts through the La Habra Walnut Growers Association, and his oranges through the Index Orchards of the M. O. D. of Redlands.

A Republican in matters of national political import, and always ready to advance the principles long set forth by that great body, Mr. Eaby is a broad-minded American, favoring the best men and the best measures, particularly in local movements, for the attainment of ends difficult or impossible when partisanship prevails. He takes a keen interest in all that happens at La Habra, having the utmost confidence in the ever-increasing prosperity of this highly-favored region.

LUCIAN T. ROGERS.—An enterprising, self-made horticulturist, whose disposition to work hard when he works, and to play hard when he plays, has enabled him to become a successful citrus rancher, is Lucian T. Rogers, a native son proud of his association with the great Pacific commonwealth. He was born amid the excitement of the greatest boom Southern California has ever known, at Santa Ana, on May 29, 1888, the only son living of Joseph C. Rogers, a very successful Iowan who came to California in 1884 and now lives, a retired rancher, at Long Beach. He had married Miss Margaret Voris, an admirable lady, who died at Fullerton in 1908, the mother of three children, of whom our subject was next to the youngest.

He attended the grammar school at Fullerton, and then went to the Brownberger Business College in Los Angeles, from which he was graduated in 1908. Then he worked for Fullerton Mutual Orange Association for over two years.

When he took up ranching, he assumed the responsibility of managing and developing a twenty-eight and one-third acre ranch on East Chapman, the property of his father and, to facilitate marketing, he joined the Fullerton Mutual Orange Growers Association of which his father was president. Mr. Rogers is also a member of the Fullerton Walnut Growers Association. He also took stock in the Anaheim Union Water Company. The ranch, mostly devoted to raising Valencia oranges, may well be regarded as a model for one of its size, and the fruit he raises is also of a superior quality. Mr. Rogers also owns eight and half acres in Yucaipa Valley which he has set out to an apple orchard.

On June 12, 1910, Mr. Rogers was married at Fullerton to Miss Ida Speheger, daughter of Abraham and Rebecca (Fritz) Speheger, farmers of Bluffton, Ind., where Ida was born. Her father died in August, 1918, being survived by his widow. Miss Speheger came to Fullerton on a visit to her brother Fred and here she met Mr. Rogers, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage. They have been blessed with one child, a son, Donald Lucian.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are interested in every worthy endeavor for the up-building of a community, and they gladly discharged their responsibilities toward the late war and war-work. Mr. Rogers was for some years a member of the Knights of Pythias, and a good "mixer" in every circle to which he gives his time.

JOSEPH O'DONNELL.—A successful horticulturist who has attained to still higher and better things in becoming so widely esteemed for his sterling character and his genial, kindly nature, is Joseph O'Donnell, the progressive orange grower, who was born in Fayette County, Ohio, twenty-six miles from Columbus, on July 18, 1859, the son of Patrick O'Donnell, who died there, honored for his vigorous participation in the Civil War, towards the close of the great conflict. He had married Bridget Breslan, and she also died in Ohio.

The second oldest of the six children in the family—two of whom are living—and the only one in California, Joseph was taken when seven years old to the neighborhood of Indianapolis, Ind., and for a brief period sent to the public schools. He was compelled, however, to go to work early, and to get such instruction as he could in the limited winter sessions of the school. When he was fourteen, his mother died and he began to "paddle his own canoe."

For a while, he worked on a farm as a carpenter, and then for sixteen years he was with F. A. Fletcher, of the Indiana Blooded Stock Company, breeders of fine Hereford cattle, traveling for that enterprising man for eight years and placing his blooded stock for him. He shipped into Portland, Ore., thirty-four years ago the first Herefords ever consigned there, and he also sent cattle of high grade to Washington, where they were disposed of by auction sale. His full-blooded stock was, in fact, the first put up at auction in Portland, and received the highest price of any up to that time.

In 1896 Mr. O'Donnell resigned and went to Indianapolis, where he was on the police force for seven years. Then he was with the Atlas Engineering Works for another three years, serving them as a machinist. In 1906, he went to Boise City, Idaho, and there he was in the transfer business until, in 1908, when he located here.

He bought his present twenty acres, then raw land, on Rio Vista Avenue, raised seedlings, which he budded to Valencia oranges, and set out an orchard, consisting of twenty acres of rich soil, well located. With this wonderful soil as an almost magical stimulant, Mr. O'Donnell has been able in this short time to evolve a full-bearing orchard. When he bought the place, he had only $150 with which to start, and for the first four years he raised sweet potatoes. Now he has sixteen acres of Valencia oranges, four acres of Navels, while the balance of the acreage is given up to residence and yards. Naturally, he belongs to the Mutual Orange Growers Association in Anaheim.

Mr. O'Donnell was married in Morgan County, Ind., to Miss Mary Dove, a native of that state, and they have one child, Harold, a graduate of Anaheim high school, class of 1920. She shares her husband's interest in independent political action, and is a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MRS. PHOEBE ANN BURBANK.—A well-read, deep-thinking woman with an interesting personality, who has attained, in the school of hard work an enviable self-poise, is Mrs. Phoebe Ann Burbank, the owner and manager of a well improved orange and walnut grove of thirty-one acres. She was born near Watsonville, Santa Cruz, Cal. Her father was the late John M. Bush, Sr., a native of Kentucky, where he was born on April 10, 1829; and her mother had been Sarah A. Watson, who was born in Independence, Mo., eight years later. John M. Bush migrated with his parents from Kentucky to Clay County, Mo., at the beginning of his teens; and in 1849, when the country was electrified by the startling news of the discovery of gold in California, he sought and obtained parental permission to cross the plains, and soon set out overland to seek his fortune. Having remained in the Golden State, he married in 1851; and when gold-digging petered out, he went in for farming. He farmed in Santa Cruz County and was engaged in sheep raising until about 1869, when he located in Santa Ana Canyon and purchased a large ranch and engaged in sheep raising until his death February 8, 1913, followed seven years later, by Mrs. Bush, who died March 26, 1920, aged eighty-four. She had 105 descendants—ten children, fifty-five grandchildren, and forty great-grandchildren. The ten children are Mrs. P. J. Ralls, Charles T. and Jonathan Bush, Mrs. L. J. Stone and Mrs. Lillie Holloway, all of Kern County; Mrs. Elizabeth Borden, of San Bernardino; and J. M. and T. Taylor Bush, and Mrs. Phoebe A. Burbank, of Olive, and Mrs. S. C. Howard, of Long Beach.

Miss Phoebe Bush was reared on the old Bush ranch from a child and received her education in the public schools. She was married in Anaheim to Corri N. Burbank, a native of Vermont, where he was born on February 28, 1865, and who was twenty-one when he assumed the new responsibility. He had come out to California when a mere youth, and settled in San Diego County, where he had an uncle, Mathias Stone, and for more than twenty years Mr. and Mrs. Burbank lived an ideal life until November 26, 1907, when he died, aged forty-two. Mr. Burbank learned the miller's trade in the Olive Mills under Dillen Bros. and after their marriage he continued as miller even after the Dillens sold their interest and the new mill was built. He was a splendid miller and was head miller when he quit to locate on the thirty-one acres of land Mrs. Burbank inherited from her father's estate which they set to oranges and walnuts. Since he died she continues to run the ranch, assisted by her son Raymond C. C. She is a member of the Foothill Orange Growers Association. Mr. and Mrs. Burbank had four children, all of whom are married and doing well. Phoebe Frances married J. A. Allen by whom she had one child, Edith Huldah, who is at present fourteen years old. Now she is Mrs. A. R. Balok, and resides at West Park, Pa. Huldah Ann is the wife of G. E. Shell and resides at El Segundo, Cal., she has two children—Raymond E. and Evelyn P. Raymond C. C. Burbank manages his mother's ranch; he is twenty-six years of age, and the husband of Miss Nellie Shell, of Orange; they have two children, Thelma I. and Curtiss L. Burbank. Clarence M. is a pumper for the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and married Miss Elizabeth Breau of Long Beach. They have two children—Mildred E. and Purl M. All of these children and grandchildren shower their affection upon Mrs. Burbank.

ARCH M. EDWARDS.—Among the thoroughly wide-awake business men of Orange County who are deeply interested in advancing permanently the best interests of this part of the Golden State must be mentioned Arch M. Edwards, formerly a member of the well-known firm of Edwards and Pattillo, transfer agents of Fullerton. He was born on a farm in Benton County, Ark., in September, 1884, and grew up amid the sturdy environment of that state still so much in the making. His father was A. J. Edwards, who had married Miss Jane Wilson, and they were devoted parents who sought the best for their children.

Arch, therefore, attended the rural schools while he helped his father on the farm; and at the age of twenty-one, when he had performed his filial duty, he left home. For a while he worked at various jobs, and finally he took the important step of migrating west to California. Later he returned to his home in the East; but in 1907 he came back to Fullerton and for four years worked on a ranch here.

At the end of that period, he bought a ranch of ten acres for himself, which he has reset to Valencia oranges, and at the same time he went in for general teaming for other ranchers. He also began to care for orchards. Enjoying a reputation for both experience and conscientious industry, Mr. Edwards never had any trouble to find all that his hands and a long day could do.

In 1918, he formed the Edwards and Pattillo Transfer Company, which grew with the city and employed seven men and five trucks, all their own, and maintained a monthly payroll of about $1,100. He sold out his interest in June, 1920, to devote his time to his ranching interests.

On September 1, 1906, Mr. Edwards was married to Miss Lydia Brown of Arkansas, like himself a live and patriotic citizen, and is a member of the Fullerton Club. A Democrat in matters of national politics, Mr. Edwards is above party and partisanship particularly when it comes to local issues, and no resident of Fullerton lines up better as a consistent "booster" for both town and county.

CAYETANO CASTILLO, JR.—An apt and enterprising young farmer whose success is due in part to his very thorough knowledge of the citrus industry, is Cayetano Castillo, Jr., the dry-ranch manager of Yorba, highly esteemed for his upright, Christian character. He was born on April 3, 1893, on a small ranch near Yorba, the fifth son of Cayetano Castillo, and Navarro, his devoted wife. Both parents are living on their eight acres at Yorba, where their chief crop—barley, to be made into hay—is secured by dry farming. His father came as a pioneer from Mexico to the Yorba district, but his mother was born on the Irvine ranch.

Cayetano, the lad, attended the school of the district and so grew up one of a family of eleven children, and the fifth in the order of birth. Teresa, the wife of A. Coronado, the rancher at Yorba, is the eldest, while the next is Gertrude, now Mrs. Pete Romero, the walnut and citrus rancher at the same place. Alexander married Miss Adelfina de Ruiz; Beranda is the wife of Stephen Reyes of Fullerton; Edna R., the next after Cayetano, is Mrs. Domingo Romero, a rancher; Ange is the wife of Celestine Bleecker of Orange; Theodore L. married Jennie Roderquez, and is deceased; Frank married Evelyn Robertson; he enlisted in the great World War, and was honorably discharged at San Francisco from the U. S. Army on January 19, 1919; Helen E. is at home, and so is Natalia.

Cayetano Castillo, who is at present employed by Herman F. Locke in citrus development at Yorba, never married, desiring to afford a home for his parents. For the past two years, he has also assisted the superintendent of county roads in looking after the excellent highways of Orange County. He is a Republican in matters of national politics, and belongs to the Catholic Church at Yorba. Few, if any, young men of Yorba merit and receive a larger share of the respect of their fellow-citizens than Mr. Castillo, a standing he has won by his industry and integrity.

HARRY E. MATTHEWS.—Among the most substantial and popular citizens of the county, in which he has now resided for a number of years, making more than a decade, Harry E. Matthews resides on his own ranch south of Tustin, which he purchased in January, 1909. He took it when it was in an unreclaimed state, and straightway set out his orange trees and made the other needed improvements, but by hard, steady work his place is now bringing in the handsome returns for which he labored. His products are Valencia oranges and walnuts, and there are none better in the county.

Born in Oskaloosa, Mahaska County, Iowa, on August 28, 1858, Mr. Matthews is a son of Fenelon and Mary (Hogin) Matthews, natives, respectively, of South Carolina and Maryland, who were pioneer settlers of Iowa, where Fenelon Matthews became a well-known merchant and successful business man. Showing his patriotism for the Stars and Stripes, he volunteered his services in an Iowa regiment on the breaking out of the Civil War, serving until the close of the war, being honorably discharged as sergeant. He came of an old Southern family that is traced back to Welsh and French descent. Mr. Matthews spent his boyhood in Keokuk County, Iowa, where his education was acquired at the common schools. When he first began to work for a living, after his school days, he entered the mercantile field, and a mercantile career he continued even after he moved to Kiowa, Barber County, Kans., in 1877. He joined to it, however, the enterprise of stock raising, having acquired 320 acres of land; 160 he devoted to crops and the remainder to grazing.

For a number of years Mr. Matthews was under-sheriff of Barber County, Kans. He made a splendid record as an officer, and having an enviable record as a citizen, it is no wonder that when his term of office expired, he was offered the nomination for the office of sheriff. He declined the office and the honor, however, but more than ever retained his popularity, and none of this popularity has he lost since he came to the Golden State. As he was in Kansas, so he is in California; those with whom he becomes acquainted are his friends.

In 1886 Mr. Matthews was united in marriage at Kiowa, Kans., to Miss Sarah May, the daughter of Charles and Carrie (Harding) Rumsey, who were early settlers of Barber County, Kans., and later also removed to Tustin, where Mr. Rumsey died in August, 1920, his widow being spared, and still lives at her home on Main Street. The happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Matthews has been blessed with twelve children, three of whom are now deceased. The others are Gertrude, the wife of Andrew L. Cock, who resides at Delhi; Fenelon C., who is ranching near Tustin, and married Edith Stearns; Van A. is a farmer at Kiowa, Kans.; Alice is Mrs. D. C. Kiser of Tustin; Jessie is Mrs. Verne Maynard, also of Tustin; Carrie E. is wife of Glyde Cooper, and resides near El Toro; George is serving in the United States Navy, while Frank and Harry are still under the paternal roof.

A Democrat in national politics, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Matthews is a member of the Masonic order, to which he has belonged for years. He is well informed, and, being a man of pleasing personality, is an interesting conversationalist. He does not regret selecting Orange County for his home and that he cast his lot here, for he finds by comparison it has the most ideal climate, and is undoubtedly the most productive and prosperous county for its size in the world.

CHARLES E. HARVEY.—Well known throughout Southern California as a wide-awake business man and one especially well posted on orange growing and development, Charles E. Harvey was born in Switzerland County, Ind., March 18, 1856, and raised on his father's stock farm in Jefferson County of that state. When reaching his majority he located in Filmore County, Nebr., and there became foreman of a large ranch for a period of three years. In 1880 he came to Los Angeles and became manager for the Continental Oil and Transportation Company for five years, during which time he traveled on the road as salesman. He made the journey back to Indiana, and returned to California, this time to settle in Riverside, where he resided for twenty-seven years, and had charge of the upkeep and development of orange groves, also owning groves of his own.

On October 7, 1913, Mr. Harvey came to Fullerton, and became special agent for the James F. Jackson Fertilizer Company; later Mr. Jackson combined with two other companies and formed the Southern California Fertilizer Company, dealing in manure, fertilizer, bean straw and melilotus seed, lime, etc. Mr. Harvey's territory covers all of Orange County, the Montebello and Whittier district and San Diego County. In 1919 he sold 4,000 cars of fertilizer, his customers being the leading ranchers in his territory, and he has also sold to the San Fernando Valley. The manure is taken from the dairy ranches and stables all over Southern California, including Kern and Imperial counties. The secret of Mr. Harvey's success as a salesman is his reputation for honesty and fair dealing, always giving value received, and the fact that he is one of the best-posted men in the state on the needs of orange groves, being a grower himself and with many years of experience in the citrus industry.

The marriage of Mr. Harvey, which occurred October 12, 1882, in Jefferson County, Ind., united him with Sarah E. Siebenthal, born in the same county in Indiana, daughter of Perret F. Siebenthal, pioneer miller of Indiana; one daughter has blessed their union, Birday Daisy, wife of William A. De Moss of Fullerton. Fraternally Mr. Harvey is a member of the Jr. O. U. A. M. Lodge of Riverside, a charter member, and has passed through all the chairs up to vice counsel of the state of California; he has the ritual of the order committed to memory and has installed different lodges of the order. He is also well known throughout this section as deputy sheriff of Orange County, is the owner of an orange grove planted to Washington Navels in Riverside County, and owns his own home in Fullerton, and is popular throughout the community, interested in all things for the further development of his district, and active in bringing it about.

SAMUEL E. TALBERT.—Not many men have the honor to be the leading citizens of their districts, or to have an embryo town named after them, as is the case with Samuel Edmonson Talbert, whose honored family will be celebrated in the name given to Talbert, Orange County. He was born in Piatt County, Ill., on February 4, 1874, and his father was James T. Talbert, a native of Kentucky, who went to Illinois when he was a young man. In Piatt County he was married to Miss Rachel Weddle and when the Civil War broke out, he enlisted in one of the Illinois volunteer infantry regiments, and served for four years with the Union Army. He sent to his wife, while he was in the field, such money as he could save, and with it she invested in forty acres of Piatt County land, and there he settled after the war.

Samuel was eight years old when his mother died, leaving eight children: Mary, the oldest, is the wife of William Piper, and resides at Deshler, Henry County, Ohio; Nettie became the wife of Fred Finity and died in Los Angeles, leaving a son named James; Eva is the wife of J. B. Irwin, and resides in Orange County Park, Orange County, Cal.; Frances married a Missouri attorney, David McCullem, and died, the mother of three children; Lavina resides at Chestnut, Ill., and is the wife of Joe Miller, a farmer; Samuel E., the subject of our sketch, was the sixth in the order of birth; T. B. Talbert, the next, is the Orange County supervisor; and Henry E. resides at Huntington Beach, having married Ella McGowan, by whom he has had one child, Henry Kime.

After a boyhood and youth spent in Piatt County, Ill., until he was eighteen, Samuel left Illinois on his birthday, accompanied by his father and brothers, destined for California. They reached Long Beach, where an uncle, William Talbert, lived, on February 9, 1892. He had attended the public schools in Illinois, and he continued his schooling at Lucerne, Los Angeles County, where his father rented a ranch. They went up to Antelope Valley, but did not like it, and traveled around to other places; and finally, in November, 1896, came down to Fountain Valley or what used to be called Gospel Swamp. While he was a resident at Long Beach, James T. Talbert became prominent as a member of the Grand Army of the Republic; and at Long Beach he died on May 18, 1918, in the seventy-seventh year of his age.

Father and son bought 320 acres of land, of which a cousin, W. O. Afer, took forty acres, and now Samuel owns 178 acres of the best land at Talbert. He has eleven flowing wells, one and two on each twenty acres, and a fine bungalow residence, which he remodeled about four years ago; but it is rather for what he has done for the county, than for what he possesses, that he is best known, and most honored.

He was the main spirit, for example, in organizing the Talbert Drainage district, and made the first ditch, and has made nearly all the other drainage ditches in that district since. On account of the land lying so low and near to the water-level of the Pacific Ocean, the question was asked, whether the land could be drained at all; and when many doubted, Mr. Talbert both said that it could, and actually drained it. Twenty-thousand dollars' worth of bonds were voted, to build the ditches, which are constructed on the east side of the section line, or the half-section, as the case may be, and the dirt has been put on the west side of the ditches, to throw the drainage down toward Newport Bay and make the roads in the district.

The flood of 1916 filled up the bay, and a new channel was cut below Newport Bay and Huntington Beach. That filled up with sand, and it became necessary to put two 54-inch galvanized corrugated iron pipes leading into the ocean, equipped with gates to keep the water back during high tide, at a cost of $5,000 to Talbert district. This project has reclaimed about 1,000 acres belonging to the Pacific Gun Club. The Talbert drainage district contains 15,000 acres now excellent land for the growing of sugar beets, lima beans and celery; and to such an extent has drainage been the making of the district that farm land there is now worth as high as $1,000 an acre and rents for $25 to $75 an acre, where formerly there was only a swamp covered with willows and tules and could have been bought for from $12.50 to $40.00 per acre.

Mr. Talbert was also the first to devise plans and later to dig ditches to keep the Santa Ana River from spreading over this entire delta country. He secured a right-of-way for deepening and making a new channel for the said Santa Ana River from Seventeenth Street in Santa Ana to the ocean, and took the contract to dig the channel, and successfully dug it. This has confined the river to its new channel, and protected the farming lands from flood water. No money was available for this work at first; the Newbert Protection District was organized, bonds were voted and he was made president and manager and the success of the enterprise followed. His work was highly praised by engineers and he has repeatedly been the subject of interesting write-ups in the Santa Ana and Los Angeles papers.

With his brother, T. B. Talbert, our subject secured the right-of-way for the Pacific Electric Railway. He excavated the road-bed, moved houses and grubbed trees, and graded six miles of the route from Huntington Beach to the Santa Ana River channel, in twenty-eight days, finishing the job in two days less than the time stipulated in the contract. The distance from Huntington Beach to Santa Ana is fifteen miles, and the performance was one of which anyone might reasonably be proud.

On January 26, 1895, Mr. Talbert was married to Miss Hattie L. Brady, then a maiden of fifteen and a half years of age, who was born at Santa Ana, the daughter of John and Louisa (Shrode) Brady of that city. Her father was a butcher, and conducted a butcher shop there when the town was only a village. The parents had both been born and married in Texas, and when they came from Texas to Santa Ana, in the seventies, they brought two children with them. Her father, therefore, was well known to the pioneers of Santa Ana. He removed to Long Beach, and there he died when Mrs. Talbert was a girl of only eight. Hence, she attended school in Long Beach. Mr. and Mrs. Talbert have never had any children of their own, but they have brought up several, both boys and girls, among them Will Howardson, now employed by the Southern California Edison Electric Company at Long Beach.

Mr. Talbert has always been working for the improvement of the county and the building up of the farming section. He has worked honestly and conscientiously for the public welfare, thus being in the van of progress for the great future he saw in store for his section of Orange County.

NATHAN E. ALLEN.—A successful rancher who made a splendid record for himself in an entirely different field prior to undertaking orange growing, is Nathan E. Allen, who lives at the corner of Cerritos and Placentia avenues, in southeast Anaheim. He was born at Jefferson, Jefferson County, Wis., on March 9, 1866, the son of Samuel Allen, who went to Idaho to engage in the cattle business, but died soon after going there, in 1872. He was a native of England and came from Worcestershire, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him; and he married a most estimable lady, Miss Nora Britton, a native of Watertown, N. Y., of an old New England family who also enjoyed a wide circle of devoted friends.

Nathan Allen attended the country schools of Jefferson County, where he had to "dig" for an education, and spent his early years on a Wisconsin farm. Then he was apprenticed to the marine engineer's trade, and when just twenty-one was granted a license to act as assistant engineer on a fresh-water steamer. He therefore sailed on the Great Lakes as one of the marine engineering staff for more than twenty-four years. He was chief engineer of the "L. C. Waldo," once the third largest fresh-water steamer afloat, for fifteen years until he resigned to come out to California in the winter of 1911. Mr. Allen settled at Anaheim and purchased thirteen acres of Tom Walton, on Placentia and Cerritos avenues. It was bare land; but he set it out to Valencia oranges, and put it under the service of the Equitable Water Company, which takes in an area of 104 acres in that vicinity, and such care has he bestowed on it that it is counted one of the finest groves in the section. He also became a director in the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Growers Association.

On February 13, 1904, Mr. Allen was married to Mrs. Mary (Knox) Peltier, a native of Canada, and the daughter of George and Martha (Hansel) Knox. She was educated at the grade schools of Brampton, Ontario, where her father died, while her mother came to California and spent her last days with the Allens on the ranch and died March 18, 1917. Mrs. Allen belongs to the Anaheim Methodist Church, and finds the highest pleasure in doing good. Mr. Allen is affiliated with the Masonic fraternity, and is a Knight Templar.

NORMAN B. TEDFORD.—A visitor to Anaheim cannot help but be attracted by the many fine homes and business blocks in that city, and also the beautiful country places in its environs, all evidence of the wealth and prosperity of the community, and also of the class of architects and builders who have made this district the center of their business interests and by their handiwork have beautified one of Nature's garden spots of the world. Prominent among these men may be mentioned Norman B. Tedford, contractor and builder. A native of Canada, he was born at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, November 30, 1876, and received his education in the public schools of that country.

When a lad of eighteen he started out to make his own way in life, and came to "the States," locating in Boston, Mass., and there learned the trade of carpenter with one of the largest and most prominent contracting firms of that city, Mitchell and Sutherland, remaining in their employ eleven years, during which time he assisted in the construction of many residences for the millionaire colony of the Back Bay district, and was also foreman for the company in the construction of many large office buildings in Boston. For the same firm he went to Newport, R. I., and worked on some of the finest homes there, including those in the famous Vanderbilt colony.

In 1904, Mr. Tedford came west to visit the World's Fair at St. Louis, and from there came to Pasadena, Cal. After working a short time in the latter city he located in Anaheim, and here entered into partnership with the late A. E. Strehle, the well-known contractor, under the firm name of Strehle and Tedford. In about four years this partnership was dissolved and Mr. Tedford continued alone as a contractor and builder; his early schooling with one of the best firms in the country made him an expert in his line, and he has drawn designs for many of the homes he has erected, and makes a specialty of fine residences, having completed one of the finest in Anaheim, the John Ruther home on North Los Angeles Street. Other evidences of his craft are the C. F. Grim residence; the H. C. Lawrence home; four residences for Levi Mann, and the homes of Jas. O'Brien, J. Hunter, and others too numerous to mention, besides several business blocks and many fine homes on the ranches in the Anaheim district. His skill has made him well known in other parts of the country, and he erected a theater building in Yuma, Ariz., and also has done work in Northern California. The benefits gained from having a man of wide knowledge and ability in a community are far reaching and readily seen in the advancement and progress made in Orange County in the past decade, a progress phenomenal even for this rapidly growing State of California.

The marriage of Mr. Tedford, which occurred in Santa Ana on December 24, 1904, united him with Mae Horslin of Boston, Mass., and two children have blessed their union: Roma F. and Harvey L., both natives of California. In fraternal circles Mr. Tedford has been active in the lodge of Eagles, and is past worthy president of Anaheim Lodge of that order. A man of broad vision and keen outlook on life, he has been prominent in all good works of the county, and has earned a place distinctively his own in this section of the state.

ORRIN M. THOMPSON.—Among the enterprises of Fullerton long looked upon as especially serviceable to the community must be mentioned the Central Garage, owned and conducted by Orrin M. Thompson, at 121 North Spadra Street. Its proprietor first saw the light in Montgomery County, Iowa, in September, 1875, and was born into the family of W. S. Thompson, a farmer, who had married Miss Mary Anderson. Both parents are now deceased, but they left behind them the precious heritage of character, industry and thrift, three factors that have contributed greatly to Mr. Thompson's success, especially in the attainment of the esteem of his fellow-citizens of Fullerton.

He attended the rural schools of his locality, and grew up at home until he was twenty. He was for a number of years a railroad engineer out of Sioux City, Iowa. In 1911 he came to California, and the following August he located in Fullerton, where he started the business he is at present expanding with such success. He is a member of the Board of Trade, and one that never loses a good opportunity to advertise the town, and to present it in its most attractive but true light, as a place of safe investments. In 1914 Mr. Thompson bought land in the Richfield section, which is now producing oil.

In addition to the ordinary business of a garage, Mr. Thompson carries on the repairing of automobiles and the sale of auto accessories; and for this he requires the assistance of ten skilled men—a tangible fact that speaks much for his claims to do the larger part of such trade in the town.

On July 23, 1902, at Waterbury, Nebr., Miss Margaret Herrick, a native of Nebraska, became the wife of Mr. Thompson, and she is now the mother of four children, Raymond, Helen, Janet and Dorothy. The family attend the Methodist Church, and both Mr. and Mrs. Thompson take a keen interest in politics, political reforms and such higher standards in civic life as can best be promoted, they believe, through nonpartisanship.

ALBERT CAILLAUD.—The fumigating department is one of the most important in the conduct of our modern citrus industry. The introduction of this system has freed the orchards from infectious diseases and caused thousands of trees to bear bounteous crops that otherwise would not have matured. The fumigating department of the Placentia Orange Growers Association, at Fullerton, is fortunate in having as its superintendent Albert Caillaud, a native son of French lineage, born at Riverside, Cal., August 12, 1893. His father, Alex Caillaud, now deceased, came to California from France in 1880. He located in Riverside County, where he conducted a nursery and engaged in budding and pruning citrus orchards, becoming an expert in this line; at one time he had a nursery at San Dimas.

Albert Caillaud received his education in the Riverside public schools and helped his father in the nursery business. In 1913 he located in Orange and for one season worked for a large fumigating company. His next move was to Pomona, where he entered the employ of the Growers' Fumigating Supply Company, one of the largest in the state. While with this company he gained a thorough knowledge of the business and became so efficient that he was made foreman of the fumigating outfits.

During the World War, Mr. Caillaud saw twenty months of service, becoming a sergeant in the One Hundred Sixteenth Engineers, Forty-first Division. As early as November, 1917, he was sent abroad and remained for six months after the close of the war, returning to the United States in July, 1919. Owing to his ability to speak French fluently he was made an interpreter and he also filled the position of buyer of supplies for the regiment. He spent six months in Belgium, where he was attached to the grave registration department, his duty being to take bodies from the battlefield to the cemetery. Whatever duty he was called upon to perform, Mr. Caillaud gave it his whole-hearted and loyal support.

Fraternally Mr. Caillaud is a member of Post 142, American Legion, at Fullerton and of the San Dimas Lodge of Odd Fellows. He accepted his present position with the Placentia Orange Growers Association in February, 1920. Mr. Caillaud was married in March, 1920, to Miss Martha Stolle, born in Missouri, but a resident of San Dimas.

NEWTON J. PENMAN.—A self-made, self-reliant American who has become one of the most substantial and promising citizens of Orange County, is Newton J. Penman, member of the firm of William W. Penman and Sons, now enjoying the distinction of being Orange County's most extensive individual sugar beet growers. He was born in Nevada County, Cal., on February 7, 1875, and was reared in the Paso Robles section of San Luis Obispo County, where he received a good education in the public schools. From a boy he assisted his father at farming and stock raising until 1912, when the family came to Orange County.

On December 24, 1915, he was married to Mrs. La Venia A. Wollenberg, née Hubbard, a daughter of Mortimer Hubbard, the Santa Ana pioneer, now the contracting carpenter and builder at San Juan Capistrano. She was born and reared at Santa Ana. The father was born near Santa Rosa, Cal., while Mrs. Hubbard, who was Emma O. Burton before her marriage, was a native of Wisconsin, coming from there with her parents. Mrs. Penman's first husband, Edmund Wollenberg, a native of Beecher, Ill., was a business man in Tustin until he passed away, in 1914, and left her with two children—Marjory Pauline Wollenberg and Dorothy Edna Wollenberg. In national political affairs a Republican, Mr. Penman is a devoted citizen of the county and neighborhood in which he lives and thrives, and never allows party politics to interfere with his support of worthy measures for the betterment of society.

Messrs. William W. Penman and Sons are the most extensive and therefore the leading beet raisers in Orange County, and they operate two leases on the James Irvine, or old San Joaquin Ranch, each being separately located, but under one management—that of William W. Penman, Sr., and his two sons, our subject and a brother, John R. There are 920 acres in the two leases; the father lives on the one ranch, and Newton J. Penman resides on the other.

When one considers the ever-fast development of the sugar beet industry in California, the advent of such young manhood as that of Newton J. Penman augurs much for the future contribution of the state toward this economic need of the world. They are members of the Episcopal Church in Orange. Mr. Penman is a member of the Knights of Pythias, while his wife is a member of the Pythian Sisters, of which she is past chief.

JOSE FRANCISCO VELASCO.—The absorbing romance of more than one early native family of California is recalled by the life stories of Mr. and Mrs. Jose Francisco Velasco, long among the leading residents of the Yorba district, and the proprietors of the one store or commercial establishment there. Mr. Velasco was born in Tucson, Ariz., on November 6, 1872, the son of Carlos Y. Velasco, for years the editor of "El Fronterizo," a weekly Spanish paper published at Tucson. He was a native of Hermosillo, Sonora, Mex., and was twice elected a representative from Sonora to the capital, Mexico City. After having married in Mexico, Miss Beatrice Ferrer, also of Hermosillo, he removed to Tucson, Ariz., where he died in 1914, at the age of seventy-six, honored not only as a man of ability, but as a citizen and neighbor of generous deeds. Mrs. Velasco is still living, and is in her seventy-fifth year.

Jose Francisco Velasco is the oldest son and the second child in a family of whom there are now only three living: Dolores resides at Tucson; Jose Francisco is the subject of our sketch; and Carlos is in business, dealing extensively in automobiles, at Tucson. Growing up, while attending the Tucson public schools, Jose became a typesetter in his father's printing office, and at the same time a writer in Spanish as well as in English. He founded a weekly newspaper at Phoenix, called "El Hijo de Fronterizo," and ran it for several months. Later he became foreman of that newspaper office, which passed into the hands of his father and Benjamin Heney, a brother of Francis Heney, the well-known lawyer. As in the case of early California papers, this newspaper was printed in both Spanish and English.

During this time Mr. Velasco was married to Miss Amelia L. Davila, the ceremony taking place at Yorba on April 21, 1897. She is the only living daughter of Pio Quinto Davila, who married Andrea Elisalde de Yorba, who was the third and last wife and the widow of Bernardo Yorba, then owner and proprietor of the great Yorba rancho. Mr. Davila was born in Bogota, United States of Colombia, and came from an eminent family there. Mrs. Velasco was born in Los Angeles, as was her mother, her maternal grandmother, and her great-grandmother. She was educated by an English governess, Miss Charlotte Knollys, and by private tutors in her father's home in Los Angeles. She also attended the Sisters' School there, and it was while she was on a vacation at Yorba that she met Mr. Velasco. After marriage they removed to Arizona, and engaged in the general mercantile business; but finding that the climate did not agree with his wife, Mr. Velasco came back to Yorba in 1899.

The following year he bought out the general merchandise store at Yorba Station, and since then he has been engaged in commerce and also in taking an active part in civil and governmental affairs. Not only is he the one merchant here, but he has found time to serve as clerk of the board of school trustees for Yorba. He is also deputy county registration clerk, and has filled that office with credit for years. A Republican in matters of national moment, Mr. Velasco is too broad-minded and too much interested in Yorba and in Orange County to allow any form of partisanship to interfere with his loyal support of the best attainable in home affairs.

Five children have blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Velasco: Josefita is the wife of T. E. Woods, the interior decorator, and resides in Los Angeles, the happy mother of one child, Thomas. Jose Francisco served for two years in the U. S. Navy, on the Cincinnati, and is a third-class quartermaster signalman, with an honorable discharge, and also an "honorable mention" to his credit. By trade he is a lapidarist, and lives in Los Angeles. Victor is a graduate of Fullerton Union High School, class of 1920, now attending the electrical department at the Y. M. C. A. Vincent is a sophomore in the Fullerton Union High School, and there is Louis A. Velasco. Mrs. Velasco is a woman of interesting versatility, with a liking and ability for the study of local history. Besides bringing up her children, and attending to her household duties, she has written for various publications and studied both music and art. As a well-traveled person, she is the life of society at Yorba, where she is a general favorite.

CHARLES A. ANDRES.—A fine grove of twenty acres, consisting of Valencia oranges, walnuts and deciduous fruits of many kinds, is the reward of many years of hard, diligent effort on the part of Charles A. Andres, whose ranch is one-half mile north of Garden Grove, although he makes his home at 1711 North Bush Street, Santa Ana. Born in Prussia, Germany, August 10, 1871, Charles A. Andres is the son of Ludwig and Marie (Dee) Andres, a narrative of the Andres family being given at length in the sketch of George Frederick Andres, an elder brother, elsewhere in this volume. The death of the mother soon after the family had come to Lansing, Iowa, and that of the father by an accidental fall, left the Andres children orphans at a very early age. George Frederick, the eldest of the family, was taken into the family of an uncle, Gustav Dee, while Charles A. went to live in the home of another uncle, Theodor Dee. When he was but a small boy he began working on his uncle's farm, plowing when he was so small that he had to reach up to hold the plow handles. He attended school when he could, but his opportunities were very limited as the schools were far away and he was compelled to wade through deep snow in the long cold winter to attend, and much of the time he was expected to be at work on the farm. He was determined to get a better education, however, and after he was twenty-one he worked out in the summers and saved his money so that he could attend Nora Springs Seminary in the winters, where he was graduated from the commercial department.

Mr. Andres remained on his uncle's farm until he was eighteen, and then worked out by the month in different places, wherever he could secure the best wages. After he had been able to save some money, he went to Beaver Creek, Rock County, Minn., where he rented a half section of land, farming it for three years. In the meantime July 3, 1901, he had been united in marriage with Miss Clara Hoefer, a native of Rock County, Minn., a daughter of Christian and Rosa (Krapf) Hoefer, natives of Wurtemberg, Germany, born near Stuttgart; coming to the United States when young people; they were married at Cedar Falls, Iowa. Afterwards they removed to and were early settlers of Rock County, Minn., where they homesteaded 160 acres on Beaver Creek which they improved and where they raised their family. Mr. Hoefer was prominent in the Evangelical church as class leader and Sunday school superintendent. They moved to Santa Ana in the spring of 1902, where the father died November 17, 1913, while his widow still survives. Their six living children are as follows: Mary, Mrs.

Chas. G. Andres

Clara E. Andres.

August Eikmeier of Pipestone, Minn.; William, an orange grower in Santa Ana; Mrs. Clara Andres; Rose, the wife of Philip Lutz of Santa Ana; Arthur resides at Owensmouth and Helen, Mrs. Steadman, lives in Santa Ana.

Mr. and Mrs. Andres decided to try their fortune in California and in December, 1903, they arrived in Santa Ana. In the spring of 1904 he bought twenty acres on McFadden Street, in the southern outskirts of Santa Ana, part of it being within the corporate limits. It was an alfalfa field, full of gopher holes, but Mr. Andres improved it, building a good house on the west ten acres, which he sold. After building on the east ten acres, he also disposed of this and in the fall of 1912, he purchased his present ranch north of Garden Grove. This consisted of twenty acres, much of which was unusually rough land. Seven acres of it had been planted to eucalyptus trees and these Mr. Andres cut down, pulling out the stumps with a stump puller. There were two deep sloughs across it which he filled up and altogether it was a great undertaking and required a tremendous amount of hard work. Finally, however, he had it leveled up and ready for irrigation. Eight acres were set to walnuts and ten acres to Valencia oranges, all now bearing. He also has two acres in lemons. His walnut orchard is interset with oranges, pears, plums, peaches and apples, and he also grew lima beans in between the rows when the trees were young, thus helping to pay expenses.

Mr. and Mrs. Andres are the parents of two children: Paul A., a graduate of the Santa Ana high school and now at the agricultural department of the University of California at Davis; and Viola E. The family live in their attractive home on North Bush Street, Santa Ana, which Mr. Andres erected in 1915. The family attend the Evangelical Church at Santa Ana and Mr. Andres is chairman of the board of trustees. He is a member of the Garden Grove Citrus Association, the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association and the Garden Grove Farm Center. In political matters, he is an advocate of the principles of the Republican party. Although he was exposed to many hardships and temptations in his early days, he has risen above them all by his own unaided efforts and now stands in his community as an example of honest, exemplary citizenship.

DR. WILLIAM M. POPPLEWELL.—Among the professional men who have retired from active professional life and engaged in the citrus industry in Orange County, California, is Dr. William M. Popplewell. He is a native of Missouri, born at Havana, Gentry County, September 25, 1862. His father, Barrett Popplewell, born in Kentucky, was a pioneer citizen of Missouri, and his mother, Eliza (Hoyt) Popplewell, a native of the state of Maine, were married in Missouri. The father served in the Union Army during the Civil War, and now, at the age of eighty-three, with his wife, aged, seventy-five, still lives in the state in which his lot in life was cast in his younger years. Of their four children who are living, two sons and a daughter live in the Central West.

William M. is the oldest child and was reared on his father's farm. He attended the public schools in his native state, took a course in the Normal School at Stanberry, Mo., and taught five terms in that state. He had always had a desire to study medicine, so he matriculated at Ensworth Medical College, St. Joseph, Mo., graduating with the class of 1896, receiving the degree of M. D. He served as interne for fourteen months at Ensworth Hospital, and after five years of successful practice at New Hampton, Mo., took a post-graduate course at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, specializing in eye, ear, nose and throat. He afterward returned to New Hampton and practiced successfully until he moved to Santa Fe, N. M., in the year 1902, where he continued until 1905. He had a keen desire to change his location to a country that had greater natural resources, and particularly along the line of horticulture, so in May of that year he came to Orange County, Cal., having learned of the great possibilities of the rich soil for growing citrus fruits.

His marriage, which occurred in 1889, at Stanberry, Mo., united him with Miss Nannie Ferguson, of Scotch descent, who was born in Tennessee and reared in north-western Missouri. She was a student at Park College, Parkville, Mo., a Presbyterian school, and she also had an experience as a teacher to her credit. Dr. and Mrs. Popplewell are the parents of two children. Edith married Hugh Conger Thomson, a rancher in Villa Park Precinct, and they have three children. Margery Geiger is the wife of Elmer Horace Ball of Downey.

After coming to Villa Park Dr. Popplewell became prominently identified with the Valencia orange and the lemon industries. He is a director in the Central Lemon Growers Association, which he helped organize, and to which he gives his best ability. He cooperates with the other progressive people of his community in all that pertains to the general welfare, especially in the matter of water for irrigation purposes from Santiago Creek and from wells. He is a member of the Gray Tract Well Company and helped develop the water for irrigating the 530 acres comprised in this tract.

They have drilled two wells and are drilling the third one. This water is held in reserve against periods of extraordinary drought, and there is one share of water stock to each acre of land.

Dr. Popplewell purchased thirty-one and one-half acres of land after coming to Villa Park Precinct, and afterwards gave his daughter, Mrs. Edith Thomson, five and one-half acres, and retained the twenty-six acres, which is devoted to the culture of citrus fruit, upon which he and his family live happily. In 1919 Dr. Popplewell and his wife took a 7,200-mile auto trip. They were gone three months and three days, traveling in their own auto, and visited their parents and friends in their old Missouri home, the historic and interesting places at Santa Fe and various places in the Central West. While glad to renew old associations and enjoy a visit with their parents and friends, they were more than satisfied to get back to their cozy Villa Park home. Dr. Popplewell's genial ways, sound business judgment, and keen interest in the progress of Orange County, combined with his earnest endeavors to uplift the community morally and socially, has made him a welcome addition to Villa Park. He has demonstrated his reliability, public spirit and rare good fellowship, and is a favorite among his fellow-citizens.

PHILIP HERMANN KRICK.—A broad-minded and liberal-hearted resident of Anaheim, whose splendid foresight and energy have already accomplished so much for the development of Orange County in many lines is Philip H. Krick, who, as a progressive educator, did much to lay the foundations of the sound educational standards of the county. Indeed he has been active in all movements tending to build up this section and as a believer in the excellent doctrine of "live and let live" he can count his friends by the score.

Mr. Krick was born in Elcho, Ontario, Canada, about twenty miles west of Niagara Falls. After completing the grammar schools, he entered St. Catherines Collegiate Institute, and following his graduation he took a course at the Hamilton School of Pedagogy. During the years of his college course, he was engaged in both farming and teaching, and after graduating he became a teacher in high schools of Ontario until 1894, when he decided to migrate to California, arriving in August of that year. Locating in Placentia, he became principal of the Placentia school, a position which he filled continuously until 1901. Resigning to accept a position as secretary of the Anaheim Union Water Company, he ably filled this position for the succeeding nine years. In the meantime he purchased city property on North Los Angeles Street, Anaheim, and here he still resides. He also became actively interested in real estate, buying, developing and selling a number of orange groves in the Placentia and Anaheim districts, and at present is the owner of three splendid groves, which he has developed to a high state of cultivation.

In addition to his horticultural interests, Mr. Krick has contributed largely to raising the dairy stock of the county to its present high standard. On one of his ranches he maintains a dairy, and here he has what is considered the finest herd of registered pure-bred Holstein cattle in Orange County, comprising fifty head. One of the cows, King Pontiac Idyl Segis, holds the Junior four-year-old record for the state of California, having produced thirty-five and two-third pounds of butter in seven days. The registered bull which heads the herd comes from fine producing stock, his dam having been the first cow in the state to produce over 1,200 pounds of butter in one year. The herd contains ten of the granddaughters of the King of the Pontiacs, the greatest Holstein sire in the world. The Krick dairy, which is located on Garden Grove Road, about one mile from Anaheim, is modern and sanitary in every respect, with cement floors and all modern equipment, including milking machines. He is a member and Orange County representative of the Southern California Holstein-Friesian Association and also a member of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America.

Mr. Krick's operations are not confined alone to Orange County, but he also has interests in several other sections of California. As early as 1905 he became interested in farm land in Kern and Tulare counties and was a pioneer in the development of pumping plants for irrigating in the Wasco section of Kern County. He was a director of the Fourth Extension Water Company, this company making the first united effort to sink wells and by means of pumping plants put water on a large area of land. Mr. Krick improved his land to alfalfa, also setting out a vineyard. At the same time he also improved a ranch at Alpaugh, Tulare County, which is irrigated from flowing wells and where he raises grain and alfalfa.

The marriage of Mr. Krick which occurred at St. Catherines, Ontario, in 1891, united him with Miss Edith M. Beckett, a native of that place and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Beckett, the father being a well-known manufacturer of woollens of St. Catherines. Two uncles of Mrs. Krick, John and Alfred Beckett, were pioneers of Orange County, coming here as early as 1876 and locating at Alamitos, where they were engaged in general farming and horticulture. Representatives of old Pennsylvania Quaker stock, they took a leading part in the building of the Friends Church at Alamitos, and gave it their generous support. Familiarly known as Uncle John and Uncle Alfred, they both reached the advanced age of eighty years, and were loved and esteemed by every one who knew them.

Always a leader in progressive and constructive movements, Mr. Krick was one of the organizers and a stockholder of the Anaheim Sugar Company. He was also a charter member of the Anaheim Orange Growers Association, since changed to the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association, and has served as president of the Anaheim Center of the Orange County Farm Bureau. Fraternally Mr. Krick is prominent in Masonic circles, being a Master Mason, a Knight Templar and a Shriner. He was initiated into Masonry at Wardsville, Canada, and has served three consecutive terms as master of Anaheim Lodge, No. 207, F. & A. M., and for three years was inspector of this Masonic district.

In early days Mr. Krick was secretary of the Anaheim Chamber of Commerce, and he has never ceased to give of his best efforts toward advancing the interests of his community, always standing for a high standard of the moral betterment of its citizens. Both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Anaheim, Mr. and Mrs. Krick have always taken an active part in its good works, giving generously both of their time and means to its support.

JOHN LESLIE HAVER.—What the Fullerton Meat and Grocery store is doing for the comfort, health and prosperity of the citizens of that city, those only who have traded there for some time are able in full to comprehend. Its proprietor is John Leslie Haver, who came from Kansas, where he was born at Highland on December 18, 1883, and brought with him to his task some of the invaluable Middle West spirit, the inheritance of knowledge and traits from a father who was a successful business man, and a go-ahead force of his own. His father was J. H. Haver, who came from Pennsylvania to Kansas, and he married Miss Elizabeth Vernon, whose native place was also Pennsylvania.

The second in the order of birth, John Leslie received his education at the grammar and high schools of his home town, and in October, 1906, came to California. For three years he lived at Riverside and worked for Messrs. Newberry and Parker, and then he was in Santa Ana for a year. In 1910 he came to Fullerton, and at the same time, in partnership with A. C. Gerrard, Mr. Haver started the Fullerton Meat and Grocery Store. In 1916 they started the groceteria at 243 North Spadra, known as the Fullerton Groceteria, but in April, 1917, he bought out his associate in both stores, and since then he has been conducting the entire business himself. In the two places he employs ten people, and even then is kept mighty busy catering to the wants of his many and increasing patrons. He is one of the liveliest members of the Board of Trade.

In Santa Ana, on October 10, 1907, Mr. Haver was married to Miss Mary E. Babbitt, a native of Hiawatha, Brown County, Kans., and the daughter of Worth Babbitt, who with his wife now live in Santa Ana. Mr. and Mrs. Haver have two children—Forrest Elden and Dorothy Jean, and attend the Christian Science Church. A Republican in national politics, Mr. Haver has never sought nor accepted public office, although extremely public spirited. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias, and is fond of fishing and outdoor life.

HAROLD ARLINGTON WATSON.—The long-honored name of Jonathan Watson, one of the most distinguished of Orange County's pioneers, is worthily borne by his youngest child, Harold Arlington Watson, who may himself boast of an enviable record for service in the great World War. As a rancher he is a successful citrus fruit and walnut grower, operating the home ranch in connection with his brothers. He was born in 1899, and was a junior in the Orange Union high school when, on the declaration of war on Germany by Congress, he enlisted on April 7, 1917, as one of the first to volunteer from Orange and Orange County—sharing with Percy Atwood and Earl Granger of Orange the honor of being one of the first three. He joined Company L of the One Hundred and Sixtieth California Infantry as a private, and later became corporal, and after sixteen months' training at Camp Kearny, sailed from Hoboken, N. J., on the "Nestor," for France. He landed first at Liverpool, and then reembarked for Havre, on August 26, 1918. He trained at various places in France preparatory to going to the front, and at the time of the armistice, narrowly escaped death from the "flu." He landed at New York on March 24, 1919, and was honorably discharged at Camp Kearny, in California, on April 16, 1919.

Mr. Watson then doffed the corporal's uniform and went to work on his father's ranch, which had been turned over to the three boys, Floyd E., a member of the auto-electrical firm of Thompson & Watson, Errol Trafford Watson and our subject. The latter two sons assume active control, aided in various ways by Floyd. They raise oranges, lemons and walnuts, and nowhere for miles around may fruit of a higher quality be found. Having mastered the details of ranch work when he was a boy, as did his brothers before him, Mr. Watson has found no difficulty coping with the many agricultural problems of the day.

From his father, whose record for endurance and accomplishment is so remarkable in many ways, Mr. Watson has inherited not only his love for the great outdoors, but his proficiency as a marksman. He was, therefore, one of the best five rifle shots, with Springfield rifles, in his regiment of over 3,500 men, and was a prize marksman at all the ranges. He is a member of Post No. 132, American Legion, at Orange.

Just before leaving for France Mr. Watson was married to Miss Bernice Wilbur, a native daughter, of Orange, and one child was born to them, Jeanne M. Mrs. Watson, as a popular belle, was the daughter of Dr. D. F. Royer of that city. A most distressing accident deprived these devoted young parents of their little daughter, Jeanne, only fourteen months old. The little one, with their parents, was visiting at the home of the beloved grandfather, when an automobile, backing out, ran the child down. The baby was rushed to the Anaheim hospital for operation, but died soon after reaching there. The tragedy brought the deepest sorrow to a host of friends, as well as to the bereaved parents.

JOHN C. KEEFE.—A clear-headed, able-bodied man of three-score and fifteen years, whose mental vitality is demonstrated in the valuable, patented inventions to his credit, and whose physical vigor is equally well shown in his personal management of a forty-acre farm, is John C. Keefe, a type of American always an asset to any commonwealth, and especially to a rapidly-expanding empire like that of the state of California. He was born in Chicopee, Hampden County, Mass., on June 27, 1845, the grandson of a sturdy Irish emigrant who left the historic and picturesque County of Cork in 1798, and pushed out for the New World. He had a son, Cornelius Keefe, the father of our subject, who married Miss Hannah O'Connell and died at Chicopee when John was five years old. He had been a skilled worker in the plant of Ames Bros., long better known as the firm of Oliver Ames & Sons, Oliver Ames having been a blacksmith, who early acquired reputation in the making of shovels and picks. The Civil War in particular gave them an extensive field for supplying both shovels and swords to the Federal Government.

After the death of her husband, Mrs. Keefe moved from Chicopee to the upper part of New York City known as Harlem, where they lived with Mrs. Keefe's sister and John's uncle, and during this period the lad had a chance to ride on the first car of the new street railway running from New York City proper to Harlem, a distance of seven miles, and drawn by mules. In 1851, with his grandfather, Timothy O'Connell, his mother, two aunts and an uncle, John traveled further west, and lived on a timber claim of 640 acres in Washington County, near Milwaukee, Wis., and as a sturdy boy, he helped clear and develop that land. In 1853, the Black Hawk Indians returned to Washington County, and they had a tribe pow-wow. He saw a good deal of the Redskins, for their acreage was full of berries and game, and naturally became the hunting grounds of the savages.

While thus living in a log cabin, he worked during the summer time and went to school in winter; and being considered a good student, at eighteen he was given a teacher's certificate and for a couple of years taught school. In 1868, he matriculated at the University of Wisconsin, where he was graduated in 1872 with the B. S. degree. The next year he was made principal of the Barton high school.

In 1873, he became the private secretary to William E. Cramer, editor of the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin, and a year after that was made a reporter on the paper, and then, in 1875, the financial editor. And in the Centennial Year he became city editor of this paper. He has a splendid flow of language, is well read and traveled, and with his retentive memory is an interesting conversationalist. He writes in an easy and flowing style and his articles, while he was a journalist, were very favorably commented on by critics.

On September 1, 1878, Mr. Keefe was married to Miss Helen Marie O'Neal, a native of Milwaukee, and the daughter of Edward and Hilda (Johnson) O'Neal. Mr. O'Neal had been mayor of Milwaukee for six terms, and at the time of their marriage, was a banker in that city. He sent his daughter to the Convent of the Holy Name in Milwaukee, and there she was given the education deemed necessary for a lady in polite society and a practical world.

With Mr. O'Neal's aid, Mr. Keefe built the Milwaukee Cracker and Candy Company, but in 1892, when it had so grown that it was doing a business of a quarter of a million dollars a year, he sold out his interest, and went in for the making of metal furniture for bank vaults and offices. He patented a knife that would cut sheet brass, at the same time that it bent it into a half-round shape, making a metal used in office furniture facing; having previously made two other notable inventions: a patent oven, for quick baking, put out in 1879, and a patent bill-file, now extensively used in offices, and given to the commercial-stationery world in 1894.

When Mr. Keefe at length disposed of his holdings in this metal-furniture factory, he spent the following two years in handling realty in Milwaukee, and first came to California and West Orange in 1900. Then he traded some iron mine property in Northern Michigan for a ranch of forty acres, now his home place, and there he himself has since planted five acres of walnut trees, ten acres of Navel oranges, five acres of Valencia oranges—now rather old trees—five acres of young Valencias, and two acres of lemons, leaving the balance vacant land. He also built his own home. His inventive faculty has frequently stood him well in stead, and has doubtless inclined him to experiment in the production of new fruit, among them a seedless lemon, as well as developing sugar pears and a new kind of walnut from the buds of the Eureka and Placencia walnuts.

Three children have blessed this fortunate union and Mr. and Mrs. Keefe. Edward Neil Keefe has charge of the branch postoffice at the corner of First and Rowan streets in Los Angeles, and there are Clarice and Alice Keefe, the former named after Sister Clara Keefe, the renowned war-nurse who, with the aid of an aged man and old horse and wagon, brought in many wounded soldiers from the battlefield of Antietam, taking them into a hospital at Baltimore. Mr. Keefe is a member of the Catholic Church of Santa Ana, and while in Milwaukee was the principal founder of the Knights of Wisconsin, a Catholic order begun in 1892 and since developed into a large organization. While not a spiritualist in the accepted term, Mr. Keefe has been in communication with the spirit world for the past five years.

JOHN PEMBERTON BAUMGARTNER.—California owes much of her marvelous and rapid development to her journalists, prominent among whom may be mentioned John Pemberton Baumgartner, the principal owner, general manager and editor of the Santa Ana Daily Register, the largest and leading daily newspaper of Orange County, and the only daily published at the county seat. Before coming to Santa Ana in 1906, he had achieved exceptional success in the development of newspaper properties in several of the larger Southern California towns. He published a model and very successful weekly in Riverside for several years, and then consolidated that paper with the Riverside Daily Press, of which he became part owner and business manager. A few years later, when he had greatly enlarged and improved the Press, he sold his interest and bought the Pasadena Daily Star; and in seven years he developed the Star into a fine newspaper property, which he then sold. A few months later he bought a controlling interest in the Long Beach Press, and, although he never lived in Long Beach, he directed the development of that property, under the management of C. L. Day, into one of the finest papers of its class on the Pacific Coast. Meantime, he had purchased the Santa Ana Daily Register, which he was giving his personal attention, and to which, a few years later, when he had sold the Long Beach Press, he devoted his entire time. Since the Register passed into Mr. Baumgartner's control it has been developed from a paper with a circulation of 800 copies to a semi-metropolitan publication with a circulation of nearly 7,000, and it is conceded by newspaper men to be the biggest and best newspaper of its class in the country.

Mr. Baumgartner was born on February 9, 1861, in Columbia, Boone County, Mo., and there received his scholastic training. He was able to attend the public schools until he was twelve years old, and then for three years he was a farmer boy. During the next two years, the family having returned to town, he continued his schooling, and for a short time he was a student at the Missouri State University. It will thus be seen that he was almost entirely self-educated. In his early youth Mr. Baumgartner forecast and laid the foundation for his newspaper career by becoming a newsboy; and with the exception of the three years he spent on the farm, he sold St. Louis and Kansas City newspapers on the streets of Columbia most of the time between the ages of eight and seventeen, and part of that time conducted a general newsstand there. When seventeen, on account of threatened ill health, he went to Texas, driving thither in a wagon from his home in Columbia, to Sherman, in Grayson County. Returning to Columbia a few months later, he worked as a reporter on the Boone County Sentinel, and soon became the manager and lessee of that paper. In 1885 he became a reporter on the St. Louis Chronicle, and in August of that year he married Lida Sexton, a native of his home town. Soon after his marriage he returned to Columbia, Mo., to assume, in a large measure, the editorship and management of the Columbia Herald, in which position he continued until August, 1887, the summer of the great "boom" year, when he came out to California for the first time.

His first newspaper work in this state was as a reporter on the San Diego Union, and from there he went to Riverside, in the spring of 1891, and after a few months as editor of the Riverside Phoenix, he established the Riverside Reflex, a weekly paper which, within a few months, absorbed the Phoenix. His next progressive step was the consolidation of the Riverside Reflex with the Riverside Daily Press. From that time on, as related above, Mr. Baumgartner's progress as a California newspaper man has been steadily onward and upward.

Mr. Baumgartner has always been active in district, state and national newspaper organizations. He was for five successive terms president of the Southern California Editorial Association, and in 1907, at the convention in New Orleans, he was elected president of the National Editorial Association. The following year he presided over the convention at Detroit and took the National Convention on an eight days' excursion through eastern Canada. By reason of having held the office of president of the National Editorial Association, Mr. Baumgartner became a life member of the organization, and now holds the office of past president.

He is essentially an all-around newspaper man, being equally at home in any department of the business. He is a forceful and graceful editorial writer, and as a business builder he has few equals in country newspaper fields. Every paper with which he has ever been connected has been not only a business, but a journalistic success. Although often solicited to enter public life, Mr. Baumgartner has preferred to be just a newspaper man, and the only public office he has ever held was one involving much hard work without pay—that of a member of the California State Conservation Commission.

CHRISTIAN ANDERSON.—A hard-working, self-made man who has become a very successful rancher, partly perhaps because he believes in treating the other fellow as he would like to be treated himself, is Christian Anderson, the youngest son of Andres and Meta Christina (Jepsen) Thygesen, who was born in Schleswig-Holstein, northern Germany, July 10, 1865, and came to America on March 28, 1888. He went to the usual, thorough schools, and at fourteen was confirmed, so that he pushed out into the world to care for himself, at an age when many boys are still enjoying the environments of a pleasant home. Both of his worthy parents are now dead.

Mr. Anderson had California, fortunately, for his destination, and he was also lucky to come direct to Fullerton. In the fall of 1892, he purchased twenty acres of open land to the east of Fullerton, and for a while his chief crop was cabbage; but in 1894 he began to set out citrus trees, and by fall he completed the first five acres, and he has kept setting out oranges until the twenty acres was set to fruit. Then he purchased, in 1904, the twelve acres adjoining, which is in walnuts. In 1900, he built for himself on the ranch both a dwelling and the necessary outbuildings, all of which are creditably substantial.

Mr. Anderson is a charter member of the Anaheim Union Water Company, and he also owns stock in the Placentia Bank. He markets his oranges through the Placentia Orange Growers Association and his walnuts through the Fullerton-Placentia Walnut Association. A brother, Nels Anderson, has three wells producing oil on his land, and is fast becoming interested in oil prospects, and Tige Anderson of Placentia is another brother. Mr. Anderson is a Republican, and as such endeavors to elevate the standards of American citizenship, and to increase the spirit of patriotism.

PETER STOFFEL.—The same qualities of perseverance, industry and thrift that made possible the success of Peter Stoffel as a grain farmer and stock raiser in Kansas have insured the gratifying prosperity which has attended his efforts since he came to California and engaged in citrus culture. Although not a native of the United States, Mr. Stoffel has no recollection of any home other than this country. He was born in Luxembourg, Germany, July 9, 1864, and when only two years old, in April, 1866, his parents came to America, locating in Jackson County, Iowa. Here he received his early education in the public schools. In 1877 the family moved to Kansas, locating in Sedgwick County, near Wichita, and Peter finished his education at a business college in Wichita. His father was a large farmer, owning several farms, and at first Mr. Stoffel rented land from his father, but later he bought 160 acres and developed this acreage into one of the best farms in the county, raising grain, cattle and hogs. Always very active in politics, he was prominent in the local affairs of his party, being a member of the Republican Central Committee and the Congressional Committee. For fifteen years he was assessor and trustee of Attica Township, Sedgwick County, and for nineteen years clerk of the school board.

In 1880 Mr. Stoffel's brother made a visit to Anaheim, Cal., and sent such glowing accounts back to his brother that in July, 1906, he also came to Anaheim, and was so much pleased with the country that he decided to locate here. He bought the Wallace grocery store on East Center Street and enlarged the business, employing six clerks, and he also purchased his present house and six lots at 520 West Center Street. After four years he sold out his grocery business. In the meantime he had bought twenty-nine acres of raw land four miles southwest of Anaheim, and there he has developed one of the best fruit ranches in the district, five acres being in lemons and the remainder in Valencia oranges. He paid $15,000 cash for this place, and has since added many improvements, including a pumping plant. In 1920 the grove produced 4,000 boxes of oranges. In July, 1919, he bought twenty acres more near by, which he leveled and which he has set to walnuts. He gives his personal attention to the care of these places, and the hard work that he has put in shows itself in the fine grove he has developed. He and his brother were the first men to come to Anaheim from Sedgwick, Kans., and with his enthusiasm over the possibilities of Orange County, Mr. Stoffel has not been content alone to reap the benefits of climate and soil, but has encouraged a number of his former neighbors and friends in Sedgwick County to locate here, in that way showing them the road to prosperity and at the same time helping in the development of the wonderful resources of the county. All the settlers who have come through Mr. Stoffel's recommendation are well pleased with the locality, and have bought ranches and prospered.

Mr. Stoffel's marriage united him with Mary E. Geiger, a native of Indiana, and they are the parents of ten children, eight of whom are living: Mrs. Johanna Kramer of Anaheim; Bernard A., who served his country during the war, being stationed at Camp Lewis with a machine-gun company; Mrs. Annie E. Volz, deceased; Joseph, deceased; Edward H.; Cora A.; Otto J., with his father on the ranch; Victor; Clara; and Herman J. They are also rearing a grandchild, Frank Volz, the son of their deceased daughter. Progressive and enterprising, Mr. Stoffel occupies an honored position in the community for his sterling and substantial qualities as a citizen.

ALFRED SHROSBREE.—An interesting English-American couple who, as pioneers at Huntington Beach, have done much to lay broad and deep the foundations there, are Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Shrosbree, who are enjoying their retirement after many years of hard work. Mr. Shrosbree was born at London, on February 17, 1844, and grew up in the delightful environment of Old England, under the inspiration of a scientifically-inclined parent; for his father, William Shrosbree, was a taxidermist, and mounted animals gathered from various quarters of the earth. He ran a taxidermist's store in the world's metropolis, and was visited by globe-trotters. He was born, married and died in London. He married Miss Maria Webb, also of London, who passed away in that city. They had nineteen children, among whom Alfred Shrosbree was the fourth child in the order of birth, as he is the only one of the family now living, although nine grew to maturity. Several of the brothers were taxidermists.

Alfred attended the common schools and was brought up in the Church of England. He learned the ivory-carver's trade in all its branches, and was proficient in carving, turning and flat work. Later he took up the trade of the carpenter and builder, but suffering severely from bronchitis, at the age of twenty-seven he determined to seek relief by a change of residence and air—that is, to come to America. He sailed from Liverpool on August 31, 1881, taking passage on the steamer City of Brussels, and landed at New York City. At first he came west only as far as Adams County, Nebr., where his wife's father, Richard Miles, lived and farmed; and there the bronchitis left him. He has never been back to England since.

In Nebraska, in 1883, Mr. Shrosbree was married to Miss Elizabeth Miles, a native of Oxfordshire, England, who had come to America several years before; and for twenty years he worked as a contractor and builder, with headquarters at Blue Hill, Webster County, Nebr. In 1901 Mr. and Mrs. Shrosbree came to Long Beach and lived there a year; and then, for a year, they lived in South Pasadena. In 1903 they came to Pacific City, now Huntington Beach, and at the new and promising resort Mr. Shrosbree followed his trade.

Since coming to California Mr. and Mrs. Shrosbree have witnessed many exciting events. They happened, for example, to be in the great disaster at Long Beach on Empire Day, 1913, at the falling of the approach to the Auditorium, and they fell with the crowd through the pier to the bottom. Both were hurt—Mrs. Shrosbree sustaining two broken ankles and ribs, and Mr. Shrosbree having his nose and right shoulder and several ribs broken. Of the 300 people that went down thirty-seven were brought out dead, and four of the injured persons died. Mr. and Mrs. Shrosbree showed their magnanimity by not presenting a claim for damages.

There was no school and no post office at what is now Huntington Beach when Mr. Shrosbree first pitched his tent there, and as there was also no Episcopal Church, they joined the Baptist denomination, of which they are members. He is a naturalized citizen, of course, and a Republican, but in local matters is nonpartisan. At the age of seventy-seven, he resides happily with his wife and, as a patriotic pioneer, enjoys the esteem of a wide range of friends and acquaintances. He was active at his trade until the Long Beach disaster, and then he and his wife were forced to retire. Mrs. Shrosbree is found in every good work intended for the general welfare of the community, and as a model housekeeper takes particular pride in their Ocean Avenue home, which abounds with art and other evidences of the refined and cultivated mind. Mr. Shrosbree built his fine bungalow residence of eight rooms at 630 Ocean Avenue, and this is only one of several houses he has erected at Huntington Beach, and one of four that he still owns.

JAMES ERVIN LUTHER.—A well-posted and most interesting early settler, who has not only contributed something definite toward the building up and improvement of the country, but is able to boast with modest pride that both his father and his grandfather crossed the plains in 1851 and for three years underwent all the privations and rigors of the miner's life here, is James Ervin Luther, who was born in Bennington, Shiawassee County, Mich., on January 4, 1851. His father, James Martin Luther, was a native of New York and was educated at Granville College in Ohio, after which he married Miss Elizabeth Jacobs, who was born in New York State. Grandfather Ellis Luther had married Amelia Ervin who was a native of England, and the daughter of James Ervin, a sea captain, who owned his own vessel and also a large, comfortable residence on the ocean front in New York City from which his family could always watch for his coming. Piloting a valuable cargo, also owned by him, he arrived within sight of New York harbor one evening, and was sighted by his faithful wife and children, just as a severe storm arose; and the next morning not a vestige of ship or cargo could be seen, nor was the veteran captain and his supposedly sturdy vessel ever heard from again. James Martin Luther, who traces his ancestry back to the famous German of the Reformation, Martin Luther, was a teacher until his hearing became affected, when he became a clerk on the Erie Canal; after his marriage they resided at Lansing, Mich., until he came west. After mining in Nevada, he accompanied his father to San Francisco and then back to the East by way of Panama; and he did clerical work and was postmaster at Northstar, Gratiot County, Mich. Later still he was a farmer, and he spent his last days with our subject in Orange County, where he died in 1916, at the age of ninety-three. Mrs. Luther, his beloved life-companion, gave joy to the same home circle until 1915, when she passed away at the age of eighty-seven. Her father, Mark Jacobs, a Vermonter, became a farmer in Michigan, and died at Brighton, Livingston County. They had five children, all of whom grew to maturity; and the eldest of the family, our subject is one of three still living.

James Ervin Luther was reared at North Star, near Ithaca, and while attending the public schools, worked on a farm, continuing to assist his father until he was twenty-four years of age. Then he came to California and arrived at Santa Ana in November, 1874. The place was then a mere hamlet, but a year later he purchased ten acres, the nucleus of his present valuable property, in the Chapman and Glassell tract on Yorba Street; and moving onto it, he built there a small house. Three very dry years succeeded, however, and he had to work out to tide over the critical period, while he did his best to improve the place.

He first set out grapes, but they died; and then he planted apricots, a few of which are still standing and bearing. Two years later, he bought another ten acres, and still later ten more; and having sold five acres, he now has a fine farm of twenty-five acres. Nine acres of these are set out to Valencia oranges, and the balance are given over to apricots; and one year he had seventeen tons of dried fruit. He belongs to the California Prune and Apricot Association, and also to the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and in both of these excellent organizations he is appreciated both for the quality of his products and his care in preparing them for the market.

At Orange, on March 6, 1886, Mr. Luther was married to Miss Mary McClintock, a native of Pittsfield, Ill., and the daughter of John R. McClintock, who was born in Indiana of an old Tennessee family. He settled in Illinois and married Nancy Cline, of Pennsylvania parentage, and became a farmer at Pittsfield. There Mrs. McClintock died, but Mr. McClintock is still living, at Long Beach, enjoying life in the eighty-second year of his age. There were seven children in that family, and Mrs. Luther, who was the eldest, received the best of educational advantages in Illinois. In 1882, she and a brother, W. O. McClintock, came out to Los Angeles, and that same year she removed to Santa Ana. One child, Porter G. Luther, has blessed this union, and he is foreman for the gas engine tractor company in Bakersfield. Mr. and Mrs. Luther are members of the Christian Science Church at Santa Ana, and Mr. Luther marches under the banners of the Republican party.

CHRIS PAULUS.—A liberal-minded, kind-hearted and very progressive rancher who has had many interesting, if not always agreeable, experiences in a series of alternating "ups and downs," is Chris Paulus, who has at length reached a state of independence, with a fine Valencia orange orchard and a comfortable home. He came to California in the late nineties; and if Mr. Paulus and the Californians have any regret in the matter, it is that he did not settle here years before. He was born in Washington County, Wis., in 1845, the son of Chris Paulus, a farmer, who had forty acres there, and in 1848 moved to Ozaukee County, in the same state, where he cleared the timber land for a home. He had married Miss Catherine Hiltz, who proved to him an excellent helpmate. They had ten children, six of whom grew up; and among them Chris was the second oldest child. He was reared on a farm, and sent to a log schoolhouse; and growing up a good axeman, he helped to clear the home farm of 120 acres of solid timber, remaining home until he was twenty-three. Then he removed to Cerro Gordo County, Iowa, where he worked for six months. He then made his way to Sedalia, Mo., and took up farming. Then he worked for many years at the stock yards at Sedalia, holding the position of foreman for almost three years.

On February 4, 1874, Mr. Paulus was married to Miss Catherine Dexhimer, who was born near Cleveland, Ohio, the daughter of William and Elizabeth (Hultz) Dexhimer, farmers in Ohio, then early settlers of St. Genevieve County, Mo., later at Hannibal, and in 1868 he located in Sedalia, Mo. After his marriage Mr. Paulus farmed on a farm of eighty acres that he had bought in 1869. The drought and grasshoppers destroyed the crops, and in the fall of 1874 they returned to Sedalia, where he began well drilling, which he followed for twelve years, finally using a steam well rig. During this time he bought property in Kansas City and started a blacksmith shop; but when the boom "busted" there, Mr. Paulus again returned to Sedalia and took up well drilling. As early as 1869 he decided to come to California; but he put it off until 1897, when he removed to San Bernardino, where he made a trade for a ranch of ten acres. He built a residence, dug a well and resided upon and improved the property for four years; but in the end he was beaten out of it, and lost all that he had invested.

Once again Mr. Paulus began all over, locating at Compton, where he rented forty acres for the growing of beets; but at the end of the year he was $170 in the hole. Then he rented 100 acres from the Seaside Water Company, raising thirty-three sacks of barley per acre, but the second year the crop was a failure. He next went to Downey and rented thirty acres, and there he tried to raise hogs; but he lost all his hogs and traded for a house in Los Angeles, where he worked for the Lacy Manufacturing Company, punching washers. He forged ahead, but was laid off; and then he took up farming again, and searched for months until he found his present property. He traded his house and two lots for five acres on the corner of Olive and Sunkist Avenues, and there were only eighty-one orange trees set out; he himself set out the rest, all Valencia orange trees, now in full bearing. He has also helped improve other orchards. His soil is superior; he uses the best of fertilizers, and plenty of them; he has an excellent pumping plant, originally started by the Orange Grove Water Company, and his highly-productive ranch is now cared for by his son, Walter, who uses a tractor and a team, and follows the latest, most scientific and practical methods of agriculture. An example of the increase in values is shown by the fact that he bought it for $1,850, and he has lately refused $30,000 for it.

Eight children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Paulus: William, Peter and Jacob are in Los Angeles; Walter, as has been stated, is ranching; Charles is also in Los Angeles; Fred is at McKittrick; Katie is Mrs. Robert Law, of the same place; and Elizabeth is Mrs. Fred Law, and lives at Anaheim. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church at Anaheim.

CHARLES W. MORROW.—A highly intelligent native son of California, whose love of good reading has assisted him in working for a higher standard of citizenship, is Charles W. Morrow, who was born in what is now Orange County on April 10, 1885, the son of George Clinton Morrow, whose sister, Mrs. Adaline Wright, crossed the great continent in the famous year of 1849, as did a brother, Harrison Morrow.

George C. Morrow was born in Ohio, and as his health was poor he therefore sought outdoor employment. Going to Iowa when a young man, he farmed there and drove a stage, later driving a stage in Nebraska. He had come to California in 1865, when Mr. and Mrs. Wright made their second trip, remaining there but a short time, driving freight teams from San Pedro to Los Angeles. Upon his return to Iowa he was married to Sarah Jane Hutchings, a native of Ohio, but who had lived in Iowa from the age of nine years. Returning to California in 1871, Mr. Morrow settled in Los Angeles County, driving the stage from Anaheim to Los Flores. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow had eight children: Thomas Benton, George Clinton, Jr., Mrs. Maggie May Bowden, Mrs. Madge Christensen, Mrs. Nellie Fenton, Mrs. Annie Wheeler, Sylvester and Charles W. Mr. and Mrs. Morrow are still living and reside in the Villa Park district, Orange County, the father being eighty-five and the mother seventy-six years of age. They celebrated their golden wedding anniversary on September 15, 1919.

Charles W. Morrow was sent to what was then called the Mountain View school, now known as the school at Villa Park—the name having been changed as late as 1908-09—and lived to serve as one of the trustees of that institution. He acquired three acres of his own, which he has well improved and where he has lately built a fine residence; and he is the manager of a tract of Valencia oranges, owned by his father, set out to Valencias and lemons. He is also a director in the Gray Tract Water Association, which is now supplying service to 600 acres of citrus land, having plenty of wells to insure against drought. He also belongs to the Villa Park Orchards Association. On September 15, 1908, Mr. Morrow was married to Miss Mabel Stutheit of Villa Park, a talented lady, noted especially for her accomplishment in music, who came to California from Kansas with her parents. Two children have blessed the union of the younger couple—Lillian Bernice and Hazel May.

Mr. Morrow is a Democrat in matters of national political import, and yet quite nonpartisan when it comes to doing his duty by local movements. He belongs to the Community Church, and is honored as one of its trustees. All in all, Orange County as well as Villa Park may congratulate itself on such thoroughly loyal and active citizens as Mr. Morrow.

ERROL TRAFFORD WATSON.—An industrious and exceptionally able young man is Errol Trafford Watson, the second son of the widely-known and well-beloved pioneer, Jonathan Watson, who shares in the active management of the Watson ranch, raising in particular oranges, lemons and walnuts. He was born on June 3, 1894, and twenty years later graduated with credit from the Orange Union high school. His father being a rancher and horticulturist, Errol was therefore naturally interested in ranch work, and so has easily become expert in farm management. Like his father, who is known to have out-shot Buffalo Bill, he loves hunting in the great outdoors, and always carries a gun with him when he goes for a walk in the open. Should ravens, hawks or other birds get too close to the chicken yard on the Watson premises, therefore, they invariably suffer the penalty.

On September 6, 1916, Mr. Watson was married to Miss Beatrice Durkee, a native of Sioux Rapids, Iowa, and the daughter of Joseph E. and Lucinda (Stewart) Durkee, natives of Iowa, who were married in Minnesota. Her father was a public school teacher, and for twenty years served as superintendent of schools in Buena Vista County, Iowa. In 1908 they came to California, and settled in Los Angeles, where the mother died in February, 1909, leaving three children—Beatrice, Florence and Ruth. The following month Mr. Durkee removed to Orange County and bought a ranch of twenty acres, three and a half miles to the northwest of Anaheim, and there he is still living. Two children have blessed this happy union, June and Maxine.

The three Watson brothers, Floyd E., Errol Trafford and Harold Arlington, operate the ranch of one hundred twelve and a half acres belonging to their father, Jonathan Watson, and cultivate forty-five acres given to walnuts and the balance mostly in oranges. The walnut trees are from four to thirty years old. They use two tractors in operating the ranch, this being at least so far as the Watsons are concerned, a horseless age. This is all the more strange since Jonathan Watson, aided by his sons, was noted as a breeder of standard and draft horses. Errol Watson is director in the Orange County Walnut Growers Association at Santa Ana. California need not worry when its future destiny lies at the disposal of such brain and brawn as mark the conservative aggressiveness of these Orange County young men.

LEE O. MYERS.—Among the wide-awake, far-seeing and scientifically operating ranchers who have been "doing things" in Orange County may well be mentioned Lee O. Myers, who is proud of his birth, as a native son, at Susanville, in Lassen County, Cal., in 1881, the son of Cyrus Myers, the blacksmith, who died from a sad accident when our subject was only five years old. He had married Miss Barbara Scherer, a native of Illinois, an amiable, devoted woman; and she proved a very lovable mother and guardian to her four children in their hour of need. Among these dependents, Lee was the youngest. For nine years he lived in Santa Paula with his uncle, and until his seventeenth year he was educated at the public schools of his district. Then, for two years he was employed by the Lacy Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles, and it goes without saying, in view of that extended, single engagement, that he made himself, through his intelligence, industry and fidelity, invaluable to that firm.

On November 11, 1903, Mr. Myers was married to Miss Mette Hansen, the youngest daughter of the late Charles and Mrs. Mette Hansen, old pioneers in the Placentia district; and two children, Philip Alvin and Charles Richard, have blessed the union.

A. G. Miller

They now are old enough to attend the Placentia grammar school, and with their parents go to the Presbyterian Church at Placentia.

Later, Mr. Myers, having sold six acres he had owned in the Placentia district, bought twenty-five acres of the original Charles Hansen tract then owned by the Thum Bros., and five acres he afterward disposed of to accommodate his mother-in-law, Mrs. Hansen. Thrift and time profitably spent on the ranch have brought Mr. and Mrs. Myers success; and he is very naturally a member of the Anaheim Union Water Company and the Fullerton Walnut Association. Although preferring his home to the best club in the world, Mr. Myers was for some years an Odd Fellow. He is out and out a loyal, enthusiastic American, and during the recent war supported the work of the Red Cross whenever and however he was able.

AUGUSTUS G. MILLER.—A highly-esteemed member of the Masonic fraternity of Fullerton, and a citizen who has become a man of affairs in other departments of life, adding by his daily labors to the stability of institutions and furthering the aims of commerce and finance, is Augustus G. Miller, the rancher of East Orangethorpe Avenue, and vice-president of the Placentia-Fullerton Walnut Growers Association. He was born in Chicago, Ill., on June 26, 1864, the son of August Carl and Rose (Bartels) Miller. The father came from Hanover, Germany, in 1852 to escape military oppression, and for six years was busy in New York City as an expert sugar boiler in Havemeyer's Sugar Refinery. In 1858 they came on to Chicago, Ill., and continued in the sugar industry until the Civil War broke out in 1861. He then offered his services as a soldier in the Federal Army; but he was refused enlistment on account of a crippled right hand. This led him to turn to the mercantile field, in which he accumulated a small fortune; but the Chicago fire of 1871 burned up all of his holdings and left him stranded, penniless.

He then moved away in 1874 into the valley of the Des Plaines River, just west of Chicago, where he leased a farm of 140 acres and went into market-gardening for the Chicago trade; but four years later he removed to a farm of 140 acres near Fort Scott, Kans., in 1880, and there in Bourbon County he raised corn, grain and cattle. He was assisted all this time by our subject, who profited greatly on account of his father's experience and dependable guidance.

In about 1895 they sold out and joined our subject at Fullerton and with him they had a comfortable home until their death. The father died January 26, 1913, while the mother survived until the following March. Of their three children Augustus is the only son and the second oldest of the family; his two sisters are Mrs. Bertha Leaton and Mrs. Mathilda Greenwalt of Los Angeles. Augustus received his education in the public schools of Chicago although his advantages were somewhat limited on account of having to work to assist his father make a living, after the total loss in the Chicago fire. However, by self study, reading and business experiences he has become a well-informed man.

On October 19, 1889, Augustus Miller was married at Uniontown, Kans., to Miss Minnie Teague, a native of Bourbon County, Kans., and the daughter of Calvin T. Teague and Mary Holt, his wife. Both the Teague and Holt families were early settlers in Kansas, and Joab Teague, Mrs. Miller's grandfather, rode 250 miles on horseback carrying from Jefferson City, Mo., the first apple trees brought to Uniontown, Kans. He planted the trees there and took the gold medal in 1876 with apples from the trees exhibited at the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. Mrs. Miller's father taught school in Kansas in the log-cabin schoolhouse days, and first directed the course of many who afterward attained prominence in the western world.

Just after the great "boom" in Southern California realty, Mr. Miller came to California in February, 1891, and was made superintendent of the Gordon Ranch in the San Joaquin Valley, near Hanford in Tulare County; and there he remained until 1894. In that year he removed to Riverside, and became superintendent of the San Jacinto Land Company. He had 800 acres under his charge, and 600 acres of these he laid out and planted to oranges and lemons. The land was hilly, and the laying out of the rows of trees was difficult in the extreme; he superintended the care of them for eight years and today it is a very valuable orchard.

As early as 1899 Mr. Miller purchased eighteen acres, which he improved while superintendent of the San Jacinto Ranch. Half of this acreage is set out to Valencia orange trees and half to walnuts, and the whole is under the Anaheim Union Water Company. In February, 1913, he purchased twenty acres at Woodlake in Tulare County which he developed by setting out oranges and olives, and now he has a fine grove there of five-year-old trees in a frostless belt.

Of the two children granted Mr. and Mrs. Miller, Mamie became the wife of Rufus G. Killian and resided at Woodlake until she passed away June 25, 1919. Merrill

H. is a graduate of Fullerton high school, now with the Union Oil Company. The family attend the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Miller is a Republican in national political affairs, but nonpartisan when it comes to local movements; he is an original stockholder in the Standard Bank of Orange County in Fullerton, a director in the Anaheim Union Water Company, and a member and director of the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Growers Association. He is also a past master of Fullerton Lodge, No. 191, F. & A. M. and was a prime mover in the building of the new Masonic temple of which he is trustee. He is also a member of Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., in which he is serving as chaplain and is a member of Santa Ana Council, R. & S. M. He is at present serving his second term as patron of the Eastern Star, to which excellent organization Mrs. Miller also belongs. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were active in all the recent war and Red Cross drives, Mr. Miller being captain of the local bond drive committee.

JOHN R. PORTER.—A leading financier of Orange County whose influence among the old-timers of both Santa Ana and Orange is continually felt, and for the best, is John R. Porter, a man known to attend strictly to his business, to drive the same along, and never to allow his business affairs to drive him along. He is cashier of the National Bank of Orange, and though primarily most devoted to that well-established and prosperous institution, he is ever ready to give a helping hand to any other establishment of value to the Orange County communities. He was born in Galesburg, Ill., in 1867, and was educated at Knox College, from which he was graduated with the degree of B. S. in 1886. Then he came out to California, and at Santa Ana was soon employed by the Commercial Bank as bookkeeper. When the Bank of Orange was opened in the boom year of 1887, he removed to Orange and became the new bank's bookkeeper. The bank bought their present corner on the Plaza and then erected their imposing building, and from the first they have enjoyed an excellent patronage.

In 1889, however, Mr. Porter resigned his position in the Orange bank and returned to Santa Ana, having been elected the first tax collector of Orange County; and in January, 1890, he entered upon the duties of the office. A year of the work satisfied him, especially as the First National Bank of Santa Ana offered him the tellership; and so he resigned to work for that banking house. In 1893 he resigned again, having purchased an interest in a new shoe store in Santa Ana; and there he continued until July, 1895, when he returned to Orange, as cashier of the Bank of Orange—a position of increasing responsibility which he has filled with signal ability.

In 1906 the bank was nationalized and named the National Bank of Orange, starting thus with a capital of fifty thousand dollars; and later the capital of the bank was increased to $100,000. Now the deposits total over $1,250,000. In 1906 was also started the Orange Savings Bank, affiliated with the National Bank of Orange, and of this Mr. Porter has also since been cashier. Undoubtedly, both of these splendid institutions owe much of their progress and prosperity to Mr. Porter's conservative policy and careful management, for it is looked upon as one of the strongest banks in Orange County. The character of its officers has had much to do with favoring it with the confidence of the public; and never yet has that confidence been shaken.

Some time ago Mr. Porter improved ten acres of orange grove on Batavia Street, but this excellent property he has recently disposed of. He now owns a walnut orchard. He is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and most emphatically believes that it is the cooperation of the growers, there brought about, that spells the success of the enterprise.

Mr. Porter was made a Mason in Santa Ana Lodge, F. & A. M., and is now a member of Orange Grove Lodge, No. 293, F. & A. M. He belongs to Orange Grove Chapter, No. 99, R. A. M., and to the Santa Ana Commandery, No. 36, K. T. He is also a life member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and a member of the Santa Ana lodge of the Elks.

DILLARD E. FORD AND RAY FORD.—The Ray Ford Company of Santa Ana, the popular and well-known dealers in hay, grain and feed, is composed of Ray Ford and his father, Dillard E. Ford. Ray Ford is a native son, born at Fullerton, August 30, 1897; his father is a native of Missouri, while his mother, who in maidenhood was Polly Steele, was born in Georgia. They are the parents of seven children: Helena, Ray, Le Roy, Richard, Russell, Mary and Eleanor.

Dillard E. Ford located in Fullerton in 1895, where he was engaged with the St. Helena Ranch Company, north of Fullerton, and planted walnut trees which were among the first planted in that district. Later he purchased land near Placentia, part of which he sold, and on this same land oil is now being developed. Afterwards Mr. Ford located at Huntington Beach, being one of the pioneers of that thriving beach city, having been there when the town was laid out, and became foreman of the Huntington

D J McCarthey

Beach Company. He was also foreman of the Bolsa Ranch, then owned by Robert Norton. For three years Mr. Ford was engaged in raising celery in the peat land section of Orange County. Later he became buyer for the Interstate Fruit Distributors Association, the first association to ship fruit and vegetables out of Orange County.

In 1912, when the Holly Sugar Factory at Huntington Beach was built, Mr. Ford entered their employ and so efficient has been his service that he is still with the company and now fills the important post of agriculturist. On Fairview Avenue, south of Santa Ana, Mr. Ford owns a five-acre ranch set to young walnut trees, and here he also engages in poultry raising, having 500 chickens in his flock. He has always taken an active interest in the growth and development of Orange County and at one time was the owner of fifty-five acres near the race track, south of Santa Ana, which he devoted to sugar beets. Fraternally Mr. Ford is an Odd Fellow, a member of Downey Lodge.

Ray Ford received his early education in the public schools of Huntington Beach and Santa Ana, after which, for a year and a half, he looked after his father's ranch. His next employment was as storekeeper for the Holly Sugar Factory at Huntington Beach. During the World War he valiantly responded to the call of his country, enlisting June 29, 1918, in the U. S. Navy as a seaman gunner. He was attached to the U. S. Mine Carrier Lakeview, and saw fourteen months of service, receiving his honorable discharge August 16, 1919. After leaving the Navy Mr. Ford returned to Santa Ana, where, in partnership with his father, they bought the feed store of R. S. Smith on North Birch Street. They deal in hay, grain, mill feed, fuel, seeds and poultry supplies. Mr. Ford is making a splendid success in his new enterprise.

On January 14, 1920, Ray Ford was united in marriage with Miss Florence N. Cary, born at Talbert, a daughter of Robert J. Cary, who was formerly a rancher there but is now a resident of San Bernardino County.

DENNIS J. MCCARTHY.—A well-traveled and well-informed rancher who is particularly familiar with Alaska, having visited and thoroughly explored that country several times, is Dennis J. McCarthy, at present farming to the northeast of Anaheim. He was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, on February 5, 1857, the son of Jeremiah McCarthy, a railroad man, who had married Mary Holland. They were both born in County Cork, Ireland, but were married in England and there they followed farming until 1854, when they came to Cincinnati, Ohio. During the Civil War Jeremiah McCarthy was in the government employ as a wagon maker.

In 1865 they removed to Osgood, Ripley County, Ind., where they purchased a farm and resided there until their demise. This worthy couple had seven children Dennis J. being the second oldest. The lad attended the Ripley County schools, and just how hard he had to strive for what educational advantages he enjoyed may be gathered from the fact that he walked four miles to the schoolhouse, which was opened for only four months in the year. Like his father, he took up railway work, and it was not long before his services were fully appreciated by those employing him.

In 1881 he came west to Colorado for railroad construction, and the next spring to Wyoming and in the fall of 1882 proceeded on to San Francisco, Cal. For a short time he was busy in railroad building in San Francisco and vicinity, and then he removed to Idaho and settled at Pocatello, where he took up bridge building. From Pocatello, he worked for the Oregon Short Line out toward Butte, Mont., and Huntington, Ore., Granger, Wyo., and Ogden, Utah, and he assisted in erecting some of the most notable bridges along the great railway lines.

In 1902, Mr. McCarthy returned to California and settled in Anaheim, where he purchased ten acres at the corner of North and Sunkist avenues. It was bare land when he acquired possession; but in 1914 he set out a fine grove of Valencia trees, and now he owns one of the handsome, promising orchards of the county. His land is served by the Anaheim Union Water Company, and he markets through the Red Fox Packing House.

Mr. McCarthy is an authority on Alaska, although he speaks with modesty of what he has seen and accomplished there, having made no less than five trips to the land of the Midnight Sun. He first went there in 1898, at the time of the rush to the Klondike for gold, and in partnership with S. W. Evans went over the White Pass, leaving Skagway February 1, over the snow. They took 3,500 pounds of provisions, as well as tools, and used one horse and two sleds on this trip and camped on snow over forty feet deep. In 1899, he made a second trip, and the next year a third. In 1916 he went to Anchorage, Alaska, and the next year to Juneau. He was an eyewitness to stirring events in historic days, and took an active part of the making of history in Alaska. It is no wonder, therefore, that he is nonpartisan in politics, and decidedly believes in selecting men fit for office regardless of party.

HENRY DEAN POLHEMUS.—An interesting representative of a fine old California family long identified with the pioneer history of Orange County, is Henry D. Polhemus, who was born on the old Polhemus ranch on the State Highway, south of Anaheim, April 27, 1890, the son of Henry D. and Emma M. (Hanna) Polhemus. Henry D. Polhemus, Sr., was born in Valparaiso, Chili, October 13, 1843. His father, John Hart Polhemus, was the American minister to Chili at the time, serving during President Tyler's administration. In 1849 they made the voyage back to the States, locating at Mt. Holly, Burlington County, N. J., where Henry D. received his preparation for college and entered the Jersey Collegiate Institute. After completing a course there he entered a pharmacy, continuing until August 26, 1862, when fired by patriotism he enlisted in the Twenty-third New Jersey Volunteer Infantry and rose to the rank of hospital steward. He was in the battle of Fredericksburg, December 13, 1862. He continued in service until June 27, 1863, when he was honorably discharged by reason of the expiration of his term of enlistment.

In August, 1863, he migrated to California via Panama and made his way on to Empire City, Nev., where he was assayer for the Silver State Reduction Works for one year when he returned to San Francisco and became agent for the San Francisco and San Jose Railroad until the fall of 1868, when he resigned and came with the Los Angeles and San Bernardino Land Association with whom he continued for several years. In February, 1876, he became agent at San Rafael for the North Pacific Coast Railroad and in May, 1877, he assumed the same position for the company at Tomales. In 1880 he came to Anaheim and purchased thirty-five acres on what is now the State Highway at Flores station on the Southern Pacific where he was agent for a time. However, he soon engaged in farming and improved the place to walnuts. He died in 1900. His widow survives him and resides in Artesia; she was born at Clintonville, Va., November 5, 1852. Her father, John Hanna, was also a pioneer of Orange County and had a thirty-five-acre ranch on the State Highway, having located in this section as early as 1862.

Henry D. Polhemus was sent to the grammar schools of Katella, and later attended the Harvard Military School at Los Angeles. On September 21, 1912, he was married to Miss Christine Joens, a native of Oakland, and the daughter of John and Sophia (Hansen) Joens, who were early settlers of Oakland. Her father was a merchant of Oakland, and he came to Los Angeles and was prominent as a produce merchant there at the time of the marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Joens now reside at the Polhemus home. Two children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Polhemus, and they bear the pretty names of Evelyn Martha and Henry Dean, Jr. Mr. Polhemus took an apprentice's course in electrical work in the International Correspondence School, and was engaged by the Los Angeles Railroad as an electrician up to 1907. Then he went with the Southern California Edison Company as operator at the Katella Station, and was with them for over three years. He resigned and in 1911 was engaged by the Union Oil Company as chief electrician and has had charge of their electrical work in the Southern division, extending from Santa Paula in Ventura County to San Juan Capistrano and he also had charge of their telephone line as well as all construction work.

On his twenty-first birthday, Mr. Polhemus was given by his mother ten acres of land on Placentia and Cerritos avenues, and although it was barren then, he has since set it out to Valencia orange trees now bearing. He has a trim ranch, and markets through the Anaheim Mutual Orange Distributors Association. Mr. Polhemus was made a Mason in Anaheim Lodge No. 207, F. & A. M., and politically he votes for the best man irrespective of party.

WILLIAM L. YORK.—A successful horticulturist and a conservative, yet progressive financier of philanthropic tendencies, distinguished as one of the public-spirited citizens in the La Habra Valley, and certainly one who has inspired others to do their best for society and in particular for their home district, William L. York occupies an enviable position in Orange County. He was born in Aledo, Mercer County, Ill., in 1865, the only son of Charles York, a Kentuckian, who migrated to Illinois and there did yeoman service as a pioneer. He owned many head of oxen, and took up the work of a prairie breaker, hiring out his ox teams. Once, long ago, he visited California, but he never settled here. He owned a farm of 320 acres, where he raised stock and grain, and he served his fellow-citizens as tax collector of his township for many terms. This farm had been preempted by the maternal grandfather, Zachariah Landreth, from the U. S. Government, when that state was a territory, and he sold it to Charles York, and on this farm both Charles York and his wife died. Some of the apple trees on the place are from seventy to eighty years old, and when our subject and his wife made a trip East last year, they found the farm still kept up to its normal condition. Mrs. Charles York was Miss Jane Landreth, a native of the state of Pennsylvania, but born of English parentage.

H. F. Towne.

William York attended the district school, and then studied for a term at Heding College; and when he was twenty-one years of age, he assumed the management of the farm. Later, during the winter months, he taught school. On March 20, 1890, he was married to Miss Clara Bell Tenney, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Tenney, pioneer agriculturists in Mercer County, Ill. She also was a pupil of the common schools of her district, afterward attended Simpson College, and, when sixteen years old, taught the district school. In fact, for a term after their marriage, both Mr. and Mrs. York taught school.

Mr. York farmed in Illinois until 1902, and for three terms he was a justice of the peace in Mercer County. When he came West, his destination was Whittier, and there he paid the record price up to that time for ten acres of citrus fruit. In 1911 he sold his Whittier holdings and bought seventeen acres of year-old Eureka lemons at La Habra. He is a member of the La Habra Valley Water Company, and is vice-president of the La Habra Citrus Association. He is also president of the First National Bank of La Habra, which is operated in connection with the Federal Reserve.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. York: Frank Albert enlisted November 17, 1917, in the Twenty-sixth Engineers, as a private of the first class, and was trained at Camp Dix. He was overseas for nine months, and during that time was on the front for seven months, and participated in the Argonne and the Meuse offensives, and fought at Chateau Thierry and at Metz. In April, 1919, he was honorably discharged from Camp Fremont. After leaving the army he married Miss Clara Baldwin, and they have one daughter, Willa Jane. He is engaged in the oil production business as a driller. Maribel, the second child, is the wife of David F. Lemke, the rancher at Placentia, and now has three children, Cloise Dudley, John York and Robert Lewis. Mr. and Mrs. York and family are Methodists, and Mr. York is a church trustee. In national politics he is a Democrat, but in local movements decidedly nonpartisan.

H. FRED TOWNER.—A man who believes in turning out only the highest standard of work is H. Fred Towner, the well-known manufacturer of agricultural implements and tractor attachments at Santa Ana. He was born at Santa Ana on September 26, 1882, the son of A. J. Towner, who had married Mrs. Augusta E. Hamilton. His parents came from Syracuse, N. Y., in 1880, and settled at Santa Ana, where they ranched. A. J. Towner was a gunsmith by trade and also conducted a sporting goods store. Fred's grandfather, Judge James William Towner, an attorney by profession, was the first judge of the Superior Court in Orange County and when he resigned in 1897 he was presented with a gold-headed cane by the Orange County Bar. This cane is now a prized heirloom in the possession of our subject. A. J. Towner died in Santa Ana, while his wife passed away at the home of a daughter in New York. Their daughter Xarifa succumbed to influenza while on a visit to Michigan.

Tiring rather early of the tasks at the public school, H. Fred Towner left his books because he preferred to work. At the age of seventeen he began to learn the blacksmith trade under W. C. Young, a pioneer blacksmith of Santa Ana, working for wages until October, 1914. The following year he built the first part of his present place and in 1920 he erected a larger building adjoining and now has a building 100 by 90, and on the rear of his lots a warehouse 30 by 90. His establishment is splendidly fitted out with modern machinery and he employs about twenty-one men, each of them skilled in his particular line. The factory is located at 105-07-09-11 North Main Street and it is Mr. Towner's intention to continue to enlarge his plant and to give work to a still larger force of employees.

The establishment is equipped as an up-to-date machine shop, with lathes, shapers, high-speed drills, power punches, shears, automatic thread cutters and triphammers, as well as hacksaws and emery stands, the whole being operated by electric power from motors of a combined capacity of thirty-two and a half horsepower and it is the consensus of opinion that it is the best-equipped machine shop in the county. He is the largest manufacturer of agricultural implements in the county and is equipped to do all kinds of work in this line. His motto is, "If nobody else will build it we will," and he has handled a number of jobs that no one else on the coast would attempt and has made a success of them because of his initiative and experience.

Mr. Towner's specialty is the building to order of farm implements, such as subsoil plows, cyclones, bean planters, bean cutters, cultivators, furrowers, gang plows and other farm machinery. He has patented a subsoil plow which has an oscillating standard, and has taken out a second patent on this subsoiler, which oscillates below the frame instead of in the frame; he has taken this out to protect his first patent and they are the only oscillating subsoilers on the market that one can back up with. He also has a third patent on the subsoiler called the Perfection subsoiler, an attachment to the Oliver plow, and it is an exclusive Fordson automatic tool. He has also invented and manufactures a patent hitch for Fordson and Samson tractors and a patent roller hitch for them and tractors of similar construction. At the present time Mr. Towner furnishes all the extension grousers for Fordson tractors for all the Pacific Coast states and all the extension grousers for the Samson tractors in the state of California. He also carries a large stock of steel, heavy and light bolts and nuts, as well as coal and general blacksmith's supplies for the retail trade.

On May 14, 1905, Mr. Towner was married to Miss Anna Schlasman, the ceremony taking place at Orange. Three sons blessed the union: James William, who died when he was fourteen months old; H. Frederick and Rutherford Glenn. The family occupy their own home at 833 North Baker Street, on the corner of Towner Street, named for his father. Mr. Towner belongs to the Maccabees and is a life member of the Elks. While a Democrat in national politics, in local matters he is a man above mere party lines. He is a believer in church and educational institutions and is always ready to contribute his share toward worthy enterprises and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Towner was a member of the old Santa Ana Volunteer Fire Department and for some years served as its vice-president.

EDMUND E. KNIGHT.—After an interesting life, many years of which were spent in a foreign land, Edmund E. Knight, the proprietor of the well-known Guatemala Avocado Nursery, located in Orange County in 1914, purchasing a tract of five acres on North Eureka Avenue, Yorba Linda, where he has since made his home. Born at Utica, Mich., May 4, 1860, Mr. Knight was the son of Philip Atwood Knight, who was a member of one of the earliest classes to graduate from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. For fifty years he was a prominent physician and surgeon at Utica, passing away there at the age of seventy-seven.

Educated in the public and high schools of his native town, Mr. Knight remained there until he was eighteen years of age, when he came West with an uncle, and for five years remained in Nevada and San Francisco. In 1885 he went back to the old home in Michigan on a visit and was returning to San Francisco by way of Panama when he decided to stop off at Guatemala, and he remained in Mexico, Central and South America for a period of thirty years. He established himself as a railroad contractor in different parts of those countries, and a part of the time was engaged in general merchandising and farming. At the time of his leaving there he was the oldest American resident in point of years of continuous sojourn in Guatemala. During his residence there he married into a well-known old Spanish family, and two children, a son and a daughter, were born to this union: Alfred is a train dispatcher in Honduras; Ellen, Mrs. Martina Vernon, resides at the family home at Yorba Linda. Mrs. Knight passed away in Guatemala.

Mr. Knight had made numerous trips to the States, and on his trips to California came to the conclusion there was a splendid opening here for raising avocados. At the time of the first Balkan War railroad building in Central America ceased because the companies could not borrow the money to finance their building, so Mr. Knight sold his holdings and came to Los Angeles. After looking over different portions of Southern California, he selected Yorba Linda as the most suitable because it is practically frostless and has an abundance of good water. So, in March, 1914, Mr. Knight began an extensive planting of avocado seedlings on his ranch at Yorba Linda, and shortly afterward went direct to Guatemala, Central America, to procure avocado buds from the best trees fruiting in that country, famed for the finest avocados. It was necessary for him to obtain a special permit from the United States Government to import these buds, and in order to insure them arriving in proper condition he had a special refrigerator box built on board ship to preserve the buds in their dormant state. Returning to the United States, he brought with him the first successful shipment of the famous Guatemala hard-shell avocado, comprising 41,000 buds, and from these he was able to grow eighty-one sturdy trees. He is the only individual that has imported avocado buds into the U. S. from Guatemala and made them grow, and this two years before the Bureau of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture at Washington did it successfully. From the beginning Mr. Knight was quick to see the wonderful possibilities in the avocado industry in the United States, and his thorough study of all angles of this comparatively new branch of horticulture has made him one of the authorities in this part of the country, and he has contributed largely toward putting the industry on a successful commercial basis. He has developed Linda, Queen, Kist and Knight varieties, all of them the choicest qualities, and he finds a ready market for all the fruit he grows. He was a pioneer in the use of the overhead or spray system of irrigation, and also was the first to demonstrate that the avocado thrives best where the ground around is not cultivated. In addition to his choice nursery of avocados, he has an orchard of 600 to 700 trees, it being the first close-set orchard of avocados in California.

Mr. Knight's second marriage occurred at Los Angeles on April 29, 1919, when he was united with Mrs. Florence (Wade) DeVries. She was born at Fremont, Mich., a daughter of Warren and Jennie Wade. Her father was a lumberman, being president of the Michigan Lumber Company. He died in 1910, being survived by his widow. Mrs. Knight is a graduate of the Ypsilanti State Normal and was supervisor of manual training of the Pontiac schools for twelve years. She has one son by her first marriage, Wade DeVries, a senior at the University of Michigan. Mr. Knight was made a Mason in California Lodge No. 1, F. & A. M., San Francisco, and is a charter member of Yorba Linda Lodge No. 469, F. & A. M., as well as Fullerton Commandery, K. T., and with his wife is a member of Yorba Linda Chapter, O. E. S. A charter member of the California Avocado Association, Mr. Knight is one of its most enthusiastic members, and never misses a meeting of the organization. A liberal in politics, he is interested in all the progressive movements of the locality. Fond of outdoor life, he finds much recreation in exploring the high Sierras.

A. K. CRAVATH.—A public-spirited official who has labored long and accomplished much at his own private expense for the benefit of the mass of his fellow-citizens, is A. K. Cravath, the wide-awake and popular deputy sheriff of Orange County, who was born in Chesterville, Knox County, Ohio, eight miles from Mount Vernon, on April 23, 1852. His father, Samuel P. Cravath born in Genesee County, N. Y., was a cabinet maker, with his own shop and trade; and he had married, in Pennsylvania, Miss Katherine Freeman, born in Crawford County, Pa. They moved to Will County, Ill., in 1855, and there Mr. Cravath rented a farm for three years; after which they removed to Worth County, Iowa, where they purchased a quarter-section farm lying along the Minnesota state line, which they devoted to corn and stock.

The lad, A. K., was educated at the district school at North Wood and finished his studies in the Baptist Seminary at Osage, Iowa. Then he returned to the home farm and continued to assist the folks at home until June, 1872. In that year he came to California with his sister, Mrs. C. C. Watson and her husband, a Civil War veteran who had lost an arm, and settled in San Diego County, where Mr. Watson purchased a ranch of 320 acres in Powey Valley, which he devoted to dry farming and stock raising. Mr. Cravath continued to live and work in San Diego County until he acquired 880 acres in one tract in Powey Valley, and 870 acres in another tract in Bernardo, half way between Powey and Escondido. The home place, however, he sold in 1886, and then he became assistant manager in the Escondido Land & Town Company, which was operated by San Diego capital, and with that company he remained for eight years.

When he sold out his interest in 1894, he removed to Santa Ana, and he has lived in the latter town ever since, serving as deputy sheriff for eight years under Lacy and for four years under Jackson, at the present time being associated with the district attorney's office as special investigator. Nearly all the time he has been connected with the police and constable departments. In national politics a Progressive Republican, Mr. Cravath has endeavored most conscientiously to discharge his duties as a citizen in favor of the highest civic standards, independent of all partisan considerations.

Mr. Cravath may be said to be the father, in many respects, of Escondido, where he built the first home and the first business block—at the corner of Grand Avenue and Lime Street—then known as the Escondido Bank block and now familiar as the home of the Escondido National Bank, which he organized in the boom year, 1887; a prime mover in incorporating the city of Escondido he was a member and chairman of its first board of trustees. He built, in fact, many of the best homes in Escondido, and spent the best years of his life, and the best part of his private capital, in developing, first the water system of Escondido, and then the water supply in the neighboring valley, thereby bringing to a high state these much-needed public utilities. He brought the water down from the San Luis Rey River, from what is known as Palomar in the Smith Mountains, accomplishing a great engineering feat, by means of tunnels, ditches and flumes, in leading the water across intervening ridges. One tunnel of 640 feet through solid rock, at San Luis Rey River, connected with a flume and then a ditch, carried the flow for sixteen miles through what are known as horseshoe bends, to Valley Center and after that through another tunnel 470 feet long, emptying the water into a reservoir in Little Bear Valley, from which the supply was sent to various parts of the valley. This work was completed in the fall of 1893, and has ever since proven one of the most useful public utilities in Southern California. The cost of the ditch line was first estimated by the consulting engineer, John D. Schuyler, to be sure to approximate a round quarter of a million dollars; but it only cost $93,000, a matter of congratulation to all concerned. He was twenty years ahead of his time and had a hard time getting the people interested and to see the vast benefit of owning the water rights. Mr. Cravath was sheriff of San Diego County, filling the unexpired term of John L. Folk, filling the office made vacant through his removal, by the Superior Court. He completed the term but was not a candidate for reelection. This exacting work made him familiar with criminal cases, and he has long enjoyed the reputation of being among the best-posted men on Southern California criminal affairs.

On December 1, 1877, Mr. Cravath was married to Miss Kate Sikes, a native daughter who first saw the light in Santa Clara, where she was educated at the district school. Her parents were Zenis and Elizabeth Sikes and her father owned 2,200 acres of the Bernardo ranch in San Diego County, which he purchased after he had come from Santa Clara in 1872. Nine children, three sons and six daughters, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cravath. Bertha was the wife of Harold Welch and she died in Colorado, leaving a son, Newell, whom Mr. and Mrs. Cravath have raised from a babe; Howard A. is a druggist at Bakersfield; Clifford C. resides at Laguna Beach, and is the manager of the Philadelphia "Nationals" baseball team; Gertrude R. is deputy county clerk of Kern County; Arlie M. is assistant secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Santa Ana; Irene resides with her parents; Verian is employed in the Unique Clothing Store at Santa Ana; Muriel D. is the stenographer of Messrs. Koepsel and Eden at Santa Ana, and Bert S. is employed by the U. S. Government in Arizona, developing water wells for the Navajo and Hopi Indian Reservation.

JOHN HENRY LANG, M. D.—Since 1911 Dr. John Henry Lang has been a resident of Fullerton and among the town's leading surgical and medical practitioners. He is a native of Cape Girardeau County, Mo., where he was born July 26, 1882. His father, W. E., now deceased, and mother, Mary C. (Schultz) Lang, were farmers, and of their family of nine children John Henry was the seventh child in order of birth. He received his preliminary education in the public schools of his native state and at the State Normal school at Cape Girardeau, and in choosing a profession in life chose that of his grandfather, David Lang, a prominent M. D. in his day and generation. Dr. J. H. Lang's professional training, which has placed him among the foremost exponents of the science of surgery and medicine wherever he has practiced, was acquired at the St. Louis University Medical Department, from which he was graduated with the class of 1906 with the degree of M. D. In selecting a place to begin the practice of his profession he chose Centertown, Mo., where he practiced successfully for five years before locating at Fullerton, Cal., in 1911. His surgical work is generally performed at the Fullerton Hospital. On two different occasions he took post-graduate courses at St. Louis and Chicago.

His marriage occurred October 17, 1906, uniting him with Miss Carrie Blanche Milster, a native of Perry County, Mo., and they are the parents of three children: Beatrice Lucile, Helen Dale and Howard Milster. Dr. Lang is a member of both state and county medical societies and vice-president of the latter. He was chief examiner of the exemption board for northern Orange County during the World War, and is the present city health officer. He is a director in the Standard Bank of Orange County, as well as the Home Builders of Fullerton, and is interested in citriculture, owning a Valencia orange grove. In his religious associations he is a Methodist, and in national politics he is a Republican. In local issues he lends his influence toward electing the man best fitted for the office, regardless of party affiliations, and is a member of the Board of Trade. Fraternally, in his Masonic connections he is a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and Fullerton Chapter R. A. M., of which he is past high priest, and is a charter member of Fullerton Commandery No. 55, K. T., and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star, in which order they are both past officers. Dr. Lang is also a member of Santa Ana Council R. & S. M., and is a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias of Fullerton, as well as affiliated with various other fraternal orders. He is also a member of the Fullerton Club. His advice and opinion carry the weight of influence and authority in all of the societies with which he is connected, and his painstaking professional efforts and maintenance of high medical ethics render him an invaluable addition to the medical fraternity of Orange County.

BENJAMIN J. FOSS.—Believing that the solution of the labor problem is not in the continual reduction of hours, but rather by increasing production by applying more hours to work, Benjamin J. Foss has put his theories into practice by developing his fourteen-acre ranch at Yorba Linda while pursuing his duties as a conductor on the Pacific Electric Railway at the same time, and he attributes his success to the fact that he gets the same recreation out of his ranch as he would from any outdoor sport.

A native of Norway, Benjamin J. Foss was born at West Toten in that northern country on September 27, 1885. His parents were John and Lina (Evenson) Foss, the father being a merchant in this Norwegian town. One of a family of thirteen children, Benjamin spent his boyhood days in the region of his birthplace, attending the public schools there. Before he had reached the age of fifteen he decided to emigrate to America, and he arrived here on April 8, 1900, going to Boyd, Minn., where an uncle, A. A. Roseth, resided. After working for several years in the lumber mill of his uncle, he decided to secure a better education, so he went to Montevideo, Minn., where he attended the public school for two years, and one year in high school, getting a general business education, which has since been of the greatest value to him. For a short time he worked as an apprentice in the paint business, but in 1904 he entered the employ of the Twin City Transit Company at Minneapolis as a conductor, continuing with this company for five years.

Coming to Los Angeles, Cal., in 1909, Mr. Foss the next day after his arrival obtained employment with the Pacific Electric Company as a conductor, through the credentials which he had earned in the East. For ten years he gave the company efficient service on the Los Angeles-La Habra-Yorba Linda line. During that time he was frequently consulted in making improvements on the time schedule, one of the most beneficial being the tying up of his car at Yorba Linda at night, thus giving the people of this locality the advantage of a late car out of Los Angeles and an early car in the morning.

In 1913 Mr. Foss purchased fourteen acres of open, barren land at Yorba Linda, and here he set about to develop his tract in his spare moments off duty. He set out a large part of the acreage to citrus trees and established a well laid out system of irrigation. In 1915 he erected a fine, comfortable residence on the ranch, and since that time has made it his home. He has recently sold four acres of his holdings, and he has leased his ranch for oil development, and as an oil well is now in process of drilling with good prospects, Mr. Foss may realize a handsome addition to his income from this source. In 1919 he resigned his position with the Pacific Electric and is now with the General Petroleum Oil Company.

On June 30, 1915, Mr. Foss was married to Miss Julia Bond, a native daughter of the Golden West, the ceremony being performed in Orange County Park. Her parents are B. F. and Laura May (Holladay) Bond, her father being one of Long Beach's pioneer realty dealers. Mrs. Foss, who is a woman of many accomplishments, was educated at the Huntington Park Training School and Long Beach high school. Mr. and Mrs. Foss are the parents of one son, Norman Olaf. They attend the Friends Church at Yorba Linda. In 1912 Mr. Foss returned to his native land for a visit, and four months were spent there and in touring Europe, when he returned to America, more than ever enthusiastic over the land of his adoption. He received his final naturalization papers on July 21, 1915, and is one of Orange County's most loyal citizens, ever ready to give of his time and means to every movement for the public good. In 1916 Mr. Foss was elected to the directorate of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association, a post he still occupies. In political matters he is a strong adherent of the Republican party.

HENRY W. DANIELS.—Beginning a meritorious career as an educator at the early age of sixteen, Henry W. Daniels is now enviably esteemed as a pedagogue of longer continuous experience than any member of the Fullerton high school faculty. Michigan was Mr. Daniels' native state, and there he was born at Onstead, on December 18, 1861, the third oldest of five children born to Calvin and Mary (Monagin) Daniels. The father was a native of Painted Post, Steuben County, N. Y., while the mother came to New York state from her native land, Ireland, when a child of three years.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Daniels came west to Michigan, settling in Lenawee County, and here Henry W. Daniels spent his early years on his father's well-kept farm. When sixteen years of age he obtained a teacher's certificate and for two years taught a district school. He then entered Adrian College, making his way through his own efforts, and after two years in college he resumed teaching, the next ten years being spent in the high schools at Ridgeway, Rome and Clinton, Mich. He then entered the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, graduating from there in 1898 with the degree of B. S., C. E., and B. P. The following year the degree of M. S. was conferred on him by Adrian College.

Following his graduation from the university, Mr. Daniels became the principal of the high school at Newago, Mich., remaining there two years, when he became superintendent of schools at St. Louis, Gratiot County, Mich., resigning there after a period of five years to come to California. In the fall of 1905 he came to Palo Alto, where for six months he did graduate work at Stanford University, and after that he was instructor of chemistry for a semester at Pomona College. At the end of the school year he came to Fullerton and was made head of physics and chemistry in the high school there. Four years later he was made head of physics and mathematics, continuing until 1919, when he was relieved of physics, so that he could devote all his time as head of mathematics.

MURRAY A. PATTON, D.D.S.—A dentist who has done much to elevate and preserve a high standard of ethics for the profession in Orange County, is Murray A. Patton of Santa Ana, who was born in Adams County, Nebr., on March 3, 1879. His father was M. B. Patton, now deceased, and he married Miss Alice Hossler. As parents having the best interests of their children at heart, they afforded such educational advantages as were possible to the lad, who grew up on a Nebraska farm.

When he was fifteen, the family came west to California, and at Santa Ana he continued his schooling, first in the grammar grades and then at the Santa Ana high school, from which he was graduated in 1900.

Going to Chicago, he took his professional courses at the dental school of the Northwestern University and graduated with the Class of '03. He might have found a lucrative field in the East, but he preferred California and so came to Santa Ana. On May 6, 1906, Dr. Patton was married to Miss Etta McNeil. Their union has been a fortunate one, and has been blessed in the birth of two children, Thelma Christine and Murray McNeil.

Dr. Patton, who is fond of hunting, golf and mountain climbing, belongs to the Lodge, Council, Chapter and Commandery in Masonry and the Elks and in the circle of each enjoys an enviable popularity. He is deeply interested in his home district, and ever ready, as a member of the Rotary Club, to "boost" any reasonable movement for local advancement.

ROY CHARLES PETERSON.—Probably there never was a time when it was equally a matter of interest as to the character and experience of the men in charge of the American shoe trade, and that may be one reason why success has rewarded the efforts of Roy Charles Peterson to serve the public, as proprietor of Peterson's Shoe Store, to the best of his ability. In Canada, where he was born, at Waterville, in Quebec, he laid the foundations on which he has subsequently, as a typically enterprising American, so handsomely built. His father was Charles O. Peterson, and the maiden name of his mother was Margaret Porteous.

The family came to Santa Ana in 1907, and there the father engaged in the selling of shoes, and soon established an enviable reputation for both his judgment in selection and his ability to outdistance his competitors in prices. After a while he disposed of his interests, and retired. He died in January, 1920, at Santa Ana, and his good wife preceded him, passing away April 17, 1912.

Educated at the public schools in Canada, Roy was fortunate in being sent to the preparatory school for Dartmouth College at St. Johnsbury, Vt. Later, as a commercial representative, he traveled through the Canadian Northwest for several years, and when he joined his father at Santa Ana in 1907, it was to bring the fruits of wide wandering and varied experience for the benefit generally of the new business. In June, 1912, Mr. Peterson opened an establishment on Sycamore Street but as the business grew he moved to his new location, 215 West Fourth Street in June, 1920.

Notwithstanding these pressing obligations, Mr. Peterson responded to his country's call during the great World War, and on October 30, 1918, enlisted in the Twenty-fifth Regiment, U. S. Heavy Artillery. He was keyed up for action and sacrifice; but the armistice prevented him seeing the service he had hoped to engage in. He therefore resumed, as an American and a Republican, such work as has been possible for him to perform in elevating the standard of good citizenship.

Mr. Peterson's wife was named Alice Norton before her marriage, and she shares with him an agreeable popularity in the circles where they are known. He is a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Elks Lodge, where he is the Exalted Ruler (1920). Fond of fishing and other healthful diversions, Mr. Peterson loses no opportunity to "boost" Santa Ana and all Orange County, and so is naturally a livewire in the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce.

MRS. ADELINA CARRILLO.—A charming and most interesting representative of one of California's most celebrated native families is Mrs. Adelina Carrillo, a sister of Felipa Dominguez, a daughter of Prudencio Yorba, a granddaughter of Bernardo Yorba, and a great-granddaughter of Antonio Yorba, who came direct from Spain to the Pacific Coast. Although of refined temperament and gentle demeanor, Mrs. Carrillo is a successful rancher and has very well managed her several properties, thanks in part to the assistance of her children. She owns a fine home ranch of 207 acres, and a grain ranch of 141 acres at Corona, in Riverside County, but makes her home on the ranch at Esperanza.

She was born at Yorba, then Los Angeles County, November 20, 1853, and as a child, attended the public school at Peralta, and then, to finish her education, she went to the Academy of Sisters of Charity in Los Angeles. On January 19, 1884, she was married to Joseph R. Carrillo, born in Los Angeles. Seven children blessed the union.

Two were lost in infancy, and one has passed away of late. The other four are: Esperanza, who graduated from both the Corona high school and the State University at Berkeley, is now a teacher in the Hollywood High School; Edelfrida, also a graduate of the Corona high school, is the wife of Homer Pate, a farmer at Corona; Eutimio, the next, manages his mother's home ranch of 207 acres; and Elena is the wife of Norman Reeves, the oil man living at Esperanza. Eutimio served in the great World War, and joined the provost guard at Camp Kearny; and after serving with honor in the infantry, he was discharged with the coveted credentials on January 9, 1919, at Camp Kearny. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus.

Audel, the fourth oldest, was assisting in operating his mother's ranches when a mournful tragedy disturbed the otherwise placid waters of the Carrillo family life—a tragedy whose one consolation was the evidence of the old heroic Yorba spirit that had animated the family for generations. On May 26, 1919, Audel Carrillo, visiting the Corona ranch, suddenly came upon two Mexican bandits who had broken into the ranch house and they shot him in cold blood—first, two inches below the heart and secondly in the back. With wonderful nerve and fortitude, the wounded young man, although bleeding profusely, drove his automobile to Corona at a speed of forty-five miles an hour, in quest of medical aid; and after personally reporting his case to the police, he went to the Riverside Hospital. There he was operated upon and made a brave fight for life; and although he lived from ten o'clock that morning until eight o'clock the following evening, he died on May 27, in his twenty-seventh year. He was powerfully built and had been not only an indefatigable worker, but had played fullback on the Corona high school football team. He was, therefore, a general favorite—loved by everyone who knew him; and when he was buried at the Yorba Cemetery, his remains were followed to their last resting place by a large concourse of friends.

E. MARTIN CHRISTENSEN.—An upright, energetic and thoroughly capable young man who has already had a broad and valuable experience in life, is E. M. Christensen, known to his friends as "Martin," a native son, having been born in Los Angeles on November 20, 1884. His father was S. Christensen, a native of Denmark, who had married Johanna Christine Johnson, of Sweden. They were made man and wife in California, and came to Orange County in 1890. He had been foreman for the Griffith Lumber Company in Los Angeles, where he also built up a transfer business in the early eighties; and was employed by that firm to come to Santa Ana, lay out their yard here, and start their business. He is now an orange grower and has a ranch of forty-seven acres in the Garden Grove precinct, and there he and his good wife are among the most respected residents. Eight children—five boys and three girls—were born of this union; one boy died in 1886, and a daughter married Samuel Gibson and died on January 13, 1920.

S. Christensen having moved with his family direct to his ranch at Garden Grove in 1890, Martin Christensen's schooling was obtained in the Garden Grove district. He worked on the home farm until he was sixteen, and then he went north to Alaska, to seek his fortune. At Seward he worked with a construction gang for eleven months, when he was kicked by a horse and so severely injured that he was laid up in the hospital and lost his hearing in the left ear for fourteen years. Of late he has been slowly recovering the use of the injured organ, thanks to scientific skill and the patient ministrations of a devoted doctor.

From Alaska Mr. Christensen came back to the States and followed construction work in Oregon and San Francisco as a cement finisher. He reached San Francisco just after the earthquake, and the following year settled in Garden Grove, where he established himself as a cement contractor and manufacturer of cement pipes for irrigation. He had no difficulty in demonstrating his ability in his chosen field, and soon built up an extensive business in pipe-making and the installing of irrigation systems.

Mr. Christensen's cement pipe plant is located on the ten acres which he bought in the Garden Grove precinct in November, 1919, and where he has a full complement of machinery and tools, with a mixer run by a two-horse power electric motor. He makes eight-inch, ten-inch and twelve-inch pipe, and in this section alone has laid about 100 miles of piping.

Besides this property, Mr. Christensen owns ten acres in the Katella voting precinct, where he resides, and two houses and lots in Garden Grove. He belongs to the Orange Growers Association at Garden Grove, to the Walnut Growers Association at Anaheim, and to the Central Lemon Growers Association at Villa Park, being interested in the culture of all three of these fruits.

On April 7, 1915, Mr. Christensen was married to Miss Rachel Knapp, a sister of J. A. Knapp, the well-known "Chili King." He and his good wife belong to the Baptist Church, and under the leadership of the Republican party, he votes for the principles and the men representing them most appealing to his conscience.

MRS. FELIPA Y. DOMINGUEZ.—A very interesting and distinguished representative of one of the noblest of Southern California families is Mrs. Felipa Dominguez, the well-to-do widow of the late Pablo Dominguez, and a successful rancher at Esperanza, six miles east of Placentia in the Santa Ana Canyon. She always has a story to tell that is well worth the hearing; and those who are thus favored never forget the charm of her sympathetic and genial personality, as a delightful souvenir of "the good old days" of California hospitality.

The parents of Mrs. Dominguez were Prudencio Yorba and his good wife, who was Dolores Ontiveros before her marriage, and they had twelve children: Felipa, our subject, was the eldest, and attended the Sisters School at Los Angeles; Adelina, the next in the order of birth, is now Mrs. Carrillo and owns a ranch of 207 acres in the Yorba precinct, in which district David, unmarried, also lives; Angelina is the wife of Samuel Kraemer and resides in Placentia; Prudencio S. is also a rancher of the Yorba precinct; Zoraida is the widow of Coleman Travis, long a neighboring Yorba rancher, and Ernest is also a Yorba farmer; Dolores and her husband, Joseph Ruiz, reside in Santa Maria; Esperanza lived to see her fifteenth year, and the other children passed away at a very early age. Esperanza, the freight station on the Santa Fe, which has proven of such convenience in the dispatching of fresh fruit and other farm products, was named after the lamented daughter. Mrs. Dominguez was born at Yorba, August 24, 1852, and is now, therefore, one of the oldest settlers in what is now Orange County.

Mrs. Dominguez was unusually fortunate in her ancestry and may be pardoned for especial pride in her family associations with the historic past. Her great-grandfather was Antonio Yorba, a native of Catalonia, Spain, who came to the Pacific Coast as a soldier under the Spanish commander Fages. He landed at Monterey, and stopped for a while at the famous Monterey Mission. Being full of adventure, however, he explored nearly all of Southern California lying south of Yerba Buena, and fell in love particularly with that portion of the country which was drained by the Santa Ana River and the Santiago Creek. He obtained a grant to this land, which included all the lands from San Bernardino drained by the Santa Ana River and the Santiago Creek, to the Pacific Ocean; and under his hand this vast area became a very celebrated rancho. Legally, it was known as "El Canon de San Antonio de Santa Ana de los Yorba;" and after the death of Antonio Yorba, the title passed to his son, Bernardo Yorba. The latter improved the property in many respects, and built thereon a magnificent adobe of 90 rooms, which was the scene of many elaborate social functions. It had a dance hall with a polished floor, where fandango after fandango furnished enjoyment to the wide-awake, young people. The third wife of Bernardo Yorba was a very ambitious and progressive woman, and she induced Bernardo to establish various kinds of shops and mills, where leather was tanned, and shoes, harness, saddles, lariats, tools, woolen, etc., were manufactured. Utensils of iron and copper, axes, picks, shovels, locks and keys were among the things made, and many of these products are still known to exist. The ruins only of the spacious old adobe still stand; it was of two stories, the walls were twenty-six inches thick, and they were finished with white plaster. Rancho Yorba became one of the richest, as it was also one of the most celebrated Spanish grants in Southern California. Bernardo Yorba lived to be fifty-eight years of age. Prudencio Yorba died July 3, 1885, and his wife, on November 24, 1894.

Mrs. Dominguez is also related, in a very interesting way, to one of the notable families of the North. She is a niece of Abraham Ontiveros, of Santa Maria, who was born on the San Juan Cajon rancho, on April 5, 1852, and was educated by Spanish tutors and in the public schools. He grew up on the Tepesquet ranch, and upon his father's death, inherited 2,000 acres of valuable land. Being decidedly progressive, he introduced the most up-to-date methods and machinery in the raising of his grain and stock; his horses became his pride; and to properly irrigate his land, he built a reservoir with a capacity of 200,000 gallons, on an elevation 150 feet high. After a residence of more than fifty years on his home ranch, Mr. Ontiveros abandoned farm life and moved into the town of Santa Maria. His two marriages united him with the well-known, long established Spanish families of Vidal and Arellanes.

Pablo Dominguez was born at Peralta, Orange County, in 1836, descended from an old family of California. After his marriage to Felipa Yorba, they engaged in farming at Peralta until his death in 1895, after which Mrs. Dominguez moved to her ranch at Esperanza which she inherited from her father, where she reared and educated her children. Mrs. Dominguez's 414 acres of land, was devoted largely to viticulture. When it became apparent that the nation would "go dry," the vines were grubbed out and in 1919 twenty-five acres of Valencia oranges planted in their stead. A Fordson tractor is used for plowing, and eight horses assist in the cultivating. Mrs. Dominguez makes use of a Paige automobile, and thus rapidly moves about where her distinguished ancestors journeyed in more leisurely fashion. Two hundred acres are planted to barley, and sixty acres to lima beans.

Five children blessed the union of Pablo and Felipa Dominguez: Dorinda is the wife of Adolph Marzo, he is the proprietor of the tomato cannery at Placentia, and resides at Peralta; Arnulfo Orlando, manages his mother's ranch, he also owns eighteen acres of budded walnuts on the south side of the Santa Ana River, which he himself planted six years ago; Lydia married Julian Yorba, the Puente rancher; Carlos N. helps to run the ranch, he joined the United States infantry, and was on the way to New York, to sail for France, when the train was wrecked at Geneva, Ill., and he suffered a compound fracture of the right leg, as the result of which he was honorably discharged; Pablo Vicente is married to Laura Irene Knowlton and resides in Anaheim, but he also assists his mother to operate the Dominguez ranch. The family attend the Catholic Church at Yorba, and enjoy their reunions in the handsome eight-room residence erected by Mrs. Dominguez in 1908.

JOSEPH NUSBAUMER.—An able and all-around excellent young man is Joseph Nusbaumer, son of the late Joseph Nusbaumer, the well-known pioneer who came to what is now the Newport precinct, then Los Angeles, now Orange County, as early as 1882. The elder Nusbaumer was born in Alsace, France, April 25, 1847. He served in the French army in the Franco-Prussian War. Immediately after the close of the war he came to Reno, Nev., and there he was married to Miss Sarah Britton, a native of Dayton, Ohio. She came to Nevada with friends, where she met Mr. Nusbaumer, and in September, 1882, they located in Newport precinct and purchased twenty acres which is still held by the family. Mr. Nusbaumer brought with him some of the most desirable qualities of the hard-working European; and these virtues, with those of the accomplished and ambitious American wife, were happily transmitted in their one child, the subject of our interesting sketch, who had the good fortune to be born a native son, at Santa Ana, Cal., on November 9 of the year when his parents took up their residence here. The father died on July 24, 1917, but his widow is still living.

On March 16, 1911, Joseph Nusbaumer was married at Santa Ana to Miss Beulah Lawrence, a charming and devoted lady, who was reared in the pleasant environment of Sherman, Texas. Together they have striven and worked; and as a natural reward for intelligent operation, they enjoy a handsome return from all their investments.

Mr. Nusbaumer is a Republican in matters of national political import, but he does not allow partisanship to interfere with his supporting the best men and the most reasonable measures. This is particularly the case in local affairs. He and his broad-minded wife take a keen interest in popular education, and he is a trustee of the Diamond school district, situated two miles southwest of Santa Ana.

FRED BOOSEY.—No district in Orange County, perhaps, has been more noted than Tustin for its many busy ranchers, among whom Fred Boosey must be mentioned as having made for himself a high place in the esteem of all who know him. He owns a well-cultivated ranch of ten acres devoted to citrus fruit, although he is also extensively engaged in bean growing. He formerly worked as high as 500 acres in a season, but at present he is operating 300 acres in conjunction with his orange ranch.

Mr. Boosey was born in Kansas on December 6, 1883, and is the son of Oliver and Sarah (Sherbet) Boosey, natives of the state of Vermont. The father served in a Vermont regiment in the Civil War, having enlisted when seventeen years of age. They migrated to Riley County, Kans., at an early day in the history of that state, and settled there as homesteaders; and they now reside at Clay Center, Kans. To them were born fifteen children, and twelve are living, among whom our subject is the eleventh in the order of birth. Five of this number are in California, and two in Orange County—Henry and Fred. Howard, another brother, served in the World War.

Fred Boosey was reared and educated in the public schools of his native state, and always confined himself, until 1901, to agricultural pursuits. In 1901 he migrated to California, and since 1904 he has been in Tustin, Orange County, engaged in bean growing. In 1917 he bought the ten acres on Yorba Street which he devotes to Valencia oranges. As the result of his thorough way of carrying through any work undertaken, Mr. Boosey has never failed, with a good understanding of the local field, and by the application of the "last word" in science, to get high results.

In February, 1917, Mr. Boosey was happily united in marriage to Miss Celina Dalton, the daughter of Adolph and Emma (Hunt) Dalton, born in Montreal, Canada, but married in Massachusetts. A native of Chicago, Ill., she was educated in the public schools, and St. Anne's Academy. She is delighted with Southern California; is a lover of nature, and therefore enjoys the flowers and the birds of the Golden State, and could not be induced to return to the "windy city" by the lakes. Mr. Boosey is a believer in cooperation and is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association at Orange.

CHARLES F. CROSE.—It is true that when an individual is endowed by nature with the valuable traits of determination and perseverance their success in life is usually a foregone conclusion. These characteristics were dominant in the character of the late Charles F. Crose, who was widely esteemed for his active participation in interests of a public nature, while he lived the few years granted him to be a citizen of Orange County.

Intimately associated with the early history of Shenandoah, Iowa, Charles F. Crose was born in a log cabin at Sidney, Fremont County, Iowa, on March 16, 1856, the son of W. F. Crose, who was a native of Bourbon County, Ky., where he was born in 1824, and Eliza J. (Van Eaton) Crose, his wife, a native of Union County, Ind., born in 1825. They were married in 1845 and became early settlers in Iowa where they developed a farm from the virgin prairie. They lived there at a time when Indians roamed at will over that frontier state and had many interesting experiences while developing their farm. The elder Crose died in 1895, after a long and useful career. His widow survived him until January 17, 1904.

Charles F. was educated in the public schools of his native town and was reared to farm life until he was about fifteen, when he entered the employ of his elder brother, R. B. Crose, who was a general merchant at Manti, before Shenandoah had been started. The young man was ambitious and he left the employ of his brother and started to study medicine, but after a year he gave it up and entered Bryant and Stratton's Business College in Chicago, where he pursued a commercial law and a business course for about nine months and graduated with second honors in a class of over 150. He moved his stock of merchandise on wagons from Manti to the new town of Shenandoah and there became one of the pioneer merchants. In March, 1881, Charles F. bought an interest in the business and thereafter gave his personal attention to the management of the concern, and made of it an unqualified success.

While connected with the mercantile interests of the town he was active in the affairs of the Republican party and finally was persuaded to become a candidate for the general assembly, being elected in 1903 and serving for two terms, being reelected to succeed himself. For twelve years he was a member of the school board, six years as its secretary; was secretary of the Shenandoah Fair Association; director of the Shenandoah National Bank; prominent in the organization and management of the cannery and the creamery there, and in all other activities for the building up of the growing city. He also served as one of two trustees for the original donors of the Western Normal College. He had wisely invested in realty there and owned a farm and considerable business and residence property in Shenandoah. On account of the ill health of his wife he decided he would locate in California, in consequence of which he disposed of his holdings and in 1910 settled in Santa Ana in a beautiful home which they erected on the corner of Cypress and Pine streets. He had purchased a walnut grove, on which his daughter and her husband settled, and to this he gave much of his attention. He became interested in the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, which had suffered many set-backs and he was induced to become its secretary and manager of the packing house. He threw himself into the reorganization of this concern with his accustomed vigor and soon had it on a sound basis. He was also identified with the Orange County Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and was president of the State Mutual Insurance Association. In this county, while he lived, he continued to take an active interest in public affairs and was a staunch Republican, though his father was a Democrat. He was a Knights Templar Mason and a Shriner, also a past patron of the Eastern Star Chapter; was also a member of the B. P. O. Elks, and an Odd Fellow, the latter membership being retained at his old home in Iowa. For years he was a consistent member of the Congregational Church and a worker in its causes. No worthy cause was ever presented to his notice, either in his Iowa or his California home that he did not give it his support.

At Afton, Union County, Iowa, on June 2, 1880, Mr. Crose was united in marriage with Miss Nina Nixon, who was born in Morgantown, W. Va., daughter of Rev. George J., a M. E. preacher, and Sarah (Bruen) Nixon, who settled in Iowa when their daughter was eight years old. She was educated in the public schools and in Simpson College of Indianola, Iowa, and thus was well qualified to be a worthy help-mate for her gifted husband; she entered heartily into all his plans and assisted him with his work and soon became a leader in social circles in Shenandoah. She was a member, and the president for some years, of the Kappa Delta Club, also a district secretary for some time; for ten years she was president of the missionary society of the Congregational Church, and soon after settling in Santa Ana, Cal., was elected to the same position here and has served for seven years, being still in office; she is an ex-president of the Ebell Club of Santa Ana, which has a membership of over 300, and is on the executive board; is president of the County Federated Clubs; has held offices in the Woman's Club; and is on the executive board of the southern branch of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Pacific. During the World War she was active in Red Cross and other allied activities, and still retains her interest in the Red Cross; and was chairman of the educational department of the County Council of Defense of Orange County. She is a member of the Eastern Star Chapter of Santa Ana.

Mr. and Mrs. Crose became the parents of a daughter, Mabel C., now the wife of Fred C. Rowland, a prosperous rancher of McClay Street, and they have two charming daughters, Nina Jeannette and Barbara Ruth. A man of broad mentality and strict integrity, who can well be called a self-made man, Charles F. Crose was called by the grim reaper on January 11, 1917, and there was left to mourn his passing a wide circle of friends in Orange County as well as in his former Iowa home, all of whom valued him for his worth as a citizen and friend.

GEORGE J. COCKING.—An enterprising and progressive native son who is making a decided success of the plumbing, heating and sheet metal business in Santa Ana, is George J. Cocking. He was born at Colton, Cal., August 28, 1888, a son of Isaac and Annie (Drown) Cocking, natives of England. Isaac Cocking came to California in the early eighties, locating at Colton, where he became manager for the corporation which purchased the large hill of lime rock near Colton, and which the company demolished for making building lime.

George J. Cocking received his early education in the public schools of Colton and Redlands. At Riverside he was employed by Copley Brothers, with whom he learned the trade of a sheet metal worker. Returning to Redlands he worked for Worthington, the plumber, also Kline and Underwood. In 1908 Mr. Cocking moved to Pasadena, where he was employed by the Pacific Sheet Metal Works and the Warren and Foss Company. The year 1912 marked his advent into the business life of Santa Ana, when he entered the employ of the McFadden Hardware Company and built up their department for sheet metal work and became manager. During his connection with the McFadden Hardware Company he installed the sheet metal work for the Santa Ana high school, the Athletic Club and the Yost Theater; also the high school building at Orange. Mr. Cocking also installed the heating and ventilating plants in the following buildings: the Methodist and Congregational churches in Santa Ana; Anaheim Public Library; other business blocks and fine residences at Anaheim.

In April, 1918, Mr. Cocking decided to enter into business for himself and since then he has been conducting his chosen line of work most successfully. He can point with pride to the following buildings where he has done the plumbing or installed the heating plants: at the Crawford Marmalade Factory, Anaheim, he installed their steam heating plant; installed the plumbing in the fine residence of C. V. Davis at Santa Ana; bungalow court at First and Court streets; the McCormick Apartments; four houses for J. W. Sackman; an apartment house for Mrs. Lowman on South Birch Street; and a number of houses built by George Barrows.

On February 2, 1912, Mr. Cocking was united in marriage with Miss Bertha J. Simpson of Kansas, and they are the parents of one son, George Richard.

WILLIAM J. SAUNBY.—Flourishing and promising Tustin numbers in its citizenship many progressive men, and one of the most pronounced, both in ability and accomplishment, is William J. Saunby, who owns twenty-five acres of land, twenty of which are devoted to oranges and five to walnuts. For eighteen years he has resided there, and more and more he has contributed to the growth, improvement and development of his town.

Mr. Saunby is a native of Ontario, Canada, where he was born on October 5, 1859. There, too, in his native city, London, he was reared and educated. Up to 1901 he spent his work days in the milling and grain business with his father, who owned two flour mills in London, but in that year he crossed the border into "the States," coming direct to Tustin, Cal., and as soon thereafter as he could procure his naturalization papers, he did so. Now he is a full-fledged citizen of a country he adopted with gratitude and hope. The father of Mr. Saunby was Joseph D. Saunby, a native of the Province of Quebec, and he married Miss Elizabeth Bird Elson of London, a daughter of John and Mary Elson whose family like the Saunby's is traced back to England. Two children were born to the worthy couple, the other child being a son named Stephen, now deceased. William J. was popular and influential in his native country, where he was elected to the office of reeve, akin to mayor, at London West, a post he filled for two full years.

At London, December 30, 1886, Mr. Saunby was married to Miss Alice Cosford, the daughter of the Rev. Thomas Cosford, who was born in Northamptonshire, England, of a splendid old North of England family; he studied classics and theology and became a minister in the Methodist Church of Canada, preaching in different cities in Ontario for over fifty years, until his death. In Ontario he was also married, being united with Nancy Hartman of that native heath. Reverend Cosford was a man much loved in the communities where he preached for his mild and charitable disposition as well as for his straightforwardness and fearlessness in speaking the truth. From the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Saunby have been born five children, four of whom grew up. Sidney during the recent great war served as a member of the U. S. forces. He studied electricity and especially ignition at the government quarters in Los Angeles that he might become proficient as an automobile expert. Previous to the outbreak of the war he was with the Edison Company and he is now assisting his father in operating the ranch; Dora is a graduate nurse, now with the Michael Reese Hospital in Chicago; Alice is a student nurse in the Methodist Episcopal Hospital in Los Angeles; while Ernest, the youngest, is attending Santa Ana high school.

Mr. Saunby is a believer that cooperation is the only successful method of marketing citrus and walnut crops, so is very naturally a member of the Santiago Orange Association and the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, being a member of the board of directors in the former. Both he and his estimable wife are devout Methodists holding membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Santa Ana where he is a member of the official board, and liberally inclined, they take an active part in the benevolences of the church. Strong advocates of temperance, they did all they could to fight the demon rum and abolish the saloon as well as working for the success of national prohibition. They have lived noble and useful lives and by their helpfulness and many charities have endeared themselves to the people of their community who appreciate them for their worth and integrity. Tustin would gladly welcome citizens and their families of the Saunby type.

IRVIN LIVENSPIRE.—A contractor very naturally in constant demand because of his technical knowledge of every kind of brick masonry, is Irvin Livenspire, who was born in Wyandot County, Ohio, on January 23, 1867. He was the son of a merchant, Charles Livenspire, and so came to get an insight early in life into business ways of the world. He was also fortunate in the character and devotion of his mother, who was Catherine Kellogg before her marriage, and owed much to her in his preparation for the responsibilities of later years. Both parents, well known for their standing in Ohio communities, are now dead.

Irvin attended the public schools of Ohio, among the best in the United States, and when he was old enough to profit from apprenticeship, he learned the brickmason's trade. He was successful from the beginning in the opportunities to work where he developed rapidly; and when he came to California in 1902, he was prepared to stand shoulder to shoulder with the best artisans.

For five years Mr. Livenspire worked in Los Angeles, but in 1907 he removed to Santa Ana, and since then his reputation for both skill and honesty, as well as reasonable terms, has made him much in demand. Among important commissions, he did the mason work on the Masonic Temple, the Spurgeon Building, the West-End Theater, and the Rutherford Building, and of course a great deal of other excellent work throughout the county. He is in partnership with Henry Walters, and the firm name is Livenspire and Walters. On an average, they employ twelve men.

Mrs. Livenspire was Miss Ida Blake before her marriage, and she is the mother of a son, Ralph, who is associated in business with Mr. Livenspire, and a daughter, Mildred. Mr. Livenspire is a Democrat, but first, last and always an American, and when it comes to "boosting" Santa Ana or Orange County, he forgets all about the narrowness of party lines, and seeks to support only the best, be it in men or measures designed to help the community to higher, broader and better things.

THOMAS C. H. De LAPP.—An efficient and popular public official of Huntington Beach, who has earned the confidence of his fellow-citizens and the honors bestowed upon him by the Government, is Thomas C. H. De Lapp, the postmaster. He was born in Jacksonville, Morgan County, Ill., on September 5, 1866, the son of John M. De Lapp, a native of Cape Girardeau, Mo., a descendant of French-Huguenot stock, also a Mexican War veteran with the rank of sergeant and he helped to gain possession of California for the United States. He married Mary F. Headen, who was born in Mooresville, Tenn. For a while the parents rented a farm in Morgan County, Ill., and there they became esteemed as industrious, progressive and altogether estimable folk.

It thus happened that Thomas grew up to farm work, learning thoroughly first how to do the usual chores, and secondly the methods of agriculture then in vogue in that part of the country. When, however, he was twenty-three years of age, he removed to St. Louis, Mo., and there worked at various occupations. He found employment in planing mills, and for the remainder of five years or so was in the car factories of that city. He proved competent in every way until he broke his wrist, and then he was forced to seek different employment. Having become known to the street car authorities, he was made a conductor on the Lindell Avenue Railway, and for another five years had charge of passenger traffic.

While in St. Louis on July 2, 1892, Mr. De Lapp was married to Miss Mary Elizabeth Boggs, a relative of the pioneer, Lillburn W. Boggs, a Kentuckian born in 1798, who removed to Missouri, was elected governor in 1836, and took a prominent part in the expulsion of the Mormons. In 1846 he migrated to California, and from 1847 to 1849 was alcalde of the Sonoma district, where he became somewhat famous for the administration of office during a trying period of the interregnum, and so is deserving of prominence in the annals of California. Mrs. De Lapp was reared in Missouri, and later came to the Pacific Coast. Mr. and Mrs. De Lapp have two children: George T., who is a student in the high school; and Margaret F. E., who is still attending the grammar school.

In November, 1899, Mr. De Lapp came out to California, and engaged with the Los Angeles Traction Company as a conductor; and for a year he resided in the metropolis of the Southland. Next he put in six years with the San Dimas Citrus Association, thereby acquiring a still better knowledge of the resources of the Golden State. In 1906 he came to Huntington Beach, and here he bought acreage and city property. For two years he was manager of the Tent City, and ever since he has been a genuine "booster" for the town. He was one of the first to see the importance of good roads to the district, and to advocate building the same. For four years, too, Mr. De Lapp farmed hereabouts and raised sugar beets, and in course of time he helped to get the Huntington Beach Sugar Factory, that is, to induce the Holly Sugar Corporation to build their establishment. To make the venture a success, he undertook to grow the sugar beet on a large scale, and for a while he had forty acres planted to beets.

In January, 1915, Mr. De Lapp was appointed, as a Democrat, postmaster at Huntington Beach, a position of responsibility, as the office there handles a large amount of mail. This is due largely to the presence of many tourists or visitors in the bathing season, a moving class difficult to cater to. He was reappointed to serve a second term on August 15, 1919. Two assistants aid the postmaster—Miss Abigail Crum, who is the assistant postmaster, and a clerk, Mrs. Anna Rowland-Taylor. There is also a village carrier, Mrs. Elizabeth M. Hoge, and a rural carrier, Samuel M. Hosack.

Mr. De Lapp was made a Mason some years ago, and belongs to Huntington Beach Lodge No. 383, F. & A. M. Both Mr. and Mrs. De Lapp are members of the Eastern Star. For nine years Mr. De Lapp was superintendent of the Christian Sunday school, and he helped with a generous hand to build the Christian Church at Huntington Beach. Now Mr. and Mrs. De Lapp and their family belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church, over the Sunday school of which he has presided for one year as superintendent.

HENRY A. SKILES.—An industrious, frugal man who credits his success in business life largely to his having endeavored to lead a devout, Christian life, and his good health, enabling him at the age of seventy-two, to ride a motorcycle daily, is Henry A. Skiles, the well-known building contractor of 912 Orange Avenue. He was born at Mt. Pleasant, Ind., on July 28, 1848, the son of Henry Skiles, a native of Pennsylvania. He came of a family of farmers, and was an early settler and builder-up of Mt. Pleasant, Ind. He had married Jane Andrews, a native of Ireland, who came to America with her parents. Henry is the fifth son in a family of seven children honoring this worthy couple.

When he was eight years old, his parents removed, first to Lee and then to Henry County, Iowa, and the lad attended a log-cabin school in the winter while he was being initiated into the details of farming, for which he early showed a liking. His father had a good farm of 160 acres, where he raised grain and stock, so that he had the best opportunity, under his guidance, to learn. After the Civil War, his folks removed to Johnson County, Mo., within fifty miles of Kansas City, where they continued to farm; and at agricultural pursuits, in the service of others, in Iowa and Kansas and Missouri, he continued until he was twenty-one.

The marriage of Mr. Skiles united him with Miss Sarah Thompson, a daughter of the Rev. R. G. Thompson of Kingsville, Mo., and there, he took up farming with eighty acres, raising grain and stock. Mrs. Skiles' mother was Sarah Leland Brown, a native of Virginia, while Mr. Thompson originally came from Pennsylvania. He died at the age of seventy-nine.

In 1874, Mr. Skiles came West with his family to Oakland, and there did general carpentering, associated for four years with his uncle, Henry Brown. Meeting with James McFadden, when the latter came to Oakland, he decided to come south; and in 1878 removed to Santa Ana, shipping his effects by boat to Newport. From the first, he undertook general building and contracting, and with plenty of good help, he soon put up a number of the better residences, and for a quarter of a century was Santa Ana's leading building contractor.

Mr. Skiles has three acres of orchard at his home place, purchased in 1900, and ten acres of apricots at Hemet. Seven children have assisted in the daily toil, besides adding to the pleasures of domestic life. Robert, who married Katherine Brown, is deputy assessor of Orange County, and has two children, Dorothy and Corinne; Leland married E. C. Baer and is ranching at Hemet; they have two children, Rolston and Lois; Edna is the wife of A. E. Cox, a rancher living at Huntington Park; their two children are Carmen and Elwood; Leslie is also a farmer at Hemet, his wife was Frances Armstrong, and they have one child, Denton A.; Ira is a plumber at Long Beach, and is married to Lea Snyder; Earl is the husband of Louise Riley of San Francisco, and the father of two children, Margaret and June; and he is the private secretary of the estate of E. T. Earl of Los Angeles; Bruce married Miss Grace Doty, and is employed by J. Tubbs of the Santa Ana Commercial Company and they have one child, Helen. Mr. Skiles is a Prohibitionist in national political affairs, and a good "booster" in everything pertaining to Santa Ana and Orange County. He and his family are consistent church members.

FRANK SAWYER.—A successful garage manager who thoroughly understands the many-sided problems of the autoist and the tourist, is Frank Sawyer, the popular proprietor of the West End Garage at Santa Ana. He was born in Pawnee City, Pawnee County, Nebr., on October 24, 1893, the son of J. B. Sawyer who had married Elizabeth A. Karnes by whom he came to have six children, three sons and three daughters. He brought his family to California in December, 1912, and located at Long Beach; and both parents are still enjoying the salubrious climate of sub-tropical California.

Frank got all he could out of the excellent public schools of his neighborhood, and followed this elementary training with a course of technical studies at Highland Park College at Des Moines, Iowa. Appreciating the ever-expanding field of service for the motorist, since 1907 he has followed the mechanism of automobiles, and since coming to California in 1912 he continued in the automobile business and has now well established himself as one of the indispensables in Santa Ana.

In 1919, Mr. Sawyer bought his present plant and spared neither pains nor expense in providing for his patrons the most modern machinery and appliances. He is thus able to execute all kinds of repair work, and his fame for doing that which so many are unable to tackle having extended even beyond the confines of Orange County, he has all the commissions which any man would care to undertake with some leisure and comfort to himself. He employs four men regularly, each like himself an expert in every kind of auto or motor renovating. Only the best of materials are used, and satisfaction to the customer is thus easily guaranteed. The West End Garage has become one of the most popular repair shops in the county.

On December 15, 1914, Mr. Sawyer married Julia Ruth Walker, a native daughter of Orange County, born near Santa Ana; and they have one child, Margaret Ellen. Besides taking an active part in the work of the Chamber of Commerce, to which Mr. Sawyer belongs, and participating with fellow Republicans in civic reforms, Mr. Sawyer belongs to the Elks, being a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794.

HARVEY GARBER.—That great progress has been made in the manufacture of brick is clearly demonstrated by Harvey Garber, one of the most aggressively progressive leaders in that field in Southern California, and a prominent business man of Santa Ana. He was born in Emmet County, Mich., on March 28, 1879, the son of Jacob M. Garber, a native Ohian, still happily living. The good mother born in Indiana, now among the silent majority, was Libbie Shrock before her marriage, and gave early guidance to three children, among whom Harvey was the youngest.

He attended the public schools in northern Indiana, while being raised on a farm, but had to lay aside his books all too early, so that much of his real schooling came through contact with the outside, exacting world. At the age of twenty, he had learned the pressfeeder's trade, but a year later took up carpentering and followed that by preference.

On January 13, 1914, he came to California; and having had five years' experience as a contractor at South Bend, Ind., he established himself in Orange County in general contracting, with his residence at Orange. He built the grammar school in Huntington Beach, the Alfred Huhn Building at Orange, a brick block at Newport Beach, the Greenville School, the L. B. Resh brick block at Anaheim, and many fine residences in various towns in the county. In August, 1919, he bought the brick plant at Santa Ana, and since then he has devoted all his time to the manufacture of brick of all grades. He employs twenty-five men, and pays out over $500 weekly for wages.

Mr. Garber has always taken a live interest, as a Republican, in America national politics, ever ready to elevate the standard of patriotic citizenship, and has participated in Chamber of Commerce and other "boosting" and developing work; and during the war he had been notified of his recommendation for a first lieutenantcy in the construction division of the quartermaster department, but the commission was never forwarded because of the signing of the armistice. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, and also belongs to the Orange County Commercial Club.

On June 2, 1909, Mr. Garber was married to Miss Freda B. Kelley; and their marriage has brought them the inestimable blessing of an attractive daughter, Marian Elizabeth. Mr. Garber is a Scottish Rite, thirty-second degree Mason, and also a Shriner; and Mrs. Garber shares his popularity in fraternal circles. Both are fond of outdoor life, and glad to be in California, the land of outdoors.

ARCHIE M. ROBINSON.—Since every other important line of industry in the world centers around the occupation of tilling the soil the rancher may truthfully be called the Hub of the World. One of the industrious, progressive and self-made orange growers of Orange County, Cal., is Archie M. Robinson, a native of Delhi, Delaware County, N. Y., where he was born October 21, 1871. His father, Buel W., and mother, Jane (Christie) Robinson, also natives of the Empire State, were the parents of seven children, of whom A. M. Robinson is the only one residing in California. The father, Buel W., now deceased, served as a volunteer during the Civil War in Company C, One Hundred Forty-fourth New York Volunteer Regiment.

Archie M. Robinson received a common school education and resided in his native state, following general farming until 1901, when the call of the West caused him to turn his face toward the shores of the Golden State, and since then he has been a resident of Orange County. The first year in his new home he worked on a ranch, cleared $300 and invested it in a twenty-five-acre ranch on Prospect Avenue, which he improved, owned for two years and sold. He then purchased his present twenty-six-acre ranch on Fairhaven Avenue, which is devoted exclusively to the culture of oranges. The property was formerly planted to oranges and apricots, the latter being reset, so now the whole acreage is producing fine Valencia oranges. During the earlier years of Mr. Robinson's residence in Orange County he experienced, in common with other ranchers, the scarcity of water. Necessity caused the combination of their forces and a company was formed to overcome the difficulty by developing water. In 1913 wells were sunk to the depth of 300 feet, resulting in an abundant flow of water, which insured the crops and increased the value of land immeasurably. He has been a director in the Tustin Hill Citrus Association from its organization in 1909.

In 1910 Mr. Robinson was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Pilcher, a native of St. Louis, Mo., and daughter of William Pilcher. Two daughters have been born of their union, Elizabeth and Dorothy by name. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson are members of the Baptist Church of Santa Ana, being a member of the board of trustees, and fraternally Mr. Robinson affiliates with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, his membership being in the Santa Ana Lodge.

JOHN C. HAYDEN.—A Philadelphian of extraordinary business ability, who is "making good" in Orange County as district superintendent of the Southern Counties Gas Company, is John C. Hayden, popular, with his family, in the best social circles. He was born in the City of Brotherly Love on November 27, 1888, and grew up in that center of Pennsylvania life. His father, now deceased, was Michael J. Hayden, a very successful business man who ran a chain of retail stationery stores in Philadelphia. His mother was Rose G. Deehan before her marriage; and she is also deceased. There were three boys and a girl in the family, and John was the youngest of them all. A sister, Mrs. Marie Warke, resides in Los Angeles, and they are the only two in California. He attended the Gesu Parochial School and St. Joseph's College at Philadelphia, and then entered the stationery business of his father, his mother having died when he was nine years old. Michael Hayden made a visit to Los Angeles and other parts of California in 1906, and four years later, accompanied by John, he came out here to reside.

At that time our subject entered the employ of the Gillespie Book and Stationery Store, Los Angeles, and he was placed in charge of the book department, and there he remained for five years. In September, 1916, he came to Santa Ana as chief clerk for the Southern Counties Gas Company, and he rose to be commercial agent, holding that post until he was promoted to be district superintendent on December 1, 1919.

At Santa Ana in 1913, Mr. Hayden was married to Miss Gladys Starkey, of Los Angeles; and one child, a boy named Herbert Hughes Hayden, has come to bless their fortunate union. Mr. Hayden is prominent in the Elks Lodge No. 794, at Santa Ana, and also in the Rotary Club of that city, whose motto is: "He profits most who serves best."

The Southern Counties Gas Company is a very important utility corporation, supplying both domestic and industrial consumers. The general meter shop, for the whole system of California, is located on East First Street in Santa Ana, where is also the automobile shop and the general store-rooms employing some sixty-five persons. Four districts and eight divisions represent the business interests of this corporation. The eastern district comprises Orange County division, which includes Santa Ana, Orange, Tustin, Anaheim, El Modena, Fullerton, Garden Grove, Placentia, Buena Park, along the route from Garden Grove to Huntington Beach; the Whittier division comprising Whittier, La Habra, Monterey Park and the adjacent territory; the Monrovia division includes Monrovia, Arcadia, Sierre Madre, South Santa Anita and El Monte; while the remaining division of Pomona is made up of Pomona, Claremont, Spadra, LaVerne, Glendora, Chino, Ontario, Uplands, Azusa, San Dimas and Baldwin Park. Mr. Hayden has supervision of the Orange County division.

WILLIAM KLAUSING.—An old-timer who, by improving the soil of a barren waste, has developed a splendid orchard and in so doing has not only acquired property worth the whole for himself, but has added to the wealth of an already rich country, is William Klausing, who was born in Troy, Madison County, Ill., on June 15, 1864, the son of Henry Klausing, a farmer of that state who died there in 1870. He had married Miss Mary Taake, and she died in 1886. They had four children, of whom three grew to maturity, and of these, William is the second eldest. He was brought up on the home farm, while he attended the local schools; and until he was seventeen, assisted his mother with the farm work. Then he went out to work for others as an experienced farm hand.

During the great "boom" in Southern California realty, Mr. Klausing came west to Los Angeles, in 1887, then pretty small and provincial, and secured an engagement to work for Mrs. Hollenbeck on Boyle Heights. At the end of two years, he entered the employment of William H. Perry, and then he was with Dr. Gray and also Judge Gardener, on West Adams Street. At the end of two years there, he traveled north to San Francisco, where he worked for eighteen months for George D. Toy at San Mateo; and after that he was in the service of Andrew Harrell of Visalia, with whom he continued for four years.

In July, 1897, Mr. Klausing returned east on a visit to Missouri and Illinois, but the lure of California still holding him, he came back here in 1898, and with a brother rented a ranch for a year in Eagle Rock. They were not very successful, and they dissolved their partnership. Then his attention was directed to Anaheim, and in 1899 he located here. At first he was in the employ of John Brunworth, as zanjero for the water company, and assisted him also on his ranch; but in 1901 he bought his present place on Sunkist Avenue in West Anaheim, which was raw land, covered with cactus and bushes. He paid thirty-five dollars an acre; and while he continued with Mr. Brunworth for eight years, he cleared, leveled and otherwise improved his own property. In 1905 he set out orange and walnut trees, and two years later he built his residence.

Now he has twelve and a half acres in Valencia oranges, and seven acres in walnuts, and is probably the oldest orange rancher in the district, with property on which he worked very hard, in the beginning, to grow chili peppers. He also owns forty acres in the Palos Verde Valley, which is devoted to the raising of cotton, and he has ten acres in the Golden State tract which he set out to Valencia oranges. Of course, he is a member of the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Association and the Anaheim Walnut Growers Association.

At Anaheim Mr. Klausing was married to Miss Dora Dieckoff, a native of Germany, and two children have further blessed their union—Gertrude and Henry. Mr. Klausing is a Republican; and he and his family are members of the Anaheim Lutheran Church, of which he was formerly a trustee.

PHRANDA A. ROBINSON.—A pioneer railroad and livestock man who is replete with interesting stories of early days on various frontiers, is Phranda A. Robinson, a native of the Empire State, where he was born, in St. Lawrence County on August 21, 1851. His father was William A. Robinson, a farmer and a contractor, and a true Wisconsin pioneer, and he married Miss Almira Davis, by whom he had six children.

The eldest in the order of birth, Phranda attended the common schools of Wisconsin, to which state the family moved when he was only four years of age. Growing up, he made his way to Colorado and for a while worked with a railroad contractor in constructing the first three railroads built into Denver. This was at the beginning of the seventies. At the end of two years he removed to Ellis County, Kans., and there, for seven years, he homesteaded and engaged in the cattle business. The western part of the state was then the hunting grounds of the Indians, and he hauled supplies to them for the Government. Buffalo were plentiful, and one could buy plenty of buffalo hides at five dollars a pelt. Taking up his residence in Wisconsin again, he engaged for seven years in mercantile trade at Antigo, and selling out, he spent ten years in southern Wisconsin at Clinton Junction. After that he removed to Gray's Lake, Ill., where he was in the banking business for seven years, also building several houses there. In 1906 he came to Berkeley, Cal., built houses and sold them; and four years later he removed to Santa Ana. Since coming here, he has erected over fifty of the most desirable houses in the city.

Mr. Robinson married Ida Lusk, a native of Wisconsin. He is the father of three children—Caroline, Charles and Harriet, and grandfather to five. The family attend the Methodist Church. Mr. Robinson belongs to the Chamber of Commerce, and is ever ready to aid any reasonable movement likely to make for the growth or the betterment of the community. He is a standpat Republican, and yet never draws the party line in seeking to elevate the standard of local civic pride. Keenly alive to public questions of moment, he has never accepted any of the invitations to stand for public office, and still pursues his quiet way as a private, if thoroughly wide-awake citizen, interested at all times in Orange County and its rapid development.

GEORGE FREDERICK ANDRES.—A prosperous rancher who has by his own efforts and the able assistance of his capable wife developed an excellent orange and walnut grove northeast of Garden Grove is George Frederick Andres, popularly known to his large circle of friends as "Fred" Andres. This forty-acre ranch is on the Garden Grove Road and twenty acres of it is planted to Valencia oranges and the remainder to walnuts. Mr. Andres also owns fifteen acres within the city limits of Santa Ana, which is set out to ten-year-old budded walnuts. He also maintains a chicken ranch on the Santa Ana property and has 1500 White Leghorn fowls on it at present.

Born on October 1, 1868, in Germany, about fifty miles west of Berlin, Mr. Andres was the eldest of a family of five children, four of whom were born in Germany and one in Iowa. His parents were Ludwig and Marie (Dee) Andres. The father was a stone and brick mason and stone cutter, having learned his trade very thoroughly in Berlin, and he could do the finest kind of stone work, even to lettering on marble and stone monuments. The whole family sailed from Hamburg on the S. S. Wieland of the Hamburg Line, landing in New York the first week of April, 1875. They went on to Lansing, Iowa, where they settled. In September of that year, Winnifred, the youngest child was born, and the mother passed away the next month, the arduous conditions of the new life and homesickness for the old home proving fatal to her. A year or so afterward the father married again, being united to Mary Laaps, and one child, William was born to them. The family remained at Lansing for two years, then went to Waukon, and later to Village Creek, Iowa. While living here Ludwig Andres went to Minneapolis to work as a stone mason on the great Pillsbury Mills, and here he was instantly killed, when a scaffolding on which he was working gave way. The loss of both father and mother filled the young lives of the Andres children with sadness as it meant their separation. Fred, who at that time was only ten years old, was taken by his uncle, Gustav Dee, while his younger brother, Charles A., went to live with another uncle, Theodore Dee, both farmers in Allamakee County, Iowa, and for three years the brothers did not see each other. Fred remained with his uncle until he was seventeen years old and then hired out at the rate of five dollars a month during the winter, in the meantime securing what schooling he could. He kept working out by the month and saved his money and for two years was in Western Iowa, still working out, also farmed for himself there and then broke up 160 acres in Adrian, Minn., which he later sold and in 1894 went to Rock County, Minn., and began renting land near Luverne. Like many other pioneer farmers of that region, Mr. Andres at times suffered many discouraging reverses; one year his crops were a total failure, so that he could not even pay his rent, and he was compelled to borrow corn to feed his horses, which he afterward repaid at the rate of two bushels for one. In 1903 he moved to Hutchinson County, S. D., where he bought 320 acres of land and raised three crops, and from there he removed to California in 1906. His brother, Charles A., had already located at Santa Ana, and Mr. Andres in the meantime had purchased his present home ranch of forty acres, at that time alfalfa land, paying $300 an acre for it.

After his removal, Mr. Andres at once began the improvement of his land, raising alfalfa, horses and hogs. He bred fine Percheron horses for a number of years from some full-blooded Percheron stock which he brought with him. He continued general farming and stockraising until 1911, when he began to set out walnut trees; the next year setting out his Valencia orange grove. Since that time he has given his time to developing his orchards to a high state of productivity and he is meeting with gratifying success. He has a never-failing well and has installed an electric pumping plant and laid over 5,000 feet of cement pipe for irrigation. He has remodeled his residence and the whole place reflects the intelligent care of its owners, as Mrs. Andres has been a true helpmate to him, aiding and encouraging him in all his undertakings. During his residence in Iowa Mr. Andres and John Gephardt owned and operated a Case threshing outfit and became quite expert in this line of work. With William E. and Arthur A. Schnitger he has run two threshing machines in Orange County, using them to thresh beans, converting the machines themselves into bean threshers.

The five brothers and sisters had not all been together since their mother died until the time of the Exposition at Portland, Ore., when they had a family reunion. The three sisters had been reared by different families in Iowa and took the names of their adopted parents. They are: Elsie, now the wife of Dr. F. G. Ulman of Enumclaw, Wash., who was a captain in the United States Army in the late war; Miss Marie Rockwell, formerly a high school teacher in Salem, Ore., is now a stenographer and bookkeeper at Portland, Ore.; and Winnifred, who is the wife of Rev. J. V. Knoll of Lansing, Iowa.

On October 17, 1896, when farming in Rock County, Minn., Mr. Andres was united in marriage with Miss Ora Luvan Savage, the daughter of Oliver and Eliza (Young) Savage, the father being a native of New York, while the mother was born near Chicago, Ill. They were married in Wisconsin, moving later to Dodge County, Minn., where Mrs. Andres was born. There were three daughters in the Savage family: Emma is the wife of L. H. Owen of Pomona; Ora is Mrs. Andres; and Susie became the wife of Frank Welker, a merchant of Beaver Creek, Minn., where she died. By a former marriage Mr. Savage had two sons: Gibson, a resident of Los Angeles, passed away in 1917; and Elmer, who is a farmer at Waupun, Wis. Mrs. Andres was educated in Iowa, and afterwards became a school teacher, teaching four years in Rock County, Minn., where she met Mr. Andres, and one year in Minnehaha County, S. D. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Andres: Floyd E., a graduate of the Santa Ana high school in the class of 1919 is now a student at the U. C. at Berkeley; Marie Lillian died in 1904 at the age of seven years; and Charles Frederick. They are also rearing an adopted daughter, Ruth Estella Andres.

Mr. and Mrs. Andres are active in the membership of the Methodist Church at Garden Grove, Mr. Andres being a member of the official board, while Mrs. Andres is a teacher in the Sunday School and president of the Ladies' Aid Society; she was also prominent in Red Cross work during the war. Mr. Andres is a member of the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association, the Garden Grove Orange Growers Association and the Garden Grove Farm Center, being a director and one of the moving spirits of the latter. Politically he is inclined to be non-partisan in his views, considering the best men and principles when voting, but always a firm advocate of temperance. Self-taught and self-made, he is a man of true worth, and both he and his estimable wife are popular in the community because of their generous, liberal views.

JOHN HUHN.—A veteran of the Civil War and a resident of the United States since he was eight years of age, John Huhn, whose ranch lies on the Garden Grove Road, west of Anaheim, has contributed his share to the development of this section since his removal here in 1898. He was born in Brunswick, Germany, August 18, 1844, and in 1852 he migrated to America with his parents, William and Anna Huhn. The father was a building contractor in his native land and, after coming to America, he continued in this line of work at St. Louis, where the family located shortly after arriving in this country. Loyal to the land of his adoption, William Huhn served in the home guards during the period of the Civil War.

The early years of John Huhn were spent in St. Louis, where, as soon as old enough, he engaged with his father, learning the trade. Although but seventeen years old when the Civil War broke out, he enlisted in the Union Army in Company F, Seventeenth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry and served for three years under General Sherman, where he passed through many dangers and hardships in the hard-fought campaigns of that great leader. After the war was over he took up farming, settling, in 1870, in Montgomery County, Ill., and it was during his residence here that his marriage occurred, when he was united with Miss Louisa Struck on May 17, 1883, at her home near Hillsboro, Ill. She was also a native of Germany, born at Peine, near Hanover, the daughter of Henry and Wilhelmina (Stenzig) Struck, the father being employed at the iron foundry at Peine. Mrs. Huhn came to America in 1881 and made her home with an uncle, near Hillsboro, Ill., until her marriage.

After his marriage Mr. Huhn located on an eighty-acre farm near Raymond, Ill., and here he farmed successfully, raising wheat, corn and hogs, remaining here until 1898, when he removed to California. Locating in Orange County, he purchased ten acres west of Anaheim and here he has since made his home. In 1919 he sold half of this tract and the remaining five acres is a fine walnut grove, which is irrigated by the Ideal Water Company's pumping plant. Mr. Huhn's ranch is a good producer and brings him in an excellent income. He markets his product independently.

Mr. and Mrs. Huhn are the parents of four children: Alice S. is a chiropractor with a growing practice in the vicinity of Anaheim; William Henry is at home, he is married and has three children, Leona, Mildred and William; Irma is also at home; Albert E. is a rancher at Red Bluff, Tehama County, Cal. The family attend the Lutheran Church at Anaheim. A resident of the United States for sixty-eight years, Mr. Huhn became imbued with the spirit of its institutions in his early boyhood, and since he has reached man's estate has been a staunch Republican, giving his influence and vote to the nominees of that party. He belongs to the Fullerton G. A. R. Post.

GEORGE A. BARROWS.—The prosperous, substantial district of Groton, Tompkins County, N. Y., claims the birth of George A. Barrows, the general contractor and builder, who first saw the light there on May 18, in the historic Centennial Year of 1876. His father was Theodore Barrows, a farmer well known to Tompkins County agriculturists; and he had married Sarah L. Wood, by whom he had six children. Both parents are now dead.

The fifth child in the order of birth, George attended the well-appointed grammar and high schools of Groton, and for a while stuck by the home farm, which he also took charge of at the age of twenty-one, when his father died. He added to his experience some four years in a creamery and during these years he was also engaged in raising fancy poultry, but early worked at carpentering, for which he had unmistakable talent, and which he liked best of all.

In March, 1911, Mr. Barrows settled in Santa Ana, and from that date has given all of his time and attention to contracting and building, undertaking many notable works. He has erected some of the finest residences, and has also built some of the best structures in the business and manufacturing district of the city, and has long employed from ten to fifteen men for his varied and responsible operations. A thorough student of the latest methods both in construction and device, Mr. Barrows easily demonstrates his entire familiarity with modern building problems, and his advantage in experience and equipment for extensive and artistic work over his competitors. By his close application, honest and conscientious method of carrying out the various contracts, he has become singularly successful and as a result his business has grown to large proportions.

At Groton, N. Y., on Washington's Birthday, 1899, Mr. Barrows was married to Lucy Mae Harrington, a charming woman known for her good works. With her husband, she attends the Methodist Church. They have one son, Howard. Mr. Barrows is much interested in the purification and elevation of party politics, and therefore acknowledges no slavish adherence to any of the political organizations.

FRANCIS M. THOMAS.—An enterprising rancher who by years of unremitting industry and the maintenance of a high sense of honor, always pursuing a conservatively progressive program toward a definite, laudable goal, is Francis M. Thomas, of 914 South Main Street, Santa Ana, where he resides in a beautiful two-story frame structure, in the full enjoyment of his interesting family. He was born in Lee County, Va., near Rose Hill, on January 29, 1862, the son of Josiah Clemmens Thomas, a native of Powells Valley, Lee County, where he was born on January 12, 1835. The latter grew up on a farm east of Cumberland Gap, some twelve miles west of the county seat, Jonesville, with little educational opportunity, owing to the modest circumstances of his parents and the dearth of public schools there. When nineteen years old, he undertook farming for himself, and the first summer managed to make about nine dollars a month and his board, and the second summer eleven dollars. Then he went to a private school and studied reading, writing and arithmetic. When twenty-one, he crossed over the mountains into Kentucky and for three years worked on a farm, where his cash allowance was from ten to twenty dollars a month. By saving his money, he was able to get back to the old home in Virginia, and there, on November 18, 1859, he was joined in holy matrimony with Nancy Bartley. After farming there for three years, they moved with their family to Grant County, Ky., where they lived on a farm for four years. The third year he purchased a farm, and the fourth year he was able to dispose of it again for practically double the price which he gave for it.

Dropsy, however, sorely afflicted him, and with his family he moved back to Lee County, Va., toward Christmas, 1865 and there found relief in a cure effected by Dr. Henly Robinson; but while he was still ill, his good wife died of typhoid fever, her demise occurring on March 26, 1866. She left him four children, and a year later he married Miss Sarah E. Johnson, after which, taking his household, he moved back to Grant County, Ky., purchased some timber land, and went to work for a year on a neighboring farm. Failing health induced him to make another change and to trade what he had for a stock of general merchandise in Pendleton County, Ky.; but after a year, he moved his family to Hiawatha, Kans., and in January, 1869, purchased a farm one mile east of the town. At the end of another year, half eaten out by grasshoppers, he sold his holdings, and purchased 160 acres of land on the Kickapoo Reservation, and there for four years, he labored hard to improve it. Then, selling out, he moved into Hiawatha and there formed a partnership with his brother, A. H. Thomas, for the transaction of mercantile business. They succeeded, as anyone who knew them, their standards and their personalities, would have expected, and then they sold out. In the meantime, Josiah C. Thomas had bought one after another of four fine farms near Hiawatha, improved them and later sold them at a profit.

In the early summer of 1883, Mr. Thomas made a trip to California, on account of renewed illness, and taken with the climate and the prospects of Orange County, he bought 200 acres of land two miles southeast of Santa Ana. Returning to Hiawatha, he brought his family from Kansas to the Coast, and for a couple of years improved the new home farm. He then moved into Santa Ana, on Spurgeon Street, and there he died, in September, 1913. The four children left him by his first wife were: Melville C., Francis M., our subject, Alice and Charles L. Thomas. Melville died by drowning in the Galveston flood, he, his wife, their one child and their home having been swept away by the angry waters. He was a railroad man, and for years had worked in the railway yards at Galveston. Alice is the wife of Otis Bridgeford, the rancher; she was formerly Mrs. L. Hiskey, and is the mother of Walter E. Hiskey, a rancher in the Delhi district of Orange County. The last or youngest is Dr. Charles L. Thomas, the dental surgeon, of Los Angeles, who owns extensive, valuable citrus property at El Modena.

Francis M. Thomas left Virginia with his parents when he was five years old and for two years lived in Kentucky, then removed to Kansas, where he was educated in the public schools of Hiawatha. With his older brother he looked after the farm, while his father bought and sold farms and dealt in dry goods and groceries. He was twenty-two years of age when, in the spring of 1884, he came out to California and settled at Santa Ana. He worked out for a year or two, getting used to the climate and the ways of the country.

At Santa Ana, August 15, 1886, Mr. Thomas was married to Miss Zoura Kerr, a native of Mexico, Audrain County, Mo., who came to Santa Ana in March, 1886, with her mother, Mrs. Serilda (Bates) Kerr, a native of Lee County, Va., who came to visit her brother, A. T. Bates, whom she had not seen for forty-two years. Mr. Bates had crossed the plains during the gold rush and was an early settler near Santa Ana. Mrs. Thomas' father, William Kerr, was born near Rockbridge, Va., later coming to Missouri, where he engaged in farming, passing away there when Mrs. Thomas was nineteen years of age. Mrs. Kerr died at the Thomas ranch August 7, 1910, at the age of seventy-nine, the mother of nine children, seven of whom are living.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas are the parents of six children: Lester R. is a mechanic with a specialty of automobiles and resides at Phoenix, Ariz.; Lelah married Clyde Deardorff, a tenant on Mr. Thomas' ranch; they have one child, Beverly June; Beulah is the wife of Harold Bullock, a tenant on her father's ranch and a partner with Mr. Deardorff; Gladys is an accomplished musician and resides at home; Eugene and Semone attend the Santa Ana high school. Mrs. Thomas is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana.

Mr. Thomas had ranched a number of years in Orange County when he bought his first farm and this was added to until he has 140 acres in one body that he still owns. It is a very valuable ranch, devoted largely to the raising of citrus fruit and to mixed farming. He set out orchards of walnuts and oranges to the extent of about fifty acres. For many years, he also followed dairy farming. In the early days of 1885 he ran a self-binder over the southern part of the city of Santa Ana that is now all built up and so he has cut and reaped grain on the spot where his residence now stands on South Main Street. He is a Republican in matters of national politics, but never permits a narrow partisanship to interfere with a hearty support of local measures and local men.

"Sarah Bartley, Mr. Thomas' maternal grandmother, died at Grand Prairie, Brown County, Kans., on December 10, 1889, aged eighty-two years. She was born in Washington County, Va., on May 22, 1807, and with her parents removed to Lee County, Va., in 1828, her father being a Methodist minister. In 1829, Miss Sarah Speak married James Bartley of Lee County, Va. This was indeed a happy marriage; for over sixty years they walked side by side, and during this time they were trusting God. Their home, until they moved to Kansas in 1884, was the home of the itinerant preacher, who always found a welcome and a share in the best of home comforts. This family was wonderfully blessed with good health—only one death in sixty years. One daughter passed on, but nine children survive her, all having homes of their own and enjoying prosperity. The last year of her life was passed in Kansas, that she and her husband might be with their children. She was a great sufferer during that year, and death, when it came, was welcome, for she passed away in the triumph of faith. Her husband, eighty-three years of age, yet survives." Such is part of an obituary notice, honoring this widely-honored lady. Another obituary notice bearing upon the story of Mrs. Thomas' life reads as follows:

"William H. Kerr, Esq., of Milo, Vernon County, whose remains were interred in Deepwood Cemetery, Wednesday, was born in Augusta County, Va., in 1819. He moved to this state (Missouri) in 1840, and has lived here ever since. He united with the Presbyterian Church when he was nineteen years old, and has been an honored and faithful member for nearly half a century. He married Serilda Bates in January, 1846, and leaves nine children. It is a remarkable fact that in so large a family, there has not been a death these forty-one years. A good man has gone, and few have left behind them a more worthy life record for the comfort and imitation of their children."

EARL A. GARDNER.—One of the younger generation of ranchers of Orange County, Earl A. Gardner, is rapidly forging to the front and developing into a "bonanza" farmer. Practically all of Mr. Gardner's life has been spent in California, as he came here when but a lad of eight years. Born in Cherry County, Nebr., August 9, 1886, his parents were David D. and Sarah (Hetzler) Gardner, who were successful farmers in Nebraska for a number of years, and there their six children were born: Adam is in business in San Francisco; Allen is a resident of Talbert; Ralph is a rancher at Oakdale; David D. lives near Huntington Beach; Earl A., of this review; and Lyda, wife of Frank Benton, of Orange County. In 1891 the Gardner family moved to Utah, remaining there three years, and coming overland by wagons from Ogden to California in 1894. They stopped some three months at Clearwater, coming to Wintersburg in the fall of that year, and since that time members of the family have been continuously connected with the ranching interests of Orange County.

Since his father farmed on rented land in different localities, Earl A. Gardner attended the public schools in several places, among them the Fullerton, Orangethorpe and Ocean View districts. David D. Gardner, Sr., died in 1903, at the age of fifty-three years, so that Earl was thrown upon his own resources at an early age. With a genuine interest in and liking for agriculture, he entered with energy and enthusiasm into ranching and soon branched out for himself as a tenant farmer. By hard work and excellent business management he has become one of the largest farmers in the Bolsa precinct, and has succeeded so well that now, at the age of only thirty-four, he is the owner of eighty acres of choice land, and an equipment of horses, two caterpillar tractors and a full complement of up-to-date implements and wagons with which he operates in all 750 acres of land, as besides his own farm he leases 670 acres from eight different landlords. The value of his crops will aggregate $85,000 per year, and his tools and implements of necessity are of a large range, variety and number, since his farming operations include the production of the following crops: lima beans, of which he will have thirty acres in 1920; 550 acres of sugar beets, celery, barley, oats and alfalfa hay. His equipment is worth $20,000 in money actually invested, and he keeps five men the year around and during the busy season has forty-five men on his pay roll.

In 1908, Mr. Gardner was married at Los Alamitos to Miss Fern Shutt, daughter of J. D. Shutt, a very attractive and accomplished young lady who was a member of the first high school class in the high school at Huntington Beach. Three interesting children have come to enliven their home: Bessie A., Margaret E. and Myrtle L. They reside on one of Mr. Gardner's rented ranches one-half mile south of Bolsa. Mrs. Gardner is a Congregationalist and is very popular in church and social circles. In politics Mr. Gardner favors the principles of the Republican party and in fraternal circles is a popular member of the Elks Lodge at Santa Ana. Mr. Gardner's mother, Mrs. Sarah Gardner, is still living and makes her home on one of the farms leased by him.

MRS. GRACE O. BOOSEY.—An excellent example of what a highly-intelligent, resolute, idealistic woman can do when thrown upon her own resources is afforded in the life and success of Mrs. Grace O. Boosey who operates 275 acres on the Irvine ranch, and in so doing enjoys the confidence and esteem, to an exceptional degree, of all in the community. A widow for the past five years, she has continued the business interests committed to her, maintained her cheerful and hospitable home, and reared her family of interesting children, and has accomplished more, in various ways, than many men have done.

Before her marriage, Mrs. Boosey was Miss Grace O. Chaffee, born in Riley County, Kans., and her parents, now both deceased, were Robert and Ann (Shields) Chaffee, who were early settlers of Riley County, Kans., he a native New Yorker, and she a native of England. They had eight children, and Mrs. Boosey was the youngest of them all. After completing the course in the public school she obtained a teacher's certificate at the age of seventeen and then taught school for four years. On February 17, 1897, she was married to George Boosey, who was also born in Riley County, Kans. His parents were Vermonters, the father having served in the Civil War. They also were very early settlers of Riley County and there George Boosey was reared on the frontier farm and there after their marriage they farmed until in 1909, they came to California.

Earl A. Gardner

Luckily, they early found their way to smiling Orange County; and on the Irvine ranch they settled as tenant farmers. Having mastered the ins and outs of agriculture in one of the greatest of all farm states in the Union, Mr. Boosey had no difficulty in succeeding as a rancher here; not merely accomplishing interesting things for himself, but pointing the way to others less able to master the difficulties of new, undeveloped environment. A loss to the county in which he had made such strides forward and where he would have undoubtedly continued to be a leader among aggressively progressive cultivators, Mr. Boosey died on November 9, 1915.

Now Mrs. Boosey plants twenty-five acres to black-eye beans, and 200 acres to lima beans, and sows fifty acres to hay; nor do other ranches yield a crop of superior quality than hers. She is assisted by her son, Raymond, the second-born, while her eldest child, Ramona, is employed in Los Angeles, and Florence, Robert and Cora are at home.

M. RUSSELL SCOTT.—A business man who has been able to turn his experience to good account, both for his own benefit and that of others, by engaging in real estate operations such as contribute to the development of the locality, is M. Russell Scott, who was born in Appanoose County, Iowa, on September 17, 1875. His parents were John E. and Sarah J. (Wright) Scott, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Indiana. The family were pioneers of Iowa, and in that state they became prominent. They had three children, and the youngest is the subject of our review. John E. Scott died on February 3, 1916, but the mother is still living at Santa Ana.

Russell Scott attended the public school at Glenwood, Iowa, and Shenandoah College, and then engaged in the merchandise business in partnership with his father, remaining in Glenwood, Iowa, for ten years. When he sold out, he came to California and soon located at Santa Ana.

Here he bought the old Ford Ranch of forty acres, devoted to walnuts which he still owns. All these years he has been engaged in real estate ventures, and as an experienced dealer has owned and traded land all over California. Now he resides at 123 North Orange Grove Avenue, Pasadena, with his devoted wife, who was Blanche L. Lingo before her marriage, which took place on May 9, 1906. She is a native of Belmont County, Ohio, whose father was born in Virginia, her mother being a native of Maryland. By a former marriage, Mr. Scott had three children—Gruba Leonora, Walter B., and Josephine L. The family attend the First Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Scott is an Elk, a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and also belongs to the Golf Club, while he is especially fond of quail hunting. In national politics he is a Republican, but in all local affairs for the making of a better community, and the more rapid and permanent development of Orange County, he is a first-class "booster," first, last and all the time.

THOMAS JAMES WILSON.—One of our most eminent poets immortalized the blacksmith trade in his poem, "The Village Blacksmith." However, the present day blacksmith shop, with its modern machinery, is quite another affair from Longfellow's "village smithy which stood under a spreading chestnut tree."

Thomas J. Wilson, of Tustin, Orange County, is engaged in general blacksmithing business, and owns a shop equipped with all the modern and improved machinery for the speedy output of all class of work. Although among the newer residents of Tustin, by his skill as a mechanic and his courteous and gentlemanly treatment of his customers he has won the favor of his numerous patrons and built up a profitable and permanent business. While he first came to California in 1901 he did not locate in Orange County until 1918.

Mr. Wilson was born in Boise City, Idaho, October 6, 1883, and is the son of James and Walburga (Jehle) Wilson, natives of Ireland and Germany, respectively. Reared and educated in his native state until 1897, he began to learn the horseshoer's trade in Omaha and later also took up general blacksmithing, which he has continued up to the present time.

During the Spanish-American War he served in the U. S. Navy as a blacksmith. He was first on the armored cruiser, Brooklyn, which was conspicuous in the battle of Santiago as Captain Schley's flag ship; later he served on the cruiser New York in the Philippines and was also in the Boxer uprising in China, and during his term of service his vessel touched at nearly every important port in the Orient. After the expiration of his three years' enlistment he was returned to San Francisco where he was honorably discharged as first chief petty officer. He then located at Moore, Mont., and engaged in the blacksmith business.

On September 12, 1915, Mr. Wilson was united in marriage with Miss Alice M. Robinson, born in Buffalo County, Nebr., a daughter of Charles L. and Mertie (Owen) Robinson, and they are the parents of a daughter, Mertie Marie. In their political views of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are Republicans, and religiously are consistent members of the Christian Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows.

BYRON ASA CRAWFORD.—The efficient manager of the Tustin Hill Citrus Association, Byron Asa Crawford, has held this position since 1915. He was born in Ripon, Wis., April 10, 1878, and is the son of Wm. F. and Ella J. (Newell) Crawford, natives of Connecticut and New York, respectively. There were two children in the parental home, Byron A. and Alice E. The father was a veteran of the Civil War, and served from its inception until the close. He enlisted twice; the first time in the Twenty-second Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and the second time in the Forty-fourth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, serving until the close of the war, and was commissioned second lieutenant. After the war he engaged in the manufacture of flour, becoming proprietor of the Ripon Flour Mills. The family came out to Tustin, Cal., in 1888, and he died in 1912, while living in Santa Ana; his widow survives him and resides in Los Angeles. He was popular in G. A. R. circles.

Byron A. Crawford received his education in the Tustin grammar school and then entered the Santa Ana high school, where he was graduated in 1897. After his school days were over he began his active connection with the marketing department of the citrus industry, finally entering the employ of the Ruddock Trench Company, becoming their foreman. From 1902 till 1905 he was engaged in the real estate business in Los Angeles, after which he made a trip to Nevada, where he operated a stage and freight line out of Searchlight. Returning to California, he became manager for the Iomosa Foothill Association at Cucamonga until 1913, when he returned to Orange County and was with the San Joaquin Fruit Company until 1915, then accepting his present position as manager of the Tustin Hill Citrus Association.

Mr. Crawford has been in the citrus business for almost twenty-five years, and is thoroughly competent for the responsible position he holds as manager of the Citrus Association. Since he has been in charge the directors have had no cause to complain of lack of interest on his part, and the growth of the institution under his capable management is sufficient evidence of his efficiency. The Tustin Hill Citrus Association was organized in 1909 by M. Atkin, H. Sharpless, A. J. Padgham and R. Brinsmead. The plant is located on the Newport road and the Southern Pacific Railroad, so has splendid shipping facilities. The plant has a large capacity, with plans for enlargement. The following are directors: A. E. Bennett, president; A. M. Robinson, first vice-president; J. A. McFadden, second vice-president; A. G. Finley, F. B. Browning, C. J. Klatt and Perry Lewis.

On February 22, 1906, occurred the marriage of Mr. Crawford, when he was united with Miss Violet L. Forney, daughter of T. D. and Elizabeth Forney, Denver, Colo., being her birthplace. Four children have come to bless their union: Dudley F., Wm. F., Janet E., and Kenneth B. Politically Mr. Crawford is an ardent Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks and the Tustin Lodge of Knights of Pythias.

FENELON C. MATTHEWS.—A self-made young man of far-sighted and bustling enterprise, whose success as a sugar beet grower and also as a breeder of the highest grade of Duroc-Jersey red swine has been notable, encouraging others to follow where he has led, is Fenelon C. Matthews, son of H. E. Matthews of Tustin, and junior partner in the firm of Stearns and Matthews. He was born in Kansas on September 2, 1889, and grew up on his father's Kansas farm where he had the greatest advantage in studying agriculture according to the most approved Middle West usages. At the early age of nineteen, however, his ambition urged him to push out into the world for himself; and coming to California in 1908, he took up his quarters on the Irvine ranch, and since then he has been a part of the history of Orange County. The Golden State offered him a rich reward for his exertions and sacrifices; and the challenge made him self-reliant.

Mr. Matthews owns a forty-acre hog ranch, one and a half miles southwest of Tustin, and there for the past year he has been breeding registered Duroc-Jersey red swine. The original stock was the best he could obtain, having been brought from Iowa bought from breeders who have the finest registered Duroc-Jersey hogs in the United States. Mr. Matthews is breeding both for the stock markets as well as breeders. He is a very naturally a member of the National Duroc-Record Association, and the San Joaquin Lima Bean Association. For the past twelve years, Mr. Matthews has grown sugar beets, and he leases 205 acres of the Irvine ranch all under irrigation, 150 acres of which he has planted to sugar beets, and fifty-five acres to lima beans. No better quality of beets or beans could well be found, for in addition to what he naturally acquires from his instructing personal experience, Mr. Matthews keeps abreast of the times and profits by the researches of those whose life work is to aid the farmer.

On this leased ranch Mr. Matthews resides with his wife and child, Harold Eugene, a happy family, if one is to be seen anywhere. Mrs. Matthews was Miss Edith Stearns, a daughter of Mr. Matthews' partner, before her marriage, and their wedding, one of the pleasant social affairs of the time, took place at Tustin in 1914. Mr. Matthews belongs to the Santa Ana Lodge of Odd Fellows and also to the Knights of Pythias in Tustin and in politics of national import he is an Independent Democrat. As might be surmised, this independence of view and action never permits partisanship to stand in the way of his giving hearty support to local measures well endorsed.

BARNEY P. CLINARD.—One of Orange County's progressive and wealthy ranchers is Barney P. Clinard, who raises grain on an extensive scale in the El Toro neighborhood, now having under cultivation more than 2,000 acres of land devoted to barley, wheat and beans. North Carolina was Mr. Clinard's birthplace, the Clinard family at that time residing near Thomasville in Davidson County, that state. The date of his birth was July 21, 1870, and he was the next to youngest of six children born to Randall and Jane (Payne) Clinard. Grandfather Clinard was born in Ireland, coming to North Carolina where he became a well-known farmer in Davidson County. During the Civil War Randall Clinard enlisted in the Confederate Army and saw active service in that four years of terrible fighting. Barney Clinard remained at the old home in North Carolina until he was of age, helping his father in the work on the farm, but in 1893 he decided to locate in the Far West, as he felt that the opportunities for success were greater than in his home state, which was still suffering from the ravages of war.

Mr. Clinard arrived in California January 17, 1893, and soon began working on ranches in the southern part of Orange County, spending several seasons with threshing crews in that locality. In 1904 he began ranching operations on his own account on the Lewis F. Moulton ranch at El Toro. He began in a modest way but was successful from the start and has expanded his operations until he now leases and cultivates 2,200 acres of this ranch. For the season of 1920 he has 2,000 acres in barley, eighty in wheat and 150 in beans. He produces an unusually large yield of all these crops and owns and operates his own bean thresher. In addition to this, Mr. Clinard is the owner of a thriving 40-acre walnut orchard on Halladay Street, Santa Ana, and also has a half interest in still another ranch at Irvine; Walter Cook, his partner in this enterprise, is in charge of the place. It consists of 141 acres, of which 101 acres are set to budded walnuts, twenty to oranges and twenty to lemons. The whole is irrigated by means of two electric pumping plants. In addition, Mr. Clinard also raises live stock and at the present time he is the owner of over 100 head of horses, mules and colts and fifty head of hogs.

A wide-awake, progressive and scientific farmer, Mr. Clinard richly deserves the splendid financial success that he has made, as it is due to his industry and intelligent work alone, as all the capital he had when he reached California amounted only to a few hundred dollars. A man of powerful physique, Mr. Clinard is the personification of energy and his genial nature makes him popular among a wide circle of friends. He is a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks.

JASPER N. TRICKEY.—A merchant with many years of valuable experience to his credit, who has become one of the leading business men of Balboa, is Jasper N. Trickey, a doubly interesting personality on account of his wonderful vitality and daily activity at the age of eighty-two. He was born at Exeter, Maine, on September 25, 1838, the son of William H. Trickey, a native of New Hampshire who was in the shoe business. He had married Miss Abigail Nudd, also a native of the Granite State, who lived to be fifty—or twenty-two years younger than her husband, when he died—and left eight children. Originally, the Trickeys came from Exeter, England, in 1640. They were shipbuilders and manufacturers, and settling at Portsmouth, Mass., did much to establish what in its time was one of the greatest of all American industries.

Leaving Maine when he was seventeen years old, Mr. Trickey came to California via Panama and landed at San Francisco in April, 1856. He went up to Oroville and for two years ran a fruit business there. Then he moved on to Victoria, B. C., where he transacted business for four years; and for another four years he was on the Fraser River, engaged at the same time in merchandise business. He was later still a merchant in Salt Lake City, and while there he saw the last rail laid and golden spike driven at Promontory Point, 1869, connecting up the Union Pacific with the Central Pacific Railroad.

When he left Salt Lake, he returned east to Wichita, Kans., and he helped build up that city. During the same period, he went to Clinton County, Mo., and was married to Miss Harriet Stover, a native of Ohio. He spent thirty years in Sedgwick County, Kans., and gave of his best to help build up Wichita and other places, all the while engaged in general merchandising.

In 1899, Mr. Trickey returned to California and settled at Santa Ana; and there, at the corner of Fourth Street and Broadway, he had one of the choicest grocery stores in Orange County. He bought a residence at Santa Ana, and this he still owns. On selling out, he came to Balboa in November, 1914, and here he has conducted a first class grocery ever since. He also owns good residence property at Balboa. As a representative business man of so many years experience, Mr. Trickey's choice of the political creeds of the Republican party is interesting.

Six of Mr. and Mrs. Trickey's children are still living, although the eldest child, Clarence, died in 1919 at Mesa, Ariz., where he ran a large furniture store. He left a wife, Lunette Turner, and two children, Helen and Margaret. Frank is married to Ethel Newman of Kansas and has two children—Phyllis and Keith; he has been deputy city clerk at Mesa, Ariz., for the past two years. Paul is with Smart and Final Company, wholesale grocers, at Santa Ana. He married Flossie Talcott and has four children—Evelyn, Beverly, Pauline and Virginia. Lawrence clerks for the Spurgeon Furniture Company, and resides at Santa Ana with his wife, who was Ethel Rose, and has one child—Lawrence L., Jr.; Melvin lives with his wife, Maxine, at Pomona; John and Hope assist their father. Mr. Trickey is a Knight Templar, being a member of the Santa Ana Commandery; nor has that worthy organization a worthier member or one more devoted.

LINCOLN JOSEPH CARDEN.—One of the best-informed men in the busy realty world of Santa Ana, and therefore one of the most optimistic regarding the future of Orange County property of every description, is Lincoln Joseph Carden, for the past sixteen years engaged, as few have been, including even the most enthusiastic native sons, in "boosting" this favored section of the rich and promising Golden State. He was born in Danville, Iowa, on January 15, 1860, the son of William Carden, whose birthplace was sixteen miles from Cincinnati, Ohio, and who grew up a farmer. He came west to Iowa in 1855, pioneered in Des Moines County, farmed extensively at Danville, and died in 1866, at the age of thirty-seven. He had married Miss Elizabeth Miller, a native of Ohio, who died in Iowa in 1890. They had eight children—seven boys and a girl—and all are living save the daughter and a son.

The fourth youngest and the only one in California, Lincoln Joseph, was brought up on the home farm and attended Howes Academy at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, after which he studied at Christian College in Oskaloosa, Iowa. Then he taught school in Des Moines County for five years, after which he married Miss Minnie A. Lyons, a native of Winfield, Iowa, and the daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth Lyons. As an old settler, her father was an extensive farmer, prominent in Iowa politics, and a member of the assembly in the Iowa legislature.

Following their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Carden removed to Henry County and engaged in the hardware and implement business; and there they continued until 1904, when they came to California and Santa Ana, and for a year Mr. Carden was in the general merchandise business. Then he began his career as a realtor, and such has been his success in this field, that he has continued in it ever since. He is now the senior member of Carden, Liebig & Seamans, who have their offices at 307 North Main Street. They handle both city and country property, and make a specialty of ranches. Mr. Carden himself is interested directly in horticulture, having owned and improved several ranches, and so is able personally to judge of many points at issue in the selling and buying of farm property. He is an ex-director of the Chamber of Commerce, and a stockholder and a director in the Orange County Trust and Savings Bank. A Republican in matters of national politics, he has not allowed partisanship to influence him in his willing service as a member, for a term, on the board of education.

Three children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Carden: Jessie has become Mrs. Jabe Hill of Santa Ana, her husband being a member of Hill & Carden, the clothiers; Lester T. is the other member of that firm; and Helen is at home. Mr. Carden was made a Mason in Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and he also belongs to the Santa Ana Lodge of Odd Fellows. The family are members of the First Presbyterian Church, where Mr. Carden has been a trustee for the past twelve years.

L. J. Carden,

FRANK W. MILLEN.—The right man, in the right place, at the right hour would seem to be Frank W. Millen, of the well-known firm of Millen and Lampman, dealers in sand and gravel, who are doing as much as any one in Orange County to solve the vexing problems attending the dearth of houses and the urgent demand for buildings and building materials. He is a man of wide experience, excellent judgment and conscientious attention to business; and is very popular with all who have occasion to have dealings with him.

Mr. Millen was born in Henderson County, Ill., on May 8, 1872, the son of John and Sarah (Gordon) Millen. His father was born in Indiana and married in Illinois; and in that latter state both his mother and he himself were born, on the same old family farm. He grew up in the vicinity of his birth, and not far from his birthplace served his apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade.

In 1906 Mr. Millen came out to California and settled in Santa Ana; he worked at his trade for about one year, then took up the contracting business on his own responsibility and built many residences during the nine years he followed the business. Santa Ana has been his home ever since, with the exception of two and a half years when he and his partner were cement contractors at San Pedro. In 1917, Messrs. Millen and Lampman removed from the harbor, and recently they have further expanded by leasing a tract of five acres on the Long Beach road, one quarter of a mile west of the County Hospital. There they have installed a hoist and screen drawn by an eight-horse power gas engine; and this is perhaps the largest deposit of pea gravel and clean sand to be found in Orange County. A careful analysis has shown it to be free from dirt—an advantage that only the builder appreciates. The carefully-wrought screens sort out four grades, all the way from plastering sand to pea gravel for foundations, curbs, gutters and sidewalks. Their product is delivered to the contractors in Orange County and adjacent territory by truck. Their capacity now averages fifty yards daily and they are rapidly increasing their plant.

Both Mr. Lampman and Mr. Millen are experienced, energetic and highly progressive operators; and in view of the growing markets touching their field, it is safe to predict for them a constantly increasing trade. Already they are one of the elements of strength, and most promising, in the Santa Ana commercial world.

HENRY W. WITMAN.—A ranchman who has had an extensive, varied experience, and has so well succeeded that he has become an excellent beet grower, a public-spirited citizen and a good neighbor, is Henry W. Witman, at present operating 150 acres on the Irvine ranch. He was born at Catlettsburg, Ky., July 13, 1860, situated on the Ohio and Big Sandy Rivers, and was reared in the oil fields of West Virginia. His father was Charles Witman, a pioneer West Virginia oil operator, who at one time had 100 pumping wells. He was married in Kentucky to Miss Ann McMillan, a native of Aberdeen, Ohio, and the daughter of Wm. McMillan, a Scotch-Irish millwright. The Witmans during several generations were identified with Pennsylvania, and Henry Witman, a brother of Charles, was also a pioneer in the oil enterprise and made a specialty of the manufacture and vending of tools and machinery for sinking oil wells, his headquarters being at Parkersburg, W. Va. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Witman came to California in 1885, and they both died at Los Angeles, having each reached the ripe old age of eighty-one.

As Henry Witman grew up, he also got into the oil game, and at twenty-one in Volcano, W. Va., September 21, 1881, he was married to Miss Emma C. Mudge, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., but a resident of Parkersburg, W. Va., and a graduate of the Leesburg, Va., Seminary. Mr. Witman himself was a graduate of the celebrated Eastman Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Mrs. Witman is a daughter of Daniel C. and Emily (Carr) Mudge, born on Long Island, N. Y., and St. Louis, Mo., respectively. As a young man Mr. Mudge was located at Council Bluffs, Iowa, with a firm of Indian traders. Returning East he was married in Virginia after which he was with Hood, Bonbright and Company, an importing firm in Philadelphia, Pa. Later he was superintendent of coal mines in Pennsylvania and then in West Virginia. After he retired they resided in Yonkers, N. Y., until their death. On her mother's side Mrs. Witman's ancestors fought in the Revolutionary War.

After his marriage, Mr. Witman took up the lumber business in the great saw mills of the Alleghany Mountains, in West Virginia, and for two and a half years was in the service of a Baltimore Lumber Company. In 1887, however, during the great "boom" in realty here, he came out to California and settled at Hueneme, in Ventura County, where he engaged in hardware and plumbing until 1900, when the Oxnard Sugar Factory started up, and he removed his business to Oxnard where, aside from his hardware and plumbing business, he was associated with E. A. Chambers in drilling artesian wells. For twelve years he continued in business and under President McKinley and President Roosevelt he served as postmaster of Oxnard. He was also secretary of the board of trustees of the Oxnard Union high school for ten years.

In 1908, with the same partner, E. A. Chambers, now deceased, he leased a ranch of 700 acres at Tomato Springs on the Irvine ranch, Orange County, and for five years farmed to lima beans. Then his partner died, and Mr. Witman then turned over the lease to his son, H. W. Witman, Jr., who is still farming there. In 1913 he disposed of his interests in Ventura County and moved to Orange County and took his present lease on the Irvine ranch.

Mr. Witman has wrought a magical transformation in the 150 acres he is operating. He devotes 100 acres to sugar beets, and fifty acres to barley hay, and it is safe to say that there are no more attractive fields anywhere in the Aliso district, the whole presenting a very different sight from that beheld by him and W. G. Mitchell, manager of the Irvine Company, with whom he drove through there seven years ago. Then there was such a morass of wild mustard and sunflowers that they had to stand up in their wagon to see where they were. He put the first plow in the soil and the land is now a choice beet and market garden district, recently drained by the Irvine Company, which supplies all the water needed, from wells pumped by electricity.

Five children have blessed this marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Witman. Roy B., the eldest, is in the furniture and plumbing business at Oxnard. Mary M. is the wife of Harry C. Bohlander, a beet grower on the Irvine ranch. Ellen B., the third born, became the wife of L. L. Edmunds, chief engineer of the Crockett Sugar Refinery, residing at Crockett, and died on May 8, 1920, leaving two children: H. W., Jr., already referred to, is the lima bean grower on the Irvine ranch, and Daniel Phillip, who graduated from the Harvard Military School at Los Angeles, in June, 1920, is farming beets on the Irvine ranch with his father.

A Republican in national politics, Mr. Witman was for years active in Ventura County politics as central committeeman and delegate to county conventions. Fraternally he was made a Mason in Volcano Lodge in West Virginia, in 1881 and on coming to California was a charter member of Hueneme Lodge No. 341, F. & A. M., which was afterwards removed to Oxnard and named Oxnard Lodge No. 341, and there he was the second master. He is a member of Oxnard Chapter, R. A. M., and of Ventura Commandery No. 4, K. T. and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles. He is also a life member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks and a member of the Eagles of Oxnard. Mrs. Witman is a member of the Episcopal Church as well as the Ebells Club of Santa Ana and both took an active part in the Red Cross and war drives in the Irvine district.

WILLIAM HENEKS.—Descended through the paternal genealogy from sturdy residents of Holland, that little country famed for its thrift and frugality, William Heneks has inherited many of the sterling qualities of his forbears, and these, combined with his own initiative and determination, have brought him a large degree of success. Mr. Heneks was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1844, his parents being John and Mary (Treichler) Heneks. The father, who combined the occupation of blacksmith with agricultural pursuits, was also a native of that state, Grandfather Heneks having settled in eastern Pennsylvania shortly after coming over from Holland. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. John Heneks: John Parker, Lydia Ann; Effinger, who lives in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Joseph; David; Elizabeth, who resides at Santa Ana with her brother William; Mary, who died in Iowa; and William.

Up to the age of twelve years, William Heneks resided on the old home farm in Pennsylvania, attending the local schools of the community. In 1855 the Heneks family removed to Cedar County, Iowa, and here he received but little opportunity for any further education, as he early began to do farm work, helping establish the family home in the new country, as the locality now occupied by large towns and rich farms was as yet comparatively sparsely settled and the magnitude of its present prosperity as yet undiscerned. By dint of industry and good management he became the owner of a good farm of 120 acres and this he farmed with splendid results for a number of years, also being associated with his sister, Miss Elizabeth Heneks, in the cultivation of the eighty-acre farm she had acquired.

An older brother, John Parker Heneks, came to California about 1898, his health requiring a milder climate; he was a veteran of the Civil War, having participated in Sherman's famous march to the sea and the many hardships he had undergone had sadly impaired his health. Although comparatively an invalid and unable to take any active part in business he was much impressed with the wonderful possibilities apparent in this beautiful country, and he wrote to his brothers and sisters, urging them to come to Orange County and enjoy its wonderful climate and take advantage of its opportunities. At the time of his death, 1900, William Heneks and his brother Effinger, now ninety-three years old, came to Santa Ana and even during their short stay at that time they were much impressed with this part of the country. In 1903 William and his sister Elizabeth disposed of their farming interests in Iowa and came to Santa Ana. For a year and a half they lived on Pine Street, removing from there to 1406 East First Street, where they purchased a twenty-acre walnut ranch. Mr. Heneks at once set to work to improve the place in every possible way, putting in cement pipe lines for irrigation and bringing the whole ranch up to a high state of cultivation, so that it became one of the best paying properties in the vicinity. In January, 1920, they disposed of this ranch at a handsome figure and he and his sister now reside at their beautiful home at 702 South Broadway, Santa Ana, one of the south side's most attractive places, with its well-kept lawn, walks, arbors and flowers, and here they enjoy the fruits of their useful and industrious lives. They enter heartily into the spirit of Santa Ana's progress and the community is indeed fortunate to have gained such worthy and estimable residents.

J. B. Carrillo

JUAN GARIBALDI CARILLO.—The name of Carillo is one that is well known in Southern California, the family having been among the largest landowners in this section, and prominent in the history of its early days. J. G. Carillo, or Garibaldi, as he is familiarly known by his friends, the subject of this sketch, is the son of Jose R. and Vincenta (Sepulveda) Carillo, the latter being the daughter of Francisco Sepulveda, who was the owner of a large rancho west of Olive. At the time of her marriage to Jose R. Carillo she was the widow of Thomas Yorba, of the well-known Spanish family whose name is linked with the early days of Orange County.

Jose R. Carillo was the owner of a large Spanish grant in San Diego County, now called Warner's ranch. It was three miles square and comprised 5,760 acres. He also owned the Rancho San Jose, adjoining Warner's ranch, a tract of over 25,000 acres. Mr. and Mrs. Carillo were the parents of nine children, six daughters and three sons, Garibaldi being the youngest in order of birth. He was born on the Carillo ranch in San Diego County, May 19, 1861. His father died in 1864, having been shot from ambuscade at Cucamonga Creek. Garibaldi then lived with his mother on Warner's ranch until 1870, when they moved to Anaheim, where he went to school and also worked out on farms to help his mother. When sixteen years of age, he with twelve others drove 900 head of horses belonging to Don Juan Forster to Utah, remaining there two years, when he returned home. He farmed near Corona, Riverside County, for five years, and then became foreman for Don Marco Forster at Capistrano, which position he filled five years; then as foreman for Richard O'Neill an additional five years, when he resigned to go to Nicaragua, Central America, in 1893; for two years he dealt in coffee, rubber and hides, shipping to New York City, when he was taken sick and returned to California in 1895. He then became foreman for James McFadden, a position he filled with ability for five years, when he quit and located a homestead of 160 acres near Hot Springs, Riverside County, where he resided and brought it to a high state of cultivation. He then returned to Santa Ana and spent one year as a foreman and then quit to engage in partnership in cattle raising with James McFadden on the place he is now on, known as the Aliso ranch of 1,487 acres—five miles east of El Toro, and the next year he leased the ranch and since then has engaged in farming and raising cattle, horses, mules and hogs, in which he has been very successful, being a member of the California Cattle Growers Association. He is also the owner of a ranch of 160 acres in Riverside County and this he devotes to stock raising, having for the past fifteen years used the Forest Reserve for a stock range.

In San Luis Rey, March 4, 1900, Juan G. Carillo was united in marriage with Miss Petra Ortega, who is also a descendant of two distinguished Spanish families. She is the daughter of Juan D. and Eduvige (Tico) Ortega, and both parents are still living, the father being the manager of the James McFadden ranch at Santa Ana. Grandfather Miguel Emidio Ortega, who owned the Ortega grant in Santa Barbara County, covering two leagues, married Concepcion Dominguez, who died in 1909 at Ventura at the age of ninety-seven years, after an eventful life covering a long vista of years, in which she saw the country grow from the small settlement clustered about the Mission to a thriving city and prosperous countryside. The old Ortega homestead, where she passed so many years of her life, has long occupied a place among the interesting landmarks of Ventura and its reproduction on paper has become familiar to thousands throughout the United States and foreign lands, as it is used as a trademark by E. C. Ortega, the wealthy owner and founder of the Pioneer Chile Packing Company of Los Angeles, a son of Dona Concepcion Dominguez Ortega.

Mrs. Petra Carillo is descended from the Tico family through her mother, whose brother, J. J. Tico, was one of Ventura's oldest residents, his death occurring there in 1919. His father, Fernando Tico, who married Maria Jesus Ortega, was given the Ojai grant, covering four Spanish leagues, by Governor Juan D. Alvarado, the Ticos being among the first Spanish families to settle in Ventura County.

Mr. and Mrs. Carillo are the parents of seven children: Carlos and Vincenta attend the Capistrano Union high school and Vincenta took the prize in the Liberty Loan speakers' contest at Trabuca school in 1919; Juanita, Bennie, Jerome, Randolph and George. Identified with this locality for half a century, Mr. Carillo stands high in the esteem of a large circle of friends and with his interesting family takes an active interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the community. The family are communicants of the Catholic Church at El Toro and in politics Mr. Carillo is a Republican.

HARVEY F. BENNETT.—The son of one of Orange County's best known pioneer citizens who contributed much to the advancement of the vital interests of the county, especially in the early days, Harvey F. Bennett is himself a native son of the Golden State. The Bennett family traces its ancestry back to the earliest colonial days, some of that name being among the first groups of those brave souls who risked the dangers of a large circle of friends and with his interesting family takes an active interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the community. The family are communicants of the Catholic Church at El Toro and in politics Mr. Carillo is a Republican.

Charles F. Bennett, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born at Kent, Litchfield County, Conn., April 23, 1842, his parents being William and Sarah (Brunsen) Bennett. William Bennett was engaged in various manufacturing enterprises at Litchfield, but in 1851 he removed with his family to the then sparsely settled regions of LaSalle County, Ill., settling near Deerpark, where he took up a tract of virgin land, which he brought under cultivation, at the same time devoting some attention to manufacturing various articles. Charles F. Bennett received his early education at the old Connecticut home, where as a small boy he had the great fortune to come under the personal influence of Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison, so that he was from a child inculcated with the principles of abolition, and in later years this was increased by a personal acquaintance with Abraham Lincoln and John C. Fremont. Coming with his parents to Illinois, his boyhood was spent on the home farm in LaSalle County, and even then he was identified with many stirring scenes in aiding slaves in their flight toward liberty. When the Civil War broke out he was taking a preparatory course in the Chicago University, and he soon enlisted. In August, 1862, he was assigned to the Douglas Brigade, participating in thirty-two engagements with this organization, among them the battles of Shiloh and Vicksburg. He had charge of the guard at General Sherman's headquarters during the famous march to the sea and vividly recalls the consultation between Sherman, Grant and Logan regarding the decision to take this line of action, which proved to be the turning point of the war. Mr. Bennett was slightly wounded several times and had many narrow escapes, being grazed with bullets on a number of occasions. When he received his honorable discharge, with the rank of first lieutenant, at the close of the war, the hardships and privations had greatly impaired his health, but after two years he was again sufficiently restored in strength to take up active work. For a number of years he engaged in teaching school in various parts of Illinois, and was also interested in stock raising near the old Bennett homestead.

In 1872 C. F. Bennett was united in marriage with Miss Helen Beach, who was also a native of Connecticut, and in 1878 they decided to seek their fortune on the great plains of the West and so removed to Nebraska, making the long journey from Illinois in a prairie schooner. Mr. Bennett engaged in cattle raising until the range became too limited through the settling up of the country. He then settled at Arapahoe, Nebr., where he conducted a hotel as well as a large merchandise business. Coming to California in 1885, they settled first at San Diego, a small town at that time, as the railroad to that point had not yet been built. They remained there but a short time, coming up the coast to Oceanside, where they purchased a forty-acre hillside farm. During the boom, they disposed of their holdings at a profit and came to Tustin, where he purchased ten acres, subsequently developing it and making it one of the choice properties of that locality; he now has twenty-two acres in Tustin and Santa Ana; also owns a sixty-acre ranch at El Toro. One of the authorities on irrigation in the country, Mr. Bennett installed one of the few private irrigation systems at El Toro taking water from Aliso Creek, also put in a well and pumping plant, and his active interest in promoting irrigation movements had much to do with the advancement of land values. He and his wife still reside on their home place at Tustin.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Bennett are the parents of three living children—Frederick W., Charles A., and Harvey F., their only daughter, Pearl Edna, having passed away some years ago. Harvey F. Bennett was born at Tustin on October 31, 1892, and was reared on the Bennett homestead there. He received a good education in the grammar school at Tustin and at the Santa Ana high school, but being ambitious and anxious to get a start for himself he began farming while he was in his senior year at high school. He located at El Toro in 1911, and as a reward for the thrift and industry of his early years he is now the owner of a choice ranch of twenty acres half a mile southeast of El Toro, ten acres of which is in budded walnuts, now twelve years old, the other half of his acreage being set to three-year-old Valencia oranges. In addition to this Mr. Bennett manages the sixty-acre ranch belonging to his father, thirty acres of which is in walnuts, the remaining thirty being planted to apricots, interspersed with walnuts. The management of both holdings, comprising eighty acres, naturally brings with it much responsibility and hard work, but Mr. Bennett is making a splendid success, which is richly deserved.

Mr. Bennett's marriage, which occurred in 1914, united him with Miss Frances Lillian McDonald, a daughter of T. F. McDonald, the well-known carpenter and builder of Santa Ana. Two little girls have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bennett—Helen Marie and Beverly Ellen. Mrs. Bennett is a social leader in the community and in the circles of the Episcopal Church at El Toro, where she teaches in the Sunday School and is prominent in the work of the ladies' aid. While Mr. Bennett is inclined to the political policies of the Democratic party, he is broad minded and nonpartisan in local affairs, believing the interests of the community are best conserved by voting for the best men and measures.

JOHN H. WARNE.—A well-to-do rancher of the Bolsa district, who has won his success entirely through his own industry and enterprise, is John H. Warne. One of England's sons, he was born in the County of Cornwall, March 8, 1870, the son of John and Betty (Pascoe) Warne. The parents were substantial farmers, the home place being near Truro, and there they both lived and died. Besides John H., they were the parents of one daughter, Mary E., now widowed, and who is a resident of England. He attended the common schools of his birthplace and was brought up in the Wesleyan faith, his parents being devoted members of that denomination. Up to the age of seventeen he lived on the home farm, where he assisted his father in all the labor about the place, getting the foundational training for the life of a rancher which he has led in recent years. In the fall of 1887, however, he determined to strike out for himself, encouraged by the stories he had heard of the greater opportunities awaiting young men in America. After a very stormy voyage on the SS. Celtic, he landed at Castle Garden, October 9 of that year. He went directly to Ishpeming, Mich., and at once obtained employment in the iron mines there. It was hard, unpleasant work, for the most part underground, but Mr. Warne remained there for three years, in the meantime practicing thrift and economy and saving as much of his wages as possible.

In 1890 he decided to move on westward, and so made the journey to Los Angeles, going later to Hanford, Kings County, where he secured work on farms in that locality. After eight years in Hanford, he returned to Ishpeming, remaining there for two years, coming back to California in 1900 and locating this time at Santa Ana. He purchased forty acres of land in the vicinity of Bolsa and has since made it his home. He started in at once to cultivate his holdings and has continued to make improvements from year to year. He has developed several flowing wells on his place and installed an up-to-date pumping plant, and has $5,000 worth of cement pipe and open ditches for irrigation. He has also erected an attractive bungalow, a fine large barn and other buildings and the whole ranch has the well-kept, prosperous appearance that betokens the progressive farmer. He has added to his first holdings by three subsequent purchases and now has 162 acres, all in a body.

Mr. Warne was united in marriage on September 20, 1905, to Miss Sarah E. McGarvin, a daughter of Richard and Nettie (Vance) McGarvin, natives of Missouri, coming to Los Angeles County in 1875, settling in the New Hope section, then called Gospel Swamp, but both now deceased. Mrs. Warne was born in Orange County and was reared and educated in the Garden Grove district. Mr. and Mrs. Warne have three sons: John L., Henry William, and Thomas Wesley. Generous and kindly to all, Mr. Warne is always progressive in his ideas and gladly conforms to the best thought and reform movements of the day, and his life under two flags has broadened his views and widened his sympathies for common humanity.

DEMPSEY W. GOULD.—Fulton County, Ill., was the birthplace of Dempsey W. Gould, his birth occurring near Lewistown in that state on January 21, 1876, his parents being Thomas and Christina (Wadkins) Gould—born in Browne County, Ohio, and Fulton County, Ill., respectively. Thos. Gould when a youth enlisted as a drummer boy in Company I, One Hundred Forty-sixth Ohio Regiment of Infantry, rising to the rank of first lieutenant. He came out to Illinois where he became a well known veterinary surgeon, and was also engaged in agriculture, the home place being situated about seventeen miles south of Lewistown. Grandfather Samuel Gould was born in Scotland and came to America when but a boy, settling in Ohio at first and later coming to Illinois, where he was a pioneer in Fulton and Schuyler counties. He pre-empted land here in the early days and engaged in farming on the virgin prairie soil.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Gould were the parents of ten children; six daughters and two sons are still living. The fifth child in order of birth, Dempsey W. Gould is the only one of the family residing in California. He received his education in the country schools of the neighborhood and from the age of fifteen he has made his own way in the world without financial assistance from others. For a time he worked out on farms in the locality, later engaging in farming on rented land in the county of his birth. In March, 1907, with thirteen other young men from Fulton County, he went to Payne County, Okla., to engage in raising cotton. The experiment was a disastrous one, however, and they lost everything they had invested. Without financial resources and with a wife and two children depending upon him for support, one less resolute than Mr. Gould would have given away to discouragement, but he has always met reverses with a courageous smile and wrested success from circumstances that would have daunted one of less determination and energy.

Borrowing the sum of $100, Mr. Gould brought his family from Oklahoma to California and took a job as track man for the Santa Fe Railroad at Capistrano, at a dollar and a half per day. He continued to work for the Santa Fe for nearly two years, becoming an extra section foreman. It was natural, however, for one of his agricultural training to gravitate back to the land, so he worked with a threshing crew for a season. In 1912 he came to El Toro, and leased 250 acres of land and this amount he has increased from time to time until he now operates 700 acres on the O'Neill or Santa Margarita ranch, southeast of El Toro. Here he engages in grain farming on an extensive scale, the larger part of his acreage being devoted to barley. Mr. Gould owns the house and other buildings and a full complement of farm implements and has forty-two head of mules, horses and colts.

On June 6, 1901, at Havana, Mason County, Ill., Mr. Gould was united in marriage with Miss Lillian Trapp, who was also born near Lewistown, Ill., the daughter of John Trapp born in Illinois, a prominent Fulton County farmer who is now deceased; her mother was Elizabeth Freeman who, at the age of eighty-one, is living in El Toro. Of their nine children Mrs. Gould is the youngest.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gould—Bruce M. who assists his father on the farm, and Ferne, and both are social favorites. A Republican in politics, Mr. Gould takes a lively interest in the questions of the day, is a good talker, and his affability has made for him a large circle of friends.

MRS. IDA B. KING.—California, justly appreciative of both her sons and her daughters, is especially proud of those women who, called upon to assume the serious responsibilities of life in a world still largely managed by the stronger sex, have displayed such signal fitness for their work that they have not only held their own, but have often pointed the way, and perhaps by far better routes or means of travel, to others with even longer experience. Such a leader in the feminine world in the management of important affairs is Mrs. Ida B. King, widow of the late Charles H. King, and daughter of the well-known pioneer of Santa Ana, Samuel Ross. For twenty-six years past she has been a tenant on the Irvine ranch, probably the oldest tenant, therefore, on the historic San Joaquin; and, as one of the first generation of Orange County girls, she herself has a most interesting association with the history of Southern California.

Growing up in the city and county of her birth, Mrs. King was married in 1894 to Charles H. King, a native of Waitsburg, Wash., where he was born on January 19, 1873, the son of Samuel and Sarah Ann King, who early came to Washington. After he had braved the dangers of the great plains and had helped to establish law, order and civilization in the North, Mr. King came south to Orange County, and settled first at Orange and later at Garden Grove. Charles was reared and educated in that vicinity; and as his father was a rancher, he took naturally to the life of the agriculturist, and after a while commenced to raise grain for himself on the Freeman ranch near Inglewood.

Encouraged by his success, he branched out in 1891 on a larger scale by coming to Orange County and leasing, on shares, 320 acres on the San Joaquin ranch. Prior to his coming there, no one had ever attempted to raise barley and beans on the San Joaquin ranch; and neighboring farmers watched his venture with scientific interest. He demonstrated that he knew what he was about not only in the quality of the beans he raised, but in the fifteen or more sacks yielded by each acre at the harvest. He was among the first to purchase a gasoline traction engine to plow his land, and that innovation alone made him locally famous, for he could turn up from ten to fifteen acres of the soil a day, and go twelve inches deep for his beans, which, with horses or mules, is a very difficult task.

Mr. & Mrs. Miguel Errera

Mr. King was a Republican in politics, and took a very live interest in local political happenings. He was a deputy registration clerk on the Myford board at every election, represented his precinct at county conventions, and was a member of the county central committee. Affiliated with Santa Ana Lodge No. 142, Knights of Pythias, he also belonged to Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. E. He died on May 14, 1911. Since his death, Mrs. King has continued to manage and develop the estate, and she has done so with rare ability. She now operates 300 acres of the James Irvine, or San Joaquin ranch, of which fifty acres are devoted to the making of hay and 250 to the growing of lima beans. She also owns ten acres at Tustin, now planted to oranges, upon which she intends soon to build.

Three children give joy and solace to this admirable woman, whose life is lived in part for the advancement of the best and most permanent interests of Orange County and the promising Southland. Mildred is the wife of Joe Branson and resides at Madera. Ruth has become Mrs. Fred Rising, and lives at Los Angeles. And Herald is at home, at the interesting age of fifteen. Another son, Roscoe, died when eight years of age. She is also rearing a grandchild, Lamar Hossler, to whom she also gives her motherly care and devotion.

MIGUEL ERRECA.—One of the pioneer stockmen of Southern California, Miguel Erreca was born near Aldudes, Basses Pyrenees, on the line between France and Spain, August 10, 1854, a son of Juan and Marie Erreca, who were well-to-do farmers, owning a place of 500 acres, but both passed away before Miguel left that country. They had three children, two of whom grew up, our subject being the only one now living. His brother Juan came to California with Miguel and they were partners for eleven years, when Juan returned to France and died two years later.

Miguel Erreca was brought up on the home farm, and this place he still owns in partnership with a nephew. Having heard good reports of splendid opportunities awaiting young men who were not afraid to work he came to California in 1873 and made his way by the Overland stage from Los Angeles to San Juan Capistrano, where he had a cousin, Bernardo Erreca, who was engaged in the sheep business. He had arrived in the old mission town at one o'clock one February morning. The next morning he got up a little late and looked out to see what the place was like. He saw a band of vaqueros, all horseback; they had long whiskers and long hair that covered their ears and eyes and, as he says, looked like a band of goats. Big pistols were hanging at their sides and big knives in their belts. He was at first a little frightened but when he got outside and up closer he heard them talk Spanish and entered into conversation with them. They were half Mexicans and half Indians but all turned out to be good fellows. He lived eleven years in San Juan Capistrano among those people and found them square and reliable. After working two months for Chas. Landell he went to work for his cousin, Bernardo Erreca, and continued with him for seven years and six months. Bernardo Erreca had four partners, among them two Orroqui brothers; one of them is now dead, but the other, Juan Orroqui, is still living and was one of Miguel's first bosses; he now resides on Garnsey Street, Santa Ana, eighty-two years of age and totally blind—but Miguel still visits him and tries to bring him comfort and cheer in his unfortunate condition.

After working for Bernardo Erreca for over seven years, Miguel and his brother purchased a half interest and they continued together successfully. Two years later they bought more sheep from Erreca's old partners and leased all of the Trabuco ranch and ran 20,000 head of sheep. About two years later Miguel and his brother bought Bernardo's interest and ran the whole ranch and flocks. They did well and their flocks increased. There was no market for the sale of sheep to speak of in Southern California at that time, so once every two years they would drive two flocks of about 2,500 head each to San Francisco and dispose of them, the entire trip and return consuming about three months. Sheep at that time sold from $1.50 to $2.50 a head, including the wool. Later on Miguel bought his brother's interest and continued business alone with his headquarters on the Trabuco ranch of 26,000 acres.

It was the custom of the ranchers in those days to go to San Juan Capistrano to buy their supply of groceries. They would hitch their horses in front of the store and be all loaded up when they would go in to have a final smile and then they would keep on smiling till supper was announced, and after supper again had to have a few more rounds, and so the horses stood hitched outside until after midnight. They never found anything missing from the wagons in those days for they were all good, honest and reliable people. They would then start for their homes, arriving in the wee sma' hours of the next morning.

Mr. Erreca was offered the whole of the Trabuco ranch for $4.00 per acre and a banker in Los Angeles advised him to buy it and said he would furnish him the money, and give him all the time he wanted, but Miguel was too conservative and would not risk it, but afterwards saw he had made the mistake of his life. A couple of years later Richard O'Neill bought the ranch and he, of course, lost the lease of it. Mr. Erreca then leased a part of the Irvine ranch, a tract 6,000 acres, which extended from Newport to Tustin; here he ran sheep for nine years and then sold out. Meantime, in 1883, he had purchased four acres on Hickey and Sixth streets, between Olive and Baker streets, Santa Ana, built a residence and made it his home. He then began farming on the James McFadden ranch and then leased land in various parts of Orange County. One year he had 3,700 acres in grain; one season he lost about $50,000 but he kept on and finally paid the debt one hundred cents on the dollar; he later farmed 1,700 acres on the Moulton ranch for seven years. In 1917 he quit farming and sold his outfit. He now makes his residence on his four-acre tract that he has set to Valencia oranges.

Mr. Erreca was married in Los Angeles, where he was united with Miss Marie Oronos, born in Bigorre, France, an estimable woman of a lovable disposition of whom he was bereaved on February 6, 1894. She left him two children: Juanita, a graduate of the Orange County Business College is now the wife of Lem Conkle, who resides with Mr. Erreca and she presides gracefully over her father's home and ministers devotedly to his comfort; Marcelina is the wife of Chas. Eckles of Santa Ana; Lem Conkle was in the U. S. Navy during the World War, serving overseas for eighteen months. Mr. Erreca is one of the oldest settlers of this section of California, is a highly respected man whose veracity and integrity have never been questioned. As a young man he was noted for his great strength, activity and endurance. In 1887 he made a trip back to his old home in France and had an enjoyable time but was glad to get back to the land of gold and sunshine. He is a member of the Catholic Church in Santa Ana and politically is a Republican.

HOMER L. COLE.—The eldest child of M. C. and Ella (Delavan) Cole, pioneers of Orange County, Homer L. was born at Deansboro, N. Y., on December 22, 1878. He attended the public and high schools at Oneida, N. Y., coming to California with his parents in 1898. On June 15, 1905, he was married to Miss Jessie M. Hoffman, who was born at Mendota, La Salle County, Ill., one of seven children born to John B. and Mary J. (Thomas) Hoffman, the latter of whom is still living at 521 East Pine Street, Santa Ana. Grandfather Hoffman was one of the pioneer settlers of LaSalle County, Ill., and a large landowner there.

Homer L. Cole is well known as a successful contractor and builder, having been engaged in this line of work since 1910. In 1913 the firm of Bishop and Cole was formed, continuing until 1918, and they specialized in the erection of walnut warehouses and in the invention of machinery for use in these warehouses. Among the buildings for which they were contractors are the following: Fullerton-Placentia warehouse at Fullerton; Irvine Association's building at Tustin; the Capistrano Association building at San Juan Capistrano; and the Saticoy Association's house at Ventura. Messrs. Bishop and Cole also perfected the walnut vacuum machine which sorts out the worthless or "blank" walnuts and is in use in many of the large walnut warehouses. They also invented a machine for cleaning the mold from walnut meats which has been found a most useful adjunct to the industry. Mr. Cole is also an experienced walnut grower and, previous to taking up the work of contracting and building, he operated the forty-acre ranch of his uncle, Directus Cole at Anaheim. He now manages the sixty-acre walnut ranch of his mother in Wintersburg precinct, and under his expert attention it is showing handsome returns. Mr. and Mrs. Homer Cole are the parents of one son, Clifford Delavan Cole.

BENNIE W. OSTERMAN.—Preeminent among the most perfectly arranged and scientifically managed ranches in all Orange County, if not in the entire state, must be mentioned the two important holdings of Messrs. Osterman and Osterman, the bonanza farmers near El Toro, whose junior member is the subject of our sketch. A native son with plenty of pride in the Golden State, Mr. Osterman was born at Newport Beach on November 4, 1896, where his mother was then visiting, for his parents lived on their noted ranch in the Trabuco Canyon. His father is John Osterman, who first came to California in 1890, and five years later took the decisive step of acquiring by purchase the fine property referred to. He was born in Price County, northern Wisconsin, on October 18, 1872, the son of Peter and Hannah (Andrews) Osterman. His father was a pioneer woodsman, and at the early age of twelve, John began to swing an axe in the lumber camps on the Wisconsin River, abandoning the Wisconsin lumber field only in 1890, when he determined to come to California.

He found work on a ranch near Redondo, and soon secured a better engagement on the San Joaquin ranch, where he remained for about a year. In the autumn of 1893 he came to Orange County, and in Trabuco Canyon hired himself out for wages to do farm work. At the end of two years, he had saved enough, and had also become sufficiently posted on ranch property values, to be able to buy his first eighty acres, to which he soon added another one hundred sixty. The land was in poor shape when he took hold of it; but he set out fruit and other trees, made various improvements, and transformed it, by his own exhausting efforts, into the showplace it became. He set out in particular olive trees, peaches and apricots, and reserved the remainder of the land for pasture. His public-spiritedness was soon evident to his fellow-citizens, who elected him road superintendent, and for years he was entitled to much of the credit for the excellent roads, both built and repaired during his administration.

Besides managing his own homestead ranch, Mr. Osterman in partnership with William J. Waller, leased 2,000 acres of the Whiting ranch near El Toro, and before long had 1,600 acres under cultivation, all in barley, of which in 1909 they gathered some 14,000 sacks. Naturally a mechanic, Mr. Osterman invested heavily in farm machinery, and, besides harvesting for himself, he contracted to gather in the crops of other ranchers.

John Osterman was twice married. His first marriage, in 1895, united him with Miss Sadie Havens of Trabuco who died in 1901 and left him two sons—Bennie W. and George D., a cement contractor of Santa Ana. Through his second marriage, in 1903, a sister of his deceased wife, Miss Lillie Havens, became his life companion, and two children, Ethel and Elmer, blessed that union. A third Miss Havens, Rose E., became the wife of William E. Adkinson, the rancher and game warden of the Trabuco district. These ladies were the daughters of George F. Havens, now well known as a resident of Santa Ana, aged eighty-three, and a native of Pennsylvania. He served four years in the Union Army, and married Miss Millie Copeland, who died in 1894. The Havens came from Texas to California in 1883, and had eight children.

Bennie W. Osterman was sent to the El Toro grammar school and then was graduated from the high school at Santa Ana, a member of the class of '14, and five years later, on April 2, he was married to Miss Cynthia Munger of El Toro. In time, he became the junior member of Messrs. Osterman and Osterman, the partner being his father. They have two large ranches near El Toro, and our subject resides on the Whiting ranch of 1,200 acres on the Trabuco Road, where 900 acres are under the plow, and 300 are in rough pasture range. The other farm they operate consists of 840 acres, and is a part of the L. F. Moulton and Company's ranch. In addition, John Osterman owns an orange orchard in Tustin where he resides.

Messrs. Osterman and Osterman have $50,000 worth of equipment, consisting of buildings on rented ranch land, two threshing machines, one a grain separator of the Case make, and the other a bean thresher. They also own a Holt 75 tractor, and two headers, which they use in harvesting. They usually have about 1,700 acres in crop each year. Mr. Osterman is a Republican in national politics, although too broad minded to allow partisanship to affect his attitude toward local issues and movements properly endorsed, and fraternally he is an Elk—of the type all lodges are anxious to have among their number.

NEWTON BARRIS PIERCE.—It is not given to many men to leave behind them such an enviable record for specific accomplishment in a new field as that of the late Newton Barris Pierce, the widely-known vegetable pathologist, who conceived the magnificent idea of collecting and developing the wild flowers of the earth, and who identified modest little Santa Ana with his pretentious undertaking and almost unhopd for attainment. He was born at Brockport, N. Y., on September 26, 1856, the son of Franklin B. and Melissa (Hinman) Pierce, his forebears on the father's side having been Bostonians of an old-established line, and doubtless related to the family of President Franklin Pierce, and on the mother's side coming from New York State, and probably related to the Hinmans of Connecticut, recalling Americans distinguished as soldiers, scholars and educators. He attended the common and high schools of New York, Wisconsin and Michigan, and later, in 1882-83, entered Harvard College at Cambridge, Mass., where he studied in the Museum of Entomology. Then he went to Ann Arbor, Mich., and finished the course of vegetable pathology, giving the two years in that well equipped institution between 1887 and 1889.

At Ludington, Mason County, Mich., Mr. Pierce had a private laboratory from 1876 to 1889, and there he applied himself to collecting and studying insects. In 1890 he was commissioned to come to Southern California and study the grapevine disease; locating at Santa Ana. After a few months here, he concluded to go to Southern Europe and Northern Africa, where the trouble was said to have originated. The next year, he returned to California and Santa Ana, rich in added experience.

On March 11, 1897, Mr. Pierce married Miss Maude B. Lacy, the daughter of Dr. John McClelland and Eliza (Bean) Lacy, pioneers of Santa Ana, where Dr. Lacy was a prominent and well-known physician and surgeon. One child, Newton Lacy Pierce, now a sophomore in the Santa Ana high school, blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce.

As far back as 1874 in Michigan, Mr. Pierce was a lumber inspector, a partner in the firm of Pierce Bros., who established an office in Ludington in 1876, which they kept open until 1895. In time, he became connected with the sinking of early salt wells in Western Michigan. When the California grapevine disease threatened the industry on the Pacific Coast, David Hewes sent to Washington for aid, and the authorities at the Federal capital sent to Michigan for a competent man; and as the result of special recommendation, Mr. Pierce was appointed by the U. S. Agricultural Department to find a way to fight the disease.

In 1889, he was placed in charge of vegetable pathology for the United States Department of Agriculture, and three years later established the wild plant improvement gardens. He became a life member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a member of the International Association of Botanists, the American Association of Bacteriologists, and a life member of the Michigan and Illinois Horticultural societies. He was also a member of the California Entomological Club and of the California Viticultural Club. In religion he was a consistent member of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana.

Mr. Pierce, who was a true and reverent scientist, established an exchange bureau with various missionaries throughout the world, thereby obtaining wild plants from all over the globe, and this important work is now being carried on by a special branch of the United States Agricultural Department. When he passed away, on October 13, 1916, to the sorrow of many besides his personal friends, he had given his name as author to several interesting books and numerous papers on plant disease, including: "California Vine Disease," edited in 1892, and "Peach Leaf Curl," a work produced eight years afterward.

FREDERICK E. BANGS.—A successful California rancher who may look back with satisfaction to a long and enviable record as a distinguished educator in the East, is Frederick E. Bangs, of 701 Orange Avenue, Santa Ana. He was born in the town of Groton, Tompkins County, N. Y., on July 27, 1848, the son of Samuel and Eliza (Berry) Bangs, farmer folk in a dairy country. They moved to Cayuga County when Frederick E. was a year and a half old, and purchased a farm there of 160 acres. The lad was therefore brought up on a farm, and until he was fourteen, sent to the district school. Then he continued his studies at Cortland Academy, Homer, N. Y., and later attended Lawrence University at Appleton, Wis., from which he was duly graduated with honors.

He taught school for three winters and a summer near Oshkosh, at the same time keeping up his college work, and afterward attended Yale University, from which he was graduated with the Class of '76, in the Centennial year of the Republic. He had received his degree of B.S. at Lawrence, and when he obtained his B.D. degree from Yale, he was given, automatically, the M.A. degree of Lawrence University. After that, he went into the mission field at Farmington, Iowa, for a year.

Then he was appointed principal of the five grammar schools in Wooster district, at New Haven, Conn., and there he remained from 1877 until 1894. Prior to beginning his teaching—that is, at New Haven on May 18, 1876—Mr. Bangs was married to Miss Edith Seaver Day, the daughter of Horace and Sarah (Seaver) Day, her father, a scholarly man, being secretary of the Board of Education of New Haven, serving forty years. She proved an invaluable helpmate, but passed away on February 28, 1884. A second time, four years later, on May 3, Mr. Bangs married, this time choosing Miss Augusta Crane, a native of East Orange, N. J. The ceremony took place at Little Falls in that state. She was the daughter of Charles and Louisa (Munn) Crane, and her father was a dealer in general merchandise at Orange. Both the Munn and Crane families trace their ancestry back to colonial times. She was first sent to the Orange grammar schools, and later to the New Jersey State Normal at Trenton, where she was graduated in the advanced courses. She taught one year at Vineland, then she was an instructor in the schools at East Orange from 1876 to 1879 under C. F. Carroll. Then she was called to New Haven by S. T. Dutton and taught for two years in the Eaton school under him, and in 1880 she served as first assistant teacher to Mr. Bangs at New Haven, and continued to teach there until she was married.

After having had charge of the Wooster schools for seventeen years, Mr. Bangs retired from teaching in 1894, and returned to the old homestead at Groton, where he engaged in general farming. In 1901 he disposed of his holding and came west to California and Santa Ana. Here he purchased a ranch of eleven and a quarter acres on Orange Avenue, which was at one time the southwest part of the old Stafford estate, and later he sold four and a half acres lying east of the Pacific Electric Railway. Now he has about six acres, interset with oranges and walnuts, and thriving well under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

E. G. Bangs.

In national politics a Republican, Mr. Bangs endeavors to perform his civic duties in local affairs without restricting partisanship and in the broad spirit most likely to make for the best standards in citizenship. Naturally, he is an advocate of popular education, and leaves no stone unturned to advance and strengthen one of the most aggressive and most beneficent of American institutions.

Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bangs: Marguerite Louise is now Mrs. Charles H. Stearns of Santa Ana and the mother of two sons—Oliver Charles, born January 22, 1916, and Frederick Edward, born May 5, 1918. She graduated from Pomona College with the Bachelor of Arts degree, and also received the degree of Master of Arts from the University of Southern California. She was a high school teacher at Bishop, Cal., for a year, and for another year at Visalia. Edward Crane Bangs is also a graduate of Pomona College with the degree of B.A., and is an alumnus of the University of California, having majored at Berkeley in chemistry. He was teaching in the high school at Arcata, when he enlisted in the United States Army in February, 1918, as a member of the Three Hundred Nineteenth Engineers Corps, and was sent to Camp Fremont. In April, he was sent to the officers' training school at Camp Lee, Va., and in the following month of May was commissioned a second lieutenant. He proved one of the ablest of the class, and was needed in the chemical department of the army. He was then sent to the gas defense school, from which he was graduated in July, 1918. After that, he was despatched to Camp Grant, to become instructor in gas to the entire camp; and when it transpired that this camp was not ready for his work, he was sent on to Sparta, Wis., as the instructor to the artillery stationed there. He later returned to Camp Grant and took charge of the instruction in defense work, and rose to the rank of chief gas officer. On February 17, 1919, he was honorably discharged at Camp Grant, and returned to his home state, where he is now engaged as a high school teacher.

JO LOWELL.—An industrious, successful man of comfortable affluence is Jo Lowell, the rancher of 1108 West Fifth Street, Santa Ana, whose modest disposition, despite his useful, influential life, draws to him a circle of devoted friends. He was born at Sacramento on May 10, 1872, the son of William Henry and Mary Lowell. The father was an employe of the Wells Fargo Express Company, before the advent here of the railroad, and had charge of one of the wagon routes. The mother died when Jo was ten years old, and at that tender age he set out to seek his own fortune.

He went into Kern County, on the south fork of the Kern River, and worked on T. S. Smith's stock ranch of one thousand acres; and for twenty years he was in the employ of the same man. In the fall of 1903 he came to Santa Ana; and on November 18 he was married to Miss Mabel T. Townsend, a native daughter born in San Bernardino, whose parents were B. F. and Anna Townsend. They came to Garden Grove when she was two years old, and became pioneers of Orange County, so that Mabel was sent to the Garden Grove district school. Later, she continued her studies at a preparatory school at Orange and in time was graduated from Stanford University. Their wedding took place at Santa Ana, and was one of the quiet, pleasant events of the year. For a while thereafter, while they made Santa Ana their home, Mr. Lowell worked on ranches in the vicinity.

In 1906 he went to San Diego, Texas, and ranched sixteen miles to the southwest of that town until 1909 on 2,300 acres. On his return to California, he farmed 260 acres near Stockton, raising barley and potatoes. In 1912, he came back to Santa Ana, to take care of his fourteen and a half-acre ranch, ten acres of which were devoted to Valencia oranges, and four and a half acres to walnuts. This neat little ranch was purchased by B. F. Townsend, Mrs. Lowell's father, in 1886, and as he died in May, 1917, Mr. and Mrs. Lowell inherited it. They have also inherited 2,300 acres in Texas, once owned by Mr. Townsend, as well as the latter's home, at 1108 West Fifth Street, Santa Ana.

Three children have come to make still happier the delightful home life of these thoroughly American folks. Kenneth Townsend Lowell is a high school student at Santa Ana; Virginia May is in the intermediate school; and so is Charline Elizabeth. Fraternally, Mr. Lowell is a Mason; in national politics he is a Republican.

RODGER BROS.—Conspicuous among the most properous and interesting industrial establishments of Balboa is that of the auto and shipbuilding firm of Rodger Bros., composed of C. G. and E. D. Rodger, who own a first-class garage, machine shop and ship ways, are always active in promoting the best interests of the tourist, and who have added to the attractiveness of Balboa as a harbor resort by keeping well-equipped boats for charter.

C. C. Rodger, popularly known as Cordie Rodger, was born in Iowa, in April, 1876, while E. D. Rodger was also born in Iowa, in August, 1878. They were both the sons of Glauud H. and Nancy M. Rodger, who came from Iowa to California, although the father had been here before, and was in many ways a thorough, typical Californian. Grandfather Glauf Rodger was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, who had married Miss Matilda Clark, a native of Liverpool, England. They crossed the great American plains in 1852, and stayed at Salt Lake over winter, and there their child, Glauf H., was born. The following season they came on to California and settled at San Bernardino. The grandfather was a farmer, and Glauf H. grew up to follow agriculture. He went back to Iowa, and when twenty-two years old married Miss Nancy M. Sutherland, the ceremony taking place in Decatur County, Iowa.

Mr. and Mrs. Rodger lived in Iowa for thirteen years, and then they came to California in the spring of 1887, and settled at what is now Laguna Beach. Later they went to El Toro and farmed on the Moulton Ranch—in fact Mr. Rodger did the first grain farming on the great Moulton acreage, and he bought and operated the first header ever brought on to that place. Now he and his devoted wife are both living in their comfortable residence at Balboa. They belong to the reorganized L. D. S. Church.

Of their nine children, six grew to maturity, three having died in fancy. Jessie married William Woodhouse, a rancher at El Toro; but she died four years ago, mourned by many. C. G. and E. D. Rodger, the subjects of this instructive review, have materially advanced the importance of Balboa in its relation to the outside world and as an attractive place for outsiders to come to and settle in. Fred is a rancher at El Toro. Dolly is the wife of William Cubben, the machinist; and Ethel is at home.

Twelve years ago, E. D. Rodger came to Balboa and went to work as a machinist for W. S. Collins at the Collins shipyard in Balboa, and later he founded the firm of Rodger Bros., which got along at first with a building 35x126 feet in size, now adjoining on the east their newer structure of 1920, 35x136 feet in size. They have built and equipped many boats, among them the Limit, constructed in 1916, and the Harriet N., 1918—both fine specimens of naval architecture; and they repair much of the craft used on the bay and the ocean. Even as boys, both of the Rodgers were apt machinists, and it is not surprising that their patrons come from miles around. They make a specialty of motion picture water work—now one of the departments of a most important modern undertaking, with its effect on the civilization of the four quarters of the globe. In 1900, E. D. Rodger was married at El Toro to Miss Viola Zimmerman, a lady of talents and the capacity of cooperation, who also has her circle of friends.

EARL L. MATTHEWS.—An admirable example of the man who can accomplish much entirely through his own initiative and determination to succeed is found in Earl L. Matthews, the president of the Orange County Ignition Works, Inc., the largest business of its kind in the county, and his reputation for thorough workmanship and absolutely reliable service has brought him a lucrative patronage that is in every way well deserved. His career, in its practical results, is an encouragement to every struggling young man who has ambition and genius and is willing to make sacrifices and endure long hours of hard work.

Earl L. Matthews is a native of Ohio, being born at Toledo on April 23, 1888. His parents are William H. and Frances (West) Matthews and they left their Ohio home in 1906 and came to California to reside. They located first at Porterville in Tulare County, remaining there for two years, then removing to Long Beach, where they resided for another period of two years, coming to Santa Ana in 1910, and they still make their home there. The only child of his parents, Earl L. Matthews was educated in the public and high schools of Toledo, Ohio, and later took a commercial course in the Toledo Business College. Always of a mechanical turn of mind, after coming to California in 1906 Mr. Matthews became interested in auto electrical work and very wisely decided that the surest way to success was to begin at the bottom and master every angle of the business. Accordingly he spent considerable time in some of the largest shops in Los Angeles, learning all the details of the work and gaining a most valuable practical experience.

On coming to Santa Ana in 1910, Mr. Matthews started the nucleus of his present large business, beginning in a small store building at 414 West Fourth Street, and by well-directed effort the business increased so rapidly that he saw the need of expansion, and so occupied three other locations before coming to his present place at the corner of Fifth and Spurgeon streets. In 1916 he incorporated his business as the Orange County Ignition Works and since that time he has built up a wonderfully successful business, employing over thirty people, and having branch houses at Fullerton and Orange. At both of these places he occupies fireproof buildings, which have been erected according to his own designs and needs. He handles the Willard storage battery and specializes in electrical apparatus pertaining to automobiles, confining his business to this line of work. He maintains a thoroughly equipped electrical repair department which is fully prepared to handle ignition and electrical trouble on every make of automobile and particular attention is paid to electrical trouble on trucks and farm tractors, thus giving assistance and immediate aid to ranchers and transportation men in the fields and remote highways.

Mr. Matthews' marriage at Los Angeles on April 28, 1909, united him with Miss Letitia Hennessey of Santa Ana and they are the parents of two children, Russell P. and Marjory F. The family attend the Methodist Episcopal Church. In politics Mr. Matthews gives his allegiance to the Republican party and in fraternal circles he is prominent in the ranks of the Elks and is a Knights Templar Mason. To further the interests of his own line of work he is a member and vice-president of the Orange County Auto Trades Association, and he is no less zealous in aiding in the work of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, holding membership in both of these organizations. He finds much enjoyment in outdoor life and is particularly fond of fishing. Generous and liberal, he is one of Orange County's loyal boosters and can always be counted upon to support all movements for the public good.

JAMES ARTHUR ROSS.—A most interesting representative of a long-honored pioneer Santa Ana family is J. Arthur Ross, familiarly known by his friends as Ott Ross, a son of Samuel Ross, who crossed the great plains in the middle sixties, accompanied by his bride of a few weeks, to whom he had been married in Ross Township, Ill. This Samuel Ross became one of the earliest settlers at Santa Ana, and Ross Street was named after a brother, Jacob Ross, who was county tax collector and assessor in early days. Mrs. Ross was Catherine Leonard before her marriage, and she died when J. Arthur was nine years old. Ott Ross was born at Santa Ana on January 15, 1881, and grew up in that town, one of eleven children, six of whom are still living. He attended the public grammar schools and learned to be a farmer.

When he was married, he chose for his wife Mrs. Jennie (Smith) Knight of Santa Ana, a native of Madison, Ga., a daughter of William and Carrie (Reid) Smith, also of that state. The father served in the Confederate Army in the Civil War and died when Mrs. Ross was a child; she was reared and educated in Georgia. Her uncle, Capt. John G. Smith, was one of the early settlers of Birmingham, Ala., and was a prominent veteran of the Confederacy and a Mason and laid the cornerstone for the Masonic temple at Birmingham. She is the youngest of three children: the eldest was Henry who died in Box Springs, Ga., and Wm. Eugene is an extensive cotton buyer at Madison, Ga. In 1899 Mrs. Ross came to Santa Ana with her mother where she met Ott Ross, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage and she has proven the most helpful of helpmates. Her mother died here in 1915. They have four children—Catherine, Lula, Christy and Leonard. Mr. Ross has engaged in farming in the district south of Santa Ana for twenty years and since 1918, farming on the Irvine ranch.

Notwithstanding a serious set-back in 1919, such as might well discourage many, Mr. and Mrs. Ross are succeeding and, little by little, attaining their goal. In that year, a mysterious fire burned down their barn, shed and other outbuildings, and destroyed, among other things, a great quantity of hay. It was a severe blow, for Mr. Ross had little or no insurance. He bravely rebuilt, however, for like the other tenants on the San Joaquin ranch, he owns his own buildings and equipment. He is energetic and persistent; Mrs. Ross is cheerful and optimistic; and it is not surprising that he and his family live happily, and that those who know them, expect great things from them in the years to come. He leases 270 acres, where he devotes about 200 acres to lima beans; the balance to hay and blackeye beans. Mr. and Mrs. Ross are believers in protection for Americans and are naturally strong Republicans.

ASBURY J. SHAW.—Numbered among the successful ranchers of the El Toro district is Asbury J. Shaw, who is equally proficient as a machinist, as he does a great deal of work on automobiles, gasoline engines, threshers and all kinds of farm machinery, maintaining a well-equipped blacksmith shop on his place. A native son of California, Mr. Shaw was born on the original El Toro ranch in Aliso Canyon on October 2, 1891. His parents were R. L. and Catherine Ellen (Little) Shaw, natives, respectively, of Texas and Georgia. Besides the subject of this review, a daughter, Fannie Pearl, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Shaw and she is now the wife of Albert Gibson, a rancher on the Irvine ranch. R. L. Shaw was twice married; by his first marriage he had two children, one of whom is living, Frank Shaw of Laguna Beach. Catherine Ellen Little was also married twice, her first husband being Peter Fraser Groover, who was born in Georgia. They came to California about 1872, and located in Fresno County, where they were engaged in sheep raising; afterwards they came to Gospel Swamp, now Talbert, and later to Aliso Canyon, where they homesteaded and farmed. Mr. Groover died at Downey in 1881. Of this marriage there were five children: Frank, who is a mechanic, resides in Arizona; H. L., also a mechanic, makes his home in Santa Ana; F. E. farms on the Irvine ranch; Hattie Gertrude is Mrs. Boxley of Los Angeles; V. D.

also farms on the Irvine ranch. About three years after her husband's death Mrs. Groover married Robert L. Shaw, who came with his parents across the plains in an ox-team train, in the early fifties. He followed ranching in Los Angeles and Orange counties and he and Mrs. Shaw still make their home in Orange County.

Asbury J. Shaw spent his boyhood days on the Aliso Canyon ranch, and early in life started to earn his own way, working out as a farm hand on the neighboring ranches, earning at first only ten dollars a month. He became expert at handling mules when he was only a boy and this helped him to get employment in hauling cement and other heavy freight at the time of the building of the great Los Angeles Aqueduct. He was considered one of the best drivers on the entire job and handled a team of twelve mules perfectly.

In 1913 Mr. Shaw began ranching operations for himself by leasing 150 acres of the Santa Margarita ranch, the property of James O'Neill. Since then he has added to his acreage and now has 275 acres, all plow land, which he devotes to grain, barley and hay being his principal crop. He has a $5,000 equipment on his place, owning ten head of horses, six mules, a twelve-foot Deering header, a fifteen horsepower Fairbanks-Morse portable engine and a separator for threshing either grain or beans. Recently he has been engaged in rebuilding a Ventura threshing machine and putting a gasoline engine in shape, and with this combination he will thresh his own crop of barley and beans, as well as threshing for others in the neighborhood. Mr. Shaw's blacksmith shop is also equipped with wood-working machinery and with his natural aptitude toward everything mechanical he does considerable work in this line. For several months he was at Yuma, Ariz., where he was engaged in running a gasoline hoist at the old Pecachio gold and silver mines.

Mr. Shaw's marriage, which occurred in October, 1916, united him with Miss Ruby Leona Alsbach and one child, Marion Lucine, has added to their happy home life. Of a genial disposition, Mr. Shaw has many friends who admire him for his integrity and his sterling, industrious character. While generally voting the Democratic ticket in national elections, Mr. Shaw is broad-minded and nonpartisan in local affairs, aiming to vote for the best men and measures.

THEODORE ROBERTS.—Orange County has drawn its leading citizens from many countries, and the opportunities to be found here have attracted men of character and with the progressive ideas which make for success in any country. Among these may be mentioned Theodore Roberts, prominent in business circles in Anaheim, where he is the leading jeweler and optometrist. A native of Germany, Mr. Roberts was born in Danzig, West Prussia, February 12, 1882. There he learned the trade of watch-maker and jeweler and worked at his profession in the large cities of Germany, Switzerland, France and Belgium. When he landed at Boston, in 1905, he could not speak a word of English, but gradually acquired the language and after visiting New York he went to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he secured work on a farm at a wage of one dollar per day.

Although intending to make farming his occupation in the new country, the young traveler soon gave up that intention, and in 1907 he came to California, settling in Los Angeles, where he took up his trade, and also studied optometry. After working in leading jewelry stores in that city, he sought new fields, and in 1911 he came to Anaheim and opened a small jewelry store at 113 East Center Street. As his business grew he enlarged his quarters, and in 1915 he moved into larger quarters at 105 East Center Street. In 1918 he purchased a large piece of property, including the block between Lemon and Clementine and Helena and Palm on West Center Street, a part of the old Deutch property. He has erected a building on the whole of the block from Lemon to Clementine on Center, making twelve stores and a large garage, and he also erected a building on West Center between Helena and Palm, and is now starting work on the erection of the Roberts Theater on West Center and Clementine streets, which, when completed, will be the largest theater building in Orange County. So it is readily seen that in a few years he has accomplished much and thus has done more than his share in the building up of Anaheim. In 1920 he moved his store to 223 West Center Street, where he has a thoroughly up-to-date establishment with a large and carefully selected stock.

From the beginning of his residence here Mr. Roberts has taken a keen interest in the upbuilding of the city, and he was one of the first merchants to advocate the widening and improving of Center Street, and in fact started the movement.

A self-made man in every respect, for he came to a new land, not knowing a word of its language nor with anything but his own brain and muscle to help carve a future, Mr. Roberts can rightfully be called a representative citizen of his adopted country, and serving its best interests as he serves his own.

Theo. Roberts.

The marriage of Mr. Roberts united him with Ella B. Stroka, a native of Austria, and two sons have blessed their union: Theodore, Jr., and Joseph, both natives of Anaheim. Fraternally, Mr. Roberts is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and in business circles he is a member of the Anaheim Chamber of Commerce. He is also interested in horticulture, owning an orange grove in the Placentia district, while professionally he is a member of the Retail Jewelers Association of California and the State Association of Optometrists.

C. E. UTT.—A man of much enterprise and force of character, a native son and the son of a '49er, is C. E. Utt, the president of the First National Bank of Tustin, who for the long period of forty-six years has been identified with this place. His father, Lysander Utt, was a native of Virginia, of Dutch ancestry, and he came here with the early gold seekers of the Argonaut days. While in the gold-mining country he met and married Miss Arvilla Platt, a native of New York who had come to California with her parents when a girl. Lysander Utt crossed the Santa Fe trail a number of times before the Mexican War and made and lost several fortunes. In 1874 he brought his family to Tustin, driving overland all the way from Placer County. The Southern Pacific Railroad was then just being constructed to Los Angeles, which was a town of about 8,000 people. Santa Ana was a hamlet of perhaps a dozen houses, while a little cluster of half a dozen cottages constituted the present town of Tustin. It was at that time still a cattle and sheep country, agriculture being yet in its infancy, as not more than two per cent of the county had even been plowed. Here Lysander Utt engaged in the merchandise business, buying the stock of H. H. Dickerman, who had started the first store in Tustin two years before, and died.

C. E. Utt was the only child of his parents and was but eight years old when the family came to Tustin. They made their home in the store building and he naturally grew up with the business from his childhood, and when he was twenty-one years of age he took charge of the store. From that time until 1893, he continued in the general merchandise business, giving it up at that time to engage in ranching, and this he has pursued ever since with great success. With the exception of sugar beets, he has grown practically every crop known to Orange County.

Mr. Utt was one of the organizers of the San Joaquin Fruit Company, and has been its president since its inception. This company owns 1,000 acres of land adjacent to Tustin, set out to Valencia oranges, lemons and walnuts, and now produces several hundred carloads of fruit and nuts every year. There are three packing houses on the ranch and a spur from the Santa Fe tracks runs up to their packing houses in the middle of the ranch.

In 1894 Mr. Utt was united in marriage with Miss Mary M. Sheldon of Tustin, the daughter of an old pioneer family. Mrs. Utt passed away in 1918, leaving five children: Mrs. Gertrude Hess of Victorville; Mrs. Dorothy Robertson of Los Mochis, Mexico; James B. of Tustin; Louise and Elizabeth. The family attend the Presbyterian Church and politically Mr. Utt was a strong Prohibitionist; since the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment he affiliates with the Republican party. In addition to his duties as president of the First National Bank of Tustin he is also treasurer of the Haven Seed Company. A self-made man, he has won his success by hard work and good management and he enjoys the confidence and good will of the whole community.

WILLIAM G. KOTHE.—One of the most enterprising horticulturists of the district in which his orchard is situated is William G. Kothe, whose well-cultivated orange grove of eight acres is devoted exclusively to Valencias. He has been a resident of Orange County for over twenty years, and to him there is no other section of the Golden State he finds so well adapted for citrus culture. Like many another, he began at the bottom of the ladder; but by hard work of untiring brain and muscle, he has won his way to a favorable place in the horticultural world.

Mr. Kothe is a native of Hanover, Germany, where he was born on August 2, 1877, and his parents were William and Sophie Kothe, also natives of Hanover. There were three children in the family, and they all came to reside in the West. Mary, Mrs. Riggers, is in Idaho; Annie, Mrs. Hiestermann, in Kansas, and William G., our subject, is the eldest of the family. The father died in Germany in 1883, and in time Mrs. Kothe remarried to Henry Ohlde, and three children were born of her second marriage.

In 1885 the entire family migrated to the United States, and settled in Washington County, Kans. William was then seven years of age, and he was reared and educated in, as the Kansans say, the "Garden of the West." Then, until 1900, he followed farming.

At the beginning of the century, he migrated to Orange County, Cal., and began his experience in orchard work. In 1904 he made a trip back to his old Kansas home and while there wed Miss Minnie Heitman who had come to Kansas to visit her brother, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage at Washington, Kans., May 25, 1904. She was the accomplished daughter of William and Dorathea Heitman, and was also born in Hanover, Germany, coming in 1893 to the United States. She was one of twelve children, the others still living being William, Mary, Freda, Ernest, Henry, Emma, George, Olga and Louis.

After his marriage Mr. Kothe returned with his bride to Orange County and engaged in horticulture. In 1909 he purchased their present place of eight acres on Tustin Avenue near Fairhaven, which he has improved to a splendid Valencia orange orchard. Aside from his own place he also cares for twenty acres of orange groves for others. He is a stockholder in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and the Santiago Orange Growers Association. He has lately completed a seven-room bungalow, which is much enjoyed by his family. Their four children are Elsie, who attends Orange Union high school; Arnold, Dorathea and Martin. With his family, Mr. Kothe is a member of St. John's Lutheran church at Orange. Mrs. Kothe has been of great aid to her husband by encouraging him in his ambitions, and he in turn appreciates and acknowledges her assistance.

HAROLD EDWARD WAHLBERG.—A scientifically trained agriculturist whose advice has come to be recognized as of such value that he devotes his time professionally to studying other agriculturists's problems and to counseling the less experienced in the way they would better go, is Harold Edward Wahlberg, a native of the state of Washington. He was born at Seattle, on July 18, 1890, and his father was Hans Christian Wahlberg. He had married Miss Elizabeth Swedberg, by whom he had four children—one girl and three boys. The parents are now living retired at San Francisco, honored by all who have the pleasure of knowing them.

The eldest in the family, Harold attended both the grammar and high schools of the vicinity in which he grew up, and later pursued courses of study at the Oregon Agricultural College. In 1910 he was graduated from that institution with the degree of Bachelor of Science.

For a year he served as the first superintendent of the Eden Valley Orchards of Medford, and then he removed to Woodland, Cal., where he was superintendent of the Yolo Orchard Company for two and a half years. After that he put in about three years with the Sycamore Ranch Company at Los Molinos, Cal., where he was general manager, and then for a year and a half he was on the horticultural commission for Glenn County. Since August, 1918, he has been farm adviser for Orange County.

Mr. Wahlberg is a Democrat, and under Democratic banners he has been a live wire, when needed, in national political affairs; but he believes in nonpartisanship in local civic movements, and has ever been ready to help along the community in which he has cast his lot. Very naturally, he is deeply interested in the problems of development in Orange County, nor could he have a more fruitful soil upon which, actually and figuratively speaking, to spend his energies. On March 17, 1920, Mr. Wahlberg was united in marriage with Miss Bertha Wing, born in New England, but a resident of California for several years, and they make their home in Santa Ana.

The Masons and Elks claim Mr. Wahlberg as a member, and as a devotee of both boating and chess, he seeks the invigorating pleasure of outdoor life, and the stimulating pastimes of the quiet corner.

H. E. DUNGAN.—The proprietor of the oil station at the corner of Euclid and Stanford avenues, at Garden Grove, H. E. Dungan, is a man who has seen much of life in the various countries of the New and Old World that he has visited. An ex-soldier on the retired list, he was born near Muscatine, Iowa, May 2, 1869. His parents, John B., and Anna (Pratt) Dungan, were farmers, and after his birth removed to Illinois, going thence to Clay Center, Clay County, Kans., where they settled on a farm. Mr. Dungan's earliest recollections are associated with the Kansas farm where he lived until he was fourteen years old. He then returned to Illinois, and from there went to Texas and thence to the territory of Washington. Returning to Texas he gave up ranching in 1891, went to Dallas, Texas, and enlisted in the Twenty-third Infantry of the U. S. Army for a term of three years. After his term of service expired he entered the Quartermaster's department at Laredo, Texas, and served in that department eighteen months. He then drifted to old Mexico and Central America, working at mining and railroading, and when the Spanish war broke out in 1898 was near Gorgetown, Central America. Losing no time he took the first boat out, went to Cuba and enlisted with the Fifteen U. S. Regulars for a term of three years. He was in Cuba fourteen months, and during this time was in numerous skirmishes. Returning to the United States, he was stationed in Vermont six months, and was then ordered to San Francisco. Leaving there under sealed orders, when they reached Nagasaki, Japan, they were ordered on to China. Transferred to another steamship they landed at Taku, China, and Mr. Dungan was all through the Boxer troubles. from Tientsin on to Pekin,

Amy W Meier

China. After this campaign was over he was transferred to the Philippines, and served at Tabaco, Pandan and Samar Island. His term of service expiring in the Philippines he went to the constabulary and severed nine years at different places and on different islands in the Philippines. In 1911 he resigned and came back to the army in order to be retired, and was first sergeant when he was placed on the retired list in 1912. He came to Garden Grove in that year and bought two and a half acres, which he afterward sold.

In 1914 he was married at Riverside to Miss Marie Rich, a native of France who came to California from her native country when a girl of fifteen. Two children have been born of their union, Frances and Donald by name. In 1917 Mr. Dungan was called back to active service and was engaged in the recruiting service at Los Angeles and in Arizona and Southern California, until the close of the war with Germany. He says: "The American soldier is the best soldier on earth." He has been around the world once and has made four trips to the Philippines. He owns the acre and a half at Garden Grove, on which his oil station and residence are located, and deals in the Standard Oil Company's products, handling gasoline and lubricating oils. In politics a Republican, he is a humanitarian in his view of life, and is a man of reliability and rectitude. He has lived a clean and consistent life, and is justly entitled to the competency he has earned, and to the respect accorded him by his intimate friends and acquaintances.

HENRY MEIER.—An industrious young man of exceptional ability who has naturally "made good" and is the admiration of many, is Henry Meier, who was born in Belvue, Pottawatomie County, Kans., in August, 1879. His father, George Meier, was a native of Germany and as a young man came out to the United States. He stopped in Illinois and for years worked at farming for a James Short. Then he moved to Kansas and became an early settler in Pottawatomie County. He bought railroad land, was the first to break up much of the soil, and he engaged in raising corn and stock. In 1895, however, he rented out his farm and, coming west to California, pitched his tent at Orange for a couple of years. Then he bought a ranch of thirty-nine acres on East Chapman Avenue and engaged in general farming and the raising of vegetables. He also set out walnuts. In 1904, full of years and blessed with many friends, Mr. Meier died, at the age of sixty-nine. His wife was Mary Grote before her marriage, the sister of Henry Grote, another well-known pioneer of Orange, and she is now in her seventieth year, the mother of four children: Amelia is Mrs. J. F. Stone of McPherson; Henry and Annie are twins, and the latter lives at Los Angeles; and Bertha is Mrs. Bogart of San Jacinto.

Brought up in Kansas, Henry attended the public schools and first came to California in his sixteenth year, when he completed his schooling. Then he helped his father on the home farm, and after a while he ran the place, and he has continued the management of the estate, at the same time conducting his own ranching enterprises. The home place consists of twenty-eight acres, and he himself owns eleven acres adjoining. The old place is used for the growing of oranges and lemons, on trees grown in his own nursery and set out and cared for by himself; for twelve years ago he began the nursery, making a specialty of Valencia orange trees, as well as lemons and walnuts, and he is still raising nursery stock, in what is widely and favorably known as the H. Meier Nursery. He also owns another six acres of citrus orchard, giving him sixteen acres of citrus fruit, and this acreage, under his experienced eye and hand, approaches very nearly to the ideal of a true "show place." As might be expected of one known to understand the problems of citrus growing and to favor every sensible measure likely to develop the industry in California, Mr. Meier is an active member of the Central Lemon Association and the McPherson Heights Orange Growers Association. In 1919 his nine-year-old trees had the record crop of this association for heaviest yield per acre. The Kansas farm, still owned by George Meier when he died, was sold by the family in January, 1919.

Mr. Meier was married at Los Angeles, May 16, 1912, to Miss Amy West, a native of California, born in Orange, and the daughter of Henry West, an esteemed pioneer of Orange; a clever young lady of present-day training and enterprise. After completing with credit a commercial course at the Orange County Business College in Santa Ana, she entered the employ of the National Bank of Orange, continuing there for eight years until her resignation, when she married. She is capable, therefore, of cooperating with Mr. Meier in a very helpful way.

Mr. Meier is very enthusiastic for the future of this region and is not averse to putting his shoulder to the wheel and "boosting" Orange and Orange County, for which he sees a bright future, and he is always ready to work for its upbuilding and enhancing the importance of the commonwealth.

OTTO R. HAAN.—A native of Michigan, who has been privileged to contribute much toward the development, along the most desirable and permanent of lines, of the youthful county of Orange, is Otto R. Haan, who was born at Grand Rapids on January 7, 1879, the eldest of two children born to Rudolph and Gertrude (Smith) Haan. Mr. Haan attended the common school and received the usual training for a tussle with the exacting world:

For seven years he was news agent on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, the Michigan Central Railroad, the Pere Marquette, as well as the Wabash system and step by step he advanced until he became superintendent of the news service for Fred Harvey on the Santa Fe system, a post he continued to fill for twenty years. This association with one of the best-known purveying concerns in the country caused him to travel widely and to reside from time to time in various places, and he lived in particular at Albuquerque and Los Angeles.

On coming to Santa Ana in 1917, Mr. Haan bought out H. H. Kelley's Cadillac agency, later incorporating the Cadillac Garage Company, of which he is president and manager. The business has grown very rapidly and it now requires the services of fifteen men. It is located at the corner of Second and Main Streets. Mr. Haan is active in automobile circles, is a member of the Orange County Auto Trade Association, of which he is president and is now vice-president of the California Auto Trade Association. Intensely interested in Orange County, he is an active member of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, and gives them, whenever possible, the best support.

On August 7, 1913, Mr. Haan was married at Chicago, Ill., to Miss Dora May Dazey, a native of Chicago and the daughter of Frank L. and Eva L. (Dove) Dazey, who shares his love of outdoor life. Fraternally he is a Knights Templar Mason and a Shriner, as well as an Elk, and is a member of the Orange County Country Club and counts his friends—one of the best of all business assets—among all social and commercial circles. Both Santa Ana and Orange County may be congratulated on the success attained here under their fostering, favorable conditions, of this aggressive and progressive leader in the business world.

CHARLES E. HOUSER.—With California as his birthplace, Charles E. Houser is a typical representative of the native sons of the Golden West, and is enjoying the prosperity that has come to him solely as the result of his own unaided efforts. Mr. Houser was born in Los Angeles, March 25, 1886, the son of Benjamin F. and Jennie (Lewis) Houser. The father is a native of Indiana, but went when a young man to Kansas, where he was married, residing there until 1884, when he and his wife came to Los Angeles. Mrs. Houser is deceased, but Benjamin F. Houser is still living and is engaged in ranching at Corcoran, Cal.

The eldest of a family of five children, Charles E. Houser grew up in the Fountain Valley district in Orange County, where his father had leased land and engaged in farming. Early in life he began to work on the home farm and later on the neighboring ranches, acquiring a valuable knowledge of agricultural methods, especially those applicable to the soil and climate of Southern California. In 1909 he entered the employ of the Golden West Celery and Produce Company working as a teamster for eighteen months, later becoming warehouseman, having in charge the extensive warehouse of the company in Westminster for four years; with one exception this is the largest warehouse in Orange County, having a capacity of 60,000 sacks. During the palmy days of the Golden West Celery and Produce Company, Mr. Houser contributed largely to its success and he remained its foreman until the company sold out, April 12, 1919. He at once entered the employ of R. L. Draper as head foreman, a position that his experience and ability eminently qualifies him to fill. The Draper ranch is one of the most extensive in this region, consisting, besides Mr. Draper's own farm of 160 acres, of 565 acres owned by the Aldrich Land Company, formerly the Golden West Company's ranch. The Draper place is largely devoted to growing sugar beets and lima beans, which have become a leading industry of Orange County, and Mr. Houser is thoroughly conversant with the latest and most successful methods in their successful production.

Mr. Houser was married in 1917 to Miss Annie Nankervis and one child, a daughter Geraldine, has been born to them. Mrs. Houser is likewise a native daughter, her parents being Richard and Caroline (Buzza) Nankervis, pioneer settlers of Westminster. The father was born in England, but came to America when a young man, settling in Philadelphia, where his marriage occurred. Mr. and Mrs. Nankervis came to California, settling first in Nevada County, and coming to what is now Orange County in 1885. They are the parents of nine children, all living: Thomas is a rancher at Westminster; Carrie is the wife of William Olson, an engineer on the Southern Pacific, they reside at El Paso, Texas; Agnes is the wife of James Rogers, manager of the packing house at Azusa; John is a rancher and owns the old Nankervis place west of Westminster; Vinnie is the wife of Harry Bray, the proprietor of a meat market at Oakland; Richard, Jr., is in the employ of the E. K. Wood Lumber Company of Los Angeles; Jennie makes her home with her brother, Thomas; Will is a rancher at Westminster; and Annie is the wife of Charles E. Houser, of this review. Both Mr. and Mrs. Richard Nankervis are living and reside with their oldest son, Thomas Nankervis.

In fraternal circles, Mr. Houser is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters at Westminster and of the B. P. O. Elks of Santa Ana. Well informed, kindly disposed and generous, he has host of friends throughout the county. Mrs. Houser shares with her husband a just popularity in the social circles of Smeltzer and Westminster.

JOHN UTZ.—An unusually interesting, fine old gentleman, whose mental and physical powers command admiration, and whose interesting personality has brought him, with the passing years, a host of steadfast friends, is John Utz, a native of Jefferson, Clinton County, Ind., where he was born on November 4, 1837. His father, Jacob Utz, was a native of Maryland, and in that state he was married to Miss Matilda Koontz, also a Marylander. They migrated to Clinton County, Ind., and as Mr. Utz was a carpenter by trade, he started a wagon shop in Jefferson, and continued to manage it until he was forced to retire on account of a stroke of paralysis. He died in 1863, and his good wife followed him to the grave ten years afterward. They had three children: John was the eldest; then came Joseph H., who resides at Newport Beach, Cal.; while the youngest was Lydia Ann, now Mrs. Timmons of Los Angeles.

Brought up at Jefferson, Ind., John attended the grammar schools three months a year, and from his tenth year, worked on a farm, especially in summer time. At first he received only $4.50 a month, with his board; then, after he was fifteen, $9; and later, $13; and for these meager wages, regarded at that time as good, he worked from before daylight until dark. When he reached his twenty-first year, he leased a farm in Perry township, bought an outfit, and went in for raising grain and stock.

Mr. Utz was first married in Perry township, Clinton County, in 1862, to Miss Phoebe Jane Lane, a native of that county; and there, after twelve years of happy married life, she died. There he became owner of a farm of ninety-one and a half acres, which he cleared, ditched, tiled and planted to grain and supplied with stock; in other ways he improved the property, and he erected the necessary farm buildings. Mr. Utz's second marriage took place at Oakland, in Coles County, Ill., in 1875, and then Miss Ellen Street became his wife. She was a native of Ohio, and the daughter of Aaron and Sarah (Sinkey) Street, also of the Buckeye State. Mr. Utz leased his land and moved to Colfax, Ind., and became a merchant. After ten years, however, he returned to the farm and operated it once more; and getting it into good shape, sold it in 1906.

On account of his health, he then came to California and bought a ranch of ten and a half acres in the Tustin district of Orange County, which was already planted to apricots and walnuts. He took out the former and planted oranges instead, and this he operated until 1917, when he leased it for a couple of years, and in March, 1919, sold it. In 1917 he moved to Orange and bought the residence that is now his home. By his first marriage, he had a daughter, Clara E. Utz, who became Mrs. James H. Worrell and now resides at Salt Lake City, and the mother of four children. By the second marriage two children were born, but they died in infancy. Both Mr. and Mrs. Utz are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church; and Mr. Utz is a Republican, with broad views and sympathies as to the relation of politics to local movements and the development of the community. He was made a Mason in Plumb Lodge No. 472, A. F. & A. M., at Colfax, Ind. Both Mr. and Mrs. Utz were members of the Eastern Star, in which she was worthy matron two terms in Colfax.

ALEXANDER P. NELSON.—Although Alexander P. Nelson did not come to California until 1914, when he settled at Santa Ana, he has been a prominent man in the affairs of the city of his adoption since that time. Born in Barnet, Vt., July 9, 1866, he is the son of W. H. and Margaret (Monteith) Nelson, who were the parents of twelve children, Alexander P. being the eleventh in order of birth. Mrs. Nelson is now living at the advanced age of ninety-one years, Mr. Nelson having passed away. Alexander P. Nelson received an unusually good education, having attended the public schools and later Dartmouth College, being graduated from the latter institution with the degree of A. B. Afterwards he studied privately and attended a course of lectures on law, being admitted to the bar in 1891 in the state of Vermont.

He practiced his profession for five years in Vermont, went to Boston, Mass., and from Boston to Alaska, where he stayed for three years, not practicing during his sojourn there. On his return, he practiced law in New Hampshire and then in 1914, he came to Santa Ana where he wrote law for three years, being elected to the office of deputy district attorney on January 1, 1919, a position he is filling ably. During his years in the East, he was city attorney at Medford, Mass., and later held the same office at Huntington Beach, Cal.

On November 25, 1914, Mr. Nelson was united in marriage to Frances Read and the couple are well known in the social circles of Santa Ana. They attend the Christian Science Church.

In politics Mr. Nelson is a Republican. He is fond of hunting and all out-of-door life, being greatly interested in the development of the orange industry in California. Santa Ana surely has no adopted son more public-spirited and anxious for the future greatness of that thriving city than Alexander P. Nelson.

DR. CLIFFORD HUGH BROOKS.—Since his location at Santa Ana in 1911, Dr. Clifford Hugh Brooks has quickly risen to a place of prominence, not only in the city of his residence, but throughout a large radius of the surrounding country. Born at Vinton, Benton County, Iowa, on June 12, 1885, Dr. Brooks is the son of Chester B. and Sophia (Pratt) Brooks. The parents are prominent farmers there, where they have resided for many years and both are still living. Of their nine children, Clifford Hugh was the fifth in order of birth. He was fortunate in receiving an excellent early training in the public and high schools of his native place, and this he continued with a course at the University of Iowa at Iowa City, where he graduated from the Medical Department in 1910. He also had the additional benefit of post-graduate courses at the University of Iowa and at New York and Chicago.

Dr. Brooks first began his practice in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, but having a strong desire to make California his home he came to Santa Ana, and began his work as a specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Gifted with unusual medical skill, and with his years of scientific training, Dr. Brooks has met with marked success in the special branches to which he confines his practice—a success that has rapidly established his preeminence. He has made an especial study of the tonsils, and has become an authority in this line and probably has few equals west of the Mississippi. Even during his college days, Dr. Brooks' grasp of his subject was such that he was made assistant professor of Ophthalmology at the University of Iowa, holding this chair for three years, so that his ability was early recognized.

From the beginning of his residence in Santa Ana, Dr. Brooks has taken an active interest in the civic affairs of the community, and despite his busy professional life, finds time to enter into the progressive movements that are promoting its growth. With a personality wholesome and kindly and a sympathy that is genuine, he has won his enviable position through his consistent upholding of the best ethics of his profession. In his professional associations he is active in the work of the various medical societies, being a member of the American Medical Association, the State and County Medical Societies, the Pacific Coast Ophthalmological Society, and the Los Angeles Medical Society.

ARTHUR C. STANLEY.—A North Carolina boy who has made good as a Valencia orange grower at Garden Grove, is Arthur C. Stanley, the popular president of the Garden Grove Farm Center. After nearly a quarter of a century in the postal service he has settled down to ranch life, bringing with him, in the performance of his new civic duties, a most valuable experience likely to benefit his fellow-citizens as well as himself. He was born at Colfax, in Guilford County, on June 18, 1873, the son of James Stanley, also a North Carolinian, and a planter by occupation, who married in that state a daughter of North Carolina, Miss Laura Pegg.

Arthur C. Stanley grew up in North Carolina, and in time attended Guilford College. At the age of twenty he entered the railway mail service, and for years traveled on the Southern Railway Seaboard Air Line; he was also stationed at Jacksonville, Fla., for several years, and at Washington, D. C. His coming to Orange County was for the purpose of visiting his father, who had moved here in 1897; the father had become a rancher, but the mother had died in North Carolina when Arthur was three or four years old. In 1901 his father died near Santa Ana, at the age of fifty-seven.

While in California, Mr. Stanley met the lady who was to become his helpmate for life—Miss Lillian Agnes Ware, the daughter of the late Edward G. Ware; and they were married at Garden Grove on August 24, 1905. He was then in the railway service, and lived at Jacksonville, Fla.; and hither he took his bride. Later he was transferred to Washington, and later, still, to San Francisco; and from that city he ran out on the Santa Fe system for eight months. Then he resigned having a very enviable record of twenty-four years in the U. S. Railway Mail Service.

Mr. Stanley now farms the forty-acre ranch belonging to Mrs. Stanley, where they have three acres of Navel oranges, ten acres of Valencias, and sixteen and a half acres of walnuts. In 1918, he remodeled the residence making it a modern dwelling and strictly to-to-date. Having been reared in the church of the Friends, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley still remain devoted to that denomination and its excellent and many good works. They have one child, Emerson, the ninth generation on the Ware side in America.

Mr. Stanley is the president of the Garden Grove Farm Center, having been elected to that responsible office at a regular meeting held at Garden Grove on January 26, 1920, concerning which the Garden Grove News of January 30 had a flattering report. One hundred and forty members, so it said, representing an increase of 150 per cent over the previous year, was the strength of the Center reported by Secretary Oldfield. The farm adviser commented on the success of the membership drive, and predicted that the Farm Center could be the leader of progress and development in the community, if the members would accept the opportunity that is within their reach. The Farm Center has become a strong institution in Garden Grove, and is looked to, each month, as the forum for the expression of local sentiment on all local pertinent issues. According to Carl Nichols, formerly farm adviser of Contra Costa County, and a rancher in Garden Grove, the centers in the north having the largest membership and displaying the greatest interest in the work are those that bring the entire family out. The officers elected on this occasion are: president, Arthur C. Stanley; vice-president, E. R. Stillens; secretary and treasurer, Waldo Tournat; director, J. O. Arkley; vice-director, Carl Nichols.

FREDERICK BASTADY.—Of Swiss parentage, Frederick Bastady, the well-known rancher, whose residence is south of Buena Park, has been identified with this locality since 1906. His parents, Emanuel and Anna B. Bastady, eager to found a home for their family in the New World, left their native Switzerland and came to the United States in 1884, locating in New York City, where they lived for sixteen years. It was during their residence there, on June 6, 1885, that Frederick was born on Long Island, the other children being born in Switzerland. Here he was reared and educated in the public schools of New York City, making splendid use of his early opportunities.

In 1900, attracted by the wonderful climate and possibilities of California, they crossed the continent and located in Pasadena, and here they resided until 1906, when they removed to Buena Park, where they have since made their home. Emanuel Bastady passed away here on July 1, 1912; Mrs. Bastady died at the old homestead on February 29, 1920. The original Bastady ranch consisted of sixty acres, but through purchases made by the children the holdings increased to 103 acres, which is devoted to general farming. When the family settled upon this land it was a barley field and pasture, but through diligent and painstaking labor it has been transformed into a valuable, prosperous property.

Frederick Bastady was united in marriage on October 3, 1907, with Miss Nellie M. Ruedy, a native of Iowa, and the daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Ruedy, and they are the parents of three children: Harriet Lillian, Edwin Frederick and Barbara Marie. His brother, Emanuel, married Miss Lydia E. Ruedy, a sister of Mrs. Bastady, and they have four children: Carl A., Ernest E., Ruth, and Albert. The sister, Rose, who became the wife of Harvey Hartman, is the mother of four children: Rosalie M., Helen E., Ida M. and Frank C. The oldest brother, Adolph, died six months after arriving in California.

Held in high esteem as a useful and progressive member of his community, Mr. Bastady has been honored with the office of president of the Chamber of Commerce of Buena Park; he was chairman of the school board, holding this office from 1913 until 1919, and chairman of the Buena Park Farm Center for two years. The family are members of the Congregational Church.

GEORGE AHLEFELD.—One of the best-known and most respected citizens of the district in which he has resided since 1894 is George Ahlefeld, who then purchased five acres of land, with comparatively few improvements, for $1,000. In 1909 he added five more acres to his first block, and now he has a ranch as large as he wishes to handle, and quite sufficient for his maintenance. This ranch is located southeast of Orange, but is in the Tustin district. It is in a fine state of cultivation, and shows that a master hand guides the plow of progress.

Mr. Ahlefeld is a native of Hanover, Germany, where he was born in 1861, a son of Frederick Ahlefeld and Louisa (Wilkins) Ahlefeld, also natives of that country. Our subject, therefore, received his early training in his native country, and grew up with the attraction, buoying up the rest of the family, of early migrating to the freer American Republic. As fast as their finances permitted, one by one these subjects of a despotic government left for the United States, and one by one they became naturalized. The other children were Louis, who now resides in Canada; Mary, who is in Illinois; August, who is in Oklahoma, and Frederick, who is with his brother George in California.

Coming to Illinois in 1879, George Ahlefeld began life in this country with practically nothing, but by close application to work and strict economy, he paid for his several holdings. In 1896 he came to Orange County and now he has all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life as a reward for industry in his young days.

In 1886 Mr. Ahlefeld was joined in marriage to Miss Louisa Stauch, also a native of Germany, who came to Illinois in 1881, and by whom he had six children. The eldest, George, is now deceased; then came Frederick and Otto, and after them Ralph and Harry, who are also both dead; while the youngest was Ethel. The family are Lutherans.

Mr. Ahlefeld resided in Du Page County, Ill., for twenty-five years before coming to Orange County, and while there he busied himself with agricultural pursuits. Otto has followed the example of his father, and has purchased a five-acre ranch which he devotes to citrus culture. He married Miss Verona Strong, daughter of Carl Strong, and they are the parents of one son, Karl George.

THOMAS L. FARIS.—The value of experience and integrity in the conducting of any business, and especially in the handling of hay, grain and feed, has never better been shown, perhaps, than in the history of the establishment at Orange, owned and managed by Thomas L. Faris, a native of Bloomington, Monroe County, Ind., where he was born in the eventful year of 1868. His father was J. M. Faris, a farmer in Indiana but a native of Ohio, and his mother before her marriage was Margaret Smith, a native of Indiana.

Thomas L. Faris is a product of the splendid American rural school which, no matter what its other shortcomings may be, generally sets the lad fortunate in attendance there going in the right way in the world. The comforts and pleasures of home were accorded him until he was twenty-one years old, and then he engaged in the grocery and feed business, remaining in Bloomington, Indiana. After that he went to Greeley, Colo., and for six years was a contractor in cement work.

Reaching California in 1912, Mr. Faris settled first at Santa Ana, from which place he removed to Orange. The year 1914 saw him one of the progressive merchants of Orange, and in his present business, and three years later he had established another store at Fullerton. Little by little he has built up a trade that requires the daily work of five men to handle. The best of everything offered, by the fairest weight at the lowest price possible, promptly and cheerfully delivered—these features of Mr. Faris' management could not fail to win for him the loyal and grateful support of a wide public.

In Bloomington, Ind., 1892, Mr. Faris was married to Miss Haddie Curry, also a native of Bloomington, Ind., whose parents were J. H. and Lizzie (Moore) Curry, of that place, and by her he has had two children—Margaret and Dwight. The family are members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder and is an active member of Orange Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

VICTOR W. LA MONT.—Among those who have endeavored to set a high civic standard for fast-developing Anaheim must be mentioned Victor W. La Mont, the enterprising owner of the Colonial Apartment Building at 149 North Lemon Street, one of the most agreeable in design and best-appointed of all the apartment houses, not only in the town, but in Orange County as well. He was born at Perth Amboy in New Jersey on May 27, 1882, the son of Louis La Mont, a terra cotta maker who built the first kiln for firing that kind of unglazed pottery in Canada. He married Miss Emily Wildhen, and the family came to Los Angeles in 1903. There were three children, and Victor is the second child. Mr. La Mont is now dead.

Victor attended the grammar and high schools of Illinois, and for a while worked in photography. Then he learned the machinist's and engineer's trades, and followed them for six years; after that he was in the postal service for six years. In August, 1912, he came to Orange County and then he went into the wholesale liquor business. His most recent enterprise is a strictly modern apartment house, with eleven single and nineteen double apartments—a very desirable and useful addition to the town. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. La Mont was married on June 28, 1910, at Anaheim to Miss Clara Fischer, a native of this city, whose parents, William and Clara Fischer, were pioneers of Anaheim. Two sons, Victor C., and Allan W. La Mont, have been born to this union. Mr. La Mont is a member of the Elks and the Masons.

In national politics a Republican and a citizen with a good record for volunteer service in the state militia of Illinois, Mr. La Mont has never neglected an opportunity for the uplift of the community or district in which he lives.

C. C. Bennett.

CHARLES C. BENNETT.—An experienced, highly-esteemed walnut rancher who has proven thoroughly reliable as foreman of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, Charles C. Bennett, who was born near Humansville, Polk County, Mo., on June 6, 1871, the son of Samuel Bennett, a native of Ohio, who settled in Missouri in 1866. While a resident of the Buckeye State, he enlisted for service in the great war for the Union and joined the Sixty-fifth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served with honorable mention until discharged from service. In 1866, while still a young man, he removed, first to Illinois and then to Missouri; and in the latter state married Miss Harriet A. Bentfrow, a native of Missouri. He worked at agricultural pursuits until 1900, when he and his devoted wife came to California, and located a mile east of Orange. He bought a farm, which he operated for five years; and when he sold it, they moved to Orange, where he died, in December, 1909, a member of Gordon Granger Post of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mrs. Bennett passed away in August, 1919, the mother of four children, two of whom are still living. The other son is F. M. Bennett of Orange.

Reared on a farm, Charles attended the public schools of his locality, and when twenty-two, entered into partnership with his father, buying a store at Rondo. There, too, he was married to Miss Maude G. Pollard, a native of Caldwell County, Mo., after which he continued in mercantile business. He enjoyed the confidence of the community to that extent that he was also made postmaster of Rondo.

In 1903 he came to Orange in the employ of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and continued with them from June until November; then he returned to Missouri and bought a farm of 120 acres near Rondo. He engaged in farming and stock raising, and, also acted as school trustee; but, resigning from that pleasurable responsibility, he sold his property, in 1908, and on account of his wife's health, returned to California and located at Orange. At first, however, for a year he tarried at Oro Grande, or until his wife died, in May, 1909.

In March, 1910, Mr. Bennett again entered the employ of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and in January, 1913, he was made foreman of all construction work—a position he has held with credit to himself and advantage to the company ever since. He has also been able to acquire a ten-acre ranch of walnuts one and a half miles southwest of Orange—a choice piece of property, sure to appreciate in the future.

By his first marriage, Mr. Bennett had two children—Clyde, who is in the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army, and Grace, who is attending high school. A second marriage made him the husband of Miss Hattie B. Tompkins, at Santa Ana, a charming lady who shares with him his responsibilities and his ambitions, and attends to the Methodist Church. She is a native of Ohio, born near Jefferson, Ashtabula County, and came to Missouri when only two and a half years old with her parents, James H. and Maggie I. (Noble) Tompkins, also natives of Ohio, where her father died. Her mother now makes her home in Orange. Mr. Bennett belongs to the Woodmen of the World—and there is no more popular member in the order.

DR. PERYL B. MAGILL.—A thoroughly competent representative of one of the important branches of modern medical science, Dr. Peryl B. Magill has done much, not only to alleviate suffering and to prolong health and life, but to dissipate certain prejudice now generally recognized as one of the greatest barriers to human progress. She was born near St. John's, Stafford County, Kans., the daughter of Cyrus N. Magill, a farmer who proved his devotion to the cause of the threatened Union by serving in the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery during the Civil War. He had married Margaret Brady, and they had four children, Peryl being the second in the order of birth. The family came west to California in 1890, and Cyrus N. Magill purchased a ranch near Santa Ana.

Peryl Magill attended the Orange grammar and high schools, from which she was graduated in 1909, after which she went in for professional training at the Los Angeles College of Osteopathy, from which well-known institution she was graduated in June, 1912. The following March she commenced to practice at Santa Ana; and here ever since then she has been steadily acquiring an enviable reputation. Her suite of offices is in the Rowley Building, at the corner of Fourth and Main Streets, and she has been more than successful in securing and holding a satisfied patronage.

Fond of out-of-door life, Dr. Magill also finds it agreeable to participate in the work and social activities of such organizations as the Ebell Club, the Daughters of Veterans, the Present Day Club, and the Women's Osteopathic Club of Los Angeles. She is president of Orange County Osteopathic Association as well as a member and trustee of the California Osteopathic Association. In politics, she is decidedly a woman above party, and lends her support only, in the most nonpartisan manner, to those men, women and measures she believes to be for the public weal.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN WINTERS.—A hard-working, liberal-minded and justly popular young man of exceptional merit and, therefore, of interesting promise, is William Franklin Winters, a native of Phillips County, Kans., where he was born on October 30, 1894. His father is John Winters, now a successful rancher near Garden Grove, who married Mary Alice Newman, also living to gladden all who know her.

When five years of age, Frank came to California and Orange County with his parents, and began to attend the local school at Garden Grove. In July and August, 1909, he commenced to work by the day for others, and ever since then he has made his way in the world largely by his own efforts.

In 1914 he was married to Miss Eva Loretta DeVaul, the daughter of Jasper N. and Mary (Holt) DeVaul, and by her he has had two children, Eugene Newton and Glenn Franklin. Mr. and Mrs. Winters are consistent members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove; and in their endeavor to elevate civic standards, work and vote for the best men and women, and the best measures.

Mr. Winters owns in his home place, half a mile north and a quarter of a mile east of Garden Grove, a nice little ranch of five acres of Valencias. He bought the land in 1914, and set it out himself. In November, 1918, he purchased another ten acres and set that out to Valencias; and inasmuch as this second ranch is at the very edge of the town, it must be regarded as unusually choice property. He owns still another ranch of five acres, which he bought just one year later, and that is in full bearing, a quarter of a mile to the south; and to each of these he has given the touch of the experienced horticulturist, so that they bid fair to add materially to the show places of which, more and more, Garden Grove may boast.

Mrs. Winters, esteemed by her wide circle of friends as a very attractive and agreeable lady, and a most helpful neighbor and friend, enters heartily into the various projects of her husband, and so proves to him the best of helpmates, and to the community, the most progressive of citizens.

JOHN O. GUPTILL.—An energetic young man with ability as a machinist, and an agriculturist, John O. Guptill is a son on Charles E. Guptill, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. Born near Shirland, Winnebago County, Ill., December 13, 1880, he accompanied his parents when they removed to his maternal grandfather's farm in Rock County, Wis., and was seven years old when the family migrated to Canton, Lincoln County, S. D., and he was reared on his father's 120-acre Dakota farm, where he assisted his father in his farming and stock raising operations. Later he moved with his father's family to Springfield, S. D., where they resided from 1901 to 1909. In the latter year he came to Los Angeles, Cal., where he worked at various pursuits until he came to Garden Grove in 1913.

The marriage of Mr. Guptill, which occurred in January, 1917, united him with Miss Elizabeth Trumpy, who was born at Ramona, near Madison, S. D., and they have one child, John O., Jr. In addition to managing his ten acres Mr. Guptill carries on a prosperous freight and transfer business, and is the owner of a ton-and-a-half truck, which he uses in his business. He is a helpful factor in local affairs at Garden Grove, where he and his wife are welcome in social circles, and are forming an ever-widening circle of friends and acquaintances. It is to such young Americans as John O. Guptill that our country looks for its future advancement and betterment, socially and financially, and his public spirit and interest in the upbuilding of Garden Grove is an evidence of his faith in the future of the community.

E. A. PEARSON.—In the history of the country no industry has taken greater strides than the automobile business, and about the busiest place in Garden Grove is Pearson and Butler's garage on Euclid Avenue. Mr. Pearson is a native of Philadelphia, and was born in the City of Brotherly Love, September 7, 1888. Educated in the public schools, supplemented with a business college course, he learned the machinist's trade as a young man, and with wise foresight as to future conditions became an expert in the automobile line. He came direct from his native state to Santa Ana, Cal., going thence to Hollywood, where for several years he was engaged at his trade. There he was united in marriage with Miss Geneva Ball, and they are the parents of a daughter, Elizabeth.

In 1917 Mr. Pearson located at Garden Grove, and in June of that year engaged in the automobile business with Mr. Butler, under the firm name of Pearson and Butler. Mr. Pearson has made good at every step of his business career, and in the Garden Grove garage the young men are prepared to do repair work on all makes of autos, trucks and tractors. Vulcanizing is well and expeditiously done, and they deal in Fisk, Goodrich and Oldfield tires, Ford parts, and keep a well selected line of other auto parts and accessories. Thorough machinists and auto men, their efficient service, courteous treatment and square business methods have won so large a patronage that the first Euclid Avenue shop became too small to accommodate their large and increasing business, and they have made arrangements for a long lease on a building erected to accommodate their trade, where is to be found one of the finest and most up-to-date garage buildings in Orange County. In recognition of their high standing among automobilists Messrs. Pearson and Butler's new place is the garage for the Southern California Auto Club at Garden Grove.

Mr. Pearson is an enthusiastic member of the Garden Grove Chamber of Commerce, and has entered whole-heartedly into the advancement of the community in which his lot is cast, and the people have reciprocated by making him thrice welcome to Garden Grove, and fully appreciate their advantage in having a man in their midst who is accounted one of the best informed automobile experts in the country.

SOULE C. OERTLY.—The attractive twenty-acre ranch located on Euclid Avenue half a mile north of Garden Grove, and owned by Soule C. Oertly, is of note among the many well-cared for places on that thoroughfare. Mr. Oertly was born at Lexington, Ky., February 28, 1887, and was five years old when he accompanied his parents, Conrad and Eliza (Widmer) Oertly to California. The parents, natives of Switzerland, are mentioned on another page of this work.

When Soule Oertly, who is the oldest child of his parents, was three years old he accompanied his parents on a trip to their old home in Switzerland, and remained in that country until he was five years of age. Returning to the United States the family settled in Los Angeles, and in 1907 removed to Garden Grove. Soule attended kindergarten in Switzerland and also in Los Angeles, afterwards attending the Los Angeles public schools. He was twenty years old when he came to Garden Grove, where he assisted his father. His marriage occurred at Garden Grove in 1912, uniting him with Miss Dorothy Head, a native of Detroit, Mich., and daughter of George and Elizabeth (West) Head of Garden Grove, who was educated in the Garden Grove, Los Angeles and Santa Ana schools. Mr. and Mrs. Oertly are the parents of three children, Ellen E., George C., and John W., who was born in Alberta, Canada.

Mr. Oertly formerly conducted a cement pipe manufacturing business at Garden Grove and at the same time engaged as an irrigation contractor, putting in irrigation systems for different ranchers in the vicinity. He is considered an authority on irrigation, and on laying out orange and lemon groves. For two and a half years he had charge of Dr. Johnston's Rancho Vista Del Rio, above Olive, laid out the ranch, put in the irrigation system and planted the place to Valencias and lemons. In 1916 Mr. Oertly and his family went to Canada, where he became acquainted with Mr. C. S. Noble, and for six months was engaged as a traction engineer. He did his work so competently that he was appointed superintendent of Mr. Noble's Grand View farm of four and a half sections, and engaged in raising wheat, cattle, hogs, and in dairying. He remained in Alberta until after his brother Bernhard's death, then resigned his position and returned to Garden Grove, where in 1919, he purchased his present ranch. In addition to caring for his sixteen acres of young orange trees and four acres of lemons, which is interplanted with lima beans, he does a great deal of grading and putting ranches in shape. He also cultivates and cares for H. A. Lake's seven and a half-acre ranch.

In their religious convictions Mr. and Mrs. Oertly are members of the Baptist Church and Mr. Oertly is one of the active workers in and standbys of the Y. M. C. A. at Garden Grove. He has many warm friends at Garden Grove and enjoys an enviable reputation for his public spirit and integrity.

HARRY C. FULTON.—Among the later comers to the Talbert district of Orange County, Cal., is Harry C. Fulton, son of W. T. Fulton, owner of the townsite at Camarillo, Ventura County, and for the past thirty-five years a well-known and leading citizen of his section.

Harry C. Fulton owns the highly cultivated forty-acre ranch located one-half mile west of Talbert, and is a native son of California, born near Camarillo in Ventura County, November 5, 1891. He is one of several Ventura County boys who have made a success in western Orange County. When an infant three weeks old he was made a half orphan by the death of his mother. His education was acquired in the public schools and at Brownsberger Business College, Los Angeles, after which he entered the United States postal service as a rural mail carrier in his native county. He was the first mail carrier who ever carried mail out from Camarillo, and he served Uncle Sam efficiently eight years and seven months before he resigned from the position. During the latter part of his service as mail carrier he farmed forty acres in Ventura County, and found ranching to be profitable, thoroughly learning the business of growing lima beans successfully. Mr. Fulton purchased the ranch near Talbert in 1917, and has grown two crops of lima beans, in 1918-19, with splendid success and good profit.

His marriage was solemnized in 1913, and united him with Miss Mildred E. Stenstrom, a native of Tacoma, Wash., who was reared in her native state and in Ventura County, Cal. She is a most estimable woman, an excellent helpmate to her devoted husband and a fine mother to their two interesting children, Harry Charles, and Charlotte. Mr. Fulton inherits from his sturdy pioneer ancestry the independence and self-reliance that is developed through strenuous experience with hardship in a new and undeveloped country. Successful in his chosen vocation he may confidently hope for the future success in life that attends maturer years and rightly directed energy.

FLOYD B. KEALIHIER.—A large and important industry of Orange County, one not so generally known as the orange and oil enterprises, is the growing and marketing of chili peppers, which has developed, in less than twenty-five years, into a million dollar industry, and statistics show that Orange County grows more than three-fourths of all the peppers consumed in the United States.

The grinding and shipping of chili peppers has become an important business in the county and among the most prominent and successful men engaged in this special enterprise is F. B. Kealiher, whose plant is located just outside of the city of Anaheim, to the southwest, where he has for twenty-three years been successfully engaged in this work. He is a native of Illinois, born in Bureau County, July 24, 1876, a son of Hugh F. and Daisy (Murdock) Kealiher. Hugh F. Kealiher was born in Maine in 1843, a son of Sewall and Jane Kealiher, natives of Maine and Ireland, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Sewell Kealiher were the parents of twelve children, six of whom are living, Hugh F. being the sixth child in order of birth. He was reared in Maine and Missouri, his parents having migrated to the latter state in 1857. In 1862, Hugh F. Kealiher enlisted in the Union Army and was mustered into the First Missouri Cavalry. His three brothers, John, William and Amos, were also in the Union Army during the Civil War.

Upon his return home after the war, Hugh F. Kealiher settled in Michigan, where he followed the trade of a builder and continued his work along that line until recent years. He moved to California, locating in Anaheim in 1894, and is a member of Sedgwick Post, G. A. R., of Santa Ana. In 1875, he was married to Miss Daisy L. Murdock, and of this union one child, F. B. Kealiher, the subject of this sketch, was born. In 1918, Mrs. Kealiher passed away. Mr. Kealiher's second marriage, which occurred on August 12, 1919, united him with Mrs. Mary McCain, widow of John R. McCain; she is prominent in the circles of the Women's Relief Corps, being past president of the organization at Santa Ana.

Floyd B. Kealiher was reared and educated in Nebraska, whither his parents moved in 1878. In 1894 he came to California, and in 1897 engaged in growing chili peppers, and in 1900 he began to ship independently. The demand for ground chili caused him to install a mill in 1904, being the only one in the county. The extensiveness of his business can better be understood when one realizes that he ships 100 tons of ground chili per season, which is shipped from Anaheim, and from 300 to 400 tons of pod chili, which is shipped from his warehouse in Garden Grove, from which place, in 1919, he shipped approximately 600 tons. In the operation of his plant he uses a fifteen-horsepower gas engine, and his product is shipped throughout the United States, where it is extensively used by large canning companies.

In 1904, F. B. Kealiher was united in marriage, at Long Beach, with Miss Anna Belle Beach, a native of Minnesota, and of this union one child was born, Vernon, who is now deceased. Mr. Kealiher was bereaved of his wife on April 30, 1918. Fraternally, he is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 199, I. O. O. F., and of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

FRANK WARREN CROUCH.—Among the successful ranchers of the Garden Grove district is Frank W. Crouch, who was born at Potosi, Grant County, Wis., November 30, 1867, and was four years old when his parents, R. M. and Maria A. (Foltz) Crouch, removed to Plymouth County, Iowa, where his father filed and proved up on a homestead of 160 acres. The father is a native of Jamestown, N. Y., and was twelve years old when he went to Wisconsin, where he grew to manhood. At the breaking-out of the Civil War he enlisted in Company I of the Twenty-fifth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served a year and a half when he was discharged. There were three children in the paternal family: Frank Warren, of Garden Grove; Lillie M., the wife of W. H. McNeill, residing at Hollywood; and A. Blaine, a barber at Early, Iowa. R. M. Crouch and his wife live at Hollywood, Cal.

Frank W. was reared in his native state and acquired his education in the common schools, afterward attending the Normal School for a short time. He followed farming in Iowa, and became the owner of 120 acres, which he disposed of in 1900 and joined his father, who was conducting the Bank of Hinton at Hinton, Iowa. Frank became cashier of the bank, and remained with the institution six years.

In 1893 he married Miss Effie Patterson, in Iowa, a native of Peotone, Will County, Ill., and they became the parents of a son named Kenneth W., whose ill health caused Mr. Crouch to dispose of his Iowa interests in 1906, and come to California. The lad regained his health in the genial California climate, and graduated from Leland Stanford University, and is now employed by the Standard Oil Company in San Francisco. With wise foresight, Mr. Crouch planted eighteen acres of his twenty-eight-acre ranch, one and a half miles west of Garden Grove, to a eucalyptus grove, and is now cutting the timber, which yields fifty cords of stove wood to an acre. Fraternally he is a member of the Santa Ana lodge of Masons, and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America Camp in that city. He is a member of the Garden Grove Farm Center, and of the Walnut Growers Association, and in his service as a member of the board of trustees of the Alamitos grammar school has been helpful to the best interests of that school district. A broad-minded, enterprising man, he is ever ready for the advancement of his section of country, and his courteous friendliness as a host is supplemented by the cordial welcome extended by his wife to those who are privileged to partake of their hospitality. They have many warm friends and are highly respected in the community.

GEORGE P. WILSON.—Prominent among the men of affairs who have helped to make Balboa what it is today—one of the really important centers in Orange County, and a community full of promise for the future—must be mentioned George P. Wilson, the pioneer business man there. He was born at Fairmount, Minn., on August 28, 1883, the son of J. R. Wilson, a native and a pioneer of that state, who also became well known to Santa Ana, where he settled with his family in 1899. He was a contracting builder and carpenter used to undertaking large and important commissions; and he died at Santa Ana, about five years ago, at the age of sixty-seven, having completed a life of hard work and very useful activities. He had married in Minnesota Miss Ella Chamberlain, a native of the same state as himself, and a lady who made many friends wherever she resided.

Mr. Wilson came to California first in 1897, and at first stopped at Glendora for a year. Then he moved to Santa Ana, and later went to Garden Grove, where he finished his schooling. Then he came back to Santa Ana, and for a while had a cigar and confectionery store in Santa Ana.

When he took up his residence in the undeveloped Balboa, he worked for a while for the Newport Bay Investment Company, now the Balboa Land and Water Company, and he helped to build the roads leading to Balboa. He also ran on the Bay a pleasure boat of his own, named the Comet; and later on he managed the boat for the Balboa Land and Water Company. He also worked for a while with Boswell, the cement contractor there, in each engagement acquiring a more varied experience and getting better and better posted on Balboa and its possibilities.

Eight years ago, he embarked in business for himself, and now he has an attractive establishment at the corner of Main and Bay avenues, where he deals in stationery, papers, soda water and confectionery. His honesty and his willingness to try to accommodate and serve have been decided factors in securing for him a good patronage, and in keeping the patrons once so secured.

In Los Angeles, Mr. Wilson was married to Mrs. Chloe Saunders, nee Baker, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cana Baker. With his wife he enters heartily into the social as well as the business and political life of Balboa, and besides belonging to the Balboa Yacht Club, and the Chamber of Commerce of Newport Beach, is also a member of Santa Lodge of Elks. He was elected to the city council of Newport Beach, served four years, was reelected, and after serving two years of his second term, resigned, having given six years to the public service in the capacity of city father, and during that time enjoyed the confidence of his fellow-citizens so much so that when a vacancy occurred October 4, 1920, he was again appointed a trustee and is again serving the city with some of his old colleagues.

GEORGE TOURNAT.—The well-known and highly respected citizen, George Tournat, whose twenty-acre ranch lies northwest of Garden Grove, migrated from Texas, his native state, to California in the fall of 1909, and for ten years has resided on his well-improved acres, which are devoted to the culture of citrus fruit and walnuts. His father, H. Tournat, preceded him to California in 1906, and settled in Santa Monica where he died, his mother passing away when he was eighteen years old.

Mr. Tournat was born July 17, 1865, near San Antonio, and his early life was passed on his father's Texas farm. Educated in the common schools he afterward went to Virginia, where he attended the Agricultural and Mechanical College at Blacksburg one year. Returning to Texas, he was married in 1891 to Miss Lillie Bundren, a native of Mississippi and eight children have been born to their union, of whom the seven now living were born in Texas: Clara, is the wife of Monte Preston, a druggist at Downey, Cal.; Thomas E. is operator at the Pacific Electric sub-station at Stanton, he was a musician in the artillery during the late war; Waldo E., secretary of the Garden Grove Farm Center, is a graduate of the Santa Ana high school and later attended Leland Stanford University, enlisting from there into the U. S. Navy, in which he served until the close of the late war; Georgia is a graduate of the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana; Stella is a graduate of the Santa Ana high school and now attending Junior College; and Leigh is a student in the Santa Ana high school; Grace is in the Garden Grove grammar school, and Mary, who was born at Garden Grove, died at the age of three. After his marriage Mr. Tournat continued the occupation of farming, and became the owner of 166 acres near San Antonio, Bexar County, Texas.

Mr. Tournat has planted and improved his Garden Grove ranch, and has five acres in Eureka lemons, five acres in Navel oranges, five acres in Valencia's, and five acres in walnuts. He built a beautiful bungalow home on the ranch, and the property is well equipped with barns, sheds and wells for irrigation. He has installed a pumping plant and has a new up-to-date air-pressure automatic pump run by electric power. Ever ready to embrace modern conveniences that tend to the lessening of labor, his ranch is not only equipped outside with these latest adjuncts, but in his attractive and up-to-date home he has an electric cooking range. In addition to his ranch Mr. Tournat owned twelve acres of unimproved land, which he gave to his sons, Thomas and Waldo, to assist them in getting a start in life. The boys are engaged in the nursery business, budding and raising Valencia orange trees for nursery stock, and are meeting with deserved success in their new venture.

Mr. and Mrs. Tournat are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove, and their interest is ever to advance the general welfare of the community, among whom they are social favorites and are warmly esteemed by their large circle of friends.

FRANK J. BUCHHEIM.—A wide-awake young native son who, as a progressive rancher employing up-to-date apparatus and scientific methods, promises to make his way rapidly in the agricultural world, is Frank J. Buchheim, who resides on East Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana, on a nine-acre ranch, part of the original thirty-acre tract purchased by his father, Frank S. Buchheim, in 1880, and now devoted to the culture of walnuts and oranges. The father was born in Austria in 1844 and emigrated to the United States with his parents in 1856, when he was only twelve years of age. He located in Faribault, Minn., and there prospered as a young agriculturist, leaving the plow only to serve his adopted country in the Civil War, but he was spared the roughest experiences owing to the near close of the struggle.

From Minnesota, Mr. Buchheim removed to California in 1880, and on arriving here purchased thirty acres of waste or barren land, in the development of which he had many and varied experiences. He made numerous improvements and these were added to by his heirs, for he had twelve children, ten of whom are still living. In Minnesota he married Miss Caroline Zymon, a native of Germany, who came to Minnesota when she was a girl of nineteen. Frank S. Buchheim was a successful horticulturist in Santa Ana until his death, which occurred in 1904, when he was sixty years of age, while his wife passed away when almost sixty-nine years of age. Her mother, Mrs. Beatrice Zymon, also came to California, spending her last days with the Buchheims, passing away at the advanced age of ninety-three years. Mr. and Mrs. Buchheim were the parents of twelve children: Lydia, Mrs. Hemenway, lives near El Toro; Aaron at San Juan Capistrano; John at Garden Grove; Jacob is at Downey; Henry at Capistrano; Josie, Mrs. Whisler, at El Toro; Paul at Capistrano; Frank J., the subject of our review; Emile, also at Capistrano; and Minnie, Mrs. Hoeffner, of Bloomfield, Nebr.; all are successful farmers. Emma and Frederick are deceased.

Frank J. spent his boyhood on the farm, attending the public school in Santa Ana, and from a lad on assisted his father on the home place. On the death of his father he took charge of the ranch for his mother until her death, when he purchased nine acres of the ranch, with the home residence, and continues to make his home here, while he also owns seven and a half acres on Santiago Creek, at El Modena, his ranches being devoted to growing oranges, lemons and walnuts. In Santa Ana, on December 1, 1915, occurred the marriage of Mr. Buchheim, when he was united with Miss Annie Bargsten, born in Hanover, Germany, the daughter of Claus and Margreta (Jers) Bargsten, who were farmer folk in Hanover. Mrs. Buchheim came to Orange, Cal., with her uncle, Jacob Bargsten, in 1912, as he was returning from a visit home. Jacob Bargsten was one of the pioneer settlers of Orange. Mr. and Mrs. Buchheim have been blessed with two children; the younger, Robert Frank, is living. They attend the Lutheran Church and take part in all of its benevolences.

Frank J. Buchheiser

Having a desire to see his parents' pioneer home in Minnesota, Mr. Buchheim has made two trips back to that state and also extended his travel to the Atlantic Coast, visiting New York City and other Atlantic ports. Although he was charmed with the country in the East, yet in his estimation it does not equal California, and Orange County in particular.

Mr. Buchheim is a good example of the efficient builders of the California of today, who not only bring to bear the experience and wisdom of yesterday in the inheritance of pioneer brawn and brain, but who are fortified with something of value originating in a foreign land, and adapted to the institutions of our own country.

CHARLES J. SEGERSTROM.—A rancher whose carefully planned years of hard work has netted him and his equally able wife and industrious family handsome returns, is Charles J. Segerstrom, one of the most successful farmers in the Greenville district. He was born at Sodermanland Lan, near Stockholm, Sweden, on June 29, 1856, the son of Gustav Adolph Segerstrom, who came from a long line of military heroes, and Anna Charlotta Anderson, whose family were seafaring merchants. The good parents had seven children, all of whom are deceased except two daughters, who are now living in Chicago, and Charles. Gustav Adolph Segerstrom died in Sweden in 1876 and his wife died in St. Paul, Minn., in 1884.

Charles passed his early life in Sweden, where he enjoyed the usual advantages of the excellent elementary schools. After graduating from school he took a course in agriculture under the best Government experts, and at an early age began farming for himself, and since then has made his own way in the world.

On May 30, 1878, he was united in marriage to Bertha Christine Anderson, who since has proven such a valuable helpmate in Mr. Segerstrom's ventures in the new world. In 1882 he and his wife and three children sailed from Gothenburg, crossing the North Sea to Hull, England, from there to Glasgow, where they went aboard the Fornecia, the largest boat then used in crossing the Atlantic. After fourteen days of stormy voyage they landed at Castle Garden on May 20, 1882, and soon after left for Chicago. Arrived in the metropolis by the lakes, Mr. Segerstrom secured employment with Libby, McNeil and Libby, the packers, and lost no time in entering on the great work of adapting himself to his America environment.

After a year spent in Chicago, they moved to Prentice, Wis., where they spent two years in the heart of the great pine forests as pioneers. The family next moved to St. Paul, Minn., and here Charles was naturalized. He was engaged in the railroad business for thirteen years and as a result he received the best of recommendations from the railroad company.

In 1898 lured by the reports of still greater opportunities in the West the family moved to California. They located at Orange, first leasing a twenty-acre orange ranch from Mr. Riley. While there they took a pleasure trip to Newport Beach and passing through Old Newport were so pleased with the locality they decided to locate there. The first purchase was a forty-acre tract belonging to Ben Fallert, where they engaged in dairying and alfalfa raising. The holdings have been increased extensively, one of the purchases being the Brooks ranch, in 1912, where a modern residence has been erected and is now the family home.

For the past five years Mr. Segerstrom and his sons have engaged in dairying and the growing of lima beans and have enjoyed good and profitable results, the ranch now being equipped with all modern buildings and machinery. Mr. and Mrs. Segerstrom have been blessed with eleven children, all living except Clara who died in 1912. The girls are: Christine, Anne, Ida and Esther. The boys are: Charles Jr., Eric William, Anton, Fred and Harold.

FRANK ULRICH.—An expert blacksmith who has become a clever and successful inventor, is Frank Ulrich, in more respects than one a citizen of worth. He was born in Fayette County, Ill., on February 19, 1876, the son of Fred Ulrich, who had married Martha Walker. After Frank was born, his parents moved with him, then their only child, to Barton County, Mo., and there the lad grew up in the public schools, topping off his studies with a course at the Polytechnic high school at La Mar, Mo. In the same town he served a three years' apprenticeship at the trade of a blacksmith, and there the other four children of the family were born.

In 1896 Mr. Ulrich was married to Miss Alice Ainscough, a native of Barton County, and four years later he came west to California, and settled for a while in San Bernardino, where he worked in the railway shops of the Santa Fe Railway. Then he went to Banning and put in two and a half years in a blacksmith shop there. Then he shifted to Smeltzer, and worked for John McMillan, who then ran the blacksmith shop at that place, and continued with him for about six months, until he sold out.

After that Mr. Ulrich pitched his tent in Wintersburg and once he had decided to stay, he bought of James Kane the shop built by the latter. It is a one-story frame structure, 24x72 feet in size, fitted up with an electric motor and an electric blower, as well as a trip-hammer, an emery wheel, a drill and a power hacksaw, and also two forges. In 1909, Mr. Ulrich built his residence, a pretty bungalow.

Mr. Ulrich does a general blacksmithing business, which includes horse-shoeing and horse-clipping, and makes a specialty of oxy-acetylene welding, and he employs at least one man the year around. He builds beet plows, cyclones and a so-called Swedish harrow, and manufactures celery growers' tools. He has invented a tubing drainer, for pumping oil out of oil wells, which he patented in 1918, and two of his inventions are on trial in the Midway oil field at Taft, on the Santa Fe and the Hondo Oil Company's leases. They give entire satisfaction and are well spoken of.

As a progressive, patriotic citizen, Mr. Ulrich has found pleasure in serving on the board of trustees of the Ocean View School, and he was on both the board and the building commission when that school was erected. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and served as worthy council; Mrs. Ulrich attends the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CHARLES TREULIEB.—The pioneer blacksmith of Cypress, Orange County, Charles Treulieb is a public-spirited citizen, who has done his share to aid in the up-building of his section of the county by giving his hearty support to all movements for the public good and thereby has gained an enviable reputation among his fellows, who appreciate his good qualities.

A native of Russia, he was born in Courland, Dondangen, February 28, 1865, the son of Charles and Julia Treulieb, both natives of that country and the parents of fourteen children, four of whom came to America, and two of these are living in Orange County—Charles and his sister, Mrs. Margaret Yudis. His brother, Christ, lives in Alameda, Cal., and August is a resident of New York. Both parents died in their native land after living useful lives among their neighbors.

Charles attended the public schools of his native town and when he was eighteen he was apprenticed to a blacksmith for five years to learn that trade. After he had mastered it he traveled in various parts of the old world and then came to America to broaden his education and to master English by personal contact with the people, first stopping for a few months in Rio Janeiro, where he worked for a short time. This was in 1893, and it was that same year that he landed in New York, going thence to the West Indies; later he came back to America and stopped in Maine for a time. The West seemed to hold a fascination for him and he came to Arizona, where for some years he worked at his trade in Jerome. He became an American citizen at Prescott in 1903 and ever since has been among the most loyal of citizens of the country he adopted as his home. In 1905 he arrived in Los Angeles, but very soon came to Los Alamitos and was employed as a machinist at the sugar factory until 1905, when he opened his present blacksmith shop at Cypress, where he has catered to the wants of the locality ever since. He has seen this part of the county grow from an almost unproductive section to one of diversified farming and a very rich and productive center; in fact, as one of the pioneers here, he has aided every movement that meant advancing the interest of the people. Besides a well-equipped shop, where he does all kinds of blacksmithing, he conducts an oil-filling station and sells motor supplies; in both lines of activity he is meeting with well-deserved success. His obliging manner and cheery disposition have made him many friends. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World and politically is a broad-minded man who believes in living and letting live.

ROCH COURREGES.—A pioneer rancher who has become prosperous and influential, and who, while forging ahead to affluence, has never failed to encourage any movement worth the while for the development of Huntington Beach, and has thereby been privileged to assist in establishing there most of its important industries and institutions, is Roch Courreges, who owns a fine ranch of sixty acres on the Talbert-Huntington Beach Road, a mile west of Talbert. He was born at Bruges, in the Basses-Pyrenees, France, on November 3, 1850. His father was Joseph Courreges, a well-to-do landowner at Bruges, who conducted a lumber business; he married Justine Laroze, and they both lived and died in France. Roch first came to the United States in 1867, coming via Panama and landed in San Francisco on February 12; he started out into the world equipped with a good French grammar school education, and acquired English after he settled in America. Indeed, he is fond of admitting that he learned many a lesson in the language of his adopted country while talking with his children, or perusing their school books.

Mr. Courreges' first work in California was milking cows on dairy farms in San Francisco and in Monterey County, after which, for a while, he went to the placer mines in Tuolumne County. Then he came back to San Francisco and worked in a tripe factory. At the end of five years, he gave that up and for a year kept a boarding house. He then became a partner in the tripe factory, but sold his interest in 1877. The following year he came to Los Angeles County, and since then he has experienced a great deal and has seen many changes.

The marriage of Mr. Courreges took place at Bolso Chica, in 1880, when he was united with Mrs. Magdalena Smith, nee Mogart, a native of Lower California and a member of an old Spanish family. Thirty-seven years later, on November 29, she died, aged sixty-four years. By her first husband, she had had two children, Josephine Smith and Walter Smith; while through her second marriage, she was the mother of, besides three who died young, the following offspring: Joseph, who married Maria Ramariz, and is a rancher, operating the place owned by Mr. Courreges, and residing there, in partnership with his younger brother John; Elizabeth, the wife of Peter Lacabanne, a resident of Los Angeles; Philippine, the wife of Henry Lacabanne, the rancher of this place; Justine, who gracefully presides over her father's home; and John, who was in the field artillery service in France for three months. He was honorably discharged, and he is now farming at home, as has been stated, in partnership with Joseph.

Mr. Courreges came to Bolsa Chica on December 15, 1878, as a sheep raiser, for this was then a sheep country. This section at that time was in Los Angeles County, and there were no railroads, steam or electric. Six years before that, or in 1872, settlers had made their inroads and had squatted here, or taken the land without authority, but they were disturbed by the Stearns Ranch Company in 1880. In 1883, the Secretary of the Interior rendered his decision, but the squatters retained possession until 1890, when they were ousted for good. In April, 1883, Mr. Courreges established his sheep camp on the spot where his house now stands; and when he first rented pasture land, he leased from the Stearns Ranch Company, and when he came to the site of his present farm in 1882, it was also as a tenant of the said Stearns Company.

At first, Mr. Courreges was a partner in the sheep business with Roch Sarraill, and they herded sheep at Bolsa Chica, as well as at Bolsa Grande, two places named in the terminology of the miner, "small pocket" and "large pocket." They kept high grade merinos, and when they separated in 1882 they had 6,000 head. Mr. Courreges took charge of the camp at Bolsa Grande, and continued in that line for twenty-one years, and at one time he had 8,500 head of sheep.

It was in 1896 that Mr. Courreges bought some eighty acres, including his present ranch, from the Stearns Company, of which he later sold twenty acres to his son-in-law, Henry Lacabanne; and in company with his oldest son he went into farming. At first, he raised potatoes, corn, pumpkins, and alfalfa, and he kept a few cows; and for many years he raised sugar beets in the rich bottom lands, which make up his farm for the most part. He encouraged the establishing of the Holly Sugar Corporation, but two years ago, he planted some lima beans, and in 1919 and 1920 he has had the entire sixty acres planted to limas. His first house burned down five years ago; and since then he has built a beautiful bungalow home on the mesa. He has a couple of good wells and a tank house, furnishing and retaining a good supply of water; and irrigation is carried on by his own pumping plant.

Mr. Courreges has ever been a public-spirited citizen, and he has helped in every way to establish good roads. He worked for the state highway, and voted for county road bonds. He donated the right-of-way through his land for county roads, giving a deed therefor, and has paved the county road past his home. He also worked hard for the cannery at Huntington Beach, but it failed, and he lost $7,000 as the result. He invested $15,000 in twenty-nine lots at Huntington Beach, and he still owns the same. He helped to establish the Linoleum Company at Huntington Beach, and also to bring about the "Tent City." He was one of the founders of the First National Bank of Huntington Beach, and owns fifty shares of its stock; and was a director from its organization and has been the vice-president of the bank for the past five years. He also interested himself in the coming here, north of Huntington Beach, of the peat-fuel company, and in encouraging in every way the operations of the Southern Pacific, the Santa Fe and the Pacific Electric railways.

HENRY LACABANNE.—A hard-working and progressive farmer, whose attractive and equally industrious wife shares with him the good will and esteem of a large circle of friends, is Henry Lacabanne, the son-in-law of Roch Courreges, the pioneer. He was born in Estialesq, France, on October 9, 1873, the son of Pierre Lacabanne, a farmer, who had married Catherine Lagrave. They were owners of valuable land, and lived and died in their native country. They had six children, all sons, among whom Henry was the fourth in the order of birth. Two of the boys, besides Henry, came out to California; Jean is a rancher at Huntington Beach, and Pierre is employed by the Houser Packing Company at Los Angeles. Three sons are in France; the youngest, Auguste Lacabanne, served throughout the late war, or until he was taken prisoner, in July, 1918, but is still alive and in France.

Henry attended the excellent French grammar schools, and later worked on his father's farm. In 1892 he resolved to come to America, and in the latter part of May landed in New York City. On June 6, he reached the capital of California's Southland, Los Angeles. For a while he worked at hay-baling, and then he went to Ventura County, and in October began a five years' engagement as a sheep herder. After that he bought a band of sheep and with his older brother, Jean, as partner, came to San Joaquin ranch in Orange County. He prospered, and remained there until his marriage.

This interesting event occurred in 1905, when he married the second daughter and third child, Philippine Courreges, of the well-known pioneer. Once established as the head of a family, he bought ten acres at Katella, which he planted as a walnut orchard. At the proper time for a good deal, he sold this and came to the other locality in Orange County, where he now resides. In 1910, he bought the twenty acres he manages as a home farm, purchasing from his father-in-law, and by hard work converted it from the bare land, and has brought it up to a high state of cultivation, built a modest but very comfortable home, and has paid for all the improvements, including a large barn, a good well, and a first class pumping plant.

In 1910, also, Mr. Lacabanne took out his last papers, and now as an American citizen, and a patriotic Republican, he seeks to do his civic duty in every respect. He lives on the Talbert Road, a finely-paved county thoroughfare, and in his well-kept ranch has something to display as the evidence of a life of intelligent industry.

HERMAN F. RUTSCHOW.—Born in Ganschendorf, Pomerania, Germany, on September 5, 1868, Herman F. Rutschow was reared there until in his fourteenth year. On April 5, 1882, he emigrated with his parents, Carl and Wilhelmina Rutschow, to the United States and located at Alma, Buffalo County, Wis. Here Carl Rutschow engaged in railroading for a time until he entered the employ of the brewery in Alma, where he became brewmaster. In 1898 he removed to Seattle, Wash., and was brewmaster for Heinrich Bros. Brewery until he was retired on a pension; he died in Seattle in 1917, while his wife had preceded him, dying in 1904. Of their seven living children Herman F. is the second oldest and received a good education in the schools of his old home town and was confirmed just before he left for Wisconsin, where he continued his education.

When eighteen, Mr. Rutschow began to learn the brewer's trade and on completing it in 1892 he migrated to Washington where he was foreman of the bottling department for the Bay View Brewing Company at Pt. Townsend; thence to Vancouver, B. C., where he filled the same position in the Red Cross Brewery for one year, then he returned to Seattle and was employed in the Rainier Brewery owned by Heinrich Bros. (one of them, Alvin Heinrich, was Mr. Rutschow's brother-in-law). He continued with them as a brewer for many years and during this time took a course in Wilson's Business College in Seattle. After many years in the above responsible position he resigned and engaged in business on his own account in Seattle for five years. He built a brewery in Aberdeen, which he called Gray's Harbor Brewery and Malting Company and later sold it to Alvin Heinrich and then purchased another brewery, which he managed for eighteen months, then sold it at a good profit. Next he took a trip to Calgary, Canada, where he took up a farm of 320 acres of land, but the promised government loan failed to materialize so he gave it up six months later and returned to Seattle and became foreman of the bottling department for the Aberdeen Brewing Company, a position he filled very ably for a period of seven years when the state of Washington went dry. He then ran a stage between Montesano and Aberdeen for eighteen months, then was employed in the shipyards at Aberdeen for six months. After this he came to San Francisco, Cal., where he was employed three months with Chas. Bach and Company.

In 1917 he came to Anaheim as brewer for the Anaheim Brewing Company and one year later was made brewmaster, a position he filled till September, 1919, when he resigned to take the agency of the E. & A. Extract manufactured by the North Coast Products Company of Aberdeen, Wash., and is representing them in the ten counties of Southern California, having established local agencies in most of the towns, his headquarters being at 118 North Thalia Street, Anaheim.

Mr. Rutschow was married in Seattle when he was united with Miss Margaret Antonia Koch, who was born in Zittau, Saxony, Germany, and they have one child, Frederick, who is now learning the automobile machinist's trade in a city near Zittau, Germany. Mr. Rutschow is enterprising and progressive and is always willing to do his share toward aiding enterprises that have for their aim the building up of the community in which he lives.

H. F. Rutschow

JOSHUA O. PYLE.—Ability and industry, combined with a good practical head for business, are among the qualities that have brought success in life to J. O. Pyle, rancher near Smeltzer, and an able machinist as well as an agriculturist.

Mr. Pyle, a young man of striking personality, was born in Washington County, Pa., December 5, 1880. His parents, William Wesley, and Laura (Scott) Pyle, pioneer farmers of that section of country, were natives of Pennsylvania and Iowa, respectively. The father died in 1905 and the mother in 1910. Mr. Pyle's uncle, Joshua J. Pyle, is a well-to-do pioneer rancher of the Westminster precinct of Orange County, and the youngest and only surviving member of a family of three brothers and three sisters.

Joshua O. Pyle comes of an historic and long-lived family. His paternal great-grandfather on the maternal side, William Lyons, attained the advanced age of ninety. His great-grandfather, and great-grandmother, who was a cousin of General Robert E. Lee of Civil War fame, each lived to be eighty-four years old. His grandfather, William Pyle, who in early life followed the occupation of a carpenter and later the occupation of tilling the soil in western Pennsylvania, lived to be seventy-seven years old, and was a member of the Home Guard and captain of the Black Horse Cavalry Company.

Joshua O. first started in life as a machinist. He was fireman on the Pennsylvania Railroad for two and a half years, and afterwards a locomotive engineer for one year. In 1906, at the age of twenty-six, he went to Alberta, Canada, and engaged in running a steam plow and threshing outfit. Three years later, in 1909, he came to California, and worked for a time for the old California sugar factory, finally settling at Smeltzer. He holds a lease on eighty acres of land owned by the Anaheim Sugar Company, the forty acres on which he lives, and another forty acres north of Smeltzer. Twenty-five acres of the land is planted to sugar beets, and he will plant the remainder largely to lima beans. He planted sixteen acres of land to oranges in the Garden Grove district, which he disposed of to good advantage.

In 1910 Mr. Pyle was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Keseman, a native daughter of San Bernardino County, Cal. Politically Mr. Pyle casts his vote with the Republican party. Fraternally he is a member of the Huntington Beach Lodge No. 380, F. & A. M., of which he is past master; belongs to Santa Ana Chapter No. 73, R. A. M., Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M., and to Santa Ana Commandery No. 36, Knight Templars and Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Los Angeles, and is held in high esteem by his brother Masons. He and his wife are members of the Order of Eastern Star, of which she is past matron and he is past patron. Generous and hospitable, Mr. and Mrs. Pyle are justly popular among their friends and neighbors.

ARTHUR A. SCHNITGER.—A thoroughly practical agriculturist who has been able to transform rough grain fields into beautiful gardens and orchards, and to create one of the finest ranches in his neighborhood, is Arthur A. Schnitger, proprietor of twenty choice acres on Euclid Avenue, one mile north of Garden Grove. He was born at Watertown, Jefferson County, Wis., on April 13, 1879, the youngest son in a family of nine children, including two brothers and six sisters. His father was Adolph F. Schnitger, who came here from Watertown in 1892, and bought the forty acres known as the Langenberger Place. It was planted to a vineyard, and fenced around with lattice—but the vineyard died out, and Mr. Schnitger turned it into an alfalfa ranch. He became well and favorably known in and around Anaheim and Garden Grove as a man in every way of sterling worth; and when he died, in 1913 at the age of sixty-six, he was widely mourned. Mrs. Schnitger was Caroline Hager before her marriage, and she is still living at Anaheim. Mary, the eldest child, married the Rev. J. Schneider, and now resides at Oakland; Edwin expects to remove from Watertown to California; William E. is the president of the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association; Lydia is the wife of Martin Fisher of Anaheim; Arthur Albert is the subject of this sketch. Pauline became the wife of H. C. Meiser, orange grower and nurseryman at Fullerton; Ella died at the age of eleven; Esther, a seamstress, shares the home life of her mother at Anaheim; and Hattie, who married Henry G. Carl, resides at Salem, Ore.

Arthur Schnitger attended the district schools in Jefferson County, Wis., and continued his studies at Garden Grove, where he was graduated from the grammar school. In 1906 he bought the twenty acres he has so handsomely developed—an unattractive stretch of grain land, with not a tree upon it; now he has fourteen and a half acres set out to Valencia oranges, five acres planted to walnuts, and maintains a very good family orchard and vegetable garden. He has a fine well 149 feet deep, with a fifty-foot lift, driven by a powerful electric dynamo. His ranch has already reached the horseless stage, where a touring car and a Cleveland tractor do it all, and there is not a horse to be seen. He has also a good blacksmith and machine shop on his place, and there he does nearly everything needed in the mechanical line.

The first improvement effected by Mr. Schnitger on his place was his barn, after which came the sinking of a well and the building of a water tank. In 1916, with the assistance of the late Benjamin Oertly of Garden Grove, he built his attractive bungalow without the help of any other carpenters or mechanics. The two friends not only did every part of the carpenter work, but also the porches, steps, chimney and other cement and brick work, and they executed all so well that the house is strikingly attractive and embraces many modern conveniences, provided in plans drawn to a scale by Mr. Schnitger and his talented wife.

For several years Arthur Schnitger, with others, ran a bean threshing outfit, and while his partners sold out from time to time he, himself was interested in the business longer than the others. With the Belle City and the Rumely, both rebuilt machines, the men did a good business in their lines from Tustin to Buena Park and south to Wintersburg. W. E. Schnitger, assisted by Arthur A. Schnitger rebuilt and converted a steam threshing machine into a traction thresher using gasoline. The various men who at different times composed the partnership in threshing were Messrs. Dozier, Schnitger, Andres and Gibson.

At Garden Grove Mr. Schnitger was married to Helen Schneider, born in Missouri, by whom he has had two children, twins, Barbara Joy and Fern Lucile. Leading upright, industrious lives, Mr. and Mrs. Schnitger find time for something beside the acquisition of material wealth, and take especial pleasure in active participation in all the work of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Garden Grove.

VERNON H. KING.—Among the ablest and most successful newspaper editors and proprietors of California, and one deserving in full the popularity he enjoys in his own and neighboring communities, must be rated Vernon H. King, the live wire manipulating the well-conducted Garden Grove News. He was born at Little Rock, Iowa, on May 7, 1884, the son of Charles H. King, who is still living and resides with the subject. Mrs. King, the mother, was Huldah Beeman before her marriage, and she died at Bellflower, Cal., two years ago. These good parents had nine children, and six are living today: Everett, the eldest, was until recently editor and proprietor of the Covina Citizen, and now resides at Los Angeles; Vernon was the second in the order of birth; Ethel has become the wife of Judge Hall, county judge of Brookings County, S. D.; Charles is the superintendent of the Los Angeles Creamery; Laura is the wife of Wallace Cornman, and lives at Los Angeles; Leonard is employed by the Union Oil Company at Los Angeles. Charles H. King was a native of Maine; and Mrs. King a native of Iowa. The father was a farmer and stockman, and moved from Lyon County, Iowa, to Grant County, S. D., where, from 1891 to 1896, he was located at Summit.

His first actual newspaper work was done on the Pipestone Leader, when he was for a while the "devil," or boy-of-all work, and incidentally learned to set type. He worked on both of the newspapers there, also the Brookings Press and the Brookings Leader, and added rapidly to his experience; and when the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railway was building through South Dakota, he bought lots at Florence, S. D., purchased presses and other necessary equipment for a newspaper office, and put in his printing plant before the rails had been laid to Florence. That was in 1906; and at Florence he established the Florence Forum, and later bought the Wallace World and also the Crocker Tribune, making three newspapers of which he was editor and proprietor, at the same time. He continued to live in South Dakota until he sold out his newspapers to come to California, in 1912.

Settling in the Imperial Valley, in 1914 he established the Niland Review at Niland, formerly called Imperial Junction, and that was the first newspaper there. He conducted the Review until 1916, when he came to Garden Grove and bought out Walter Potter, the owner of the Garden Grove News. A most loyal American, first, last and all the time, and a Republican whose counsel is often sought by the local party leaders, Mr. King contributes what he can toward both a better citizenship and to the welfare of the community. He was chairman of the League to Enforce Peace, and participated actively in all war work. From 1917 to 1918 Mr. King was the wide-awake secretary of the Garden Grove Chamber of Commerce, and it is no wonder that the circulation of the News has doubled since he took hold of the paper. His printery includes all the equipment necessary for any variety of high class job and newspaper work.

In 1908 Mr. King was married to Miss Belle R. Ohnstad, a native of Codington County, S. D., and a daughter of the late L. K. Ohnstad, who died in South Dakota in 1918. She attended high school at Waubay and at Watertown, S. D., and there was well prepared for the duties of life. Two children have blessed the fortunate union, Orville and Velma. Upon coming to Garden Grove, four years ago, Mr. King purchased five acres, planted to Valencias, at present in a handsome stage of their growth; and recently he has bought residential property on Ocean Avenue.

Callens Bros

GUSTAVE J. CALLENS.—An excellent illustration of the advantages of cooperation in industry, especially among near of kin understanding each other and impelled by common, unselfish motives, is afforded in the operations of the Callens Brothers, Belgian-Americans, who have made good since they established themselves in California. The eldest of these is Gustave J. Callens, the rancher, who resides five miles to the north of Irvine Station. He was born near Kortryk in Flanders, Belgium, on November 13, 1879, the son of Henry Callens, a farmer, who was born and married in Belgium, and is still farming there. He had married Mathilda Seurinck, a worthy daughter of that country, whose fidelity as wife and mother was such that her end, in being run over and killed by an enemy truck, was pathetic in the extreme. They had eight children, two of whom died; and the other two who came to America are Adolphe and Joseph Albert. Adolphe was born about 1884, married Miss Alice Vanderbeke, a resident of Anaheim but a native of Belgium. During 1920 they returned to Belgium for a visit, being among the few thus favored in early seeing the devastated, but still beautiful, country. The third brother of the group is Joseph Albert, whose birth occurred about 1890, also in Belgium. All three of these sturdy boys grew up in their native country, and enjoyed the usual educational advantages for which Belgium is widely known, studying in particular foreign languages, so that they read, write and speak Flemish, the language of the people, French, which is more generally used in business and officially, and English, now especially such a requisite in intercourse with the outside world.

Adolphe Callens was the first of the brothers to come to California, in 1907, and he was followed the next year by Gustave and Joseph Albert. They had many relatives in Oxnard, Ventura County, and there for a while they worked around on ranches; and in 1911 they came south to Orange County, where they began to rent six hundred acres of their present ranch. Since then, they have augmented the area of their valuable lease by clearing up and bringing under the plow a lot of land that previously was waste.

They are renting, in fact, two farms—one of nine hundred sixty-seven acres, and another of six hundred acres, making over fifteen hundred acres in all which they are operating. They also own a fine ranch of eighty acres at Greenville, in Orange County, devoted to the culture of lima beans, and a forty-acre walnut grove at Anaheim. Of the 967 acres rented from James Irvine, one hundred sixty-five acres are set aside for lima beans, three hundred acres for black-eye beans, one hundred fifty-five acres for wheat, and one hundred fifty acres for barley. The balance is in pasture, or rough land, for this ranch lies close to the foothills. The scientific, economic and progressive manner in which these experienced ranchers handle their crops has been a source of instructive interest to fellow ranchers, and no one in the vicinity stands higher than the three Callens brothers.

Gustave Callens, besides being a successful rancher, with something definite to show for his intelligent industry, also has a war record of which anyone might be proud. In 1914, having returned to Belgium, he was impressed for military service; and having previously performed three years of military drill, he went into the front lines as a seasoned soldier. He campaigned for four and a half years in Belgium and France, and was in many very bloody engagements; but, luckily, he was never wounded. After a year's service in the Belgian infantry, he was transferred to the commissary department, in which he served as first sergeant during the last three and a half years of the war. The first year he was in the Third Company, Seventh regiment of infantry.

While in Belgium, on May 1, 1919, Mr. Callens was married to Miss Elie Devlies, who returned with him to California, and was nicely settled on the San Joaquin ranch, at the head of an ideal country home, but she died on June 22, 1920, mourned by all who had come to know her.

ADOLPHE CALLENS.—An energetic, able, "get-there" type of young man whose success has been phenomenal, is Adolphe Callens, one of the three well-known brothers, bonanza ranchers on the San Joaquin, and the first one to come to America and to lead the way for the other boys to reach California. He was born in West Flanders, Belgium, on August 6, 1884, the son of Henry and Mathilda (Seurinck) Callens, worthy farmer folks, who gave themselves to years of honest, exhausting toil. The father is still living in Belgium at the age of seventy-six; but the mother was killed during the World War when run over by a truck of the enemy. They had eight children and seven are living.

Adolphe's early life was spent in his native land, where he was given the best of public school educational advantages, especially in the matter of modern tongues, so that he learned French and Flemish before leaving for abroad, and for some time he worked on his father's farm.

He first came to America in 1907, and proceeded west to Ventura County, Cal., and the following year he was joined there by his brothers, Gustave and Joseph. The three were not long in hiring themselves out to work on farms, and being intelligent, strong and willing, they became favorites with those who employed them. In 1910 he came down to his present locality, and in partnership with his brothers rented a ranch from Mr. Irvine. Now they are operating two large ranches on the San Joaquin, and they also own an excellent ranch of eighty acres at Greenville, Orange County, on which they grow lima beans, and they own and operate a grove of walnuts forty acres in size, near Anaheim.

At Anaheim in 1916, Mr. Callens was married to Miss Alice Vanderbeke, a native of Belgium and the daughter of Angelus Vanderbeke, who was actively engaged in farming until he was eighty-two and now lives retired at the advanced age of ninety-two years. His devoted wife, who was formerly Juliana Vermeerch, passed away April 8, 1919, in her seventy-fourth year, leaving three children: Adiel, a farmer in Orangethorpe; Alice, Mrs. Callens, and Adila, who presides over her father's home.

After completing her education in Flanders, Mrs. Callens came to Newton, Jasper County, Iowa, in 1910, and in 1911 came on to Anaheim, Cal., arriving July 4 of that year. She graduated as a nurse from the Anaheim Hospital, where she practiced her profession until her marriage. Three daughters have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Callens, and they are named, Angela, Agnes and Anita. Mr. Callens is a member of the Knights of Columbus, affiliated with the Santa Ana branch.

During 1920, Mr. and Mrs. Callens made a trip to Belgium to see the familiar spots and faces, or such as were left of them, again. On their return they landed at New York City on the Fourth of July; but they soon embarked for the West and made such good time that they arrived in their favorite home place in California on July 8.

AUGUST L. MARTEL.—A French-American with an interesting history and experience having to do with both the Old World and the New, and with both Northern and Southern California, is August L. Martel, the livestock man, butcher and land-owner of Talbert. He was born at Gap, in the Hautes-Alpes, in the southeastern part of France, on February 4, 1865, and had the good educational opportunities of that country. His father, Louis Martel, was a farmer and a stockman, who married Veronica Boudoir, their birth and marriage, as well as their death, taking place in their native France. They had four children—three girls and a boy—among whom our subject was the second in the order of birth.

At nineteen years of age, he came to San Francisco in 1884, where he served an apprenticeship as chef and when he was proficient he served in that capacity for the celebrated Bohemian Club, of San Francisco, and also for the Palace Hotel and Maison Dore, and coming south to Bakersfield, he also was chef for the old Southern Hotel, and was there when the city and the old hotel burned. He then ran a restaurant there for several years. Removing to Los Angeles, he displayed his culinary art to the patrons of the old Hollenbeck Hotel, and thousands knew of his tasteful dinners and lunches, and his skill in manipulating great banquets.

Three years before he came to Los Angeles, or about twenty-two years ago, Mr. Martel went down to Fountain Valley and immediately he bought his ten acres, of which he has since had such good reason to be proud. Thereon he has erected a store building, which contains his meat market and grocery, residence and barns, and where he employs three men in the business. The balance of the acreage he has brought to a high state of cultivation. Always a hard worker, he has reaped the usual fruits, in success of intelligent, persistent labor. He takes a live interest in the duties of a citizen, and while voting on national issues under the principles of the Republican party, he casts aside partisanship in local campaigns, and supports whatever or whoever is best for the community. Besides dealing in staple and fancy groceries—the finest and best are none too good for him—and fresh and salt meats, in the selection of which he is naturally an expert, he buys and sells, and also butchers, beeves, hogs, sheep and calves.

While living at Bakersfield, Mr. Martel was married to Miss Mamie Lincoln, by whom he had one child, who passed away; and in Fountain Valley this good companion passed away. He was married a second time, in Los Angeles, January 24, 1910, to Mrs. Millie Mueller, the daughter of John and Lou F. (Motley) Heaston, who are now residing at Huntington Beach, honored as among the oldest pioneers in this western part of Orange County. Mr. Heaston, who was born in Missouri, is now eighty-two years of age, and Mrs. Heaston, who hails from Old Virginia, has attained her sixty-second year. Mrs. Martel was born near Richmond, and lived there until she was seven. Then, after a couple of years spent in Missouri, she came west to California and grew to young womanhood in San Diego County. There she met her first husband, Emil Mueller, D.D.S., a graduate of the dental department of the University of Southern

Robert L. Knapp.

California at Los Angeles. He practiced dentistry at Spring and Fourth streets, Los Angeles, and at the same time was professor of dental surgery at the University of Southern California until the time of his death, at the age of thirty-eight, in 1906. She had one child by her first husband, Mary, now nineteen years old and a graduate of the Huntington Beach high school, now Mrs. Emil Keslenholtz of Anaheim. Mrs. Martel has six brothers and sisters, all of whom have been prosperous. One is Mrs. George Bushard; another, James Heaston, who resides at Los Alamitos; a third, Cleve, who is a resident of Los Angeles; a sister, Mrs. Frank P. Borchard, of Santa Ana; a brother named Fields M. Heaston, a rancher of Lancaster, Los Angeles County; and the youngest of the family, John W. Heaston, a rancher of Kern County.

ROBERT L. KNAPP.—Numbered as one of the ambitious, industrious and progressive men of the younger generation of ranchers in Orange County, Robert L. Knapp is rapidly advancing to the front rank of successful orchardists in the Anaheim district, his ranch being located on Nursery Avenue in the Katella school district. He was born in Canada on December 6, 1896, the son of the late Peter B. Knapp, who came to California and located in Los Angeles County, as there was no Orange County at that date—1888. The mother was in maidenhood, Christine Livingston, who, like her husband, was a native of Canada. There were seven children in the Knapp family, all born in Canada, and five of them are living: Mary M., Mrs. G. W. Dorr; J. Allen; Rachel J., Mrs. E. M. Christensen; Elmer C.; and Robert L. George and Annie are both deceased. Mr. Knapp died in 1903 and his widow still lives on the home place with her son Robert L. After Peter B. Knapp and his son George had been in Orange County about twelve years the other members of the family came here to join them in 1900, and they moved on the ranch where the family now lives.

Robert L. Knapp attended the public schools in Orange County, and he at once began making improvements on the ranch after the death of his father. Under his skillful hands, assisted by his brother, Elmer C., who was born in Canada on May 20, 1894, the thirty-acre ranch has been set to Valencia oranges and lemons. While the trees were maturing they raised beans and peppers between the rows to meet expenses. The trees are now in a very thriving condition and much is expected from the model ranch as the years pass. With the exception of the buildings on the place, every improvement has been placed thereon by the Knapp Brothers, and is being operated by them, they having bought the property from their mother and each looks after his portion. Robert is public-spirited and lends his aid to all movements for the betterment of conditions and the upbuilding of the county, and his friends repose the highest confidence in his integrity, and his standing in the community is deservedly the highest. It is in the hands of such men that the future of Orange County is placed and the results they will obtain are certain to be of the highest order.

HUNTINGTON BEACH UNION HIGH SCHOOL.—Few institutions of learning in California have done more to help shape the destiny of the younger and fast-growing communities than has the Huntington Beach Union High School, whose excellent standing as an accredited high school, admitting to colleges and universities without further examination, is due in part to the scholarly, thorough work of McClelland G. Jones, its principal. The grounds include ten acres, a mile northwest of the business center of the beach, while among the buildings on that site is the two-story brick and concrete structure devoted to manual arts work. There are excellent facilities for athletics, including a basket ball ground and three tennis courts, together with a football and baseball field, and fields and track for general athletics. The high school course includes four years of work beginning with the ninth and extending through the twelfth grade; and there is also an opportunity for graduate work. As in most modern high schools the program includes a commercial department and a department of domestic science; as well as courses in art, music and agriculture. The precinct of the high school takes in all the beach and coast from Seal to Newport Beach, and the school furnishes transportation for those pupils coming from the cities and places on the line of the Pacific Electric Railway, namely, Balboa, Newport Beach, Sunset Beach and Seal Beach. The school also operates two auto busses, gathering up the pupils from the outlying country districts. The enrollment December, 1919, was 163 pupils, and there are twenty-three seniors in the class of '20. The average daily attendance is 155 pupils.

The board of directors of the Union high school are: President, E. R. Bradbury; clerk, C. A. Johnson; and the balance of the trustees, W. T. Newland, Sr., R. E. Larter, and H. L. Heffner. Meetings of the board are held the second Friday in each month. The principal, as has been stated, is McClelland G. Jones; and the remainder of the faculty is as follows: Miss Nettie Owen, Mrs. T. B. Talbert, Miss Ruth Munro, Miss Margaret Keen, Miss Francis Douthit, Miss Martha Trafford, Miss Florence Larter, Frank Smith, Leon Olds, Ray Walker, and Dr. Paul White. Mrs. Julia M. Payne is secretary to the principal.

Principal Jones was born at Delevan, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., on December 14, 1885, the son of Evan Jones, who was born in Wales. He became an educator, having migrated to America, and was graduated from the Geneseo, N. Y., Normal School, after which he taught school in western New York for ten years. Then he went into business in the same region and engaged in the manufacturing of butter and cheese. Mrs. Jones, now deceased, was also a native of the Empire State and was popular as Miss Adda Gibby; she graduated from the Franklinville Academy, and was a teacher before her marriage. In the spring of 1914 she passed away, mourned by five children, among whom the subject of our interesting review was the second in order of birth.

McClelland Jones was graduated with the class of '04 from the Delevan, N. Y., high school, and for three years engaged in business. Then he entered the the Liberal Arts department of the University of Michigan, and was graduated in June, 1911, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He served as principal of the high school at Owosso, Mich., from 1911 to 1915, in all four and one-half years, when he was advised by physicians to seek out-of-door life; but remaining in central Michigan until January, 1918, he suffered a complete breakdown.

On March 7 of the following year Mr. Jones came west to Los Angeles, and for several months he pursued graduate work in the University of Southern California. On July 1 of the same year, he entered upon his present position.

While in western New York, Mr. Jones was married to Miss Mabel Cheney, a native of Bradford, Pa., although at the time of her marriage, a resident of Delevan, N. Y. She is a graduate of Ithaca, N. Y., high school, one of the best of New York's secondary institutions, and has thus been able to enter intensively into the work of her husband.

JAMES E. BROWN.—Among the well-known residents of the Bolso voting precinct, Orange County, is James E. Brown, a representative of that very important class of American farmers who have won success through industry, frugality and self-denial. Beginning life handicapped by many disadvantages he has made a success and his sterling traits of character have won recognition among his associates in the twenty-four years of his residence in Orange County.

Mr. Brown is a native of Virginia, born near Middletown, Warren County, February 22, 1869. His father, James E., for whom he was named, served as a soldier in the Confederate army, and died when his son James was but a year old. The widowed mother moved with her three children to Lincoln County, Mo., where she married William Swiger, a farmer. James grew up on the home farm in Lincoln County, and his educational advantages were limited to the short time in winter when it was too cold to work. At the age of seventeen he began to work out on the neighboring farms by the month, and afterwards went to Pike County, Ill., where he was married, August 2, 1891, to Miss Mary C. Helm, a native of that county, whose father, William Helm, was a native of England, and whose mother, Elizabeth (Reeder) Helm, was born in Scott County, Ill. Her father was a carpenter, who followed farming after his marriage, and she is the second child in a family of three daughters and one son. Her mother died when she was six, and when sixteen death claimed her father.

Mr. Brown rented land for four years in Pike County, Ill., and farmed until he came to California in 1896 and purchased the home place of ten acres. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have three living children: Eliabeth J. graduated from the Santa Ana high school in 1917; she is a stenographer and a very capable employe of the First National Bank at Garden Grove; Virgil E. is a graduate of the Santa Ana high school, class of 1914, and also graduated from the agricultural department of the University of California at Davis in 1917; Harriet M. graduated from the Santa Ana high school with the class of 1917, and is now a senior in the University of Southern California. She also graduated from the Junior College at Santa Ana in 1919; Virgil enlisted in the Twenty-first Company of the National Guard of the Coast Artillery, July 23, 1917, trained at Fort McArthur, was transferred to the Fifty-fifth Ammunition Train, Company C, and sailed from New York, September 8, 1918, landing at Brest, France, September 21 of that year. He was at Cluffes, France, when the armistice was signed, and remained in France until February, 1919, being honorably discharged at Camp Kearny, San Diego, March 17, 1919. Virgil and his father jointly own thirty-four acres adjoining the forty acres owned by Mr. Brown, which they purchased January, 1920. The father takes ten acres of this property and the son retains the other twenty-four. They leveled the property and planted ten acres of it to Valencia oranges in 1920, and expect to plant the remainder of it to Valencias. Mr. Brown grows beans, peppers and sugar beets.

Ed Miles

Although Mr. Brown through unfortunate circumstances was denied the advantages of a good education in his boyhood days, he is a staunch champion for good public schools, and is now serving his fourth three-year term as clerk of the Garden Grove grammar school, one of the best schools of its kind in Southern California. While carefully conserving the public funds he is liberal and generous, and the school children of this favored district reap the advantages thus afforded. He is an honest, upright, straightforward, common sense man, frank and honorable in every deal, and his life will ever remain an encouragement to all who are compelled to start life under the handicap of limited means and lack of opportunity. He has been ably assisted in his battle through life by his true and loyal wife, a woman of splendid good sense and strong character, and a dutiful and loving wife and mother. Mr. Brown's daughters are members of the Garden Grove Methodist Church, and in his fraternal affiliations Mr. Brown is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

E. C. MILES.—Cooperation having come to be recognized, more and more, as one of the most indispensable requisites of success in modern industry, it is not surprising to find in Fullerton, which has already set the high water mark in various fields of endeavor, an organization of such merit as the Fullerton Mutual Orange Association, whose efficient secretary and manager is E. C. Miles. Not less than thirty-five people are employed to carry on a work directed for the past seven years by him. Mr. Miles was born in Keokuk County, Iowa, on January 13, 1867, the son of Daniel Miles, a farmer well known in Iowa for the common sense and thorough methods he employed in tilling the soil and harvesting. He was a native of Ohio, and married Miss Delia Fear, who was born in Iowa. When the Civil War threatened to divide these United States, Mr. Miles enlisted for the cause of the Union, and for three years served with the Thirty-third Iowa Regiment. Both parents are now dead.

The oldest of eleven children, E. C. Miles was educated at a rural school and later attended a business college at Trinidad, Colo., which gave him a valuable drill in the methods of commerce and industry. He had remained at home with his father until he was twenty-one years of age, and then located at Trinidad, Colo., where he was in the wholesale grocery business for seven years. In Denver, the dry goods business attracted him for three years, and then, at the beginning of this century, he came to California.

Settling for a while at Monrovia, Mr. Miles went into the packing business; and later he was engaged in contracting and building for ten years. In 1911 he removed to Fullerton, and bought an orange grove; and soon after he assumed his present position with the Fullerton Mutual Orange Association. Very naturally, Mr. Miles is a member and greatly interested in the Fullerton Board of Trade. Mr. Miles is also interested in developing a ranch in Tulare County, devoted to vineyard, as well as a lumber, hardware and building material business at Venice Hill, Tulare County.

The marriage of Mr. Miles and Miss Alice Richardson occurred at Trinidad, Colo., on June 14, 1892, and this union has been blessed with the birth of two children: C. Neal is a rancher in Tulare County; and Bessie is the wife of Foster E. Chambers of Orange. Mrs. Miles was born in Illinois. Neal Miles has proven, as a soldier who went to the defense of his country, a son such as any parent might be proud of. He enlisted in the United States Coast Artillery, and was made a sergeant of the first class. A Republican always desirous of doing his full civic duty, Mr. Miles is a Mason, a Modern Woodman, a member of the Woodmen of the World and a Yeoman. He is a director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fullerton, and is a member and financial supporter of the First Baptist Church of that place. Fond of hunting and fishing, he rejoices with thousands of others that California affords such sport in both of these fields.

J. M. WOODWORTH.—Orange County will never forget the important and necessary part played by the far-sighted, experienced and conservative bankers in her agricultural, commercial, philanthropic and even social development through which she has come to take a front place of honor and influence in the Californian conclave and prominent among the agencies which have made for the greatest progress in the Southland must be mentioned the First National Bank of Garden Grove, now one of the healthiest ten-year-olds in the state. Its success is undoubtedly due, in part, to the conviction of the wide-awake people in the community it tries to serve that it possesses every banking facility and meets every local requirement; while, on the other hand, its increased working capital, together with recent physical changes in the bank's interior, adding to the convenience and general satisfaction of the patrons, has widened its territory, added rapidly by new acquisitions to the number of its depositors, and enabled it to do business on a broader and more liberal, if at the same time thoroughly conservative basis. Much of these innovations and improvements and this additional growth is due to the personal attention to every detail, and the hard, conscientious work by J. M. Woodworth, the Iowa banker who settled here in 1918 and purchased a controlling interest, through which he was made president and came to assume the active management.

For twenty-five years or more Mr. Woodworth was interested in three or four banks in Iowa, and came from the well-known town of Grinnell thoroughly familiar with the conditions of investment he was to deal with here. He associated with him as officers Vice-President C. B. Scott, Jr., and Cashier F. A. Monroe, and made up a board of directors composed of himself, Mr. Scott, H. C. Head and W. S. Fawcett. The latter, now a large rancher in the Imperial Valley, was a boyhood friend of Mr. Woodworth, and, as a frequent caller at Garden Grove, keeps in intimate touch with the progress of local affairs and the management of the bank, although he also discharges the responsibility of a director of the First National Bank of El Centro as well as the Southern Trust Company of San Diego. It is no wonder that the First National Bank enjoys the entire confidence of the people of this section, for it has become a member of the great Federal Reserve System, and as such is sure to provide the best of banking conditions through good times and bad.

It was really early in 1909 that a few men—those men of both vision and faith who work miracles, expand communities and develop commonwealths—seeing the necessity for a financial institution, especially when Garden Grove was mostly a postoffice among merely barley patches, but patches and fields of the greatest promise, established the Bank of Garden Grove. That fall it was opened for business under a state charter, and, as the policy of the institution from the beginning was to work for the best interests of the district, the bank grew rapidly and strongly with the community and the town. In September, 1918, it was converted into "The First National Bank of Garden Grove," and since that date its growth has been especially gratifying. Indeed, at the last call from the Comptroller for a statement of its actual condition, it showed a working capital of $50,000, and total resources of over one-half million dollars. It has assisted Garden Grove to rise from a grain field of uncertain quantity to productive acres bringing cash returns of $1,000 each in a short space of ten years. There were actually shipped from Garden Grove station over 700 carloads, valued at over two millions of dollars, miscellaneous products grown in the immediate vicinity of Garden Grove for the year 1919, and Garden Grove, properly appreciative, has assisted to give the bank, by its generous, good-willed patronage, all the stability that could be desired. Thus not only have soil, water and climate lavished blessings to all who would partake, but the courage, ambition and knowledge of the settlers have been liberally rewarded, and all have gained immensely who had faith and vision to invest and work out results.

With a general bank equipment the equal of any country bank in the county, and a management and expert force ready and anxious to serve customers within and from without the community, the bank has a fireproof vault in which can be stored at small cost valuable papers and records, and a complete set of maps showing all platted lands and ownership in the community, which maps are always at the service of the public.

PAUL BENJAMIN ROY.—A dependable citizen of Garden Grove, a locality chosen by him for residence and work as the most attractive he ever found anywhere in his wide travels, is Paul Benjamin Roy, who has attained to his present position of affluence and influence after an interesting development in varied lines of endeavor. He was born in the city of Montreal, Canada, on July 4, 1866, the son of Benjamin Roy, a French-Canadian who was also a native of Montreal and became a steamboat man on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, where he piloted the important steamers of the mail line, and made railway time between Montreal and Hamilton. He was so expert that he could pilot the rapids of the Thousand Isles, the Long Sioux Rapids, the Cascades, the Shoat a Balom Rapids, as well as the rapids beneath the Victoria Bridge. He was married in Montreal to Miss Annie Sweeney, a native of England whose father and brother were marine engineers under the British government, and who grew up in Montreal. Eleven children were born to them, and three are now living. Sarah is the wife of John Olszewski, a hotel chef who resides in Los Angeles; Paul Benjamin is the subject of our review; and Adeline is the wife of William Roy—no relative of P. B. Roy—and lives at Montreal, where her husband is boss in a cotton mill. Benjamin Roy, at the age of thirty-seven, was one of twenty-two persons lost on Lake Ontario in November, 1875, when, at ten o'clock at night, his steamer caught fire, and crew and passengers were drowned. Mrs. Roy, the mother, lived with her children, Paul and Sarah, until she died in California at the age of seventy.

When thirteen years old, Paul Benjamin entered the service of the same line by which his father had been employed, when he was pilot for the Spartan and the Corinthian, working for two years as a mess-room boy. When he left the Richelieu line, he went on the propeller boat Prussia as head porter, and for several seasons remained with this merchant line which carried passengers between Montreal and Chicago. The second year he was transferred to the St. Catherine and was on that ill-fated vessel when, at three o'clock in the morning, it was struck amidships and sunk by an American vessel. The passengers and all hands save a fireman escaped, but the vessel went down within thirty minutes.

For eight years Mr. Roy followed steamboating, next going on a freight boat of the Ward line running out of Detroit, and between Duluth and Buffalo, on which line he remained for two seasons, acting as lookout man or second mate. The next season he followed Captain Will Compo on the Northwest, a vessel of the Great Northern Steamship Company and at that time the finest fresh water boat, plying between Duluth and Buffalo. In the meantime, too, he had ventured into the barber's business, and for a couple of years ran a barber shop in West Superior, Wis., so that when he came to California nearly a quarter of a century ago, he was so well equipped with experience that he soon became the leading tonsorial proprietor of Los Angeles. He owned the Metropolitan Barber Shop at 219 West Third Street, which had a full equipment for Turkish and other baths, then the largest and finest barber shop in the world. During his long and eventful career in steamboating, Mr. Roy met many famous men and women. Among them was the Prince of Wales, later King Edward of England, and he shook hands with the Princess of Wales, and chatted with her for several minutes.

Mr. Roy has owned and improved several ranches, among them one of 200 acres devoted to apples and alfalfa in Victorville, and from there he went to Perris, Riverside County, and engaged in raising alfalfa, purchasing a ranch of eighty acres. For a while he lived in San Diego County, where he was proprietor of the Kilkenny Hotel, at the same time that he developed a lemon grove of twenty acres four miles east of San Diego. When he sold his alfalfa ranch at Perris in 1919, he removed to Garden Grove, where he owns a ranch of twenty acres, largely a Valencia orange grove. Eighteen years ago he bought 100 acres of raw land at Anaheim, but disposed of it later at an advanced price. He set out walnut trees, and the grove is now known as the Cleveland ranch. He also built up and replanted the Big Four ranch at North Rialto in San Bernardino County, and this is still known as the "Roy" ranch.

When Mr. Roy married, in 1888, he took for his bride Miss Amelia Provost, a native of St. Paul, Minn., who is as enthusiastic concerning Garden Grove as he is himself. One daughter blessed their union, and she is now Mrs. W. L. Christian of Los Angeles. Mr. Roy is a naturalized American, and an active Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Roy have been extensive travelers, having been through Europe, Japan, Australia and Philippines.

Mr. Roy is a good deal of a sport, and has something to show for it. While a boatman, he became an expert swimmer and came to boast of the world's championship medal for long distance swimming. Through this prowess he really first came to California; for he intended to swim from Catalina to the mainland—a feat he never undertook, after all. He also drove the first automobile—a steam car which he himself owned—seen in the streets of Santa Ana, and made early record trips from San Diego to Los Angeles, and from Los Angeles to Santa Barbara. In the first case, on country roads he covered the ground in six hours and six minutes; while on the run to Santa Barbara he motored about four hours. He has put from $50,000 to $60,000 into his present estate at Garden Grove, and still plans other improvements. He is a member of numerous fraternal orders and clubs.

AMOS. B. EVERETT.—Numbered among the respected citizens of Buaro precinct is Amos B. Everett, a man who despite the hardships and tragedies encountered in his earlier life has maintained his poise, and now enjoys a tranquil life on a walnut grove in Buaro precinct. Eight acres of the twenty he owns is planted to twelve-year-old walnut trees, two acres to two-year-old budded walnut trees, eight acres to budded trees, and he has two acres for a family garden.

Mr. Everett was born in Trumbull County, Ohio, June 23, 1852, a son of Benjamin and Catherine (Lowery) Everett, natives of New York State and Ohio, respectively. The father was a farmer and went to Illinois when Amos B. was only two years old, settling at Knoxville, Knox County, where Amos was reared on his father's farm and assisted him with the farm work while two of his brothers served in the Union army during the Civil War. He began working on the farm when very young, drove a team and plowed when nine years old and had to stand on a box in order to harness the horses. When he was twenty-one years old he began to work for wages, and migrated from Illinois to Kansas, settling near Hutchinson where he took a tree claim and proved up on it, and lived in Kansas twenty-five years. From Kansas he went to Nebraska, where he was married to Emma Pearson, and there in Cherry County was in the stock business five years, when a disastrous prairie fire overtook his wife when she was out driving, and she lost her life. By a strange coincidence this was the only time she had ever left her little daughter at home alone. The child, Stella May, is now the wife of Fay Brown, a farmer of Partridge, Kans., and they are the parents of a daughter named Edith. The same prairie fire also destroyed about 100 head of cattle belonging to Mr. Everett. Alone and discouraged he decided to change his environment and went to Kansas, from whence he came to California in 1903. Three years before coming to California Mr. Everett was married a second time, his wife, who was Miss Flora Davis before her marriage, is a native of Ohio and was reared in Kansas. They are the parents of six children: Lester and Elmer work at Santa Ana; William, Ada, Olathe and Grace are at home.

Mr. Everett is recognized by all as a man of strict integrity, and his kindly and considerate nature has won for him many warm friends during the seventeen years of his residence in the Garden Grove district. In his political views he is a Republican.

DR. JOHN I. CLARK.—From the time of the founding of our great republic, and indeed long before in the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon people, the status of the physician has been an enviable one in the representative community, village, town or city, on which account the part played in the municipality of Santa Ana by such a progressive humanitarian and scientist as Dr. John I. Clark, the physician and surgeon, is all the more interesting. He was born at Craig, Nebr., on February 4, 1875, the son of William A. Clark, a farmer and stockman who married Miss Mary E. Kennedy, and when the time came that the North and the South faced each other in the awful Civil War, he served his country faithfully in the Federal Army. They were the parents of five children—three boys and two girls—among whom our subject was second in the order of birth. Both parents are now dead. Having attended the grammar schools at Craig, while he grew up on his father's farm, and been graduated from the high school there, John Clark matriculated at the Rush Medical College in Chicago, and graduated from that famous institution with the class of 1897, with degree of M.D. Then he became an interne at the Presbyterian Hospital in Chicago, where he began to acquire his first valuable practical experience.

Once equipped to follow his professional work, Dr. Clark practiced for a year at Craig, Nebr., and then continued his practice for four years at Idaho Springs, Colo. His fortunate geographical location brought him soon into contact with many from distant as well as near by points, and so his reputation rapidly developed. On coming to Santa Ana in May, 1904, Dr. Clark established himself with ease; and it was not long before he was a director in the Santa Ana Hospital. More and more, he enjoyed the entire confidence of his fellow-citizens; and for twelve years he was city health officer. In national politics a Republican, he has never failed to participate without partisanship in all civic discussions and endeavors for the public good.

At Craig, Nebr., on April 6, 1898, Dr. Clark was married to Miss Mollie D. Clark, an estimable lady of no relationship, the daughter of Dr. Samuel W. Clark of Iowa; and since then Mrs. Clark has participated in the deep interest of her husband in the development of the community in which they have lived, and in his outdoor life with golf and fishing. He belongs to the Masonic order being a Knight Templar and Shriner, his membership in the latter being in Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles. He is also a member of Santa Ana Lodge of Elks and of the Orange County Country Club.

As might be expected of one so favorably known as a highly-trained practitioner, Dr. Clark is a member of the American Medical Association, the State, Southern California and the County Medical societies; and his activity in these organizations constantly helps to maintain Orange County in pleasant association with the outside scientific world.

ANDREW MEYER.—The excellent cultivation, tillage and good management expended in the care of the property operated by Andrew Meyer, lying two miles northwest of Orange, bespeaks the thrift and good judgment of the owner. Mr. Meyer has four acres in Valencia oranges and six acres of walnuts, and takes a just pride in the neat appearance of his acreage. He was born in Clinton County, Ill., August 24, 1880, and when five years old, in 1885, accompanied his parents, August and Fredericka (Pfeiffer) Meyer to Neosho County, Kans., where the father became the owner of a 160-acre farm. The parents and their seven children are living, and Andrew is the youngest son and fifth child in order of birth in the parental family. He early became accustomed to ranch work, plowing when only ten years of age, and grew to young manhood on the home farm, assisting in the various duties that pertain to life on a farm. He was educated in the common schools of his home district, and in 1906 went to Idaho and Washington, returning after eight months to his Kansas home. The next year he removed to northwestern Kansas where he remained three and a half years.

J. I. Clark

He was associated with his brother George in this venture, and they purchased 320 acres of land, which they afterward traded for 480 acres. From 1906 to 1912 they ran from eighty to one hundred head of cattle and about the same number of swine on their property.

In 1913 Mr. Meyer went to Wichita Falls, Texas, where he worked at the carpenter's trade for one year. He then tried his fortune in central Kansas, continuing the same occupation, and afterwards went to northwestern Kansas and engaged in the real estate business for one and a half years. Then California's charms appealed to him and he decided to cast his lot in that state. He came to the Pacific Coast in 1915, and in November of that year established domestic ties by his marriage with Mrs. Emma Struck, born in Pennsylvania, daughter of Herman Heim of Orange and widow of the late Max Struck, who was well and favorably known to the community. As a child Mrs. Struck came to Kansas with her parents, and later the family removed to Orange, Cal. She is the sister of Albert and Carl O. Heim, whose sketches appear elsewhere in this work. At the age of twenty-two she married Max Struck, whose death occurred in 1908 as the result of an accident. Mr. Struck owned the ten acres that Mr. Meyer now operates and which continues to be their home. Mrs. Meyer is noted for her housewifely qualities and fortunate indeed is the passing stranger or the friend who is invited to share the hospitality of the genial host and hostess in their model and excellent home. Mr. Meyer enjoys to an exceptional degree the esteem and confidence of his associates, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church at Orange, and have many warm friends.

JOSEPH BRICKE.—The spirit that prompted our forefathers to leave their native land to carve out their fortunes in a new world has its counterpart in this generation in many who, animated by a desire to avail themselves of broader opportunities, have left the older civilization to seek the newer fields of untried possibilities. That this spirit, coupled with industry and perseverance, will almost invariably succeed is manifested in the life of Joseph Bricke, the citrus grower of Orange, who is the owner of two prosperous ranches.

Born in Bavaria, Germany, June 10, 1872, Joseph Bricke is the son of Joseph and Mary (Knoth) Bricke, the father being engaged in the undertaking business and having agricultural interests as well. Joseph remained at home until he was twenty-one years of age, when he left the old home for America, landing at Philadelphia on August 27, 1893. He soon located in the vicinity of Buffalo, N. Y., remaining there for thirteen years, engaged in farming.

In 1905, Mr. Bricke decided to seek his fortune in the milder climate of California and that this decision was a wise one is evidenced by the splendid success he has made as a rancher. For a time after arriving in Orange County Mr. Bricke worked out on the farms of others, gaining experience in the agricultural modes of this part of the country and accumulating capital to embark in the ranching business for himself. He is now the owner of two ten-acre citrus ranches, which he has planted and developed himself, and which he has brought up to a high state of productivity, so that both ranches now bring him a handsome income. His home ranch is situated two and a half miles northeast of Orange and here he has resided since 1908. His other place is located on Seventeenth Street, Santa Ana, and his time is busily occupied in looking after these properties.

Mr. Bricke was married January 5, 1911, to Miss Ethel House, who was born in Arizona, and they are the parents of one son, Donald Earl, born July 31, 1914. Mrs. Bricke is descended from two generations of California pioneers, both her father and grandfather having been among the early settlers of the state. Her parents are Edmond Shirley and Alice Henrietta (Grimes) House, who are both still living, the father at the age of eighty-one years, and since October, 1919, they have resided with their son, Edmond H. House, on a part of the Irvine ranch at the head of Peters Canyon, in Silverado precinct.

Edmond Shirley House was born in Stoddard County, Mo., in 1840, his parents being Henry and Kitty House. He was the youngest of a family of four girls and three boys and when a lad of ten he accompanied his parents to Texas, where he received his early education in the district schools there. He remained there until he was nineteen years old, when he made the overland journey to California, arriving at El Monte in the fall of 1859. The next spring he went to Salinas and went to stock raising there, very little grain farming being carried on at that time. The next twenty years he spent in stock raising, in which he made good success, meanwhile acquiring the Spanish language, which he found a decided asset in his transactions with the native settlers. In 1880 Mr. House removed to San Benito County, where he took up two government claims, raising stock on this land. After two years he went to San Luis Obispo County and bought forty acres which he devoted to dry farming. This did not prove entirely successful, however, so he came to Orange County in 1884, bought forty acres of peat land near Westminster and continued his agricultural operations. He was always a very successful farmer, and notwithstanding the low prices of farm products in those days he was able to amass considerable means.

In 1889 he moved to Arizona, spending one season there, and it was during this time that Mrs. Bricke was born. Later he went to Honolulu, and with his family spent two years in the Hawaiian Islands, and on his return to the United States settled at Redlands, where he resided until the fall of 1919, when he went to live with his son on the Irvine ranch.

Mr. House was united in marriage with Miss Alice Henrietta Grimes in 1869 at Salinas, Cal., her parents being California pioneers. Of their six children, four are living: Margaret is the wife of Charles Wheaton, a rancher at Redlands; Edmond H. married Bessie Whisler and resides on the Irvine ranch; Ethel is the wife of Joseph Bricke, of this review; John Earl is a ranch foreman at El Toro. An interesting talker, Mr. House has indeed lived a useful and successful life, full of varied experiences, and he and his good wife, after fifty-one years of companionship, are still in the enjoyment of good health and the devoted friendship of a large circle of friends.

JOHN P. HOEPTNER.—A splendid example of what the larger, freer opportunities of America may afford is furnished by the now well-to-do family of John P. Hoeptner, who rose from the laboring classes of Prussia, came to the United States, and was able, through hard work and frugality, to establish a home and bring up a large family in the most intelligent and loyal manner. He was born in Prussia on May 12, 1865, and when twenty-seven was married to Miss Ida Minach. Three years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Hoeptner came from Germany to California with their two children, and at once located in Los Angeles County, and there he lost no time in buying land and establishing a more permanent home. He purchased twenty acres of the Dominguez Ranch near Long Beach, in that county, and this was the place where the worthy couple reared their children, and where they still maintain their home. He has a fine, up-to-date residence, which he himself ordered built.

In 1915, Mr. Hoeptner bought another ranch of forty acres at Talbert, in Orange County, which he still owns and operates, and which was known as the John McDowell ranch. He raises beets and beans, and has had very good crops. He is far-seeing in his operations, untiring in his attention to the work of the hour, and so carries out a program almost sure of success.

Eight children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hoeptner, bringing out the best traits of the parents, and evidencing the best of devotion from sons and daughters. Bertha is in the government service as a trained nurse at the March Field Aviation Camp at Riverside; Max, a rancher, farms eighty-five acres of rented land at Talbert, and lives on the forty-acre ranch of his father; Herbert served in the California National Guard and served on the Mexican Border, receiving a medal for bravery. When America entered the World War he enlisted, and served until the armistice, when he was honorably discharged with the rank of lieutenant. He married Miss Clara Ball of National City, and is now with the Santa Fe Railroad at Santa Barbara. Hazel, who graduated from the McKay Business College at Los Angeles, is a stenographer in that city; Irene had the same training and is also similarly employed. Frederick is another graduate from this excellent institution, and is a bookkeeper for the McCormick Lumber Company at San Pedro; Lincoln is at home with his father, and Louise is in the Compton High School.

A Republican in national politics, Mr. Hoeptner and his family are preeminently Americans, and not only aided in the Red Cross work to the extent of their ability, but also bought Liberty Bonds to their full capacity.

JEROME T. LAMB.—One of the most prosperous and successful walnut growers of Orange County but now living retired at Huntington Beach, Jerome T. Lamb is related to two distinguished American families, the Grant and Fillmore families. Mr. Lamb is a native of Wisconsin, born at Waukesha, December 17, 1854, a son of James and Mary J. (Fillmore) Lamb, both natives of the state of New York. The father of Mrs. Lamb, Daniel Fillmore, was a cousin of President Millard Fillmore, while her mother was Thankful Ann Grant, a cousin of President U. S. Grant.

When James Lamb was a lad of fourteen years, he ran away from home and became a sailor on a whaling vessel, following the adventurous life of a sailor for eleven years, afterward returning to Wisconsin where he married and engaged in farming. During the year 1848, he made the trip around Cape Horn, and up to California, returning to Wisconsin in 1852. In 1857, with his family, he joined an overland train, consisting of eighty covered wagons, bound for Oregon. The emigrant train started on its long and perilous journey the year of the Mountain Meadow massacre and in crossing the Indian-infested plains they were also attacked and lost all their cows and oxen. The party reached Utah through Echo Canyon, and Mr. Lamb was obliged to remain in the canyon for six years, where he was engaged in cutting timber for saw mills. The original idea of going to Oregon was abandoned and instead Mr. Lamb and his family took the southern route, and in course of time reached San Bernardino, Cal., in 1865.

In 1871 the family moved to Los Angeles County and located on the Brea ranch, farming the land where the oil wells were afterwards found. James Lamb died in 1908 in San Diego County at the advanced age of eighty-one years; his wife returned to Los Angeles County, where she passed away in 1910 at the age of seventy-one. They were the parents of nine children, eight of whom reached maturity.

Jerome T. Lamb was the eldest child and was but three years of age when the family started on their long overland journey across the plains. He grew up in San Bernardino and Los Angeles counties, following farming in the latter county. In 1912 he located in Orange County, settling in Buaro precinct where he purchased twenty acres of land, fourteen of which he planted to walnuts and one and a fourth acres to oranges. He installed a pumping plant and has developed his place into one of the most productive walnut groves in the district.

On November 13, 1879, Jerome T. Lamb was united in marriage with Miss Clara E. Short, daughter of John E. and Mary Elizabeth (Hardy) Short, natives of Illinois, the ceremony being solemnized at Pomona. Mrs. Lamb was left an orphan at the age of twelve years, after which she made her home with an uncle, Thomas Short, a farmer at Percy, Ill. When nineteen years old she came with a married sister to Los Angeles and was married to Mr. Lamb the following year. Of this happy union two children were born: Mary Adella is the wife of Earl W. Jonas, bridge inspector for the Salt Lake Railway Company, and they have four children—Helen I., Thelma M., Earl W. and Margaret; Walter T. Lamb, the second child, is a civil engineer at Los Angeles and was born at Pasadena, August 22, 1883. He is in the engineering department of the Pacific Electric Railway and lives in Los Angeles. He was married August 27, 1912, to Miss Agnes Nast of Los Angeles and they are the parents of three children—Audrey E., Mildred and Dorothy. Jerome T. Lamb is a member of Palms Lodge No. 422, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, while with his wife he is a member of Acacia Rebekah Lodge No. 314, Huntington Beach.

WENDELL P. READ.—Well adapted for the prominent and important position he holds as principal of the El Modena grammar school, Wendell P. Read, is recognized by all as a competent, successful and popular teacher. Mr. Read was born in a log cabin on a Kansas homestead at Council Grove, Kans., October 8, 1876, and is the son of Dwight R. Read, a native of Oswego, New York, and an old time abolitionist who enlisted in Company H of the One Hundredth New York Volunteer Infantry, serving valiantly throughout the entire Civil War. After the close of the war he was married at Atchison, Kans., to Miss Mary Elizabeth Ingersoll, who was born in Indiana and reared in Iowa, and was a distant relative of the late Colonel Ingersoll—about a fourth cousin. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Read went to Morris County, Kans., and homesteaded a piece of property, and upon this homestead their three children were born: Dwight, who is now the editor of the "Milton Gazette," at Milton, Fla.; Lilly, who is the wife of Harvey Short, a business man of Wyoming; and Wendell Phillips. The parents continued to farm until the father's health failed. They then retired to Fredonia, Kans., where he passed to the Great Beyond, in 1896, aged seventy-three. The mother came to California in January, 1919, and died at Mr. Read's home at El Modena, at the age of eighty-four.

Wendell P. grew up on the Kansas farm, attended the district schools of the locality in winter and spent his summers doing farm work. At seventeen he passed a teacher's examination and taught school in Wilson County, Kans. He afterward became a student at the Kansas State Normal at Emporia, where he pursued the regular three years' pedagogical course. He finished the course in 1902, and was listed with the 1903 class. His first experience in school work after graduating was as the principal of the Williamsburg grammar school, Fremont County, Colo., in 1902-3.

Mr. Read's marriage, which occurred at Fredonia, Kans., June 8, 1902, united him with Miss Pearl Souders, a native of Ohio. Her parents John and Amelia (Bonham) Souders, are now living retired at Hollywood, Cal. Mrs. Read also graduated from the Kansas State Normal. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Read, namely, Ruth, Paul I. and Lois A. Mr. Read farmed in Kansas until 1911, then went to Florida and purchased a forty-five-acre plantation. He again enlisted as a teacher and organized and became the principal of the Parish, Fla., high school. Attacked with the malady so common to the southern states, malaria, he returned to Kansas and became superintendent of the city schools at Cunningham, Kans., serving one year, 1913-14. In the spring of 1914 he came to Los Angeles and entered the summer school of the University of Southern California, completing the course in the summer of 1916 with the degree of A.M. In 1914 he came to El Modena and took charge of the El Modena grammar school, an up-to-date school of eight grades, which gives manual training to the boys and girls, has a string orchestra, etc. Mr. Read is the owner of a ranch at El Modena. He bought the eight acres with the comfortable, modern bungalow upon it, January, 1919, and recently added another two acres to his possession, giving him a fine ten-acre ranch. He also owns a fifty-seven-acre ranch at San Jacinto. He finds recreation from the arduous mental labor as a teacher in taking care of the El Modena ranch, which is devoted to the culture of citrus fruit, working evenings and Saturdays. Mr. Read enters heartily into community affairs and was elected president of the Farm Center at El Modena, January, 1920. A firm advocate of national prohibition, he is a consistent Christian, he and his wife being members of the Friends Church at El Modena. A man of fine character, a clear thinker, broad-minded and original, his conversation is spiced with dry wit and humor and he has a keen desire for the community's betterment, morally, commercially and educationally.

SAMUEL A. MARSDEN, M.D.—A physician of pleasing personality who is meeting with merited success, is Dr. Samuel A. Marsden, popular with his patients and fellow-citizens. He was born at Centerville, Iowa, March 17, 1885, where he spent the first twelve years of his life, after which he came to Oregon with his parents in 1897, and made his home at Portland. On completing the courses at the Marshfield high school, he entered Portland Academy, from which in due time he was graduated with honors; and then he became a clerk in a drug store, and for some years continued active in the drug business at Portland and at Marshfield, Ore. From a boy, however, he had had the desire to study medicine and surgery, and finally the way was opened to his reaching that goal. Having come south to Orange, he entered the premedical department of the University of Southern California, and there continued the study of medicine until his graduation, in 1917, with the degree of M.D. He then put in eighteen months as interne at the Los Angeles County Hospital.

A month later, Dr. Marsden volunteered his services to the United States Government, and was commissioned a first lieutenant in the U. S. Medical Corps. He was sent to the training camp for medical officers at Fort Riley, Kans., and at the end of sixty days was transferred to Camp Kearny, where he was stationed until the armistice. On December 10, 1918, he was honorably discharged, and three days later began his medical practice in Orange, associating himself as a partner with Dr. Domann, the firm becoming Domann and Marsden. He was made deputy county physician, and has since been unusually active in responding to the many demands for his services. He holds a two-hour free clinic at the Social Science League in Santa Ana each week, on Tuesdays, and there performs a philanthropic service that is of growing importance. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the State Medical Society, Southern California Medical Society, and the Orange County Medical Association and the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States.

Dr. Marsden was made a Mason at Blanco Lodge No. 48, A. F. & A. M., at Marshfield, Ore., and belongs to Arago Chapter No. 22, R. A. M., at Marshfield. He is also affiliated with the San Diego Consistory of the Scottish Rite Masons, Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles, and he is a member of the Doric Chapter No. 53, O. E. S., at Marshfield, Ore., where he is a past patron. In college, he belonged to the Phi Rho Sigma, and is a member of the local chapter of the American Legion.

REO C. ADAMS.—Among the old colonial families of America the name of Adams stands preeminent for physical and mental strength, virility, versatility and many other excellent qualities that have aided in large measure to develop our commonwealth. A worthy exponent of his branch of this most estimable family, is Reo C. Adams, prominent citrus rancher of Alameda Street, at El Modena, Cal., who was born of good old New England Adams' stock at Dublin, N. H., December 13, 1879. His parents, John L. and Abbie J. (Wheeler) Adams, are natives of New Hampshire, where the father owned a farm. They are now living at Pomona, Cal., and the father owns a walnut ranch. Reo C. is the second child in a family of three children: Willis J., a rancher, died in California in 1919; George A. resides at Monrovia, and is in the employ of the Edison Electric Company.

Reo C. came to California, a lad about ten years of age, with his parents, who first located at Los Angeles, where they lived two and a half years. They afterwards spent five years at Duarte, then returned to Los Angeles for five months before they settled in Bolsa precinct, Orange County, in 1896. Reo attended the public schools of Duarte, and before his marriage worked for Raitt's Banner Dairy at Santa Ana for two years. He then engaged with the Los Angeles Street Railway as motorman at Los Angeles, remaining with the company two years. His marriage occurred June 25, 1902, and united him with Miss Etta Clark, daughter of the late William C. Clark of Santa Ana. Mrs. Adams was born in Nebraska and was fifteen years old when she accompanied her parents to California. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Adams, May Etta and Eva Minnie, by name.

S.A. Marsden, M.D.

Mr. Adams' five-acre ranch is located on Alameda Street. He has lived on and operated the place for the past thirteen years, purchasing it about five years ago. He has lived in California for thirty years, and twenty-three years of that time his home has been in Orange County. His enthusiastic and optimistic nature makes many friends and his efficiency and energy as a worker have brought excellent results in the success he has attained financially. Fraternally he affiliates with the Modern Woodmen of America, and in his political convictions he is a consistent Republican. He and his wife are members of the First Methodist Church at Santa Ana.

U. G. LITTELL, D. O.—Prominent among the Orange County physicians of note who have done much to advance not only medical science but the proper appreciation of the possibilities of osteopathy must be mentioned Dr. U. G. Littell, whose offices at 317-18 W. H. Spurgeon Building, Santa Ana, have become a mecca for many suffering from various human ills. He was born at Odon, Daviess County, Ind., on June 28, 1864, the son of William N. Littell, a minister in the Church of Christ, who had married in Indiana Miss Mary E. Johnson, like himself a native of the Hoosier State, and a charming, good woman, whose life blessed all who came in contact with her.

The subject of our sketch lived at home until he was twenty-one, attending both the schools of his district and the Normal School at Owensburg; and having been graduated by the latter institution of note, he received a teacher's certificate and taught for a year, in Indiana. He then removed to Nebraska and there taught school for six years, after which he continued his teaching for a year in Iowa. If he had made no other progress than to acquire his first-hand knowledge of human nature thus obtained, he would have accomplished much.

In 1891 he accomplished the equally great step of migrating to California and getting acquainted with the great Pacific commonwealth at one of its most important periods of development, settling in what is now the Winterburg Precinct, Orange County. Here he farmed, and for a while also worked at the carpenter's trade. In Orange County, too, on August 25, 1893, Mr. Littell married Miss Mary E. Blaylock, a sister of W. W. Blaylock of the Ocean View school district, and thus happily set up his domestic establishment.

Public spirited to an admirable degree, Mr. Littell in 1898 became a candidate for the office of county auditor; but, after a live campaign in which he made an excellent run, he was defeated by Captain Hall, who obtained a small majority of the votes.

In 1903 Mr. Littell matriculated at the Pacific College of Osteopathy in South Pasadena, from which he graduated with honors in June, 1906, in Los Angeles. After graduation, he settled at Santa Ana where he has since practiced with great success. Their residence at 635 Parton Street is the center of a generous hospitality. Besides belonging to the National, State and County Osteopathic associations, Dr. Littell is a member of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce. Both Dr. and Mrs. Littell belong to the Church of Christ at the corner of Broadway and Walnut streets, and the Doctor is also a Modern Woodman of America. Dr. Littell is always a good "booster," believing in Santa Ana and Orange County, first, last and all the time.

CHAS. E. SMILEY.—The beautiful residence and home of Chas. E. Smiley, located on Collins Avenue near Tustin Street, attracts the attention of all who pass on the thoroughfare. The property is under a high state of cultivation and five of the ten acres comprised in the place are planted to Valencia oranges, the remainder being planted to lemons. Mr. Smiley was born near Ithaca, Tompkins County, N. Y., on May 16, 1862, and grew up on the home farm there. His father, Artemas L., and mother, Emily (George) Smiley, were members of old New York State families and were the parents of five children, two girls and three boys, only two of whom survive—Mr. Smiley and his sister, Mary, the wife of George W. Sutfin, who resides at Dryden, N. Y.; aged seventy-three. The other brothers and sister, who were all married, are survived by children. The celebrated Dr. N. K. Foster of Oakland, is the surviving husband of Mr. Smiley's sister, Jennie, who died in 1893. Dr. Foster served two terms in the California legislature and for ten years was secretary of the state board of health. He has one child, a son, Dr. H. E. Foster, a young and progressive physician of Oakland.

Chas. E. Smiley received a good education in the public schools of the Empire State and at the age of twenty left home to join his two brothers, Robert A. and John G., who were extensive sheep growers at Rawlins, Wyo., where he arrived in 1882. His brothers owned 15,000 head of sheep and Chas. E. worked for them about three years, afterwards engaging in the cattle business for himself in 1885. His home was in Rawlins, Wyo., but he made his headquarters in the foothills of Elk Mountain, near Fort Steele, Wyo., and his brand was Y 3. He ran from 400 to 500 head of cattle on the range for several years and in 1892 disposed of his ranch and engaged in wool growing. Purchasing a band of sheep he ranged them on the desert and in the mountains increasing his numbers until he had 9,000 head. He afterward drove his sheep to Bellefourche, S. D., where he disposed of them in the fall of 1905 and in the fall of 1906 he came to Southern California. To him the change from the plains of Wyoming to the citrus section of Southern California was rather extreme in one particular, to say the least. In Wyoming he had left plenty of land that could be purchased at fifty cents an acre and here he found orange and lemon orchards selling from $2,000 to $3,000 an acre and this made him desirous, first, to get an insight, not only in the care of the orchard, but income derived from same, so he put in the first few months working on the large Leffingwell ranch and there acquired considerable knowledge of citrus growing as well as the method of marketing the crops.

In the spring of 1907 he purchased an orange grove at Covina, and selling it in 1911 he purchased his present ten-acre orange orchard on Collins Avenue, Orange, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation and bearing. He is a member of the Villa Park Orchard Association and the Central Lemon Association of Villa Park. In Wyoming he was prominent in politics and in 1902 he was elected a member of the state legislature of Wyoming on the Republican ticket serving during the session of 1903; he took an active part in the session and secured the passage of several bills in the interest of stockmen and other needed legislation.

His marriage occurred at Fort Steele, Wyo., in 1898, and united him with Miss Mary Nelson, a native of England, who was reared in Ontario from the age of six years until she attained the age of sixteen, when she came to Wyoming with her sister. In his fraternal relations he is a life member of Rawlins Lodge No. 609 of the Elks. Mrs. Smiley is a member of the First Presbyterian Church at Orange, which he also attends and supports.

CARL E. DURNBAUGH.—A self-made man who has become a prosperous dairyman is Carl E. Durnbaugh, who lives at the corner of Yorba and Chapman Streets, in Orange. He was born near Seward, Nebr., on March 7, 1893, the son of George E. and Laura Durnbaugh, prosperous farm folks. Mrs. Durnbaugh died in 1896, and then her husband sold his Nebraska farm and purchased several thousand acres in Osborne County, Kans., on which he raised stock, wheat, corn, cattle and hogs. He aimed to keep seven or eight carloads of both cattle and hogs if the season was good, and less if the year was dry.

In 1900, however, George Durnbaugh sold out and came to Orange County, Cal., and settled at the corner of Tustin and Collins avenues, in Orange, where he purchased fifteen acres, set out to oranges and apricots. After ten years, he sold this land and bought property in the city of Orange. Tiring of this, after three years, he disposed of his Orange holding and removed to Madera, where he bought a grocery business. After another three years, Mr. Durnbaugh moved to Inglewood, Los Angeles County, where he at present lives, hale and hearty at the age of sixty-five.

Carl Durnbaugh lived at home until he was married, in Orange, to Miss Veva H. Pierce, a Michigan girl born near Langsburg, the daughter of Frank J. and Myrtle R. Pierce, old settlers of the state. She came to California with her parents in 1906, but after a year here moved back to Michigan for a couple of years. The never-failing spell of California brought her family again to the Golden West, and they made their home in Orange; and here, on March 7, 1919, her father died.

Immediately after marrying, Mr. Durnbaugh engaged in teaming, continuing in that field for a couple of years. In the fall of 1913, he started a dairy on Cambridge Street, and for three years followed that industry. When he sold out, he bought fifty acres of alfalfa land in Perris Valley, Cal., where he raised hogs, cattle, turkeys and chickens. After a short time, he sold that and purchased a lemon grove of twelve acres in East Villa Park. He lived there until the latter part of 1917, when he disposed of the lemon grove and established his dairy at the corner of Yorba Street and Chapman Avenue. He has twenty-one head of milch cattle, mostly Jerseys, scattered over the three acres; he has remodeled his house, and built a barn and a milk house. He sells his dairy product at retail, from house to house; he intends soon to plant Valencia oranges on his place.

Mr. and Mrs. Durnbaugh are the proud parents of a bouncing boy, Oscar Carl, a year old. They belong to the First Methodist Church, have worked for the war loans, and maintain their interest in community welfare, and independence in politics.

Theo. C. Stolt

Helena M. Stolt

THEODORE E. STOLT.—A patriotic American gentleman who has "made good" with little or no external assistance is Theodore E. Stolt, of Anaheim, who was born near New London, Wis., on September 2, 1872, the son of William F. and Bertha Stolt, both natives of Germany, from which country they emigrated as children to the United States, after which they met and married here. Five children were granted them, although only four are still living; and of these, our subject and Edward E. are the only ones of the family now in California.

While Theodore was a boy, his parents removed to Westpoint, Cuming County, Nebr., and there he was reared and educated, remaining in that state until he was twenty-one. He had a varied experience as a manufacturer and a dealer in brick and paper, and then he took up photography, continuing in that field for six years. After a while he went back to Wisconsin; but not finding there, after all, just what he wanted as a life environment, he determined to come west, to the "jumping off" place.

In February, 1910, Mr. Stolt came to California, and in Orange County he secured a pasture range which he has so improved, through the fruits of his past experience and hard, unremitting labor, that it is now a feast to the eye, and frequently visited by those who travel miles to see a model ranch. He now owns forty acres, twenty-six of which are devoted to oranges, while seven acres are given to lemons, his trees being nine years old, and they are situated conveniently and advantageously on the county highway three miles west of Anaheim. He did own sixty acres, but sold twenty and these acres he partly improved. Mr. Stolt devotes his best energies and most careful thought to applying the latest word of science in the operation of this ranch by the most approved methods and with the most up-to-date appliances; and it is natural that he should be a member of the Orange and Lemon Growers Association at Anaheim. In politics he is a Republican.

In 1910, the same year in which he showed his wise discrimination by the purchase of his land, Mr. Stolt took another step most wisely, and was united in matrimony to Miss Helen M. Hein, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hein, a native of Nebraska, where she was as much of a favorite as she has been in a wide circle since she came to Anaheim. They have a comfortable, cheery home, and dispense a modest, but satisfying hospitality; just such a home as makes, for example, for the wealth, endurance and lasting happiness of a commonwealth. Anaheim is pleased that Mr. Stolt chose to pitch his tent under such favoring conditions; and Mr. Stolt—well, ask him if he ever regretted coming to Orange County.

J. F. KAUFMAN.—An expert mechanic who by personal attention to the work in his machine shop and the installation of thoroughly up-to-date machinery, has fast built up a very profitable patronage, is J. F. Kaufman, the proprietor of the Eureka Garage Repair Shop. He was born on a farm near Ithaca, Mich., on May 26, 1892, the son of Franklin D. and Maria E. Kaufman, and received his schooling in Stanton and Belding, in that state. His father was a Free Methodist minister, and like his colleagues, moved about the country a good deal with his family.

Our subject worked in the Oldsmobile automobile factory for five years, becoming chief inspector of the outside department, which then had charge of smoothing up the gears and other mechanism of all the cars before they were placed on the market; and during the three years that he was associated with the Oldsmobile production, he amply demonstrated his ability and contributed toward making that car one of the most dependable on the market. Then he moved back to Belding and in 1913 went into business for himself. He maintained a garage and repair shop, and when he sold out at the end of the year, he did so planning to come out to California. He was advised, however, that conditions here were none too favorable at that time, and so he moved to Lansing, where he worked in the Reo factory, giving two active years to their service department.

At last, in the fall of 1916, Mr. Kaufman came out to California, landing here on the last day of October, when he started working for the Libby Motor Company; with which concern he continued until the following January. Then he entered the employ of Layton Bros., in the same building he himself now occupies. On October 15, 1918, he bought out Layton and formed a partnership with L. J. Freneau. The next summer, on August 1, he purchased the interest of the partner and became sole proprietor.

Now Mr. Kaufman's business, which has kept pace with the growth of the auto industry of the town and vicinity, embraces the reboring of cylinders and the fitting of pistons; general machine work, with the latest appliances, and all kinds of miscellaneous repairs on all kinds of machines. This requires the services of no less than five expert mechanics, for among other specialties, the Kaufman garage maintains a service station for the Maxwell Motor Car.

Mr. Kaufman's father died in Michigan on February 6, 1905, and six years later the mother of our subject, together with a daughter, came to Santa Ana, where they now live. This sister, Miss Stella Kaufman, has been for years engaged in school work, of late instructing in the Spurgeon school. On May 26, 1910, Mr. Kaufman was married to Miss Anna Kamans, a native of Grand Rapids, Mich., and the daughter of Anthony Kamans and his wife, Catherine. She was educated in the fine public schools of Grand Rapids, while she enjoyed the home life of her parents, comfortable farmer-folk who had come to Grand Rapids to retire. One child, Richard L., has blessed this union. The family reside at 814 East Sixth Street, in a dwelling purchased by Mr. Kaufman as his future home, and attend the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Kaufman is a Mason, and also an independent Republican, refusing to be trammelled by partisanship if the candidate or the measure is unfit or unsatisfactory.

FENN B. FIELD AND MRS. LOUISE W. FIELD.—An exceptionally apt young rancher who has demonstrated again and again a thorough knowledge of the details of the citrus industry, is Fenn B. Field, who was born at Sioux Falls, S. D., on July 23, 1885. His father was the late Samuel I., and his mother, Louise W. Field. She was born at Taylor, Cortland County, N. Y., on July 14, 1843, the daughter of Augustus Wire, of Goshen, Conn., who had married Louise Neal, of Litchfield, the same state. Thomas Wire, the great-grandfather, fought seven years in the Revolutionary War. Augustus Wire was a prosperous farmer, both raising the necessities of life and weaving cloth for clothing, thereby maintaining himself independently. Mrs. Field attended the district school, and afterward the academy at Cincinnati, N. Y., and at the age of twenty-five removed to Winslow, Ill., where she lived with her two brothers, Ithamar and Augustus. Next to the youngest in a family of eight, she is the only survivor.

For three years, Miss Wire lived in Illinois, and then she went back to Taylor, N. Y., where on December 1, 1868, she was married to Samuel I. Field. The date of his birth was January 13, 1831, and he first saw the light in Tompkins County, N. Y. His father was Augustus, and his mother Mary Field, and they were both natives of Massachusetts. Samuel Field was brought up on the home farm, and was educated at the district school. He was early attracted to Iowa, and for a while he farmed near Waterloo. He soon moved on to Colorado, where he mined for gold and was a hotel-keeper at Fall River, Colo., but in 1868 he returned to New York for his bride. Immediately after that, he went to Green River, Wyo., where Mrs. Field was one of the only three women there at that time, when the country was in the making. He saw, in fact, the development of Wyoming, for in 1869 the Union Pacific Railroad from Green River to Ogden was united at the latter place with the Central Pacific.

At Green River, Mr. Field secured a patent on 160 acres, the land on which now stands the switch yards of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. Field was a merchant at Green River, and also the proprietor of the restaurant serving the passengers from the East each morning, and from the West each evening. When the first original eating-house burned down in 1873, Mr. Field rebuilt on a larger scale, and was proprietor of the new restaurant for three years. He also built the first district school house at Green River at his own expense. It was from Mr. Field's place that the distinguished Major John Wesley Powell started on his explorations for the Smithsonian Institute down the Green River and Grand Canyon of the Colorado River. In 1918, Mrs. Field returned to Green River and was honored by being invited to christen the monument erected in memory of Major Powell. Water, and not champagne was used in the ceremony, and the crystal liquid was brought up 4,500 feet from springs below by devoted Indians.

After nine years in Green River, during which time Mr. Field was the leading merchant there, he sold out his business and moved to Kansas where he lived for six years. He then moved to Sioux Falls, where he spent another six years in that South Dakota town. In 1890, Mr. Field, longing for the rich lands of California, came out to McPherson where, at that time, the main industry was the culture of raisins. The grapevines gradually died from blight, and orange trees took the place of the vines. Ever since then, Mrs. Field has lived at McPherson.

Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Field, seven of whom are still living: Samuel W. resides at Kimberly, Minn.; David Dudley lives on a ranch on Seventeenth Street, in Orange; Louisa has become Mrs. B. F. Merrill, of Nuevo, Riverside County; Gary M. is a citrus rancher of Olive; Guy I. ranches at McPherson; Foss is on a dairy and vineyard at Hanford; and Fenn B. is foreman of the Guthrie ranch on Le Veta Avenue, Orange. The deceased children are: Huldah, who died at Green River, when she was a year old, and Mary V. who attained the age of nineteen.

Fenn B. Field came to McPherson with his parents in 1889, and attended the Santiago grammar school. He was also a member of the first class to graduate from the new Orange Union high school in 1906. During 1907 and 1908, he attended Pomona College, where he took the general course; but in 1909 he went to Mexico with his brother Foss, and there leased a mine, spending a year in mining for gold and silver.

George McGuire
Chassie McGuire.

GEORGE McGUIRE.—To develop twenty acres of raw land into a highly developed orange orchard is an achievement anyone might be proud to claim. This may be said of George McGuire, the owner of one of the best developed groves, for its size and age, on the County Highway, being about three miles west of Anaheim.

George McGuire was born in Gallatin, Mo., November 23, 1868, the son of Thomas and Frances (Lutz) McGuire, natives of Ireland and Missouri, respectively. Five children were born to them, four residing in California, two of them in Orange County. Thomas McGuire was brought to the United States by his parents when he was a lad of nine and he grew up in this country and was one of its most loyal citizens while he lived. He first came to California in the early '60s, via Cape Horn, to join an older brother who had already located in this state. Like the greater majority of immigrants he mined for a time, but did not find the fortune he expected and later he joined a train bound for the East, the party consisting of his older brother, a sister and her husband and his mother. When crossing through Nebraska, they were attacked by Indians, who ran off all their stock, leaving them but two scrub teams with which they made their way eastward, the men having to walk the entire distance. Some time after his marriage, when George was ten years of age, the family moved to Washington County, Kans., where the father farmed. The wife and mother died in Missouri in 1878, and Mr. McGuire married again, choosing for his wife a sister of his first wife, and by her a daughter was born, who is now living in California. This wife died soon after and he was married a third time.

The McGuire family subsequently moved to Western Texas and here the father and his four sons engaged in stock raising and farming in a partnership arrangement. The father came to California in 1895, leaving his sons to carry on the ranching operations in Texas, but he made a trip back there and soon sold out to them and, returning to California, made his permanent home in Orange County, where he owned twenty acres of land three miles west of Anaheim. He died in Los Angeles in 1912, mourned by a wide circle of devoted friends.

George McGuire made a visit to see his father in Orange County in 1905, and so well impressed was he with the country that he decided to locate here and he returned to Texas and by 1909, after having lived twenty years in Texas, disposed of his interests there and located in Orange County on the twenty-acre ranch he now owns and which he developed from a barley field into one of the finest orange groves in this section of the county. He grew the nursery stock and set out the trees, leveled the land and made it possible to irrigate the entire tract. While his orchard was developing he raised beans and other products between the rows until now he can depend upon a steady income from his fine trees. What he now owns has been the result of hard work, industrious efforts and good management. In all his operations he has had the cooperation of his devoted wife, who shares with him the esteem of a wide circle of friends.

In 1896 Mr. McGuire was married to Miss Chassie Bowser, a native of Brown County, Texas, the daughter of Abraham and Mary (Kemp) Bowser, the ceremony occurring in Brownwood, Texas. Five children have been born to them: George D., deceased; Mary Frances, Mabel, Thomas and James A. Mr. McGuire has shown his interest in educational matters by serving as a school trustee in his district, and has given much satisfaction in the discharge of his duties. He and his wife are members of the Christian Church of Anaheim, Mr. McGuire being a deacon of the church and prominent in its activities.

WILLARD C. DuBOIS, M. D.—Since locating in Santa Ana, his boyhood home, in 1914, Dr. Willard C. DuBois has attained a high position as a successful practitioner. The son of a prominent Orange County family, Willard C. DuBois was born at Grant City, Mo., August 25, 1882. His parents are Valentine and Sarah (Alexander) DuBois, both natives of Indiana. The father spent his early days on a farm in that state, acquiring a thorough knowledge of farming while yet in his youth, so that he was able to make his own way in the world when many other lads of his age were still at their studies. Migrating to Missouri, he farmed there for four years, going later to the Northwest, where he was employed near Tacoma, Wash., for about four years. Coming down to California, he settled near San Jose, and for five years devoted his time to farming there, until 1895, when he located at Santa Ana, and here he has since made his home. During the intervening years Mr. DuBois acquired several tracts located in the vicinity of Santa Ana, accumulating a competence solely by his good judgment and tireless energy. Rated among the prosperous citizens of Orange County, he and his wife are now living retired at their Santa Ana home.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Valentine DuBois: Gertrude is now the wife of Walter D. Lamb, the well-known rancher of Talbert; Dr. Willard C. DuBois of this sketch; and Cecil DuBois, now deceased. A resident of Santa Ana since his tenth year, Dr. DuBois attended the public and high schools of Santa Ana, and then entered Louisville University at Louisville, Ky., where he spent three years. Entering the University of Denver at Denver, Colo., he completed his medical course there, graduating in 1910. Receiving an appointment as interne at St. Luke's Hospital at Denver, Dr. DuBois spent a year and a half there, profiting greatly by the valuable experience gained in that famed institution, which ranks high among the hospitals of the West. Subsequently he spent some time with a mining company in Arizona.

Locating in Santa Ana in 1914, Dr. DuBois at once entered into the active practice of medicine and surgery and his genuine talent for materia medica, combined with his thorough preparation for his life-work under skilled instructors, have given him a place of high standing in the community. Despite his busy professional life, Dr. DuBois is exceedingly public spirited and ready to give of his time and interest to all movements for the betterment of the town and county, furthering this by membership in the Chamber of Commerce. A firm believer in the principles of the Republican party, Dr. DuBois gives his political influence to that organization. Fraternally he is a member of the Santa Ana Lodge of Elks and during the war served on the examining board and is a member of the Reserve Medical Corps.

ROY HUNTER MITCHELL.—Among the young men who are contributing to the growth and development of Brea is Roy Hunter Mitchell, who is with the Standard Oil Company. A native of New York, Mr. Mitchell was born at Rock City, in that state, on March 28, 1882. His parents were William and Mary (Leyda) Mitchell, and they are now both living in Pennsylvania. William Mitchell has been in the oil business as an oil gauger for many years, working in the different fields of the East. Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell were the parents of nine children and Roy is the sixth in order of birth. He was fortunate in receiving a good education in the public schools of Pennsylvania, graduating from the high school at Titusville.

Following in his father's footsteps, Mr. Mitchell went into the oil business, working in the Eastern fields until 1910, when he decided to seek his fortune in California. For some time previous to his coming West he had been in the employ of the Standard Oil Company, and he still continues with them, having now a record of fifteen years of faithful service with them. Wide-awake and progressive in his ideas, Mr. Mitchell is a firm believer in the future of Orange County, and is especially interested in the development of Brea. When this place was incorporated, he was elected a trustee, and in 1918 he was reelected, and is now serving a four-year term.

Mr. Mitchell's marriage occurred on March 9, 1910, when he was united with Miss Estella Ashton; they have one daughter, Kathryn L. The family attend the Congregational Church. Mr. Mitchell is a member of the Elks of Whittier, and in politics is a believer in the principles of the Democratic party.

BURLEIGH L. GOODRICH.—Among the industries represented in the prosperous and progressive city of Fullerton plumbing is prominently identified with the city's steady advancement toward metropolitan proportions. Burleigh L. Goodrich, Fullerton's well-known plumbing contractor, was born at Bangor, Van Buren County, Mich., November 25, 1883. His parents, Leander and Alpha (Herrington) Goodrich, also natives of Michigan, were farmers, and in 1890 removed to California, where they engaged in ranching at Artesia, Los Angeles County. They now reside at Los Angeles.

In a family of four brothers, Burleigh L. was the eldest, and was but seven years of age when his parents came to California. He received a public school education and assisted his father on the ranch until he attained the age of fifteen, when he learned the plumbing trade under M. T. Cunniff at Riverside, Cal. He was engaged as a journeyman plumber in Riverside until 1911, when he entered business under the firm name of Armbrust and Goodrich, plumbing contractors at Anaheim. He continued the Anaheim business for seven and a half years and then sold his interest to his partner, and in January, 1919, removed to Fullerton, where he started in the same business. He has rapidly assumed the lead as an expert in his line of business. During the busy season he employs six men, all competent workmen and guaranteeing satisfaction in every particular. Among specimens of his work may be cited: The Municipal Building in the City Park, the City Jail, the Roberts Apartments in Anaheim, the residences of E. K. Benchley, P. E. Huddleson and Frank Benchley. While in Anaheim he did the plumbing work on the Valencia Hotel, Central Building, several buildings for the Bastanchury ranch and many other fine residence in both cities. He also carries a full line of plumbing supplies at his location, 115 West Commonwealth Avenue.

At Riverside in 1908, Mr. Goodrich was united in marriage with Miss Nellie Glim, a native of Sweden, who was reared in Illinois from the age of two years and came to Riverside in 1903, and their union has been blessed by the birth of two sons, Burton and Robert. Mr. Goodrich was a volunteer in the Riverside Fire Department for thirteen years. He became a member of the Volunteer Fire Department in Anaheim, serving as assistant chief for one year and then chief of the department for a year, when he resigned on moving to Fullerton. In Riverside also he was a member of Company M, Seventh Regiment California National Guard, being called to San Francisco at the time of the big fire in 1906.

While not associated with any political party he casts his ballot for the man whom he considers best qualified for official duties. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, as well as Fullerton Lodge of Odd Fellows, and with his wife is a member of the Yeomen. He is a member of the Board of Trade and is a public-spirited citizen, thoroughly interested in the welfare and development of Orange County.

WILLIAM A. DOLAN.—It has been fortunate for Anaheim that such men of character and experience, good judgment and foresight as William A. Dolan, president of the Anaheim National Bank, have been at the head of its financial affairs, for thereby has not only banking been stabilized, but commerce and all that is associated with it have taken on a healthier tone. A native of Nebraska, where he was born at Exeter, in Fillmore County, on November 5, 1878, Mr. Dolan has made his influence felt in many circles, and always for positive good, since he first permanently identified himself with California.

His father was James W. Dolan, a native of Ireland and a banker of Nebraska, who came to Los Angeles in 1904. His wife was Miss Ida M. Hager before her marriage, and was a native of Illinois. They are both living, honored of ten children, among whom William is the second child.

Having attended the grammar schools of his locality, Mr. Dolan was graduated from the high school at Indianola, Red Willow County, Nebr., with the class of '96, and later, for a year attended the State University at Lincoln. Then, in 1897, in Indianola, Nebr., he entered his father's bank, and for three years he was bookkeeper and assistant cashier there, and then for sixteen years was cashier.

In March, 1917, Mr. Dolan came to Anaheim and bought out the interest of F. C. Krause in the Anaheim National Bank; he is ex-president of the Orange County Bankers Association; is a member of the Board of Trade; is a Republican, with broad views as to party influence in local affairs, and has served as mayor of the city of Indianola, Nebr. During the Spanish-American War, he served under Colonel William Jennings Bryan as a member of the Third Regiment, Nebraska Volunteer Infantry.

On Independence Day, 1900, Mr. Dolan was married at Indianola, Nebr., to Miss Louise W. Beardslee, the daughter of I. M. and Laura (Post) Beardslee, natives of Illinois; and they have had three children—Geraldine, Isabel and William James. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Elks, the Mother Colony Club, the Newport Yacht Club, and the Hacienda Country Club.

RILEY B. WARNE.—A public-spirited man and a worthy representative of one of the well-known pioneer families, Riley B. Warne, who came to La Habra with his parents in 1894, among the first settlers in the valley, is naturally a warm advocate of the preservation, in county history form, of the historical data of the community. His father was Thomas P. Warne, who married Miss Barbara Flory, a native of Ohio and a kind and generous mother. Mr. Warne was a native of New York State, and as a farmer, he turned the first furrows in 320 acres of Douglas County soil in the great state of Kansas. There our subject was reared, attending the district school, the sixth in a family of nine sons, while Mr. Warne served as trustee of the high school board of Douglas County. After Riley had remained at home on his father's farm until he was twenty-one his father passed away, in 1908, at the end of a year's illness, and soon after Riley bought ten acres on Central Avenue improved it and sold in 1912. As an illustration of the advance in land values since the time when Thomas Warne first acquired his tract of 100 acres, it may be stated that Riley Warne sold, in 1914, a strip sixty feet wide, running through his ranch, for the price paid for the entire tract.

On June 7, 1917, Mr. Warne was married to Miss Pansy B. Remington, a daughter of H. M. Remington, the pioneer photographer of Fullerton, a lady well and favorably known throughout the country for her interest in and work for the Christian Endeavor movement and also secretary and treasurer of the Red Cross of the La Habra branch of the Fullerton Chapter. In 1912 Mr. Warne bought one and a half acres on the State Highway, and later purchased five acres on Cypress Avenue, part set to oranges, and some lemons, and where they are planning to erect their home.

Mr. Warne is a member of the La Habra Citrus Association, and a member and stockholder in the La Habra Water Company, and he also owns bank stock. He is a Republican in matters of national political import and a nonpartisan supporter of the best men and the best measures for the locality. He endeavors to live according to the Golden Rule, and he has supported vigorously the work of the Red Cross.

ANTON KLUOWER.—Prominent in business circles in Anaheim, and meeting with the success attendant upon years of experience in his line, Anton Kluewer is well known throughout Southern California. A native of Hamburg, Germany, his birth occurred March 10, 1873, and he received his education in the public schools of that country. On finishing his schooling, he was apprenticed to the trade of window trimmer, paying for his instruction at a private school, and was obliged to serve four years there before following his trade elsewhere. He then served two years in the German army and spent the next year working at his trade in Germany.

In 1900 the young man sought greater opportunities, and came across the sea to the City of Mexico, and secured a position as window trimmer with the large department store of J. Albert Company, remaining with that concern five years. At the end of that time he came to Los Angeles, and became cashier and steward of the Turner Hall cafe on South Main Street. After six years with them he was steward and cashier of the Louvre Cafe on South Spring Street for two years.

In 1911 Mr. Kluewer located in Anaheim, and started a cafe and grill at 154 West Center Street, where he now has one of the best appointed grills in the county, which is noted for a decided novelty in the shape of two private dining rooms patterned after large wine casks, and seating twelve guests each, an idea Mr. Kluewer got from a Paris restaurant he visited some twenty years ago. He has splendid cooks and serves only the best foods, maintaining a first class and well appointed establishment and has met with deserved success in his business. In addition to his other business interests Mr. Kluewer has bought and sold real estate in Anaheim, and at one time was the owner of a ten-acre orange grove at Fullerton.

The marriage of Mr. Kluewer which occurred in September, 1919, united him with Miss Louise Russmueller, a native of Chicago. Fraternally he is a member of the Red Men, and is past chief in the lodge at Anaheim. With the best interests of his city and country at heart, Mr. Kluewer has entered whole-heartedly into all projects for advancing their welfare, and his broad-minded and generous aid have been of material help in the general progress of this section of California. He is a member of the Anaheim Chamber of Commerce and of the Merchants Association.

WILLIAM A. CULP.—How much Californians have accomplished both to advance the state of husbandry and also to make this part of the coast areas fruitful and attractive to the rest of the world, is well illustrated in the life and accomplishment of William A. Culp, the orchardist of Brea. He is a Pennsylvanian by birth, having been born in Clarion County of the Keystone State on December 18 of the Centennial Year; and his parents were J. C. and Louise (Lineman) Culp. His father was an oil man, and had an interesting association with the development of one of the great industries of Pennsylvania. They were the parents of four children. Mr. Culp is deceased and Mrs. Culp resides in Rochester, N. Y.

William A. Culp attended the grammar and high schools at Meadville, and early got into the oil business, which he followed in the East and after coming West in 1911. Three years later, he had entered another field, that of growing citrus fruits and still later became the owner of the Brea Garage, and is now erecting a modern cement block building for a moving picture theater. He is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, and leaves no stone unturned to contribute to the growth of Brea and its flourishing county.

On August 29, 1900, Mr. Culp was married to Miss Edith Goodwin, who has proven a valuable helpmate, sharing enthusiastically in his enterprises. His children, Helen, Lura, Julia, Margaret and Sarah, have always enjoyed a large measure of popularity. Although a "standpat" Democrat in matters of national politics, Mr. Culp is broad-minded and free in his support of local issues. He has been honored with the presidency of the school board, and also of the Chamber of Commerce.

GEORGE RAYMOND JONES.—Another representative business man of Fullerton who has brought to bear, in the discharge of his responsibilities, a valuable experience and a never-failing energy, so that the community in which he has cast his lot has come to feel and benefit from his healthy influence, is George Raymond Jones, of the well-known firm of C. C. and G. R. Jones, agents for the Oakland Motor Car. He was born at Jacksonville, Texas, on March 4, 1895, the son of J. E. Jones, who was once president of the First National Bank of Fullerton, but is now retired. His wife was Texanna Crosby Brooks before her marriage, and she and her worthy husband are still living, blessed by their five children.

The third child, George Raymond, came to California in 1914, having been educated in the schools of Arkansas, after which he went to the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. Returning to Fullerton, Mr. Jones was for a while in the Fullerton National Bank as assistant cashier. When the opportunity presented itself, Mr. Jones bought into the Wickersheim Company and acted as its secretary for two and a half years, at the end of which time he sold out to Mr. Wickersheim, and organized the company he is at present associated with. They have the north end of Orange County, as their territory for the Oakland car, own modern buildings and maintain a show room, and employ six men. Mr. Jones belongs to the Fullerton Board of Trade and cooperates loyally in promoting the best interests of the town in which he enjoys his prosperity.

Dr. W. Poling

Myra E. Poling

At Fullerton, in July, 1915, Mr. Jones was married to Miss Frances Jane Sturtevant, a native of Michigan and the daughter of Frank Sturtevant. One child, Frances Jane, has been granted the fortunate couple. Mr. Jones finds the standards of the Republican party most to his liking in matters of political moment, and he enjoys the social life of both the Elks and the Fullerton Club.

IRA W. POLING.—What Southern California has done and, therefore, what she may do again for the orange growers, is well illustrated in the success attained by Ira W. Poling, who came to California a little over a decade ago. He was born near Kewanee, Fulton County, Ind., on March 18, 1852, the son of Arnold and Lydia (Hudkins) Poling, born in Virginia, who removed to Indiana and became farmers there. Ira W. grew up on the home farm until he was twenty-three years of age. Then, in 1875, he removed to Pawnee County, Nebr., where he bought a quarter-section of land near Pawnee City, which he improved and brought to a high state of cultivation. Selling out, he went to Jackson County, Kans., near Holton, and there bought eighty acres, which he farmed for a short time. Once more selling out, he removed to Shawnee County, in the same state, and there secured a quarter-section of land near Topeka, which he farmed and afterward traded for a quarter-section near Oklahoma City, Okla., where he engaged in agricultural pursuits for fourteen years. In Kansas he was a member of the Farmers Alliance, and both profited and contributed toward the association with others in the same field.

In the fall of 1906, Mr. Poling came to Pomona, where he purchased an orange grove on San Bernardino Avenue, consisting of nine and a third acres, which he afterwards sold. Then he bought an orange ranch of ten and a third acres on East Kingsley Avenue. He erected a fine residence and other desirable buildings, and otherwise greatly improved the property; and after he had introduced the most scientific methods in its management, he took in 1913 about $9,000 worth of fruit from the farm. Since then he has demonstrated that in good years his ranch will produce 6,000 boxes of fruit. He also bought a fine grove on East Holt Avenue of eight and a half acres. As might be expected of so enterprising and representative an orange grower, Mr. Poling identified himself with the Pomona Fruit Growers Exchange and also with the Palomares Irrigation Company.

In Pawnee County, Nebr., on March 26, 1878, Mr. Poling was married to Miss Myra E. Ennefer, a native of Eureka, Woodford County, Ill., and the daughter of William and Rebecca (Carpenter) Ennefer, born in England and Ohio, respectively. They removed from Illinois to Nebraska in 1876. The father died in Jackson County, Kans., being survived by his widow, who is now eighty-four years old. Mr. and Mrs. Poling have had five daughters, all popular in their circles. Lulu, the eldest, and Esther, the youngest, are at home; Nellie is the wife of C. F. Compton of Los Angeles and the mother of two children; Minnie is the wife of E. C. Beesley of Ontario; and Eva has become Mrs. O. C. Williams of Pomona and is the mother of three children.

Mr. Poling sold his orchards in Pomona in 1919, and removed to Anaheim, where he purchased twenty-four acres on East Center Street, which is devoted to raising Valencia oranges, and he is now a member of the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association. With his family he is a member of the Christian Church in Anaheim.

TAYLOR R. REID.—The advanced state of electrical science and technology is daily illustrated in the work of the Reid and Farley Electrical Company, the senior member of which is Taylor R. Reid, a native of Indianapolis, where he was born on March 15, 1889. His parents were Joseph T. and Elina (Dale) Reid. To this worthy couple were granted ten children. Taylor was the seventh in the order of birth, and he was educated at the public and high schools of Indianapolis.

Having finished his studies, he learned the tinsmith's trade and for a while worked as a journeyman in that field. In 1907 he first came to California, and after looking over Southern California, located at Los Angeles, where he was with the Pacific Electric for four years. He then located in Downey where he entered the employ of the Downey Light and Power Company, where for four years he had charge of the construction work, after which he returned to Los Angeles and started in the electrical business. He continued there until 1916, when he located in Fullerton, where he established himself in his present business. In 1917 he enlisted in the electrical department of the aviation section of the U. S. Army, serving overseas until he returned to New York where he was mustered out in February, 1919, and he immediately returned to Fullerton. During this time, the business was conducted by J. J. Farley. On Mr. Reid's return, after a year abroad, the two men formed a partnership as Reid and Farley Electrical Company, and now they keep seven men employed steadily doing the electrical work committed to their care. They carry a full line of electrical equipment and household appliances, and have done the electrical work, some of it intricate and difficult, in all the principal buildings in Fullerton and vicinity.

Mr. Reid, who enjoys a wide and pleasing popularity, belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Elks, and to the Fullerton Club, and few men, if any, are more welcome in fraternal circles.

ARTHUR W. LINDLEY.—A highly intelligent, industrious and expanding rancher, whose enterprise and ambition enable him to cultivate more land than he really owns, is Arthur W. Lindley, resident on Brookhurst Street. He was born in Orange County, Ind., on December 10, 1881, the son of J. A. and Helen S. (Webb) Lindley, also of the Hoosier State, who had five children. Arthur was the third in the order of birth, and he was reared and educated in Indiana, where he grew up to become especially familiar with the problems of agriculture. He has resided in the Golden State since 1907, and is the only member of the family in Orange County.

He lived for a while in Los Angeles, and for eight years was in the employ of a creamery company where his sales averaged $200 per day. Attractive as this activity was, he saw still greater possibilities before him as a rancher operating for himself; and as soon as the opportunity presented itself, he acquired about twenty acres of the best land he could find. He devoted this to truck farm produce, and with such gratifying returns, that he rented twenty-five acres in addition, also for the cultivation of garden-truck.

In 1917 Mr. Lindley was united in marriage to Miss Nellie Long, the accomplished daughter of Thomas Y. and Melissa A. Long; they have one daughter, Mary Jane. Mr. Lindley joined the Modern Woodmen as well as the Woodmen of the World.

Work is nothing to Mr. Lindley unless it is planned and carried out with reasonable intelligence and detailed attention, profiting today from the experience of yesterday; and that is why, very likely, when Mr. Lindley totals up the outcome of his thoughtful efforts, he invariably has something to show for them.

JOSEPH WALTER RAIKES.—One of the busiest men in Fullerton is Joseph Walter Raikes, who has entire charge of the pumping plant of the Anaheim Union Water Company. He was born in Fall River, Mass., July 3, 1874, the son of Walter Raikes, a stonemason who had a leading hand in the building of modern Fall River. He married Miss Ellen Hathaway, and in 1882 they removed west to Boulder, Colo., where he followed his trade. Joseph therefore attended school in Boulder, but when he was thirteen years of age, he started to support himself.

He chose his father's trade, and became both a stonemason and a cement worker, and such was the quality of his work that he engaged in contracting stone and cement work. Among others he built the Physicians' Block, the Elks Building, the Washington School, and many of the finest homes of Boulder.

While in that city, too, on November 15, 1895, Mr. Raikes was married to Miss Clara A. Atteberry, a native of Missouri, where she was born near Mt. Maria. Her parents were T. B. and Mary Atteberry, and her father was a farmer in the Iron State. He came to Colorado for his health, and there followed gold and silver mining. Mrs. Raikes went to school in Boulder, and grew up to claim two states as her homes.

In 1918 Mr. Raikes came to California and settled in Anaheim; and he did the cement work for the Anaheim Union Water Company and also for the Telephone Company. On September 1, 1919, he was persuaded to take the position as engineer in charge of the pumping plant, and now he has complete charge of the two wells—Well No. 2 with a capacity of 500 inches, and Well No. 4 with a flow of 300 inches. As part of his responsibility, he has the care of a Booster pump of 400 inches capacity that forces the water of the local reservoir into the distributing reservoir.

On December 1, 1919, the saddest of calamities befell Mr. Raikes, eliciting the warmest sympathy of all who had so esteemed him and his charming wife. That estimable lady died after a severe attack of influenza and pneumonia, leaving four children. Glen O. Raikes, the eldest, is married and lives in Long Beach; while Dean Horace, Harold Edwin and Ruth Charlotte live at home. The family attend the Baptist Church. Since Mrs. Raikes' demise, the father and mother of her lamenting husband are making their home where she once was the center of an admiring circle. Mr. Raikes is a Republican, but never allows partisanship to interfere with his energetic support of the best men and measures for local advancement and uplift.

SIEGFRIED M. CHRISTIANSEN.—A far-seeing, hard-working rancher who has reaped in his success a splendid reward for his labors is Siegfried M. Christiansen, of East Commonwealth Avenue, Fullerton, who was born in Schleswig, on Fohr Island, on August 19, 1858, the son of Jens D. and Louise (Bohn) Christiansen. His father was a farmer, and he worked industriously to afford a comfortable home for his family, and to give them the best of advantages within his reach; with the result that the lad received an excellent public school education.

In 1875 he crossed the Atlantic alone and landed at the historic Castle Garden, New York City, N. Y., and continuing his journey west to Illinois, he settled in Cook County, where he worked for four years on a farm. Whatever else he profited by in this Middle West experience, he learned there the spirit of American institutions and also a few wrinkles as to the American methods of agriculture. In 1879 he came on west to California, being employed on ranches near Wheatland, Yuba County. Indeed, he continued in the north near that city for fourteen years, when he returned East and for fifteen years lived in Chicago.

In 1882, Mr. Christiansen recrossed the ocean to see the old folks at home, and there he tarried for six months before he returned to America. One attraction or another drew him back to the Old World five years later, and on December 20, 1887, he was married to Miss Thomasin Knudtsen, the daughter of Thomas J. Knudtsen, who had married Miss Rebecca Breckling, a native of Tonsberg, Norway. He was for years captain of the sailing vessel, "John Bertram," carrying passengers between Hoboken, N. J. and Hamburg, Germany; and with that trim craft he made the record of the fastest trip in fourteen days. When Mr. and Mrs. Christiansen came to America together, they lived for a while in Chicago, where Mr. Christiansen engaged in teaming.

When he came back to California for good in 1909, he settled at Fullerton and purchased ten acres on East Commonwealth Avenue, part of which he set out to Valencia oranges. Three of these acres had already been given to walnuts, but the remaining seven are due to his industry. The Anaheim Union Water Company supplies the water he needs, and he has the services of the Placentia Orange Growers Association in the marketing of his fruit. In 1909 he built a home on his ranch. He belongs to the Macabees, is a Republican in national politics, and the family attend the Lutheran Church of Anaheim.

Three children have blessed the home life of Mr. and Mrs. Christiansen, although all are now away from the family hearth: John is living in Arizona; William is in the Fullerton oil fields; and Bettie is at the Bronson Vocal Studio of Los Angeles, making voice culture her aim. John served overseas as sergeant in the U. S. Army, being stationed at Brest, France. Wm. E. also served overseas, a member of the U. S. Marines, taking an active part at the front at St. Mihiel and the Argonne, where he was twice wounded, receiving a decoration from the French government.

JOACHIM QUEYREL.—California offers men of foreign birth opportunities they were unable to enjoy in their native lands, and the career of Joachim Queyrel furnishes a striking example of what energy and resourcefulness can accomplish when wisely directed and coupled with judicious management of one's financial affairs. Arriving in Los Angeles in 1907, a poor boy with only twenty-five cents as his financial assets, but with a stout heart, good character, a desire to work and a definite goal in life, Mr. Queyrel has, in a few years, become eminently successful in business and is now the owner of a business building in the growing town of Placentia.

Joachim Queyrel is a native of Gap, Hautes Alps, France, where he was born November 28, 1887. His parents were farmers, their home place being situated in the picturesque high Alps. Joachim was reared on the home farm, where he worked hard, early and late, assisting his father in the raising of the various crops, caring for the cattle and sheep and doing the many chores that form the every-day duties of an active farmer and attending the excellent schools in that country. Joachim had friends in Los Angeles, and no doubt they had written him glowing accounts of this land of sunshine and of its wonderful opportunities for young men, so he concluded to cast in his lot on the Pacific Coast and April, 1907, found him in Los Angeles, Cal. His financial condition made him seek employment at once and he soon found work with the Los Angeles Gas Company. Afterwards he secured work on farms in Los Angeles County, and for two years followed farm work for wages. Being thrifty and economical in his living, Mr. Queyrel at the end of two years had saved enough money to lease a tract of land at Norwalk, which he planted to grain.

In 1909, where the thriving town of Placentia now stands, was a barley field. Mr. Queyrel leased 200 acres of the Mesmer ranch, which included the land recently made famous as the location of the celebrated Chapman oil gusher; this land he farmed for one year to oats and barley. With the money he made from his crops he purchased a business lot on East Santa Fe Avenue, Placentia, in 1911, when the townsite was just being laid out, his purchase being the second lot sold in the new town. Afterwards he bought two lots adjoining, making seventy-five foot frontage. Upon his lot he erected a small frame building and opened a little bakery. He hired experienced bakers, who taught him the business, and as the town grew his business expanded. Possessing keen business foresight, Mr. Queyrel built a two-story brick business block west of his shop, which is now occupied by his retail store. Mr. Queyrel has recently remodeled his bakery, installed up-to-date machinery, and new ovens equipped with new fixtures and made many improvements, so now the famous "Placentia Bread" is known far and wide in this section of the county. Fraternally Mr. Queyrel is a member of Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. In Placentia Mr. Queyrel was married to Miss Linda Haase, a native of Texas, born near San Antonio, where she was reared and educated. Mr. Queyrel has seen the town of Placentia develop from a barley field and has contributed his share towards the upbuilding of this progressive and thriving town and the surrounding district.

ROBERT L. DRAPER.—No man has contributed more to the growth and prosperity of Smeltzer than Robert L. Draper, who rightfully occupies the position accorded him as leading citizen of Smeltzer. His progressive energy is apparent in all his enterprises, and in addition to farming his own 165 acres he leases in addition the 565 acres known as the Golden West Company's ranch, now owned by the Aldrich Land Company and formerly the property of the Golden West Celery Produce Company.

Mr. Draper is of English extraction, and is a lineal descendant of the Drapers of early colonial days in New England, who came over in the Mayflower. He was born in Texas, October 21, 1871, and was an infant in his mother's arms when the family removed to Oklahoma and settled in the Choctaw nation, going thence to Arkansas. He attended the public schools in Arkansas, but is a self-educated, self-made man. At the age of eighteen he went to the Choctaw country in Oklahoma and leased large tracts of Indian lands and engaged extensively in farming and stock raising. He was married in Oklahoma in 1893 to Miss Emma A. Gregory, a native of Tennessee, and they became the parents of three children: Frank, Bessie and Flossie. After meeting with reverses in Oklahoma, the family removed from the Cherokee country and came to California. With his wife and two children, and but eighteen dollars and ten cents in his pocket, he arrived at Los Alamitos, Cal., Saturday night, October 2, 1897, and the following Monday morning began working in the Los Alamitos Sugar Mill. He has resided in Smeltzer since 1906, and during that time has been engaged in ranching. He raises sugar beets and lima beans, sells his beets to the Santa Ana Sugar Company, formerly the Co-operative Sugar Company, and to the Anaheim Sugar Company. During the busiest season Mr. Draper employs as high as eighty men. He owns two forty-five-horsepower Holt tractors, and fourteen head of horses and mules. He has irrigation water from flowing wells, and in addition to his other enterprises is a well-borer. He has bored several of his own wells. He also owns 200 acres of land near Orland, in Glenn County. Fraternally, he is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 207, F. & A. M., and is a life member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks. Politically, his interest is active in county, state and national politics, and he takes a just pride in the achievements of Orange County. A man of great force of character, he is necessarily prominent in all that he undertakes, and the good financial results realized from his many years of energetic labor and his efforts toward the betterment of the community in which his lot in life is cast entitle him to the esteem and popularity he enjoys among his many friends and acquaintances. Mr. Draper has seen the increase in value of farm land from $200 to $1,500 per acre and he has done his part to aid in this development.

ALBERT E. QUEYREL.—Among Orange County's able and efficient men who are examples of what self-made men can accomplish, is Albert E. Queyrel, of the firm of Queyrel and Piepenbrink, Federal Trucking Company, at Placentia.

Mr. Queyrel was born at Dauphine, France, in the high Alps, March 18, 1889. His parents were farmers and he was reared on the home place and educated in the excellent schools of France. When nineteen, in 1908, he came to California, arriving in Los Angeles in November, 1908, where he worked at gardening. Later he joined his brother Joachim in the Placentia district, and worked for him on the Mesmer grain ranch. They made their home at Placentia, and walked to and from their work each day. He afterwards worked for his brother in the Placentia bakery. He became manager of the twenty-acre orange ranch of his father-in-law, A. Piepenbrink, and helped develop and set it to Valencia oranges and bring it to a high state of cultivation; then in partnership with his brother he leased 350 acres at Yorba, devoted to raising hay and potatoes. He continued there two years and then formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Otto Piepenbrink, and engaged in the trucking business. They own two Federal three-and-a-half-ton trucks and one Mack two-and-a-half-ton truck and are doing a large and lucrative business in all kinds of heavy trucking, such as hauling oil well supplies, fertilizer, oranges, cement, etc., and had the contract to haul the 1920 crop of oranges and lemons for two Placentia packing companies, the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and the Placentia Mutual Orange Association. Mr. Queyrel bought one of the first residence lots sold in Placentia, on North Bradford Avenue, and built a modern bungalow in which the family reside.

Mrs. Queyrel, who was Elizabeth Piepenbrink before her marriage, is a native of San Marcos, Texas, and the mother of two children, Albert E. Jr., and Leah. Mrs. Queyrel is the daughter of August and Emmy Piepenbrink, who came to California in 1909. Albert Queyrel's experience since coming to California illustrates what a young man without means and imbued with sufficient determination to overcome obstacles, can accomplish in gaining a competency and establishing himself as a worthy citizen who enjoys to an unusual degree the confidence and esteem of his fellow-townsmen. He is an enthusiastic booster for Orange County, and one of its prosperous and successful citizens.

HARVEY SYLVESTER GAINES.—One of the best known lumber men of Southern California, Harvey Sylvester Gaines has twenty years' of experience in that business to his credit, and brings to his responsible position in Placentia, Orange County, the knowledge gained by practical application as well as a thorough education. He is a native of Illinois, born in Henry County, August 11, 1868, and received his education in the public schools of his native state, and also in Grinnell University, Grinnell, Iowa, from which he was graduated in 1886.

Coming to Southern California in 1887, Mr. Gaines located in Los Angeles, and for seven years was traveling auditor for the Santa Fe Railway. He then went to Redlands, and for the next twenty years was engaged in the lumber business in that city, first as manager of the Newport Lumber Company; next as manager of the Russ Lumber and Mill Company, remaining with them eight years; he was one of the organizers and a member of the firm of Fox Woodson Lumber Company of Redlands and remained with them for eight years. In October, 1919, he accepted the position of manager of the Gibbs Lumber Company at Placentia.

The marriage of Mr. Gaines, which occurred at Riverside, Cal., united him with Mrs. Nellie (McNulty) Tracy, a native of Canada, and two sons have been born to them—Nelson and Richard. Fraternally Mr. Gaines is a member of the Redland Lodge, No. 583, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Masons and Knights of Pythias of that city. He is a member of the Southern California Retail Lumber Dealers Association and served as a director of that organization for a number of years.

CHARLES W. SADLER.—A recent settler in Orange County who has seen enough of the phenomenal advance in citrus ranching in La Habra and vicinity to become enthusiastically interested in a still more rapid and permanent development of the region, is C. W. Sadler, who was born near Ottosen, Humboldt County, Iowa, on October 15, 1893, the son of John Wesley Sadler, who had married Mary M. Sharp, a direct descendant of old Grandmother Sharp, the only survivor of the notorious "Spirit Lake Massacre." John W. Sadler, therefore, was an early settler of Iowa, where he purchased a relinquishment of Government land and became a very successful farmer. C. W. Sadler attended the county schools near Ottosen and helped his father on the home farm up to the time when he came to California. They bred thoroughbred, short-horn cattle and Duroc-Jersey swine, and J. W. Sadler still has some of the finest stock, purchasing his breeders in the East.

In 1911 father and son came to California and stayed a short time in Whittier, when the father returned to Iowa; but C. W. Sadler remained to work on various farms. On November 27, 1913, he was married in Los Angeles to Miss Lulu Box, a native of Hanford, and the daughter of John K. and Eliza J. (Pratt) Box. Her folks came to California in 1885 and settled in Kings County, then a wild country; and Mrs. Sadler went to the grade schools of Hanford. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Sadler made their home at Whittier, while he engaged in the care and pruning of orchards. They have one child, Harold Eugene Sadler.

In April, 1919, Mr. Sadler purchased fifteen acres near La Habra, eleven acres of which were devoted to Valencia oranges, one acre to lemons and three acres to walnuts; and in May his father purchased fifteen acres adjoining that of his son on the west. Twelve acres of the latter tract were in lemons, and three in oranges. Water for irrigation is supplied by the La Habra Domestic Water Company, and the La Habra Citrus Association markets his products.

Mr. Sadler believes in independent action, rather than according to party leanings, and decidedly favors trying, irrespective of partisanship, to get the right men for the right place, and to endorse only the best measures.

C. G. ANDERSON.—The life which this narrative sketches began in far-away Stockholm, Sweden, on January 26, 1880. When C. G. Anderson, the successful painting and decorating contractor of Fullerton, was sixteen years old he was apprenticed for four years to a painter to learn the art of decorating and house painting. While learning the trade the wages received by an apprentice are very small, but the knowledge he gains of mixing colors and important pointers about the art of decorating is very thorough and extensive.

Mr. Anderson followed his trade in Sweden until 1903, when he left his native land for America, landing in Boston, Mass., where he secured employment with the American Decorating Company, the leading painting contractors of the Hub City, remaining with them two years, and while there did work on many of the finest homes in the Back Bay district of Boston. Possessed of a desire to see more of the United States, and especially of the Far West, he came to Orange County, Cal., in 1905 and for a time located in Anaheim, where he was employed by J. L. Abbott. In the fall of 1905 Mr. Anderson came to Fullerton, where he has resided since, and it was here that he engaged in the painting and contracting business for himself. He has decorated many of the business blocks and many of the fine residences in Fullerton. Seven years ago he purchased four acres of land on West Commonwealth Avenue. At that time the land was in a raw state, but through the energetic efforts of Mr. Anderson the place has been brought under cultivation, and is planted to Valencia oranges, now six years old and in fruitful condition, and here he now makes his home.

In Fullerton, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage with Signe E. Holm, also a native of Sweden, and of this union two children were born, Robert and Edna. Mr. Anderson's success has been due entirely to his own efforts and especially in following a definite course in life, which he planned when a lad of sixteen, when he was apprenticed to learn the painter's trade.

BYRON B. CORBIT.—Many years of practical experience in the fruit packing industry has especially fitted Byron B. Corbit for the important position of foreman of the orange department of the La Habra Citrus Association packing house. He is a native of the Buckeye State, born in Coshocton County, Ohio, April 21, 1882, a son of Edward and Eleanor Corbit. When eighteen months old his parents migrated to Caldwell County, Mo., where he was reared and educated. At the age of sixteen he went to Cameron, Mo., to live, following farming there until 1905.

Fifteen years ago Mr. Corbit came to California, locating in Riverside County where he entered the employ of the Rubidoux Fruit Company and, while with this well-known company, by his constant fidelity to duty he gained a thorough knowledge of the packing business in all of its varied branches. After severing his connection with this company, Mr. Corbit became foreman of the Pinkham-McKevitt Packing Company at Riverside, and later on accepted a like position with the Bradbury Estate Packing House at San Gabriel. His next move brought him to Fullerton, where he accepted the position of foreman of the Benchley Fruit Company's packing house and subsequently he became the foreman of the R. T. Davies Packing Company of Placentia. After leaving Placentia Mr. Corbit spent two years in the oil fields in the Brea district, Orange County. On May 15, 1919, he accepted his present important post, as department foreman of the La Habra Citrus Association. He is an Orange County enthusiast and always ready to help, to the extent of his ability, all movements that tend toward the upbuilding of the county's best interests. On August 16, 1916, Mr. Corbit and Miss Ruby Mareen Hickok were united in marriage; she is a native daughter of California and their union has been blessed by a son, Wayne Corbit.

WILLIAM T. WALLOP.—The earliest recollections of William T. Wallop, able superintendent of the Anaheim Union Water Company, is associated with California, where he has resided since he was a year old. He was born at Horntown, Accomac County, Va., February 14, 1882, and his parents, Asher T. and Eliza H. (Tuffree) Wallop, born in Virginia and Philadelphia, respectively, were planters in Virginia. They came to Placentia, Cal., in 1883, where the father was engaged in business until he retired; his wife died October 31, 1908.

The fifth child in a family of seven children, William T. was educated in the public and high schools at Anaheim, and attended a business college in Oakland, graduating in 1901. At the age of eighteen he was in an office in Oakland, where he remained two years; he then spent two years in Honolulu in office work, and was later engaged in the grocery business at Anaheim for five years. Disposing of his interest in this business he became manager of the Anaheim Gas Company for a year, and following this was in the employ of the Wells Fargo Express Company three years. In 1912 he assumed the position of secretary with the Anaheim Union Water Company, and in 1919 was appointed superintendent of the company by the directors.

He is also interested in the citrus industry, and is the owner of a ten-acre orange grove on Anaheim Road and his home place of ten acres on South Walnut Street. He is also secretary of the Eucalyptus Water Company.

Mr. Wallop's marriage with Miss Ella Rea was solemnized May 19, 1909. She was born in El Cajon, Cal., a daughter of J. B. and Margaret (Wilkie) Rea, born in Ontario, Canada. Mr. Rea settled in El Cajon in 1872, and in 1896 he located near Anaheim, where he set out the Katella orchard, naming it for his two daughters, Kate and Ella. He died in Anaheim, where his widow still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Wallop are members of the First Presbyterian Church in Anaheim, in which he is a trustee. He is a member of the Anaheim Masonic Lodge, of Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., and Santa Ana Council, R. & S. M. Politically he is a Democrat. He has a large circle of warm friends, and holds a position among the progressive men of Anaheim, to whose energy and resourcefulness Orange County's rapid strides may be ascribed.

ALBERT JOHN HANIMAN.—A recent comer to Orange County whose interest in things Californian has been intensified through the associations of his father, who was one of the best known and most influential business men in Los Angeles in early days, is Albert John Haniman, who was born in the "City of the Angels" on May 3, 1883, the son of Albert and Lena Haniman. His father was a native of Michigan, who came to California from Detroit a few years after the first discovery of gold, and while busy as a merchant in Los Angeles, founded the Haniman Fish Company in operation today. Albert attended the Los Angeles schools, and although he lost his father when he was only nine years old, he succeeded in studying at the high school.

The death of his father, however, affected his fortunes to the extent that he struck out for himself while in his teens, and in 1892 he removed to St. Paul, where he started a cafe. Success rewarded his efforts from the start, and for twenty-five years he was noted as one of the ablest caterers of that city. Many of the leading citizens of that city so famous for its contact, through travel, with both the East and the West, used to regale themselves regularly at Al Haniman's well-kept restaurant, and it may well be said that he thus identified himself in one of the pleasantest manners possible, with the history of that growing town.

On Christmas Eve, 1908, Mr. Haniman was married at Los Angeles to Miss Stella Grace Ketchum, a native of Iowa, who came with her parents to California when she was three years old. After this eventful step, Mr. Haniman returned to St. Paul and continued in the cafe business. In 1918, however, he sold out his Minnesota interests and came on to California. Since then, Mr. Haniman has been in the commissary department of the Standard Oil Company, which department is charged with caring for the meals and other comforts of the men employed by the Standard Murphy Coyote Company, southwest of La Habra. He makes his home on La Mirada Avenue on the Harris ranch, and is always "on the job."

Mr. Haniman has long belonged to the Modern Woodmen, the Masons and the B. P. O. Elks, while in political affairs he believes in emphasizing the fitness of the man above the claims of party.

W. R. ROGERS.—Among the most progressive growers of sugar beets and lima beans in Orange County, and decidedly a leader among those who, while operating for themselves, have also helped to open the field to others, is W. R. Rogers, the president of the board of trustees of the Diamond school district. He has for years been impelled forward in his successful career by up-to-date ideas, and in fact has often had the vision and the courage of action to anticipate and outrun his competitors, while his generous impulses have won him a host of admiring friends.

He was born in New Madrid County, Mo., on March 5, 1880, the son of W. S. Rogers, who was a farmer and a lumberman that contracted to supply the Government with cypress piling in southeastern Missouri. He married, in Missouri, Miss Sallie La Valley, like himself a native of that state. He died in Missouri, to which he had returned after a visit to California; but Mrs. Rogers passed away in Orange County. They had three children: Estella resides at Santa Ana; Ruth became the wife of John L. Taylor and died at Los Angeles in 1905, leaving one child, Merl; while the third in the order of birth is William Reginald, the subject of our sketch.

When he was eight years old, he came out to California with his parents, and for a short time lived at Ballard, in Santa Barbara County. About 1890 his folks came down to Santa Ana, and they bought the ten acres upon which he is now living and which is owned by Miss Estella Rogers and himself. He attended the public schools and grew up to know a deal about California farming. These ten acres are devoted mainly to the culture of sugar beets, and they are on Bristol Street.

As one of the most successful growers of lima beans and sugar beets south of Santa Ana, Mr. Rogers also rents and farms ten acres half a mile to the west, and five acres to the south, both of which tracts he devotes to sugar beets, and five acres immediately west, where he grows lima beans. He is a member of the firm of Fickas and Rogers, and they rent of the Haven Seed Company forty acres for beet growing.

Four children make still more glad the happy home of Mr. and Mrs. Rogers. They are Reginald W., Edwin, Ellene, and Noma, and they stimulate Mr. Rogers' interest in all the children of the neighborhood. In 1919 he was elected president of the board of education of the Diamond school district, and ever since he has worked for the best educational advantages for the little ones.

H. PERCY THELAN.—A hard-worker, who keeps healthily active for the love of labor and not on account of the necessity of the thing, is H. Percy Thelan, known widely as not only having "made good" as deputy game warden, but as having set an excellent example of just how such a responsible office ought to be conducted. A native son, he was born in Santa Ana at the home of his father, a pioneer saddler and harness maker of Santa Ana, who then owned the house and resided at the corner of First and West streets, now the corner of First and Broadway. He first saw the light of day on June 5, 1879, and was lovingly cared for by his parents, Charles Columbus and Emma (Palmer) Thelan, and welcomed into this world by the late pioneer, Noah Palmer, his esteemed grandfather. Noah Palmer came to Santa Ana in 1874, and C. C. Thelan followed two years later. He died on October 16, 1897; and Mrs. Thelan, beloved by all who have ever known her mind and heart, remarried and is now Mrs. George J. Mosbaugh.

H. Percy Thelan finished his studies in the grammar school now historic as the oldest in Santa Ana, and then took a commercial course under Prof. R. L. Bisby in the Orange County Business College. In 1898 he left Santa Ana to work in Kern County during the "boom" in the oil-fields, and there he continued for four years. He was a tool dresser on the Monte Cristo lease at Maricopa, and going to San Francisco, he had no difficulty securing a good engagement with Messrs. McNabb & Smith, foundrymen and machinists, as a machinist's helper, which post he held for another three years.

He then became a member of the firm of Thelan & Merrit, proprietors of the garage at Twelfth and Oak streets, Oakland, running that successfully; but he came back to Santa Ana in 1910 and two years later started the Thelan Machine Shop and Garage, now the Mayo Machine Shop, on East Fourth Street. When he sold out, he became deputy county game warden for a couple of years.

Mr. Thelan then bought a couple of fishing and towing outfits at Newport Beach, and is now the owner of the popular boats, "Ray II," a tug-boat, fifty feet long, and the "O. U. I.," a fishing trawler thirty feet in length. He was formerly a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Santa Ana, as he is now of the Chamber of Commerce at Newport; and with plenty of faith in the beach towns, he remains one of the most energetic and loyal of all "boosters" for Orange County. He owns a business block at Laguna Beach.

In 1911, Mr. Thelan was married to Miss Edith Yost, a daughter of W. R. Yost, of Santa Ana; and they have one child, Ray Palmer Thelan. Mr. Thelan owns the residence in which he lives at 632 North Broadway, and has, besides, a summer home at Laguna. A desire to be most useful to society, therefore, impels him to daily toil, through which he keeps himself thoroughly in touch with the rest of the world.

EUGENE O. AHERN.—Among the most progressive and prosperous grain farmers of Southern California must be rated Eugene O. Ahern, for fifteen years past one of the principal tenants on the Lewis F. Moulton and Company ranch, two miles southeast of El Toro, where he owns the farm buildings and all the necessary harvesting machinery for handling the 2,000 acres which he has under lease. A native son of California, he was born near Saticoy in Ventura County, April 28, 1874, the son of Thomas Ahern, a native of Ireland, who came to America from the Emerald Isle, and direct to California, when he was eighteen years of age. He married Miss Honora Purcell, also Irish by birth, and they had fourteen children, among whom Eugene was the sixth. Mr. Ahern has gone to his eternal reward; but the mother still lives at Anaheim.

Eugene Ahern's boyhood days were spent in Los Angeles, when the present metropolis was comparatively a small place, receiving his education in the public schools. When nineteen years of age, he came to Orange County in 1893 and began working on farms in the vicinity of El Toro and by experience and contact with the world, and through keeping his eyes and ears open he has become a well-informed man. His father ranched at various times in Contra Costa, Ventura, Los Angeles and Orange counties, and very naturally Eugene gave him the greatest assistance he could, mastering at the same time all kinds of ranch work. Finally at Santa Ana he was married, February 2, 1899, to Miss Margaret Anna Kelly, born in New Zealand, the daughter of Wm. and Margaret (Nichols) Kelly, born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and the Isle of Man, respectively. Her father, Capt. Wm. Kelly, was a seafaring man and rose to master of the vessel. For some years he made his headquarters in New Zealand. It was in 1884 he came to Newport, Cal., where he became particularly well known, piloting vessels over the bar. Captain Kelly and his good wife now live in Santa Ana. Mrs. Ahern is the third oldest of eight living children and she was reared and educated in the public schools of Orange County. Two children came to add to their marital happiness: Laura who married Drennan Krauchi, now deceased, and now resides at the Ahern home at Tustin; and Juanita.

As has been said, Mr. Ahern began his acquaintance with the life and problems of the farmer on the ranch of his father, who at one time was engaged in farming leased land on the Irvine, or the San Joaquin ranch at Irvine. Later on, he came down to El Toro and worked on the Twist ranch. He rose to be Mr. Twist's foreman, and held that position for a number of years; about fifteen years ago he began farming operations on his own account. At the present Mr. Ahern has 1,600 acres planted to grain, of which 250 acres are in wheat, and 1,350 acres are in barley grain. He has 200 acres of hay, and 200 acres of beans. He resides with his family at Tustin, where he owns a ranch—a trim little farm of twenty acres, seventeen of which are set out to budded walnuts, while three acres are in Valencia oranges.

Mr. Ahern is serving as school trustee in the El Toro district, and is interested in the proper education of the rising generation, believing that every boy and girl should have the best of educational opportunities. In national politics, he is a Democrat, but he aims to study and to act upon the great questions of the day in the broadest, most nonpartisan spirit. He and his gifted wife still continue to apply themselves closely to their life work and to give the most conscientious attention to every detail in business; and they enjoy the highest respect of a large circle of friends.

GEORGE H. HANSEN.—An enterprising, successful rancher with an enviable record as an expert oil driller, whose prosperity has stimulated his interest in local affairs of every sort, is George H. Hansen, who was born, a native son, in Placentia, Cal., on May 25, 1882. He is the eldest son of the well-known and highly respected citizen of Placentia, Peter Hansen, and from childhood enjoyed the advantages of a comfortable home, while he attended the district school at Placentia. Later he graduated, as a member of the class of '97, from the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana.

Entering the employ of the Union Oil Company at Maricopa, in Kern County, Mr. Hansen was for four years an expert driller in that company's service, acquiring practical experience which proved very profitable. Then in 1913 he took up ranching, on his nine acres devoted to Valencia oranges. It is under the service of the Anaheim Union Water Company and he is a member of the Placentia Orange Growers Association. In 1918, he built a handsome residence on his ranch.

Mr. Hansen has been married twice. His first wife, Ceola D. Boswell, before her marriage, died in 1917, the mother of three children—Christine May, Ernest and Robert. Ernest served a year and a half in the merchant marine, and at San Francisco was honorably discharged, and now he is an expert baker at Portland. His second marriage made him the husband of Miss Bertha L. Herman, the daughter of R. B. Herman, the rancher of Anaheim. She was a trained nurse, and is now a great helpmate; and she is the mother of one child, George Hansen, Jr. In national politics, Mr. Hansen is a Republican; but he is first, last and all the time American, and ready to work for America and her ideals.

WARREN M. GRAY.—An industrious, progressive and self-made young man conspicuous among those who are "making good" is Warren M. Gray, naturally a mechanic, through training an expert machinist, and very experienced in the handling and directing of men. He is the owner of an excellent ranch about a mile and a quarter east of El Toro, in whose community he and his promising family are highly rated for their citizenship and neighborliness.

He was born in Boone County, Iowa, on July 8, 1886, the youngest of five children born to J. M. and Frances (Westlake) Gray, and he came to California in 1891 with his parents and the rest of the children. They settled first at San Juan Capistrano, and there Warren grew up and attended the public schools. When thirteen years old he began to work for the Santa Fe Railway, helping to construct and repair, and laboring especially at the laying of track. Three years later, he was made section foreman, and in that capacity he continued with the Santa Fe for thirteen years. His father was a track and construction man for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway in Iowa for twenty-three years and seventeen years for the Santa Fe at Capistrano; he now resides with his daughter, Mrs. Alfred Trapp at El Toro, in the eighty-fourth year of his age, the mother having passed away there in 1910.

Warren M. Gray took up mechanical engineering through the International Correspondence School at Scranton, Pa., which gave him the necessary insight, since which time he has fortified himself through actual, valuable experience. He is very efficient in repairing automobiles, is a good separator man, and with A. C. Carle he owns a complete and dependable threshing outfit. Some time ago Mr. Gray purchased twenty acres of rich land, his present home place, and he has since set it out to walnuts, making it a very productive ranch.

In 1910 Mr. Gray was married to Miss Rosie Zarn, a native of Del Mar, in San Diego County; and they have two attractive children, as one might expect who knows Mrs. Gray's charming personality. They are named Catherine and Carrie.

ALFRED HUHN.—A far-seeing business man of winning personality who has repeatedly demonstrated that he has marked ability, is Alfred Huhn, president and manager of the Ehlen and Grote Company. He was born at St. Louis, Mo., on November 18, 1875, the son of Peter and Lena (Theiss) Huhn of St. Louis, where her father was a prominent merchant for many years. There were four children in the family, and three are now living; and Alfred is the only one in California. Both Peter Huhn and his good wife are now dead.

Alfred was reared in St. Louis and educated in the local schools, after which he entered Walther College, from which he was graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree. Soon after this he entered the Third National, now the First National Bank of St. Louis, following banking until 1901, when he resigned his position and came west to California. He looked over the Southland and was not long in locating in Orange. Soon after his arrival, he entered the employ of the Ehlen and Grote Company, and for some years continued with them as a clerk. When the business was incorporated in 1906, Mr. Huhn became a stockholder and was elected secretary and director; and in that capacity he remained until Mr. Ehlen sold his interest in 1910, when Mr. Huhn was made president and manager; and these positions he has filled to everyone's satisfaction since 1910. Through the excellent management accorded by Mr. Huhn and his associates, the firm retains its old-time prestige of being the largest retail grocery in Orange County, and very naturally Mr. Huhn is a livewire in the Orange Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

Mr. Huhn is interested in horticulture, and owns an orange ranch near Olive. He also owns business property in Orange and in Los Angeles. He is a director and secretary of the California Fig Nut Company, which maintains factories for the preparation of breakfast food known as "Fig Nuts" made from figs, nuts and whole wheat, a superior article rapidly coming to the front; the demand has increased so rapidly the company is enlarging the capacity and also making plans for materially enlarging the plant. He is also a stockholder in the National Bank of Orange.

At Orange Mr. Huhn was married to Miss Sophie Grote, a native of Kansas, and the daughter of Henry Grote, the pioneer. Two children have brightened their home, and their names are Alfred, Jr., and Lester.

The family are members of St. John's Lutheran Church, and Mr. Huhn is a member of the Lutheran Men's Club, as well as the Commercial Club of Orange. Both Mr. and Mrs. Huhn are intensely interested in the broadest and most enduring development of Orange County, and are eager supporters of every good movement tending toward those ends.

ERNEST L. MORRISON.—One of the prosperous ranchers of Santa Ana is Ernest L. Morrison, of South Birch Street, a native of Iowa who came to California to spend the rest of his days, and has since had so much success here that he has taken a new lease of life and more than ever, perhaps, longs to play the game. He was born near Cedar Rapids on November 10, 1864, the son of J. W. and Emilie Morrison, and was sent to school at Cedar Rapids, while his father traveled hither and thither as a salesman for wholesale houses. He was an apt student, and in time was graduated from the Cedar Rapids Commercial College.

When only seventeen years of age, he also started out as a salesman, representing the Farmers Fire Insurance Company of Cedar Rapids, Iowa; limited in his territory at first to Cedar and Jones counties, but later special agent, representing the entire state. He next purchased various strips of timberland and built a sawmill in Iowa, cut his own timber, and sold cordwood, railroad ties and lumber. He built many houses in Cedar Rapids, and bought and sold property there. He had a delightful suburban farm of twenty acres near Cedar Rapids, suitable for the life of a country gentleman, and a farm of 180 acres in Cedar County, devoted to general agriculture. Much of the time while he owned this ranch property, he had a tenant on the farm, and he himself gave his attention to the insurance business.

Alfred Kubin

In 1908, Mr. Morrison sold his interests in Iowa, including some stock in the Farmers Fire Insurance Company, and came out to California on a six months' tour of inspection; and having looked the state over pretty well, he located in Santa Ana. He built a home at 530 East Seventeenth Street, and there made his home until he sold the place in 1916. In April of that year, he bought a five-acre grove of Valencia oranges on Santiago Street, which is well watered by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. In February, 1920, Mr. Morrison purchased twenty acres from R. J. Thompson of Santa Ana, lying west of the County Hospital, for which he has a private pumping plant—that of the Dawn Company, Inc., which has a capacity of 200 inches. He bought his present home at 116 South Birch Street in April, 1919. He is, very naturally, a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association.

On October 14, 1886, Mr. Morrison was married to Miss Martha A. Jeffries, who was born near Cedar Rapids and educated at both the high school and the commercial college of that city, in the district in which the Jeffries were early settlers. Mr. and Mrs. Morrison are members of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, and Mr. Morrison is one of the trustees of that congregation. He was formerly a director in the California National Bank. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Morrison is too broad-minded to be partisan in his "boosting" of local projects, and therefore supports heartily any movement deemed worthy for the betterment of the community or the county in which he lives, labors and prospers.

HARRY BARTER.—For nearly a quarter of a century Harry Barter, the progressive rancher of Magnolia Avenue, Stanton, has resided on the same place where he now lives. The ranch was purchased by his father, Alfred Barter, from the Stearns Rancho Company and at that time was a sheep pasture.

Harry Barter was born in Virgil City, Vernon County, Mo., April 17, 1884, the son of Alfred and Annie (Swartz) Barter. The family consisted of six children, three of whom are living, two being residents of Los Angeles County. Alfred Barter was an extensive farmer who, in conjunction with general farming, conducted a nursery for many years in Orange County. He passed away in 1897 and his widow now resides at Long Beach.

Although born in Missouri, Harry Barter was reared and educated in Orange County and has always followed agricultural pursuits. His ranch of eighteen acres is devoted to general farming and is highly cultivated and very productive.

In 1911, Mr. Barter was united in marriage with Miss Mary F. Hooven, a native of Wyoming Valley, Pa., and the daughter of Mrs. Tillie Hooven. Mr. Barter is an enterprising and progressive rancher and is most highly respected for his integrity and high ideals of citizenship.

CHARLES PRINSLOW.—A self-made, self-reliant, substantial and well-to-do rancher, who has worked hard for every dollar that he possesses, is Charles Prinslow, the orchardist, whose trim fifty acres near the Costa Mesa postoffice are well known to other California farmers. He was born at Brandenburg, Germany, on September 28, 1853, the son of Martin and Wilhelmina (Fredericks) Prinslow, farmers and landowners, who migrated with their eight children to Fond du Lac, Wis., in 1869, and there continued agricultural pursuits. The second son and third child, Charles, was then sixteen years of age, and therefore he was educated partly in his native land and partly in Wisconsin.

When twenty-three years of age, he struck out for himself and first pulled up in Lincoln County, Dakota Territory. There he took up a homestead of 160 acres and also a timber claim of the same extent, and proved up on both; and this land he still owns, and a section more.

In 1881, he was married to Miss Nina Ireland, born near Randolph, Wis., and a daughter of James Ireland, who became a farmer near Centerville, where our subject then lived. And after his marriage he raised wheat, corn, hay and barley, as well as stock, so that he became a cattle feeder. Indeed, he fed thousands of cattle for the Chicago market, and was favorably known as one of the extensive cattle feeders of southeastern South Dakota. He bought more land, and in every way prospered.

In 1915, Mr. Prinslow came out from South Dakota, took in the two expositions at San Francisco and San Diego, and returned to his farm of 960 acres in Brooklyn Township, Lincoln County, and the following spring came back to California with Mrs. Prinslow. After looking over various attractive localities, they bought a five-acre home, to which they moved with their family, in January, 1916. They still retain their fine Dakota farm, worth, according to a conservative estimate, at least $300,000, and since their coming here they have made a trip to South Dakota each year. Mr. Prinslow has identified himself in many ways with the life and progress of Orange County, and is known at Newport Heights as president of the Newport Heights Irrigation District, which owns three artesian wells on twenty acres of ground bought from James Irvine.

Mr. and Mrs. Prinslow have had eight children—the same number as made up the family of which the subject of this sketch was a member. Mabel is the wife of William Iosty, a farmer at Centerville, S. D.; and Elmer, the second born, is also farming nearby; Lewis was a sergeant in the United States Army, now a barber at Marysville, Cal.; Frank died, unmarried, when he was twenty-two years old; Minnie's husband is John Boyd, the rancher and orchardist in Harper Precinct and they have a son, William; and Charles is a farmer in Lincoln County, S. D.; Alice married John Jones, a fumigator residing at Costa Mesa, and they have one child, Robert; Clarence, who has reached his seventeenth year, lives at home.

Mr. Prinslow is a Republican according to his party preferences; but he endeavors to put aside partisanship when local movements and measures are up for support or defeat, and in that way works for the best interests of the community in which he lives and prospers.

ROBERT L. BLANCHAR.—A far-seeing, progressive agriculturist, who leads a quiet but very fruitful life, operating with excellent results some twenty acres on North Flower Street, is Robert L. Blanchar, among the most successful of Orange ranchers. He was born near Windsor, Wis., on August 24, 1877, the son of Harvey C. and Mary Blanchar, and grew up in a circle of refinement and education such as might be expected from the fact that his father was a student at the University of Wisconsin.

In 1900 Robert moved to Faribault County, Minn., with his parents, and there purchased a farm of 200 acres of prairie land, which he devoted to the raising of cattle, horses, sheep and grain. He lived nine years in Minnesota, and then sold out his holdings. In the meantime, in 1908, his parents moved to town. In that same year, also, our subject was married, on July 2, to Miss Grace Rorman, the ceremony taking place at Winnebago, Minn.

In December, 1909, Harvey Blanchar came to California and located on North Flower Street, in Santa Ana, later returning to Minnesota. In the spring of the following year he and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Blanchar, moved out to California for good. This North Flower Street ranch consists of twenty and a half acres, five of which are set out to apricots, two and a half to oranges, and thirteen to walnuts. Our subject set out the apricots and oranges himself, but the walnut trees were already there. He has ten acres under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and also a private pumping plant with a capacity of forty inches. He uses an electric motor of fifteen horsepower, and a number four pump. In 1910 he built the home in which his mother now lives. His father died, ripe with the honors of seventy-one years, on June 29, 1917. Robert Blanchar belongs to the Orange Lodge of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of Santa Ana.

Mrs. Blanchar was born at Delavan, Faribault County, Minn., the daughter of Will and Kate Rorman, natives of Minnesota, who continue to reside in that state. She attended the grammar schools of the district, and also studied at the high school in Winnebago. Four children have blessed their union. Helen E., Eunice D. and Vivian M. are pupils of the grammar school; and Robert L., Jr., is at home. The family belongs to the First Baptist Church of Santa Ana.

JOSEPH E. DURKEE.—That a professional man may become a successful and prosperous rancher, under the benign influence of sunny California, is clearly demonstrated in the career of J. E. Durkee of Orangethorpe, where he owns twenty acres devoted to oranges and walnuts. For twenty years he taught school in Iowa, and for eleven years he was superintendent of schools of Buena Vista County, in that state.

Mr. Durkee was born January 6, 1862, in Leeds, Wis., the son of Joseph and Edna (Webb) Durkee. In 1855 the parents moved to Wisconsin, and from there the father enlisted in the Civil War and was killed at Yorktown. Later the family moved to Iowa, where J. E. received his early education in the excellent public schools of his locality. Subsequently he attended the Agricultural College of Iowa at Ames, from which institution he was graduated in 1889; he then took up teaching as a profession and for which he was admirably qualified.

In 1909 Mr. Durkee came to California, and after spending one year in Los Angeles, he purchased his present ranch in Orange County, where he has since resided. At the time of purchase the ranch was mostly unimproved, but Mr. Durkee, with his characteristic enterprise and spirit of progress, began at once to improve and develop the place, and after expending much money and labor he has brought the ranch up to a high state of productiveness and has made of it a beautiful homestead.

Mr. Durkee's marriage occurred in 1892, when he was united with Miss Lucinda Stewart of Floyd, Iowa. Five children have been born to them, three of them living:

Minnie Dietrich

Beatrice, wife of E. T. Watson of Orange, Florence and Ruth. Mrs. Durkee died in Los Angeles in 1910. Fraternally, Mr. Durkee is a Mason, a member of Sioux Rapids, Iowa, Lodge A. F. & A. M., and a member of the Chapter of that city; he is also affiliated with the Odd Fellows.

In these days of scientific farming a man of education and attainments is a valuable asset to any community. That Mr. Durkee's capabilities have been recognized by his fellow citizens is evidenced by the fact that he has been made a school director of his district and he wields a broad influence in shaping its educational policy, as he is an enthusiastic supporter of every movement for the widening of the educational facilities of the community.

MRS. MINNIE M. DIETRICH.—An enterprising, liberal and kind-hearted woman who has spent many years of her life in Santa Ana, where she is well liked and highly esteemed is Mrs. Minnie M. Dietrich, who was in maidenhood Minnie M. Buchmann, a native of Berlin, Germany, born in 1856, a daughter of John and Rosina (Seidel) Buchmann, who brought their family of children to Buffalo, N. Y., in 1860, where after a residence of four years they removed to Richardson County, Nebr. There they became successful farmers and there both spent the remainder of their lives.

Minnie Buchmann spent her teens in Richardson County and received a good education in the public schools of that county, and at Fall City, Nebr., she was married, January 21, 1872, when Penrose C. Dietrich became her husband. He was a native of Pennsylvania, born at Kutztown, May 24, 1840. His father, Daniel Dietrich, was also born in Pennsylvania and was a farmer near Kutztown, where he and his estimable wife died. Penrose Dietrich after completing the public schools of his locality came out to Iowa when seventeen years of age and soon afterwards still farther west, locating at Fall City, Nebr., where he met Miss. Buchmann, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage. The young couple then located on a Nebraska prairie farm which they improved, growing corn, wheat and oats. In about 1895 they removed to Long Island, Phillips County, Kans., where they purchased and improved a farm and became successful stock raisers and feeders. They met with splendid returns and became owners of a 400-acre farm.

In 1900 they made their first trip to Santa Ana, Cal., and after remaining a year, returned to their Kansas farm, but the lure of the balmy climate was too great and they responded to the call of the West, so in April, 1905, sold their Eastern holdings and located in Santa Ana. They purchased the place Mrs. Dietrich still owns, between four and five acres, on Grand Avenue. They also owned the old Reuter place on Depot Street, where they first made their home until he sold it. They journeyed back East for a visit and there he was taken ill, but so strong was his desire to return to California, the state of his adoption, that he made the trip back, but died six or seven months later, on April 11, 1918.

After his death Mrs. Dietrich spent some time in Los Angeles at her residence, 1231 West Forty-first Street, but now she makes her home on the Grand Avenue ranch, surrounded by her children and many friends. Her seven children are as follows: Annie is the wife of John Hasenyager of Santa Ana, and they have two children; Wm. married Leola Wagner of Santa Ana; Edward is a rancher in Tustin, and married Miss Maude Skelton of Kansas; Frank married Miss Bessie Killebrew of Kansas; Albert and Carrie are deceased; and Elmer is assisting his mother in the care of the ranch. Mrs. Dietrich is a member of the Lutheran Church in Santa Ana and is very charitable in her donations for its upkeep.

JOSEPH POLLOCK.—A very successful, influential rancher whose busy life has been fruitful, ever since his advent here, in advancing the best interests of Orange County, is Joseph Pollock, who lives on Santa Clara Avenue, in Santa Ana, where he devotes his time exclusively to the culture of oranges, and where he has operated since 1911 buying and selling real estate, encouraging others to come to Santa Ana and vicinity to settle, and proving the magnet through which many have found their way to Southern California and fortune.

Mr. Pollock was born in Washington County, New York state, on June 10, 1849, the son of William and Rheumy (Kinney) Pollock, natives, respectively, of Ireland and New York. He was one of eight children, all of whom grew to maturity, while six are now living; and he is the only one residing in California. He was reared in the Empire State and there educated at its excellent public schools; and when the time came for such a decision, he himself chose to be a farmer.

In 1864, however, as a lad of fifteen, when the Civil War was in full swing, he enlisted as a volunteer in the United States Navy and was assigned to the Albert Lee squadron, in which he served on the old frigate Minnesota, at Fortress Monroe, and afterwards on the Agawam, at Deep Bottom, on the James River, where the second officer was Lieutenant George Dewey, in more modern times Admiral Dewey, the hero of Manila Bay. After extended, active service along the Atlantic Coast, Mr. Pollock was honorably discharged at Norfolk, Va., in July, 1865, when he returned to New York.

He then started West and traveled in most of the Middle and Western States, as far as Colorado, Wyoming and Utah, where he followed mining; and then he came back to Hinkley, Ill., and on November 30, 1876, was married to Miss Amanda Strever, the daughter of John Strever, a lady of accomplishment and a member of a family long highly esteemed in their locality. Then he resolved to settle down; and in the spring of 1877 he removed to Austin, Mower County, Minn., where he remained for thirty years, and where he owned and cultivated a farm of 220 acres.

In 1905, he removed to Orange County, Cal., and more than ever he has prospered in his latest environment. He came here with some $15,000, and this he has invested so wisely that it has multiplied materially. Besides his home ranch on Santa Clara Avenue, Mr. Pollock has another farm of twenty acres near Anaheim, upon which he has placed his son, Roy Pollock, who cultivates both oranges and lemons.

Mr. and Mrs. Pollock have had two children, but only one has survived. Roy married Miss Carrie White, by whom he has had four children, three of whom are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Pollock are members of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Santa Ana, and politically are staunch Republicans, and he is naturally a worthy member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Orange.

HANS VICTOR WEISEL.—Prominent among the attorneys of Orange County is Hans Victor Weisel, of Anaheim, where he maintains offices in the Golden State Bank Building. Although not a native of this state, Mr. Weisel has spent much of his life here, coming here with his parents when he was a lad of but nine years. His birth occurred in Milwaukee, Wis., November 6, 1883, and he is of German and French descent, his parents being Peter and Josephine (Cordes) Weisel, the latter a native of Milwaukee, Wis. Both parents are now deceased. The family came to California in 1892, and Hans, who was the seventh child in order of birth of the nine children, received the greater part of his early education in the grammar and high schools here.

Later he attended Rose Polytechnic Institute at Terre Haute, Ind., where for two years he gave his time and attention to the study of electrical and chemical engineering. However, having decided upon a career in the legal profession, he returned to California and entered the College of Law, University of Southern California, where he graduated in 1907. Coming to Anaheim, he entered the practice of law, and after three years he formed a partnership with Roger C. Dutton, under the firm name of Weisel & Dutton. This partnership continued until 1915, and since that time Mr. Weisel has maintained his own offices.

Taking a deep interest in politics, Mr. Weisel was honored by election to the House of Representatives of the State Legislature of California, serving in 1912-14. In politics he is a Republican and was a firm supporter of Roosevelt and Johnson. Fraternally he is an Elk and a member of the Alpha Tau Omega.

On September 25, 1910, occurred Mr. Weisel's marriage to Miss Evangeline C. Gentry, a native daughter of California, and two children have been born to them, Victor G. and Anita E. Their home is at Brookhurst and Mr. Weisel is also the owner of an orange grove. Fond of outdoor life, he enjoys especially the sports of hunting and fishing. Deeply interested in all matters of local import, he is progressive and wide awake in his views and a firm believer in the future of this part of the state.

MISS BELLA J. WALKER.—Among the educators of Orange County who are entitled to the highest confidence and esteem, partly because of their character and personality, and partly on account of the high standards they have set and attained in their academic work, may be named Miss Bella J. Walker, the head of the department of English in the Anaheim Union high school. She comes of a family well known for its identification, through her father and brothers, with the Christian ministry, and is herself rated as a brilliant instructor. She enjoys a popularity not only complimentary in the highest degree to herself, but helpful to the institution in which, under the general leadership of its able principal, she has the honor to teach.

Miss Walker was born in Cayuga, in the province of Ontario, Canada, and is the daughter of the Rev. J. L. Walker, a Methodist minister who was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, and came out to Canada when he was ten years old. He married Miss Elizabeth A. Baldwin; and when our subject was in her third year, they crossed the line into the United States and settled at Columbus. At the end of two years, according to the custom in the Methodist Church, Mr. Walker went on to the L'Anse Indian Mission in the Northern Peninsula, and for many years presided over various charges in Michigan.

Miss Walker received the best training possible in the grade schools, considering that she was compelled so often to change her schools and teachers, and in 1893 was graduated from the Ypsilanti Normal College. Then, for seven years, she taught in the high school of Republic, Mich. After that, in 1902, she studied at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and then, for two years, she was both principal and instructor in the high school at Petoskey, Mich. In 1904, she went to Owosso, in the same state, and became an instructor in the County Teachers' Training School; and she was there until 1907.

In that year, Miss Walker journeyed west to California, to visit her brother, J. Franklin Walker, who was principal of the Anaheim Union high school; and during her visit she purchased five acres on North Street. She went back to Michigan, however, and taught for a year; and in 1908 she returned to the Golden State with her father and sister, Margaret. She built a home on her ranch, and within a year the trio moved onto the five acres. Her beloved mother had passed away in Michigan, and her father went to his eternal reward, rich in the works of eighty-four years, in 1916 while residing in California.

Having once established herself as a member of the Anaheim community, Miss Walker joined the staff of the Anaheim high school and was made head of the English department; and in that very responsible position she has served the commonwealth ever since, contributing what she could toward the highest efficiency in the study of English, both for the present and the opening years to come. When she first saw the high school at Anaheim, her brother as principal was in charge of seventy-nine pupils; and now the school has four hundred. A sister, Miss Margaret Walker, married J. K. Langdon, and lives in Anaheim; and this social relation, together with such activity as Red Cross work during the progress of the late war, has added to the happiness of Miss Walker's residence in the early Orange County town.

The Reverend Mr. Walker found cactus and brush on the land on North Street purchased when they came, and he developed the waste into splendid acreage. Now it is devoted to the cultivation of citrus fruit, and supports seven and eight-year-old Valencia orange trees, irrigated by Section No. 2 of the Water Company. The success of his labors there was but such as one might have expected who had followed his long and successful harvesting as a reaper of souls.

JACOB S. SWINDLER.—About two miles south of Anaheim is the highly cultivated and well-kept walnut grove and orange orchard of Jacob S. Swindler. He was born on October 6, 1852, in Montgomery County, near Crawfordville, Ind., in a log house, and when quite young his parents moved to Missouri where he was reared and educated.

His parents, Joseph S. and Salina (Lyter) Swindler, had a family of eleven children, nine of whom grew to maturity, and six are now living. Jacob S. is the only member of the family living in California. During most of his life he has followed farming although he learned the trade of a carpenter, which he had found of great benefit to him, even in ranching, as the knowledge of the trade enables him to do his own carpenter work, and at times he has done work for his neighbors. Mr. Swindler resided in Missouri until 1900, when he went to Idaho, bought a ranch of 160 acres near Lewiston, where he remained until coming to California in 1911.

Mr. Swindler has been married three times; his first wife was Miss Catherine Davis of Missouri, to whom he was united in February, 1879, and of this union three children were born, two of whom are living: Virgil C.; and Laura, Mrs. Alfred Edwards of Missouri. Mrs. Swindler passed away in 1883. On October 22, 1886, he was united in marriage with Miss Maggie Boyd, she died in April, 1913, in Orange County. Mr. Swindler's present wife, before her marriage, was Mrs. Mary (Williams) Wiley. She and Mr. Swindler were married on June 13, 1914, and one daughter, Dorothy Elizabeth, has been born to them. Mrs. Swindler is a native of Ohio, of Welsh parents, and is the mother of three living children by her former marriage: Fannie, Ethel and W. Victor Wiley. Mrs. Swindler has lived in California since a year old. Her parents came to what is now Orange County in 1876, and settled in Gospel Swamp, where they have since lived. She was reared and educated here, and in 1900 was married to Victor L. Wiley. She spent six years in Iowa after her marriage, but came back to California, where Mr. Wiley died in 1908.

Mrs. Swindler is the owner of a ranch of ten and one-third acres which is well improved, and since her marriage to Mr. Swindler he has given it his especial attention, making many improvements which have enhanced the value and attractiveness of the property by setting out six acres of Valencia oranges and four acres of walnuts. Mr. Swindler owns eleven and one-quarter acres of walnuts near by, all of which he looks after in person. Mr. and Mrs. Swindler are members of the Christian Church and are highly respected citizens of the community, where they have many warm friends. In politics they are Republicans.

HERMAN F. MEYER.—An industrious and enterprising orange grower, residing on Katella Road and Palm Avenue, in the Anaheim district, is Herman F. Meyer, the owner of a five-acre orange orchard, about seven years old. His ranch is well improved and a modern residence adds to its attractiveness.— Mr. Meyer was born on September 5, 1857, at Chicago Ill., a son of Herman and Wilhelmina Meyer, natives of Germany. Herman Meyer, Sr., learned the trade of a shoemaker in Germany but after emigrating to the United States he followed agricultural pursuits. The family settled in Iowa, where the father engaged in farming until he passed away in 1900. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Meyer moved to California in 1907, with her son Herman F., and she passed away at Los Angeles in 1911. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer were the parents of eleven children, seven of whom are living, and four brothers, Henry, August, Charles and Herman F., reside in California.

When Herman F. Meyer came to California in 1907 he went to Santa Cruz, where he lived for six and one-half years, subsequently going to Aromas, San Benito County, where he owned about sixty acres which he devoted to general farming and fruit raising. In 1918 he removed to Orange County and located on his present place, and as a result of his diligent work he has become one of the successful ranchers there.

On June 4, 1896, Mr. Meyer was united in marriage with Miss Anna M. Rudolph, daughter of Valentine and Catherine Rudolph, and they have become the parents of six children: Edgar, Marie, Carl, Albert, Merten and Herman. Mrs. Meyer is a native of Cedar Lake, Ind., where she was born on December 21, 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and politically they support the Republican ticket. A former marriage of Mr. Meyer, in 1884, united him with Miss Sophia Frevert, and two children were born to them, Hulda of Santa Rosa, and Esther, who is now deceased.

EDWARD KARLOFF.—An enterprising, successful orange grower who is known as a liberal-minded, public-spirited citizen, ready at all times to do what he can both to build up the town and the county and also to help in the great work of upbuilding, or improving things socially and educationally, is Edward Karloff, who was born in Posen, Germany, on March 5, 1868, and there attended the public schools. As early as 1891 he was fortunate in being able to come out to America and to Chicago, and there he soon found work in the great stockyards. Then he took to gardening, and made a success of that; and when he decided to push on still further to the West, he was ready for the new and severer problems awaiting his attention.

In 1894 he arrived at Anaheim and at once went to work on a ranch as a farm hand, getting one dollar and a quarter a day for from twelve to fifteen hours of labor, and boarding himself. He was frugal, however, notwithstanding these adverse conditions, and by 1902 had saved enough to be able to buy his present place of ten acres on Ball Road. It was raw land then; but his industry, guided by intelligent reflection, soon transformed it into improved land, and there he set out Valencia oranges, interset with walnuts which his enterprise had raised independently of the nurseries, and today all are bearing finely.

While in Germany, Mr. Karloff was married to Miss Louisa Kroeger, a native of Posen and a woman with the desirable domestic virtues and accomplishments for which Germans are so favorably known; and they have three bright children—Elsa, Bertha and Walter. The family attend the Anaheim Lutheran Church; and Mr. and Mrs. Karloff, intense in their patriotic Americanism, subscribe to the political creeds of the Republican party, although in supporting desirable local projects they are non-partisan in the extreme. Mr. Karloff thinks that Orange County can have only a brilliant future; and Orange County naturally expects but one result from the hard work of Mr. and Mrs. Karloff to make a happy home and a prosperous ranching estate.

JOHN F. GUTHRIE.—Descended from Scotch ancestors who were early settlers of Virginia, John F. Guthrie is himself a native of the Old Dominion. He was born October 14, 1874, near Nathalie, in Halifax County, Va., his parents being Thomas and Sallie Guthrie. His father, who was also a native of Virginia, was the owner of a 400-acre tobacco plantation in Halifax County, and here John F. spent his boyhood days, receiving his education in the schools at Nathalie. When he was twenty-two years of age he took an extensive trip through the Southern States and also made a visit to Cuba and Porto Rico. During the year 1897 he farmed in Florida, near Bradentown on the Manistee River. The following year, when the Spanish-American War broke out he enlisted for service and was in the quartermaster's department of the U. S. Army, being stationed both in Cuba and Porto Rico.

Returning to his old home in Virginia at the close of the war, he farmed there for two years, but the trips that he had taken gave him a taste for travel and a keen desire to see more of the world. Accordingly he set out for California, and arriving at Los Angeles, engaged in various kinds of work, being for a time with the Kerckhoff-Cuzner Lumber Company and later spending a short time on a ranch near Compton.

On April 2, 1907, Mr. Guthrie was married to Miss Emma Ahrens, the ceremony being solemnized at Los Angeles. She is a native daughter of California, her parents, Fred and Caroline Ahrens, residing at Main and Nineteenth streets at the time of her birth. Mr. Ahrens, who was a cabinet maker by trade, came to California from Grand Rapids, Mich., in 1886, following his trade after locating in Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie are the parents of two sons, Randolph and Arthur.

Shortly after his marriage Mr. Guthrie removed to San Mateo, where he spent six years with the Wisdom-Loop Lumber Company, as foreman of their San Mateo yards. He then gave up lumber yard work and came to Orange County, purchasing ten acres of land on Magnolia Avenue in 1912. At the time he bought it, it was barren cactus land and he set to work to develop it, setting it out to Valencia oranges. He has used the most up-to-date methods in his ranch work and has been very successful, the income from his orchard increasing steadily each year. Mr. Guthrie has a private pumping plant on his ranch and has one of the best pipe systems in the vicinity, having three sets of valves across the property. Besides caring for his own ranch Mr. Guthrie rents from 50 to 100 acres of land each year on which he does truck gardening, raising corn, tomatoes, beans, etc.

Mr. Guthrie takes an active interest in all civic affairs and has served on the school board as a trustee. A believer in the principles of the Republican party, he gives his support and vote to the nominees of that party. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Masonic order and with his wife attends the Grace Lutheran Church at Anaheim. During his residence in San Mateo Mr. Guthrie was appointed by Governor Gillett to fill a vacancy on the sanitation committee of the hospital in that vicinity, and he discharged the duties of this office to the satisfaction of everyone.

MISS MABLE MCGEE.—One of the most capable and successful business women of Brea, and one who, in fact, has the distinction of having filled four city offices, is Miss Mable McGee, dealer in real estate, insurance, investments, bonding, etc. She is a native of Page County, Iowa, and received her early education in the grammar and high schools of Coin, Iowa, which was supplemented with a special commercial course in Amity College, and subsequently a business and commercial course in the Omaha Business College, at Omaha, Nebr. She fitted herself for the vocation of a stenographer, and she held positions of responsibility in this line of work in Omaha, Nebr., Denver, Colo., Wyoming and New Mexico.

In 1912, Miss McGee came to Los Angeles, Cal., and in 1914 located in Brea, soon after this thriving little town had started. For three and a half years she was in the employ of Stern and Goodman and Ray Brothers, and later became stenographer for the firm of Salveson-Brown; afterwards she was stenographer for the city attorney of Brea, Albert Launer. While in the latter office she decided to seek the position of clerk of Brea, and at the polls was duly elected to that important office in 1918 for a two-year term, ending in April, 1920. That she ably filled the office to the utmost satisfaction of the citizens of Brea is attested to by the fact of her appointment to the additional positions of city recorder, city assessor and deputy tax collector.

In addition to her many civic duties Miss McGee engaged in the real estate and insurance business, is notary public and public stenographer. The busy and successful career of this young business woman furnishes a splendid example of what can be accomplished by women who are specially trained for their specific lines of business. By her splendid achievements in the civic life of Brea, Miss McGee has won for herself a prominent place among the citizens of this growing and prosperous little city.

FRED BENTJEN.—A very successful horticulturist, who attributes much of his progress to the ambition, striving and self-denial of his good wife, is Fred Bentjen, rated by all who know his warm advocacy of both popular and advanced education as one of the truest-hearted of Americans. He was born in Germany on February 4, 1863, the son of Dietrich and Helen (Janscen) Bentjen, farmer folk in that country, noted for their intelligence and up-to-date ideas, and he was twenty-three years old when he left home to come to America. He sailed from Bremen for New York, and then went on to Nebraska. While at home, he had helped his father with the farm work, and in the new West he always found engagements enough, continuing for nine years as a laborer on a farm. Once he went back to his native country; but it was only for a visit and he not only returned to the United States, but he married at Pender, Thurston County, Nebr., on March 29, 1895, Miss Helen Wolffe, also a native of Germany.

Selling out his interests at Pender, he moved to Boone County, in the same state, where he went in for general farming, raising in particular on his 200 acres grain and stock, and also potatoes. In 1909 he came west to California and for three years lived at Richfield; and in 1912 he removed to West Anaheim. There he planted fourteen acres of citrus trees now six years old and full bearing, and three acres of walnuts; joined the Farm Center, became active in civic work under the banners of the Republican party, and also became a stockholder in the Anaheim Orange and Lemon Growers Association. He bought into a well company having a plant pumping 100 inches and serving twenty ranchers, and he assumed charge of the well and the pump, which are located on his ranch.

Six children have blessed the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Bentjen: Anna is now the wife of Otto Rohrs, the rancher of Orange, and has one child; Tillie is married and is the wife of Dick Heitshusen, an oil man of Brea, the ceremony having taken place in July, 1920; Fred entered the army in defense of his country, but was not sent to the front on account of the armistice, and now he is ranching and living at home; Ida is the wife of Raymond Grimm, a rancher of Anaheim; Lena resides at home, and so does Mary. All the children were born in Nebraska, and confirmed in the Lutheran faith. Mr. Bentjen has served as a member of the board of the Anaheim German Parochial School.

DAVID D. GARDNER.—An expert celery grower who is also a good business man is David D. Gardner, who owned ten acres three and a half miles northeast of Huntington Beach, and grows twenty acres of celery on rented land. He is a partner with his brother-in-law, Wallace W. Blaylock, and together they are widely known as celery experts.

He was born in Madison County, Nebr., on March 2, 1884, the son of David Gardner, a rancher, who had married Miss Sarah Hetzler. In 1892 they removed to California, taking with them their family of six children. Here the father passed away, in 1906, and the mother is now living, retired, in the La Bolsa district, in Orange County. Adam Gardner, who is in business in San Francisco, was the first born of the family; then came Al, who lives at home; after that Ralph, the rancher at Oakdale; then David, our subject; next Earl, who owns twenty acres and rents seven hundred, and lives a quarter of a mile from Bolsa; and finally, Lida, the wife of Frank Burton, the rancher, of Stanton, Orange County.

David was eight years old when he came to Orange County, and in 1907 he was married to Miss Johnnie Girdner Horton, a native of Arkansas, and the daughter of Warren H. and Laura Horton. The former died here in 1907. Mrs. Gardner is a near relative of Dr. Girdner of New York. Four children blessed this union: Hayden, Mabel, Geraldine and David.

Mr. Gardner planted his farm of ten acres to beans and beets, and this alone affords him a good living. He has a good partner, and some of their celery will bring $1,500 an acre, netting each partner a handsome income. As a family, the Gardners have valuable connections and many friends, being highly esteemed for their ideals and public spirit.

WALLACE W. BLAYLOCK.—The successful culture of celery in Orange County owes much to Wallace W. Blaylock, like his partner, David D. Gardner, a noted celery expert. He lives with his interesting family on his ranch of twenty acres in the Talbot-Wintersburg district, where he is known and respected as a very successful farmer. In national politics, he has always supported the Democratic platforms; but he has cast aside partisanship in endorsing the best men and the best measures for local development, with the result that today he enjoys life in one of the most favored areas in all the Golden State.

He was born in Franklin County, Ark., in the Ozark country, famous for its large red apples, on September 11, 1863, and there attended the public schools. His father was Robert Blaylock, a native of Georgia and a member of a fine old English family that had settled in the South; and his mother was Agnes Blaylock, who was born in Tennessee. They married in Arkansas, and there Robert Blaylock died when Wallace was only twelve years of age. Mrs. Blaylock lived to be seventy-six, and died in California. Five of their children grew up; and among them Wallace was the second in the order of birth. Mrs. Blaylock came of Scotch ancestry, and Grandfather Blaylock reached the grand old age of 103; Wallace, therefore, has very naturally inherited exceptional virility.

When he was twenty-one years of age, Mr. Blaylock came west to California and settled at El Monte, in Los Angeles County; and in 1900 he returned to Arkansas. There he married Miss Emma Horton, a sister of Mrs. D. D. Gardner. Mrs. Blaylock's uncle was the noted New Yorker, Dr. Girdner.

Mr. and Mrs. Blaylock have five children: Both Frances and Charles are in the high school at Huntington Beach; while Julianne, William and Wallace, twins, are attending the grammar school of the Wintersburg district.

EARL CHESTER DUTTON.—The Buckeye State claims Earl C. Dutton, the progressive young rancher of the Anaheim district, as a native son. He was born in Albany, Athens County, Ohio, on July 11, 1882, a son of W. H. and Ida (Linscott) Dutton. They were the parents of two children, C. Clifford and Earl Chester Dutton, the subject of this review.

W. H. Dutton was born in Harrison County, Ohio, in 1858 and followed the jewelry business from boyhood, his father having been a pioneer jeweler in Ohio. In 1891, he migrated with his family to California, where he engaged in the jewelry business at Los Angeles, remaining there until 1908, when the family moved to their present home place in Orange County. At that time the land was unimproved. Three months after locating on his ranch of ten acres, W. H. Dutton passed away; his son Earl took charge of the estate, and has made all the improvements and spared neither labor or expense in bringing the place up to its present day high state of production. His indefatigable labors and enterprising efforts have been amply rewarded by bountiful crops, seven acres being devoted to oranges and three to avocados. He makes a specialty of the Dutton avocado, originated by himself on his ranch and which has proven of great value because it ripens in winter. This is a widely planted variety, calls having come from Florida and the Hawaiian Islands for the budded variety. Mr. Dutton is a member of the California Avocado Association. For ten years he has been a member of the Orange County Republican Central Committee and taken an active interest in political affairs in the county and state.

On September 21, 1906, Mr. Dutton was united in marriage with Miss Mildred C. Cottrell, and four children have been born to them: William K., John C., Margaret C., and Ruth D. Fraternally, Mr. Dutton is a member of the Order of Eagles, being the past president of Anaheim Aerie No. 947, and also holds membership in the American Genetic Society. He and his family are highly esteemed in the community for their high ideals of character and citizenship.

FERDINAND HEYING.—A poultry fancier who is unusually successful in raising prize show birds, as well as in maintaining a fine orange ranch, is Ferdinand Heying, whose home is on Loara Road, west of Anaheim. Missouri was Mr. Heying's native state, and he was born there on June 3, 1866, at Rhineland, Montgomery County. His parents were Bernhard and Alida (Struttman) Heying, the father having come from Germany in 1844, and was one of the pioneer settlers of Montgomery County, Mo. He was a well known farmer there for many years, owning 120 acres, most of which was Missouri River bottom land. When the Civil War broke out he enlisted in the Union Army and served valiantly for his adopted country.

The early days of Ferdinand Heying were spent on the home place, where he obtained such education as the schools of that time and place afforded, but as the terms were short—only four months a year—he had to gain most of his schooling through his own efforts. Part of their farm was timberland and this he helped his father clear, raising a few acres of tobacco here, and devoting the remainder to corn, wheat and stock. One of the happiest memories of Mr. Heying's youthful days is his membership in the Rhineland Brass Band. This little organization made quite a reputation for itself, being called upon to play for every notable gathering in that part of the country, for every member of the band was a good performer on his particular instrument and with their zealous hours of practice they were able to play music quite in advance of the usual village band. Mr. Heying was one of the leading performers, playing the E-flat cornet in the band and the B-flat cornet in the orchestra work.

Mr. Heying remained on his father's farm until he was of age, when he engaged in the lumber business, sawing the rough lumber for the farm buildings of the vicinity at his mill. He handled walnut, oak, elm, sycamore, maple and cottonwood lumber, and when the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad was built through that part of Missouri he furnished ties for the company. Mr. Heying also acquired an eighty-acre farm near Rhineland, sixty-five acres being bottom land and fifteen acres upland, and here he set out a fine apple orchard, Winesaps, Zanos, Jonathans and Arkansas Blacks being among the varieties that he grew; in addition he also had a good sized orchard of peaches and pears.

In 1902 Mr. Heying came to California and settled at Anaheim, where for some time he was engaged at various occupations. Later he purchased thirteen acres of land near Fullerton, north of the Burdoff ranch; this was vacant land at the time and Mr. Heying began at once to improve it, setting it out to walnuts and bringing it up to a high state of cultivation. He still owns this property, which is producing a fine yield, and he markets his walnuts at the Benchley Packing House. In November, 1916, he purchased five acres on Loara Road, west of Anaheim, and here he now makes his home. The place is set to Valencia oranges and it is irrigated by water from the pumping plant of John Eells, who has one of the finest wells in Orange County. Mr. Heying is a member of the Anaheim Citrus Exchange, and of course, markets his oranges through that organization. Since coming to his Anaheim ranch Mr. Heying has developed a thriving poultry business on his ranch, specializing in prize show birds of the Rhode Island Red variety. He has made a special study of this branch of the poultry business and has mastered the secrets of its success; he now has about 300 birds.

The marriage of Mr. Heying occurred on June 24, 1888, when he was united with Miss Emma Dyckman, who like himself was born in Montgomery County, Mo. They are the parents of four children: Alfred and Oscar, are both graduate pharmacists and have a splendid business at Anaheim; Alfred graduated from the San Francisco School of Pharmacy and on account of his brilliant work there won a scholarship that entitled him to an additional year of study; Edward G. lives at Fillmore, where he also has a drug store; Ernest B. is attending a dental college at Los Angeles. Oscar and Edward trained at Camp Lewis; the former went to France and the latter was in the gas detail in the United States where the gas was manufactured. Ernest attended the dental college under government regulation until the armistice was signed. A Republican in national politics, Mr. Heying is nonpartisan in his political views where local issues are concerned, believing the best interests of the community are conserved by putting the best man in office, regardless of party ties.

EUGENE L. McCARTER.—A resident of Orange County since 1903 and now an enthusiastic horticulturist in the Tustin district is Eugene L. McCarter, who was born near Clay Center, Clay County, Kans., April 5, 1888, a son of Thos. J. McCarter who is represented on another page in this work. Eugene L. was reared on the farm in Kansas and attended the public school of his district. Coming with his parents to Orange County when he was in his fifteenth year, he completed the grammar school and then entered the Santa Ana high school where he was graduated in 1910.

He then followed ranching for a time to earn the money to pay his way through the Brownsberger Business College in Los Angeles. After graduating from this institution he became bookkeeper for a Los Angeles Grocery Company where he continued for eighteen months. But the call of the farm was too strong so he returned to Orange County to begin ranching. He purchased ten acres on the Newport Road and also leased land and engaged in horticulture as well as raising beans. Two years later he sold his place at a good profit and bought a ten-acre walnut grove on the Red Hill Road in Tustin which was interset with Valencia oranges. Four years later he sold it at a big profit and then he bought two ranches, one of ten acres on Red Hill and San Juan streets, devoted to walnuts and the other of eleven acres set to Valencia oranges, located on Prospect Avenue, both lying in the Tustin district. Meantime he also purchased ten acres at West Acres adjoining the Forkner Fig Gardens in Fresno, which he set to figs and two years later sold it at a profit.

Aside from his own ranches he has helped to develop and set out several other ranches to orange and walnut groves. During this time he has been a close student of horticulture, so much so that he has become a well posted and successful horticulturist. He is also the owner of a valuable corner in Seattle, Wash. He is a member of the Santa Ana Valley Walnut Growers Association and the Tustin Hill Citrus Association. Mr. McCarter makes his home on Prospect Avenue, where he has a comfortable residence and resides with his wife and three children, Barbara, Eugene L., Jr., and Gwendolyn.

His marriage in Santa Ana, February 28, 1916, united him with Miss Minnie Mae Montgomery, born in Hereford, Texas. She came with her parents, Lyman A. and Kate (Mercer) Montgomery, to Santa Ana; they were natives of Iowa and Mr. Montgomery died here. Mrs. Montgomery is a graduate of the San Diego State Normal and has been engaged in educational work for many years and now teaching at Westminster. Mrs. McCarter was graduated from Santa Ana high school in 1914. The family attend the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana. In national principles Mr. McCarter believes in the policy of protection and is a staunch Republican.

ARTHUR BELDEN McCORD.—The history of the banking institutions of Southern California is interesting, and their soundness and stability are due to the tried and true men at the helm, enabling them in the past to weather many a storm in which older established Eastern banks have been less fortunate.

The competent and popular cashier of the Anaheim National Bank is a native of Shelburn, Ind., born September 1, 1882. His parents, George A. and Lethia (Hazelrigg) McCord, are living in Los Angeles, where the father is a contractor.

Arthur Belden is the oldest child in a family of eight children, and received a public school education supplemented with a business college course, and a course at the Central Normal School at Danville, Ind., after which he taught school for three years at Fairbanks, that state. His first step in the business world was in connection with the Terre Haute Traction and Light Company, in their purchasing department, in which position he remained two years. After coming to California he was connected with the Commercial National Bank at Los Angeles, for five years, and was assistant cashier of the Traders Bank in that city, two years. He then accepted a position as cashier of the German American Bank of Anaheim, and from there went to the Anaheim National Bank as cashier, his present position.

The marriage of Mr. McCord occurred April 30, 1905, and united him with Miss Ellen Mahaney of Indiana. Mr. McCord belongs to the Christian Church and politically is a staunch Republican. He is associated fraternally with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is fond of hunting, fishing and motoring, recreations in which he finds relaxation from the cares of business life. He is very active in Anaheim civic affairs, and is a man of standing and influence in the community, where he is esteemed not only for his personal worth but for the public spirit he manifests and his interest in all things pertaining to the welfare of Orange County.

FRANCIS M. BENNETT.—A rancher who has farmed in various sections of Orange County and is, therefore, well posted as to soil and climatic conditions in this favored part of the Golden State, is F. M. Bennett who is at present yard foreman for the Orange County Fumigating Company. He was born near Rondo, Polk County, Mo., on August 24, 1875, and his parents were Samuel and Harriet A. Bennett, farmers in the Iron State. The lad attended the district school at Rondo, and worked at home until after he was of age.

On attaining his twenty-first year, he started out into the world for himself, taking up farming as a means for a livelihood. On May 18, 1897, he was married to Miss Catherine Marsh, who was born in northern Missouri, the daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Marsh, also farmers; and they came to California and remained two years, during which time their only child, Jesse D., was accidentally burned at Orange, and died from its injuries. Later, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett returned to Missouri, and there, in 1899, Mrs. Bennett died.

Once again Mr. Bennett came out to California, and this time he brought with him his father and mother. They settled on East Chapman Avenue in Orange, and there purchased ten acres for $3,500. At the end of two years, however, they disposed of their holding and moved into Orange. In 1909, Mr. Bennett's father died, and just ten years later, his mother passed away.

On November 15, 1905, Mr. Bennett married a second time, choosing for his wife Miss Alice Ferguson, a native of Iowa and the daughter of Chauncey and Laura Ferguson; and since then have been farming, for the most part near Santa Ana, Orange and Anaheim. In 1912, he had a boarding house at Camp No. 7, Big Creek, in the Sierras, about seventy-five miles from Fresno; but after spending a year there in the mountains, he left and went to Texas, settling some sixty miles from San Antonio. He ran an express, and farmed eighty acres of land. The lure of California drew him back to Orange County in 1914, and then he worked as yard foreman for the Orange County Fumigating Company. He next removed to Buena Park and ranched for a while, and then was overseer of the Holton ranch, forty acres of which are devoted to oranges, and forty to walnuts. While in Texas, Mr. Bennett bought twenty acres near proven oil lands. Mr. Bennett is a member of the Episcopal Church at Anaheim, in politics is a Republican, and fraternally belongs to both the Odd Fellows and Masons of Orange.

G. RAYMOND FRANKLIN.—Interesting and varied have been the life experiences of G. Raymond Franklin; an extensive traveler, soldier of fortune and now a successful business man, makes an unusual combination, and goes far to show the versatility of this patriotic American. Instead of turning his attention to politics on leaving the army, as the hero of San Juan, Roosevelt, did, he has "thrown his hat" into the business ring, and the mettle of the man insures success. Born in Dwight, Livingston County, Ill., May 30, 1878, he is a son of James L. and Dora (Schuman) Franklin, both natives of Illinois, and the father conducted the largest general store at Dwight for many years.

The son received his education in the public schools of his home town, and the Dwight high school, and when a young man took a trip to Europe, traveling extensively and visiting nearly all the principal cities all over the continent. In 1898, when the Spanish War broke out, he enlisted in the Thirteenth Infantry of Regulars, as a private, and rose to the position of first lieutenant. His regiment was the third to land in Cuba, and saw active service all through the Cuban campaign, taking part in the battle of San Juan Hill, at which time Mr. Franklin was sergeant. He arrived in the Philippine Islands, May 30, 1899, and saw four years' service there, taking part in many skirmishes and engagements, serving under General Lawton, and was near that brave soldier when he was shot from his horse, and wounded in the arm, at the capture of San Fabian. Besides becoming an officer in the Philippine Islands, the young soldier served as interpreter, speaking Spanish fluently. On returning to the United States he was placed in charge of the military prison at Alcatraz Island, San Francisco Bay. He resigned from the army in 1905, after seven years of faithful service.

His first civilian occupation after military life was as bookkeeper and cashier with the Pacific Implement Company of San Francisco, and he later held the same position with the Standard Hardware Company of that city. He next went down into Mexico and became forwarding agent with the Southern Pacific Railway during the construction of the line from Guaymas to Tepic, on the west coast. After his work in Mexico, he became purchasing agent for the U. S. Smelting Company of Kingman, Ariz., for three years, and then engaged in business for himself in Kingman, selling mining machinery and automobiles, for five years. During the World War he served for six months, receiving a captain's commission from Washington and was sent to Camp Fremont, where he was general instructor at the officers' training camp.

In April, 1919, Mr. Franklin came to Anaheim and was one of the organizers of the Orange County Auto Company, becoming secretary and manager of the concern, J. L. Finley of Pasadena being the president. The company occupied a large and modern garage and show room at 111-113 North Lemon Street and did a flourishing business handling several makes of cars. On June 1, 1920, Mr. Franklin severed his connection with the company and took the agency for the Auburn Beauty Six and Gardner Four and is located on West Center Street where he meets his many friends in his usual genial manner.

The marriage of G. R. Franklin united him with Ethel M. Jeans, a native of San Francisco, and they have one daughter, Barbara. Fraternally, Mr. Franklin is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, having demitted from Kingman (Ariz.) Lodge No. 468, B. P. O. Elks. Since he has elected to make Anaheim his home he has become interested in all movements that have for their aim the betterment of the community and is rapidly building up a reputation among the business men of the county.

HARRY J. NYLEN.—Numbered among the newer residents of Orange County who are making a success of citrus culture is H. J. Nylén, whose ranch is located on Orange Avenue, near Anaheim. Although he has lived in Orange County but a short time, Mr. Nylén is no stranger to California, as he previously resided at Whittier, where his father's family located in 1900.

H. J. Nylén was born in Corry, Erie County, Pa., on May 30, 1872, the son of J. T. and Olive Nylén, whose family consisted of five children, three of whom are living in California. The mother passed away on January 21, 1917; the father still resides at Whittier. H. J. Nylén followed the barber's trade in Whittier for nine years, after which he engaged in agriculture and citrus culture and then went to Hemet, bought twenty acres and set it out to peaches and apricots. Seven years later they sold out and spent one year in Santa Ana. In 1916 he located on a ranch in West Anaheim, which he devoted to citrus growing, and where he made many needed improvements by setting out Valencia oranges. He sold the ranch in January, 1920, and took up his residence in Anaheim.

On October 10, 1907, Mr. Nylén was united in marriage with Mary Elizabeth Lark, a native of Illinois, born in McDonough County, and the daughter of Mrs. Caroline Lark, who came to California in 1900. One son, John, now deceased, was born to them. Fraternally Mr. Nylén has been an Odd Fellow, and also a member of the Modern Woodmen lodge at Hemet. He and his wife belong to the Christian Church.

WILLIAM EDWARD DUCKWORTH.—An experienced merchant who has attended strictly to business, and in doing so has established a flourishing trade in feed, fuel, seeds and ice, as well as all kinds of poultry supplies, is William Edward Duckworth, who was born at Hutchinson, Kans., on November 26, 1885. His father was John W. Duckworth, born in Iowa, while his mother was Emma Handy before her marriage, and a native of Illinois. They now live retired in Anaheim, and of their three children Wm. E. is second oldest. The oldest is Guy E., a merchant in Honolulu. The youngest is Mrs. Lola Pendleton of Pasadena.

When William was still a child, the family came to California in 1895, and under the inspiring environment of the Golden State he was reared and educated. He first attended the grammar and then the high school of Anaheim; and after that, for several years, assisted his father in mercantile business. Then he engaged in blacksmithing and the sale of implements; and in each of these endeavors he proved his ability to understand the wants of the public, and to please and give convenience to his patrons by anticipating their desires.

In 1907 Mr. Duckworth established his present business, in which he has been very successful, being now the largest individual business of the kind in Anaheim. He belongs to the Board of Trade and the Merchants Association, and whenever there is anything to be done under their leadership, William Duckworth is one of the first to volunteer to put his shoulder to the wheel.

When, on August 16, 1904, Mr. Duckworth was married, he took for his bride Miss Gertrude Crippen of Anaheim; and two children have blessed their fortunate union, John and Guy Duckworth. The family attend the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Duckworth is a Republican in national politics, and greatly interested in civic duty and reforms. He is an Elk, and belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World.

BERNARD R. MASTERS.—Among the enterprising and successful young ranchers of the Anaheim district, one who has been a citizen of Orange County from a young lad, is Bernard R. Masters, lessee of a ten-acre ranch on Dale Street, one-quarter of a mile north of the County Road.

He is a native of Nebraska, born at College View, March 6, 1892, the son of John and Bettie Masters, natives of Illinois and Norway, respectively. John Masters was by trade a wagonmaker and followed this occupation most of his lifetime. In 1898 John Masters migrated to California and, after spending two years in the Golden State, sent for his family to join him in the land of sunshine and flowers. In 1900 he purchased the place now operated by his son, Bernard R. Masters. John Masters is still living and resides at his ranch; his loving and faithful wife passed away to the Great Beyond in 1916. Their family consisted of eight children, seven of whom are living, and residents of California.

In 1900, when Mr. Masters purchased his present ranch, the land was used as a barley field and possessed a flowing well. Since that time many improvements have been made, the land set out to citrus fruit and appropriate buildings erected. The original well finally failed to supply the much-needed water for the development of the ranch, but another well, with a seven-inch bore sunk 127 feet, supplies sufficient water, by a powerful pumping plant, to irrigate the entire place.

Bernard R. Masters received his early education in the splendid public school of his district and has grown to manhood in this community where he is highly esteemed for his manly qualities and loyal support of all worthy movements for the development of the county's best interests.

Disregarding the superstition of Friday the thirteenth, Bernard R. Masters was united in marriage on Friday, December 13, 1918, with Miss Catherine, daughter of Mrs. Mary McDougall. She is a native daughter, born at Lancaster, Los Angeles County, and they have one daughter, Bettie Mary Masters. The McDougall family moved to California the same year in which the Masters located in Orange County. Mr. McDougall was a prominent stockman and passed away in Lancaster. Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Masters have a large circle of warm friends in their community. In politics Mr. Masters is a Republican.

EDWARD W. LEHMBERG.—Thrift and frugality are characteristics which usually bring success to the man who consistently practices them in his business. It is to these traits of character that can be attributed the rapid strides that Edward D. Lehmborg has made in the citrus industry since coming to Orange County, when his financial assets amounted to but two dollars in cash. At the present time he is the owner of a ten-acre ranch devoted to citrus fruit, located on Brookhurst Road, in the Anaheim district.

This progressive young rancher was born in Illinois on June 5, 1893, and is the adopted son of William and Annie Miller. His mother died when he was but an infant, but his foster parents gave him the same loving care and attention as though he had been their own child. In subsequent years, after learning that his father was living, and that Mr. and Mrs. Miller were his foster parents, he took the surname of his father, Lehmborg.

Edward W. Lehmborg was reared and educated in Illinois by Mr. and Mrs. Miller and when old enough he chose agriculture for his vocation. In 1911 he left their home to seek his fortune in the West, locating that year in Orange County, where he has since resided. At first he was employed on a ranch, but being thrifty and possessed of a progressive spirit he wisely saved his money and today is the owner of a well kept and profitable citrus orchard.

On February 24, 1916, Mr. Lehmborg was united in marriage with Miss Lillian Otte, a native of Iowa, and the daughter of Claus and Catherine Otte, who have lived in the Olive district of Orange County since 1906. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lehmborg: Lola C. and Roger W. They attend the Lutheran Church and are highly respected among their ever widening circle of friends.

HUGO J. LAMB.—A favorite son of western Orange County who is fast rising into prominence and influence, is Hugo J. Lamb, who is also a very successful beet and bean raiser, operating his ranch of 144 acres, but resides in Santa Ana. He was born at New Hope, in Orange County, on December 9, 1888, the fourth of the five living children of the late W. D. and Elizabeth (Holt) Lamb. The other four children are: Mrs. E. J. Levensgood, of Pomona; Walter D. Lamb, who resides at 415 West Walnut Street, in Santa Ana; Mrs. G. L. Harper, the wife of the rancher living on Mrs. Elizabeth Lamb's ranch; and Earl A. Lamb, also a rancher. Hugo J. grew up in western Orange County, and saw the Gospel Swamp, as the country used to be called, in its native state of jungle, tules, willows and peat bogs. He attended the Talbert grammar school, which is known by the name of the Fountain Valley grammar school; and being ambitious of obtaining as good an education as was possible, he also pursued the courses of the Huntington Beach high school.

At the age of twenty, March 3, 1909, Mr. Lamb was married at Santa Ana to Miss Effie Stockton, born in Arkansas, a daughter of the late J. T. Stockton of Wintersburg. Their union has been a singularly happy one, and was blessed with the birth of two children, Lois and Alice. Mr. Lamb belongs to Santa Ana Lodge, No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and in politics aims to support only the best men and the best principles. He is serving as a member of the Orange County grand jury. Foresight and the application of the last word in science to the problems of agriculture characterize the manner in which Mr. Lamb operates. He uses twenty horses for his farm work, and both a Holt forty-five horsepower tractor and a tractor of the Sampson make. All the other appliances of his well-kept farm are thoroughly up to date. Although still operating the farm he resides with his family in his residence at 530 South Sycamore Street, Santa Ana.

RUDOLPH MEGER.—A progressive, successful rancher whose home-place improvements have added materially both to the wealth and the attractiveness of Orange County, is Rudolph Meger, who owns and operates ten acres devoted to choice oranges, a quarter of a mile south of Broadway and east of Brookhurst Street, Anaheim. When he purchased the property, in 1913, it was in a very unimproved condition; but it was not long before he had set out 300 trees which will soon be in full bearing condition. He continued his labors and experiments, and he has been able to make many other desirable improvements on his ranch, converting the land into a most desirable country estate. Mr. Meger was born in Russia-Poland, on March 10, 1884, and is the son of Gottlieb and Elvina Meger, natives of the same northern country. No less than eleven of the fourteen children born to his parents are now in America, and of these, nine are in California and seven are in Orange County.

As early as 1902 Mr. Meger came to Orange County, and having always followed agricultural pursuits, he had less difficulty than many in establishing himself amid new environments. He has also always worked hard, and as a reward he has seen a profitable homestead spring into existence for himself and family, if not in a single night, then by such steady degrees as give heart and satisfaction to the worker. What he and his worthy family have, they may fairly be said to have made with their own hands, and so should be credited with the favorable results.

Successful and assured of even more success, smiling at a world that beamed and smiled at him, Mr. Meger on July 3, 1912, was married to Miss Tina Edinger, the daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Edinger; and three children have blessed their fortunate union. They are Ruth, Edward and Henry. Mrs. Meger was also born in Russia, in 1890, and was a mere babe when she came to the United States, so that she has grown up under the Stars and Stripes.

WALTER A. LUCE.—A young, enterprising rancher of the type which can never be restrained from forging ahead and making for itself a most honorable place in the agricultural world, is Walter A. Luce, who has been a resident of California since 1906. He is a native of Hazardville, Conn., where he was born on October 30, 1886, and is the son of Walter and Mary Luce, the former a native of Connecticut, the latter having first seen the light in Germany. Besides our subject, these worthy folks had another son, Frank, who is now a painting contractor in Anaheim.

The family migrated to Nebraska when Walter was a small boy, and there he was educated, enjoying the advantage of both a grammar school and a high school training. Early in life, he entered the dry goods trade in Omaha, and in time he specialized in millinery. He served as a clerk in Omaha, then became a millinery buyer there, in the store where he was employed, then went to Houston, Texas, in the same capacity; later he went to New York City and from there came to Los Angeles, Cal., in 1906, as millinery buyer for the Broadway Department Store. He followed this business until coming to Anaheim in 1917 to take charge of the orange and lemon ranch that had been purchased by his mother, three miles west of Anaheim on the boulevard, in that year, and since that time he has applied himself steadily to the task of making the place a paying proposition and how well he has succeeded is shown by the returns from the acreage. He was married in 1914 to Miss Caroline Hartman. Mr. Luce's father died in 1891 and the widow is making her home in Anaheim.

The Luces have brought their acreage up to a high and very creditable state of production, and no doubt their excellent well and pumping plant, installed according to the most up-to-date plans, have had much to do with the development. The well is 250 feet deep with a ten-inch bore, affording a capacity of eighty inches of water; and the pump is one of the best pieces of machinery for miles around and operated by electricity. Anaheim has always welcomed such progressive citizens as Mr. Luce and his near-of-kin, and well may they be proud of them, for they are the sort that, in building for themselves, also build and upbuild for others.

GEORGE McNEIL.—A resident of Buena Park, where he owns and operates a fruit ranch on Orangethorpe Avenue, George McNeil has been a valued citizen of Orange County for the past fourteen years. Mr. McNeil comes from good old New England stock, being born in Deering, Hillsboro County, N. H., June 2, 1863, the son of William and Elizabeth (McQuesten) McNeil, who were also natives of that state and both passed away there. To them were born four children, and two of them are still living—a sister, Anna, who still resides in the East, and George, the subject of this review. He was reared in his native state and after he had completed his education in the schools of his locality, he spent several years as a clerk in a mercantile establishment. When he became of age, however, he decided to try his fortune in the great western country, of which he had heard such glowing tales. Accordingly he made the long journey across the continent, reaching California in 1894. Locating in Los Angeles, he spent five years as clerk in a store, but with the exception of that period, all his time has been spent in agricultural pursuits.

In 1906, Mr. McNeil decided to locate in Orange County, being attracted there by the wonderful successes being made in fruit growing. He purchased a place of nine acres on Orangethorpe Avenue, and he has ever since made this his home. His ranch is at present devoted to oranges, walnuts, and fruits in general. He is working to the end, however, of devoting all his acreage to the citrus industry. All the improvements on the place have been made by himself.

Mr. McNeil's marriage occurred in 1900, in Los Angeles, when he was united to Miss Lillie E. Tubbs, also a native of New Hampshire, and the daughter of Alvin and Jennie Tubbs. Their home has been blessed with a son and a daughter, Alvin G. and Ethel C., attending Pomona College. Mr. McNeil is prominent in the Masonic fraternity, where he holds the office of master in Buena Park Lodge No. 357, F. & A. M. He has also been honored with a seat on the school board, which he has held since 1912. He is a Republican in national politics. He is a worthy citizen who has won the entire confidence of a large circle of friends through his genial personality.

FRED PEITZKE.—Among the successful growers of oranges and walnuts in the Anaheim district is Fred Peitzke, whose home is on Stanton Street, near the County Highway. Mr. Peitzke is a native of Southern Iowa, where he was born on August 24, 1877, a son of William and Ruah Peitzke. The family of William Peitzke consisted of twelve children, and when Fred was one year of age his parents removed to Wright County, Iowa, where he was reared and educated. During his younger days he followed the cattle business from the age of eight until he was seventeen. Endowed by nature with an unusually large and virile physique, fearless and courageous of spirit, it is not strange that such a man should be sought to fill the position of city marshal of Kaw City, Okla. In the early days in this territory, men were not chosen for this hazardous position because of political affiliations or social relations, the chief requisite being a good shot and one who could get his man. While filling this position Mr. Peitzke, although equipped with the usual allotment of arms and ammunition while on duty, seldom resorted to their use in capturing his man, but, with his firm grip on the person of the lawbreaker, the criminal always submitted. Mr. Peitzke always considered his powerful hands his best weapons at close range.

In 1913 Mr. Peitzke migrated to California and took up his residence near Anaheim, Orange County, on Stanton Street on his father's property. He bought five acres where he now lives and made all the improvements. Here he has successfully and most profitably cultivated oranges; some of his orange trees are now six years old.

Mr. Peitzke's marriage occurred in 1903, when he was united with Miss Ellen Fullington. Fraternally he is a member of Ridgely Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Blackwell, Okla., and is also a member of the Orange and Walnut Growers Associations of Anaheim. Mr. Peitzke's father and family came to California in 1910, and three sons and a daughter are now residents of Southern California.

DR. WILLIAM M. CHAMBERS.—A retired dentist, who successfully practiced his profession many years in Mexico and Central America, Dr. William M. Chambers owns and operates a fine ranch of forty-one acres situated one quarter mile west of the State Highway, on Katella Road, in the Anaheim section of Orange County. His ranch is devoted to walnuts and oranges and was settled by his father, Dr. William Chambers, in 1890, who purchased the land in its virgin state from John Hannah.

Dr. William M. Chambers, of this review, is a son of William and Martha Chambers, natives of Pennsylvania, who lived near Philadelphia and were descendants of Quaker families. William Chambers, Sr., was a dentist of high repute and practiced his profession many years in Bogota, Colombia, South America, where he located in 1852, and here Dr. Chambers was born in 1866. His father moved to California in 1890, locating on the ranch now occupied by his son, and here he passed away in 1893; his widow still survives and is now a resident of Los Angeles. Dr. Chambers was educated at the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated with the degree of D.D.S., in 1886. Afterwards, for nine years, he practiced his profession in Guatemala City, Central America, and from 1898 to 1911 he was located at Puebla, Mexico, where he practiced dentistry and was for ten years the consular agent for the United States, being the predecessor of William O. Jenkins, whose imprisonment by the Mexican authorities caused such widespread discussion.

In 1911, Dr. Chambers returned to the United States and settled on the old homestead near Anaheim. He made many improvements, set out trees, installed a water system for irrigation and erected a modern residence, which has added much to the attractiveness of the place. In addition to raising walnuts and oranges, Dr. Chambers is deeply interested in breeding pure-blooded Chester-White hogs, his stock being acknowledged by experts among the best in the state.

Dr. Chambers was married in 1889 to Miss Jennie Berley, a native of Louisiana, and four children have been born to them, and three of them are now living: Olive, Fenner and Amanda.

CHARLES S. COX.—Among the citrus fruit growers of California can be found men from every state in the Union—men of virility and strength of purpose who have had the courage and energy to seek new fields in which to make their homes and fortunes. A native of Hendricks County, Ind., Charles S. Cox, who now has an orange and lemon grove east of Cypress, migrated to California in 1897. His parents, Daniel and Elizabeth Cox were both natives of Indiana and there their eleven children were born. The father died in 1890, but Mrs. Cox is still living, aged eighty-eight years. Charles S., who was born in January, 1857, is the only member of the family in the State of California.

On coming to California Mr. Cox first located near Morgan Hill in Santa Clara County, where he purchased a forty-acre ranch devoted exclusively to prunes. He remained in Santa Clara County until February, 1907, when he removed to Madera County and one year later moved to Los Angeles County and then, in 1909, located on his present holdings near Cypress, Orange County. When Mr. Cox bought this ranch of twenty acres the land was in a barren state, and while the soil was rich and productive, it required steady, hard and intelligent work on the part of Mr. Cox to bring it up to its present state of cultivation. He has devoted his holdings to the production of oranges and lemons, and some of the trees are now bearing abundantly, bringing him well deserved returns. Mr. Cox has an interest in the Wilcox well, which has a sixteen-inch bore, and is capable of furnishing irrigation for several ranches. From this well he expects to draw an extra supply of water, if it should ever be necessary.

In Hendricks County, Ind., August 19, 1879, Mr. Cox was united in marriage with Miss Flora Ader, also born in Indiana, whose parents were William and Julia Ader. Four children have been born to them: Bernard is a structural iron worker and resides in Portland, Ore.; during the World War he served in the Spruce Division of the Aviation Corps; Ernest is a shipfitter and marine engineer and is employed on a vessel in the Pacific trade; Walter is a guarantee marine engineer and during the war was inspector for the U. S. Shipping Board at Seattle, Wash.; and Herbert is a graduate in the first class with eight members from the State Polytechnic at San Luis Obispo; he is an electrician in the employ of the Edison Company and lives with his wife and son, James Leslie, in Eagle Rock. Mr. and Mrs. Cox are entitled to much praise for the progress their sons have made in their chosen pursuits, since their home training and education have fitted them in a high degree for the advancement they are making. Mr. Cox is a member of the Cooperative Orange Growers Association at Anaheim. For more than thirty-six years he has consistently voted the Prohibition ticket and has supported all uplift movements in the county that have been brought to his notice.

John C. Cordes

JOHN C. CORDES.—Orange County is fortunate in the number of its real estate representatives who themselves own and operate property, so that they are the better able to judge of realty values and rightly and honestly to forecast the future of one of the most favored and promising sections in the entire state. Such a man is John C. Cordes, who was born near Bremen, in Hanover, Germany, on May 25, 1863, and reared on a fruitful North German farm until he came out to the still more alluring America. He was about twenty-five when, in 1888, he first began to assimilate himself with the life and ideals of the young Republic; and for a while he worked for a farmer in Iowa. Later, he bought 285 acres in Iowa County, Iowa, which he so improved that he easily became one of the most successful farmers of that county.

In 1904 he came to California and Anaheim, and soon after pitching his tent here, entered the field of realty, and so welcome was he in an environment very congenial to him from the first, that he has ever since handled Anaheim and other real estate. He really came to California for his health; but he found that, after opening his office at 171 West Center Street, his activities contributed to, rather than mitigated against, his improvement, and he found recreation in a line of trade in which he had a chance to contribute toward both the building up and the upbuilding of the town.

Mr. Cordes also owns the famous Captain Henry estate, one of the well-known show-places hereabouts—a ten-acre ranch located on the County Road, and highly improved with Valencia oranges. He had, besides, five and a half acres of an orange grove within the city limits, on West Street. This is one of the best producers in the county, and he sold it for $35,000, the highest price paid for a five-acre tract thus far. The 1919 crop was about 3,000 boxes. He owned the brick block on East Center Street now occupied by the Puritan Dry Cleaning Company, but he traded it for the five and a half acres just described. He is a stockholder in the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association, and also in the Mutual Orange Distributors Association.

While in Germany, Mr. Cordes was married to Miss Annie Steurman, who died in 1919, leaving many to mourn her demise. They had ten children, and nine are still living—Lena, Herman, Henry, Katie, Alfred, William, Annie, Alma and Linda. Mr. Cordes has for years been president of the Concordia Singing Society, and he is now an alderman in the Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church. He belongs to Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. In every way, Mr. Cordes and his family have been progressive, public-spirited, patriotic citizens, proving themselves splendid examples of the combination of ideals and attainments in more than one race or people.

JOHN A. CRANSTON.—For her substantial fame as one of the most desirable of all places for residence, Santa Ana owes much to Professor John A. Cranston, superintendent of the public schools of that city, who has done much, since his advent here nearly a decade and a half ago, to advance the cause of popular education in Orange County. He was born at Madrid, an interesting town in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., on June 14, 1863—a very notable day in Civil War history, for the Confederates invested Winchester, the Federals fought their way out with a loss of three thousand men. Confederate cavalry invaded Maryland and Pennsylvania, and fortifications were thrown up around Pittsburgh; he came of a family distinguished through various branches, numbering as it does Henry Young Cranston, the Rhode Island lawyer, Robert Bennie Cranston, his brother, who bequeathed $75,000 to those poor of Newport "too honest to steal and too proud to beg," and long before their day, John and Samuel Cranston, both presidents of the Little Rhody commonwealth. The family has also left its impress in the familiar history of the Hudson.

Mr. Cranston's father was John Cranston, a farmer, of Madrid, N. Y., and he married Mary Ann Weatherston, who came from Scotland with her parents when she was three years of age. Both are now dead. There were seven children, two daughters and five sons, in the family; and our subject was the fifth child in the order of birth and the eldest of the three children living. John A. Cranston was educated in the public schools of his district and the Canton Academy, and in 1887 was graduated from the University of St. Lawrence, when he received the B.S. degree.

Having chosen the career of a pedagogue, Mr. Cranston accepted the principalship of a grade school at Helena, Mont., but after a short time there, resigned to travel. In the fall of 1888, he went to Phoenix, Ariz., where he taught school one term, and in the following spring went to Minnesota as superintendent of schools. From 1889 until 1893, he was at Wadena; from 1893 to 1898 at Elk River; from 1898 to 1902 at Alexandria; from 1902 to 1906 at St. Cloud; and since 1906 he has been at Santa Ana. Some idea of the growth of the school in Santa Ana is noted that in 1906 there were fifty-four teachers and 1,400 pupils, and now there are 140 teachers and about 4,000 pupils enrolled—this includes kindergarten, elementary, high school and junior college. A Republican in matters of national political import, Mr. Cranston was chairman of the Juvenile Home Committee for nine years, and for seven years he was also on the California council of education. He belongs to the California Teachers Association, and was president of the Southern section in 1912, and a member of the National Education Association since 1902.

At Canton, N. Y., in 1891, Mr. Cranston was married to Miss Gertrude Gulley, a native of Canton, N. Y., and the daughter of Argalous D. and Caroline (Curler) Gulley, Vermonters who settled in New York. Two children have blessed their happy union: Alice has become Mrs. J. Baxter Jouvenat, Jr.; and Rena Gertrude, who was married in June, 1920, to E. T. Borchard of Long Beach, Cal.

Mr. Cranston is fond of tennis and out-of-door sports generally; and his close touch with Nature makes him more and more interested in both the past and the future of Orange County. He has put his whole energy, and devoted a great part of his time to the important school interests entrusted to him; and among other things to which he may point as more or less monuments to his life and work may be mentioned the new high school buildings erected in 1913, under his incentive and supervision, the high school plant being considered one of the finest in the state and naturally a pride to the residents of Santa Ana.

DALE R. KING.—The increase in the acreage devoted to growing citrus fruits has caused the establishment of many associations and more district exchanges in various sections of the country for handling the product of the orange and lemon groves. The Northern Orange County Citrus Exchange was established August 1, 1917, and is under the competent management of Dale R. King, a native of Knightstown, Ind., born March 26, 1887. He is the son of William F., now deceased, and Ella (Reeves) King. In the parental family of six boys and five girls, Dale R. was the fourth child in order of birth. He was educated in the public and high schools of Indianapolis, Ind., a city noted for the excellency of its schools. After completing his education he followed various vocations, among others the commission business, which he first engaged in at Indianapolis. He was in the sales department of the California Fruit Growers Exchange for ten years, being located at Indianapolis, Chicago and San Francisco, going thence to Orange County, Cal., to assume the management of the Northern Orange County Citrus Exchange on its organization in August, 1917.

On August 11, 1909, Mr. King was united in marriage with Miss Vie Barnes, and they are the parents of two children, Jeanne and Lois. Politically Mr. King casts his ballot with the Republican party. He is a member of the Fullerton Club and the Board of Trade and takes an active and helpful interest in the development of Orange County. He has business acumen and the ability to grasp an opportunity, and is making a name for himself in the community in which he lives, and in which he is esteemed as an upright and progressive citizen.

RAYMOND N. JOHNSON.—An enterprising young rancher who is a good "booster" for Placentia, having learned, after an automobile ride of 2,000 miles in Northern California that there is "no place like home"—when that home is in Orange County—is Ray Johnson, of Placentia Drive, who was born, a native son, in Placentia, September 5, 1895. He is the youngest son of Nels Johnson, the pioneer rancher of Orange County, who married Miss Martha Paulson, who proved just the right kind of a helpmate. Eight children were born to the sturdy parents, four of whom are living, and all reflected creditably on the family name. Ray attended the grammar school and meanwhile worked on his father's ranch until he was fourteen years of age. And then, although still in his teens, he commenced to ranch for himself. He began by farming the thirty-two acres of his father's land and now owns fourteen acres. He uses the tractor and other machinery exclusively, and no longer employs the horse.

In March, 1918, Mr. Johnson enlisted in the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps, and was sent to North Isle, San Diego. From there he was transferred to the One Hundred Forty-fifth Field Artillery, and within less than five weeks, he was on his way with the troops to France. Genuinely pleased at the chance to get to the front, he served overseas for five months, and on his return to the Presidio at San Francisco received his honorable discharge. He is a member of Anaheim Post, American Legion.

When Mr. Johnson married, he took for his wife Miss Olive Schumacher, daughter of Oliver Schumacher of Placentia, a life-long friend and schoolmate of boyhood days; and the happy couple now reside on the old home ranch, built many years ago, where they have a very comfortable home. He is a member of the Placentia Orange Growers and the Placentia Walnut Growers associations, and a stockholder in the Anaheim Union Water Company, and he profits from their combined services. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Johnson is too much interested in the upbuilding, as well as the building up, of the community to allow partisanship to interfere with his hearty support of men or measures wanted for the public good.

WALTER E. WHITACRE.—How valuable may be the services rendered by an experienced representative of a well organized association is clearly illustrated in the relations of Walter E. Whitacre, the Orange County agent of the California Vegetable Union, to that influential and progressive movement, now known as one of the great forces for promoting the best interests of the Golden State agriculturist. He was born at Shelbyville, Ill., on February 2, 1881, the son of George B. Whitacre, a physician and surgeon, long resident at Shelbyville, who married Miss Nettie Kelly, also a native of Illinois. Three children, two sons and a daughter, were born to this worthy couple; and Walter, the only one now living of all the family, was the second child in the order of birth. He was educated in the public schools, and also attended the Austin College at Effingham, Ill., after which he engaged in clerical work from 1899 to 1906.

In 1912 he was fortunate in coming west to California, and for a while he located at San Diego, where he bought a ranch which he operated for three years. When he sold out, he went to work for the California Vegetable Union. At first, he was assigned to Sacramento for a couple of months, but in April, 1914, he came to Fullerton. With this city as his headquarters, Mr. Whitacre was given the whole of Orange County as his district; nor could a more desirable field, considering both the character of the people he may deal with and the nature of the country, anywhere be found. After these years of energetic operation here, Mr. Whitacre is a member of the Board of Trade and the Fullerton Club, and a very "live wire" associate, also.

On June 8, 1904, Mr. Whitacre was married at St. Louis, Mo., to Miss Marie C. Brendle, a native of Edwardsville, Ill. One child, Kenneth L. Whitacre, has blessed the union. Mr. Whitacre, a Republican, is also an Elk and is known for his fondness for fishing and many phases of out-of-door life.

JOHN H. HINCKLEY.—The enviable position of Fullerton today, as a kind of magnetic center drawing to it thousands from far and wide, is largely due to such far-sighted, level-headed, venturesome yet conservative men of experience and integrity as John H. Hinckley, a general broker. He was born at Waukegan, Ill., on January 14, 1873, the son of G. L. and Mary (Clarkin) Hinckley. These worthy parents had two children, and of these two, John was the elder.

He enjoyed the excellent grammar and high schools of Chicago, and for three and a half years he was at the University of Illinois, a student in the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Chicago. Because of poor health, however, he had to give up his studies, and then coming West, he engaged in San Francisco in the stock and bond business, at which he remained for four years. In the same city, he took up advertising, and for two to three years he was in Los Angeles, where he worked on subdivisions in the Imperial Valley.

In the fall of 1916, impressed with the advantages offered by Fullerton and its environs, he removed to this town and established himself in the real estate field. In May, 1917, he formed the partnership of Porter and Hinckley which has proven so successful, and of such a benefit to the realty interests of the town. In March, 1920, they dissolved partnership since which time Mr. Hinckley has been engaged in the general brokerage business.

On August 27, 1907, at Eureka, Cal., Mr. Hinckley was married to Miss Alice McConnell; a native of Eastern Canada. A man above party, under any and all circumstances, Mr. Hinckley is decidedly a Progressive and seeks to vote for the best man and the best measures.

OLBERT ARVEL HALEY.—A native of Missouri who may have come West to be "shown," but who has made good in the showing to others of much worth the observing, is Olbert Arvel Haley, proprietor of the well-equipped O. A. Haley Garage, the authorized agency for Dodge Brothers motor cars, who was born at Macon City, on September 17, 1873. His father was H. C. Haley, a business man, now deceased, who had married Miss Maria Fletcher, a native of Macon County, Mo.; the latter now makes her home in Rice, Wash. The union was blessed with the birth of two children, the elder of whom was the subject of our sketch.

Olbert A. Haley attended the public schools of his locality, and afterwards studied at the Little Rock, Ark., Commercial College. Then he went into the grocery trade and followed that in Arkansas and at Seattle. In the latter city he owned five stores; but he sold out in May, 1912. He next opened an auto business at Everett, Wash., which he continued to manage for four years. Coming to Santa Ana in 1916, Mr. Haley established the factory distributing agency for Orange County for the Dodge Brothers motor cars; and so successful has he since been that he employs nine salesmen to assist him in taking care of the business in Orange County.

The O. A. Haley Garage is located on the northeast corner of Fifth and Bush streets, fully equipped for sales and service. He also owns the southwest corner of Fifth and Bush, known as the Haley apartments, where he intends soon to build a large modern two-story garage. His business has grown to be very large in the county. He has a salesroom in Orange and has a subdealership at Anaheim conducted by Charles Mann, and one at Fullerton conducted by Miss Lillian Yaeger. Mr. Haley was president of the Auto Trades Association of Orange County for 1918-19, and is today an active member of the Chamber of Commerce and a director in the Automobile Club of Orange County. These honors are in keeping with the extent and elaborate completeness of his garage, with its fine display rooms and its thoroughly modern workshop. He is a stockholder in the California National Bank of Santa Ana.

On September 17, 1902, Mr. Haley was married to Miss Mary Ellen O'Conner, the ceremony taking place at Toledo, Wash. The bride, who was born in Toledo, is the daughter of W. W. and Mary O'Conner of that place, and now has two children, Hugh Warren and Margaret. She shares with her husband his public-spiritedness and interest in civic movements. He is president of the Kiwanis Club of Santa Ana, and is a member of the local lodge of Masons and the Royal Arch Chapter, and a life member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

FRED W. TIMKEN.—A straightforward citizen who feels a keen interest in all that pertains to the rapid and permanent development of Orange County, and who leaves no stone unturned to promote, when possible, the general welfare, is Fred W. Timken, the well-known rancher residing on the Anaheim Boulevard at Olive. He was born in McPherson County, Kans., on December 27, 1883, the son of Jacob and Metha Timken, of Coal Camp, Mo., and was the second eldest of five living children of this union. His three brothers are Jacob G., Walter L. and Henry Timken, and he has a sister, Mrs. R. H. Paulus of Olive.

When our subject was one year old, his parents removed to Los Angeles, Cal., from which place they went to Acton, where Mr. Timken mined for gold for a year. Then he changed his residence to San Luis Obispo County, and there engaged in grain farming. He had some 180 acres, and devoted the same to small grain, fruit and grapes. Fred early learned to make himself useful, and finally became invaluable in farm work. In 1902 he removed with his parents to Orange.

In 1919, Mr. Timken went to Texas and on March 6 of that year married at Mercedes, the home of the bride, Miss Elda M. W. Schroeder, the daughter of Conrad and Dora Schroeder. This lady was born in Illinois on March 22, 1895, and on October 13, 1911, arrived in California with her parents. The family lived at Olive for ten months, when a change to the climate of Texas was advised on account of the health of her father. They removed to Mercedes, therefore, in August, 1912, and there she lived at home until her marriage. In April, 1919, Mr. and Mrs. Timken came to California and settled at Olive.

Together with his brother, Henry, Mr. Timken owns twelve acres on the Anaheim Boulevard, one-half of which is set out to Valencia oranges, while the other half is planted to walnuts. Mr. Timken owns twelve shares of stock in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and his land is watered from that company's ditch. This land is also included in the Samuel Camphouse oil lease, the object of which is to test the land for oil. One test well is now being sunk by the Olive Petroleum Company. Seven hundred acres, the property of many owners, is included in this Camphouse lease, of such importance to Olive and vicinity; at last accounts, the oil well had been sunk 3,300 feet, with good indications of success, so that much is expected from the venture. Mr. and Mrs. Timken are devoted members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Olive, and equally enthusiastic as Americans interested in civic efforts.

SALVADOR LABAT.—A resident of California since 1883, Salvador Labat was born at Hasparren, Basses-Pyrenees, France, March 19, 1865, the son of Martin and Marie (Cassou) Labat, farmer folk in that picturesque corner of France. There the mother passed away, after which the father came to California, arriving here in the early days of 1870. He first engaged in sheep raising in California and Nevada, later on making his headquarters in Bakersfield, Kern County. From there he came down to San Juan Capistrano, then the center of a great sheep district, and there he became superintendent for Oyharzabal Brothers, remaining with them until his death, in 1902. He was the father of three sons: G. P. died in 1914; Salvador, of whom we write; and Peter, who is with our subject.

Salvador Labat was reared in France until he was eighteen years of age, receiving a good education there. He came to California in 1883 and was employed by Oyharzabal Brothers, running sheep in the mountains. He next went to Ventura, where his father was interested in the sheep business and continued there with him until 1890, when he sold his sheep and came to San Juan Capistrano. With his brother Peter, he purchased a place and engaged in farming and also in carpentering and building for a short time until he opened a meat market near the Mission in San Juan Capistrano; in this venture he was very successful, establishing a large trade which continued to grow until he sold out in 1917, after a period of eighteen years in business.

In Los Angeles, Mr. Labat was married to Miss Ysabel Arambell, also a native of Hasparren, France, who came here when a girl. She passed away in 1912, deeply mourned by her family and friends, leaving a son, Edward Labat. Mr. Labat is very progressive and is a highly respected citizen, well and favorably known for his liberality and enterprise. He is a member of the W. O. W. in Capistrano and is a Republican in national politics.

Peter Labat was born on March 1, 1868, and came to California in 1883 with his father to San Juan Capistrano, residing here and at Ventura ever since. He married Helene (Daguerre) Luc, also a native of Bigorre, France; she came to California in 1906. By this union they have one child, Juanita; by her former marriage, Mrs. Labat has two children, John Luc and Dominic Luc. Mr. Labat is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

G. A. SCHWEIGER.—A decided lover of travel, history and tradition, who has done much to induce thousands of other folks to travel to and through California, is G. A. Schweiger, the efficient, genial and exceedingly popular proprietor and manager of the Modjeska Inn at the Modjeska Ranch, which was the home of the world-famous Shakespearean actress, Madame Helena Modjeska, for a period of twenty-seven years. He was born on August 3, 1884, at Semmering, Austria, in the Tyrolean Alps, the son of Swiss parents resident there. He had a normal school education, and left home when he was nineteen, after which time he spent his years in travel and business pursuits, thus adding to his store of knowledge.

Going to England, he passed two years in London, at Brighton and in Wales, and then spent two years in France, where he was also in the hotel business. He had charge of Chateau Royale d'Ardenne, which was the castle of King Leopold of Belgium, and after two years in France, he spent a season at the Ghezireh Palace, which overlooks the Nile, at Cairo, Egypt. The next season he found himself at Germany's delightful resort, Baden-Baden, and from there, in 1907, he came to the United States, since then the scene of his operations.

For a year he was employed in New York City at the St. Regis hotel, and then he went to Colorado Springs, where he had charge of a department at "The Antlers" for a couple of seasons. He spent the following year mining in Arizona, on the Union Pass, old Fort Mojave Road, and after that he came to Los Angeles, where he was assistant manager of the Alexandria dining room until he leased Madame Modjeska's Inn in 1918, immediately taking charge, and a few months later, in order to more thoroughly carry out his plans for development, he acquired the property.

In France, in May, 1905, Mr. Schweiger was married to Mlle. C. Cuervo, by nature especially qualified to assist him in his responsible labors, and they have had three children. Joseph, born in France, came alone, at the age of only nine, to America, to join his parents here, and at present he is a student at the Santa Ana high school. The other two children are Amadeen and Marcell, both born in Los Angeles, and attending the Silverado School.

It is well known that the Modjeska Ranch, through the association of the late tragedienne, has attained a celebrity that is not only nation-wide, but international. So it is naturally Mr. Schweiger's sole ambition and desire to retain Madame Modjeska's Forest of Arden and the home in all of its original splendor and beauty, keeping it open to the public as a first-class mountain resort equal to any of the famous Swiss resorts, thereby doing his share towards the upbuilding of the hotel industry, not only in Orange County but the state of California as well.

GOTLIEB MEGER.—A citizen who is thoroughly loyal to his adopted country because it has given to him much that he never could secure in his native land, is Gotlieb Meger, who is living on his highly improved ranch of twenty acres west of Anaheim at the corner of Lincoln Avenue and the Garden Grove Boulevard. He is a native of Russia-Poland and was born July 25, 1850, the son of parents who were also born in that country. Gotlieb was educated and reared in his own country and lived there until 1900, when he felt that he could better his condition by coming to the United States, and begin life amidst new surroundings. With his wife and nine children he arrived in this country and spent one year in Michigan, then came on to California and bargained for the property that is now his home. At that time it was unimproved and was covered with stumps of eucalyptus, cypress and pepper trees and was used as a pasture. With his characteristic energy he set to work and cleared the land and in time he had as good a ranch as was to be found in the locality and where he set out oranges that are in fine condition. He later bought fifty acres on the Ball Road and there he farmed and also set out Valencia oranges. Later he sold off twenty acres. On his home place he erected a set of good farm buildings which are in harmony with his well-tilled fields and which bespeak the successful owner.

Mr. Meger has been married twice; by his first wife, who was Miss Ernestina Ricka, he had one son, Edward, now a farmer in Oklahoma. His second wife was Malvina Evert and they became the parents of the following children who are still living: Rudolph, Theodore, Martha, Helena, Augusta, Emma, Hulda, Olga, Otto and Lydia. Rudolph married Tena Edinger and they have three children: Augusta became the wife of Emil Smith and they have two children; Martha, married William Everett and three children have been born to them. Amelia, the oldest daughter and child in the family, died in 1905 leaving four children, two of whom are still with their father, and two, Elsie and Victor, were taken by Mr. Meger and his wife to rear. Mrs. Meger passed away in 1916, mourned by her children and husband and by her large circle of friends. The family are members of the Baptist Church of Anaheim and are highly respected by all who know them. Mr. Meger has educated his children in the public schools of the county and in business college to fit them for their places in life and he is a loyal supporter of all American institutions that help to build up the government.

FRANK C. STEARNS.—An enterprising agriculturist whose strict attention to the problems he has had before him has enabled him to advance rapidly, according to the most scientific and progressive methods, as one of the noted raisers of pure-bred swine, is Frank C. Stearns, the resident manager of the firm of Matthews and Stearns, and the partner of F. C. Matthews, also well known in Orange County. He was born at Canisteo, Steuben County, N. Y., on January 8, 1866, and left the Empire State with his parents for Traverse City, Grand Traverse County, Mich., where he grew up until his sixteenth year. Then he removed to Kansas and lived there for six years, and after that he went to Trinidad, Colo., where he was married to Miss Elva A. Ingle, a native of Greenwood, Kans. Their two oldest children were born at Trinidad, and they are Edith, who is Mrs. F. C. Matthews; and Eva, the wife of C. A. Tucker, who is also engaged in farming. A third daughter is Gladys, a native of California, and she is the wife of Lisle Farquhar, formerly a banker at Orient, Iowa, now residing at Tustin. Mrs. Stearn's father was Enos Ingle, a native of Piqua, Ohio, in which state he was married to Marietta Freeman. The father of F. C. Stearns is John H. Stearns also born in Steuben County, N. Y., a lumberman living in Wellington, Kans., at the age of eighty-two. His wife was Demaris Batchelder, of New Hampshire, and as the representative of an old New England family, lived to be seventy-two.

Having already established himself in the cattle business, Mr. Stearns came to California in 1897 with his family and settled at Tustin. He took up the work of a sprayer of trees, and built up an extensive and lucrative patronage in assisting ranchers to save their fruit. At present, he directs the fast-growing interests of Messrs. Matthews and Stearns, breeders of pure-bred and high-grade Duroc-Jersey hogs upon Mr. Matthews' ranch of forty acres; and being widely known, partly as the former proprietor of the Tustin Manufacturing Company, he has no difficulty in disposing at fancy figures of all of their stock. His studious inclinations, and his hard, steady, systematic work combine to assist Mr. Stearns to produce only the most desirable of breeds; so that, apart from his business success, he is rendering a patriotic service in thus scientifically seeking to attain a high goal for the benefit of thousands of the morrow as well as of today.

H. M. PETERSON.—A gentleman of enterprise and progressive ideas who has entered heartily into the Orange County spirit and has been doing his share to advance the horticultural interests of the Golden State, is H. M. Peterson, the wide-awake rancher, whose trim-appearing orchard is on the Katella Road, near the State Highway about one mile south of Anaheim. He was born near New Hartford, Grundy County, Iowa, on June 2, 1884, the son of James and Mary (Nelson) Peterson, who located in Grundy County in 1869, and became owner of a 330-acre farm, which they improved and engaged in raising grain and stock. The mother died at Cedar Falls, November 22, 1917, while the father now makes his home with his son, H. M. Peterson in Orange County. This worthy couple had seven children, our subject being the eldest. Spending his childhood on the farm he attended the local schools and later the private academy at Stewart, in the same state.

When old enough to push out into the world, Mr. Peterson took up traveling for the United Neckwear Manufacturing Company of Waterloo, Iowa, and as their representative, covered Iowa, Minnesota and part of Nebraska. On June 2, 1917, at Muskogee, Okla., he was married to Miss Myrtle Ward, a native of Kansas, in which hustling Middle West state she was born at Abilene. Her father was William Ward, and he was born in Ohio, afterwards removing to Princeton, Ill., and later to Abilene,

R. Fischle.

Kans., where they were farmers; he had married Ida Bricker and they now live in Marshalltown, Iowa. Mrs. Peterson is the fourth youngest of their six children. For a time Mrs. Peterson attended the Iowa Teachers College at Cedar Falls, and afterwards the A. N. Palmer School of Penmanship in the same city and after her graduation became supervisor of penmanship in the Muskogee, Okla., schools, for a period of three years, up until her marriage, and soon after this they removed to Lamar, Prowers County, Colo., and there Mr. Peterson engaged in contracting and building. At the end of five months, however, he decided to come to California, and the step proved the wisest he had made.

On November 30, 1918, he arrived in Anaheim, and soon purchased a five-acre grove of Valencia oranges on the Katella Road, west of the State Highway. He obtains the water he needs for irrigating his orchard from a private pumping plant, and he is fortunate in having one of the best irrigation supplies available to anyone hereabouts. He is also engaged in contracting and building. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson are members of the Christian Church of Anaheim, and participate eagerly in any sensible work likely to uplift the community. They are Republicans in matters of national politics, and ever ready to aid in advancing civic standards. They are delighted with Orange County as a home place with future prospects, and Orange County and the Katella district are satisfied with Mr. and Mrs. Peterson, and confident in respect to their coming prosperity. Mrs. Peterson is a member of Anaheim Chapter, P. E. O.

RICHARD FISCHLE.—The life story of Richard Fischle is a fine example of what can be accomplished by one man, providing he has the will to succeed and the energy and perseverance to carry him along to the goal he has set for himself. He is a native of Germany, born at Reutlingen, Wurtemberg, May 20, 1879, a son of Christian F. and Bertha (Walz) Fischle, also born in Reutlingen. The father was a decorator of ability, and was very prominent in the local fire department, serving as chief of the department for thirty-six years.

Richard was educated in the local school, and as was the custom in that country, when he reached the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to a trade. He chose the confectionery trade, and so learned to make candy and French pastry, completing a three years' course, and paying for his tuition in a private school where he also studied both German and French. At the end of the three years he had to pass a rigid examination as to his ability before he was allowed to work at his trade. He worked in the leading cities of Germany, Switzerland and France, and during this time served two years in the German army.

Mr. Fischle had a brother-in-law, Chas. Lange, residing in Anaheim, Cal., and in 1903 he came here to live. On May 4, 1904, he opened his first candy store, with a capital of fifty dollars, establishing his business in a small store just east of what is now the First National Bank building. The store was divided into two front rooms, on one side was the first Public Library of Anaheim, and on the other side Mr. Fischle carried on his candy store, and had charge of the library in connection, making him the first librarian in Anaheim. He divided his time making and selling candy, and attending to the library patrons, and it is interesting to know that his first day's sales amounted to five dollars; some days the receipts would drop to three dollars, and when his day's tally showed eight dollars, business was good!

Later Mr. Fischle moved to a larger store a few doors east, taking the library with him. In 1914 he moved to his present modern store at 118 West Center Street, where he does a large and profitable business; much of his confectionery is made by himself in his own factory in the rear of his store, and he also caters to dances, parties and receptions. The growth of this establishment shows what can be accomplished in a few years by a man whose traits of character would make for success in any field of endeavor.

The marriage of Mr. Fischle united him with Elizabeth Whitefield, a native of New York State, and four children have blessed their union: Frederick C., Richard W., Charles W. and Edward. Fraternally Mr. Fischle is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, the Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World. In civic affairs he belongs to the Anaheim Chamber of Commerce and to the Merchants Association. For the past ten years he has been a member of the Anaheim Fire Department, serving through the different offices, and in 1918 he was appointed chief of the Department. From the time he was a small boy he had been intensely interested in fire department life, and nothing kept him from running to the fires in his old home where his father was the chief, so his appointment gave him the incentive to give to the Department the same careful attention he does to his business, and the result is shown in its growth and efficiency; and the citizens show their appreciation by his being reelected chief in 1919, and again in 1920, an honor of which he can justly feel proud.

LE ROY R. COOK.—An expert machinist who is also a successful farmer and walnut grower is Le Roy R. Cook, who lives one mile east of Capistrano on the Hot Springs Road. His father was R. B. Cook, the well-known pioneer of San Juan Capistrano, who married Miss Hattie Congdon, and they live at 402 East Sixth Street, Santa Ana. Her father was J. R. Congdon, who died at Santa Ana, four years ago; he came to California from Hartford, Conn., when he was sixteen years old. He married Miss Mary Rouse, a sister of Mrs. Albert Fuller, and a native of the East, who crossed the plains with her parents, while she was yet a little girl. The Rouses settled at first at San Bernardino, where she grew up, met and married Mr. Congdon. He was a farmer and first had a ranch in the mountains of San Bernardino County; and there two of their children were born, while seven first saw the light here, Mrs. R. B. Cook being the oldest of the family. The Fullers and the Congdons came West together and took up a homestead about one and a quarter miles south of the Mission. Grandfather Congdon planted the first walnut orchard in what is now Orange County; in 1871, and it was the second one planted in Southern California. Though living retired at Santa Ana, Mr. and Mrs. Cook own a ranch of forty acres below San Juan Capistrano, operated by their younger son, Congdon Russell Cook, who lately returned from France, where he served for twenty months in the aviation section of the U. S. Army.

Le Roy R. Cook was born at San Juan Capistrano on April 21, 1884, and bought his present homeplace four years ago, becoming a member and stockholder of the Capistrano Walnut Growers Association at San Juan Capistrano. His father had come down to San Juan Capistrano from the San Mateo Valley, and so had early identified himself with the development of this section. The lad attended the common schools at San Juan and Santa Ana, and then worked in the railway shops at San Bernardino, continuing there for four years. After purchasing his ranch, eighty-five acres devoted principally to raising walnuts and Valencia oranges, he remodeled the residence and buildings, and made it, in accordance with his natural ambition, one of the best ranches of its size for miles around.

At Santa Ana, on June 12, 1903, Mr. Cook was married to Miss Fay McCarty, a daughter of John H. and Addie F. McCarty and a native of Athens County, Ohio. When nine years old, she came to Los Angeles with her father, who for twenty years has been the agent for the Santa Fe Railway at San Juan Capistrano, and since then she has graduated from the San Diego State Normal School. She is popular as a clever, captivating lady, and so are her children—Le Roy Glenn, a sophomore in the Santa Ana Polytechnic high school, and Florence Lenore, Elmer R., and Hilah Marie. Mr. Cook is a Republican in national political affairs, and has served as judge of election.

DR. CONRAD RICHTER.—Although he has spent many years in the successful practice of medicine and surgery and obtained a competency, Dr. Conrad Richter is still active in his profession, preferring to continue in practice from the love of his profession and the enjoyment in alleviating pain and suffering. Driven by wanderlust and a desire for the climate on the Pacific Coast, he came to San Francisco in 1903 from Milwaukee, Wis., where he had engaged in the practice of medicine on the shores of the Great Lakes. In time he became chief surgeon for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company of San Francisco and in that capacity visited the Orient, including Japan, China, the Malay Peninsula and India.

In 1916, with his wife, formerly Miss Rietta Ring of New Orleans, La., he located in Balboa, where they find much pleasure in their comfortable home on Bay Island. Dr. Richter, aside from his practice, finds time to encourage civic improvements and thus we find him an active member of the board of trustees of Newport Beach, as well as of the school board. He was an organizer and is a director in the Newport Yacht Club, and is one of its most enthusiastic members, the club having increased its membership from sixty-five to over three hundred. Dr. Richter himself a world traveler, having visited every continent on the globe, says that with perhaps the exception of Honolulu, he has never seen a more perfect climate than that of Newport Beach.

GEORGE M. TAYLOR.—The popular city marshal of the hustling city of Huntington Beach, George M. Taylor, was born on a farm near Ozark, Ark., December 8, 1883. At the tender age of twelve years, he began to make his way in the world, his first work being in the coal mines of western Arkansas. He was employed by the following concerns: The Stewell Mining Company, Kemp-Small Mining Company; H. Devine Company, and the Western Coal Mining Company. After a time spent in the mines Mr. Taylor decided to try some other kind of employment and subsequently located in East St. Louis, Ill., where he secured work with the Swift Packing Company and the Nelson Morris Packing Company, and later on returned to his native state.

In 1900 Mr. Taylor came to the Pacific Coast, and on December 23, located at Smeltzer, Orange County. He secured a position on a ranch for several years and then became stationary engineer at the La Bolsa Tile Works and later was employed by I. J. Clark, who operated a tile ditching machine. In time George Taylor purchased a Buckeye tractor ditching machine and engaged in business for himself, contracting for drainage ditches, and he has made many thousand feet of ditches in Smeltzer and Greenville districts. In 1917 he took up his residence in Huntington Beach, where he is still engaged in contract ditch and track work. On March 15, 1920, he was appointed city marshal of Huntington Beach; he also fills the positions of superintendent of streets, pound master and truant officer. Mr. Taylor is chairman of the housing committee for the Orange County Fair Association which is held annually at Huntington Beach, and has full charge of the grounds and buildings.

In Santa Ana, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage with Rhoda Justice, a native daughter and member of the pioneer Justice family of Orange County. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are the parents of four children: Leslie George, Lorna May, Ruby Viola and Laddie Justice. Mr. Taylor is a worthy and highly respected citizen and is making good in his responsible post of city marshal. Fraternally he is a member of Huntington Beach Lodge No. 133, I. O. O. F., and with his wife is popular in the membership of the Rebekahs.

ARTHUR H. T. OSBORNE.—As manager for the American Fruit Growers, Incorporated, buyers and shippers of fruits and vegetables, with headquarters in Fullerton, Orange County, Arthur H. T. Osborne is filling a position for which he is by natural ability and years of experience along that particular line of industry, peculiarly fitted. A Canadian by birth, he is a native of Thorold, Ontario, born November 6, 1871. He later resided in Toronto, and in October, 1887, arrived in Los Angeles, a youth of sixteen, with the responsibilities of a livelihood already on his young shoulders. He secured employment as clerk in a dry goods store, and later entered into the business of shipping fruit and produce, and for twenty-four years has followed the business, learning it from the bottom up to all of its branches and becoming expert in the practical application of his knowledge.

First in the employ of the Earl Fruit Company in Los Angeles, in 1900, Mr. Osborne located in Fullerton, with the Golden West Celery and Produce Company, a part of the California Vegetable Union. For many years he was district manager for them. Later, he was again with the Earl Fruit Company, and went on the road for them, buying green fruit, with headquarters in Sacramento. Returning to Fullerton, he became district manager for the Benchley Fruit Company, and Mr. Osborne is now district manager for the American Fruit Growers, Incorporated, an extensive corporation, buying and shipping dried and citrus fruits, vegetables and walnuts, with warehouses all over the state. One of the best informed men in Southern California on the fruit and vegetable industry, and fitted by nature with the thoroughgoing methods and perseverance for which his nation is famed, Mr. Osborne is recognized as an expert in the marketing and distribution of these products, which are the backbone of California's prosperity.

The marriage of Mr. Osborne, which occurred in Los Angeles, December 9, 1896, united him with Maita Dupuy, a native of Illinois, and two children have been born to them: Harold, who for eight months saw service in France in the U. S. Heavy Artillery, and acted as interpreter, speaking both Spanish and French; he is now farming on the Irvine ranch; and George, attending Fullerton Union high school. Fraternally, Mr. Osborne is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, Elks, and is chaplain of that order; he is also a member of the Foresters. Since his first arrival in California he has been active in the development of the state's most important industries, and devotes his time and energy to further progress along those lines.

CHARLES J. BAGNALL.—Among the many men of ability who have been attracted to Southern California by her wonderful resources and phenomenal growth is Charles J. Bagnall, the efficient general foreman of The American Fruit Growers, Inc., at Fullerton. Mr. Bagnall is a native Californian, and was born January 14, 1880, at Sacramento. He is the son of Cornelius and Mary Jane (Phillips) Bagnall, natives of England. His father, one of California's pioneers, now deceased, crossed the plains by ox-team in 1852 and followed the occupation of farming in the Sacramento Valley and in Northern California. His mother is still living. Charles J. was educated in the public and high schools of Sacramento, and as a young man entered the fruit and vegetable business, which he has followed ever since. He was first employed with the W. R. Strong Company of Sacramento, pioneers in shipping vegetables, who shipped the first carload of vegetables out of the state. Mr. Bagnall was with the company eight years, and worked in the various departments of seed, flower, fruit and vegetables. At the time he severed his connection with the company he was district manager of the seed department. Afterwards he engaged with the Earl Fruit Company, with whom he remained five years. He was the company's district agent in El Dorado County, engaged in buying and shipping fruit, with headquarters in that county. The next three years he held the same position with the Producers Fruit Company in El Dorado County, and then became allied with the Pioneer Fruit Company of Sacramento as district deputy agent for the northern counties, in charge of packing and shipping fruit. In 1914 he came to Southern California and was house manager for the American Fruit Distributors at Redlands. Afterward, for one year, he was house manager for the Placentia Mutual Orange Association, at Placentia. In 1917 he became associated with the Benchley Fruit Company until the fall of 1918, when the American Fruit Growers, Inc., started their plant at Fullerton, and he came with them in the capacity of foreman.

Mr. Bagnall's marriage united him with Miss Nina B. Mack, a native of Illinois. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Anaheim Lodge No. 1345 B. P. O. Elks, and the Suisun Lodge of Eagles. Mr. Bagnall's success is due to industry, intelligent energy rightly directed and integrity. These qualities, coupled with wide experience gained in the many important positions he has held during his business career, have placed him in the front rank among the experts in his line of business.

WILLIAM W. CROSIER.—A prominent Orange County dealer in lumber who has had the advantage of having had a valuable experience in other important lines of activity, is William W. Crosier, partner with Fred J. Crosier in the Newport Beach Lumber Company firm, and a thoroughly dependable "booster" for Newport Beach. He was born in Battle Creek, Mich., on August 12, 1854, and left his native state when he was ten years old, moving to Ontario County, N. Y., where his father farmed. He was Jefferson Crosier, a native of New York, who was both born and married in the Empire State, choosing for his wife Miss Helen Blodgett. After their marriage, they moved to Battle Creek, Mich.; and then they returned to New York state. William thus attended the public schools in both Michigan and New York.

When old enough to push out into the world for himself, he took up office work in the freight department of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad at Cleveland; and later he entered the service of the Santa Fe, their officials in Cleveland inducing him, at the height of the boom in 1888, to come out to California and Los Angeles. He had previously married, at Cleveland, Miss Millie Mount, and he was the head of a family of two children when he first saw the City of the Angels. Later, he came to Santa Ana, as agent for the Santa Fe; and until three years ago, he made his home there, although fifteen years ago he quit railroading and embarked in lumbering instead, to the great benefit and satisfaction of Balboa, Newport Beach and Harper precinct, all of which places, thanks in part to the Newport Beach Lumber Company, are building up rapidly and at the greatest economic advantage. Three of Mr. and Mrs. Crosier's children are still living, and they are Mildred I., Florence B. and Fred J. Crosier, and with their parents they live at Balboa. They attend the First Baptist Church at Santa Ana, membership in which Mr. Crosier has had for years, and where he is and has long been a deacon.

The Newport Beach Lumber Company has had an interesting history with a significance greater than that of mere commercial interest. Originally, the yard was started by the Griffith Lumber Company and the Pendleton Lumber Company, who owned it jointly; and in 1915 Mr. Crosier bought out the half-interest of the Griffith concern, and two years later the other half-interest of the Pendleton Company. It is the only yard at Newport Beach, and in its supplying of lumber, roofing, cement, stucco, and builders supplies generally it renders an invaluable service to residents and merchants for miles around.

VERNON C. MYERS.—One of the most popular city officials of Fullerton, Vernon C. Myers, the fearless and courageous city marshal, is a native of Saint Joseph, Mich., where he was born March 20, 1885. In 1900 he came to California and during his boyhood days was engaged as a bell-boy in various hotels in California, principally in the cities of Stockton, Sacramento and Fresno. In 1901 he became possessed of a desire to see more of the world, to engage in a more adventurous life, and to fulfill his earnest longing for a complete change of environment took a trip to Dawson, Alaska, where he remained for one year and then returned to California. In 1902 he became a professional jockey and was engaged in horse racing at Emeryville, Cal., and at Portland, Ore. Among the well-known sportsmen who employed him were Billy Murray and Walter Jennings. In the course of time he became too heavy for a jockey and so gave up the sport and sought other employment, accepting a position with the Los Angeles Gas Company for a time, after which he was appointed to a place on the police force of Los Angeles, becoming a motorcycle officer, patrolling the highways in search of speeders. He spent five years in the service of the police department, two of which he was located in the Sawtelle district.

W. W. Crossier

In the spring of 1917, Mr. Myers resigned to accept his present responsible post as city marshal of Fullerton, where he has been eminently successful in the discharge of his duties and has by his undaunted spirit and intrepid action freed Fullerton of criminals, to a large extent, and reduced the city's record of crimes to a minimum. Mr. Myers conducts the affairs of his office along the latest methods established in police departments of large cities. He has introduced into the Fullerton department the finger print system of identification, as well as the photographing of criminals. Few towns the size of Fullerton can boast of having such an up-to-date system. Among notorious holdup men Marshal Myers succeeded in capturing were Joe Marino and Ralph Carvornal. Mr. Myers is the owner of a pair of English bloodhounds, from the celebrated Rockwood Kennels at Lexington, Ky. He is training these dogs to become experts in tracking criminals and believes that ninety per cent of Orange County criminals could have been apprehended, if bloodhounds had been used. Mr. Myers has already made a name for himself in the discharge of his official duties.

In 1911, Mr. Myers was united in marriage with Miss Alma J. Finch of Minneapolis, Minn., and they are the parents of three children: James, Delta and Luella. Fraternally Mr. Myers is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks and of Fullerton Lodge of the Odd Fellows.

SAMUEL W. WHIPPO.—The efficient and successful foreman of the Fullerton Mutual Orange Distributors Association, S. W. Whippo, was born at Parkers Landing, Pa., January 27, 1889, a son of G. W. and Mary D. Whippo. The father was a rig building contractor principally in Butler and Armstrong counties and was among the pioneers of that section of the Pennsylvania oil fields. After finishing his school days, Samuel assisted his father in the construction of oil rigs. Like many another ambitious young man seeking greater opportunities for his abilities, Mr. Whippo migrated to the Golden State, arriving in Orange County in June, 1908, where he immediately secured employment with the Birch Oil Company, on the Birch lease in Brea Canyon, later for the West Coast Oil Company at Olinda.

After spending five years in the oil fields, on January 1, 1914, he entered the employ of the Fullerton Mutual Orange Distributors Association and worked in all the departments of the packing house until he gained a thorough knowledge of the business. At the expiration of four years, his service had been so efficient and loyal to the company that his abilities were recognized and on January 1, 1917, he was appointed to the responsible position of foreman of the plant. His close attention to details and natural executive ability gained for him this position as an overseer of a large number of employees, in whose welfare he takes the greatest interest and discharges his duties with justice and impartiality to all.

In Anaheim, Mr. Whippo was married to Miss Bertha Rickenberg, a native of Illinois. This union has been blessed with two children: Irene Alberta and Donald Leon. Mr. Whippo is a member of the First Methodist Church of Fullerton.

ALEX. HENDERSON.—With all the sturdy characteristics of his Scottish ancestors, Alex. Henderson has made his way in life with no further aid than his own determination to succeed, and the perseverance and steady application which make for success in any walk of life. Born in the Parish of Leslie in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, March 31, 1866, when five years of age his parents, Peter and Margaret Henderson, brought him to Ontario, Canada, locating in Winterburn, and there he was reared on the farm and educated in the public schools. When nineteen years of age he was apprenticed to the blacksmith's trade under Fleming Brothers at Ravenna, Gray County, Ontario, where he received able instructions for a period of three years. After this he followed the trade in Pt. Dover, then in Kitchener and next in Breslau. He had a brother, Peter Henderson, who was employed by one of the pioneer oil companies in the Puente field in California and through correspondence he became much interested in the Pacific Coast country and concluded to cast in his lot in the land of sunshine and flowers. Thus seeking new fields for his labors, in January, 1892, Mr. Henderson arrived in Fullerton, Orange County, Cal., and here opened up a blacksmith shop on Spadra Street. He was advised by the people round about that a shop would not pay in that location, but he thought otherwise and his foresight proved his business sagacity, for success attended his labors and for twenty-six years he was in business in Fullerton. In 1912 he had invested in eighteen acres of raw land on East Orangethorpe Avenue, which he planted to Valencia oranges; here he built his home, a fine two-story structure, and can spend the rest of his days enjoying the beautiful surroundings made possible by earlier years of energy and thrift. He also owns a five-acre walnut grove on South Highland Avenue, and other town property in Fullerton. At the time he retired from business, in 1914, he was one of the oldest blacksmiths in the county and though he was still hale and hearty he quit to devote his time to his orange and walnut orchards.

In Ontario occurred Mr. Henderson's marriage to Miss Jessie Watt, a native of Ontario, and one child has blessed this union, James, attending school in Fullerton. She is also of Scotch descent, the daughter of Lawrence and Jessie (Smith) Watt, born in Aberdenshire, Scotland, who settled in Canada. By his former marriage Mr. Henderson had two daughters: Agnes Jessie, who died at 18; and Edith, Mrs. Anderson, of Los Angeles. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church in Fullerton.

Mr. Henderson was made a Mason in Anaheim Lodge, F. & A. M., and was a charter member of Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and he is also a member of the Foresters. A warm friend and colleague of the late Chas. L. Ruddock, he served for some time under him as deputy city marshal of Fullerton and was pronounced a very able officer. He has from his first residence in Orange County been public-spirited to a high degree, always interested in whatever meant the forwarding of the welfare of his home community, and ready to back his interest with substantial help and the time necessary for furthering such projects. Coming to this section of California at the beginning of its upward climb, he has watched its development from small beginnings just as his own affairs have prospered, with a just pride in both his own unaided achievements and the growth and advancement of his town and county.

THOMAS EADINGTON.—Another one of the many Englishmen who have contributed so much, in one way or another, to the development of the best interests of California, is Thomas Eadington, the efficient and affable buyer and shipper of citrus fruit located at Placentia. He was born at Lancaster, England, September 26, 1886, and grew up on the banks of the Lune, not far from its entrance into the sea, near the hill upon whose summit is the castle fortress, erected by John of Gaunt. His birthplace is doubly interesting as the city which affords the title of Duke to the Prince of Wales. Mr. Eadington's father was George Eadington, a business man and contractor of Lancaster, who married Mary E. I'Anson. Both parents are now dead.

Having attended the excellent common schools of England, Thomas, at the age of eighteen, took up stock brokerage in his native city, and continued a broker for several years. In 1911, he migrated to the United States, and almost immediately came to California. At Los Angeles he joined a firm of engineers and contractors as secretary and treasurer, but in 1915 he came to Fullerton as the secretary of the Benchley Fruit Company, in time becoming also treasurer and manager of the concern, which prospered greatly under his initiative and at the same time was an active member of the Fullerton Board of Trade. In 1920 he resigned and established himself as a fruit shipper under the name of Placentia Packing Company, with packing houses in Placentia, where as an independent shipper he makes a specialty of shipping all citrus fruits, i. e., oranges, lemons and grapefruit. He has remodeled his packing house, so now it is most modern and up to the minute for grading and packing citrus fruits.

On July 22, 1913, at Greeley, Nebr., Mr. Eadington was married to Miss Mary W. Cottam, also a native of Lancaster, England, and the daughter of James and Susanna Cottam; and four children have blessed the union and added to the delightful social ties of the family. They are Thomas J., Mary W., Margaret E. and Grace M. Eadington. The family attend the Roman Catholic Church; Mr. Eadington belongs to the Knights of Columbus, and he is also a member of the Elks of Anaheim, as well as of the Fullerton Club. Fond of fishing and tennis—for, as an Englishman, he must needs have some sport—Mr. Eadington rejoices in outdoor life; so that it is perfectly natural that he should be appreciative of all that Orange County, above all other counties, affords to the nature lover and the health seeker, and always ready to "boost" it when he can. It is also natural that he should look upon Fullerton, where he makes his residence, as the choicest home spot in the county.

ELDO R. WEST.—The life of Eldo R. West, the efficient superintendent of the Yorba Linda Water Company, and a prominent citrus grower of Yorba Linda, began in Jennings County, Ind., where he was born September 27, 1879. He was reared on a farm and educated in the country schools, afterwards attending the Indianapolis Normal School. He taught school in Indiana, and in the spring of 1909 came to California, locating on a ranch at Whittier, where he resided two years. He is a pioneer of the Yorba Linda district, and came there before the town of Yorba Linda was in existence. He purchased a ten-acre ranch, planted it to lemons and sold it in two years' time. After coming to Yorba Linda he began working for the Yorba Linda Water Company, and in 1913 was made superintendent. The officers of the company are: J. H. Barton, president; E. R. Walker, vice-president; J. W. Murray, secretary and treasurer. Directors: G. W. Wells, G. F. Collins, Arthur Staley, Thomas Hughes and E. J. Herbert. The company furnishes water for irrigation and domestic use, and serves nearly 3,000 acres. It started with one well and two booster pumps, and now has four wells and five booster pumps. The wells are 360 feet deep and water is forced through pipes under pressure. The main reservoir holds 4,500,000 gallons of water and the second reservoir holds 1,000,000 gallons. The water is changed every twenty-four hours and is of excellent quality and in fine condition. The company's main pipes are of reinforced steel, and they have thirty-five miles of pipe line. A 240-horsepower gas engine and new booster pump have recently been installed. Water for domestic purposes is placed in the homes and measured by meter with a 100-pound pressure. The company have also installed fire hydrants. The two reservoir sites are leased to the General Petroleum Oil Company and the first well is a producer, thus adding a choice asset to the company.

Mr. West married Miss Grace A. Milhous, of Indiana, and four children have been born to them: M. Jessamyn, Myron E., Clara Carmon and Merle. Mr. West built the Yorba Linda garage building, in which he was a half owner until he disposed of his interest. He owns a five-acre ranch planted to Valencia oranges and grapefruit. In his religious convictions he is a member of the Friends Church at Yorba Linda, and fraternally is a Mason, member of Yorba Linda Lodge No. 469, F. & A. M., and of Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., and with his wife is a member of the Order of Eastern Star. He is respected for his integrity and all who know him appreciate him for the qualities of citizenship he has displayed during his residence at Yorba Linda.

WRIGHTSTILL A. MOORE.—Occupying an important position with the Standard Oil Company, Wrightstill A. Moore, the company's special agent at Fullerton, Cal., was born in Caldwell County, North Carolina, October 4, 1872. He acquired his education in one of the private academies common to the South in those days, and in 1890, when eighteen years old, located at Manhattan, Kans., where he entered the employ of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad. He continued in the railway business fourteen years, working his way through the various branches of road work up to the position of conductor, then gave up railroading and engaged in the mercantile business at Manhattan, Kans., following the occupation three years in that city. November 22, 1910, Mr. Moore came to California, locating at Los Angeles, where he entered the employ of the Standard Oil Company as warehouseman, rising rapidly to more important positions with the company. He was their special agent at Santa Ana for two years, 1911 and 1912, and occupied the same position in Pasadena one year, going thence to Slauson Junction station in the same capacity. He came to Fullerton in 1917.

His marriage with Miss Nancy Witten, a native of Trenton, Mo., resulted in the birth of two winsome children, Nancy E. and Mary Nell. Fraternally Mr. Moore is a Blue Lodge Mason, a member of the Chapter and the Commandery, and a Shriner. He is further associated fraternally with the Trenton, Mo., Lodge No. 801, B. P. O. Elks, and is not only one of Fullerton's successful, public spirited citizens, keenly interested in Orange County, but a young man of more than ordinary ability who has won the well-merited success that attends the earnest efforts of a self-made man.

PHILIP W. DAMON.—As treasurer and manager of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association at Yorba Linda, Cal., Philip W. Damon has ably demonstrated his ability as an executive and his good business judgment. He was born December 27, 1888, at Concord, Mass., a city of interest from an historical standpoint and from the associations connected with it as the home of renowned literary celebrities of past days. Young Philip's education was acquired in the public schools of his native city and supplemented with a course at business college. His first actual business experience was acquired in Boston, Mass., where he held a position as clerk in the Old Colony Trust Company and remained three years. He came to California in 1914 and started as an orange picker in the orange groves at Uplands, San Bernardino County. After two years at Uplands he removed to San Dimas, Los Angeles County, and followed the same line of business, doing packing house work with the San Dimas Lemon Association. He then became manager of the Fallbrook Citrus Association packing house at Fallbrook, Cal., and in the fall of 1918 came to Yorba Linda, where he became associated with the Yorba Linda Citrus Association. He was with the company six months when he enlisted in the World War and became a member of the Three Hundred Forty-eighth Field Artillery, Ninety-first Division. He trained at Camp Lewis, accompanied his division overseas and trained in France. His regiment was just ready to go into action when the armistice was signed and was only six miles behind the line during the fighting. Then he spent three months with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz, Germany, until he returned to New York in April, 1919, and was honorably discharged at Camp Devens, Mass., the same month. After his discharge from the service he became manager of the Alta Loma Citrus Association at Alta Loma, holding the position four months and going thence to Fullerton to become assistant district manager of the Northern Orange County Fruit Exchange. He returned to Yorba Linda, November 15, 1919, and was appointed secretary, treasurer and manager of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association, the position he now holds. This company shipped 250 cars of fruit in 1919, and are members of the California Fruit Growers Exchange. Its officers are: L. B. Pike, president; E. Albertson, of Whittier, vice-president; and P. W. Damon, treasurer and manager. Directors: V. C. Dillingham, B. F. Foss, G. W. Wells, E. Jones, and W. E. Swain, all of Yorba Linda. Fraternally Mr. Damon was made a Mason in Corinthian Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Concord, Mass., as well as Concord Chapter, R. A. M. A young man of ability and energy, his wide experience in the citrus industry and thorough knowledge of the business make him an able and valuable man for the position he occupies.

SYLVESTER W. MORROW.—A native son of Orange County and the son of one of its most esteemed early settlers, George C. Morrow, Sylvester W. Morrow is justly proud of his father's pioneer history, for it is due to the courageous spirit of those who were identified with the early days of this vicinity that the present generation enjoys much of its prosperity. Sylvester W. Morrow was born on the old family ranch in Villa Park precinct, June 28, 1882, and has grown up in the environment of his childhood days. He attended what was then known as the Mountain View school, now the Villa Park grammar school. Being reared in a locality so largely given over to citrus and walnut culture it was but natural that he early acquired a practical and thorough knowledge of these industries and he now occupies the responsible position of foreman of the 150-acre ranch of Ed Farnsworth, the Santa Ana banker and financier. This choice property, which is devoted to oranges and walnuts, is now in full bearing; until the present year it was part of the great Jotham Bixby ranch and is one of the most valuable acreages in this district, and under the efficient and capable supervision of Mr. Morrow it will undoubtedly yield even more handsome returns.

On November 20, 1918, Mr. Morrow was united in marriage with Miss Flossie Essick, who was born and reared in Iowa, and they are the parents of one son, William W. They make their home on the Farnsworth ranch, six miles northeast of Orange. In 1909 Mr. Morrow was appointed state fire warden and he has served continuously ever since and has often been called upon to take an active part in fighting forest fires. Able, efficient and energetic, Mr. Morrow stands high in the regard of the community as do all the members of his family. In fraternal circles he is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Orange.

JULIAN E. THOMAS.—A rancher who is a decided credit to the Fullerton community, first because of his character, his public-spiritedness and his willingness to participate large-heartedly in all worthy local movements, and secondly on account of his handsome orange grove which attests the owner's knowledge and care, is Julian E. Thomas, who was born at Hendersonville, N. C., on October 28, 1860, the son of William R. Thomas who had married Miss Minerva Dawson. Great-grandfather Thomas came from Wales and settled in New Orleans; and Julian's grandfather was born in Orangeburg, S. C., while his grandmother came from Newberry, S. C. Julian studied at the Byers Academy near Hendersonville and at the Hendersonville College, while he stayed at home and helped his father on his plantation. Then, on September 26, 1885, he was married near that town to Miss Emma Hollingsworth, who was born and reared in that vicinity and attended the same schools to which Julian had gone. She was the daughter of Isaac and Katherine Hollingsworth, and grew up to become an artist in the designing of dresses and millinery. The couple lived on the old Thomas plantation until April 5, 1888, and then they came out to the Northwest and settled at Ellensburg, Wash. There they engaged in cattle raising and general farming on a ranch of eighty acres, and for sixteen years they pursued agriculture in that state.

In 1905, Mr. Thomas sold his Washington farm and came south to Fullerton; and while making his home here, he followed carpentering for five years. He helped to erect the Dean Block, the Shumaker Building and other notable structures, and with C. H. Smith, the contractor, he engaged in building St. Agnes Church at the corner of Vermont and West Adams streets, Los Angeles.

In 1907, Mr. Thomas bought a ranch on West Orangethorpe Avenue—seventeen and a half acres near the Christlieb ranch; and when he had set out some two acres with oranges, he sold the ranch to Stern and Goodman. In turn, he purchased from Mr. Goodman six acres of vacant land on West Commonwealth and Nicholas avenues, which he has set out to Valencia oranges. He built his own home on the ranch, and there he lives in comfort, applying with his good wife the teachings of Christian Science faith and practice. Two children have brought added happiness to this worthy couple: Ralph is in business in Seattle; and Florence is employed at the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Fullerton. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas take great pride in community development work, and are always among the first to support good works, good schools and other needed and possible reforms or progress.

FRED C. KRAUSE.—An Orange County financier influential in banking and commercial circles because of his exceptional character, valuable experience and wise leadership making for expansion and development on rational and permanent lines, is Fred C. Krause, the president of the First National Bank of Fullerton, who was born at Sumner, Iowa, on July 15, 1868. His father was Fred Krause, a native of Germany who left the land of his birth because of the tyranny of military service, and who pioneered in Iowa as a rancher. The parents are both deceased, but they are pleasantly recalled in the community in which they lived and labored, as among the builders of the state they adopted as their own.

The youngest child, Fred, enjoyed such advantages as the public school offered, supplemented by three years in Upper Iowa University at Fayette, and four years in the Northwestern College at Naperville, Ill., from which he was graduated in 1895, with the degree of A.B. Three years of additional study at the Pacific Theological Seminary at Oakland gave him his Bachelor of Divinity parchment in 1899, after which he spent seven years in the ministry of the Congregational Church, being pastor at East Oakland and afterwards at Spokane, Wash. He then went to Southeastern Alaska, where he was pastor of the Congregational Church at Douglas Island for one year and was then appointed United States Commissioner at Fairbanks, filling the office almost four years, when he resigned to enter the banking circles of Newport, Wash., where he organized the Security State Bank, of which he was president for three years.

Selling out his Washington interests, he came south to California and Orange County, and in 1911, bought a ranch at Anaheim, associated with Charles H. Eygabrood. There he became one of the organizers of the Anaheim National Bank, of which he was cashier and later president for five years. During this time, being interested in civics, he served as president of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange County for one term. In March, 1917, he sold his interest in the bank, and then gave his attention to his ranch and taking a prominent part in the different war drives, serving as chairman of the local chapter of the American Red Cross.

In April, 1918, Mr. Krause purchased a large interest in the First National Bank of Fullerton, of which he is the president, giving it all of his time and contributing materially to the wonderful growth of the institution. He is also president of the Fullerton Savings Bank, an affiliated institution. He is still interested in horticulture, having five different groves in Orange County, most of them in the Richfield district.

On July 17, 1894, Mr. Krause was married at Dubuque, Iowa, to Miss Adelaide V. Beck, a native of Iowa, who was a student at Northwestern College when they first met, and has been the truest kind of a helpmate ever since. Two children were born to them: Howard A. Krause is cashier of the First National Bank of Fullerton; and Lucile is a student at the University of California at Berkeley. The family are members of the Congregational Church, and Mr. Krause belongs to the Fullerton Club and the Hacienda Country Club at La Habra. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows and is a thirty-second degree Mason as well as a Shriner. When Mr. Krause was a student at Upper Iowa University, he belonged to the National Guard, and as a Republican he has sought to raise the standards of civic life, having rounded out a career that will prove a model and an incentive for the emulation of young men.

WILLIAM E. SCHNITGER.—A painstaking, scientific grower of effective executive force and a worker in mechanical lines, so that he can help not only himself but others in difficult, everyday problems, is William E. Schnitger, the owner of twenty acres of the finest land near Garden Grove, devoted to oranges and walnuts and president of the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association. He was born near Watertown, in Jefferson County, Wis., on September 5, 1874, the son of Adolph Schnitger, who had married Caroline Hager. He attended the common schools of his neighborhood and grew up on his father's farm, where he worked hard and faithfully, and early developed his talents with all kinds of tools. When about twenty years old he accompanied his parents, and a brother and six sisters, to California, traveling hither on the last excursion train out of Chicago over the Santa Fe, in November, 1893. Adolph Schnitger had been in California the year previous and had bought forty acres now situated across the road east of William Schnitger's property, known as the Langenberger Place; and there all went to work with a will. Within a week, however, a younger sister, Ella, was suddenly taken sick and died; and since then his father has passed to the Great Beyond. Mrs. Schnitger is still living, the center of a circle of devoted friends, at Anaheim. There were nine children in the family: Mary, the wife of Rev. J. Schneider, of Oakland; Edwin, of Watertown, Wis., who contemplates removing to California; William E., the subject of our review; Lydia, the wife of Martin Fisher, a gardener at Anaheim; Arthur Albert, who married Miss Helen Schneider, of Garden Grove; Pauline, the wife of H. C. Meiser, the orange grower and nurseryman at Fullerton; Ella, who died when she was eleven years old; Esther, a seamstress, residing with her mother at Anaheim; and Hattie, who resides at Salem, Ore., and is the wife of Henry G. Carl, a contracting carpenter and builder.

In November, 1897, Mr. Schnitger was married to Geneva E. Sherwood, born in Illinois. Not having children of their own they have adopted two boys, Ralph Merl, and Donald Lincoln Schnitger. Following his marriage, for three years he rented, then purchased his father's place of fifty acres, one and one-quarter miles northeast of Garden Grove, and there he lived until selling out, when he purchased his present place about 1904. Having come to possess exceptional common sense and good judgment, partly as the result of his self-development, Mr. Schnitger made no mistake in choosing the land lying on the north side of the road running east to Orange, only five miles away, and within twenty-five minutes' walk of Garden Grove. Here he has planted Valencia oranges and walnuts, and has brought his place up to a very high state of cultivation. Using scientific and up-to-date methods, and being systematic, he naturally reaps the desired-for results. He has built a very good country residence, and there he and his good wife dispense a generous hospitality. Both his weedless ranch, his symmetrical yards and his clean and well kept buildings speak of the orderly habits of the owner, and his belief in what makes for advancement and progress.

The qualities that made him so successful in matters of business, doubtless had much to do with his selection as one of the directors of the Garden Grove Walnut Growers Association, of which he was first a vice-president and then president. To the latter office he was elevated in 1919; and, concerning the deserved honor of reelection, the Garden Grove News of January 30, 1920, has this to say:

"The Garden Grove Walnut Association held the annual election of directors at the packing house Saturday afternoon. All the old directors were reelected, the roster for the ensuing year being as follows: William Schnitger, F. E. Farnsworth, N. I. Rice, George Cook and F. B. Cleveland. The directors reelected officers as follows: William Schnitger, president; F. E. Farnsworth, vice-president; C. K. Lee, secretary and manager; George Cook, representative to the California Walnut Growers Association.

"The Association is fortunate in having exceptionally efficient officers, and the business is being handled in a capable and thoroughly satisfactory manner."

VICENTE G. YORBA.—Among the most progressive and, therefore, the most influential, of all the descendants bearing the time-honored name of Yorba, should be mentioned Vicente G. Yorba, the road overseer, rancher and storekeeper at Peralta, the picturesque country village with its type of the Spanish settlement, on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard Road, about five miles northeast of Olive, in one of the most beautiful scenic portions of Orange County. He comes of the proud old Catalonian family who once owned the extensive Yorba Rancho.

He was born at Peralta, and is a son of the late Vicente Yorba, and a grandson of Bernardo Yorba, whose family originated in Catalonia, Spain; he first saw the light on December 13, 1874. He attended the Peralta district school, and was married in San Diego to Miss Theresa Marron, a native of that city, and they have had four children: Sophia, Rowena, Leonzio and Horace, all of whom, with himself, attend the Catholic Church. Mr. Yorba's mother was Anita Peralta, a daughter of Rafael Peralta, one of the owners of the Rancho Santa Ana de Santiago, an historical circumstance the more interesting because of the Yorba associations. The Yorba family owned the great Spanish Grant known as the Rancho Yorba, comprising 167,000 acres, and extending from the Santa Ana Mountains to the Pacific Ocean. V. G. Yorba's mother was Vicente Yorba's first wife, and when our subject was about fifteen years old, she died, leaving two children—Philippa, now the wife of Juan Farias, a rancher at Santa Monica, and Vicente G. The father married again, choosing Erolinda Cota of Santa Monica as his wife, by whom he had six children—two boys and four girls. She is still living, and is active as a rancher on the Santa Ana Canyon Road, northeast of Olive. Vicente Yorba, the father, died in 1903, aged sixty-five.

When the father remarried, V. G. Yorba pushed out into the world for himself, and so early embarked upon that career which has made him so self-reliant. He first purchased the ranch he now owns, a very valuable place, beautifully located upon the highway, and there he has built a fine bungalow country house, in which he and his excellent family enjoy all the advantages of up-to-date American life. There are thirty-one acres in the ranch, devoted to Valencia oranges and walnuts. He also bought a ranch at Yorba which he set out to Valencia oranges, now bearing, which he still owns. He is also the owner of a general merchandise store at Peralta, as well as a ranch at Pomona. He is, besides, the popular road overseer, and is serving under Supervisor N. T. Edwards. He is a trustee of the Peralta school district, and for many years has been clerk of the school board. In national politics he is a Republican.

HAROLD L. WILKINS, V. S.—Though a native of a far-off Eastern state, Harold L. Wilkins has spent most of his youth and mature life in Orange County, and has returned from his military experience with fresh enthusiasm for the practice of his profession in his home environment. Born in the town of Saint Clair, Mich., August 24, 1890, when he was seven years old the family moved to Oklahoma, and in 1910, located in Anaheim. Mr. Wilkins obtained his education in the public schools and finished with a course in the high school at Anaheim, and in Throop College, Pasadena.

Deciding on the profession of veterinary surgeon, he entered the San Francisco Veterinary College, and after a three-year course, graduated from that institution in 1917. While engaged in the practice of his profession in San Francisco, he answered the call of his country, and enlisted in the Twenty-fourth Veterinary Unit, Veterinary Reserve Corps, and was called into service just as the armistice was signed and the World War brought to an end. He then resumed his practice in San Francisco, and in June, 1919, returned to Orange County and started his practice in Anaheim and Fullerton, with offices at 219 Chestnut Street, Anaheim, and at the Eureka Stables, 201 South Spadra Street, Fullerton, as a surgeon and dentist, treating horses, cattle, dogs and cats, and, being a lover of animals and understanding them, he has met with splendid success in his work in their behalf.

The marriage of Mr. Wilkins, which occurred in Anaheim, united him with Mary Ranker, a native of Ohio, and one daughter has blessed their union, Virginia. Mr. Wilkins is a member of Anaheim Post, American Legion, and with true American spirit does his share toward promoting the welfare of his home county.

HOWARD A. KRAUSE.—A very aggressive young banker, from whose inspiring leadership much may be expected for the future progress of Fullerton, is Howard A. Krause, cashier of the First National Bank of Fullerton and son of Fred C. Krause, the bank's president, whose interesting career is elsewhere sketched in detail in this volume. His father, who had been a clergyman of the Congregational Church, and had spent some time in Alaska as a United States Commissioner, finally took up banking in Washington, and organized and presided over the Security State Bank at Newport; and so it came about that Howard was born at Hood River, Ore., on July 9, 1896. His mother was Miss Adelaide V. Beck before her marriage, a native of Iowa and a fellow student at one time with Mr. Krause at Northwestern College, the latter having also hailed from Iowa.

The public schools, including a first-class high school, helped Howard to prepare for his part in the world, and two years at Pomona College finished his academic career. Entering the bank with his father, he made progress quite as rapidly in winning friends for himself and the institution as in mastering the many and intricate details of financial and commercial and banking procedure. Few, if any, young men in Fullerton enjoy a more deserved popularity.

On April 10, 1917, Howard Krause was married to Miss Lila G. Foss, the ceremony taking place at Anaheim; the bride is a native of Corona, Cal. One child, Harriett, has gladdened the parents' hearts.

Mr. Krause is a Republican in national political affairs, though admirably non-partisan as to local issues, and ready at all times to cooperate in work for the advancement of the nation, the state, the county or the town. He belongs to the Masons, and there enjoys the popularity natural for one of his affability and progressiveness.

WILLIAM H. ROBINSON.—A well-known and, what is infinitely more desirable, a well-liked citizen, William H. Robinson, the rancher of East Orangethorpe Avenue, has enjoyed an enviable association with Fullerton so that he is indeed a part of the history of the town. He was born near Barrie, Ontario, Canada, on November 14, 1879, the son of Moses Robinson, a native of the North of Ireland who came to Canada when he was two years old, and who eventually married Miss Matilda Lockard of Scotland. She died when William was six years of age, and his education in Ontario was continued without her guiding care. His father now makes his home in Barrie. When thirteen years of age William began to earn his own livelihood, continuing on farms until 1896, when he came to New York State. From 1896 to 1900, he spent four years in the restaurant business in Rochester. In 1900 he went to New York City and acted as cashier in hotels for three years, and for a summer he was dining room cashier on the coastwise steamer, Shinnecock. In 1903, he journeyed to Detroit to attend the wedding of a brother, and from there he reached Chicago, where he spent a year. Then he went to St. Louis and worked in the St. Nicholas Hotel during the Exposition.

In 1904, Mr. Robinson came to Los Angeles on a tour to see California, and he has since made this state his home. At first he opened a cigar business, but it satisfied him for only a year. Then he came to Fullerton, and for ten years worked for Cline Bros., the grocers. He purchased four and a half acres on West Amerige Avenue, but in 1919 subdivided a part into lots, continuing Wilshire Avenue through it, and sold the balance to the Fullerton Home Builders, to be subdivided into lots. On November 25 of the same year he bought a ranch of twenty acres on East Orangethorpe Avenue, near the Santa Fe Railroad, and on December 4 he moved onto the farm. Six acres are devoted to lemons, five to Valencia oranges, and nine acres to walnuts; and from a rundown ranch he has made it a first class grove. He owns nineteen shares in the Anaheim Union Water Company.

At Fullerton on October 31, 1906, Mr. Robinson was married to Miss Ida Morrison, a native of Ontario. She lived with her aunt, Mrs. Harry Scott, in Buffalo, N. Y., and as Mr. Scott was a prominent citizen and an equally prominent Mason, she enjoyed various advantages. Two children blessed this fortunate union; the elder is Edith Matilda, the younger Harry William Robinson; and they both attend the Fullerton grammar school. The family attend the Christian Church at Fullerton, and Mr. Robinson is a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., of Fullerton Chapter No. 90, R. A. M., and Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M., and politically is a Republican, with decided preferences as to the fitness of men for office regardless of party ties. Mrs. Robinson is a member of the Order of Eastern Star and the Ebell Club, Fullerton. During the ten years in which Mr. Robinson was with Cline Bros., he served on the Volunteer Fire Department of Fullerton, serving as assistant chief for three years, and six months he filled the chief's place, and he has the record of having been the promptest member. He also served as truant officer of the Fullerton grammar school, and from 1915 to 1919 was the town's deputy marshal.

HARRY V. WILLIAMS.—The favoring conditions in both the industrial and commercial fields of Fullerton, together with its growing importance as a residential town and educational center, have attracted to the city financiers of ability and ambition, and among the gifted and most promising is Harry V. Williams, the popular assistant cashier of the First National Bank. He was born at Port Hope, in Canada, on October 12, 1874, but was reared at Brantford. His father was George Williams, a meat merchant, who married Lucy Jull, a native of Kent, England; they were the parents of seven children. Both parents are now dead.

Educated in the schools of Brantford, to which town the family had moved when our subject was six years of age, Harry, the youngest child in the family, later attended the Collegiate Institute there. After leaving school, he grew up on the home farm, and there he assisted until he was twenty-one years of age.

His first move, in breaking away from home, was the long stride to the Pacific; he first came to California, in 1895, but located permanently here in 1903. He luckily wended his way to Pomona, where he found employment for five years in the orange industry. Then, for ten years, he was with E. E. Armour's Drug Store at Pomona. In September, 1915, attracted by the more favorable prospects in Fullerton, he removed to the town in which he is now so well known.

For two years Mr. Williams was interested in the drug business as proprietor of the Corner Drug Store, but selling out, he entered the First National Bank as book-keeper, and was later advanced to be assistant cashier. Since then, he has become more and more identified with the growing town. He has been active as a Republican in national political movements, and as a nonpartisan in local affairs, has participated in the uplift work of the Christian Church, of which he is a member, and has gotten his share of deserved popularity among the Masons and the Knights of Pythias. On June 10, 1903, Mr. Williams was married to Miss Fanny Mae Varcoe, a native of Dungannon, Ontario, and the daughter of Wm. and Sophia Varcoe, now of Pomona. One child has blessed their union, a daughter, Dorothy Grace.

JAMES H. WHITAKER.—Among the old residents and business men in Orange County is James H. Whitaker, a native Chicagoan who has long been identified with Southern California, so that Orange County seems his natural home. He was born on December 19, 1864, a date memorable in American history, for on that very day President Lincoln called for 300,000 more volunteer soldiers. His father was Andrew Whitaker, a farmer, who came to California in 1887, and located in Anaheim. He had married Miss Mary Cox, a native of Connecticut, and the family came West in 1887; both parents are now dead.

There were four boys in the family, all of whom are living, and James was the second child. He went to the local public school and the Lake Forest University and on completing the course he came to California in 1884 with an uncle, James Whitaker, who laid out Buena Park in Orange County. For some time uncle and nephew worked together, and then our subject, with Tom Deering, bought out a general merchandise establishment at Buena Park, at which place he was in business until 1909. He was the first postmaster at that place, and he remained there for about twenty years.

Elmer C. Hooker
Adeline S. Hooker

On removing to Anaheim, Mr. Whitaker edited the paper called The Derrick, after which he was with Mr. Yungbluth in the clothing and furnishing business for three years. On January 1, 1917, he became secretary of the Anaheim Board of Trade—a happy appointment, for never did the organization flourish so well as during Mr. Whitaker's assignment to the wheel. Having become interested in the Orange County Rock and Gravel Company, Mr. Whitaker resigned as secretary of the Board of Trade in July, 1920, to devote his time to his personal interests. He is secretary of the Mother Colony Club, is an influential Republican, is a Knights Templar Mason and an Elk. In Chicago, he was a loyal member of the National Guard.

At Buena Park on September 1, 1891, Mr. Whitaker was married to Miss Lillian Whitaker, also born in Chicago, and they are the parents of four children: Madeleine is Mrs. Ralph Maas; and there are three sons, Loring, Gerald and James. The family attend the Episcopal Church, of which Mr. Whitaker is a vestryman.

ELMER ORVAL HOOKER.—Prominent among the interesting pioneers of Orange County who have contributed something worth while toward the development of the section in which they have lived and toiled, must be mentioned Mr. and Mrs. Elmer O. Hooker, identified in an enviable way with the introduction of the sugar beet into Los Alamitos. He was born at Terre Haute, Ind., on January 18, 1873, the son of William O. and Elizabeth (Ratts) Hooker, natives of Virginia and Indiana, respectively, and when three years of age was brought by his parents to Phillips County, Kans. There his father raised wheat, corn, rye and oats; and while he strove for a common school education, he helped on the home farm. Of their six children, four of whom are living, our subject is the third eldest.

In 1894, Mr. Hooker came out to California, and that same year he took up farming at Pomona. Three years later, he removed to Los Alamitos, settling there early enough to build one of the first houses, and to become one of the first sugar beet growers in that vicinity. He helped on the construction of the sugar factory, and he also became one of the foremen for the five following years of the Los Alamitos Sugar Refinery and helped to make its reputation for a superior product. He was manager of the Los Alamitos Beet Growers Association for a number of years, and set the pace in growing beets by the latest, most up-to-date methods. He operated from 150 to 500 acres planted to sugar beets, but in 1919 he gave up raising sugar beets and located on a ranch of forty-seven acres he had purchased in Santiago Canyon in 1917. The ranch was formerly a part of the Madame Modjeska ranch, and has over 3,000 olive trees planted by the distinguished Polish actress over twenty years ago which he is grubbing out so that he may plant the land to alfalfa and walnuts. Besides seven head of horses and eight of cattle, he follows the chicken industry as a side issue. He also improved and still owns valuable residence and business property at Seal Beach, Los Alamitos and Huntington Beach.

At Los Alamitos on September 12, 1915, Mr. Hooker was married to Mrs. Adelina S. Upperman, a southern lady born at Macon, Ga., the daughter of Harry I. and Laura A. (Alverson) Joy, natives of Ellsworth, Maine, and Macon, Ga., respectively. Harry Joy served in a Maine regiment during the Civil War, after which he married a southern woman and engaged in farming until his death; his widow now lives in Evansville, Ind. Adelina Joy was educated in the schools of Macon, Ga., and there, too, she married William Upperman and they removed to Saskatchewan, Canada, where he was employed as railroad engineer on the Canadian Pacific until he was killed in a train wreck. After his death his widow engaged in railroad Y. M. C. A. work until she came to California in February, 1915, and in September of the same year changed her name.

Besides ranching so successfully, Mr. Hooker has had both public office experience and done good civic work. He was in charge of the road improvement work in his district for years, and has served for a season on the jury. He is what might be termed an exceedingly useful citizen, both doing things and setting an inspiring, contagious example to others.

O. T. JOHNSON.—Among the highly-respected citizens now residing, retired, at Santa Ana are Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Johnson, who were long prosperous farmers in Iowa, and reside at their comfortable bungalow at Washington and French streets in Santa Ana. They have been privileged to rear a family, all of whom have married well and are in turn occupying positions of responsibility and esteem in the world.

Mr. Johnson was born in Holmes County, Ohio, on February 6 of the historic year, 1848, and eight years later was taken by his parents to Cedar County, Iowa. There he grew up and became the owner of a well improved farm of one hundred sixty acres. There, too, on New Year's Day, 1873, he was married to Miss Mary Elijah, a native of Delaware County, N. Y., who came West and became a resident of the Hawkeye State. They joined the Methodist Church, and have been consistent Methodists ever since. In 1908, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson bade good-bye to their Middle West home and came out to sunnier California, locating in Santa Ana, where they have since made their home. And every day in the happy years intervening, they have been busy adding to their cherished memories of devoted friends or pleasant places or occasions.

Four children have blessed their uninterruptedly happy home life. William E. Johnson is employed by the Pomona Valley Telephone and Telegraph Union, and is the father of eight children; he married Miss Jessamine Coe, of Clarence, Iowa, who passed to the Great Beyond in April, 1917: Myrtie is the wife of W. W. Wasser, the secretary of the Santa Ana Elks; Clare was for fourteen years mechanical foreman for the Santa Ana Register, he lives in Santa Ana, but is ranching near Anaheim; and Mildred is the wife of Fred D. Stever, the well-known realty man of Santa Ana, just returned from an eight months' service in France. Her first husband was Walter Galbraith, a native son of Santa Ana's first generation; but he died in 1917, leaving one child, De Mont Galbraith.

NORTON W. HATFIELD.—A worthy representative of a fine old pioneer family naturally proud of its record of useful and successful activity in two states is Norton W. Hatfield, who was born near Maquoketa, Jackson County, Iowa, on August 22, 1884, the son of George Henry Hatfield who was then a prosperous farmer in the Hawkeye State. He distributed milk and dairy products in the county, and also had charge of one of the rural delivery routes of the U. S. mail service. In 1885 he removed to California and purchased forty acres on the Garden Grove Road, at that time cactus and sagebrush; but with the assistance of his good wife, who was Helena A. Fuller before her marriage, and his son Norton, for a while a pupil of the Orangethorpe school, he cleared the cactus and sagebrush and planted the land to grapes. The grapes died, however, and then the vines were grubbed out and apricots, peaches and walnuts were set out instead. These in turn were pulled out, and some of the forty acres have since been sold. Now his sister, Mrs. Parrett, owns eleven acres, five acres belongs to the mother of the subject of our sketch, and ten acres to him.

Norton Hatfield's acreage is devoted to Valencia oranges, and is under the service of the Anaheim Union Water Company, although he also receives water from the Browning pumping plant, which commands a well of fifty inches; and the grove is properly rated as one of the most attractive, as it is one of the most fruitful and profitable, in Orange County. The ranching is carried on according to the latest guidance of scientific research, and only the most up-to-date methods and machinery are employed. He markets his fruit through the Mutual Orange Distributors Association in Fullerton in which he is a director.

On December 28, 1908, Mr. Hatfield was married to Miss Hattie Kaminske, a native of Burlington, Iowa, and the daughter of Charles K. Kaminske, who had married Miss Louise Bruns. He was a talented musician, but he gave up his profession for farm work; he died in Iowa and his widow with her daughter, Hattie, came to California in the fall of 1907. Two children came to brighten the Hatfield fireside, and they are Ruth and George. Mr. Hatfield is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, and Mrs. Hatfield belongs to the Presbyterian Church of the same place.

JOHN T. JOHNSON.—An interesting rancher of the class always sought for by every new community, their lives speaking for themselves, and each year of their activity bearing more and more desirable fruit, is John T. Johnson, who was born near Uniontown, Bourbon County, Kans., on September 7, 1886, the son of J. D. Johnson, a farmer of that state, who was born in Missouri and came to Kansas when he was three years old. In time, he married Miss Mina E. Griffith, a lady of accomplishment, who proved a devoted wife and an affectionate mother. They are still living. J. D. Johnson raised stock and grain; and so, while he was attending school in Allen and Neosho counties, John spent the first nineteen years of his life at home, assisting his father on the farm. In 1905 he came west to California and struck out for himself. For two years he worked at the packing house of the Leffingwell ranch at Whittier, and after that he put in a year at the Escondido packing house. He next went to Ventura County and for three years worked in a packing house at Fillmore, and while still there, he started to ranch in his fourth year. He purchased seven acres near Fillmore, and devoted all of the land to Navel oranges.

When Mr. Johnson sold out in 1914, he came to Orange County and settled in Anaheim, and at first he purchased five acres on South Los Angeles Street, just outside of Anaheim. There were three-year-old Valencia orange trees on the farm, and he had a good chance to experiment in cultivating citrus fruit. In July, 1918, he also purchased seven acres on Anaheim Road and Placentia Avenue, all set out to Valencias, and in October, 1919, he sold his five-acre ranch. He put up a house and such barns and other buildings as were necessary, and on his seven acres he is living today. In November, 1919, Mr. Johnson purchased a ranch at the corner of Broadway and West Street, and he thereby added to his holdings nine acres of full-bearing orange trees, surrounded by a row of walnuts. About three acres are devoted to Navel and sweet oranges, and some six acres to Valencias. He receives his water from a private irrigation plant, and markets his products through the California Fruit Growers Exchange.

At Santa Ana on December 2, 1909, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Minnie E. Hodge, a native of Tennessee, where she was educated in private schools. Her grandparents were pioneers in northeastern Tennessee, and her father was a Southern planter, and a man of progressive ideas and wide influence in his district. Mr. Johnson is a Mason, affiliated with Anaheim Lodge No. 207, F. & A. M., and there is no more popular member in that order.

NATHAN C. STOCKWELL.—An up-to-date, thoroughly progressive and successful rancher, Nathan C. Stockwell, the well-known citrus grower north of Anaheim is a fine representative of the Buckeye State, where he was born, near Willoughby, in the vicinity of Cleveland, on September 16, 1871. His father was Joseph E. Stockwell, an extensive manufacturer of brick in Nebraska, who had the first machine for moulding bricks in Lincoln; and he had married Miss La Villa Henderson. She died on the ranch at North Anaheim, in October, 1919, mourned by all who had been attracted by her charming personality as a neighbor and a friend; Joseph E. Stockwell sustained serious injuries in an auto accident, which impaired his otherwise sturdy constitution, upon which he had relied for years, although he is still astonishingly active. These good parents moved to Lincoln when Nathan was ten years old; and near that city he was educated in a country school. He thus grew up to help his father in the brickyard; and when the latter left Nebraska and removed to Tacoma, Wash., he accompanied him and shared his varied and varying fortunes there for four or five years. In 1905, they came to Southern California and purchased sixty acres north of Anaheim; it was covered with cactus and sand, and was declared by the old residents to be worthless or at least undesirable acreage.

With the assistance of his father, however, he cleared the land, sunk a well and installed a pumping plant; and having set the land out to lemons and oranges, it is today valuable to a high degree. From time to time, he has sold some of the area; but father and son still have sixteen acres devoted to raising Valencia oranges, served by a fine pumping plant tapping seventy-five inches of water, raised by a Krow pump.

Joseph E. Stockwell is a member and director of the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Growers Association; he marches under the banner of the Republicans, and Nathan Stockwell is a live member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Both father and son belong to that highly desirable class of settlers who, when they have once pitched their tent, never break camp without effecting some improvement in the neighborhood worth the while.

C. S. BUNDSCHUH.—The city of Huntington Beach and the surrounding country are fortunate indeed to have such an efficient and considerate funeral director as is found in the person of C. S. Bundschuh, master of the art of embalming and numbered among the most able and successful business men of Huntington Beach. He was born March 31, 1873, in Olmstead, in Pulaski County, Ill., a son of August and Catherine (Lilley) Bundschuh. August Bundschuh passed away in Olmstead, Ill.; his widow, now in her eighty-first year, is well and active and resides in Huntington Beach. Mr. Bundschuh's early life was spent on the home place in Pulaski County, and here he received his education.

In 1898 Mr. Bundschuh was united in marriage with Miss Mary Hanna, who was also a resident of Illinois. She passed away five years later, in 1903, leaving two children, both of whom are now deceased. His second marriage occurred in 1904, when he was united with Miss Alice Cockrum, of Arkansas, the ceremony being solemnized at Cairo, Ill. This union has been blessed with four children: George, a student at Huntington Beach high school; Alice Louise, Grace and Norbit. Mr. Bundschuh first engaged in the undertaking business at Ullin, Pulaski County, Ill. After several years there he sold his business in 1910 and moved to Chicago, locating at 1625 Wells Street, where he was engaged in the undertaking business until 1912. While living in Chicago Mr. Bundschuh had the proud distinction of owning and operating the first auto hearse in that city, and also said to have been the second one in use in the United States.

In 1912 Mr. Bundschuh came to California, locating at Huntington Beach, where he purchased six lots at the corner of Seventh and Main streets, and here, during the year, he built his residence. The following year his undertaking establishment and funeral chapel were built, Mr. Bundschuh becoming the pioneer undertaker of Huntington Beach. His establishment is a model one in every respect, the chapel seating 140 persons. In order to perfect himself in his profession he took a course in embalming at Williams College, Kansas City, Mo., in 1905, and supplemented his training with a post-graduate course in 1906, at the College of Embalming at St. Louis, Mo. Externally, Mr. Bundschuh is a Mason, being past master of Huntington Beach Lodge No. 380, F. & A. M. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Modern Woodmen of America. In addition to his business at Huntington Beach, he is a partner in the Coachella Valley Undertaking Company at Thermal, Cal. Ever since locating at Huntington Beach, Mr. Bundschuh has taken an active interest in all the affairs of the community and with his family enjoys a justly deserved popularity.

PALITO ARBALLO.—A carefree, willing and devotedly conscientious laborer, whose simple, upright life and an attractive temperament, doubtless inherited from his worthy parents, have made him justly popular among his associates, is Palito Arballo, the rancher and assistant road overseer at Yorba Station. He was born at Anaheim, the son of Francisco Arballo, the farmer of that vicinity, and married Mrs. A. Frances Ruiz, widow of the late Francisco Ruiz, a native of Anaheim. She was the daughter of Francisco Lopez, who had married Ruth Urius. By her first union, Mrs. Arballo had four children: Albertine is now the wife of William Vasquez, and lives across the street from her parents on the same ranch; Ruby Ruiz is sixteen; Lily thirteen; and Josephine seven years old. The children attend the Yorba grade school.

Mrs. Arballo owns the ranch of five acres in the Yorba precinct where they make their home. It is devoted to walnuts, and as the grove is now about twelve years old, is in fine shape. Mr. Arballo's regular line of work has been teaming and farming, but of late he has been appointed to the position for which he is so well prepared by experience and enterprise, that of assistant road overseer under V. G. Yorba. In national politics he is a Republican, but this party preference never interferes with his cordial support of whatever seems to be best for the community.

J. VALENTI.—A young man who served in a California regiment in the World War is J. Valenti, who was born near Palermo, Sicily, May 16, 1892, where he received a good education in the public schools. At the age of twelve years he was apprenticed to the shoemakers' trade and on completing the trade at the age of seventeen he started a shop in his native town. He served three months in the Italian army when he was taken ill and was duly honorably discharged. In 1913 he came to New York City, where he worked at his trade. Having always had a desire to see California and to try his luck in the land of gold and sunshine he came to the Pacific Coast in 1914, locating in San Bernardino, where he was employed at his trade until Congress declared war on Germany.

Being anxious to join the colors of the Stars and Stripes, he immediately took out his first papers and on May 29, 1917, he enlisted in the Coast Artillery Band. He was stationed at Fort McArthur and later transferred to the Quartermaster's department as corporal and was stationed at San Pedro until February 24, 1919, when he received his honorable discharge. Looking for a location he was so well pleased with conditions in Orange he located here and opened his present place of business for the repairing and making of shoes, having the latest machinery, all operated by electric power and thus has acquired a large and paying business in a short time.

In San Bernardino occurred the marriage of Mr. Valenti with Josephine Valord, who was born in Texas and they have one child, Mary Grace. Mr. Valenti is a very liberal and enterprising young man and is ready at all times to aid movements for the upbuilding of his adopted country. In political views, Mr. Valenti is a Republican.

CHARLES L. CRUMRINE.—A native son who has made an enviable record as the manager of the La Habra Citrus Association, one who is very progressive and believes in adopting the latest methods that make for business advancement, is Charles L. Crumrine. He was born in Ventura County, May 30, 1881, a son of Harrison and Mary (Trotter) Crumrine, natives of Pennsylvania and Illinois, respectively.

Harrison Crumrine is a pioneer of Ventura County, having located there in 1869. Charles was educated in the grammar and high schools of Ventura, and since entering the business world has followed the citrus packing industry very closely and by centralizing his efforts along a single line he has achieved marked success as a manager. For six years he was manager of the Santa Paula Citrus Association and in 1911 became manager of the Leffingwell Packing House, on the Leffingwell ranch near La Habra. It was in 1915 that Mr. Crumrine accepted the position of manager of the La Habra Citrus Association. This plant is now the largest in Orange County, and its phenomenal growth in business, since Mr. Crumrine took charge, emphasizes his fitness for such an important post. The excellent business judgment and fidelity to details he has exhibited and his wise, tactful and courteous treatment of the employes is conclusive proof that the directors of the association made no mistake when they chose Mr.

George Dunton

Crumrine as their manager. There was but one section to the plant when he took charge; now there are four. One hundred forty cars each of lemons and oranges was the maximum shipment in a season, but through his efficient management there were packed during 1919, 425 cars of lemons and 375 cars of oranges. He predicts that the next three years will see 800 cars of lemons and 600 of oranges packed and shipped each year by this association. The management contemplates the building of a new orange house in 1921, to care for its anticipated increase in business.

The La Habra Citrus Association is composed of 170 growers, who represent 2,000 acres of land devoted to citrus culture, and it maintains a fumigating and picking department. A Mexican colony has been established by the association for the comfort and benefit of its pickers; a settlement worker is located in the colony, who looks after the morale of its members and the general welfare of the colony. The citrus district of La Habra is one of the most productive in the county, its soil being especially adapted to the growing of a fine quality of fruit, which commands the highest price in the Eastern market. The officers and directors of the association are: A. M. Otis, president; W. L. York, vice-president; C. L. Crumrine, secretary and manager; and the following brands are packed La Habra, Shepherd, Reliable Sunkist brands, and Rex and Bengal, choice brands.

On June 30, 1903, at Santa Paula, Mr. Crumrine was united in marriage with Miss May Brookhouser, and this union has been blessed with a daughter, Pauline May. Fraternally Mr. Crumrine is a Mason, a member of Whittier Lodge No. 323, F. & A. M., at Whittier, Cal. In addition to the responsibilities of his position, Mr. Crumrine is the owner of a citrus orchard in the La Habra Heights Addition, which he has himself developed.

GEORGE DUNTON.—A progressive young man of superior business qualifications who has been identified with the automobile business since he was eighteen years of age, George Dunton has made for himself a distinct place in Anaheim's business circles. Quick to discriminate and swift to grasp the opportunity for success, his selection of Orange County as the scene of his operations in the automobile field has been well rewarded.

He was born in Chicago, Ill., November 27, 1888, the only child of William B. and May B. (Keeler) Dunton, natives of Belvedere, Ill. The father was engaged in the grain business in Chicago until 1914, when he decided to locate in California, and he has since been engaged in orange growing at Anaheim. George Dunton was educated in the public schools of Chicago and at the Athenaeum in that city, and upon embarking in business life was engaged with the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific and the Southern Pacific for a period of two years. In 1906 he entered the automobile business in Chicago, continuing there until he came to California in 1911, where he was at first with the Stromberg Carburetor Company. In 1912 he entered the employ of the Ford Motor Company at Los Angeles, continuing with them for six years and becoming their sales manager. Wishing to engage in business for himself, in 1918 he purchased his present business, the Ford Agency at Anaheim, from G. T. Ingram, and also added the agency for the Fordson tractor for Orange County, which he held until the agency for the tractor was divided among the Ford agents of the county. His territory is Anaheim and vicinity, including Garden Grove and Los Alamitos. His business has rapidly increased until he now employs twenty-six people, and finds that his thorough business experience in the East in the automobile field is of great advantage to him. He occupies a large garage, 60x110, located at North Los Angeles and Cypress streets, and besides has a warehouse on the Southern Pacific Railroad. Up until October 1, 1920, at the end of the first two years' sales, he has delivered 344 tractors, a surprisingly large number, even outnumbering the sale of Ford automobiles during the same period, showing the wonderful popularity of the Fordson tractor.

Mr. Dunton's marriage, on June 15, 1914, at White Bear Lake, Minn., united him with Miss Ruby Matthews of St. Paul, Minn., and two daughters have been born to them, Elizabeth and Barbara. Mr. Dunton is a member of the Orange County Automobile Trades Association, and is popular in the circles of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, the Orange County Country Club and the Hacienda Country Club of La Habra, in all of which he holds membership. In fraternal circles he is a Knight Templar Mason and a Shriner, belonging to Al Malaikah Temple at Los Angeles, and is also a member of the Anaheim Lodge of Elks.

Mr. Dunton finds recreation from the arduous cares of business in golf and tennis, and his deep interest in Orange County is manifested in the enthusiasm with which he furthers all measures or organizations that tend toward the development of the county and for the public weal.

CHARLES EBERTH.—A thorough workman who has done much to perfect the manufacture of auto tops and to improve the methods of auto painting, is Charles Eberth, the expert upholsterer of Orange, who is a familiar figure in the social life of his home town, Santa Ana. He was born in Vienna, Austria, in 1859, educated in the excellent public schools of that country, also attending the gymnasium, and there learned the trade of an upholsterer and a cabinetmaker. For five years he served in the Austrian army, as a member of the Sixth Hussar Regiment, in which he was sergeant, and campaigned at the front in the Turkish-Russian War of 1878-79, taking part in the battles of Serreava and Burtcska, and was wounded in the thigh in the latter struggle. He obtained a furlough; and while on the reserve list came to the United States in 1881, and went to work at his trade in New York.

In 1894, he removed to Chicago and entered the employ of the Pullman Car Works; and for thirteen years he was one of their most accomplished upholsterers. In 1907, he came out to the Northwest, and for five years followed his trade at Portland. His natural gifts, his developed technical skill and his superior taste, together with his known determination never to deliver any work that was not finished in every respect, all combined to bring him all the patronage that he could take care of.

In 1912, he came South to Los Angeles and was soon engaged by Barker Bros. as upholsterer. Next he removed to Pasadena and worked for Knowles and Phillips in the same line. In 1915 he located in Santa Ana, where he bought a residence and followed his trade, making a specialty of automobile tops and other motor upholstery. In 1919 he sold out and started the same business at Orange, making tops and upholstering. He also went in for automobile painting at the corner of Olive and North Glassell streets; and his advent into Orange was followed by an immediate increase in profitable trade.

Twenty-five years ago, at Seattle, Mr. Eberth was married to Miss Anna Studavil, a native of Galveston, and a lady with a strong, winning personality. They have had twelve children, and six are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Eberth belong to the Baptist Church in Santa Ana, and are active in all good works in time of war as well as in times of peace.

EDSON JOEL BALL.—An experienced, well-posted realty dealer of Orange, California, whose prosperity has very naturally made him an enthusiastic booster and loyal citizen of Orange County, is Edson J. Ball, who was born in Petersburg, Monroe County, Mich., December 24, 1850. His father was Wesley Ball, a native of Rochester, N. Y., who came with his father, Joel Ball, a farmer, to Michigan, where the latter lived and labored, and died at the age of ninety-four. The Ball family are of Puritan stock, closely related to Mary Ball, the mother of George Washington, and were long residents of Massachusetts. Wesley Ball cleared a farm from the timber at a time when there were only cow paths and Edson J. could often, as a boy, see bear tracks near their cabin. There were six children in the family, but only two now living.

Edson J., the third eldest, was brought up on a farm when for a time there was no public school, and finally a log schoolhouse was put up, with a teacher who "boarded 'round," and he continued at home with his father until he was eighteen years old. He then struck out for himself and started to learn the butcher business, buying cattle and hogs and wholesaled meat in Toledo, Ohio. There were no railroads over which to ship stock and he drove them through from Southern Michigan to Toledo, and having no scales at that time, he had to guess at the weight hitting the mark, generally, within a few pounds. As he paid cash for the stock he was able to sell then to good advantage. Many a time he bought A-No. 1 beef cattle for from $14 to $16 per head, selling the entire carcass for three and one-half cents per pound—some difference in prices compared with the present time when the high cost of living is the principal topic of conversation. Mr. Ball met with good success in his ventures and in 1876 added dairying to his stock business in Petersburg, along the stamping grounds of General Custer, who was reared only seventeen miles from the home of the Balls, so that they saw much of him as a boy.

It was while Mr. Ball was living in Petersburg that he became city marshal and street commissioner of the town. There was a bad element at large in the town and he made it his first duty to clean up the place and make it safer for the people who believed in law and order. He had the entire confidence of the citizens, and was known by the rough element to be absolutely fearless in the discharge of his duties as an officer and many a desperate man did he take to the penitentiary without using bracelets, nor did they attempt to escape for they well knew the results. Mr. Ball often says that the Lord must have spared him for some particular purpose as he took his life in his own hands many times.

In 1905 Mr. Ball went to Spokane, Wash., and was made meat inspector for that city, remaining in that position two years, or until a government inspector was installed. After that he was called many times to render expert opinion on practical subjects. While meat inspector he made better the working conditions for employes of the slaughter houses, the handling of meat more sanitary, thereby rendering a distinct service to the consumers. He was appointed deputy city assessor of Spokane and held the office until 1911, when he resigned to come to California. On looking about the southern part of the state he finally selected Orange as a satisfactory place to settle and he at once established himself in the real estate business, selling city and ranch properties, writing insurance—representing the German-American and the Springfield companies—and negotiating loans, in all of which he has been singularly successful and has been a real benefactor to the city and county.

In 1876, Mr. Ball was united in marriage with Miss Jennie Hill, born in Petersburg, Mich., the daughter of Horace C. Hill, a Vermonter by birth and attorney by profession, who drove to Michigan, with his first wife and five children, with an ox-team. Mrs. Hill, who was before her marriage, Amelia Trumley, died in Michigan; for a second wife he married Miss Julia Bowen, by whom he had seven children. He practiced law in Monroe County and there both he and his wife died. Seven of the two families of children are still living. The Hill and Ball families were among the very earliest settlers in Monroe County and Jennie Hill and Edson Ball grew up together as children. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ball: Harry, a farmer of Jackson, Mich., has three daughters, Josephine, Mabel and Winnifred; Mable Ball became the wife of Dr. E. T. Lamb, of Alma, Mich., and they have two sons, Woodburn and Gordon; Iva Lena, is a graduate of Alma College and taught school for some years, she married Cleve Best and they have a daughter, Ruth, and live at Flint, Mich.; Bernice is Mrs. G. W. Moore and the mother of two daughters, Marian and Lucile, they reside in Hollywood, Cal.; Everell J., lives in Montana, is married and has a daughter, Audrey; George Ball, the youngest, also makes his home in Montana, is married and has a son Norwood Dickerson Ball, who bears a striking likeness to his grandfather. George was commissioned a captain during the World War and was stationed at Quantico, Va., as supervisor of the officers' training school there. He is a member of the Officers' Reserve and subject to call should his services be needed.

The Ball family attend the Presbyterian Church in Orange, and Mr. Ball marches with the Republicans in national affairs, but in local issues he supports the men and measures he deems best suited for the town and county regardless of party lines. Mr. and Mrs. Ball have an ever-widening circle of friends and well-wishers in Orange and the county.

G. W. STRUCK.—An enterprising Californian who has been very successful, but who, while attaining prosperity for himself, did not fail to do his best to help build up Orange and the surrounding locality, is G. W. Struck, who came to Orange County in the early eighties. He was born in Pomerania, Germany, in 1866, and when only four years of age was brought across the ocean to Minnesota. His father, Carl Struck, settled near Zurnbrota, Minn., and from 1870 to 1878 was a farmer there; then he removed to near Austin, the county seat of Mower County, in the same state, where he remained for four years. In December, 1882, he came west to California and at Orange was a raiser of fruit until he died, on October 4, 1917, in his seventy-eighth year. He was one of the organizers of the Lutheran Church at Orange, and was on its board of trustees. Mrs. Struck, the mother, was Amelia Kamrath before her marriage, and she died at Orange in November, 1892, aged fifty-three years. She was the mother of four children—Fred, G. W. and Herman Struck, all now in Orange, and Max Struck, who died in 1908.

From the early seventies until 1882 G. W. Struck was reared in Minnesota, where he attended the local schools; and when he came to California in 1882, he went to work at teaming and at farming. He learned the blacksmith's trade at Jack Goodin's shop in Los Angeles, on old Fort Street, now Upper Broadway, and when Goodin sold out and removed to Sespie as a contractor in the stone quarry, he went with him, and worked as a driller and a blacksmith. After six months, Goodin removed to Oakland, and again Mr. Struck went along in his service, and took up teaming. Still again, when Goodin went to Telluride, Colo., to work in the mines, he shared his venture, and while Goodin ran the blacksmith end of the enterprise, Struck ran a pack train of burrows, from Marshall Pass to the end of the railroad at Bridal Veil Falls. Then he went to Cripple Creek, Colo., when there were all tent houses in that section, and located some claims and worked as a blacksmith; but the sickness of his mother compelled him to return, after three years' absence from the state.

He bought a shop at the northeast corner of Chapman and Orange streets, and started in at blacksmithing and carriage-making and repairing with A. Albrecht, under the firm name of Albrecht and Struck, and built up an extensive business; and later they removed the shop to its present location, at the south side of Chapman, between Grand and Orange streets, and extended the variety of business undertaken. Later, Mr. Struck bought Mr. Albrecht out, and for six or eight years ran the business alone, when he sold it to Frank Wheeler.

While blacksmithing, Mr. Struck had bought ten acres on Batavia Street, near Taft, set out to apricots and walnuts, which he afterward sold, but not before he had purchased his present place of ten acres at 621 North Glassell Street. It had at first only a few orange trees; but he improved it, and set it out to Valencia oranges. He also owns two other valuable orange orchards. He still owns the buildings where he had his shop, and also built a garage, 60x100 feet in size, next to his shop.

At Orange, Mr. Struck was married to Miss Clara Boese, a native of Wisconsin, who died here in 1913, leaving one son, George M. Struck, who assists his father. In 1917 Mr. Struck married a second time, the ceremony also taking place at Orange; his bride being Miss Minnie Maas, a native of Norfolk, Nebr. Mr. Struck belongs to the Lutheran Church and the Lutheran Men's Club, and is a member of the Foothill Valencia Orange Growers Association, and also a director in the same.

LEO BORCHARD.—Among those whose exceptional enterprise and movements for progress have given them, more and more, an enviable rank among the leading ranchers of Orange County, may be mentioned Leo Borchard of Santa Ana, who with his brother, Frank P., owned a fine tract of over 900 acres on the Talbert Road, four miles south of Huntington Beach, which they reclaimed from tule and swamp land until it was one of the most productive ranches in the county, farming it until they disposed of the larger part of it. They are the sons of Casper Borchard, a native of Germany and a pioneer of what is now western Orange County, residing at Conejo, Cal., where he is successful and respected. The maiden name of the mother, Mrs. Borchard, was Teresa Maring, and she died when the lad Leo was seventeen. Casper Borchard was a stockman and a farmer, and came to own 4,000 acres in Ventura County, and 2,700 acres in Madera County, as well as several fine ranches in Orange County. In recent years he has disposed of his lands to his children, and Borchard Bros. were among the largest landowners in the city of Huntington Beach. Casper Borchard settled on land hitherto untouched by the hand of man, and cleared it of the underbrush with which it was covered, plowed it, and otherwise prepared it for cultivation. He was indeed a true pioneer, for he was the first man to plow the soil south of the Santa Clara River in Ventura County, and was a pioneer cattle and grain rancher.

The eldest son of a family of five boys and three girls, Leo Borchard was born on a ranch two and a half miles northeast of what is now Oxnard, in Ventura County, on December 16, 1879, and there he was reared, remaining in Ventura County until 1900, when he came to this vicinity, very properly called the Swamp. Being apt, and clever in the use of machinery, he was given the job to run the big excavator or ditch-digging machine owned by his father, W. T. Newland and W. D. Lamb. That was the first work of importance that he ever did and he continued at it until two large ditches were constructed. The well-drained country, the great ditches through the Swamp, and the graded Talbert Road bear testimony to his judgment and thoroughness. Prior to that he had attended the public schools at Newbury Park, but his educational advantages were limited, for as the eldest boy, it was necessary for him to work.

Under his father, Mr. Borchard not only helped to build the drainage ditch and the Talbert Road, but he assisted in clearing it of willows and reclaiming large stretches of the Swamp, covered also with tules, and turning the morass into a veritable garden spot. To his energy and handiwork may be credited the many improvements on his own home ranch—a good bungalow residence, large barns, a tank house, a garage, a windmill, good yards for livestock, and a fine yard, besides a ten-inch well and three twelve-inch wells all flowing. With his brother Frank, their holdings were divided into the following excellent ranches: 316 acres and 160 acres on the west side of Santa Ana, 200 acres south of Huntington Beach, 118 acres on the Mesa, 252 acres in the bottoms, and seventy-six acres at Fairview. Mr. Borchard also owns jointly with his four brothers a twenty-acre tract at Garden Grove, while these same brothers own a half-interest with W. T. Newland, Sr., in sixty acres on the southeast of Newland ranch in the Huntington Beach district. In 1920 the two brothers sold over 800 acres for $335,000, a vast difference from the original purchase price when it was swamp land, showing what well directed energy and perseverance can do.

Mr. Borchard and his brothers were well known as breeders of Percheron-Norman horses and also mules. They brought in here some of the best Percheron stallions ever imported to Orange County, and have raised draft horses weighing from 1800 to 2000 pounds. They own the celebrated jack, "Burr Oak," which cost $3,000. Mr. Borchard was one of the first in western Orange County to use tractors in farming operations, and he has owned three Holt caterpillars, two of forty-five, and one of sixty-five horsepower. His experience on road building and drainage is extensive. He has served as a director in the Newbert protection district, and he was also a director in the Talbert drainage district. Since selling his ranches he has retired to Santa Ana, where he purchased a bungalow at 802 South Broadway where, with his wife, he makes his home. He still owns valuable lands in Huntington Beach as well as near Newport, besides an orange grove on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard. He is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Santa Ana and also a stockholder in the Old Colony Oil Company, operating in Wichita Falls, Texas, that has fourteen producing wells. He owns land near Tampico, Texas, and is interested in copper and silver mines (the Midnight mine and Tidal Wave mine) in New Mexico.

In 1904 Mr. Borchard was married to Miss Marie Hauptman, a native of Connellsville, Ill., who came to California with her parents, Henry J. and Margaret Marie Hauptman, when she was a girl of sixteen. She has been a great encouragement to him in his ambition and a great helpmate to him. Mr. Borchard has traveled not only over the Pacific Coast states but into Texas and Mexico and the Mississippi Valley as far east as Chicago, but on investigation he has found nothing to equal Southern California and particularly Orange County. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus at Santa Ana, and is a staunch Republican, and a member of Santa Ana Lodge, No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

WILLIAM E. STORK.—A wide-awake young man, fortunate in a thorough understanding of both the lumber and the building trades, and therefore unusually well equipped for the responsibilities of a superintendent, is William E. Stork, manager of the Orange Branch of the Hammond Lumber Company. He was born at Hartford, in Lyon County, Kans., July 14, 1889, the son of Phillip Stork, a contractor and builder of that town, who now, after a strenuous life, is enjoying the milder climate of California while residing with the subject of our interesting sketch. He had married Miss Etta Garrett; but she died in Kansas, the mother of three boys and a girl, among whom William was next to the youngest.

He was sent to the grammar schools and then to the Hartford high school, from which he was duly graduated, when he entered the employ of the telephone company, where he remained for two or three years. After that he learned the carpenter's trade; and as he was apprenticed under his father, he learned the trade well.

In 1913 Mr. Stork came west to California and at Orange hired out as a carpenter for a year, when he accepted an offer from the Orange Lumber Company as yard foreman, and as such continued until 1916. Then the Hammond Lumber Company bought out the Orange Lumber Company, and he continued with them as bookkeeper. In 1918, the company, recognizing both his special qualifications and his fidelity, made Mr. Stork manager of their plant, which is at 230 North Lemon street; and today, as a member of the Southern California Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, he is one of the influential factors in that live and useful organization.

Since coming to Orange in 1914, Mr. Stork was married to Miss Ethel Shields, a native of Hutchinson, Kans., and they have one child, Maurine. He was made a Mason in Hartford Lodge No. 193, at Hartford, Kans., and still retains an affectionate loyalty for the society and its fraternal associations.

The Hammond Lumber Company, from its entrance into this local field, has left undone nothing possible to anticipate the wants of the community, and to satisfy the many and sudden demands of builders and architects; with the result that Orange, known far and wide as a well-built town, has responded and given in turn to this concern an enviable and constantly growing patronage.

FRED C. BAIER.—A successful business man, using only modern machinery and up-to-date methods and fortunate in the assistance afforded him by his gifted wife, is Fred C. Baier, who came to Orange in 1909 and the next year began cement contracting. He was born at Caledonia, in Huston County, Minn., in 1885, the son of William and Caroline Baier, pioneer settlers and farmers there who resided in Minnesota until 1920, when they sold out to live at Orange. They have seven children: William is a farmer in Dakota; Kate has become Mrs. Flynn and lives in Wisconsin; Mary is Mrs. Rudisuhle, and lives at LaCrosse; George is a business man in Orange; Louis, who also resides in Orange, was in the United States Army and served overseas in the World War; and Edward was in the U. S. Navy and served on the Wyoming.

Fred C. Baier was educated in the public schools, and at thirteen began to paddle his own canoe. In 1898 he moved west to Seattle and was there employed in the great lumber yards. He also took up farming, and in each field he demonstrated his ability to master the problems of the hour. At Spokane, in 1905 he learned the cement trade, and learned it thoroughly.

Four years later Mr. Baier moved south to California, and the next year started to contract for cement pipe work. He then manufactured everything by hand, and he also gave his personal attention to putting down the cement pipe. The high quality of both his labor and his materials, resulting in a strictly first class product, was soon appreciated, and before he knew it, he had more than he alone could do.

Now Mr. Baier uses a McCracken cement pipe machine, the first set up in California, and is proud of having done the first centrifugal force pipe work in the state. He has also installed at Orange a rock crusher, with which he is able to provide a much better grade of rock for the cement used in pipes—a volcanic rock otherwise not at the service of every cement worker. He makes this pipe in all sizes, and some capable of withstanding such pressure that it easily replaces the steel pipe once in such demand. He sells his pipe from Oceanside to Riverside, hauling it in trucks within a radius of fifty miles, doing more than half of his business as a wholesaler, and has laid it under thousands of acres. He organized the Southern California Associated Concrete Pipe Manufacturers, of which he was president until he resigned in May, 1920, and is also a prominent member of the Associated Concrete Pipe Manufacturers' Association of Northern California.

At Spokane, Wash., on June 12, 1907, Mr. Baier was married to Miss Rebecca Adley, a native of Melrose, Minn., and the daughter of Napoleon and Lydia (Eaton) Adley, who had been born in Maine and New Hampshire, respectively, and were married in Minnesota. As a young man, Mr. Adley enlisted in a Maine Regiment and fought through the Civil War; and later he migrated to Minnesota, and there became a stockdealer. Then he moved to Spokane and was in the dairy business in that place until he died, in 1904. Her mother lived with Mrs. Baier in Orange, and died in 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Adley had six children, Christopher, a farmer at Seattle, being the oldest. Helen, now Mrs. Bisbee, of Spokane, comes next, and Leigh is also a farmer at Spokane, as is his brother, Arichibald. John was accidentally killed while threshing near Spokane. Rebecca, the fifth in the order of birth, was graduated from the Spokane High School and also from the Northwestern Business College of that place. One child, a daughter, Dorothy, blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Baier.

FRANK BLAIR DALE.—An interesting couple who have just completed a new and beautiful home, and who in many other ways have contributed to the building up of Orange, are Mr. and Mrs. Frank Blair Dale. A man of wide experience and a valuable fund of information, Mr. Dale is good company as a conversationalist and an appreciated adviser to many in need of one kind or another of guidance; while Mrs. Dale is no less attractive to those who know her in the encouragement she has always given her husband in his ambitions and arduous labors.

Mr. Dale was born at Carthage, Hancock County, Ill., on April 30, 1870, the son of William Dale, a native of the same county, and a grandson of Andrew Dale, one of the sturdiest of pioneers there. He owned a farm, and built a grist mill on the river east of Carthage; and he also had a carding mill, a saw mill, and a furniture factory. He served throughout the Civil War in an Illinois regiment, and died at the scene of his honorable activities. William Dale was also a farmer, and resided at the old homestead. He had married Miss Mary Wood, a native of Illinois and the daughter of Nathan Wood, who migrated from Pennsylvania, where he was born, and became a farmer in Illinois. Mrs. William Dale enjoyed life for a while in California, and died at Orange. She was the mother of five children, four of whom are now living.

The eldest in the family, Frank, was brought up on the home farm and from there went to the public schools. When he had finished with school books he came west to Denver, in 1890, and entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and for a while ran as fireman out of Denver. Later, he became an engineer, but in 1896 he quit railroading, and went to Kansas. He located near Chanute, in Neosho County, and having taken up farming, continued there for about eight years.

On migrating to California, Mr. Dale located at Orange, where he built a residence on South Grand Avenue. He first built south of Palmyra Avenue, in an orange grove; then he worked as a carpenter and bought a ranch; but at the end of two years he returned to carpentering. Then he purchased a ranch west of Santa Ana, but at the end of two years returned to Orange.

Here he took up contracting and building, having a partner, O. A. Long; but when the latter removed from the district, he continued in business alone until 1917, when he made a partnership with C. W. Riggle, under the firm name of Dale & Riggle, and undertook general contracting—the erection of houses and the laying of first-class cement. Among the many fine residences put up by this firm may be mentioned Henry Terry's residence on East Chapman Avenue, and the Ryan residence at Villa Park, as well as numerous artistic bungalows. They remodeled the City Hall, Mr. Dale making the drawings himself; and he has now just completed, for the eighth time, a residence for himself—at the corner of Center and Almond Streets. He belongs, very naturally, to the important organization, the American Contractors' Association.

On December 9, 1915, Mr. Dale was married at Oceanside to Mrs. Nina (Robinson) Frankforter, a native of Topeka, Kans., and the adopted daughter of Miss Kate Hubbard, now of Orange, but formerly of Glasco, Kans. Miss Hubbard was born near Dixon, Ill., the daughter of Thomas S. Hubbard, a native of New York City, who came to Illinois in 1837, and there married Miss Catherine Kessler, a native of Reading, Penn., who came out to Illinois with a married sister. After farming there for a few years, Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard in 1846 removed to Independence, Buchanan County, Iowa, and bought land, which he improved and made into a farm. Four years later he removed to near Monticello, Jones County, Iowa, where he was a farmer and a justice of the peace. In 1879 he and his family moved again, this time to Glasco, Cloud County, Kans., where he was a farmer until he died, in 1900, at the age of eighty-five years. Mrs. Hubbard died in Kansas in 1907, at the age of eighty-nine, the mother of four children—Catherine, or Kate, and Victor, who reside in Orange; Florence, now Mrs. Lawrence of Dixon, Ill., and Charles, who lives at Ontario. Miss Hubbard came in 1879 to Kansas, where her father had a farm; and in 1908 she located at Orange and bought the corner where she has lived, highly honored by all who know her, ever since. She has reared and adopted three daughters: Hester, who is now the wife of Alfred Rogers, of Glasco, Kans.; Nina, the wife of F. B. Dale of Orange; and Gladys, or Mrs. Joseph McDonald, who lives near Santa Ana. Mrs. Dale was married the first time in Kansas to Levi Frankforter, who was the editor of the Glasco Sun until his death; and they had one child, Nina Catharine. After Mr. Frankforter's demise, she came to Orange, to join her adopted mother, who had moved there.

Mr. Dale is a member of Orange Lodge No. 225, I. O. O. F., where he is a past grand, and of Santa Ana Encampment, and with Mrs. Dale belongs to the Rebekahs, in which organization she is a past noble grand. She is also a member of the Yeomen and the Royal Neighbors, and she belongs to the Christian Church. Mr. Dale is a Republican, but nonpartisan in local issues.

CHARLES W. RIGGLE.—A progressive carpenter and builder, whose ideals and methods have been such that he could hardly have escaped success if he would, is C. W. Riggle, a native of Coshocton, O., where he was born in 1873. His father was Edward Riggle, a thoroughly patriotic American, who served in the One Hundred and Twenty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry Regiment during the Civil War, and was wounded at Cold Harbor. After the great conflict, he took up agriculture, and for a while farmed at Macon City, Mo.; and now resides near Springfield. Mrs. Riggle was Mary Lyons before her marriage, and she died in Missouri in 1919. She was the mother of five boys, and among them C. W. Riggle was the eldest.

He was brought up in Missouri, and attended the public schools of Macon County. Later, he learned the carpenter's trade, and when twenty years of age, came out to Kansas City, and was made foreman for an important construction company, which was constantly erecting extensive business blocks, and his opportunities for experience of a varied kind were exceptional.

Having been well equipped, therefore, for original work, Mr. Riggle came to California in 1913 and located at Orange, where he began on his own account as a contractor and builder; and three years ago he formed a partnership with Frank Dale, under the firm name of Riggle & Dale. They not only make their own designs, but furnish working plans for others. Both the style and the quality of their work being such as to appeal to the intelligent patron looking for the best, they have been more and more sought, especially for building enterprises involving risk and responsibility.

At Kansas City, Mr. Riggle was married to Miss Dovie Barnett, a native of that municipality, and they have been blessed with two children. Harvey, who is a graduate of the Orange high school, is attending the Y. M. C. A. school of Los Angeles, and is taking a mechanical course; and Mary is still in the high school. Both Mr. and Mrs. Riggle are members of the Baptist Church at Orange, of which Mr. Riggle is a trustee. Mr. Riggle is a Mason, having been initiated in Mountain Dale Lodge No. 554, A. F. & A. M., at Seymour, Missouri.

JOHN F. RICHARDS.—An interesting Californian of the genuinely American type is John F. Richards, who was born near Manhattan, Kans., in 1872, the son of A. and Adeline Richards, the former a native of Kentucky, who in 1857 became an early settler of Pottawatomie County, Kans., and there improved a farm which was originally a raw prairie. He engaged in stock raising and was so successful that he came to own 5,000 acres of land. He is now living retired at Orange, his good wife and companion having died in Kansas. They had nine children, and John was the third youngest of them all.

After completing the courses of the public schools, he took a course at the State Agricultural College at Manhattan, after which he entered Pond's Business College at Topeka, from which he was graduated in 1890, attaining the highest honors. He then engaged in mercantile business at Blaine, Kans.

At Fostoria, in 1893, he was married to Miss Annie Price, a native of Missouri, and at once took up stock raising. He established headquarters at Olsburg, Pottawatomie County, and for seventeen years was extensively engaged in buying and feeding cattle, running from 500 to 1,000 head a season. He raised hundreds of acres of corn, and bought thousands of bushels of corn, to feed the cattle he bought as feeders, and he had his feeding yards not only at Olsburg, but also at Fostoria and Blaine, becoming the owner of some 2,000 acres of land in that county. He shipped to Kansas City, Chicago and New York, and some of his cattle sent to New York were reshipped for the foreign trade.

During this time he was engaged in general merchandising in Olsburg, as well as at Blaine, and after disposing of these establishments he engaged in the lumber business in Olsburg until he came away. He also organized the Farmers State Bank of Olsburg, of which he was vice-president until he resigned to come to California.

Mr. Richards was a justice of the peace for four years in Pottawatomie County until he resigned, and he also showed his public spiritedness by serving as a school trustee. In 1910, he sold his interests in Kansas and located in Orange, California, where he resides on East Chapman street. He owns forty-nine acres in Santa Ana Canon, devoted mostly to the culture of oranges, the balance being in walnuts; and this splendid orchard property he himself superintends. His ranch is fortunately situated in a field of oil development, and although he has had some flattering offers for a lease, the adjoining farms being already leased, he has refused to lease it, preferring when the time is ripe to handle the proposition himself.

He is interested in the Liberty Petroleum Company at Newport in the Heffern Oil Company at Richfield and in the Mid-Central Oil Company at the same place, as well as other oil companies here and in Texas. Two children have blessed the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Richards: Frances May is Mrs. Mix of Orange; and Lyde assists his father. Mr. Richards is a member of Manhattan Lodge No. 1185, of the B. P. O. E., and is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Orange. He is also a Republican. Mrs. Richards belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

RODOLFO C. MARQUEZ.—A hard-working and trustworthy citizen, of conservative bachelor habits, but fortunate in his genial temperament, is Rodolfo C. Marquez, who lives on his own beautiful ranch of three and a half acres, planted to olives, Valencias and walnuts, six miles to the northeast of Olive. He shares it with a brother, Feliz C. Marquez, and a sister, Aristeia, all of them fit representatives of one of the finest of old-time Spanish families.

His father, Jose R. Marquez, was born at San Jose del Cabo, in Lower California, came here in 1847, and was married in Los Angeles in 1861, when he was joined to Trinidad Peralta, who was born here on the Rancho Santiago de Santa Ana—a famous farm beautifully located in the foothills of the Santa Ana Mountains, on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, which runs right along the irrigation ditch of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. She was one of the heirs to the above ranch, being a granddaughter of Juan Pablo Peralta, the owner of the grant.

The original grantee of the Rancho Santiago de Santa Ana was Juan Pablo Grijalva, who was a lieutenant in the Spanish army who had come to San Diego; his daughter married Pedro Peralta, also a lieutenant in the Spanish army, and their child, Juan Pablo Peralta, inherited the above rancho, and in time located on it and eventually built his residence at what is now Olive, where he died, leaving his vast estate to his children.

Jose R. Marquez conducted the general store at Peralta, and later one at Yorba, where he was in partnership with Prudencio Yorba. After dissolving this partnership he was again in business at Peralta. He died about 1900, aged eighty-four years, having survived his wife ten years. They had ten children, but only seven grew up, and three are now living.

A brother of Rodolfo was Romualdo P. Marquez, who was one of the first justices of the peace of Fullerton Township, what is now Yorba Township being a part of it, holding the office until he died. He was also a trustee of Peralta district for eighteen years.

Rodolfo C. Marquez was born at Yorba January 29, 1866; he received a good education in the public schools, and also made himself useful in the store, thus becoming familiar with the mercantile business, assisting his father after they moved to Peralta, where he is now among the old settlers. The place is still known as "Peralta," and it has a number of residences so favorably located that they overlook the Santa Ana Valley. He has built a quaint, good-sized adobe house for a storeroom, which stands as a landmark. The Peralta School is an up-to-date school near by, and well serves the district in which it is placed. Mr. Marquez was trustee there for several years, as he was also justice of the peace of Yorba judicial township for two terms. Always a Republican, as was his father before him, he is a member of the Catholic Church, at San Antonio Mission. With others he succeeded in getting the suburban telephone built up the Valley to accommodate the farmers. Mr. Marquez has always stood for progress and has done his share towards any movement for improvement in his section. During the World War he was appointed by the United States government a licensing agent of explosives through the Explosives Bureau of the Department of Mines.

As an experienced apiarist, with some 115 stands of bees, Mr. Marquez derives a substantial profit from the sale of honey. He has been active in that field for over forty years, and in the science of bee culture in Orange County owes something today to his unwearying experiments and efforts to reach the highest standards.

CHARLES F. RAMSEY.—An old-timer in Southern California, long prominent in politics as a Democratic leader and honored as both an efficient and conscientious officeholder, is Charles F. Ramsey, the representative of a fine old family in the South, with interesting progenitors on both the paternal and maternal side. His great uncle was James Gattys McGregor Ramsey, the well-known author, who was born in Knox County, Tenn., in 1796, and died at Knoxville in 1884. He was the son of Francis A. Ramsey, who had emigrated to the West when a young man, and had become secretary of the state of Franklin, which was subsequently admitted to the Union under the name of Tennessee. While becoming trained both as an M. D. and a banker, James Ramsey began to collect materials for a history of Tennessee; and at Charleston, S. C., in 1853, he published the "Annals of Tennessee to the End of the Eighteenth Century." He also founded the first historical society in the state. He joined the Confederate Army on its retreat from Knoxville, and in his absence his house was burned and all the valuable historical papers, as well as much other property, were destroyed.

The father of our subject, who was a regimental commander in a Tennessee regiment during the Civil War, was also named Frank A. Ramsey. He spent eight years in California and then went back to Missouri, where he married Mary Kaylor, a native of Virginia and the representative of a well-known family in that state. She now resides with Charles F. Ramsey, the center of a circle of admiring friends, and the mother of seven children, among whom Charles F. is the fourth in the order of birth.

He was brought up at Cameron, Mo., where he attended the grammar schools and eventually graduated from the Cameron high school, after which he attended Fayette College. In 1896 he came to Los Angeles, and for a while followed various lines of business, engaging, in the end, in real estate and brokerage.

In 1919, Mr. Ramsey came to Orange and bought the Colonial Theater, which he remodeled and enlarged and managed it for a little more than a year. In May, 1920, he formed a partnership with J. E. Coe, under the firm name of the Coe Realty Company, and which does a general real estate brokerage business. Their office is located at 111 South Glassell Street. A live wire for the upbuilding of Orange County, Mr. Ramsey is a member of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association.

At Los Angeles Mr. Ramsey was married to Miss Hazel Wright, a native daughter from Napa, Cal., and their fortunate union has been blessed with two children—Virginia and Eunice. The family attends the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Mr. Ramsey is a member of Redlands Lodge No. 583, B. P. O. Elks.

EDWARD HARTMAN.—Among the progressive citizens of Stanton, Orange County, is Edward Hartman, owner of a highly improved ranch of ten acres located on Magnolia Avenue, and devoted to the growing of oranges and walnuts. The property is improved with good buildings and a pumping plant that supplies sufficient water for all purposes. The land was purchased by Mr. Hartman in 1909, and was a part of a large ranch and unimproved in any way, so that when he became the owner he at once leveled and prepared the land for his oranges and walnuts. The trees are in a splendid condition and bearing more and more with each succeeding year, and he is adding needed improvements as his means will permit.

Edward Hartman was born in Schwartzburg-Rudolstadt, Germany, on May 15, 1852, the son of Henry and Sophia (Seidel) Hartman, also natives of that locality, where their five children were born. The father died in 1870, and in 1872 Mrs. Hartman and other members of her family came to America to join her eldest son, our subject, who had come here in 1868 and settled in Green Bay, Wis. Upon his arrival in America, Edward was engaged in making building bricks until 1873, the year of financial depression, when it became impossible to dispose of their product, so he decided he would begin farming. He bought forty acres of land at Glenmore, Wis., and blasted out the stumps with dynamite, for it was a timber slashing. He produced some wonderful crops from the land, and also engaged to clear land from the stumps for others under contract, clearing in all over 300 acres. After farming successfully for many years, in 1906 he decided to come to California, and he landed in Anaheim. Six years later he located on his present property and is content to remain here.

In 1884 Mr. Hartman married Miss Eline Sitzeman, a native of Wisconsin. They have had ten children, seven of whom survive: Matilda, Mrs. August Schumacher; Frederick, a railway mail clerk in Arizona; Theodore and Edward are ranching together; Alfred, Emiel and Madeline are still at home. Theodore served as a member of the Three Hundred and Sixty-eighth Field Artillery in France and for his excellent record was made a corporal. Mr. Hartman is a member of the Fullerton Walnut Growers' Association, and both himself and wife belong to the Zion Lutheran Church in Anaheim. They are Republicans and have a large circle of friends who appreciate their worth as citizens.

EDWARD M. DOZIER.—The Garden Grove Citrus Association is fortunate in having an able secretary and manager in the person of Edward M. Dozier, who not only possesses unusually good business judgment, but has also an extensive and thorough knowledge of the citrus industry. He was born in the state of Iowa, near Argonia, Hardin County, June 19, 1878, and is the son of Thomas E. and Caroline Dozier, natives of North Carolina, who emigrated from Iowa to California in 1885, when their son Edward was seven years old. These parents had three sons: Ray is married, has three sons, and lives in Los Angeles County; Edward M., and Ernest. For some years the father has been in the real estate business at Orange, where he has made his home for the past fifteen years.

The Garden Grove Citrus Association was organized November 3, 1915, with Mr. J. O. Arkley as its president. It has grown steadily since its organization, and the first year shipped ten and one-half carloads of fruit, the second year thirty-seven carloads were shipped; in 1919, 107 carloads, and, in 1920, 175 carloads. The association employs upward of thirty-five hands, its building covers nearly an acre of ground, and has 9,750 square feet in its ground floor. The association has everything in its favor in possessing the trees, the fruit and the right kind of men behind it, to make it an unprecedented success. Milo B. Allen is now president, and has an able second in the popular secretary and manager. Mr. Dozier bought nineteen acres of raw land which he, himself, set to oranges and walnuts, owned the ranch thirteen years and sold in January, 1920, at a handsome advance over the purchase price.

Mr. Dozier's marriage, which occurred in 1904, united him with Miss Elva Bodenhamer, daughter of John and Mary Bodenhamer, and their union has been blessed by the birth of three sons: Paul Melvin, Leslie Myron and Stanley Robert. Mr. Dozier is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Garden Grove.

LOUIS ABACHERLI.—One of the largest dairymen of Orange County is Louis Abacherli of Hansen Station. His dairy consists of 200 head of three-quarters Holstein stock, and in addition to this he owns 100 head of young heifers. In each herd he has a sprinkling of Jerseys to raise the quality of the milk. His ranch embraces 200 acres and he produces almost 3,040 pounds of milk per day, which he markets in Los Angeles. He installed modern milking machines and employs two milkers.

Mr. Abacherli is a native of Switzerland, where he was born in the Canton Obwalden, May 28, 1872. He is the son of Joseph and Josephine (Ambiel) Abacherli, who were the parents of four children, three of whom are living, Adelheid and Theresa being the daughters. Louis is the only one in the United States. Accompanied by his wife he came to this country in November, 1912, and when they came to Orange County they settled at Los Alamitos. In 1915 Mr. Abacherli leased his present ranch of Mrs. Hansen of Long Beach, and he has built up a successful and prosperous business through his own efforts, being well qualified for an undertaking of this magnitude. He also leases considerable land, having in 1920 about 800 acres, 110 acres planted to beets, the balance being in barley, corn and alfalfa.

Mrs. Abacherli is also a native of Switzerland, and before her marriage, which occurred on November 25, 1894, she was Rosalia Abacherli, the daughter of Balz and Mary (Rathlin) Abacherli. Four children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Abacherli, and three of them are living: Arnold, Louis and John, all living at home. Rosalie, the eldest child, died aged twenty-one years, November 20, 1916. They took a little girl, Helen Ambiel, when five months old, and are rearing her as one of their own children. She is six years old and is attending school. The family are members of the Roman Catholic Church of Anaheim.

August Lemke
Auguste. Lemke.

AUGUST LEMKE.—A good ranch manager, prudent alike as to his investment of money and time, who is not only a lovable father and an ideal husband, but is also in every respect a public-spirited citizen, is August Lemke, the walnut and citrus fruit grower, owning a handsome ranch—his home place—of twenty acres on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, two and a half miles northeast of Olive, in one of the choicest and most promising sections of Orange County. He was born at Liptno in Russia Poland on February 13, 1874, and there attended local schools in which he was taught to read both the Russian and the German languages. He was also confirmed in the German Lutheran Church there. His parents were Carl and Minnie (Zoidtke) Lemke, both natives of Russia Poland, in which country they married. He was a farmer and attracted by the greater opportunities in the United States, came to America and the Golden State. They had five children, all of whom are still living. Mrs. Lemke passed away in California in 1900, and her husband is still enjoying life, at the age of seventy-three, in the home of our subject. When Carl Lemke left Russia in 1886, he sailed for New York, and then spent a couple of months in Philadelphia. On arriving in California in 1887, he went to Placentia; and such was his remarkable industry, that in two years he was able to send money back to Russia, to pay for the passage of his two sons, William and August.

The young men then sailed from Hamburg and landed in New York City in January, 1890. They were also not long in reaching Placentia, where they went to work immediately as farm hands. They were a year and half in the service of the Santa Fe Asphaltum Company, making asphaltum pipe, and building culverts, and then August Lemke worked for nine months as a section hand at Olive, at $1.25 a day. For two and a half years, also, he was zanjero for the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, but otherwise, he has always been employed at ranch and orchard work.

On November 3, 1896, Mr. Lemke voted for William McKinley, and having performed one good deed, the next day he was married to Auguste Lemke, also a native of Russia Poland, who came to California on January 1, 1890. Her parents Christian and Julia Meilke Lemke, were farmer folks in their native country. Christian Lemke migrated to the land of the Stars and Stripes in the fall of 1888, intending if he liked it to send for his family. After stopping a few months in Denver, Colo., he came on to Anaheim where his three brothers, Charles, August and John, were residing, and here his wife and five children joined him in January, 1890. He engaged in farming, eventually improving a ranch of twenty-five acres on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, where he resided until his demise in March, 1909, being survived by his widow, who resides in Olive. This worthy couple were the parents of eleven children, eight of whom are living, Auguste being the oldest of all; she came to Orange County when she was twelve years old, thus having the satisfaction of completing her education in the Placentia and Orange schools. Seven children blessed this union: George K. C. Lemke was in the U. S. Navy during the late war, was honorably discharged, and is now at home. A twin brother, John Benjamin H. Lemke, married Ada Schmadeke, of Iowa, and assists his father on the ranch. Alma, the third in the order of birth, is the wife of Walter Timken, the rancher, in the Olive precinct, and has one child, Lawrence. Emil A. E. Lemke attends Concordia College in Oakland, and Minnie, Edwin and Arthur are at home. One child died at birth.

Endeavoring to be thoroughly consistent in religious matters, Mr. Lemke helped to organize the Lutheran Church at Olive, and now serves that useful body as one of its trustees. He has also been elected justice of the peace for Yorba township four times and is now serving his fourth term in that office—and while a Republican in matters of national politics, is a good nonpartisan "booster" in and for everything that pertains to the development and advancement of Orange County. He helped to start the First National Bank at Olive, and is one of its stockholders, and is also a member of Olive Hillside Groves Association at Olive. Besides his fine home ranch, he owns two other ranches in the same canyon—one of seven acres devoted to Valencia oranges, and a third ranch of thirteen acres devoted to Valencias and walnuts.

HERMAN LEMKE.—An honest, studious, hard working and self-reliant rancher, who has become a highly respected citizen, is Herman Lemke, who owns eleven and a half acres of as fine and well bearing land, planted by himself in 1906, 1908 and 1916, as can be found anywhere in Orange County. He was born in Russia-Poland on September 22, 1880, one of a family of nine children, eight of whom—four boys and four girls—are still living, and is the eldest son, and the second eldest child of the widow, Julia Lemke, who owns an excellent ranch of eleven acres in the Yorba precinct, but lives in Olive, enjoying life at the ripe age of sixty-three. The father of our subject, Christian Lemke, died in his fifty-sixth year at the home ranch in the Yorba precinct. The parents were both born and married in Russia-Poland, and came to California with their five children in 1890. They settled first at Placentia, then went to Orange for a couple of years, and next lived for five years at Villa Park; from which place Mr. Lemke came to the Santa Ana Canyon and bought his twenty-six acres of barley stubble land, which he set out and improved.

The lad Herman attended the German Lutheran School at Orange and the grammar school at Placentia, at the same time that he worked on his father's ranch. He also served for three years in Company E of the Anaheim Home Militia. He was married in 1906 to Miss Emma Kolberg, a native of Orange and a daughter of the late Wm. Kolberg, the rancher; her mother, Joanna (Beske) Golberg died in 1912. Since marrying, Mr. and Mrs. Lemke have built a house on their ranch three miles northeast of Olive on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard, and they have continued active as members of the Lutheran Church at Olive. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Lemke lends his most cordial support to every good local movement and in doing so, excludes partisanship altogether.

Progressive to a high degree in every way, Mr. Lemke uses a Cleveland tractor, and a Buick roadster. He informs himself as to the latest scientific methods, and so operates according to the most approved and up-to-date ways. Naturally, he has not only succeeded in his own affairs, but he has pointed the way to others.

ROBERT LEMKE.—The identification of the Lemke family with the development of the agricultural interests of Orange County dates back to 1890, when Christ and Julia (Mielke) Lemke, immigrated from Russia-Poland to the United States and settled near Olive, Cal., where Mr. Lemke purchased twenty-five acres of land. He followed ranching in this section until 1909, when he passed away. His widow still resides at Olive. Mr. and Mrs. Lemke were the parents of nine children: Herman, Augusta, Millie, Ernest, Robert, Lena and Gustaf, twins, Henry and Tillie.

Robert Lemke, the subject of this review, was born in Russia-Poland, February 8, 1888, and when in his second year he was brought by his parents to America. He was reared in the neighborhood of Olive and attended the splendid public schools of Orange, from which he subsequently graduated. From boyhood he had always followed farming and he now owns and operates a splendid ranch of ten acres on South Magnolia Avenue, near Anaheim, which he devotes to Valencia oranges. His trees range from three to nine years of age, the place formerly being known as the Kennedy ranch.

In 1917, Mr. Lemke was happily united in marriage with Miss Emma Paulus, a native of San Luis Obispo County, the daughter of David and Marie Paulus, born in Port Washington and Milwaukee, Wis., respectively, who located in San Luis Obispo County in 1888 and in 1908, moved to Orange County and there spent the remainder of their days. One son, Elmer H., has been born to them. Mr. and Mrs. Lemke are members of the Lutheran Church at Olive, and politically, Mr. Lemke is a supporter of the Republican party. He is recognized as one of the successful ranchers of his community, where he is held in high esteem for his integrity of character.

MANLEY C. CHASE.—A resident of Cypress, well known throughout Orange County, not alone because of his business dealings, which were extensive, but also because of his sterling worth as a citizen, is Manley C. Chase. A native of Maine, he was born at Bingham, Somerset County on May 16, 1852, the son of Calvin S. and Martha J. (Andrews) Chase, both old residents of Maine, where the father died in 1855, when Manley C. was a lad of three years. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Chase, two of whom, Manley C. and his sister, Mrs. Mary Hollister, are residents of Orange County. Mrs. Martha Chase married for her second husband, B. J. Hannaford, and soon after they went to Pawnee County, Nebr., where they lived and where Mrs. Hannaford died in 1868. She had six children by this marriage.

In 1861, M. C. Chase located in Waupun, Wis., then seven years later he went with the family to Kansas. He later spent some time in Mexico, 1891 to 1894, when he was a director in the Kansas Investment Company, under whose improvements the American Colony was fostered. The work of the company was to develop water for the colonists. In those days conditions were fairly well settled compared to the present, and American capital was finding its way there in the development of a number of projects. While living in Kansas, Mr. Chase served as a deputy sheriff of Osborn County, also as a constable. He has always been intensely interested in school matters and served as a trustee for many years.

For about twenty-five years Mr. Chase has been interested in drilling water wells in California and Nevada. For a few years he was in partnership with Dr. Gobar, though he personally superintended the work in hand. He has sunk many wells that have meant so much to the settlers in both states where water is "king." Since settling in California he has been an eyewitness to the wonderful changes that have been enacted in Southern California and has profited by the increase in land values.

Unfortunately, however, in the year 1918 Mr. Chase met with an accident which incapacitated him for active service in the field of work to which he had given so many years of his time and endeavor, but he at once turned his attention to the poultry business at Cypress, where he has lived since 1912. He has a thriving flock of a thousand fowls, equally divided between Rhode Island Reds and White Leghorns. He has sufficient land to raise all the green feed necessary for his flock, and buys grain by the carload for feeding. He formerly owned a forty-acre ranch north of his present residence, but this he sold in 1918.

In 1879 Mr. Chase was united in marriage with Miss Sarah L. Reed, a native of the state of Missouri, the daughter of Levi and Mary Reed, and three daughters have blessed their home: Nellie, Mrs. S. J. Scally, living in Orange County; Stella, wife of J. A. Hollingsworth of this county; and Luella, wife of M. W. Sawdey, and they live in Anaheim. Mr. Chase is a man who stands high in the estimation of his fellow citizens, rising, as he has, by his own efforts, coupled with honesty and integrity.

JOHN W. STUCKENBRUCK.—A well-known and highly respected citizen of Orange County who, as a pioneer at Newport Beach, has the utmost faith in this resort for the future and is therefore influential frequently in inducing others to share his optimism and to pitch their tents in this most favored spot, is John W. Stuckenbruck, who was born in Mansfield Ohio, on December 31, 1852, and was taken to Iowa when he was two years of age by his parents, Frederick and Jane (Sperry) Stuckenbruck. For the second time his mother became a widow, and she is now living, in good health and active, at Lodi in her ninetieth year.

Mr. Stuckenbruck grew up in Tipton, Cedar County, Iowa, remaining home until seventeen years of age and then worked two years on farms and after that for seven years clerked for one man, J. L. Sherman, the storekeeper at Tipton in that state. There, too, he was married to Miss Alice D. Wirick, a native of Iowa who died at Tustin twenty-seven years ago, esteemed and beloved by many as an excellent woman, a devoted mother of two children. Eva E. became Mrs. A. J. Hadley, the rancher at Tustin, and the mother of three children—Emma, Johnny and Woodrow W.; while Allie May is the wife of B. C. Killifer, the section foreman for the Salt Lake Railroad Company, an old and trusted employe at Pasadena. They have one child, Allie May.

When Mr. Stuckenbruck came to Newport Beach in 1887, it was only a sand-spit; and the next year he worked for James McFadden, then a butcher, and drove the meat wagon and attended to customers in the meat market. Now he owns the building where the Newport Restaurant is located, and also the house at the rear, and he will soon put in a substantial store building with a brick front. In making such an investment as this, he is giving proof of the faith long in him that Newport Beach has natural attractions, and enjoys a superior location bound to make it one of the great summer and winter resorts along the Coast, as it is now the favorite with those familiar with its advantages. He was elected and served as the first city marshal of Newport Beach, and he is now the oldest settler living here, having been here many years before the town was started.

HENRY G. HEINEMANN.—Not everybody has been able to bring along to California such a neat sum as that of Henry G. Heinemann, $35,000 available, when he migrated hither from Nebraska, nor has everyone shown equal courage and common sense in investing what he had at Olive, among the most rapidly developing communities of promising Orange County. Now he owns an excellent orange ranch of nineteen acres under a high state of cultivation, and lives in a beautiful new, up-to-date bungalow, erected in 1920 at a cost of some $5,000. He was born in the ancient town of Oldenburg, the capital of the grandduchy of that name, not so very far from the seaport of Bremen, on October 26, 1860, the son of Henry G. Heinemann, a well-to-do farmer who had married Miss Elise Looschen. They lived and died where they had established their comfortable home. They had ten children, among whom Henry was the fourth child and the second son.

He enjoyed a common school, but excellent education, and was brought up in the German Lutheran Church. For a while he worked at farming on the home ranch, and after that entered the service of a distillery at Delmenhorst, in time coming to know how to distil himself. About that time some friends, who had been in America visited his home town; they were very enthusiastic about the United States, and such was the effect of their reports upon him, that when twenty-eight years of age, Mr. Heinemann decided to cross the ocean himself. This decision was made in face of the fact that he had always done well at home, and had valuable connections there. He had become an accountant and scrivener, for example, in a local government office, and had, besides, a three-year military service and training. He attended an officers' training school, and rose to the rank of sergeant in the German army. He was, therefore, well up on military science and tactics. During the late war, he had a brother-in-law and seventeen nephews among the Germans, and four nephews were killed and six wounded.

Mr. Heinemann sailed from Bremerhaven on the steamship "Saale" of the North German Lloyd, and landed at Castle Garden in New York on March 1, 1889. He came on west to Hooper, Nebr., and for two years worked out as a farm hand, for three years rented land, and after that bought there 240 acres. In Nebraska, too, in 1891, he was married to Miss Gesine Rehling, also a native of Oldenburg, who was nine years old when she came to America accompanied by her parents. They were August and Margaret (Bulter) Rehling, and her father was a blacksmith. She saw New York for the first time in 1881, and after her ninth year, grew up in Dodge County, Nebr.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Heinemann farmed in that state, and by very hard work, prospered so that they became owners of a well improved and very valuable Nebraska farm of 240 acres. Having borne the burden and heat of such labor under the vicissitudes of the Nebraska climate for so many years, Mr. Heinemann's health broke down, as he became a sufferer from asthma and rheumatism. He made his first visit to California in the spring of 1908, with the intention of establishing a home here, but the conditions in Orange County were so radically different that he became homesick for Nebraska, to which state he returned and continued for a year and a half.

In the fall of 1909, however, his thoughts were again directed California-ward, and he speedily sold his excellent farm of 240 acres to a neighbor for $110 per acre, and in December of that year came out to California with his entire family, and settled at Olive. He bought twenty-four acres, in reality two places, at Olive, and immediately began making substantial improvements. In 1919, he sold five acres of his holdings, and during the same winter made preparations to build a beautiful bungalow residence, to cost $5,000. It was completed in 1920.

In October, 1903, Mr. Heinemann returned to Germany and paid a visit to his old home at Oldenburg. His father was then dead, but his mother was alive at the age of seventy-five. She lived to be ten years older, and passed away in July, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Heinemann have five children: August, the rancher of Orange, married Amanda Guenther; Ella is the wife of August Matthes, who recently came to reside in Orange County, moving from Nebraska, where he has a fine farm of 640 acres; Freda married Walter Lieffers, the rancher, and lives near Orange; William H. is the husband of Fanny Wurl, and is a farmer in Cheyenne County, Nebr.; he served in the late war, and was honorably discharged from military service; George A. Heineman is at home.

In national politics a Republican, it is as a thorough American that Mr. Heinemann works to elevate civic standards, and to promote public-spiritedness. He loves the adopted country of his choice, and has endeavored to do as much for it, as it has done for him; and no citizen could set before him a more laudable or practical ideal.

A. F. STOHLMANN.—An honest, capable, self-made and successful citrus rancher is A. F. Stohlmann, who is also a clever and experienced carpenter, well known for his activity in local affairs, particularly in his support of the various loan drives and other campaign movements in the recent war. He was born at Williamsburg, Iowa, on January 10, 1883, the son of Frank Stohlmann, a native of Germany, who came from Europe direct to Williamsburg in the far-away spring of 1867. He bought 160 acres there, and set to work, in accordance with his native industry and sagacity, to bring it up to a high state of cultivation.

Soon after his arrival here, too, Mr. Stohlmann married in Iowa, Miss Lenora Kleinmeyer, also a native of Central Germany, but one who came out to the United States with her parents when she was a mere girl. Together, they formed a model home; and Mr. Stohlmann became one of the very successful farmers of the Hawkeye State, and when he had made his valuable contribution as a foreigner to the development of the great American West, he passed on to his eternal reward, at the rather ripe age of sixty-six.

A. F. Stohlmann, the subject of our sketch, enjoyed the best common school education that the country schools of his district, supplemented by the help his parents gave, could afford, and becoming early interested in carpenter work, he soon learned the carpenter's trade under the supervision of a brother-in-law. At that time he worked for a dollar a day and his board, and it is safe to say that he earned every penny of it.

He was not satisfied, however, to stay at home, and when the first opportunity to come out to the Pacific Coast presented itself, he was wide-awake to avail himself of the chance. He accompanied a rich uncle, who was a shipper and raiser of stock, and landed in Los Angeles in the spring of 1904. This uncle was E. F. Kleinmeyer, who continued to deal heavily in livestock, and he worked for him at carpentering.

In 1906 he purchased the sixteen-acre ranch which he has since greatly improved, and he also took water stock in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. Now he has ten acres of Valencia oranges in full bearing and the balance in walnuts. He uses a tractor and other up-to-date farm implements and machinery. This ranch work monopolizes all his time and attention, which is rather a pity, for Mr. Stohlmann is a contractor and builder of no mean order and has again and again demonstrated his superior ability.

On April 28, 1910, Mr. Stohlmann was married to Miss June Baker, a native daughter born at Orange on June 17, 1893. Her father was M. A. Baker, a rancher at Fairview, in Orange County, and at Fairview she was educated. Five children were granted this worthy couple, and three in God's providence have survived: Frank Martin is deceased, having passed away on March 31, 1918; Alton Theo; Melvina May; Lorina June, born on December 23, 1916, died on May 1 of the following year; and Alvin Laverne. The family are active members of the Lutheran Church at Olive, and reside in a beautiful home erected in 1910, where they dispense a hospitality thoroughly Californian. Mr. Stohlmann is a Republican in matters of national political import, but first, last and all the time an American. As a result, he and his family did their full duty as American citizens in the recent trying times of the World War.

PAUL JOHN LOTZE.—There is ample opportunity in Fullerton for the exercise of the energies of those engaged in the plumbing business, and the proprietor of the Plumbing and Sheet Metal Works, in that city, Paul John Lotze, is well known as a superior workman in this industry. A native of Germany, he was born November 29, 1884, and is the fourth child in order of birth in William M. and Augusta (Simnig) Lotze's family of seven children. The father, an engineer by occupation, brought his family to California from Germany in 1900, his son Paul John having preceded him to America a year previous.

Paul John acquired his education in the public schools of Germany, and at the age of fifteen, in 1899, he emigrated to the United States, locating first in Kansas, where he remained three years working on a farm and during the winter attending school. He then journeyed west to San Bernardino, Cal., in 1902, where he remained six years, and in the meantime learned the plumbing and sheet metal trades. In January, 1908, he located at Fullerton, Cal., and established his business, beginning on a small scale and has grown and prospered ever since its inception, and in which he keeps three people employed. Among the excellent work he has done may be mentioned the plumbing in the Fullerton high school, and in the Evangelical Association Church at Anaheim, the plumbing in the residences of H. C. Ruggles, George L. Vance, J. R. Carhart, C. C. Chapman, and many other of the best residences in the community, as well as doing work for the city of Fullerton. In 1920, Mr. Lotze erected a very modern business establishment on a lot that he owned at 124 West Commonwealth Avenue. Here he has his office and display room, as well as his workshop. The work done by Mr. Lotze is his best advertisement and he is desirous of satisfying his patrons.

The marriage of Mr. Lotze on June 30, 1910, united him with Miss Amelia Matilda Holve, a native of Germany, who came to California to make her home in 1907. They are the parents of three children—Clarence, Walter and Lucille. The family home is located on an acre of ground on South Highland Avenue, Fullerton, and the land is a fine orange grove in full bearing. Mr. and Mrs. Lotze are members of the Evangelical Association. In politics Mr. Lotze is an independent voter, supporting the best men and measures. Fraternally he belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood. Not a little of the success achieved by this enterprising business man is the result of the encouragement and cooperation of his wife, to whom he readily gives much credit. Honorable in his dealings, industrious in disposition, his influence is ever used unsparingly in promoting the welfare of Fullerton, and his many friends esteem him for his public zeal and his many excellent characteristics.

ST. PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH, OLIVE.—Prominent among the agencies making for permanent uplift in Orange County must be mentioned St. Paul's Lutheran Church at Olive, now under the able direction of Rev. William A. Theiss, U. A. C. of the Missouri Synod. A native son, and therefore an American thoroughly familiar with California conditions, Mr. Theiss was born at Oakland on November 9, 1889, the son of Professor J. G. and Lena (Bahls) Theiss of that city, and received his early education at the Parochial School in Oakland, presided over by his father. He then studied at Concordia College at Milwaukee, preparatory to his final course at Concordia Seminary at St. Louis.

When he was married, at the home of the bride in Milwaukee on August 19, 1913, Mr. Theiss chose for his wife and helpmate Miss Emma Juds, the daughter of August and Bertha Juds of Milwaukee. In that city she was born on January 24, 1887, and there she was educated, living at home with her parents until she was married.

The first charge of Rev. Mr. Theiss was at Petaluma, where he continued until 1916, and then he came to Olive and has since been the indefatigable pastor of the St. Paul's Lutheran Church. Two living children, Eleanor M. and Waldemar A., have blessed the home life of Reverend and Mrs. Theiss; and in the busy world this estimable pair have found congenial work in vigorously supporting the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives, during the late World War.

The history of St. Paul's Church is full of interest. In 1907 ten active members of the St. John's Lutheran Church at Orange, all residing at Olive, asked their release in order to found a Lutheran Church at Olive; and this request having been granted by the congregation of St. John's, St. Paul's was founded when the present school building served as the main church edifice. On November 3, 1912, the corner stone of the new church was laid, and that year saw the completion of the edifice. From the small beginning noted, the church has grown until there are now 140 communicants, of whom forty-nine are voting members.

Important among the various activities of the church should be noted the thorough and patriotic work done by the Parochial School, with forty-eight pupils, under Principal A. W. Schmid. The sessions are held in the old church building, and the attendance is on the steady increase.

JOHN LE BARD.—For the past thirteen years John Le Bard has been a resident of Orange County. He is an experienced rancher of the San Joaquin precinct, where he operates a 500-acre ranch devoted to the culture of beans. He employs from fifteen to twenty hands on the ranch, and some years the ranch has yielded as high as twenty sacks of beans per acre.

He is a native of Milton, Union County, Pa., where he was born October 29, 1861, and was reared and educated in his native state and county. When eighteen he migrated to Ft. Dodge, Kans., where he rode the range on a large cattle ranch, the "R Bar S," becoming adept at roping and riding. Afterwards he was in the employ of government contractors hauling and delivering goods between Camp Supply, Indian Territory, and Ft. Elliot before the time of railroads across the continent, and he is full of reminiscences of many interesting experiences that occurred during the seven years he was thus engaged.

In 1891 he removed to California and located near Fillmore in Ventura County and engaged in farming, and in 1906 came to Orange County, where he has since resided. He is the son of Joseph and Sarah Le Bard. The father, a veteran of the Civil War, serving in a Pennsylvania regiment, was wounded while in the service of his country. In his youth the father followed a seafaring life for a number of years. Of the parental family of eight children five are living, and three of the number are residents of California: James, R. B. and John, our subject.

On April 3, 1893, Mr. Le Bard was united in marriage with Miss Mary J. McDonald, born in Truro, Nova Scotia; she was a daughter of Wm. and Lillian (Sutherland) McDonald. The father died in Nova Scotia and Mary came to California with her mother when she was nineteen years old. Mrs. McDonald spent her last days with Mrs. Le Bard, passing away in 1918. Mr. and Mrs. Le Bard's union has been blessed with ten children, eight of whom are living: Adam served in the Third Supply Train in the World War and now resides in Santa Ana; Viola, a graduate nurse also lives in Santa Ana; Aubrey served at Camp Lewis, and is now assisting his father; Thomas served overseas in the World War and is also assisting on the home farm; Harry, Roy, Hugh and Grace. Mr. Le Bard is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

S. L. PUGH.—A well-posted, successful oil man who thoroughly understands his business is Solomon Leonard Pugh, the former superintendent of the Heffern Oil Company, now connected with the Orange County Drilling Company, a contracting concern; he is also growing oranges on his splendid nine-acre orchard, thereby demonstrating his knowledge of horticulture as well as of oil. He was born in Romney, Hampshire County, W. Va., on July 25, 1880, the son of J. W. Pugh, a farmer who came to Missouri and now resides at Mansfield in that state. He had married Miss Lillian Burkheimer, a West Virginian, and she also is living. Our subject is the oldest of the seven surviving children, and was brought up in Virginia until four years of age.

Going to Missouri with his parents, he attended the public schools there, and in that same state, on September 16, 1902, was married to Miss Lena B. Christner, after which he followed farming. He purchased a farm in Douglas County and operated it with success until he came to California in 1910.

Landing at Bakersfield, he entered the oil business, first for the Howell and Davies Oil Company, and then for several companies in Taft. He next entered the service of the Head Drilling Company, and after that with the Associated Oil Company in Taft. In 1917, he removed to Brea, to work for the Amalgamated Company, and then he helped drill four wells for the Head Drilling Company.

In 1919, Mr. Pugh became superintendent of the Heffern Oil Company, and he was also made a stockholder and a director. They have about 300 acres in their lease, so that he had a position of much responsibility. He belongs to the Oil Workers' Union, and is likely to do his full share in the development of Orange County's hidden and untold liquid wealth.

Raymond C Finch

Three children were granted Mr. and Mrs. Pugh, two still living—Thelma Marie and Everett Fowler. Mary Lillian died, aged two years and eight months. Mrs. Pugh attends the Baptist Church; Mr. Pugh belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and has been affiliated with that organization since he was eighteen years old. In national politics he is a Democrat; but he does not favor party politics in local movements. In 1918 he traded his Missouri farm for a nine-acre ranch, set out to Valencia oranges; he has a fine home there and enjoys the alternation of ranching with his oil interests.

RAYMOND C. FINCH.—A well-educated, progressive and highly successful young orchardist, operating according to the last word of science and with the most approved methods and appliances anywhere to be obtained, is Raymond C. Finch, tenant-proprietor of the celebrated Finch ranch, well situated on North Main Street, about midway between Santa Ana and Orange. He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, on April 14, 1890, and grew up in that city until the beginning of his teens, when he came to California with his parents. His father, Charles Finch, engaged in the oil business at Bakersfield and later conducted a meat market at Los Angeles, where he died in 1907. He acquired ten acres of excellent land at the above mentioned site, and it is this ranch of walnut, apricot, Valencia and Navel orange trees belonging to the Finch estate which Mr. Finch is now managing.

Mrs. Finch, whose maiden name was Elizabeth I. Robinson, died on the home ranch in the month of November, 1918, at the age of fifty-eight, much loved by her family and friends. She left five children, Alfred W., Raymond C., Jennie, John and Leonard, all of whom have succeeded in the world.

Raymond Finch enjoyed the superior advantages of an educational training at the Harvard Military School in Los Angeles, and in 1911 he began to farm. Since then he has been attaining more and more success, and consequently more and more enjoying the esteem of fellow ranchers who like to see enterprise and common sense operations in their field. Mr. Finch takes a live interest in the various political and sociological questions of the day, and stands ready at all times to "lend a helping hand."

WILLIAM J. OELKE.—The fumigating of orange groves has developed into one of the important adjuncts of citrus growing in Southern California, and the men, expert in this line of business, are indispensable to the productiveness of this principal industry of Orange County. Among these, William J. Oelke is well known throughout the district and is kept busy by an ever-increasing demand for his services.

Born in Summit, Essex County, N. J., June 14, 1891, when a lad he learned the trade of carpenter and followed that occupation in his native town until he located in Anaheim, in 1909. For four years after his arrival here he worked in the oil fields, doing rig building and carpenter work. In 1913 he started in as a fumigator and became foreman for the two leading fumigators in Orange County, Mr. Coffman and Mr. Bonkosky. He had charge of the crews for these contractors and gained a thorough knowledge of the business. In the summer of 1919 he decided to go into the fumigating contracting business for himself, and in partnership with his brother, Carl F., formed the firm of Oelke Bros., which continued one year and proved very satisfactory, in fact, they had more work than they could handle with their equipment. In January, 1920, W. J. Oelke became sole owner and he has been adding enough equipment to enable him to take care of the rapidly growing business. The first season Oelke Bros. treated 70,000 trees, their territory covering the entire citrus belt of Orange County; Mr. Oelke contracts work by the tree and the gas is paid for by the owner of the grove.

William J. Oelke has made a thorough study of tree fumigating and is one of the best informed men in that line in the county. He is the first man in the Anaheim, Fullerton and Orange districts to do daylight fumigating, heretofore all the work being done at night, and has been very successful with daylight work. When he entered the business the work was done on the trees every other year; now many of the growers are fumigating every year. Mr. Oelke states that fumigating stimulates the tree and adds to its growth and advocates yearly fumigating. In connection with his work he advises with the grower, examines the grove, and in other words, acts as a "tree doctor." He has gained many friends among the growers and takes pride in having them find his work always thorough and satisfactory.

The marriage of William J. Oelke united him with Miss Osa A. Pontius, a native of Indiana, and one daughter, Coral, has blessed their union. Mr. Oelke is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

ESTABAN AND PETER OYHARZABAL.—Among the enterprising ranchers of San Juan Capistrano are Estaban and Peter Oyharzabal, natives of Basses-Pyrenees, France, born in Canton Hasparren, Arrondissement Bayonne, in 1877 and 1882, respectively. Their father, Jean Oyharzabal, was a business man and farmer, and died in that country. Their mother, who was Graciosa Amestoy, is still living in the vicinity of the old home, the mother of seven children, three of whom are in California; Domingo, a sheep raiser at Bakersfield, and the two brothers in Capistrano. The Oyharzabal boys were brought up in the region of the Pyrenees, receiving a good education in the local schools and at the college in Mauleon, and later at Larressore. When sixteen years of age Peter left for South America with a sister. Arriving at Buenos Ayres, he found employment, and in 1899 his brother Estaban joined him. They had two uncles, Domingo and Estaban Oyharzabal, who were early settlers of San Juan Capistrano, where they were prominent merchants, so they resolved to migrate to California, and in 1904 the two brothers came on to San Juan Capistrano, where they entered the employ of their uncles, riding the range and became proficient in the care of cattle, learning to rope and brand. Later Peter entered his uncles' store as a clerk and Estaban became manager of the Oyharzabal ranch of 4,000 acres and they continued in their respective capacities until May, 1920, when the two brothers formed a partnership, leased their uncles' ranch and engaged in ranching.

The two brothers own a fine ranch of seventy-four acres on the Capistrano River, twenty-five acres being in walnuts. They also lease and operate a part of the E. Oyharzabal ranch, which they devote to raising grain, alfalfa and walnuts. The whole is under irrigation from their individual pumping plant and thus they are engaged in general farming. Peter Oyharzabal was married in Capistrano on April 24, 1911, to Miss Crecencia Leon, a native daughter of San Juan Capistrano, the daughter of Don Incarnacion and Juana (Mendes) Leon, born in Sonora, Mexico, who were early settlers of Capistrano, where Mrs. Oyharzabal was reared and educated in the public schools. Mr. Oyharzabal is a member of the Walnut Growers Association and in politics favors Republican principles.

G. FRED PRESSEL.—A self-made man, and public-spirited as are all men of the calibre to succeed against obstacles, G. Fred Pressel is numbered among the early pioneers of Anaheim, where he has prospered with the growth of the community and has reached a position of real success in life. A native of Obermetzbach, Bavaria, Germany, he was born December 22, 1855, and, after finishing his schooling, served three years in the army. At the age of fourteen he began the trade of a blacksmith under his father, John Pressel, and followed this work in his native land until after his father's death.

Coming to California in 1887, Mr. Pressel went direct to Anaheim, and after his arrival worked one year for Boetticker, the blacksmith, on the spot on West Center Street where he now owns his own blacksmith shop. He then located in Portland, Ore., and worked for four and a half years in a machine shop. Returning to California, he operated a shop of his own in Monrovia for a year; then selling out, in 1891, he went back to Anaheim with $300 capital, with which he bought out his old employer and continued the business at 218 West Center Street. In 1910 he took his son Carl in as a partner and built a new shop, and was actively engaged there until September, 1915, when he retired on account of an injury to his right arm. Since then he has remodeled his building for a garage, now occupied by the Franklin Motor Company. A man of strict business integrity and farsighted in his selection of a site for future endeavors, he has increased his original capital over one hundred times, and has in the meantime taken an active part in the civic and business growth of the community. At one time he owned a twenty-acre orange grove at Placentia, which he sold. He now makes his home at 403 East Broadway, and also owns an orange grove of three and a half acres at 300 West Santa Ana Street. On retiring, Mr. Pressel sold his business to his son, who is carrying on the enterprise on Oak and Clementine streets, with the characteristic attention to details, which makes for success.

Twice married, Mr. Pressel's first wife was Margaret Mueller, a native of Germany, and she passed away in 1914, leaving three children: Carl, who carries on the blacksmith business, is an Odd Fellow and an Elk; Margaret is the wife of Thomas L. Hoag; and Kate, the wife of C. O. Vannatta; both sons-in-law are Masons. An example of Mr. Pressel's fine spirit may be found in the fact that he has built three fine houses, one for each of his children, on South Clementine Street, and presented to them as wedding gifts. The family are members of Zion's Lutheran Church at Anaheim.

Mr. Pressel's second marriage took place in San Francisco, when he was united with Mrs. Alma (Gerick) Miller, a union that has proven very happy to them both. She was born in Berlin, Germany, and came to Illinois with her parents, later removing to Council Bluffs, Iowa. Her parents afterwards returned to Chicago, where they resided until their death. Alma Gerick attended school in Council Bluffs, and it was in the former metropolis that she married Mr. Miller, who was engaged in the real estate business in Janesville, Wis.; he also built and owned eight bowling alleys in southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois. In 1909 Mr. and Mrs. Miller came to California and were among the first settlers of Brea, building one of the first two houses erected in that place. They also built two stores and the first livery barn, and purchased a ranch at Inglewood. They returned to Janesville, Wis., in 1912, and there Mr. Miller passed away in 1916. After settling her affairs there Mrs. Miller came back to California to look after her property, and located at Anaheim, from which place she superintended her interests, and she still owns her business property at Brea. In Anaheim she met Mr. Pressel and the acquaintance resulted in their marriage May 12, 1919. She was a prominent member of the Janesville Rebekah Lodge No. 171, and a past noble grand, and was representative to the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin. She is now a member of Lois Rebekah Lodge of Anaheim, as well as the Royal Neighbors, and takes much pleasure in her membership in the Ebell Club. She is also a member of the ladies' society of Zion's Lutheran Church and the Woman's Relief Corps, while politically Mr. and Mrs. Pressel are both strong Republicans. Mrs. Pressel is a cultured, refined woman, her taste for the beautiful finding expression in her work as an artist, in which she shows much ability, her home being replete with her own handiwork of paintings on canvas and china and water-color work.

Pedro Gherzabal

In 1909, Mr. Pressel, accompanied by his two daughters, made a six months' trip to Europe, where he visited the old home and many other places of interest on the continent, but returned to Anaheim more pleased than ever with his adopted land.

FELIX STEIN.—One of the enterprising merchants of Orange County, Felix Stein has progressed with the growth of this section, and has reached an assured position in the community. His birth took place many miles away, in Barton, Germany, February 8, 1888. When a youth of sixteen he landed in New York City, in the year 1904, and for a few years he was in the employ of a wholesale clothing company there. The year 1908 marked the arrival of Mr. Stein in Fullerton, Cal., and in the spring of that year he entered the employ of Stern and Goodman, mercantile firm, as a clerk. Later he was manager for their branch stores at Anaheim and Olinda for a time. Then, in partnership with Mr. William Fassel he bought out the branch stores of Stern and Goodman in Olinda, Placentia and Yorba Linda, operating the three stores under the firm name of Stein and Fassel. In 1918 they took over the Stern and Goodman store in Fullerton, and Mr. Hax became a member of the firm in that city, and under the firm of Stein, Fassel and Hax they operate a modern and up-to-date grocery and hardware establishment at 100 South Spadra Street; they have put a new front in the store and in keeping with the other mercantile establishments in Fullerton, maintain a high grade of merchandise handled with the efficiency and good management of men experienced in their line of business.

Mr. Stein has also interested himself with the horticultural development of the county, and has bought and sold orange and lemon groves; at the present time the firm own two orange and lemon ranches in this section.

The marriage of Mr. Stein, which occurred at Fullerton, united him with Claire Nicolas, a native of Fullerton, and the daughter of Pierre Nicolas, one of the pioneers of the city. Two children have blessed their union, Babette and Paul. Mr. Stein has joined in the fraternal life of the county, and is a member of the Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, Elks, and of the Knights of Pythias of Fullerton. A believer in progress and a "booster" for his section, he sees even greater advancement for Orange County in the future than has taken place in the past, and is willing at all times to do his share toward the further upbuilding of the section where he makes his home and carries on his business interests.

WALTER J. JEWELL.—An enterprising operator on a large scale in Orange County real estate who has done much to make known to the outside world the attractions and advantages of this flourishing county, thereby encouraging many substantial people to settle here and establish themselves comfortably, is Walter J. Jewell, who is coming to be one of the best known realtors in the county. Michigan is Mr. Jewell's native state, and here he was born at Ann Arbor on May 13, 1881; his parents are Richard and Mary (Hall) Jewell, the father a native of England, and they came to this part of Michigan when the country was new and but sparsely settled.

Walter J. Jewell was educated in the grammar and high schools of Ann Arbor, following this with a business course in Flint College, at Flint, Mich., which in subsequent years he has found to be of much benefit. Remaining at Flint he went to work for the Buick automobile factory, and for three years was employed in their great plant there. In 1906 Mr. Jewell came to California, locating at Brea, and later, for five years he was a partner in the Brea Machine Works there. During the war he helped back up the Government's shipbuilding program by working at the shipyards at Long Beach, spending a year there. Coming back to Anaheim after the close of the war, Mr. Jewell organized the W. J. Jewell Realty Company and from the beginning he has been most successful. He makes a specialty of ranch lands and leases and his realty operations now extend over practically the entire county. A close observer of land values in the years of his residence here, Mr. Jewell's judgment in matters of this sort is highly regarded and this, combined with thorough honesty and justness in his business transactions, has enabled him to close some important deals.

Mr. Jewell has also shown his faith in Orange County's prosperity by purchasing a ten-acre ranch four miles west of Anaheim; he has developed this tract into a fine Valencia orange grove, doing a large part of the work himself, and has installed a private pumping plant. The grove is in a thriving condition and bids fair to be one of the most profitable producers in the vicinity.

On June 17, 1904, Mr. Jewell was married at Anaheim to Miss Lois M. Blake of that city, a native of Reedsburg, Wis., the daughter of L. C. and Marian (Carver) Blake, Mr. Blake being connected with the Fullerton Tribune. Mr. and Mrs. Jewell are the parents of two children, Richard and Mary, and make their home in their attractive residence on their ranch, while Mr. Jewell maintains his office at 136 North Los Angeles Street, Anaheim. Mrs. Jewell is a granddaughter of Washington I. Carver, one of Anaheim's oldest and most highly respected citizens, a review of his life appearing upon another page of this history.

WILLIAM DEVENNEY.—A successful rancher whose experiments on a large scale have contributed to advancing the science of sugar beet culture in California, is William Devenney, who owns a valuable farm near Talbert, and also has 120 acres of sugar beets on rented land. He is a son of a California pioneer who married one of the excellent daughters of Orange County; and as a chip off the old block, he is a live wire, and a very likeable fellow.

He was born in Sonoma County, Cal., on March 8, 1874, the son of John Devenney, born in Iowa, who was once deputy sheriff of Orange County and died at Seal Beach in 1914, at the age of sixty-eight, when he was manager for the Stanton Bayside Land Company. He was married in Iowa to Miss Eliza McDonald, a native of that state, and came from Iowa to California. For a while he and his good wife lived in Sonoma County, and then, for a short period, they moved down to San Bernardino County, and after that came to Los Angeles, now Orange County, where Mr. Devenney bought a farm of forty acres near old Newport. He was elected road overseer for twelve years in succession, and this fact speaks well for his standing in the communities in which he moved. Mrs. Devenney died in 1918, also highly esteemed by those who knew her worth. Two of Mr. and Mrs. Devenney's children died in infancy; the other eight are: Annie, the eldest; William, the subject of our review; and Maggie, who is the wife of Jean Lytton, and resides at Orange; Henry is the fourth in order; and Sadie married Tom Harlan, of the San Joaquin ranch; Fred is foreman at the Southern California Sugar Factory; Inez is the wife of Walter Stark, and resides at Seal Beach. The youngest of the family is Lou Devenney.

William Devenney was only two years old when he came with his parents to what is now Orange County and he attended the public schools of his home district. In his youth, he was a noted sprinter, and held the Pacific Coast amateur record for 220 yards, and won his laurels on the association race track south of Santa Ana. Later, he worked for the Flood brothers, grain farmers on the San Joaquin ranch; and now, while he rents out his own land, he farms seventy acres which he rents from the Southern California Sugar Company, and another fifty acres which he leases from a private individual, so that he has 120 acres in sugar beets. To operate this acreage, he uses ten head of horses and mules. On his fifty-acre ranch in the Talbert precinct, he grows chili peppers as well as sugar beets.

In May, 1900, Mr. Devenney was married at Santa Ana, to Miss Martha Williams, an accomplished lady, who shares in his popularity. She is a native of Orange County and the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Williams) Williams, natives of Wales, where they were married and afterwards migrated to Ohio, residing there until about 1880, when they migrated to California and located near Santa Ana, where they have since successfully engaged in farming at New Hope. This worthy couple have fifteen children that are living, Mrs. Devenney being the third oldest; she was born at New Hope, Orange County, and there she received her education in the public schools. She is endowed with much ability in business affairs and is of great assistance to her husband in his farming enterprises, a credit he proudly accords her.

William Devaney.

WILLIAM F. SPEER.—A splendid example of an enterprising, progressive man who, assisted by his faithful and gifted wife, is well rewarded for the attention and energy expended in developing an orange ranch, is afforded by William F. Speer, who was born in Essex County, N. J., in 1888. His father was Charles T. Speer, a native of Montclair, N. J., who was a contractor and builder, first at Montclair, then at Orange, and who made trips to California. He had married Miss Amelia Small, also a native of New Jersey, a lady of enviable traits, who died, rich in friends, in December, 1919. They had six children, three boys and three girls; and among these William was the third child.

He was brought up at Orange, N. J., attended the grammar and the high school there, and was duly graduated from the latter institution, after which he went into New York City and entered the service of Topping Bros., wholesalers in hardware and furniture, working in their offices for six years. He acquired an excellent idea of business as conducted in one of the great cities of the world, and in a practical way supplemented his schooling so that he was well prepared for commercial work anywhere.

In 1911 he came out to California and settled in Orange County, entering the horticultural field and commencing to grow oranges; and the same year he bought ten acres of land, raw as could be found, in the Commonwealth district, which he cleared, leveled and otherwise improved. With others, he invested in an electrical pumping plant; and then set out his land to Valencia oranges. He also bought five acres which he set out to lemons, and then sold. He joined the Placentia Mutual Orange Growers Association, and both derived benefit from the same and also contributed to its success.

During the year 1918, at Los Angeles, Mr. Speer was married to Miss Augusta Hein; and they have one child, a daughter, Ruth. Mr. and Mrs. Speer are Republicans in their preference for national political creeds; but they are broad-minded when it comes to supporting local measures, and especially interested in forwarding the best interests of Orange County first, last and all the time.

JOHN W. MAAG.—Among the men of the younger generation of the vicinity of Orange, John W. Maag is rapidly forging to the front rank as a successful citrus grower. His twenty-two and a half acre ranch, which he purchased in 1906, is planted to fourteen acres of bearing Valencia oranges, four acres of one-year-old Valencias and four acres of walnuts.

He was born in Humphrey, Platte County, Nebr., April 27, 1885, and came with his parents to California in March, 1891, stopping four months in Los Angeles before coming to Orange, where the father bought thirty-one acres on Fairhaven Avenue, a mile and a quarter south of the city of Orange, on which he is still living. The father, J. A. Maag, was born in Germany, and the mother, Catherine (Steffes) Maag, is a native of Michigan. John W. has seven brothers and two sisters living. Two of the twelve children comprising the parental family died in infancy in Nebraska. Mr. Maag attended school at Orange and completed the eighth grade, afterward taking a commercial course in the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana.

He established domestic ties by his marriage, in Santa Ana, April 15, 1913, with Miss Anna Lypps, a native of Hart, Oceana County, Mich., who was reared in her native state and was grown when she came to Santa Ana, Cal. Their union has been blessed by the birth of two children, Robert V. and Lucena Marie. He is a member of Olive Heights Citrus Association and of Richmond Walnut Growers Association of Orange. He is a communicant of the Catholic Church, and in his fraternal affiliations is associated with the Knights of Columbus. Upright in character, and enterprising in disposition, perhaps there is no trait more noticeable in his life than that of energy. These valuable assets give promise of bearing rich fruitage in acquiring a comfortable competency and in placing him in the front rank among the leaders of Orange County.

RICHARD A. BIRD.—A first class caterer, very experienced in the management of both restaurants and hotels, whose care for the demands of high grade trade has made him justly popular with the community as well as the traveling public, is Richard A. Bird, one of the latest comers to San Juan Capistrano and Orange County. He owns and operates the celebrated "Palm Cafe" at this place, cleverly advertised before the eye of the motorist for miles along the Southern California highways, and also conducts the Los Rosas Hotel, which he manages under a lease. Everything about his establishment is clean, sanitary, up-to-date and appetizing in every respect; and as he is ably assisted by his wife and three sons, he is "making good" in such a manner that no one can doubt his success.

Mr. Bird was born in Columbia County, Ark., on October 22, 1870, and in that state grew to maturity. There, too, in 1896, he was married to Miss Emma Thompson, of the same state. In 1906 he removed to Seattle, where he acquired a residence and property interests. On December 11, 1919, Mr. Bird came south to California; and liking San Juan Capistrano, with its historic old Mission, and seeing the business possibilities through providing for the public bound to pass that way the best service possible for their comfort, at the most reasonable prices, bought the building in which he now has his cafe, a roomy, mission style structure 102x193 feet in size, and set to work to give San Juan Capistrano what it had never had before—a first class restaurant, within the reach of everybody. That the public, a good percentage of which is not merely transient, but passes through the town and stops repeatedly, appreciates what the Palm Cafe and the Los Rosas Hotel have to offer, is shown by the amount of business he does almost daily. Fraternally he is a member of Seattle Lodge No. 92 of Elks, his membership dating from Pine Bluff Lodge, Arkansas.

All of Mr. Bird's children were born in Arkansas, and all are at home. Richard Bernard served in the war for twenty-four months, becoming sergeant of the Fourth Aircraft Medical Corps, and was in France; and he married Miss Gertrude La Grave of Seattle. The other boys are Jennings and Thomas D. Bird.

FRANK KYLE KIRKER.—A prosperous rancher with the advantage of a valuable experience as a mechanical engineer and successful business man is F. K. Kirker, of East Orangethorpe Avenue, Fullerton, who has attained his present success by very hard work and may therefore the more enjoy what he possesses in his promising family and handsome farm. He was born in Catlettsburg, Boyd County, Ky., on April 1, 1868, the son of James M. Kirker, the captain of a steamboat on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. He attended the grammar school of Catlettsburg and later graduated from the high school at Ironton, Ohio, just across the line, at the same time that, as a youngster, he worked as engineer with his father on the steamboat.

Later, Mr. Kirker studied the science of refrigeration and for years traveled for the York Manufacturing Company of York, Pa., selling and installing large refrigeration plants. He sold to the Home Ice and Cold Storage Company, for example, in 1905, the 100-ton plant still located on Alameda and Sixth streets, Los Angeles, and in his travels he covered the entire West, installing notable plants in Winslow and Tucson, Ariz.; San Francisco, Santa Rosa and Sacramento, Cal. In 1907, wishing to establish for himself a permanent home, Mr. Kirker purchased twenty acres on East Orangethorpe Avenue, eight acres of which were already planted to walnuts; and resetting these to oranges, he planted the entire area to citrus trees, making a specialty of the Valencia. The same year, he built a fine residence on the ranch; and superintending personally the various improvements, he attained results not generally seen hereabouts. He has a turbine pumping plant with a capacity of 100 inches, although he also owns eighteen shares of Anaheim Union Water Company stock. He markets his fruit through the Placentia Orange Growers Association of Fullerton, and is justly proud of the fine products sent by him to market. At present he has five acres of Navel oranges, two acres of walnuts, and thirteen acres of Valencia orange trees, all in bearing.

On January 1, 1905, and at Los Angeles, Mr. Kirker was married to Miss Harriet H. Schwinge, a native of Indianapolis, Ind., and the daughter of A. H. and Helen (McVicker) Schwinge. Her father was of old Knickerbocker stock and her mother of Scotch descent. Her father was a business man in Indianapolis, and had one of the largest and most thriving groceries there. Three children have resulted from this fortunate marriage: James M. is the elder; and Catherine H. is the younger of the two still surviving; Helen L. died in infancy. Mr. Kirker is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason belonging to the Los Angeles Consistory. He was made a Mason in Hampton Lodge No. 235, A. F. A. M., at Catlettsburg, Ky., but he is now a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and Fullerton Chapter No. 90, R. A. M., and a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles.

SCOTT R. WALTER.—A broad-minded, enterprising business man whose knowledge of the wants of the community in which he operates, together with his evident ambition not merely to satisfy the needs of the public, but to anticipate them, have undoubtedly spelt much of his enviable success, is Scott R. Walter, the proprietor of the Anaheim Vulcanizing Works at 156 South Los Angeles Street, Anaheim. He was born at Leadville, Colo., on October 20, 1884, the son of Samuel Walter, a native of Ohio, who married Miss Ida Roland, who was born in Maryland. When Scott was a youth his folks moved to Iowa, and there he was sent to the public schools in Polk and Benton counties. His parents soon after died, and he was thrown upon his own resources when hardly mature enough to be expected to accomplish much.

He later became a traveling salesman and during the fourteen years that he was on the road, he demonstrated repeatedly the real stuff that was in him. At first, he represented the International Harvester Company, and later he traveled for a wholesale house handling electrical supplies and mining machinery. He started from St.

Frank H. Kistler

Louis and Chicago, and journeyed throughout the Western States and as far as Alaska. In 1912, he gave up traveling, and located in Des Moines, where he was city salesman for the largest auto supply house west of Chicago.

In 1915, he drove his auto out to California to take in the Expositions, and he has been here ever since. The same year he located at Anaheim, but not before he had traveled over the state, and was thoroughly convinced of the superior attractions of this part of Orange County, and the next year he purchased a small auto tire shop at 156 South Los Angeles Street. To this he has added modern machinery for repair work, and made many other improvements; at the same time, he bought the lot and building, and added a ninety-foot addition, as one result of which he has more than trebled his tire business. He carries the largest and most complete line of tires and tubes in Orange County, and, of course, the public know it, and appreciate the fact.

He has in stock the United States tires, the Goodrich, the Firestone, and the Goodyear, and in the spring of 1919 he added the Exide Battery equipment, for re-building and recharging batteries. He sees to it personally that his warerooms offer everything in the auto electric line, and having installed the first retreading mold in Orange County, he is able to give satisfaction to those who might otherwise need to journey far for relief. While in Des Moines, he helped to organize the Iowa State Auto Trade Association, he assisted in organizing the Orange County Automobile Association, and he is now a live-wire in both the Board of Trade and the Merchants Association of Anaheim, ready at all times to help "boost" town and county.

While in Iowa, Mr. Walter married Miss Grace M. Brewer of that state; and they have one son, Scott R. Walter, Jr. Mr. Walter is a Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, and of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks.

JOHN A. FRIDD.—The orchardist has long played an important role in the development of Fullerton and the industrial and commercial interests of its environs, as may be judged from such successful careers as that of John A. Fridd, who came here about a decade ago. He was born in Winnebago County, Wis., on October 23, 1850, the son of John W. Fridd, a farmer and also a minister of the Gospel, who was a native of England. He had married Miss Mary Lathrop, who was born in New York, and they had seven children. Mr. and Mrs. Fridd are now dead.

John A. Fridd was the third child in the order of birth, and was educated in the local public schools, and at Ripon College, in Fond du Lac County; and after finishing his studies, he remained at home until he was twenty-two years of age. In 1872 he was married to Miss Addie Atkins, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of Samuel and Caroline Atkins. Of this union one daughter has been born, Grace, now the wife of Dr. Jesse Chilton of Fullerton.

Mr. Fridd farmed for over two score years in Wisconsin, all of the time in Winnebago County, where he became prominent in Republican politics. He served as a member of the town board of his township for eleven years; also as a member of the state assembly from the third district during the sessions of 1903-1905, two terms; and of the state senate from the nineteenth district for the session 1907-1909. He had made a visit to Orange County in 1908 and then determined that he would eventually make this his home and accordingly, in 1910, he and his wife moved to Fullerton where they now live and where they have become closely identified with the best interests of this home city.

Fond of social life, Mr. Fridd is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Masons, being a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner. He holds his Consistory membership in Milwaukee, Wis., and the Al Malaikah Shrine in Los Angeles claims his allegiance. The other branches of the order of which he is a member are in Fullerton. He is a charter member and one of the organizers of the Fullerton Club.

CHAUNCEY S. ORTON.—The founder and one of the proprietors of the Fullerton Ice Company, Chauncey S. Orton, one of Fullerton's most progressive and enterprising citizens, has had a broad and interesting experience as a mechanical engineer. He was born July 9, 1880, in Cass County, Nebr., and received his education in his native state, graduating as a mechanical engineer from the University of Nebraska in 1902. For one year after graduating he was associated with the Westinghouse Machine Company at Pittsburgh, Pa., and in 1903 moved to Milwaukee, Wis., where he entered the employ of the Allis-Chalmers Company, manufacturers of engines and electrical machinery. While associated with this well-known firm Mr. Orton had charge of erecting and installing the following: A 2500-horsepower engine in the paper mill of the Barret Manufacturing Company of Peoria, Ill.; a large air compressor for the Armour Company, Chicago, and he assisted in the installation of a 20,000-horsepower plant for the Union Electric Light and Power Company of St. Louis, Mo.

In 1905, Mr. Orton formed a partnership with S. C. Campbell and D. L. McDonald and they established an ice manufacturing plant at Rock Hill, S. C. Two years later,

Mr. Orton resigned his position with the Allis-Chalmers Company and located at Rock Hill, so that he might be better able to superintend his interests in the Rock Hill Ice Company. In 1909 he sold his interest in the ice company and came to Fullerton. Realizing that this thriving city needed an ice company, Mr. Orton, in partnership with W. R. Davis and R. R. Davis, organized the Fullerton Ice Company, in 1910, this being the first ice manufacturing plant located in the northern part of Orange County, and the third erected in the county. It has a daily capacity of twenty tons and the company contemplates erecting in the near future a cold storage plant to be operated in connection with the ice business. In addition to the manufacturing of ice the company owns an orange grove.

On October 23, 1906, Mr. Orton was united in marriage with Miss Lulu Davis, a native of Nebraska, and this happy union has been blessed with three children: William, Chauncey S., Jr., and Mary. Fraternally, Mr. Orton is a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 294, Knights of Pythias, and of the Board of Trade. During the World War he was a member of the California Home Guards of Fullerton and deeply interested in war work.

JOHN E. WAGNER.—A very successful business man highly esteemed for his conservative, yet sane methods and for his ideals and exemplary walk as a public-spirited citizen, is John E. Wagner, who enjoys not only the natural rewards for his own foresight and labors, but the benefits accruing from the life and accomplishment of both his father and his step-fathers, who previously brought his rancho to a high state of development. With his twin brother, Joseph E., he was born in the Placentia district, April 20, 1880, the son of Charles Wagner, an early settler there, and a descendant of pioneers at Grand Rapids, Mich. He had married Miss Josie Andrada, whose family has always been recognized as one of the most representative Spanish-American families in this part of California. Charles Wagner was noted in his day as the owner of vast sheep herds, thousands of his sheep grazing in and about the city of Los Angeles, at that time more or less of a sheep corral. Five children have survived of those who were born to this distinguished ranching couple; Lucy is the wife of James J. Ortega; Josephine has become Mrs. William Berkenstock; Charles C. is a rancher at Placentia; Joseph E. is also a rancher near by; and John E. is the subject of this sketch.

His able father died when John was two months old, and he attended the grammar school at Placentia, and for sixteen years he worked for his mother and the estate. In Placentia, November, 1902, he was married to Miss Lena Hansen, a schoolmate and the daughter of Chas. and Mette Hansen, of Placentia; she also was born in Placentia. Two children have resulted from this marriage: Wilton C. attends the high school at Fullerton; Ardeth attends the Placentia school.

For some years, Mr. Wagner leased land and farmed grain, cabbage and corn under what has been known as dry farming, and in 1905 he became the owner of twenty acres of a citrus grove, where he took out eight acres of walnuts and planted his own nursery stock setting out Valencia orange trees. With this ranch, he has done very well, solving his irrigation problems through the Anaheim Union Water Company, and marketing through the Placentia Orange Growers Association. Later, he became interested in transportation as a public service, and organized the Wagner heavy hauling and transfer service, which operated six F. W. D. trucks and trailers. This business he sold to others, some time ago.

Mr. Wagner erected a very substantial two-story residence on his ranch about twelve years ago, and this, the center of a generous hospitality, has been the mecca of many ever since, at joyous social engagements. With his good wife, he supported vigorously all the war loans and other activities of the various drives, and in times of peace he endeavors, as an enthusiastic Republican, to stimulate a higher regard for civic duty and true Americanism. His own life has been affected in an interesting manner by the fortunes of his beloved mother, who passed away in October, 1901, having reared and educated her children and left a nice estate. Many were the hardships undergone by the family in those early pioneer days, in order to win out for a golden future. The estate left by Mrs. Wagner was settled three or four years after her death, agreeable to all of the five heirs, who were mutually benefitted.

Mr. Wagner is a charter member of the Anaheim Elks, Lodge No. 1345 of the B. P. O. E., and it is needless to say is among the most popular and welcome visitors there. He maintains a horseless ranch, a fact of the more interest in comparison with the early history of the land, and all the work there is done by tractor power. Two years ago he formed a partnership with Robert Edens under the firm name of the Orange County Fertilizer Company, located at Fullerton. They are also extensively interested in the realty business, maintaining an office in Fullerton, and are engaged in leasing and subleasing oil lands at Huntington Beach, Ventura and San Diego. Mrs. Wagner is a member of the Ebell Club of Fullerton.

John E. Wagner.

FRANCISCO ERRECARTÉ.—Another couple from the Basses-Pyrenees who have contributed something definite toward the development of Orange County, and in thus "making good" with their own enterprises, have deserved the highest respect of their fellow citizens, is Francisco Errecarte and his good wife, a compatriot with him and an able helpmate in his California ventures. He was born at Navarra, Spain, fifty-two years ago, and came to America when he was nineteen years old, having grown up in Spain on his father's farm. He already understood farming and stock raising, and when he settled at San Juan Capistrano he had no difficulty in making himself valuable to E. Oyharzabal, for whom he herded sheep and cattle for twenty-two years.

When he married, he took for his wife Miss Juanita Espinal, who was also born in the Basses-Pyrenees and came to America when, like himself, just nineteen years old and full of ambition and hope. Seven children came to them—Cipriano, Mary, Julia, Stephen, Margaret, Pedro and Joaquin. All are bright and interesting, and give promise of useful, successful lives.

Mr. and Mrs. Errecarte have a valuable ranch of twenty-three acres conveniently located about two miles east of Capistrano, on the Capistrano Hot Springs Road. They take comfort in their modest home, and look back complacently to the years of hard work when Mr. Errecarte ranged the hills for years, and Mrs. Errecarte worked at the old Mission Inn Hotel, and for private families, and both learned the value of frugality with industry. Ten acres of their ranch is set out to walnuts, and he uses three horses in the processes of farming.

HARRY LEE WILBER.—No field of healthful entertainment has developed so extraordinarily in the past half century as has the motion picture industry, for the extension of which the eager public is indebted to such enterprising men as Harry Lee Wilber, the secretary of the Fullerton Board of Trade, a native of Albion, N. Y., where he was born on June 20, 1875. His father, Jerome J. Wilber, was a newspaper man connected with the Associated Press at Washington, and he married Miss Alice Lee, a gifted lady of Denver. Harry was an only child, and he came with the family to California in 1885.

Having attended the grammar and high schools of San Diego, Mr. Wilber grew up in Denver to engage in editorial work there. He was in turn city editor of the Rocky Mountain News, the Denver Post and the Denver Times, and in each position of responsibility he proved the man for the job; but he was far-seeing enough to recognize the great possibilities in the motion picture industry, and in 1914 moved to San Diego, where he and his partner maintained two of the best moving picture theaters the city has ever had. At the end of three years, he came north to Fullerton, and since then he has enjoyed unprecedented support of a venture made upon edifying lines. As secretary of the Board of Trade, Mr. Wilber has been as generous to others as the public is generous to him, and has left unturned no stone needed to advance the commercial or other interests of the community generally.

At Golden, Colo., on March 23, 1897, Mr. Wilber was married to Miss Nellie Wilmot, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Wilmot. They have two children: Winifred, now attending the University at Berkeley; and Alice, at Fullerton Junior College. Formerly president of the Denver Press Club, Mr. Wilber now confines his club life largely to the circle of the Elks and the Fullerton Club of which he is a director.

JOHN FRANKLIN WALTON.—A highly respected citizen whose family has been in Orange County, and closely identified with its development, for so many years that they have seen many changes, is John Franklin Walton, the rancher of Placentia Avenue, Anaheim. He was born in Carthage, Mo., on February 21, 1866, the son of John Q. A. and Katherine (Snodgrass) Walton. His father was a building contractor and erected the first court house that Carthage ever had—a historic edifice, since it was burned down during the Civil War. His father joined the Confederate Army, and saw hard service under Colonel Joe Shelby.

When John was a year old, his parents removed to Washington County, Ark., and there his father had a farm, although he generally worked at his trade. John was sent to the graded schools of Washington County and received a good start for the battle of life. Two of his brothers, D. H. and W. T., having gone to California in 1884, John, accompanying his father and a sister came out in the great boom year of 1887. Their mother was to have come with them, but she died just prior to the time of their moving.

The elder Walton came to Santa Ana and made that town his home for a couple of years, and six months after their arrival the daughter Maggie died; while the father lived until February, 1908, when he died at the age of eighty-six years. John left home and worked out for two years in San Bernardino County. During the following three years, he farmed with his brother, W. T. Walton, on the Irvine Ranch; but in 1896 he went to the state of Washington, and at Oakesdale, Wash., he was married on July 23, 1896, to Miss Alice Skidmore, a native of Morgan County, Ala., where she was born near Hartsell, the daughter of Robt. A. and Susan (Lassiter) Skidmore. Her father was a planter, and raised much cotton. Her folks moved to Washington County, Ark., and settled in the vicinity of Mr. Walton's home; and so the well-mated couple were educated in the same school. Then her parents moved on to Oakesdale, and there she lived until she was married.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Walton settled in Redlands, Cal., where they resided for five years; and then they spent another five years in Los Angeles and vicinity. In 1906 they purchased from the Stearns Rancho Company eighteen acres on Placentia Avenue, all bare land; they cleared and leveled it and twelve acres they set out to Valencia oranges, and three and a half acres to walnuts. This season, the balance will be set out to oranges and he markets through the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association and is also a member of the Richland Walnut Association of Orange.

Four children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Walton: Robert, Wallace and Kitty are students in the high school at Anaheim, and Marvin is in the grammar school. The family are members of the Methodist Church, South, of Santa Ana, Mr. Walton being a member of the official board, and he endeavors under the leadership of the Democratic Party to effect whatever civic reforms are possible. He was here at the time of the county division and voted for the organization of the county.

EARL D. GAGE.—A successful, home-loving rancher, who attributes much of his success to his clever, devoted wife, and who has, as a Republican advocating the prohibition of alcohol, lived to see many of his dreams and wishes realized, is Earl D. Gage, of Fullerton, who was born in Nemaha County, Kans., the only son of Charles Gage, a farmer, who had married Mary Walker and they now make their home at Fullerton. Earl attended the public schools of his home district; but his education was more or less interfered with by the hard work of the farm, for his father's farm of eighty acres along the military road between East and West Kansas was devoted mostly to the raising of corn, and the crop had to be attended to with religious punctuality.

In 1890, Mr. Gage came west to Fullerton, and for a while was employed at horticultural and orchard work. A year later, he was instrumental in assisting his parents to dispose of their holdings in Kansas, and to bring them out to the sunnier conditions of Southern California. After working for other folks for eight or ten years, Mr. Gage in 1900 purchased thirty acres of Edward Atherton, at one time the caretaker of the California Ostrich Farm, which he set out to citrus trees. He had his own nursery; but he also sold many buds and trees. He planted three and a half acres of avocados, and as they are practically in the frostless belt, they are doing very well. He joined the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and in 1916 he erected a fine residence on his ranch. He also took stock in the Anaheim Union Water Company.

On January 11, 1909, Mr. Gage was married to Miss Mayme Clark, a native daughter of California, who was born in Los Angeles. Two children, Lydia and Mildred, blessed their union, and attend, with their parents, the First Baptist Church where Mr. Gage is a member of the board of trustees. During the recent war, Mr. and Mrs. Gage liberally supported all the loan and Red Cross drives, and they are ever ready to assist in all that makes for the upbuilding and improvement of the community.

MARY E. WRIGHT, D. O.—An osteopathic physician and surgeon of marked ability, who is making a splendid success in her profession in Santa Ana, is Dr. Mary E. Wright, a graduate of the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons of Los Angeles, who, before locating in Santa Ana, practiced her profession in Los Angeles and Pomona.

Dr. Wright was born near Danville, Ill., a daughter of Benjamin Browning, a native of England. Mr. Browning was an early settler of Placer County, Cal., where he was engaged in fruit growing. Dr. Wright received her early education in the public schools of Oakland, which was supplemented by a Normal School course in Stockton, after which she taught school for a number of years in the northern part of California. She is deeply interested in the science of osteopathy, which has accomplished such wonderful and restorative results and alleviated suffering humanity after many other systems have failed, and has established a large and appreciative clientele since her coming to Santa Ana, only two years ago.

Dr. Wright is a member of the State and County Associations of Osteopaths, as well as the Women's Osteopathic Club of Los Angeles. She keeps abreast of the times in literary and civic circles and is an honored member of the Ebell Club of Santa Ana, a member of the Present Day Club and the Book Review Club of Santa Ana. During the World War her three sons, Frank B., Chester M. and Lawrence C. Wright, served their country with the American Expeditionary Force in France.

Earl D. Gage

D. B. GREGORY.—Born near Jackson, Mich., on December 17, 1868, D. B. Gregory is the son of Halsted and Agnes Gregory. His grandfather was a pioneer of the pioneers of Michigan, where he took up Government land, and our subject has to this day his grandfather's deed. His father, therefore, was a prosperous Michigan farmer. D. B. Gregory was sent to the grade country school near Jackson, and later he studied at the Cleary Business College of Ypsilanti, while he spent his early days on his father's farm.

On November 29, 1897, Mr. Gregory was married to Henrietta Hudson, who was born near Lansing, Mich., the granddaughter of an Englishman who migrated from England to the United States and settled in Michigan. They belonged to the famous Hudson family of the British Isles, and traced his lineage proudly back to the well known explorer so intimately connected with American history, Henry Hudson.

After his marriage, Mr. Gregory assumed the responsibility of running his father's farm of 240 acres, which he devoted to general farming; and when he came to California in 1907 and settled near Los Nietos, he purchased twenty-seven acres of walnuts. For five years he lived on that ranch, and then he sold it and purchased his present fifteen acres on the State Highway, twelve acres of which have been set out to walnuts; and three to oranges. He has a private pumping plant affording a capacity of seventy-five inches, and is a member of both the Anaheim Walnut Growers Association and the Anaheim Citrus Fruit Association. A Democrat in matters of national politics, Mr. Gregory belongs to the Odd Fellows, among whom he enjoys an enviable popularity.

ROY R. DAVIS.—The extent to which modern conveniences have added attraction, particularly to American life, is shown in such service as that of the Fullerton Ice Company, directed in part by the city trustee, Roy R. Davis, one of the firm's energetic members. He is another native of Nebraska who has made good in California, and in succeeding after the fashion so satisfactory to the world, has made the world itself a deal better for his having living and worked in it.

He was born in Cass County on June 5, 1881, the son of William R. and Mary Emma (Harmon) Davis, who settled in Nebraska in 1856, and who came to California about a decade ago, and are now living at Fullerton, where they arrived in March, 1910. They were granted seven children, four of them living, the first born being the subject of our sketch.

Roy attended the grammar and high schools at Weeping Water, Nebr., and then farmed until he was twenty-eight. Since coming to California in March, 1910, he has been engaged in the manufacturing of ice; and after an extended experience, following the most recent developments and methods in that field, the company now employs fifteen men, and none of them are ever idle, caring for a steadily increasing business. A man above his party, Mr. Davis knows how to combine business with politics; he is public-spirited and inclined to cooperate to a marked degree, and is, therefore, widely respected and enjoys the good will of all who are fortunate to know or know about him. He is a member of the California national reserves, and was appointed, in 1917, to fill a vacancy in the city council, to which he was elected in 1918, also being chief of the fire department of twenty members. He belongs to the Board of Trade and the Fullerton Club.

In August, 1909, occurred the wedding, at Pasadena, of Mr. Davis and Miss Harriett Inez Hesser, the daughter of Wm. Hesser, who had the first greenhouse in Nebraska. He died in Pasadena in 1917. Mrs. Davis was born at Murray, Nebr. Two sons, William R. and Wesley A., have blessed this union. Mr. Davis is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

LEO. F. DOUGLASS.—A highly progressive rancher who has spent most of his life in the vicinity of Orange and not only has come to be intimately acquainted with the development of this part of California, but has himself, in his own skilful handling of his ranch, contributed toward the enriching of the commonwealth, is Leo F. Douglass who was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, on October 26, 1892, the son of B. R. and Lillie M. Douglass. His father was an Iowa farmer, and came west to El Modena, Cal., when our subject was eight years old. And there, for a number of years, he owned and ran the El Modena store.

Leo attended the common schools of El Modena and also the high school at Orange, and later took up ranching with his father on 160 acres in San Bernardino County. At the end of the year, they sold out; and then his father moved back to Orange and made that town his home.

With his father, Mr. Douglass then purchased forty-five acres in the Katella precinct between the Santa Ana River and Placentia Avenue, and together they cleared the land, graded and leveled it, and set it out to Valencia oranges, which are well watered by a private pumping plant having a capacity of eighty inches flow. Since then the elder Douglass has sold off ten acres, leaving thirty-five in the ranch.

On September 22, 1914, Mr. Douglass was married to Miss Gertrude Perry, a native of Nebraska, where she was born near Maynard, the daughter of W. W. and Hattie Perry. Her father came to California and purchased an orange grove on Collins and Tustin avenues, and there Mrs. Douglass was living at the time of her marriage. Two children blessed the union, Herbert P. and Theodore R. Douglass. Mrs. Douglass is a member of the Orange Methodist Church, and as such takes pleasure in participating in whatever makes for the uplift of the community; and Mr. Douglass, as a loyal Republican and a still more loyal American, endeavors to elevate the standard of citizenship.

JOSEPH E. WAGNER.—A native son of California, born at Placentia, April 20, 1880, Joseph E. Wagner is a son of Charles and Josephine (Andrada) Wagner, who were born in Germany and Elizabeth Lake, Cal., respectively. His maternal grandfather was also born in California and still lives at Elizabeth Lake, almost eighty-eight years of age. Charles Wagner, on emigrating to the United States, first located in Michigan, where he followed mining until the discovery of gold in California when he joined the rush to the new Eldorado, crossing the plains in 1849 in an ox-team train to California. Later he was attracted to the stock business in the Elizabeth Lake country of Southern California, where he engaged in sheep raising and where he was married. In the early seventies they located at Placentia and engaged in sheep raising in the Brea Canyon district. He was accidentally killed while hauling brick from Anaheim Landing to his ranch when our subject was two months old, in June, 1880.

The mother continued farming and stock raising and afterwards married John Wagner, a brother of her first husband. They bought seven acres in Placentia which they improved to oranges and where they made their home. Afterwards they purchased eighty-six acres in the northeast part of Placentia which they first set out to vineyard, but when the vines died they set out Valencia oranges and walnuts and later on the walnuts were dug out and the land set to Valencia oranges. John Wagner died in 1898 and Mrs. Wagner passed on in 1899. Her only children were by the first marriage, five in number as follows: Chas. C. a rancher at Placentia; Lucy, Mrs. Ortega of Fullerton; Josephine, Mrs. Berkenstock of Placentia; and John E. and Joseph E., twin brothers who reside on their ranches in Placentia.

Joseph E. Wagner from a lad learned farming and received a good education in the public schools of the Placentia district. During these years he assisted his mother to improve the ranch and he was nineteen years of age when she passed away. A year later he became possessor of twenty-seven acres of the old home, which is located on the Yorba Linda Road and which was devoted to Valencias, Mediterranean sweets and Navel oranges and walnuts. Since then he has dug out the walnuts and set Valencia oranges and has budded the Mediterranean sweets and Navels to Valencias, making a very valuable and choice orchard. Later he sold twelve acres, so he has fifteen acres left. In 1920 he completed a large and beautiful residence of Swiss chalet design and his is one of the show places of the vicinity.

Mr. Wagner was married in Placentia, being united with Miss Emily Heinzman, born in Indiana, who came to Anaheim when four years of age, where she attended school and two children have blessed their union, Elmer James and Ione Olive. Fraternally he is a member of Anaheim Lodge of Masons and is a charter member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks. Believing in cooperation, Mr. Wagner is a member of the Placentia Orange Growers Association and is a decided protectionist and Republican.

JOSEPH OLIVERAS.—A native son of the Golden West, Joseph Oliveras was born in San Juan Capistrano, December 26, 1886, where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the public schools. From a lad he worked on the ranches and learned to drive the big teams in the grain fields; when he reached the age of twenty he began to ride the range after cattle on the O'Neill ranch and became adept at riding, roping and branding. He continued to advance steadily and in due time became foreman of cattle on the San Mateo ranch for Mr. O'Neill and filled the position faithfully and well. In 1919 he was transferred to Mission Vejar ranch near San Juan Capistrano, where he is filling the same position and there he makes his home with his wife and his family of seven children.

Mr. Oliveras was married in Santa Ana, being united with Miss Vivian Record, who was born in San Juan Capistrano. He is a lover of fine horses and has trained several thoroughbreds for polo horses and disposed of them at a good price. In his line of work he is held in high regard by his employer. In national politics he is a Republican, while fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Columbus.

Joe. Hiltcher
Flora Hiltcher

JOSEPH HILTSCHER.—A rancher with an interesting family history is Joseph Hiltcher, of Romneya Drive, to the southwest of Fullerton. He was born in Sternberg, in Mehren, Austria, on February 24, 1873, the son of a weaver by trade who made the finest kind of linen, especially for the table. His name was August Hiltcher, and he had married Frederika Bockisch. He used to sell his linen in America, and having heard so much about the New World, he decided to come out to the United States. They had five sons, and Joseph was the middle one and attended the usual graded schools of his native country.

In 1886, the family crossed the Atlantic Ocean, sailing from Hamburg on the steamer Retzia, and landed at Castle Garden, New York, from which city they came direct to California and Anaheim. Here August Hiltcher purchased, only three weeks after his arrival, twenty acres on Orangethorpe and Nicholas avenues. It had been a vineyard, but at the time of the blight, the vines were rooted out. The newcomers planted ten acres to apricots and peaches, and ten acres were left for general farming and the raising of corn and stock. Later, these open ten acres were planted to walnuts. Since that time, the apricots, peaches and walnuts have been pulled out, and the entire twenty acres is now devoted to Valencia oranges. August Hiltcher died in 1891; his widow, with the aid of her son, Joseph, made the above improvements and she died while on a pleasure trip in the Yosemite Valley in August, 1919, aged sixty-nine.

On May 29, 1899, Joseph Hiltcher was married to Miss Flora Weisel, a native of Wisconsin, where she was born in Milwaukee, the daughter of Peter and Josephine Weisel. Her father was a manufacturer of ice-cooling and refrigerating systems, and installed cooling plants in breweries and packing houses. In 1892 Mr. and Mrs. Weisel brought their family of nine children to California, and in their later years enjoyed a balmy climate. Mrs. Hiltcher was educated in the schools of Milwaukee and in Anaheim. Six children have blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Hiltcher. They are Peter, Josephine, Alphons, Carl, Frederika and Max; and they all attend the Catholic Church at Anaheim.

Mr. Hiltcher and his brother engaged in the meat business in Fullerton for twelve years and had the finest market in town; they killed their own beef, pork, lamb and mutton, but when the packers got control, they discontinued their own slaughter. Mr. Hiltcher sold his interest in the market in 1908 and purchased twenty-one acres on the Romneya Drive, and himself set the land out to Valencia oranges. Later he purchased ten acres adjoining, also devoted to raising Valencia oranges. He also owns four acres of the old home place, making thirty-five acres in all. Aside from setting out his own and his mother's orchard he has set out for several other ranchers, or more than 300 acres in all. He is an experienced orchardist and particularly of citrus fruits and his advice and ideas are sought by others. He also helped to make roads and clear and break up much land here. He receives water for his irrigation from a community pumping plant, and profits by the supply of seventy inches in the well. He built the home on his ranch himself—and it goes without saying that it is a comfortable dwelling. He markets his oranges through the Placentia-Fullerton Orange Growers Association, and as he is a hard worker his grove shows the best of attention.

BAUTISTA DUHART.—A resident of California since 1878, when he located at San Juan Capistrano, is Bautista Duhart, born in Hasparren, Basses Pyrenees, France, January 20, 1856, a son of Jean and Marie Duhart, farmer folk, now both deceased. Of their ten children Bautista is the eighth in order of birth and received a good education in the schools of his native place where he was brought up on the farm. In 1878 he came to California locating at San Juan Capistrano and immediately went to work for Oyharzabal Bros.

He continued with them, caring for their stock for seven years when he formed a partnership with Pierre Daguerre, purchasing a flock of sheep and they continued together about five years, when he sold his interest to Mr. Daguerre and then became associated with D. Oyharzabal, raising sheep for nine years, when he sold out and located in Santa Ana and purchased a ranch on McClay Street which he set out to walnuts. Two years later he also purchased his present place of four acres on Hickey and Baker streets, Santa Ana, where he raises walnuts, oranges and lemons and where he has a comfortable residence from which place he operates his other ranch.

In Los Angeles in 1889 occurred the marriage of Mr. Duhart when he was united with Miss Marie Ydelaray, who was also born in Basses Pyrenees, France, and this union was blessed with seven children: Leona, deceased; Stephen assists his father on the ranch; Peter resides at Taft; Henrietta is Mrs. Crowell of Santa Ana; Helen and Miguel are deceased; and Josephine is the youngest. Mr. Duhart is a member of the Tustin Lemon Growers Association and of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association. With his family he is a member of St. Joseph's Catholic Church in Santa Ana, while politically he is a decided Republican.

CARL G. GUTZMAN.—The proprietor of the popular Bon Ton Bakery, at 310 West Fourth Street, Santa Ana, Carl G. Gutzman was born in Pembroke, Ontario, Canada, on December 28, 1890. He was reared on a farm and attended the rural schools of his district. In 1912 Mr. Gutzman came to California and located at Anaheim, where he learned the trade of a baker with the Wilson Bakery. In 1914, in partnership with his brother, Albert, he opened a bakery at La Habra, where he remained until 1915, when he sold his interest and followed his trade in various places in Southern California until he came back to Santa Ana in 1916. At first he entered the employ of D. F. Cook, proprietor of the Bon Ton Bakery, and continued as an employee until January 1, 1919, when he purchased it and became the sole owner.

The Bon Ton is the largest and most modern bakery in Santa Ana, and is strictly sanitary in all its appointments; the floors are of hardwood, the kitchen is light and airy; the huge oven is of the latest model, with white pressed brick front, and gas is used for fuel. The most modern machinery is installed for making bread and pastry. Mr. Gutzman buys his flour in carload lots, and before putting it into the mixer every sack is poured into the sifter, where it is both cleaned and screened, thus assuring the sanitation of every pound. The Bon Ton is one of the few bakeries in the county that uses this extra precaution. "Bon Ton Bread" has always been very popular with the people of Santa Ana, and their pastry and fancy cakes are also sold in large quantities. The average output of the bakery is 600 loaves daily. Mr. Gutzman is an enterprising and up-to-date business man and is making a great success of his business.

In Santa Ana in 1914, Mr. Gutzman was united in marriage with Miss Rosa Ana Krock, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of two children: Dorothy Mildred and Oscar Eugene. He has much civic pride and is deeply interested in the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Santa Ana.

ARNOLD F. PEEK.—In applying himself to the solution of the important problem, "What does the public really want?" Arnold F. Peek, proprietor of the Fourth Street Meat Market, has not only rendered good service to the community, but he has undertaken to do what was certain of bringing its own reward, and spelling for Mr. Peek unqualified success. He was born at White Cloud, Doniphan County, Kans., on July 21, 1892, and so came to California rather late—in 1904.

His father, W. S. Peek, was a dealer in furniture and hardware, and had a successful career, also, so that he was able to retire. He passed away, however, leaving a widow, who was Jennie Arnold before her marriage, and she is still breathing the balmy air of the Golden State.

Arnold's education was obtained at the grammar and high schools of his native state, and also at the State Polytechnic at San Luis Obispo. When able to assume the responsibilities of a business he formed a partnership and bought the Chicago Market at 318 East Fourth Street. Later he sold out his interest to his partner, and on November 1, 1916, he purchased full title to the Fourth Street Market, one of the oldest in the county. He has completed the furnishing in a thoroughly modern fashion, and by diligent attention to his patrons, both anticipating their needs and striving in all cases to satisfy their desires, he has built up a trade demanding the employment regularly of no less than five men. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, and lends his influence in all cases to forwarding the permanent interests of both city and county.

On July 20, 1912, Mr. Peek was married to Miss Ionia Tunison, and they have three children: Stewart, Damaris and Gordon. He takes a keen interest in national politics, working with the Republicans, and prides himself that in local affairs he knows no party lines.

MERTON BLACKFORD.—The choice for the office of postmaster is not always wisely made, even after counselling and deliberation, but few if any communities in all California have greater reason for congratulation on account of the incumbent in the Federal office than has Fullerton, which is so well served by the Hon. Merton Blackford, a native of Illinois, but for years a thorough Californian. He was born at Hoopston, Vermilion County, on January 14, 1878, the son of James A. Blackford, a sturdy farmer who had married Miss Lucinda Thomas, the latter of Welsh descent while the former's parents were from Kentucky and migrated to Indiana in an early day. They had five children, and Merton was the fourth in the order of birth. Both parents are now among the silent majority of mankind.

When he was still a child, the Blackfords moved to Holton, Jackson County, Kans., and there the lad continued his schooling. Afterward, he worked on a farm, and then for a couple of years he was busy with railroad express work.

Coming to California in 1901, Mr. Blackford located at Fullerton and took up one kind of occupation after another, in each case proving the man for the place. As a Democrat, he received the political support necessary for nomination as postmaster, and was appointed by President Wilson on February 15, 1916. Since that date the office has been conducted in the most approved manner, worthy of both the nation and the city, and in accord with the modern American spirit that insists on faithful and disinterested service, so much so that on June 4, 1920, he was renominated and again appointed for another term by President Wilson.

Jas. H. Latourette

At Anaheim Mr. Blackford was married to Miss Edna M. Moss, a native of Kansas and the daughter of W. R. and Susan Moss of Olinda, by whom he has had three children: Alvin, Buford and Nina. Fond of outdoor life and baseball, Mr. Blackford also finds recreation and stimulation with his fellows in the Masons and the Woodmen of the World.

JAMES H. LATOURETTE.—A rancher who succeeded in converting an area of cactus and brush into one of the choice citrus groves of Orange County is James H. Latourette, who thereby discovered the true field for the exercise of his initiative and enterprise, that of hatching out baby chicks. He was born at Long Valley, Morris County, N. J., on January 16, 1865, the son of Obadiah and Martha (Apgar) Latourette, born in New Jersey. On his father's side he is descended from old French Huguenot stock, who were early settlers on Long Island and later in New Jersey. James H. grew up to assist his father, who was a miller by trade but did general farming. He attended a private school at Long Valley, and at the age of eighteen took a trip to Omaha, where he worked at carpentering. He thus gradually ventured into contracting and building, and in that line busied himself for the next five years in Omaha. Then he removed to North Dakota, and settled in the new town of Amenias, in Cass County. He continued to contract for building, and he did all the building for the Amenias-Sharon Land Company, erecting grain elevators, farm buildings and farm homes. The Amenias-Sharon Company had 62,000 acres of North Dakota land, and they undertook to build a complete set of farm buildings on each section of land, after which they rented the same out to tenants; and so satisfactory were his dealings with that go-ahead concern, that he remained in their service for fifteen years. To accomplish this he ran a crew of from ten to forty men.

In 1910, Mr. Latourette came to California with his family and settled at Anaheim, and here he purchased five acres on North Street, which he set out to Valencia orange trees. Needing fertilizer for his grove, he started raising poultry; establishing the Latourette Rhode Island Red Hatchery; and so successful has he been in this field that during the past season he has hatched, raised and sold some 17,000 baby chicks. His specialty is Rhode Island Reds, and he has at last reached that degree of prosperity that his name is a guarantee for anything sold or shipped by him. He keeps the finest stock obtainable and thus gets good results.

On Christmas Day, 1906, Mr. Latourette was married, at St. Paul, to Miss Charlotte Crawford, a native of Ridgeway, Winneshiek County, Iowa, and a lady of natural accomplishments who was educated in that state. She is a daughter of Henry and Marjorie (McIntosh) Crawford, born on the Isle of Man and Wellsville, Ohio, respectively, who were settlers in Winneshiek County, Iowa, as early as 1854, where Mr. Crawford died; his widow survives him and now resides on her orange ranch on Placentia Avenue near Anaheim. Mrs. Latourette received her education at the Decorah Institute, after which she was engaged in educational work until she removed to North Dakota, where her brother, John Crawford, was a farmer and there she met and married Mr. Latourette. He gives no small amount of credit for his success to his devoted wife who has been a constant helpmate and an enthusiastic encouragement to him in his ambitions. They have two daughters, Marjorie Janet and Mildred Helen, both students in the Anaheim schools, and parents and children attend the Methodist Church of Anaheim. Mr. Latourette is a charter member of the Yeoman Lodge of Amenias, and was formerly an Odd Fellow.

LEO J. SHERIDAN.—There is always room at the top of the ladder for the climber who is anxious to reach that goal, and Leo J. Sheridan, the efficient secretary of the Anaheim Union Water Company, is an example of what may be accomplished by a young man who applies himself energetically to his work, fulfills his duties to the best of his ability, and brings out the best that is in him.

Mr. Sheridan's native state is South Dakota, where he was born at Columbia, August 8, 1887. He attended the public schools in his native city, where he acquired a good education, and continued his studies for three years at St. Johns University, Collegeville, Minn. Returning to his native state, he engaged in mercantile pursuits, working in establishments at Columbia and at Mt. Vernon, S. D. He came to Anaheim, Cal., in 1911, and for three years was engaged with the Elliott and Bushard Realty Company as salesman. He then entered the employ of the Anaheim Union Water Company, starting at the bottom of the ladder. He worked in the company's pumping plants, gained a general knowledge of the business, and was appointed zanjero, holding this position for four years. He was detailed to office work in Anaheim one month of each year, and when a vacancy occurred in the office force in the fall of 1919 he was appointed secretary of the company.

His marriage united him with Miss Evelyn River of Iowa, and their union has been blessed by the birth of one child, a daughter, named Kathleen. Mr. Sheridan is a communicant of the Roman Catholic Church, is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and is further affiliated fraternally with Anaheim Lodge, B. P. O. Elks.

ALBERT BINER.—A very energetic and successful young business man, who has by his efficient management become one of the largest manufacturers of soft drinks in Southern California, is Albert Biner, proprietor of the Santa Ana Soda Works, 807 West First Street. He first saw the light of day at Miles City, Mont., January 31, 1885, a son of Theophile and Julia (Truffer) Biner, natives of the Republic of Switzerland, who settled at this Montana town. The father, who was engaged in the contracting business there, is now a resident of Los Angeles.

Albert Biner's early education was received in the public schools of Montana and British Columbia, which was supplemented by a course in the Seattle Business College. In 1905, in company with his father and brothers, he established the Phoenix Brewing Company at Phoenix, B. C., where he continued in business for nine years; after retiring from the brewing company he located in Santa Ana in 1915, where he established the Biner & McKay Bottling Works. The next year, having bought out his partner, Mr. Biner purchased the Santa Ana Soda Works from G. W. Wells, the pioneer soda manufacturer of Orange County, who had been engaged in the business here for fifteen years. Mr. Biner enlarged and greatly improved the plant, installing new machinery, so that it is now one of the best equipped plants of its kind in the state. He also installed a Lowe hydro bottle sterilizer and automatic filling machine. The "Jester Brand" is the trade mark of his products, his specialties being grape, orange and ginger ale, which he manufactures from his private formulae, and connoisseurs pronounce them superior to the average soft drinks of this class. In addition to his own soda business Mr. Biner has the agency for Los Angeles and Orange County for the new soft drink, Ward's Orange and Lemon Crush, a plant for manufacturing these popular beverages having just been completed in Los Angeles. Mr. Biner is also Orange County agent for East Side Zest.

The extensiveness of Mr. Biner's business operations is better understood when one realizes that it requires five large trucks to deliver his products throughout the county. The great increase in his business has made it necessary for him to install another filling machine. The capacity of the plant is now 1,000 cases daily.

In 1910 Mr. Biner was united in marriage with May Kreider, the ceremony being solemnized at Olympia, Wash., and this union has been blessed with four children: Marjorie, Genevieve, Carolyn and Leo. Mr. Biner's enterprising spirit is shown by his membership in the Santa Ana Merchants and Manufacturers Association and the Chamber of Commerce of that city.

ALVIN F. NOWOTNY.—A rising young man in Anaheim and vicinity is Alvin F. Nowotny, who came very naturally and honestly by his special gifts, for his father was one of the men in the early days of Texas capable of filling public office and assuming a progressive and an aggressive leadership. Our subject was born in New Braunfels, Texas, on March 2, 1887, the son of Frank and Mary Nowotny, and from his boyhood he profited by all the advantages arising from the fact that his father, when he was only twenty-four years of age, had been elected city marshal, which office he filled with signal ability until the time of the Civil War. Then he enlisted for active service at the front, but was discharged on account of physical disability and made sheriff, which office he held till 1870; that year and for the following two years, he served as a Texas ranger and helped to drive the Indians out of Texas. In the early seventies he purchased his ranch near New Braunfels, and there he reared his family. Having come from Bohemia, Austria, when he was sixteen years old, and settled in Texas, Frank Nowotny brought with him some of the best Old World blood and spirit of thrift and endurance; and his wife was equally fortunate in her inheritance, for she was born in Luxemburg, and came to America with her parents when she was three years old.

Alvin Nowotny was sent to the grade school in New Braunfels, but having lost his mother when he was twelve years old, he started to work in a grocery store, and ever since then he has been working for himself. He spent fifteen years in the grocery trade, and then he embarked in insurance. He also had a "try" at the hotel management, which if it did nothing else for him, enlarged considerably his knowledge of human nature. In 1908 he came out to Anaheim and entered the mercantile field with Fred

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest S. Gregory.

Ahlborn; and he remained with him until 1913. In 1914, he tried his luck at men's furnishings, but after a year, he sold out. Then, in 1915, he went into the grocery business with Fred Marsh, but since then he has been occupied in extending the ever-enlarging field of the Metropolitan Insurance Company of New York, as assistant superintendent of the Anaheim district.

Mr. Nowotny not only made his home in Anaheim since coming to California, but in April, 1920, he purchased his ranch of five acres on East North Street. It was set out to Valencia orange trees, six and eight years old; and this, with his customary foresight and enterprise, he has brought to a still higher state of cultivation. His land is watered from Pumping Plant, Section No. 2. He belongs to the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Association, and contributes as far as he is able to its excellent work.

On June 5, 1907, Mr. Nowotny was married to Miss Ella Riley, who was born in the vicinity of New Braunfels, the daughter of John Riley who had married Johanna Kloepper. The Kloepper family came to Texas in 1849, while the Rileys came to the Lone Star State nineteen years before. Mrs. Nowotny, attended the grade schools of New Braunfels. Two children blessed this union of Mr. and Mrs. Nowotny—Raymond A. and Alvin Wilbur. Mr. Nowotny is a Democrat; is a member of the Lutheran Church of Anaheim; and belongs to the Masons and the Elks.

ERNEST S. GREGORY.—The success that has attended Ernest S. Gregory in his vocation of building contractor is due to honest dealing, thorough workmanship, artistic ability and an earnest effort to give satisfaction to his patrons.

Mr. Gregory is a native of the Old Dominion, and was born March 3, 1881, in Chesterfield County, Va. Reared on a farm, he attended the country schools, and at the age of nineteen sought a wider field for his ambition and talents in California, locating at Fullerton, where he learned the carpenter's trade with contractor C. H. Smith. This was supplemented by a course at Throop Polytechnic Institute at Pasadena, and a course in the International Correspondence School at Scranton, Pa., in mathematics and drafting, for which he received a diploma. After two years at Fullerton he went to Los Angeles and became foreman of one of the largest building concerns in that city, erecting over 3,000 bungalows for this company in eleven years. During these years he used to make short visits to Fullerton, where he built three or four houses a year, and in the spring of 1919 he located permanently at Fullerton. The character of the people who have chosen Fullerton as their home is such as to demand for the individual's comfort the very best that can be procured for the money expended, and Mr. Gregory caters to the middle class of people who want to own their own homes. He purchases lots, draws his own plans, endeavors to make each one a little different from the others, builds bungalows and sells them on the installment plan. In 1919 he erected thirty bungalows, and in 1920 has averaged one home a week. Among the artistic work he has done may be mentioned some of the homes at Ramona, and homes in the Home Builders and Victoria Square tracts. A prominent banker at Fullerton recently said that E. S. Gregory had done more to upbuild the city of Fullerton the past two years than any other man in the place. The conception of Mr. Gregory's bungalows are especially artistic, and they sell readily, many of them having added charm by reason of their situation among the orange and walnut orchards.

Mr. Gregory's marriage united him with Miss Laura E. Gage, a native of Kansas, and of their union have been born two children, Esther and Ellsworth. Mr. Gregory has realized his ambition to secure a solid and substantial start in the world to a gratifying extent, and Fullerton is deeply indebted to this broad-gauged, self-made man, who has added so much to the material comfort of her citizens and the wealth and artistic beauty of the city. With his wife Mr. Gregory holds a high position among the residents of Fullerton, and they number the most intelligent and cultured people of the place among their friends. Mr. Gregory is a member of the Fullerton Club and the Board of Trade.

REV. ARTHUR T. O'REAR.—Coming to Santa Ana on January 1, 1916, to take the pastorate of the Spurgeon Memorial Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. Arthur T. O'Rear has become closely identified with all the movements that aim to encourage, foster and strengthen the moral and uplifting forces of the community. Not alone has his church shown a steady growth, both in members and influence, but Reverend O'Rear has also given much of his time to activities of a civic and public nature. During the war he was especially active in all the local work, taking a prominent part in all the Liberty Loan drives and serving as vice-president of the County Council of Defense. At present he is a member of the Reconstruction Committee; executive secretary of the Near East Relief Association; a director of the Social Service Board; treasurer of the new Santa Ana Hospital Association; chairman of the Inter-Church World Conference for Orange County, and president of the Santa Ana Ministerial Association.

A native of Virginia, Arthur T. O'Rear was born at Glade Spring, Washington County, October 6, 1878. His parents were John C. and Martha C. (Brooks) O'Rear, the former born at Winchester, Tenn., and the latter in Tazewell County, Va. A descendant of old Revolutionary stock, Arthur O'Rear is eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution. For generations many members of his family have stood high in professional circles, numbering among them judges, ministers and educators, one cousin being for eight years chief justice of the Supreme Court of Kentucky.

Educated in his early years in the public schools of Virginia, Reverend O'Rear later attended the Glade Spring Military Academy for four years. Glade Spring is a Methodist community and he became a member of this denomination when a young man. Later he took a four years' course at the Emory and Henry Methodist College, at Emory, Va., a famous ministerial college of the South, graduating in 1898. He then entered Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., where he took a post-graduate course. Taking up missionary work, he spent four years in the mountains of North Carolina, having headquarters at Asheville, and also taught school in West Virginia.

In 1904 Reverend O'Rear joined the Methodist Conference, his first charge being at Eminence, Ky., later serving the churches at Woodlawn, Ky., Covington, Ky., for two years, and Cynthiana, Ky., for four years. Following this he joined the West Virginia Conference, occupying the pastorate of St. Paul's Church at Parkersburg, W. Va., for four years.

In 1916 Reverend O'Rear was called to the pastorate of the Spurgeon Memorial Church, at Santa Ana, and here his ministry has indeed been crowned with success, pastor and congregation working together in closest harmony in promoting the affairs of the church and in enriching the spiritual life of the community. His marriage, which occurred June 15, 1904, united him with Miss Ailene Parsons, who was born in Kentucky, but reared in Marion, Ind. One son, Edward, was born to them during their residence in Covington, Ky.

DEIDERICH KLANER.—A self-made man who enjoys the satisfaction of having been able both to acquire excellent property for himself and family and to contribute something for the common weal, is Deiderich Klaner, for years a hard-working man in Nebraska, where he improved a farm of 160 acres and was esteemed by all who knew him as a patriotic American ready to lend a helping hand to every good cause. He was born about twenty-seven miles from Bremen, Germany, in Oldenburg, a quiet and pleasant town on the River Hunte, on September 9, 1864, and in his native land he was married to Katherine Wieker, in time the mother of five children. The family attend the Lutheran Church at Orange, and interest themselves in all good work, within and without that congregation's activities, for the religious, social and civic betterment of the community.

Mr. Klaner came to Orange from Nebraska fifteen years ago, and bought his twenty acres in the Olive precinct. It was then for the most part bare land, with a small patch of alfalfa; and its present high state of cultivation is due largely to his experience, industry and foresight. In time, he built his beautiful, up-to-date bungalow residence at 224 South Olive Street, Orange. He also owns an excellent citrus ranch of twenty acres on North Tustin Street, somewhat south of Taft Avenue, which he has improved, and which is one of the best of its size in all the county.

Orange County has been fortunate, all in all, in the class of its incoming citizens, and it has been through such intelligent, industrious and honest burghers as Deiderich Klaner and his family that much of the present prosperity of the county has been brought about.

IRVING ALFRED THOMPSON.—A native son in all but birth, having come to California with his parents in the first year of his life, Irving Alfred Thompson was born near St. Paul, Minn., March 26, 1874. His parents having located at Laguna Beach in 1875, that is the scene of his first recollection and there, too, he attended school. From a youth he made himself generally useful on the farm and learned to drive the big teams in the grain fields.

In 1889 Mr. Thompson's parents moved to El Toro, and there he continued to farm until his marriage in Los Angeles, when he was united with Wilmuth Newland, who was born in Illinois, the daughter of Wm. T. Newland, the pioneer of Huntington Beach. For a time the young couple lived in San Diego, but soon purchased a ranch of sixty acres near Huntington Beach and engaged in raising celery. He was one of the first to raise celery in that section and was a member of the California Celery Growers Association; he was also one of the early beet growers. Having sold his ranch in 1911, he removed to Madera County and purchased 320 acres four and a half miles north of Skaggs Bridge and in February, 1912, moved on the place with his family. He sunk wells and installed an electric pumping plant, leveled and checked the land and planted sixty acres of alfalfa. He also engaged in raising grain and stock and bought and fed cattle and hogs for the market, in all of which he was successful.

In 1919 Mr. Thompson sold the ranch to advantage and came to El Toro, where he now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are the parents of five children: Howard, Clara, Lawrence, Juanita and Irene. Fraternally Mr. Thompson is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Huntington Beach, and with his wife is a member of the Rebekahs. In national politics he is a decided Republican.

JOHN W. TUBBS.—The phenomenal growth of the automobile industry in the past few years has attracted to this field many of the country's most capable men, and prominent among these in Santa Ana is John W. Tubbs, now the manager of the Santa Ana branch of the White Auto Company of Los Angeles, dealers in the popular Stephens Salient Six and White trucks, in addition acting as local representative of the Motor Transit Company. The latter is one of the largest stage companies in the United States, as they operate along the Pacific Coast from San Diego to San Francisco, with connecting lines into Oregon, Arizona and the Imperial Valley.

Iowa was Mr. Tubbs' native state, and there he was born at Emerson, in Mills County, on October 8, 1881. His father was William L. Tubbs, who was born at Three Rivers, Mich., and his mother, before her marriage Miss Alice Tomblin, was a native of Plano, Ill. After a successful period as a farmer in Iowa, William L. Tubbs disposed of his interests there and located in Santa Ana, where he lived retired until his death, being survived by his good wife, the mother of three boys, among whom John was the second-born. He attended the public schools in the vicinity of his Iowa home, and growing up, followed, for a while, all kinds of mercantile work. Then he studied pharmacy and passed his examinations as a druggist, but never followed that line of professional work.

After coming to California he was engaged in the general mercantile business with Joe Parsons at Talbert for two years. He then came to Santa Ana, where for the next twelve years he was identified with the Santa Ana Commercial Company, one of the best-known manufacturing organizations in Southern California. Especially during the three latter years of his connection with the company he directed much of the important activity having to do with its development, filling the important posts of secretary, treasurer and manager, and continuing with them until September 1, 1920, when he resigned to enter his new field of endeavor. His new place of business is at 415-17-19 East Fourth Street, where he occupies a fine fireproof building, 75 by 132 feet. With the pleasing personality that has won for him a host of friends, and is the open sesame of his success, it is a foregone conclusion that the progressive spirit that has always been one of his leading characteristics will be increasingly manifest. His general ability and peculiar fitness for responsibility having been widely recognized, Mr. Tubbs was elected a city trustee in April, 1915; and at the end of four years of faithful and effective service, during which time he carried through various reforms and meritorious projects, he was reelected in 1919 for another four years. In national politics Mr. Tubbs is a Republican, but his views and sympathies are too broad to permit of any narrow partisanship, particularly when matters of purely local moment are at stake.

The marriage of Mr. Tubbs to Miss Stella Brock occurred at Santa Ana on April 12, 1904, and was one of the pleasant social events of the season. Her parents, D. E. and Clara Brock, were for years well-known residents of Santa Ana. Mr. and Mrs. Tubbs are the parents of a daughter, Gwendolyn. Mr. Tubbs is a life and charter member of the Elks, and also belongs to the Orange County Country Club, and he is fond of outdoor life—hunting, fishing and golf.

MRS. C. ELLA WEAVER.—A resident of California since 1902, Mrs. C. Ella Weaver, proprietor of the Santa Ana Rug Factory, was born near Carney, Hamilton County, Ind., a daughter of Samuel and Rachel (Newby) Wilson, born in North Carolina and Indiana, respectively. Her father was a saddler and later a contractor and builder and also followed farming. Later on the family moved to Wilsall, Mont., and there the father died. His widow came to Santa Ana in 1898 and she died here in September, 1918, aged eighty-two years.

Ella Wilson was the oldest of their five children and is the only one of the family residing in Santa Ana. Her parents moved to Iowa when she was eight years of age and she completed the normal course in Albion Seminary, after which she engaged in teaching. For sixteen years she taught in different counties, including Marshall, Story, Grundy, Shawnee and Hardin counties, Iowa, finally becoming principal of the Walnut Hill school in the suburbs of Des Moines. After this she removed to Topeka, Kans., and taught for two years; she also attended the Friends University at Wichita, Kans.

Miss Wilson was married at Newkirk, Okla., in 1900, where she became the wife of Samuel K. Weaver who was born near New Enterprise, Pa., and who was a traveling salesman in Kansas until 1902, when they located in Santa Ana whither her mother had come four years before and Mrs. Weaver joined her mother who was making rugs and was desirous of making carpets. The rugs were originally made by Miss Esther Hill and Lou Burner on West First Street across the street from their present location, when her mother took the embryo business over and they continued the undertaking. In the spring of 1909, her brother, M. C. Wilson, joined them and they started the new place; he was a carpenter and made the looms and other machinery and they then named it the Santa Ana Rug Factory. Since 1918 Mrs. Weaver has been the sole proprietor.

Mrs. Weaver still preserves the first loom made and used in Santa Ana. Her mother had the first fly shuttle loom on the Pacific Coast. She now has power looms, cutters, frayers and twisters, run by electric power, manufacturing carpets of all sizes up to eleven and a half feet in width and is the largest rug factory in the county. Her displays at the various Orange County fairs, as well as the Glendale Bazaar, has taken its share of prizes. She was bereaved of her husband July 20, 1919. Mrs. Weaver is a member of the Friends Church in El Modena, as were her parents, and is a strong advocate of the principles of Prohibition.

JOHN M. ORTEGA.—A prosperous young rancher whose family is intimately associated with the early history of Orange County, is John M. Ortega, of East Commonwealth Avenue, Fullerton, in which town he was born on April 2, 1895, the son of James J. and Lucy (Wagner) Ortega. His father was born and reared in San Gabriel, and was one of the Ortegases so favorably known in California history; while the Wagners came West so early that two of the brothers made two trips across the plains, traveling with ox teams, and fighting their way through the Indian country at every step. The Wagners engaged in stock raising and ranged their sheep over the acres of land now active as oil fields and could have purchased it for fifty cents an acre, but like hundreds of others could not see its value then; however, later on they purchased some land in the same vicinity and set out orange and walnut orchards, and then divided it among the children.

John M. Ortega went to school in Placentia and graduated from the high school at Fullerton, and he also attended the Fullerton Junior College. During these youthful days, he lived on his father's ranch; but on April 8, 1916, he took the momentous step of establishing his own household and was married to Miss Margaret Chapman, a daughter of Fred Chapman of Fullerton. The gifted lady was born in Chicago, Ill., but came to California when a child; and here she attended the same educational institutions as had imparted instruction to her husband.

In the fall of 1919, Mr. Ortega purchased six acres of walnuts and six acres of Valencia oranges on East Commonwealth Avenue, under the service of the Anaheim Union Water Company, having before that owned a ranch of eleven acres in North Whittier Heights which he set out to Valencia oranges. At the end of two and a half years he sold the property which he had secured as an investment.

One child has resulted from the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Ortega—Charles Bille. They are members of the Christian Church of Fullerton, and Mr. Ortega exercises his rights as a free citizen at the polls without party dictation and strictly in favor of the right man for the best place.

ARGUS ADAMS.—A successful California rancher who made no less than four trips to the Pacific Coast before he was persuaded that he had really found the Golden State, and yet a representative man of affairs in Orange County today who has never regretted that he pitched his tent here, is Argus Adams, a director in both the Fullerton Mutual Orange Growers Association and the Loma Vista Cemetery, and a resident on South Acacia Avenue, Fullerton. He was born at Allendale, Worth County, Mo., on December 27, 1867, the son of James Adams, who is still living, at the age of ninety-four, in Anaheim, one of the oldest men in Orange County, having been born in Missouri. He married Miss Ruth W. Cowan, who passed away a couple of years ago, also at an advanced age.

Argus went to the Allendale schools, and afterwards attended the normal school at Stanberry, in Gentry County, at the same time growing up on his father's farm where he learned to make himself useful. When twenty-two years of age, he started out to do for himself, and for a while he rented a farm in Missouri. Then he purchased 230 acres, which he devoted to general farming.

At Grant City, Mo., on January 27, 1892, he was married to Miss Dale Scott, who was born near that town, the daughter of George P. Scott, a farmer who had married Miss Jane Ross. She attended the graded schools near Grant City and grew up to be very familiar with Missourian and Middle West life. Six years after his marriage, Mr. Adams came out to California for the first time; but after a stay here of fifteen months, he returned to Worth County. In 1905, he was back in the Southland and for a year and a half lived at Anaheim; but once more he journeyed back to Worth County.

On January 1, 1912, Mr. and Mrs. Adams came to California to stay, and at Fullerton they purchased twenty-three acres on Acacia Street, where they set out Valencia orange trees now eight years old. The land is under the Anaheim Union Water Company, and Mr. Adams markets through the Fullerton Mutual Orange Growers Association, in which he is also a director. Four children have added joy and comfort to the lives of this worthy couple. Earl W. married Miss Frances McCloskey; they have two children, Evelyn and Wayne, and they live in Terrabella, Tulare County; Wayne H. resides on South Acacia Avenue, southeast of Fullerton; Blanche is Mrs. Ernest Purbeck of Oakland; and Loman H. is at home. Mr. Adams is a Mason, being a member of the lodge, chapter and council and in politics believes in independent action by each voter, irrespective of party lines.

Wayne H. Adams was born near Allendale, Mo., on November 23, 1897, and attended the local district schools. When he came to California in 1912, he continued his schooling at Fullerton and was duly graduated from the high school in that town. Meanwhile he helped his father with ranch work, and when he was able, he purchased from him five acres. This was in 1918, and since then he has been busy there developing the land and cultivating Valencia oranges. He has the service of the Anaheim Union Water Company, and his four-year-old trees are therefore well irrigated. On June 20, 1918, Mr. Adams was married to Miss Juanita Owens, a native of Waxahatchie, Ellis County, Texas, and the daughter of L. A. Owens. One child, Donald Adams, has blessed this union, and gives promise of carrying onward an already honored name.

NORMAN LE MARQUAND.—Representative of the younger business men of Orange County is Norman Le Marquand, the wide-awake manager of the Fullerton Lumber Company, to whose wholesome expansion is traced the experienced guiding hand of our subject. He was born in Mount Forest, Ontario, Canada, October 18, 1882, the son of John and Maria Margaret (Pilcher) Le Marquand. John Le Marquand was born on the Island of Jersey and he was later a fruit merchant in Canada; after settling in California he engaged in the restaurant business in Los Angeles. Mrs. Le Marquand was born in Mount Forest and was the daughter of Joseph Pilcher.

Norman received his education in the public schools of Ontario and early in life became associated with the lumber trade in his native province. Soon after the family located in California he became an employe of the Southern California Lumber Company in Los Angeles, remaining with that concern from 1899 until 1905; when he removed to Fullerton in December, 1906, it was to become assistant manager of the Brown and Dauser Lumber Company with whom he remained for three years, then returned to Los Angeles. In 1910 he again came to Fullerton and ever since he has been connected with the Fullerton Lumber Company here and has very materially engineered its growth in this section of the county. By his close attention to business affairs he has gained a wide circle of friends and also built up a substantial business for his company.

Mr. Le Marquand served two years as secretary of the Fullerton Board of Trade, and he is one of the board's delegates to the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange County—and no better could be found, considering his public-spiritedness. He is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Fullerton Club, of which he was one of the organizers and its first secretary. Politically he is a Progressive. In many ways he has contributed to the welfare of the community with which he has been closely identified for nearly fifteen years, during which time he has witnessed the wonderful development of the whole of Southern California.

CLARENCE R. VANDERBURG.—A far-sighted, progressive young rancher who worthily represent ones of the sturdy pioneers to whom the United States owes so much for the expansion of a great empire, is Clarence R. Vanderburg, who was born at Cushing, Nebr., on September 6, 1893. His parents are Lester C. and Jennie (Hiserodt) Vanderburg, prosperous farmers in Nebraska before they came out to California in 1894 and purchased fifteen acres in Orangethorpe, five acres of which were set out to walnuts and some orange trees, while the balance was vacant land. In 1908, however, Mr. Vanderburg sold his ranch and moved to Montebello; and there he bought ten acres devoted to oranges, some deciduous fruit trees and truck gardening. In 1914, Mr. Vanderburg again sold his holdings, and came to Fullerton, having bought, the year previous, ten acres in the Orangethorpe district.

On account of these successive movings of the family, Clarence Vanderburg attended the school at Orangethorpe for five years and then the school at Fullerton for another three, and afterward went to the Montebello high school, where he was a student the first year the high school was organized, and he graduated from the Montebello high school in 1913. On May 11, 1916, he married Miss Hilda Richards, who was born in the famous cathedral town of Salisbury, England, the daughter of Herbert R. and Alice M. (Johnson) Richards. Her father was a florist in England and edited floral journals; and having removed to Bristol, Mrs. Vanderburg attended the parochial schools there. In 1906, her folks came out to Toronto, where her father spent a few months, coming on to Chicago in December, still interested in the floral trade; and to that city his family followed. Mr. Richards remained in Chicago for five years, both conducting a florist business and representing the "American Florist"; and during that time Mrs. Richards, esteemed by all who had come to know her, passed away. In 1910 Mr. Richards came west to California and two years later settled in Montebello; and there he still lives, active as a florist.

After his marriage, Mr. Vanderburg continued on his father's ranch, caring for the ten acres, five of which he had purchased, and he also built a home there. The ten acres are devoted to the culture of Valencia and Navel oranges, and though under the service of the Anaheim Union Water Company, there were eight neighboring ranchers who joined together and put down a well, having a fourteen-inch flow, suitable for irrigating their various properties. Mr. Vanderburg markets his oranges through the Fullerton Mutual Orange Growers Association, and sends to market some of the choicest fruit raised hereabouts.

A son, Raymond Lester, has blessed the happy home of Mr. and Mrs. Vanderburg, who attend the Methodist Church. Mr. Vanderburg for years was a Prohibitionist, but now that the desired-for goal has been reached, he believes that attention should be concentrated on the fitness of the candidate for office.

THEODORE A. MEYER.—A progressive, successful rancher who has had the advantage of wide travel and a varied, extensive experience in other fields, is Theodore A. Meyer, a native of the city of Hanover, Germany, where he was born on May 24, 1860, the son of John C. and Albertine (Ash) Meyer. Theodore received a good education in the excellent schools of that country, completing his college course at the gymnasium in Hanover, after which he served in the German army from which he retired with a commission. His father was an educator who attained prominence and was well known beyond the confines of Germany for his furthering of commerce; and perhaps it was because of his early familiarity with distant lands that led our subject, when he was only eighteen years of age, to leave home and go to South Africa, where he engaged in plantation work. When the Zulu War broke out, he joined the Colonial forces and served throughout the campaigns as a first lieutenant. He purchased provisions and cattle from the Boers for the use of the Imperial troops, and so aided in British victory.

After the war, he made a small fortune in the diamond fields of South Africa, and later he took a trip to the West Coast. He spent two years in Africa, and then sailed for India. He was some time in Calcutta and later in Ceylon; and he had charge of government billets in India. After a year in India, he went on to Australia, and there he settled in Adelaide; and so well was he pleased with that country, that he spent thirty years there. He made up an expedition to explore the continent, intending to cross from the south to the north, about midway east and west; but he struck hardships, all his natives left him, and with another white companion he nearly died of thirst while crossing the arid regions. On this trip he discovered a gold mine that nine years later proved to be very productive of the coveted metal. While in Australia, he was an importer of house-furnishing goods, and he was also captain of the mounted police in the vicinity of Tanunda and he was postmaster for seven years at Tanunda. He introduced irrigation into southern Australia, but had to overcome the stupid obstinacy of the natives, who were slow to take up new ideas.

In 1911, Mr. Meyer came to California and settled at Upland, where he purchased six and a half acres of oranges and for six years made that neighborhood his home. In 1917, he sold out and came to Orange County. Now he has a twenty-acre ranch on Anaheim Road, near Sunkist Avenue, with four-year-old trees, which are developing splendidly in a rich soil. He receives the irrigation water needed from a private pumping plant known as the Eucalyptus Water Company.

Mr. Meyer has been twice married. He was wedded to his first wife, Miss Emily Edmonds, in Australia, a native of England who had come to Australia when she was a mere child. And in Australia the estimable lady died in 1906, the mother of five children, three of whom are still living: Mary is Mrs. Martin of Pasadena; Emily is Mrs. Muir of Los Angeles; and there is Theodore J. who served in the great World War with the regular army as one of the Thirteenth Field Artillery, Fourth Division. He went through all the major offensives in France, and returned home to civilian life in September, 1919.

In February, 1917, in the city of Los Angeles, Mr. Meyer was married to Mrs. Maud (Farnham) Clay, born in Sanbornton, Belknap County, N. H., a daughter of Horace and Anna B. (Pike) Farnham, born in Maine and New Hampshire, respectively. Her maternal great-grandfather Clark served in the Revolutionary War. Horace Farnham was an expert temperer of tools and watch springs. He passed away while on a trip to Maine while his wife died in New Hampshire. Maud Farnham was reared in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., where she specialized in bookkeeping and when eighteen years of age went to New York City where she was a bookkeeper for different commercial enterprises. In that city, too, she was married the first time, being united with Myron Clay. She came to California in 1907, and became the pioneer settler in the Golden State tract on the Anaheim Road in Orange County. When she purchased this twenty acres it was overgrown with cactus and brush, which she had cleared and improved for farming and she is now the only one left of the original settlers on the tract. She is a member of the Placentia Presbyterian Church as well as active in its Missionary Societies and Ladies' Social Circle. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer are both enterprising; are believers in protection and Republicans.

EDGAR W. MOORE.—When the early settlers of California realized the advantage and oftimes the necessity of irrigating their crops, they naturally chose the easiest method of accomplishing this—the open-ditch system; but as the country became more thickly settled and the water problem grew more acute, the wastefulness of this primitive means was recognized, and thus the opportunity for a new industry was created, that of the manufacture of concrete pipe. In this business Edgar W. Moore has been successfully engaged since coming to Fullerton in 1914. A native of Missouri, Mr. Moore was born at Knobnoster, in that state, on April 24, 1881. His parents were William P. and Martha (Skaggs) Moore, and of their seven children, Edgar was the third in order of birth. He received his education in the public schools of the locality and in the hard school of experience. At an early age he began working on the farm and this he continued through the years of his young manhood.

In 1907, desiring to seek broader opportunities for advancement, Mr. Moore, accompanied by his mother, came to California, and locating at San Bernardino, became overseer of a large tract of land, remaining there for six years. He then came to Fullerton and with his brother engaged in the manufacture of concrete pipe at 202 West Santa Fe Avenue. In 1919 he bought out his brother's interest, and is making a splendid success of his business in which he employs about ten men. He finds a market for practically all of his output in the vicinity; in addition, he also contracts to install the pipe in orchards, as well as doing a general cement contracting business.

On June 6, 1918, Mr. Moore was married to Margaret Wix Haffly, and a little daughter, Mary Margaret, has come to bless their home. The family attend the Baptist Church, and in politics Mr. Moore is a Democrat. He is a member of the Fullerton Board of Trade. With a deep interest in all that concerns the future of Orange County, particularly of Fullerton, Mr. Moore can be counted upon to take an active part in every worthy civic project.

ALEXANDER J. CHRISTLIEB.—A citrus rancher who, through his thorough and exceedingly valuable knowledge of citrus nursery stock, and his scientific experiments with trees, has done much to advance horticulture in Orange County, is Alexander J. Christlieb, the rancher of West Orangethorpe Avenue, who was born in Long Lake, Minn., on August 1, 1882. His father was I. A. Christlieb, a farmer known for his progressive methods, and he had married Miss Mary E. Clasen. In 1897 he came to Los Angeles to live.

Alexander grew up on his father's farm, while he attended the common schools of his home district, and in 1900 he followed his father to California. The latter purchased forty-nine acres on Brookhurst Road and Orangethorpe Avenue, and at that time it was vacant mesa land; and Alexander and his brother, B. H., helped to develop the acreage, which is devoted exclusively to oranges. They have a private pumping plant with a capacity of ninety inches of water, and so have already solved the irrigation problem. I. A. Christlieb passed away in 1917, esteemed and lamented by all who knew him.

Mr. Christlieb is also interested with his brother in a half-section of land in the Imperial Valley; it is agricultural land, but at present has no water supply. He expects to prove up on it, however, and had it under what is known as the Relief Act. On his Fullerton ranch he is digging large pits, three to four feet deep, and putting in a heavier soil, and thereby hopes to get orange trees of greater strength and growth. Mr. Christlieb is a charter member of the Knights of Pythias of Anaheim, and the Anaheim Exchange.

JESSE GOODWIN.—A farmer whose prosperity and good taste are attested by the magnificent home he has recently erected on his ranch at the corner of East Orangethorpe and Raymond, a modern structure, by the way, notable as one of the finest country residences in Orange County, is Jesse Goodwin, who was born near Stockton in San Joaquin County on April 6, 1876, the son of Almon Goodwin, also a native of San Joaquin County, and a nephew of Major Goodwin, the right hand man of General Fremont on his perilous expedition into California. Almon Goodwin was a playmate with Gov. James H. Budd in their boyhood days, and with his brother George took over the ranch of their father, who came from St. Lawrence County in New York State. He married Miss Katherine Vilinger, and became a man notable in Orange County for his association with its rapid development.

Jesse Goodwin was four years old when his parents came to Southern California; he grew up on the farm and attended the public schools at Tustin and Santa Ana. From a lad he assisted on the ranch and became an adept at farming. In 1897 he engaged in raising sugar beets near Buena Park, but that year proved a dry season, and he decided to discontinue the venture. From 1898, for a year and a half he was employed by the Buena Park Creamery, after which he came to Orangethorpe and began his career as a citriculturist by improving a nineteen-acre orange grove now in full bearing. However, he has disposed of all but nine acres fronting on East Orangethorpe Avenue devoted to raising Valencia oranges, having brought the grove to a high standard as a producer both as to quantity and quality of the fruit, ample water for irrigation being obtained from the Anaheim Union Water Company. The elegant residence already referred to was completed in December, 1919, where the family generously dispense the old-time California hospitality.

In November, 1897, Mr. Goodwin was married at Buena Park to Miss Rose Hickey, born near Montgomery, Ala., and the daughter of Richard and Jane (Weathers) Hickey. They came to California when Mrs. Goodwin was ten years old, so that she almost regards herself as a native daughter. Six children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin. Ina graduated from the Fullerton high school and, marrying, became Mrs. Jesse C. Michaeli of this vicinity; Almon is also a graduate of the Fullerton high school, while Alice I. is still a student there. The other children, Herbert, James and Donald, are pupils at the grammar schools. Mr. Goodwin was made a Mason in Fullerton Lodge No. 339, F. & A. M., and was exalted in Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M.; he is also a member of Santa Ana Council, R. & S. M. and the Fullerton lodge of Odd Fellows, being a past grand in the latter. With his wife he is a member of both the Eastern Star and the Rebekahs. Mrs. Goodwin is a member of the Methodist Church in Fullerton while Mr. Goodwin is a firm believer in protection and naturally a decided Republican.

LORON W. EVANS.—The prominent citizen and prosperous rancher, Loron W. Evans, whose property lies about one mile north of El Modena, is not only a good horticulturist, but a most excellent manager. His thrift and progressive ideas make him a leader among El Modena's citizens, and in the seventeen years of his residence in this locality he has prospered and is now enjoying the fruit of his arduous labor of past years. His home ranch comprises sixteen and one-half acres, and this in conjunction with the ranch of his sister, M. Lulu Evans, makes thirty-five acres under his care. With the exception of two acres Mr. Evans set out the entire thirty-five acres to citrus fruit, starting his groves from the seed and afterward budding them to Valencia oranges and lemons, of which latter he has five acres.

Mr. Evans is a native of Iowa, having been born near Ackley, August 8, 1870. His father Owen, was born in Reading, Pa., and his mother, who in maidenhood was Emily L. Andrews, was a native of Southern Ohio. His parents were married in Iowa and the father followed the occupation of a house painter, decorator and carriage painter. The paternal grandfather, Owen Evans, who was a native of Wales, was an iron worker and foundryman, and built one of the first blast furnaces ever erected in Pennsylvania. He was married in his native country to Annie Peregreen. Mr. Evans is the second child in order of birth in a family of five children, namely, M. Lulu, Loron W., Jessie M., Frank Uriah, and Myrtle, the latter three being deceased.

Loron W. was four years of age when his parents removed to Firth, Lancaster County, Nebr., in 1874, and the family shared incidentally in the vicissitudes that came to that section of country through the grasshopper scourge in those years. The elder Evans followed his trade of house and carriage painter at Firth, and when Loron was a lad of fourteen the family moved to Dawes County, Nebr., 170 miles from the railroad, and homesteaded a piece of land. Loron helped turn the virgin sod of Nebraska and attended the district schools, later becoming a student in the State Normal at Peru, Nebr. He passed the teachers' examination and taught school in Dawes County, Nebr., and in 1903 accompanied his father, mother and sister to California.

settling in El Modena precinct, on the east side of Alameda Street. The father purchased twenty-one and a half acres of land and later added to this by the purchase of another twenty acres. The father died at El Modena in 1908, aged sixty-three; the mother was sixty-seven at her demise in 1914. In 1901-2 Loron W. made a trip to Oregon and engaged in the vocation of carpentering at Corvallis, remaining there a little over a year. He returned to Orange County when his father purchased the present home place, February 19, 1904. His marriage in 1907, united him with Miss Rosa B. Robinson, daughter of Fletcher Robinson of North Carolina, in which state Mrs. Evans was also born. She came to California about the same time that her husband came to the state. Two children have been born to them—Norol Owen and Richard Fletcher by name.

For many years Mr. Evans has been associated with the John T. Carpenter Water Company, which furnishes water for irrigation. He was first a stockholder in the company, then became a director and in 1908 was elected its president, in which capacity he has served continuously ever since. The company served about 1,100 acres of citrus land and obtained the water from Santiago River wells. Mr. Evans is a trustee from El Modena precinct on the Orange Union high school board, and has served on the election board and as jurymen in the district court at Santa Ana. He is a stockholder in the National Bank of Orange, is a member of the Central Lemon Growers Association at Villa Park, is director and vice-president in the McPherson Heights Orange Growers Association and also a director and president of the Orange County Fumigation Company from its organization. Politically he is a Republican in national issues, but in local matters is governed by principle and votes for the man he thinks best qualified for the public office. Mr. and Mrs. Evans are members of the First Methodist Church at Orange.

ANTONE BORCHARD.—This enterprising, successful rancher was born near what is now Oxnard, where the well-known sugar beet factory is located, on September 6, 1883, the son of Casper Borchard, a native of Hanover, Germany, who is still living and resides at Newbury Park, Ventura County. His wife, who was Theresa Maring, also a native of Hanover, died when Anton was in his fourteenth year. The father never remarried, but he divided his lands among his children, and now has the satisfaction of seeing all of his family useful, prosperous and honored citizens. He and his good wife were hard-working, frugal people, and they became large landowners in Ventura, Madera and Orange counties.

When Casper Borchard first came to California, the livestock business was the one great occupation which engaged nearly all of the white settlers in the state, and he soon began to raise cattle, horses, mules, some sheep and even goats. He was from the beginning well supported by his five sons and three daughters, the boys caring for the cattle on the hills of Ventura County from the time they were old enough to ride a horse. For a while, Casper had a herd of about 900 cattle, and he became the owner of more than 3,000 acres in Ventura County, and of about as wide a stretch in Madera County. He came down to Orange County, and with his excellent judgment of soil and farming lands bought extensively in the Gospel Swamp south and east of what is now Huntington Beach. He added to his original purchases from time to time, until he became one of the large landowners in Orange County, while he also retained his large holdings in Ventura and Madera counties.

These worthy parents reared eight children. Rosa is now the wife of Silas Kelley, the rancher of Ventura County, and resides at Newbury Park; Mary presides over her father's house; Leo was an extensive rancher near Huntington Beach, now retired in Santa Ana; Casper, Jr., is a rancher near Newbury Park; Antone, the fifth in the order of birth, is the subject of this review; Frank P. is another large landowner residing in Santa Ana; Charles is a rancher at Fairview, Orange County; and Theresa is the wife of Ed Borchard, a rancher at Newbury Park.

Antone Borchard began riding the range with his father, making himself generally useful about his father's extensive grain and stock farm, and so well did he early learn to handle horses that he was able to drive two, four, six, eight or, finally, even thirty-two horses on the great Holt combined harvester and thresher used by the Borchards in reaping the golden grain of Ventura County. He saw the establishing of the great Oxnard Sugar Factory; and as the Borchard land was well-suited to the growing of sugar beets, they became interested in that industry and took rank among the leading beet growers, as they had previously led in the livestock and grain farming industries.

When twenty-two years of age, in partnership with his younger brother, Frank P. Borchard, he rented his father's grain ranch of 3,000 acres in Ventura County, and for four years, or until he married, the brothers farmed it successfully together. In 1911 Mr. Borchard was married in that county to Miss Anna Kellner, a young lady of German birth who has proven a most excellent wife and helpmate. She was born in the ancient town of Duderstadt, Hanover, the daughter of John and Amalia (Adler) Kellner, farmers who also had a bakery and a restaurant, and who because of their industry and enterprise, became prosperous. Her father had been a schoolmate with Casper Borchard; and when the latter returned to California from a visit to Germany in 1906, Miss Kellner and several other young women and men of Duderstadt accompanied him. Her parents both lived and died in Germany, and she still has four sisters and two brothers living in that country. They duly landed in New York after an uneventful voyage across the Atlantic, and on August 24, 1906, reached Oxnard. Since her advent in the Golden State, Mrs. Borchard has thoroughly adopted American and Californian ways, and she is in perfect accord with their institutions. Physically and mentally well-endowed, she is among the busiest of women, caring conscientiously for her household and her four children—Vincent, Frances, Bernice and Wilma.

For four years Antone farmed with his brother, Frank P., and then for four years he was in partnership with another brother, Casper, Jr. After his marriage, the partnership was dissolved; but Antone continued to operate one-half of the Borchard holdings in Ventura County until 1914, when he came down to Orange County, where the father, Casper Borchard, already owned much land, and bought the Ed Farnsworth ranch of 245 acres. This he has well improved by building a beautiful country residence in bungalow style, with barns, water wells, a tank house and other desirable accessories. It is commandingly situated on the east side of the county highway, running from Santa Ana to Greenville, about four miles south of Santa Ana.

Mr. Borchard has never been afraid of hard work, and is never idle, and he has certainly succeeded in the raising of livestock, grain farming, and the cultivation of sugar beets, as well as lima beans. His land is exceptionally adapted to the latter, and produces as many as twenty-two sacks to the acre. In 1918 he helped to organize and is an officer in the Greenville Bean Growers Warehouse. The company has erected a fireproof cement warehouse, on the line of the Pacific Electric at Greenville, and they have installed up-to-date machinery for cleaning and sorting the beans, and are handling approximately half a million dollars' worth of beans annually.

Although a man who has succeeded beyond the majority of men, so that he is now a man of wealth and affluence, Antone Borchard still actively farms his own place, and can be seen any day superintending the place and doing what is necessary to be done around the ranch, where he is constantly making improvements.

HERBERT ANDREW FORD, D. D. S.—The distinction of being a native Californian, and the son of a California pioneer belongs to Herbert Andrew Ford, D. D. S., of Fullerton. He was born at Fullerton, Cal., June 27, 1895, and is the son of Herbert Alvin and Carrie (McFadden) Ford. His father, who is deceased, followed the occupation of ranching during his lifetime. The mother is still living, and Herbert A. is the youngest of her three children.

He received a good public and high school education, which was supplemented with a professional course in the dental department of the University of Southern California, from which he graduated in 1918 with the above degree. He saw service in the Medical Corps of the U. S. Army, stationed at Camp Greenleaf, Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga., and upon being discharged he opened his practice in Fullerton. He is a young man of fine characteristics, standing on the threshold of a promising future, and has become substantially identified with the dental profession at Fullerton, in which he has built up a lucrative practice. He is a member of Los Angeles County Dental Association, Southern California Dental Association and the National Dental Association, and also of the Delta Sigma Delta Fraternity.

He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Fullerton; politically he is nonpartisan; and fraternally he affiliates with Anaheim Lodge 1345 of Elks; is a member of the Fullerton Club and the Hacienda Country Club of La Habra as well as the Board of Trade, and takes a warm interest in the general welfare of Orange County.

PLEASANT B. LEE.—One of the enterprising ranchers of Orange County, Cal., engaged exclusively in growing lima beans and deeply impressed with the great possibilities of the soil and climate is Pleasant B. Lee, a native of Tennessee, where he was born at Cookeville, Putnam County, February 26, 1884. His parents Nathaniel and Millisa (Myatt) Lee were also natives of Tennessee, and of their family of nine children, seven are living. Pleasant B. is the eldest and the only one of the family in California. The other children are: William, Eldridge, Alfred, Everett, Clinton and Naomi.

From a lad Pleasant B. cheerfully learned the tasks necessary for making a success of farming as carried on in Tennessee and meanwhile obtained a good education in the grammar school in his neighborhood. He assisted his parents on the home farm until he came to Orange County, Cal., in 1906. For three years he was in the employ of Mr. Zemeau, a retail oil merchant in Santa Ana, then for two years with the Pioneer Truck Company after which he had a position with the Standard Oil Company until he resigned in 1915 to become foreman on the present ranch of W. A. Cook until 1919, when he took over the lease of 200 acres, which he devotes to raising lima beans. He is an energetic and progressive young man of the type that makes a success in life. He established domestic ties by his marriage in Santa Ana, February 14, 1907, to Miss Margaret L. Matthew, a native of Santa Ana and a daughter of Oscar and Cora (Ratliffe) Matthew, born in Forest Hill, Cal., and Bellefontaine, Ohio, respectively, who were married at Downey, Cal., where they were farmers; they now make their home in Santa Ana. Mrs. Lee is the eldest of their five children and received her education in the public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Lee are consistent members of the Christian Church and fraternally Mr. Lee is affiliated with the order of Maccabees.

THOMAS BLACKLOCK WELCH.—For many years well known in the Eastern markets through his association with the mercantile business, Thomas B. Welch has spent the past ten years of his life as a citrus rancher. Mr. Welch was born at Botsford, Westmoreland County, New Brunswick, April 21, 1850, his father being the Hon. E. A. Welch, a prominent attorney, who was also interested in agriculture and lumbering. His mother was Jean (Blacklock) Welch. They were natives of Ecclefechen, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, and were members of old Presbyterian families who were prominent in Scotch history. Mr. Welch was the eldest of eight children, only three of whom now survive. He was educated in the pay schools of his home locality and assisted on the home farm and in lumbering. When a young man of sixteen he apprenticed to the dry goods business serving three years, when he joined an importing house in St. John, New Brunswick. In 1877, the city of St. John suffered a disastrous fire and Mr. Welch had the misfortune of seeing his home and interest in the business wiped out. The following year he brought his family to the States, and settled at Boston, Mass. For many years he was foreign buyer of fine fabrics, linens and laces for a number of exclusive importing firms in Boston, then St. Louis, then Chicago, where he was with Mandel Bros. for nine years, then New York City with Lord and Taylor, continuing for thirteen years. He made numerous trips abroad in this connection and traveled extensively throughout all the large European countries.

In 1910, Mr. Welch retired from active commercial life and came with his family to California, and on April 21 of that year he purchased a tract of twenty acres at Yorba Linda which he named the Valley View ranch. He at once began experimenting in citrus culture and in this he has been very successful and his ranch is now one of the most attractive places in the district. When he settled at Yorba Linda, ten years ago, there were only a couple of houses in sight and Mr. Welch has taken a leading part in the development of this thriving place. He was instrumental in organizing the Yorba Linda Chamber of Commerce and served as its president for the first two years of its existence. As president of the Yorba Linda Water Users Association he was one of the most active in their litigation, and finally won out in the courts over the investment company that was endeavoring to float a bond issue. An enthusiast on the subject of goods roads, he was an earnest supporter of the bond issue to build the boulevard in that locality.

In Halifax, Nova Scotia, on November 18, 1875, occurred Mr. Welch's marriage, when he was united with Miss Julia A. Crook, a native of St. John, N. B., the daughter of Capt. Isaac and Maria (Canton) Crook, the father being interested in a number of merchant vessels sailing out of Halifax. Mrs. Welch was reared in Halifax and given an excellent education in the Misses Crawford's School. She spent many interesting days on board her father's vessels, while on their cruises. Since coming to California, Mrs. Welch has taken an active interest in all the community affairs at Yorba Linda, was president of the Woman's Club, and it was through her instrumentality, associated with Mrs. Carl Seaman, that the custom of holding the beautiful Easter sunrise service there was established and it was she who had the cross erected on the hill where this service is held.

Mr. and Mrs. Welch are the parents of five children: Jessie M. is the wife of Frederick B. Murlock, superintendent of the Memorial Hospital at Richmond, Va.; Edward A. is owner and manager of the Medford Wholesale Grocery Company at Medford, Ore.; Emma V. is the wife of Nelson P. Young of Los Angeles; Edith G. is the wife of Charles R. Selover of Yorba Linda. It was through Mrs. Selover's initiative that the Yorba Linda Public Library was started, and she supplied the first books for the shelves. The youngest son, Harold C., is the manager of a ranch of eighty acres at La Habra. Mr. Welch is devoted to the land of his adoption and gave freely of his time and means in all the Red Cross work and loan campaigns during the recent war. In politics he is a staunch adherent of the Republican party. The family are members of the Presbyterian Church and their comfortable home is a center of hospitality for the community.

ARTHUR WALDO PURDY.—From good old "down East" Nova Scotia have come much of the brawn and brain which at times have proven so efficacious in promoting needed enterprises in the Golden State along the most rational and successful lines, and Nova Scotians settling in California have taken a prominent part, in particular, in the development of California agriculture. Arthur Waldo Purdy is a living representative, in his aggressive operations as owner of the Fullerton Sanitary Dairy, of just what the thoroughly-trained farmer from that favored section of America may do, given the almost unlimited opportunities of the Pacific Coast.

He was born in Digby County, N. S., on August 28, 1882, the son of Albert H. Purdy, a farmer, who married Miss Sophia Potter, by whom he had twelve children. Arthur was the ninth in the order of birth, and was educated partly in Nova Scotia, partly in New Hampshire, to which Yankee State he had gone when fourteen years of age. Later he attended the high school at Wilton, N. H., from which he was graduated with the class of '02, and after that he took a course at a first-class business college in Boston. Mr. Purdy, therefore, is in part the product of American institutions, as he is today the most intense and loyal of American citizens.

For a while he engaged in the lumber business with a brother, taking up all sides of it, even to the running of a sawmill, and then, for fourteen years, he was dairying, for six years caring for the estate of J. E. Devlin at Wilton. On the first of December, 1915, he came to Fullerton, and here he again engaged in dairying. Since that time he has developed his interests so that he now has three milk wagons and supplies the highest grade of milk to Placentia, Brea and Fullerton. When he started in the business here, he had fifteen cows and employed one assistant; now he keeps seven people busy caring for his 150 cows. In the beginning, years ago, he handled forty gallons of milk a day; now the output is 300 gallons. In the spring of 1920 he consolidated his business with the Excelsior Creamery Company, Santa Ana, of which company he is now a stockholder and director. Naturally, he is a member of the Board of Trade.

On June 17, 1906, the wedding of Mr. Purdy and Miss Evelyn G. Chesley, a native of Milton Mills, N. H., took place at Farmington, N. H., and they are blessed with one son, Roland C. Purdy.

LE ROY E. LYON.—A well-educated, well-read and altogether interesting gentleman whose enterprise and foresight have frequently been demonstrated in a striking manner, is Le Roy E. Lyon, who was born in Wilmington, Lake County, Ill., on September 20, 1885. His father was Edward S. Lyon, also a native of the Prairie State, and he was a college graduate and an educator. He removed to Atwood, Rawlins County, Kans., and there became influential as a professor until his health failed, when he engaged in the mercantile business. Disappointed, that with the new indoor activity, his health did not improve, he went in for cattle raising and ranching in western Kansas and eastern Colorado; and thus occupied, he continued until his death. He had married Miss Julia Hegar, a native of Wisconsin; and of their three children—LeRoy is the oldest and the only one of the family in California.

Le Roy was brought up in Kansas and attended the grammar school until his twelfth year, when he removed with his parents to North Park, Colo., and there attended the high school at Boulder. Having been graduated from the latter, he matriculated in the law department of the University of Colorado at Boulder, and continued to study there until his junior year; but on account of the bad effect upon his health by the confinement, he abandoned the law course, and in 1911 came out to California to seek a permanent location.

During vacations, Mr. Lyon assisted his father and rode the range, and this gave him an excellent opportunity to practice shooting, so that he became very adept. When he started in high school, he continued shooting, and in the state matches won the Colorado state championship. Then as a member of the state team he represented Colorado in national matches, and for three years his team, and he also personally, won many honors. In the report of the National Rifle and Revolver Association of America both his portrait and pictures of the cups he won grace the volumes, and some of these cups he now has in his home. Mr. Lyon has won over seventy medals for expert shooting, some of them very difficult to attain.

He holds two seventy-five-yard revolver records—world attainments—having made ninety-three points out of one hundred, and also the world's fifty-yard record, where he made forty-nine out of fifty. By being an expert shot he put himself through high school and college in this manner, nor need he apologize for the means he provided, especially considering the educational target he was aiming at. In 1912 Mr. Lyon went back from California to Colorado to participate in the state championship match, and it was then that he made this wonderful record in shooting, and for the third time.

When, in 1911, he bought his present place of eighteen and one-half acres in the Commonwealth school district it was undeveloped land, partially covered with cactus.

Juan D. Ortega

Edwige Ortega

This he cleared off and leveled the land; then he bought an interest in a water company, and with others developed water and installed an electrical pumping plant, distributing the water by means of cement pipe lines. The plant was incorporated as the Pilot Water Company, and of this organization Mr. Lyon is secretary and treasurer, and a director. It irrigates already 158 acres of citrus groves, so that it probably has an interesting future. Mr. Lyon set out the nursery stock, and budded them to Valencia oranges, and thus himself made his eighteen and a half acres a fine Valencia orange grove, now in good bearing. Until he got well started with his citrus industry, he raised vegetables of various kinds, particularly potatoes. He operates the ranch with a Ford tractor, and all his other machinery and implements are of the latest and best design. He is a member, and a very interested, progressive one at that, of the Placentia Mutual Orange Association, and supports its programs vigorously.

In San Bernardino County, Cal., Mr. Lyon was married to Miss Mildred Laney, a native of Missouri who came to California with her parents. She attended the Anaheim high school, and grew up in the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Lyon is clerk of the board of trustees of the Commonwealth school district, and in national politics he is a Republican.

JUAN D. ORTEGA.—An interesting representative of one of California's oldest and proudest families is Juan D. Ortega, the experienced, efficient and genial manager of the famous James McFadden ranch south of Santa Ana, who is also related by marriage with another celebrated early house, that of Tico. He was born at Santa Barbara on March 8, 1843, the son of Emidio Ortega, who owned the Ortega grant of two leagues in Santa Barbara County. His father, the grandfather of our subject, was also Juan Ortega, a Spanish soldier who was captain of the troops at San Gabriel, where he died. The wife of Emidio Ortega was Concepcion Dominguez before her marriage, also a member of a very well-known Spanish family here, and she lived to be ninety-seven and a half years old.

Juan D. Ortega grew up in Santa Barbara County, and was married in Ventura to Eduvige Tico, the ceremony occurring in 1866; and she is happily still living, the mother of six children. Carlos B. was the eldest and kept the hotel on the Irvine ranch; he died on March 3, 1920, leaving a widow and two children. He formerly resided in San Diego County, where he was deputy sheriff. Juan B. is a rancher at Carlsbad, San Diego County. Frank is married to Miss Lillie Kelly, a native daughter, and they assist their father on the ranch. Otilia is the wife of Frank Carpenter, and lives at Carlsbad. Maria A. is the wife of Phil Rutherford, the rancher, and they reside at Turlock, in Stanislaus County, and Petra is the wife of Juan J. Carillo, the rancher, at El Toro, in Orange County.

In 1869 Mr. Ortega came to San Diego County and there commenced a ranching experience of fifty years, during which time he knew Ernest Erastus Horton, the Spreckels and other leading men of the city and county of San Diego. For the past three and a half years he has managed the James McFadden ranch, which is a landmark at Santa Ana, being devoted to general or mixed farming. It was owned by the late James McFadden, the pioneer, who built the railroad to Newport Beach and owned the steamboat plying between San Francisco and Newport, and had much to do with the building up of Santa Ana and other parts of the Southland. His widow and daughter still own the ranch, and live at Altadena, and the family name is everywhere held in esteem.

Mr. Ortega has always been as hard-working as he has been successful, and his foresight, industry and prosperity have entitled him to a reputation such as anyone might envy.

JOHN KNOWLTON BROWN.—A studious agriculturist who, at the age of eighty-one, is still active in California horticultural circles as the owner of three trim ranches, is John Knowlton Brown, the philanthropist of Anaheim, who was born on May 22, 1840, at Liberty, Waldo County, Maine. His father was the late Dr. Joab Brown, physician and surgeon, and formerly medical examiner for the U. S. Army, one of a continuous line of successful men and women whose ancestry leads back to Revolutionary War periods. Dr. Joab Brown married Ann Knowlton, and John's grandfather, John Knowlton, was a seafaring man and became master of his own vessel. When he married he quit the sea and located on Lake George, Waldo County, Maine, where he bought several thousand acres of Government land and founded the town of Liberty where he built saw mills, stave and heading mills and also a woolen and grist mill; he had eleven children and gave each of them a farm. He died at seventy-two years while his wife lived to be ninety-four years old. Dr. Brown practiced medicine and was a very prominent man and leader in local affairs until his death, at eighty-six years, his wife surviving him and died at ninety-one. J. K. is second oldest of their four children.

Grandfather Joab Brown, born in Massachusetts, was a physician and also a preacher; he also located in Waldo County, Maine, and purchased a large tract of land where the city of Camden now stands. He married a Miss Ingraham of Rockland, Maine, the second eldest of a family of four children. When sixteen years of age, John K. Brown finished his schooling, and although his father tried to persuade him to study either the law or medicine, he declined and commenced, instead, to earn his own support, and maintain himself. He even later turned down positions offered him as instructor in the city schools. Then he went to Haverhill, Mass., and was apprenticed to a shoe manufacturer. He worked and saved, wisely keeping his eye on the future; but his desire to get into more comfortable circumstances did not prevent him from offering his services patriotically to the Government when his country needed help. At the age of twenty-one, he served as captain of the Home Militia of Liberty, Maine.

Mr. Brown next took up photography, made a business of it, and succeeded so well that he was active in that field for three years; and having accumulated a small fortune, he entered the retail shoe business at Lawrence, Mass., but he soon sold and located in Worcester, Mass. Whatever he did, seemed to prosper; he conducted at one time as many as four stores; and he has owned and sold fifty-one mercantile establishments. In 1887 he was a prime mover in the organization of the Retail Shoe Dealers' National Association of the United States, and its first president, during which time he was the father of the standard last measurement for shoes, which was adopted by the association. After he quit the retail business Mr. Brown traveled extensively over the United States for wholesale shoe houses. In 1909 he made his first trip to California and finally located in Los Angeles. In 1914 he purchased an orange grove and later bought another on West Broadway, Anaheim, where he makes his home. In 1917 he quit traveling and devotes all of his time to his orchards.

How successful he has been may be judged from the fact that he has been offered $70,000 for his ten and one-third-acre grove of citrus trees, and refused the offer. He assisted to start the Anaheim Lemon and Orange Association, and is still a member of the same. Besides his California holdings, Mr. Brown also owns a farm of 320 acres in Maine and several business and residence lots in Los Angeles; and he has some real estate in Worcester, Mass.

On March 23, 1861, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Ida P. Kincaid, a native of Skowhegan, Maine, and the daughter of George Washington and Lucy Ann (Nichols) Kincaid, whose ancestors, both paternal and maternal, came early to the coast of Maine from Scotland. Their older child, Walter L. Brown, is a graduate of the Worcester Academy, and married a Miss Hale, a Canadian lady, by whom he has had one child, Norman Brown. At present, he is representing C. H. Baker, the shoe manufacturer, at Los Angeles. Alice Rose Brown, the younger child, has become the wife of Dr. B. Paul Simpson, the dental surgeon of Malden, Mass. Mr. Brown is a Republican, and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are members of First Methodist Episcopal Church, Anaheim, and loyally supported the war work in the recent chaos of nations, and have been especially devoted to the Red Cross.

PETER JACOBSEN.—A hard-working rancher who owes his success largely to his own honest efforts and unremitting, fatiguing toil, is Peter Jacobsen, of East Orangethorpe Avenue, who was born on the Island of Taasinge, northern Denmark, on March 17, 1871, the son of Jacob Petersen, who had married Miss Marie Hansen. His father had a dairy on the little island of Taasinge, a region devoted entirely to dairying, and was highly respected as a progressively industrious farmer. According to Danish custom, our subject changed his name in a manner rather puzzling perhaps to Americans, but perfectly understandable to the Dane.

He attended the excellent graded schools of Denmark, and up to his eighteenth year remained at home on the farm. Then he struck out for himself and came to the United States; and having caught a glimpse of the East, pushed on to Lakeview, Pierce County, Wash., about ten miles from Tacoma, where he spent about one year on his uncle's farm. Then he worked for a couple of years in the brickyards on Anderson Island in Puget Sound, after which he came down to Southern California in 1892.

Here he entered the employ of Charles C. Chapman and soon became the head orange-grader for the Chapman Packing House at Placentia. He gave such satisfaction, and was himself so well satisfied with the Chapman methods of industry and trade that he remained with that famous establishment for twenty-one years, and left them only when he determined to found a home place for himself.

In 1907 he had purchased two acres of land on East Orangethorpe Avenue for which he paid $150 an acre, and in 1919 he sold the same for $7,500, a price showing a phenomenal increase in value in a single decade. In 1917 he had bought five acres lying opposite to the two he had sold, and since then he has been developing this land in accordance with his careful methods and now has a splendid Valencia orange grove.

W W Kays

As a part of the improvement, he has erected there a modest, but comfortable home, adding decidedly to the attractiveness of the property. Besides caring for his own five acres, Mr. Jacobsen is also a grader of oranges for the Placentia Mutual Orange Growers Association.

On December 2, 1903, Mr. Jacobsen was married in Santa Ana to Miss Mary Petersen, who was born in Denmark in the vicinity of his own birthplace and attended there the same school to which he had gone. She was left an orphan when ten years of age. In 1903 she came to Orange County, having met Mr. Jacobsen at the time of his visit to his home in 1899-1900. Two children were born of this union: Alfred J., who is with his father on the ranch and who also works in the packing house, and Mamie K., a most attractive girl who passed away on December 13, 1919, just three days after her thirteenth birthday. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobsen are members of the Methodist Church of Fullerton.

WILLIAM W. KAYS.—An architect who has done much to elevate the standard of common sense taste in architectural art in Orange County, and to increase the safeguards to life and property through other common sense measures and devices, is William W. Kays, a native of Old Kentucky, where he was born at Nicholasville, Jessamine County, on November 10, 1872. His father, George W. Kays, was a prosperous farmer, who had married Miss Miranda Corman. They had eleven children, and William was the fifth in the order of birth. Both parents are now deceased, but still remembered and honored by many for the usefulness and beauty of their lives.

William mastered thoroughly all that he was asked to do in the practical public schools of his home district, and later took a course at the Alexander Hamilton Institute in New York City. From a youth off and on he was employed in a planing mill, and for five years made furniture. After that, with some older brothers he was in the building line until 1895. In March of that year he came to California and located at Los Banos, where he did construction work for Miller and Lux. For a year he followed civil engineering in the same county, and then he went to Fresno and for a year and a half engaged in building there. Next, for four years, or until 1910, Mr. Kays was the manager of the Union Lumber Company's mill, and after that manager of the manufacturing department of the Pacific Tank.

In the fall of 1910 Mr. Kays came to Santa Ana and assumed the responsibilities of managing the Pendelton Lumber Company. He also engaged in architectural work. In April, 1917, he sold out his other interests and confined himself to the designing and supervising of new buildings. Since then he has erected many of the most notable structures in Orange County. He designed, for example, the athletic building of Polytechnic high school, Santa Ana, as well as the Bolsa grammar school, the John C. Tuffree residence, the Cross home at Fullerton, the Kraemer residence at Placentia, the D. Woodward dwelling at Loftus Station, the John Ruther home at Anaheim, the Bergerhof residence at Garden Grove, the home of Sherman Steven at Tustin, Fred Rohrs' building and store fittings for Spier and Company, as well as the fixtures in the American National Bank of Santa Ana, and numerous other buildings more or less costly in construction; these he both made the plans for and supervised, while they were being constructed. As his business has grown and branched out, he has for convenience, opened an office and sales service in the Pantages building, Los Angeles, so he divides his time between the two places.

The marriage of Mr. Kays took place on April 21, 1914, when he chose for his wife Hazel A. Kenyon of Iowa. Mr. Kays is both an Odd Fellow and an Elk, and in national politics is a Republican. Both he and Mrs. Kays, however, are active in the support of all worthy movements for local uplift and development, and in such community endeavors know no partisanship, but endorse and work for the best men and women, and the best measures.

WALTER H. KIDD.—One of the leading and most successful plastering contractors of Orange County, Walter H. Kidd is a native of Vernon County, Mo., where he was born April 3, 1883, a son of James and Nancy Jane Kidd. When one year old, his parents moved to Oregon, locating in Union County, and in the public schools of that state Walter received his early education. In 1899 he came to California to live, locating in Los Angeles, and while there learned the trade of a plasterer with the well-known contractors, Engstrom and Company. While in their employ Mr. Kidd worked as a plasterer on a number of large and important buildings in Los Angeles, among which mention is made of the following: County Hall of Records, New Orpheum Building, Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank, and the new Jail Building.

Since 1911 Mr. Kidd has been engaged in contract plastering for himself at Anaheim. He has been very successful in his chosen line of work and has done an extensive business, both in exterior and interior plastering. Being a man of unquestioned integrity of character in his business relations, Mr. Kidd believes in putting his best efforts in every piece of work, regardless of its being a large or small contract, and he thus has attained an enviable reputation for satisfactory workmanship. Among the important buildings in Orange County for which he received the plastering contract are the following: German-American Bank Building and St. Boniface Catholic Church, Anaheim; La Habra, Olive and Bolsa school buildings. He also had the contract for the plaster and cement work on the Polytechnic Building of the Fullerton Union high school, on which he put 5,000 feet of cement moulding. Among the high-class houses plastered by this enterprising contractor are the beautiful residences of Charles H. Eygabroad and Alexander H. Witman, Jr., in Anaheim; but the greater part of his work has been done on the new ranch homes located in the Fullerton, Placentia and La Habra districts. His extensive operations keep a crew of thirteen men busy.

Mr. Kidd's marriage occurred in Los Angeles when he was united with Miss Juletta Vivian, a native of England. Two sons, James and Herbert, have been born to them. The family attend the Seventh Day Adventist Church.

JACOB RUEDY.—A prosperous orange grower who previously had made an equal success as a planter in Virginia, raising peanuts, is Jacob Ruedy, of East Orangethorpe Avenue, near Raymond, Fullerton, who was born at the famous Falls of the Rhine, Schaffhausen, Switzerland, on October 27, 1858, the son of J. J. and Annie Ruedy. His father was a farmer, and our subject assisted him while he pursued his grammar and high school studies.

In 1879 he came to America and joined a sister, Mrs. Annie Weber, at Pittsburgh, Pa., with whom he lived for a couple of years, and in 1882 he removed to the vicinity of Petersburg, Va. There he purchased a farm of 600 acres, and he raised peanuts and cotton and stock. This ranch was near where the present Camp Lee is located; and there he lived for thirty-five years.

At Petersburg, on March 7, 1882, Mr. Ruedy was married to Miss Elizabeth Vogel, who was also born in Schaffhausen in Switzerland, and was reared and educated there. In 1915 the San Francisco Fair drew Mr. and Mrs. Ruedy; and after they had seen the Golden State, they returned to Virginia and sold their interests there. Then they came to California, bought five acres on East Orangethorpe, Fullerton, and also six acres on Placentia Avenue, in Placentia. Both have Valencia orange trees, and both are under the Anaheim Union Water Company.

Mr. and Mrs. Ruedy are members of the Methodist Church of Fullerton, and delight in taking part in good works for their neighbors and the community generally. They have also done what they could to maintain a high civic standard, and to instill patriotism, and during the recent war they did good war work.

FRANK J. DAUSER.—The ever-interesting pioneer history of California is recalled in the story of Frank J. Dauser and his family, of East Commonwealth Avenue, Fullerton, for his father came here when the land was covered with wild mustard, sage and cactus, and he was among the earliest to demonstrate that raisin grapevines have a longer endurance than those designed for the production of wine. The grandfather of Mrs. Dauser was also an early settler in the Golden State; hence, California and its stirring past has ever been a theme in the Dauser circle, where the brilliant and certain future of the state has also been present to inspire to renewed activity.

Mr. Dauser was born on December 29, 1877, near Faribault, Rice County, Minn., the son of Francis X. and Mary (Stueckle) Dauser, and his father, a farmer, was a native of Pennsylvania who removed first to Wisconsin and then to Minnesota. There he raised for the most part wheat, and being a progressive agriculturist, prospered; but attracted by the still greater advantages of California, he and his good wife came out here when Frank was seven years old.

Settling in what is now Fullerton they purchased within six months after their arrival some twenty acres on Cypress Avenue, east of Fullerton, which they planted to raisin grapes; and such was the greater hardihood of the vines, as compared with some of the wine grapes, that they continued to yield for five years after their period of full bearing. As the grapes died out, Mr. Dauser sensibly planted Valencia, Navel and St. Michael orange trees, setting out one tree for every twenty-four feet, and around the edge of the grove placed a row of walnut trees.

Frank J. Dauser went to the Placentia schools, there being no Fullerton at that time, and remained at home on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years of age. Then, on February 19, 1901, he was married to Miss Mary Pratt, the ceremony taking place in Anaheim. She was born in Kankakee, Ill., and came to California and West Anaheim with her parents when she was thirteen years old. Her father was John Pratt and the maiden name of her mother was Louise Emling; and the Emlings, as well as the Pratts were well known as pioneers in Illinois. She attended school in

Geo. Closson

Kankakee and also in Anaheim, and so saw the life of two great and distinctive regions of the United States.

After their marriage, Mr. Dauser was employed for a while in the planing mills at Fullerton, for Brown and Dauser Company, in time becoming foreman of the yard, serving in that capacity until he decided to engage in ranching, after sixteen years with that company. He then was given charge of the Brown ranch of 20 acres in La Habra which he set to Valencias and lemons, continuing there for four years, when he located on his own ranch purchased from his father. It comprises 10 acres or one-half of the original estate, which is devoted to raising oranges. His land, unusually rich and fertile, is under the Anaheim Union Water Company, and he markets through the Fullerton Mutual Orange Growers Association.

Five children are the pride of Mr. and Mrs. Dauser: Cyril J. has already graduated from the high school at Fullerton, now attending Woodbury's Business College in Los Angeles; Mildred attending Fullerton high, and Clarence, Vincent and Dorothy are pupils in the grammar school.

GARDNER W. CLOSSON, D. V. S.—As county livestock inspector of Orange County and veterinary surgeon of Anaheim, G. W. Closson, D. V. S., is carrying on a work of much importance to the prosperity and growth of the district, and his conscientious attention to his duties has won him the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens in the county. A native of Kansas, he was born in Smith County, July 4, 1881. When six years old he was brought to Lincoln, Nebr., and there attended the public schools. At the age of nineteen he migrated to St. Joseph, Mo., and for two years worked in the stock yards there. He then returned to Missouri and attended the Kansas City Veterinary College, graduating in 1905.

That same year Dr. Closson came to California, and opened the practice of his profession in Santa Ana, since which time he has been in active practice in Orange County and very successful in his methods of treatment, being the oldest veterinary in point of service now in the county. For the past eight years he has been county livestock inspector and has accomplished much good during this term of service, among other things has driven out the Texas fever tick, and made the county reasonably free of glanders. In addition to his professional duties, Dr. Closson maintains a forty-cow dairy one and one-half miles east of Anaheim.

The marriage of Dr. Closson united him with Miss Wilma Crevling, a native of Iowa. Fraternally he is a member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks and professionally he is a member of the American Veterinary Medical Association and the state association and of the Southern California branch of that order, of which he is a past president and he is past president of the Los Angeles Veterinary Medical Association. In politics he is a staunch Republican. His years of experience and practical knowledge have been of great benefit to the ranchers in Orange County, and combined with his scientific studies, it would be hard to find a man more fitted for the position he occupies in the community.

LEONARD PARKER.—A sturdy pioneer who in early days saw active service in helping to quell the Indian outbreaks in Nebraska, and who has been identified with the development of important interests in California since the middle of the nineties, is Leonard Parker, who was born at Racine, Wis., on May 16, 1851, the son of Fletcher and Priscilla Parker, farmer-folk and among the first settlers of Racine. They moved to Eden, Fayette County, Iowa, in the fall of 1854, that is, the mother and the elder brother of our subject went there, following the death of the father in Wisconsin, and the former purchased 120 acres of Government land, where they raised stock and grain. Leonard attended the common schools of Iowa when school was kept and work permitted, and by industry snatched such education as he could.

When he was seventeen, he and his brother Samuel moved on to Jefferson County, Nebr., and near Meridian the brother took up 160 acres of prairie land, which he devoted to wheat, barley and corn. He joined Company C of the Nebraska Militia and soon had a hand in quieting the Indians. On October 15, 1879, he was married to Miss Mary McKenna, who was born near New York City, and the daughter of Patrick and Margaret McKenna who came to Nebraska in 1859.

In 1881, Mr. Parker moved to Pueblo, Colo., and there he was employed by the Colorado Coal and Iron Company, for the following three years. When he moved back to Nebraska, he settled in Scotts Bluff County, and taking up a quarter section of homestead land, raised grain. He stayed two years on the Nebraska homestead, and then he removed to Portland, Ore., in 1888. He went into well drilling, and for seven years helped to develop the water resources of that state.

On November 29, 1895, Mr. Parker came to California, landing first at Newport Beach but soon coming on to Santa Ana. He made this town his home, but worked in various oil fields, including those at Bakersfield, Brea, Fullerton and Los Angeles, as well as Whittier. In 1904, he purchased a ten-acre farm on South Sullivan Street, which he used for truck farming, raising in particular cabbages and squash; and his success in this new undertaking demonstrates his capability in general.

Five children have come to bless the fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Parker. Ethel is Mrs. James E. Hone of Los Angeles; Orlando lives on the ranch west of Santa Ana; Llewellyn is on the Irvine ranch; Roy is ranching west of Santa Ana. And last, but by no means least, Clarence is ranching on Buena Vista Avenue. For years, with the Jones Brothers shows, he followed the circus, traveling throughout the United States and Canada doing a contortion act, trapeze work and barrel jacking; but having recently leased some choice land on Buena Vista Street, he has resumed agricultural pursuits. On Washington's Birthday, 1919, he married Miss Viola Kaldenberg, a native of Des Moines, Iowa, who came to California to live with her sister, Mrs. Pittman, at Santa Ana. They have been blessed with a daughter, Ione Dora. Mr. Parker is a Republican and a member of the Fraternal Union, in which he is a favorite, esteemed for his wide experience and practical common sense.

WILBUR W. WASSER.—Few among the popular officials of fraternities so well deserve the good will showered upon them as Wilbur W. Wasser, the able secretary of the B. P. O. Elks Lodge No. 794, at Santa Ana. He comes from the Hawkeye State, where he was born in Cedar County, on January 29 of the famous Centennial Year. His father was J. S. Wasser, a cigar manufacturer, although he was originally a farmer. He came to Santa Ana in 1902, and opened a modest factory; and later he retired, and is still living at this place. Mrs. Wasser was Alice Kiser before her marriage, and she became the mother of three children, among whom Wilbur was the only boy. The good mother is now dead.

Wilbur enjoyed the advantages of both the grammar and the high schools at Tipton, Iowa, but later had to supplement his studies in the much harder school of practical world experience. He remained with his father on the farm until he married, and then he farmed for himself. On January 2, 1904, he came to Santa Ana, and soon after bought the livery business at the corner of Fourth and French streets, which he conducted for ten years. Then he purchased an orange ranch, which he managed for a year and still owns. Here he enlarged his experience greatly, particularly in the study of human nature—a very valuable asset in his present position of responsibility, requiring foresight, tact and common sense.

In 1915, Mr. Wasser became secretary for the B. P. O. Elks, having the honor to be the first secretary in the Elks' new home. He allows nothing to interfere with his giving the duties of that post his first consideration; but he is still interested in the culture of oranges, and is a lover of outdoor life and sport.

In Cedar County, Iowa, on August 25, 1897, Mr. Wasser was married to Miss Myrta L. Johnson, by whom he had had two attractive children—Alice E. and Donald W. Wasser. Besides belonging to the Elks, Mr. Wasser is a Knights Templar Mason, a member of the Eastern Star and also of the Knights of Pythias. In national politics a Democrat, Mr. Wasser knows no partisanship when it comes to local issues and always works for the best men and the best measures.

RAYMOND T. DIXON.—An enterprising business man is Raymond T. Dixon, the owner of Dixon's Pump Works at Santa Ana. He comes from the Hoosier State, at Vincennes, where he was born on March 10, 1885, and belongs to that army of Indianans who have contributed so much to the broad and permanent development of the Golden State.

He obtained only the usual grammar school education in his home district, and came to California in 1911, following a year after his parents, Charles E. and Mollie (Hobb) Dixon. Before coming West, he had worked at railroading for the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad out of Caldwell, Kans., for a couple of years and then engaged in the automobile and garage business in Caldwell for four years.

On arriving in Santa Ana, Cal., 1912, he entered the field of irrigation machinery, and in 1915 established himself in business in Santa Ana handling and installing irrigation machinery beginning with a modest capital. Two years later he built his present large factory, which has a floor space 150x150 feet in size, located at corner of Fifth and Garnsey streets. He employs twenty-four men in the making and repairing of irrigation machinery, makes a specialty of the Dixon centrifugal turbine pump—one of the best in the country—which he invented and patented, and does work for all parts of Southern California. In addition he also built a foundry to his plant, where he manufactures cast iron, brass and bronze castings, thus making everything for his pumps but the pipe and shafting, and throughout the factory has a large capacity which he is steadily increasing. He has also invented and patented a front wheel flange for the Samson and Fordson tractors which is shipped to the various agencies in the state.

His machine shop is equipped with the most modern and up-to-date machinery run by electric power and he is the largest manufacturer of his special line of irrigation machinery in Southern California.

On August 17, 1906, Mr. Dixon and Faith Seeber were married; and now they have an attractive family of four children—Louis, Raymond, Vincent and Dorothea. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon are Christian Scientists. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Dixon at all times works for the best men and the best measures when local issues are involved, and casts aside partisanship to secure the best ends.

Mr. Dixon was made a Mason in Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and was exalted in Santa Ana Chapel No. 73, R. A. M., and is also a member of Santa Ana Council No. 14, R. & S. M., as well as an active member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks. Enterprising and progressive he takes a keen interest in his membership with the Merchants and Manufacturers Association as well as the Chamber of Commerce. Though proprietor, of one of the really important and largest industrial establishments of the city, Mr. Dixon is never so busy that he cannot give some time, sooner or later, to hunting and fishing, and other out-of-door life.

WILLIAM H. ROHRS.—Possessed of the qualities that make for success in life, William H. Rohrs has taken a place among the prosperous horticulturists of Orange, a business he has been familiar with from the time he was a boy.

Mr. Rohrs is a native of Ohio, having been born at Kelly Isle, Buckeye County, that state, on August 23, 1879. His parents were Henry W. and Anna (Cordes) Rohrs who brought their family to California in 1881. His mother passed away, but his father is still living and is a prosperous farmer and very highly respected citizen of Orange. The eldest of a family of five children, Wm. H. Rohrs came to California with his parents when in his second year, so this is the scene of his first recollections. They located first at Wilmington, later coming to Santa Ana in 1882, and here William received his education in the public schools, which was supplemented by a course in the Orange County Business College under R. L. Bisby. Being the eldest son, Wm. Rohrs early took a hand in the farm work, thus getting a thorough, practical knowledge of its problems and details, so that when he became of age he was ready to start ranching on his own account. In 1900 he purchased a tract of twenty acres of raw land on South Glassell Street, near Orange, which he improved and planted to walnuts and Valencia oranges. Here he put in many years of hard, industrious work, giving his trees the best possible care, and he has had his reward in seeing his ranch develop from the bare land to a prosperous and productive grove, which shows the years of careful cultivation it has received.

On February 9, 1905, Mr. Rohrs was married in Santa Ana to Miss Anna Holzgrafe, a native daughter of the Golden West, born in Santa Ana, the daughter of Fred and Helen (Shield) Holzgrafe. Mr. Holzgrafe was a pioneer manufacturer of Santa Ana, being first located on Fifth and Main streets, and later on Third and Main, where the city hall now stands. After this he purchased the corner of Second and Sycamore, and all these years he did a thriving business in the manufacture of wagons and carriages until he retired in January, 1920. Mr. and Mrs. Rohrs are the parents of two children, Lester William and Evelyn Helene. The family are members of the Evangelical Church at Santa Ana. Enthusiastic in the possibilities of development of this favored section, Mr. Rohrs has identified himself with all its progressive movements and is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association, the Richland Walnut Growers Association at Orange, and of the Commercial Club of Orange. An interesting relic of the Civil War times which Mr. Rohrs treasures in his home is a copy of the issue of April 15, 1865, of the Washington Post, giving the full account of the assassination of President Lincoln and of the assassin, J. Wilkes Booth. He has had this carefully framed so as to preserve it, as its value as a historical memento will increase year by year.

GUSTAF LEANDER.—An expert mechanic who has also made a success of all that he has undertaken in other fields, working intelligently and industriously, and modestly enjoying the well-earned fruits of his labors, is Gustaf Leander, who was born in Sweden on August 12, 1871, and was educated in that country so famous for its schools and completed a course at the Agricultural College at Gotland. He came to America in 1891, landing at New York City, and proceeded directly to Los Angeles, Cal., and learned the machinist trade in the Axelson Machine Shop and then was employed in other shops in Southern California and Arizona. After that, for four years, he worked in the sugar factory at Los Alamitos, where he was employed as the factory mechanic. Tiring of the work, or seeing perhaps a still greater opportunity in the confectionery business, Mr. Leander in 1905 came to Fullerton and bought out Steve W. McColloch; and having taken possession, he put a deal of hard work into the enterprise, with the natural result that business rapidly increased and brought a substantial income from the investment. Before the days of the ice plant, he also distributed ice to the Fullerton community, purchasing the crystal blocks from the National Ice Company of Los Angeles and shipping it to Fullerton. He also distributed Los Angeles newspapers and periodicals in the Fullerton and oil well districts, and enlisted a wide patronage. After several years in the confectionery field, Mr. Leander sold out his business to F. E. Copp.

He then purchased fifteen and a half acres on Orangethorpe Avenue, buying the same from J. A. Clark, and devoted ten acres to Valencia oranges and five acres to walnuts; and he obtains water service for irrigation from the Anaheim Union Water Company. After trying his latest venture long enough to form a sensible and helpful opinion, he thinks there is nothing like ranching, and has decided to stick to his trim little farm.

On December 31, 1903, Mr. Leander was married at San Diego to Miss Meriam Pearson, a native of Sweden who came to Minnesota when she was eight years old. She was reared and educated near Duluth, and 1901 came west to California. Two children have blessed this fortunate union, Otto A. and Elna Leander, and they reflect all the good qualities of their worthy parents. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, while Mrs. Leander is a member of the Christian Church in Fullerton.

TOM P. PAPPAS.—If the details of the life of Tom P. Pappas, proprietor of the Chateau Thierry cafe and confectionery, at 116 North Spadra Street, Fullerton, were written, it would make as interesting reading as a tale of fiction. A hero of the famous battle of Chateau Thierry in the late World War, he named his place of business at Fullerton in honor of that memorable battlefield.

Mr. Pappas was born March 23, 1884, in the ancient city of Athens, Greece, and at the early age of eight manfully assumed life's responsibilities and began to earn his living by selling papers on the streets of his native city, a vocation that some of our most prominent men have followed in early life. In 1906, when twenty-two years old, he came to the United States and engaged in the business of news vender on the streets of Chicago, Ill. Later, in company with his brother William, he entered the confectionery business in Chicago. The young men built up a fine business and became the owners of three confectionery stores. Mr. Pappas disposed of his interest in 1913 and came to California, locating at Whittier, where he opened a confectionery store. He was afterwards interested in operating a chicken ranch at Montebello. In the fall of 1916 he came to Fullerton and bought out a cigar store and continued business till he went to war.

When the war broke out he sold his business to volunteer his services and enlisted in the One Hundred Forty-fourth Field Artillery (the Grizzly Regiment) and was sent to Camp Kearny. After a week there he was discharged because he was not an American citizen. With undaunted courage and commendable zeal he returned to Orange County, took out his first citizen's papers at Santa Ana, and rejoined his regiment at Camp Kearny. After two months at the camp, volunteers were called for to fill up the regiments overseas. He volunteered, was sent overseas to France, became a member of the Thirteenth Field Artillery, Fourth Division, and was in active service on four different battle fronts, serving as a gunner working a hundred fifty-five six-inch gun. He fought at St. Mihiel, Lorraine, Chateau Thierry and the Argonne. He was gassed at Chateau Thierry, and being rescued from the field he was in the field hospital three weeks and then rejoined his regiment, being in active service until the armistice, when he was again taken ill from the former effects of being gassed and was compelled to remain in the hospital for six months. He then returned to the United States and San Francisco, May 3, 1919, receiving his honorable discharge about a week later, when he immediately returned to Fullerton and purchased the present confectionery establishment from F. Ross, which he immediately remodeled, naming it the Chateau Thierry cafe and confectionery and by close application to business and affability it has become very popular, having indeed made it a most up-to-the-minute place, second to none in the county. He is interested in oil land with Thompson and Goodwin which is leased to the Union Oil Company, who have already obtained two flowing oil wells on their property. Besides he is a stockholder in seven different oil companies in the Richfield district some of them already producing oil.

Being much interested in civic improvement he is also a member of the Fullerton Board of Trade. Fraternally he is a member of the Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, and a charter member of Post No. 142 of the American Legion. While he gives undivided attention to his business interests, his duties as a citizen and a neighbor are never lost sight of, and his fine war record and indubitable patriotism to his adopted country deservedly entitles him to the consideration and popularity he enjoys among his fellow-citizens.

Tom P. Pappas

FRED STRAUSS.—The business enterprise long such a characteristic feature of life in Fullerton is well reflected in the well organized and well managed establishment of F. Strauss and Company, whose extensive trade is chiefly in men's furnishings and shoes. Mr. Strauss, now an American of the Americans, is a native of Bavaria, one of the most progressive of all the divisions of Germany, so that he represents that fortunate combination of German organization and Yankee aggressiveness. He was born on September 28, 1889, and first came to the United States when he was sixteen years of age—just the receptive period when he would most likely respond to helpful impressions.

His father was Leopold Strauss, a successful merchant now deceased, and he married Miss Ricka Silverman, who survives him. They had four children, and Fred was the youngest of them all. He attended the schools of Bavaria, and about 1905 sailed for America.

For three years he lived in the bustling metropolis of New York, and then, having acquired the spirit of American institutions, he came west to California and located at Fullerton. This was in 1908, and the town was small and unpretentious as compared with today. There was one firm, however, among others worthy of such a growing place, and that was Stern and Goodman. He remained with them until 1917, when duty called him to the national colors.

In that year he enlisted in the U. S. Army, and served overseas for six months in France. On February 28, 1919, at the end of sixteen months, he was honorably discharged and returned to San Francisco. Arriving once more in Fullerton, he organized this company, and since has been doing very well. He is a Republican in national politics, but never allows political considerations to interfere with civic duty, local loyalty, business or pleasure, especially hunting and fishing, of which he is particularly fond. As might be expected, Mr. Strauss is a live wire in the Fullerton Board of Trade. Very naturally he is a member of Fullerton Post American Legion and in fraternal life, Mr. Strauss divides his time with the Anaheim Lodge of Elks and the Fullerton Club.

HARRY E. JESSUP.—Among the most enterprising, scientifically-trained ranchers at present devoting their best energies to the very important industry, the growing of beans, none has accomplished more for California husbandry, while attaining most profitable success for himself, than Harry E. Jessup, the oldest son of Thomas Jessup, the well-to-do farmer who is ranching both at Garden Grove and on the San Joaquin ranch. His acreage presents what is well termed one of the trim "show places" of the county, and is a delight to the eye of those daily watching the development there of the bountiful crops, and also to those who often come from afar to learn from Mr. Jessup the last word in bean culture.

He was born in Illinois on October 20, 1888, and came to California as a babe, and grew up upon his father's ranches, and attended the public schools at Garden Grove; and while he learned the ins and outs of farming in California under the best of masters, he also acquired the California spirit which has been back of all Orange County push to the fore.

In 1909 he was married to Miss Lillian Beswick, a popular lady of Garden Grove, and just the companion desirable for his future field of work and residence. Two children have blessed their union; and they bear the attractive names, as they themselves are voted attractive by their many friends, of Catherine and Dorothy.

Mr. Jessup at present has 150 acres in lima beans, while fifty acres are planted to blackeyes. He also has thirty acres in barley. He is a member of the California Lima Bean Growers Association, profits by its service, and takes that intelligent interest in its problems and its work that enables him, from time to time, to contribute toward its prosperity. With all its present make-up, would that Orange County had thousands of ranchers more with the foresight, the reflection, the ambition and the will to do of Harry E. Jessup.

JAMES G. ROBERTSON.—An expert electrician with an extensive knowledge, both scientific and technical, of his interesting subject, and is widely regarded as one of the best in his field in all the county, is James G. Robertson, who was born near Marshfield, Mo., on January 21, 1873, the son of Daniel W. Robertson, a lumber merchant in Marshfield, and one of the real pioneers of that country. He had married Miss Mattie A. Shackelford, who proved both a very devoted wife and mother. She bestowed loving care upon the subject of our sketch, while he attended the district school of their neighborhood.

When he was of age, he went into the telephone business, erecting a private telephone system, having four central offices and about 1,000 telephones. He also organized and installed the electric lighting plant for Marshfield, equipped with a fifty kilowatt generator. He ran both the telephone and the electric lighting plant for six years, when he sold out to a company, and came west to California. He arrived in 1911, and came, luckily, direct to Santa Ana. Since coming here he has purchased a five-acre grove at 2680 North Main Street, which he devotes to oranges and walnuts.

In 1911, Mr. Robertson started an electric contract business in Santa Ana, and was soon active in wiring houses, installing motors and making electrical repair work. He also handled a large stock of general electrical supplies. Now his store is located at 303 North Main Street, and is one of the popular headquarters in the city, patrons knowing that they will find there just what they need, and often what is not obtainable even in larger cities.

On October 21, 1896, Mr. Robertson was married in Marshfield, Mo., to Miss Margaret Nelson, a native of Bedford County, Pa., and the daughter of J. W. and Hester Nelson. Her father was a farmer, and he moved with his family to Missouri in 1885. Two sons have blessed the union. Orlyn is at Pomona College, and Fred is in the Santa Ana high school. The family attend the First Methodist Church at Santa Ana.

THEODORE BROTHERS.—The life story of the Theodore brothers shows what can be accomplished by pluck and perseverance. Coming to America poor boys, they have, in a new country, by their own unaided efforts, built up a prosperous business and, in keeping up with the times in every respect, have given the community the benefit of their efficient business methods.

The Theodore Brothers, Gus M., Nicholas and George, were born in Tripoli, Greece, where they grew up and received a good education in the public schools. Gus M., when a boy of sixteen, was the first to migrate to the United States and begin making his way in the New World. His first employment was with the Santa Fe Railway, in Chicago, and in 1902 he located in Los Angeles, Cal., and there started in to learn the laundry business.

After working in different laundry plants in that city, in 1910 Mr. Theodore came to Anaheim and went to work for Mr. J. E. Fisher, who owned the Anaheim Laundry. After one year the new employee bought out the laundry, and in partnership with his two brothers, Nicholas and George, has since carried on the business, during which time they have built up the concern to a high degree of efficient management, conducting a modern laundry in every respect, located at 412 South Lemon Street. All the old machinery has been taken out and new and modern installed, the firm being always in the market for any appliances which will increase the high standard of the business. They have recently installed a $4,000 water softener, and have their own well and pumping plant on the property; five wagons are used for the convenience of their patrons, and their trade is drawn from a large territory surrounding Anaheim; when they acquired the business, in 1911, but fifteen hands were employed, while fifty-five are now kept busy, an example of the growth of the business. The two younger brothers came to the States six years later than Gus M., and have since been engaged in the laundry business.

While devoting their time to business, Theodore Bros. have also found time to enter into projects formed for the further advancement of Anaheim and Orange County, and are active members of the Chamber of Commerce and of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Anaheim, as well as the Mother Colony Club. As evidenced by their business methods, they are "live wires" and enthusiastic over the splendid future they see in store for this section of California. As one would naturally suppose, they are members of the Laundry Owners Association of Southern California, as well as the California Laundry Owners Association and the National Laundry Owners Association.

JOHN EELLS.—A representative citrus grower who has accomplished much since he came here in 1904, is John Eells, who is the owner of a fine ranch on the Loara Road, near Anaheim. Born near Waupun, in Fond du Lac County, Wis., October 13, 1873, he is the son of Horace and Elizabeth (Cooper) Eells, who were early pioneers of that part of Wisconsin. The father cleared up seventy acres of timber land in Fond du Lac County and farmed it for a number of years.

Coming to California in 1904 with his parents, John Eells located near Anaheim, purchasing a ranch of twenty-seven and a half acres from Joseph Dauser, which was devoted to walnuts and Navel oranges. Later he disposed of this property, at different times, and then with his brother, Charles Eells, bought a tract of forty acres on North Loara Road, this being a part of the old Browning estate. This they leveled and set out to Valencia oranges, later he and his brother dividing the property. Since then Mr. Eells has disposed of five acres of his share, leaving a fine grove of fifteen acres, eleven acres being in Valencia oranges, three acres in Navels and the remainder in deciduous fruits. The ranch is producing an excellent yield, which Mr. Eells markets through the Anaheim Fruit Growers Association. In 1906 he built a comfortable residence on his ranch and there he has since made his home. Six years later he sunk a water well on his property which is the finest well in the vicinity. It pumps 100 inches of water and he supplies some of the ranchers of his neighborhood with irrigation water from it. In 1919 Mr. Eells purchased an additional five acres of vacant land west of Anaheim and this he has also set to Valencia oranges. He is giving all his holdings the best of attention and care and is being rewarded in the fine grade of fruit that is being produced.

Mr. Eells first marriage occurred at Waupun, Wis., when he was united with Miss Tillie Erickson, a native of Sweden, who came to America when a young woman. She passed away in February, 1916, leaving two children, Doris and Marion. On January 4, 1917, Mr. Eells was married to Miss Eleanor Herring, who was born near Salem, Ore., the ceremony being solemnized at Anaheim. While the care of his property occupies the greater part of his time Mr. Eells is always found ready to take his part in every movement that will promote the public good, and he has evinced his interest in educational matters by serving as a member of the board of school board trustees of the Loara district. In political matters he is unbiased by party slogans, believing the fitness of the man for the office rather than party affiliation is the prime requisite.

HENRY D. WITT.—A rancher who cultivates in the most scientific fashion with a modern tractor, and who boasts, therefore, of one of the choicest grove properties in this section, is Henry D. Witt, the son of the well-known Michael Witt and his good wife Sarah (Trumpey) Witt. He was born in Monroe, Wis., on September 11, of the great Centennial Year, and he has kept pace with the growth of the second century of the nation ever since.

When Henry was six years old, in 1882, his parents came west to California and brought him along, thus almost making him a native son of the Golden State; and it happened, therefore, that he was brought up to attend the public schools of Santa Ana, fortunate in having one of the best systems of education for a small town; and later, when ready for it, he pursued a profitable course at the progressive business college in the same city.

For some years, he lived at the Seventeenth Street home, where the family lived for eighteen years; and when that was sold in 1902, the father built his home on the South side of La Veta Street between Flower and Main. The same year, Henry D. took charge of the rural mail route No. 2, running to the north and the west of Orange, and in a short time was a welcome visitor to the homes in that area.

In 1903, he purchased five acres of orange trees from his father, who had set out a promising grove and in 1906 built a neat home on the same ranch land, providing for the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company; and later he bought five more acres, in walnuts, adjoining. He joined the Santiago Orange Growers Association and also the Richland Walnut Growers Association at Orange.

On September 27, 1906, Mr. Witt was married to Miss Emma Schroeder, a native of Santa Ana and the daughter of Fred and Verena Schroeder. Her parents came from Kelleys Island, Ohio, to California in 1880, and settled in Santa Ana; and in this town she also received her education at the public schools. Two children have blessed their union—Velma M. and Robert F.

Mr. Witt is a member of the Evangelical Association of Santa Ana, and belongs to the ranks of the Republicans. When it comes to helping along worthy local projects, however, neither Mr. nor Mrs. Witt are limited by partisanship, and they contribute heartily toward the best men and the best measures.

ARTHUR L. TRICKEY.—An energetic rancher, whose ambition, industry, keen powers of observation and ability to look ahead have made him a successful operator of a part of the great Irvine ranch, is Arthur L. Trickey, who resides on the Laguna Road about two and a half miles from Irvine. He was born near Wichita, Sedgwick County, Kans., on August 21, 1889, and grew up in that state until his fifteenth year, profiting by many of the advantages offered by the more settled older commonwealth. His father, R. L. Trickey, who died in California in 1919, was a grain buyer at Derby, Kans., and owned a farm of 240 acres, which his sons ran while the father gave his attention to grain.

In 1904 our subject came to California and settled at Tustin; but it was not until 1911 that he came to the Irvine ranch, where he is now harvesting his ninth crop. He takes pride both in the product of his labor and the soil he cultivates, and also in the trim appearance of his farm; and thus, while developing and advancing, he gets all the fun that he can out of what some people regard as only exhausting toil.

This disposition to look on the optimistic side of life is not surprising to those acquainted with the Trickey stock. His father was a native of the good old state of Maine, and in Kansas married Miss Addie Brownlee, who was born in Illinois, and who is still living at Tustin, the center of a group of devoted friends, at the age of sixty years. Nine children were granted these worthy pioneers: Albert is a farmer in Peters Canyon on the Irvine ranch; Roy farms in Sedgwick County, Kans.; Willie is also a farmer in Kansas; John is the manager of Zaiser's lease near Tustin; Arthur L. is the subject of this sketch; Ellis cultivates a part of the Whiting ranch; Addie is chief operator at the Tustin telephone exchange; and Myron works for his brother Arthur. The eighth-born, Walter, died in infancy.

In 1910, at Garden Grove, Mr. Trickey was married to Miss Bertha Jessup, the accomplished daughter of Thomas Jessup, the rancher and orange grower living near Garden Grove; and two children—Lloyd and Thelma—have blessed their fortunate union. Mr. Trickey belongs to the Modern Woodmen at Santa Ana, and none is more popular among its many members.

THOMAS B. TALBERT.—An efficient and faithful public official, invaluable to Orange County because of his integrity, foresight and high sense of civic duty, whose identification with this part of the great commonwealth of California is memorialized in the postoffice bearing his family name, is Thomas B. Talbert, a native of Illinois, who was born at Monticello, in Piatt County, on March 5, 1878. His father was James T. Talbert, a native of Greenville, Muhlenburg County, Ky., who emigrated to Macoupin County, Ill., in 1858. He enlisted as a volunteer in the Civil War on August 7, 1862, and was honorably discharged in June, 1865. He married Miss Rachel Weddle, a native of Piatt County, Ill., and a member of the Spencer Weddle family of that section, all of whom were quite prosperous.

Next to the youngest of a family of nine children, six of whom are living, Thomas B. Talbert came out to California with his parents in February, 1891. He attended the grammar schools at Long Beach and also spent four years at the high school at that place. Following this he engaged in dairying and farming at Long Beach for three years, and then, in about 1898, he moved to the lower Santa Ana Valley, and there bought land in what was known as Gospel Swamp. After being there about one year, his father, brothers and he started the townsite and postoffice now known as Talbert, and Thomas B. Talbert was appointed the first postmaster. He bought a little general merchandise store that had been started by John Corbett, and built up a good business in this line, continuing there for about four years, when he sold out. Then he spent a year on a ranch at Talbert, and in 1904 moved to Pacific City, now Huntington Beach, which had just been started, and where he began selling real estate.

Mr. Talbert was among the very first to engage in growing sugar beets in Orange County and was also a pioneer in the celery industry, growing celery for several years, and was an active member of the Celery Growers Association of Orange County. He is today the oldest realtor in Huntington Beach and is considered one of the best judges of real estate values here. He is interested in oil development and was one of the promoters of the H. K. and T. Syndicate that are drilling for oil three miles south of Irvine on the Irvine ranch. He was a promoter and is a director in the West Whittier Oil Company, drilling at Huntington Beach with most excellent prospects. He is also extensively interested in oil lands and leases here. For the past seven years he has had the agency of Ford cars and is now one of the proprietors of the City Garage, located on Fifth Street, Huntington Beach. The business is conducted under the firm name of Talbert and Company, his partners being Messrs McDonald and Bergey, and they have the agency for both the Ford and Dodge cars.

In August, 1909, a vacancy occurred on the board of supervisors of Orange County caused by the resignation of George W. Moore; and to that office Mr. Talbert was appointed by Governor Gillett to fill the unexpired term. Since that time—such is the endorsement of his public services given by the people themselves—Mr. Talbert has been elected to the same office three times, once in the fall of 1910, again in 1914, and finally in 1918; the last two times he was elected at the primaries. He was also elected by his fellow supervisors to the chairmanship of the board in January, 1911, and he has been elected to the same enviable position every two years since. As an appreciation of his worth in other departments of local activity, Mr. Talbert has been a director in the First National Bank of Huntington Beach since the bank's early history.

Mrs. Talbert was in maidenhood Miss Margaret Elizabeth Crum, a daughter of Dwight M. Crum, and a member of a highly respected family originally from Fairbury, Ill. She is a graduate of the University of California and was a teacher of languages at the Huntington Beach Union high school up to the time of her marriage, the ceremony occurring at Compton, July 17, 1912. They have been blessed by the birth of a son, Thomas Van. By his former marriage Mr. Talbert has one child, Gordon B. Talbert.

E. B. Talbot

Mr. Talbert drove the team that cut the first drainage ditch in the Talbert Drainage district. This was the beginning of the improvement that drained the swamp lands of this district, which gave Orange County her rich peat lands and made possible the development of the beet and celery industry. As supervisor his great ambition has been to see this county become one of the greatest sections in the United States, and during his years as a realtor he has been instrumental in locating a sugar factory at Huntington Beach, and an oil-cloth factory, as well. He was a strong advocate and factor in obtaining the Coast Highway and in the voting of bonds for the beginning of the county's harbor at Newport Bay, which will soon have admirable shipping facilities. Indeed, many of the improvements of the county have been carried out under Mr. Talbert's supervision; these include the establishment of the County Farm Hospital and the Detention Home, and the building of bridges and many miles of good roads. It is easily apparent, therefore, how fortunate Orange County has been in the prolonged career and services of such a faithful and capable public servant.

ROY F. SPANGLER.—It is not often that one finds such a combination of competency as in the case of Roy F. Spangler, a thoroughly trained electrician and engineer, an experienced and aggressively progressive farmer, and a far-seeing, wide-awake manager, at present in charge of the Wassum lima bean ranch, a part of the famous Irvine ranch, itself going back to the historic San Joaquin. He was born and reared in Santa Ana, and is the son of the late David Franklin Spangler, a native of Pennsylvania and a pioneer blacksmith whose highly-interesting old shop will be recalled by many as one of the landmarks of Santa Ana of thirty years ago. The shop still stands, in fact, on Sycamore Street, being run by our subject's brother, George, and is probably the oldest, as it is today the leading smithy in Santa Ana.

Roy was born on May 5, 1887, and his mother was Miss Dora Beard before her marriage on Oregon, where she was born. She is living, an honored resident, at 638 Birch Street, Santa Ana. There are four children: George, the blacksmith; Charles, who resides at Pasadena; Roy F., our subject, and Edith, now the wife of Flake Smith, the popular clerk at the Santa Ana postoffice.

When a lad, Roy worked with his father in the blacksmith shop, and he was in the junior year of his course at the Santa Ana high school when his father passed away. It seemed advisable then that he should leave school; so he started to master electrical work. He wired houses, and put in five years for W. E. Houston on power, motor and other work. He was then engaged by the Edison Company for nine years, making fourteen in all as the period of his life devoted to electrical work. During this time, Mr. Spangler was married to Miss Jeanette Milstead, a native of Arkansas, reared in Oklahoma. When twenty-two years old, she came to California. Two children have blessed this union—Harold and Howard.

In February, 1920, Mr. Spangler came to the Wassum ranch as manager. He has charge of four hundred acres devoted to the growing of lima beans, and this land is under lease by Howard A. Wassum, a member of the Board of Supervisors of Orange County, and one of its largest farmers and bean growers. No better choice could be made, nor could Mr. Spangler wish for a more interesting task than to develop this part of the Irvine acreage, for he knows the value of land and how to appreciate forethought and fidelity, in its care.

C. BRUCE STOCKTON.—A tenant of the celebrated Irvine ranch who, having made a pronounced success in the important technical field of well drilling, is more than "making good" as a lima bean grower, is C. Bruce Stockton, a member of one of the historic families of California, and the husband of a lady highly esteemed for her progressive work, before her marriage, as an educator. He was born at Saticoy, in Ventura County, on December 5, 1882, and grew up there where his father, George W. Stockton, was both a rancher and a landowner. His mother, popular as May Beekman in her maidenhood, was a native of Sierra County, Cal., and the daughter of a California pioneer. She is still living in Los Angeles, at the ripe age of sixty years. George W. Stockton was a native of Illinois, and his father was I. D. Stockton, a physician and surgeon who saw strenuous service in the Black Hawk War. Both father and grandfather crossed the plains in 1849 and as something more than pastime, fought the "pesky Redskins." They settled in Sonoma County, and later moved to Kern County, and then built up the Stockton stock ranch fifteen miles south of Bakersfield, now called the Lakeside ranch of the Kern County Land Company's holdings. George W. Stockton moved over to Ventura County, and there became a well-to-do rancher. He died in Los Angeles at the age of fifty-nine years.

Five children were born to this worthy couple and grew to maturity. G. G. Stockton is an oil man well known in South America, and stationed near Caracas, in Venezuela; C. Bruce Stockton is the subject of our sketch; Irene has become the wife of Walter Cook, the rancher on the Irvine; E. E. Stockton, the owner of the Lake ranch in Ventura County, resides in Los Angeles and is in the hardware trade; and Myrle is the wife of H. L. Carpenter of Los Angeles. Through the fact that the father of I. D. Stockton was closely related to Commodore Robert Field Stockton, and hence to the Commodore's grandfather, Senator Richard Stockton, signer of the Declaration of Independence, C. Bruce Stockton is related to a circle of Americans known for having, each one of them, accomplished something worth while for the world, and something very definite, and needed, for the advancement of their country. Bruce's early education was in the public schools in Ventura and later attended the preparatory schools at Bakersfield, in the more quiet days before anyone suspected that the broad meadows were soaking with oil, and when the discovery and the ensuing excitement transformed that locality, he went to work in the Kern River oil fields as a roustabout, became a tool dresser and later a driller, and worked to develop, in particular, the much-needed petroleum. Then he entered the oil fields of the Santa Fe at Fellows and of the Southern Pacific at Maricopa; and after acquiring seven years of valuable experience, he journeyed to Mexico. He drilled at Tampico and Tuxpan, and when the United States Government landed troops at Vera Cruz, came out of the country as a refugee on one of the U. S. war ships to Galveston. Returning to Taft, he later went south to the Island of Trinidad, off the coast of Venezuela, where he drilled for a year and a half. Once more he came to California, and for a year farmed on the Irvine ranch.

At Los Angeles, on June 26, 1916, he was married to Miss Ethel Rouse, a native of Colton, Cal., and the daughter of John M. and Olive (Leonard) Rouse. When she was eight years of age, she was brought by her parents to Los Angeles, and in 1910, she graduated from the Polytechnic high school, and still later from the Los Angeles Normal. Then she taught school, for a year in Riverside County, for three years in the city of Los Angeles, and for a year in Kern County. One child has blessed their fortunate union—a daughter, Lois May. The family attend by preference the Presbyterian Church, while holding broad, sympathetic views toward all who are seeking to make life more worth the living. Mr. Stockton belongs to the Santa Ana Elks, and in politics seeks to act according to his best judgment, independent of partisan bias or dictation.

JUAN PABLO PERALTA.—A highly respected citizen is the old settler, Juan Pablo Peralta, living on the Santa Ana Canyon Road, four and a half miles northeast of Olive, where he owns a small ranch. Although living frugally—a modest abstinence apparently favorable to his health, judging from his massive build—he is a proud old Californian, and with good reason, for he is a worthy descendant of early Spanish military officers from Catalonia, Spain, who came out to take charge of the port of San Francisco in the Yerba Buena days. He and his family, therefore, are well-known and respected.

Juan Pablo Peralta is the son of Juan Pablo Peralta, who was born near what is now Buena Park. He married in Los Angeles, Neavis Lopez, a native of that city, and died on May 21, 1852. Nine days later, May 30, the subject of our sketch was born, the last of eleven children—nine girls and two boys—and he grew up to raise stock on land with an association especially close toward his family. His grandfather, Juan Pablo Peralta, born in San Francisco, had been married in San Diego, and came up to the Santa Ana River and became the owner of Rancho Santiago de Santa Ana, which was the name of the Peralta Grant. His father, also Don Juan Pablo Peralta was born in San Francisco, and he knew General Vallejo very well, and had interests at Oakland and at San Leandro, where to this day the name Peralta denotes old landmarks.

Juan P. Peralta now owns a ranch of eight acres, which he bought fourteen years ago. In November, 1918, he built a bungalow, which affords him and his family a very good and up-to-date home. In 1887 he was married to Miss Betsida Yorba, born at Prado, Riverside County, the daughter of Rimondo and Concepcion (Serrano) Yorba, who was also a granddaughter of Bernardo Yorba, and they had six children—Juan Pablo, Jr., Neavis, Ramon, Florisa, Ellena and Constance. For several years he had a general store at Peralta; now he grows walnuts and apricots. He also leases over 500 acres of land and engages in raising grain and hay, in which he is very successful.

A Democrat in matters of national political moment, Mr. Peralta is nonpartisan in his enthusiastic support of whatever makes for a greater development of his home district. He has served as a trustee of the Peralta school district, has been road overseer for some time, and has done jury duty at various times. Orange County is happy to note the prosperity of those who so well represent the historic past of the state.

J. P. Peralta

WILLIAM LEMKE.—One of the very enterprising men among the prominent and successful citizens of Orange County who has contributed his share in the up-building and development of the citrus and walnut industries of the county is William Lemke, the owner of a twenty-acre ranch, devoted to oranges, walnuts and deciduous fruits, located three miles north of Olive, on the Santa Ana Canyon Boulevard.

Mr. Lemke was born at Liptno, in Russia Poland, October 16, 1870, the son of Charles and Wilhelmina (Zutke) Lemke, who were also natives of that country. The father came to the United States in 1886, to prepare a home for his family and was joined a year later by his wife. In the fall of 1889, William, accompanied by his brother August, crossed the ocean to make his home in the New World and to seek his fortune in the Golden State. He came with his brother to Placentia, Orange County, where he secured employment on a ranch. In 1892 he took up a homestead in Lassen County, on which he proved up and afterwards sold. He returned to Orange County where he purchased his present twenty-acre ranch, which at that time was uncultivated land used as a pasture. Mr. Lemke has always been a hard worker and through his industrious efforts and untiring energy has developed his desert land into a prosperous, up-to-date ranch which bespeaks success. Five acres are planted to Valencia oranges, six acres to deciduous fruits, eight acres are devoted to walnuts and one acre to the home site and yard. Mr. Lemke in 1920 built and completed a beautiful ten-room residence at a cost of about $10,000.

In 1906 Mr. Lemke was united in marriage with Miss Emma Schmidt, also a native of Russia Poland, who came to Anaheim in 1903. Her father, Adolph Schmidt, died in Russia and her mother, Christena (Biske) Schmidt, came to California in 1914, where she makes her home with her daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Lemke are the parents of three children: Lydia, Elsie and Adolph William F. In religious matters Mr. Lemke is a member of the German Lutheran Church at Olive, while his wife belongs to the German Baptist Church at Anaheim.

William Lemke is a patriotic American citizen, proud to be known as a self-made man who has gained financial success by his own unaided efforts and by his industry and the practice of economy.

GEORGE M. BARTLEY.—A well-informed, level-headed young man, who has a splendid ranch of Valencia orange trees in a high state of cultivation near one of the tasteful bungalow homes of the locality, and who, through his business specialty, is contributing toward the preservation of other ranch properties and, therefore, doing a commendable public service, is George M. Bartley, the deputy constable and sprayer, and popular son of a highly-esteemed pioneer. He was born at Lompoc, in Santa Barbara County, on October 21, 1880, the son of David J. Bartley, a native of New York State, who came to Salinas, Cal., in 1875, an agriculturist who had farmed in Nebraska. In that state, too, he had married Miss Mary Ann Hoyt, a lady always esteemed by all who knew her for her high ideals and capability as a wife, mother, friend and neighbor. Mr. Bartley died in El Modena in 1909, seventy-two years old; and Mrs. Bartley passed to her eternal reward after a distressing railway accident. In 1888 with Grandfather William Bartley and an aunt, Miss Rose Benton, Mrs. Bartley was driving along Fruit Street, Santa Ana, when their vehicle was struck by a Santa Fe locomotive, and the occupants were instantly killed. Seldom has there been wider regret at the demise of anyone than in the case of this estimable lady, whose broad sympathies enabled her to be of service to many, and whose integrity, like that of her devoted husband, was marked. They had three children: Will H., the rancher at Buena Park; Margaret E., now Mrs. Thomas, residing at Fresno; and George Milton, the subject of this sketch.

He was only one year old when he was brought to El Modena by his parents, and he is therefore the citizen who has lived there longest continuously. He was brought up at El Modena on his father's ranch, and attended the local grammar school while he made himself useful on a forty-acre ranch. His father was a vineyardist, and in common with others suffered heavy losses when the mysterious blight killed the grapevines said to have been of the finest quality. George was always handy around horses, and being a good teamster, drove a tank wagon for the Union Oil Company in Los Angeles for five years.

Then he went to Corcoran, in Kern County, and there bought a farm and engaged in ranching from 1907 until 1909. In that year, he was married at Bakersfield to Miss Frankie S. Rudolph of Lompoc, the same town, by-the-way, in which Mr. Bartley was born; and after that he and his bride came back to El Modena, reaching home just before his father died.

Since 1909, Mr. Bartley has put in his time at El Modena, in 1916 becoming a licensed sprayer and branching off into the business of spraying trees. He bought a bean spraying outfit with a two-hundred gallon tank, and is doing his full share of the work in both the Villa Park and the El Modena districts. He belongs to the Orange Growers Association at McPherson, and is active in promoting in every way the interests of all the community, including the further appreciation of land. He is also a member of the El Modena Farm Center. Mr. Bartley's father paid sixty-five dollars an acre for his land, and our subject has refused $5,000 an acre.

A Republican in matters of national politics, Mr. Bartley served for three years as deputy sheriff under Sheriff C. E. Ruddock, and for four years as deputy constable under Logan Jackson; and he is at present deputy constable under William A. Holt, of Orange. He is also a member of the election board.

Mr. and Mrs. Bartley have had two children: Dorothy E. is in the grammar school at El Modena; but Glennagene died when fourteen months old. The family live in a comfortable bungalow recently built by Mr. Bartley himself at El Modena, opposite the El Modena grammar school. Mr. Bartley belongs to the Woodmen of the World.

JOSHUA BARKER.—An intelligent, industrious and ambitious worker, who is valued by all who know him as an honest, reliable citizen and a good fellow, is Joshua Barker, the rancher near Irvine Station, whose able and faithful wife is also just the helpmate needed. He works for Henry J. Harkleroad as foreman on his fine ranch of 160 acres to the southeast of Irvine, and no more competent overseer probably could be found.

A native son happy in his association with the Golden State, Mr. Barker was born at Tulare on April 20, 1862, the son of William Barker who was an early settler in that county. He was a native of Missouri, and was married to Miss Margaret Burris, who hailed from that same state, and there he became a successful farmer and stock-raiser. William Barker has passed away; but his esteemed widow is still living at Tustin. They had ten children, eight of whom are still living; and among them Joshua is the oldest.

His schooling was very limited, for from boyhood he had to do plenty of hard work at farming. He began hiring out for low wages when a lad, and continued to work by the month until he was thirty-five, when he succeeded in renting land in Ventura County. He planted blackeye beans, and enjoyed, as never before, the harvest, for what he reaped was entirely his own. Later, he came down to the San Joaquin ranch in Orange County; and since then he has moved back and forth between here and Ventura County, sought by many both for his services and his experience and advice, and contributing something definite, in his own hard work for the higher cultivation of land, toward the development of California agriculture.

At Santa Ana, Mr. Barker was married to Miss Martha Horton, a native of Ventura and they have had six children: Walter, who married Miss Maude Boyd of Santa Ana, is foreman on a ranch at San Luis Rey; Roy, the husband of Miss Lottie Steward of Ventura, is farming near Orange County Park, the proud father of two children, Hazel and Donald; Alice married Charles Van Horn, a truck driver on road work for Orange County, she has one boy, Glenn, and resides at Santa Ana; Freddie is employed at ranching at Talbert, and is the husband of Miss Maude Albertson of that town, by whom he has had two children, Lloyd and Llodine; Elsie is the wife of Victor Vann, a ranch employe at El Centro; and Jim is in the U. S. Navy. It will thus be seen that not only have Mr. and Mrs. Barker done well themselves, but they have reared a family, each member of which has gone forth into the world and become a credit to the good Barker name.

JOHN H. STINSON.—The well-known rancher, citrus grower and dairy farmer, John H. Stinson of Taft Avenue, Orange, Cal., has attained a gratifying degree of success in the vocation he has chosen. He is a native of Hall County, Nebr., where he was born at Doniphan, January 3, 1880, and is the son of Edward and Dinah (Harrod) Stinson. His father was born thirty miles from Dublin, Ireland, came to the Province of Quebec, Canada, with his parents when a babe, and was reared there. His mother is a native of London, England, and accompanied her parents to America from her native city, settling at Rockford, Ill., where later her marriage occurred. After their marriage the parents lived in various places and finally settled in Hall County, Nebr., going thither from Illinois. The father traded his team of horses for a relinquishment and proved up on a 160-acre homestead, where his son John H. was born and reared until he attained the age of eleven. He worked on his father's farm, held the breaking plow and turned virgin soil of Nebraska when only nine years old. The family migrated to Orange County, Cal., and settled at Villa Park, then called Wanda Station, on the Southern Pacific, where the father had already traded Nebraska land for a forty-acre ranch on Vista Street, Orange; here he followed farming until his death, April 11, 1911, being survived by his widow.

Clyde R. Alling.

John H. is the eleventh child in a family of fourteen children, six of whom are living. He received his education in the grammar school at Orange, and worked on his father's forty-acre ranch. At the age of nineteen he assumed the responsibilities of life and purchased fifteen acres on Vista Street, Orange, for $1,200. He was married in Orange, July 26, 1905, to Miss Ethel Durler, daughter of Reverend Levi and Alice (Lyon) Durler, who now live at Orange. Mrs. Stinson was born at Stryker, Ohio, and was reared in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, coming to California with her parents in 1904. She is the oldest of four living children. Mr. and Mrs. Stinson are the parents of a daughter, Jennie Fay by name, and have an adopted son whose name is Ernest. Mr. Stinson owns a ranch of seventeen acres on Taft Avenue, which he planted to Valencia oranges, now in bearing, and is also a joint owner with his brother, E. G. Stinson, in a seventy-eight-acre dairy ranch on the Santa Ana River on Taft Avenue. This was a barren waste of brush and trees, which they cleared, leveled the land and planted to alfalfa. Although they have service for irrigation from the S. A. V. I. Company, they have installed an electric pumping plant of 125 inches. They have a well selected dairy herd of 129 cows. Their buildings are modern and sanitary and equipped with milking machines.

Mr. Stinson is a type of citizen of whom Orange County may well be proud and has been most helpful to the permanent welfare of that section. He is active, intelligent and interesting, with a strong appreciation of humor, which is perhaps a heritage from his Hibernian ancestry. Mrs. Stinson is a woman of pleasing personality, cultured and refined, with most excellent qualities of heart and mind. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Orange and is active in church work, the Ladies' Aid Society and the Home Mission Society, and both are popular among their large circle of acquaintances.

CLYDE R. ALLING.—The interesting career of a hustling young business man of Santa Ana affords another illustration of not only the unrivalled opportunities presented for advancement and success in California, and especially in Orange County, but the elastic capability of the typical American in rising to the occasion when Opportunity opens the door. This wide-awake young man is Clyde R. Alling, proprietor of the "Cherry Blossom" bakery, confectionery store and cafe in Santa Ana, which is pleasantly and conveniently situated at 120 East Fourth Street.

He was born in the city of Chicago on August 28, 1892, and in that city passed his early life. He attended the grammar schools, and commenced his mercantile operations against heavy odds by working as a newsboy and selling the Chicago Tribune and Inter-Ocean on the crowded streets. This strenuous exertion was rendered necessary because of political intrigues which had half-ruined his father, a contractor. The lad developed something of the system that he displays today, knowing just where and when to sell, and catching the big idea of giving people what they want, and when. After a while, however, he saw that selling newspapers could not be the avocation he must eventually be looking for, and he changed jobs, to run a soda fountain at Peoria, Ill.

In 1912, heeding Horace Greeley's advice, "Go West, and grow up with the country," Mr. Alling came to Santa Ana, Cal., and for a year he worked at the soda fountain in the Dragon store. Two years later, in January, he made sacrifices to buy L. J. Christopher's confectionery store in Anaheim, now the "Cherry Blossom" and the success of that popular resort today shows whether or not his judgment was good.

Sighing for more worlds to conquer—as a local scribe once said of him in an appreciative write-up—Mr. Alling, on November 25, 1915, returned to Santa Ana and leased the building formerly occupied by the California National Bank, preparatory to opening another Cherry Blossom. Then came the flood, and for four months Mr. Alling paid rent on a building he could not occupy. Worse than that, no one seemed to care a fig, whether he came or not; but in March, 1916, he threw open for business what he considered to be the finest-equipped confectionery in Santa Ana. He spent $30,000 in fitting up and finishing this most attractive place in Orange County, occupying as it does the entire building, with the basement; and when the people began to find their way to the "Cherry Blossom," they also began to comprehend what had been added to the worth-while attractions of Santa Ana.

The basement is used for chocolate dipping and a stock room, and on the first floor there is the soda fountain, the restaurant and the ice cream parlor. The second floor is devoted to the manufacture of candies and other confections, for Mr. Alling manufactures almost everything that he sells. There is an ice house in the rear, where the choicest of ice cream is made, not only for patrons in town, but for such near-by resorts as Laguna Beach, Newport and Balboa, and also for Orange and other towns. Boasting the finest dining room in the city, it is not surprising that the cash register should show an annual patronage of a couple of hundred thousand satisfied customers.

A likeable man, an honorable competitor and, most of all, an untiring worker, Clyde Alling long ago rose to the point where he was a great factor in the development of wholesale and retail trade in Orange County. With only twenty-eight years behind him, it is also not surprising that he should feel a great future ahead. Of genial disposition, with always a word of cheer, no matter what the weather happens to be, he draws customers as a honey-pot draws flies. His handshake is one you feel. His words are words you remember. And most of all he is busy, for long hours are required to run "Cherry Blossoms," and he is always on the job. This strenuousness, however, in business hours does not prevent him from snatching a few moments, now and then, to enjoy the company of his fellow Masons and Elks.

JOHN GREEN BAKER.—A successful farmer and bean grower who had the advantage of a wide and valuable experience in other pursuits and elsewhere before he came to the Irvine ranch, is John Green Baker, who lives one mile and a half northeast of Irvine. He was born in Madison County, Tenn., on August 9, 1874, amid the stimulating environment of the Cumberland Mountains, and until he was fifteen lived in that state. Then, with his folks, he moved to La Veta, Colo., and for a year had the hard work of a farmer's lad. After that, he went to Texas, then to New Mexico, and later still to Arizona; and in 1912 he arrived in the Golden State. He thus went to school in three states—Tennessee, Colorado and Texas. His father was the Rev. W. H. Baker of the Baptist Church, in whose ministry for years he did faithful, self-sacrificing service, and he is now living in Arkansas, retired, at the age of eighty. His mother was Miss Nancy Green before her marriage, and she was born in North Carolina and died in Texas. She had eight children, of whom John is the seventh in the order of birth of the family.

John G. Baker started out for himself in Texas as an employe on a Donley County cattle ranch, then teamed and rode range in New Mexico and mined at Bisbee, Ariz.; and on coming to California he followed the carpenter trade in Los Angeles until 1915, when he came to Santa Ana and engaged in ranching. He now operates 160 acres on the Irvine ranch, which he has planted to lima beans, and he is among those who get satisfactory results whenever the conditions of climate make it possible to succeed.

When Mr. Baker was married in Los Angeles in 1912, he took for his wife Mrs. Inez Asbell, nee White, a native of Ohio; and together they have worked hard to solve the problems peculiar to California agriculture, and they are gradually attaining more and more of an enviable position. A consistent Democrat, but a broad-minded American, always desirous of pulling with his neighbors for whatever is best for the locality irrespective of party considerations, Mr. Baker has been serving as a popular member of the election board in the San Joaquin voting precinct.

CHARLES E. BEST.—An experienced rancher who has entrusted to his judgment and fidelity an important interest of the Irvine Ranch is Charles E. Best, in charge of the hog ranch on the old San Joaquin. He was born in San Benito, on November 12, 1871, the son of Newton Wells Best, a native of Port Williams, N. S., where he was born on October 12, 1838, and his good wife, also a Nova Scotian, who was Annie C. Holmes before her marriage, in Nova Scotia in 1864. There their two eldest children were born. Newton Wells Best left his family on March 19, 1868, and landed at San Francisco on April 19 of the same year, having lost five days in New York City waiting for a steamer. Settling first on the San Benito River, then in Monterey, now in San Benito County, he took up Government land and farmed for five years, and then he came south to Santa Maria Valley, in Santa Barbara County, where he stayed another five years, also farming. His next move was to Santa Ana, then in Los Angeles County, which he reached in 1878, and there he bought a farm in the New Hope school district, and helped to build the New Hope schoolhouse, acting as one of the school trustees.

He farmed at New Hope for seven years, and then he went to what is now Beaumont in Riverside County, then San Geronio, San Bernardino County, where he operated on a still larger scale in farming for fifteen years. When he quit farming, he moved to Redlands and lived there for fourteen years, running a grocery, and a feed and fuel business. He returned to Santa Ana in 1914; and there, three years later, his devoted wife died, aged seventy-one years.

Nine children were born to this worthy couple: William Henry is of the real estate firm, Best, DeBoyce and Covington in Brawley, Cal.; Frank S. is retired and lives in Pasadena; Fred N. is a carpenter and builder at Lamona, in Iowa; Charles Everett is the subject of our review; Arthur L. died when he was fourteen years old; Maude is the wife of G. M. Austin, an Imperial Valley rancher; Pearl is now Mrs. W. A. Hively and resides at Turlock, Stanislaus County; Luella has become Mrs. H. H. Moore and resides at Colton; Joseph died when he was two years old.

Charles was sent to the grammar school, and grew up with the usual limited, yet positive advantages of a boy in the country. On September 20, 1898, he was married to Miss Jessie Speed of Santa Ana, who was born in Potsdam, N. Y., and came to Orange County in 1892 with her parents, John and Marthesia (Stanton) Speed. After their marriage they continued farming at Beaumont for eight years, then moved to Redlands where he lived six years, thence to San Jacinto where he ranched for five years. In the fall of 1915 they located in Orange County and began ranching on the Irvine ranch and in the management of the hog ranch, Mr. Best has made numerous contributions to practical ranching by modern, improved methods.

Five children have gladdened the hospitable, comfortable home of Mr. and Mrs. Best. Jessie Pearla is a senior in the Santa Ana high school. Everett and Elliott are twins, and are universal favorites through their playing right and left halfback on the football team of the Santa Ana high school. And there are Stanton and Ralph Le Roy, full of promise.

E. S. MORALES.—A self-educated ranchman, proud of his descent from one of the old, distinguished families of Spanish history and tradition, who has come to the front by sheer force of his own ability and worth, is E. S. Morales, popularly known as Captain Morales, residing on the Hot Springs road some five miles northeast of San Juan Capistrano. He is a tenant farmer on a part of the great Santa Margarita rancho, the oldest grant at San Juan Capistrano. He was born at Los Angeles on October 18, 1866, but was reared at San Juan Capistrano. He had the usual schooling for a boy in that locality, and early went to work for Richard O'Neill, the father of Jerome O'Neill, the present owner of the Santa Margarita ranch, on which farm he has been steadily since 1886. He is a vaquero, and one of the fine old type, and as such can rope and brand a steer, break a broncho, shoe a horse, skin a beef, or even run a binder and repair any kind of machinery, such as is used about a farm.

When Captain Morales decided to share his domestic life with another, he married Miss Morina Garcia, a popular belle of San Juan Capistrano, and also a member of one of the early Spanish families. She has proved an excellent helpmate, making him a good home, while he attends to his many responsibilities. All in all, he is a very unusual man, and it is not surprising that he is honored with the title of captain. For years, he has been one of the most trusted of the many employes on the great Santa Margarita ranch, in which principality he is employed at various tasks. He can drive two, four, eight, sixteen, thirty-two or even sixty-four horses, and he is both a blacksmith and a machinist of no mean ability. His generous and whole-hearted disposition has earned for him the good will of all those associated with, or under him.

During the present season, he is engaged in harvesting a "bumper" crop of the celebrated "Defiance" wheat on his leasehold of 190 acres; and it will run forty bushels to the acre, worth five dollars per hundred weight—one of the best crops, very likely, in Orange County. He has a twenty-inch cylinder Case thresher, and other thoroughly up-to-date appliances, and is often able to point the way to others in modern agricultural methods.

WILLIAM D. PETERKIN.—A busy man of affairs, whose popularity has been founded in part on his expertness in the field in which he is a leader, and partly on his genial and sympathetic temperament, is William D. Peterkin, the assistant manager of the Orange County Fumigation Company, whose office is at 349 South Lemon Street, Orange. He was born in the city of Montreal, Canada, on June 9, 1883, the son of William H. Peterkin, the well-known rancher and orchardist of Orange, from whom he inherited and derived by companionship and personal instruction much of that ability and knowledge which have enabled him to come forward so rapidly.

Fifteen years ago Mr. Peterkin came from Santa Barbara County to Orange County and engaged in citrus work. He accepted one position after another and gradually became familiar with horticultural problems. In time, he was employed by J. A. King at fumigating, and he has since become assistant to him as general manager of the Orange County Fumigating Company. It is exceedingly dangerous work, for science calls for and supplies death-dealing agents, which may also work destruction to those engaged in the work. No less than ten men died in Orange County, in 1919-1920, while ridding orchards of damaging scale and other pests.

Some idea of the extent of the Orange County Fumigating Company's business may be formed from the fact that they make use of 1,000 tents, and send out fifteen or more outfits, detailing six men to each outfit, and operating with the Fruit Growers Exchange of Orange County. They follow the last word of science, profiting from the experiments with liquid hydrocyanic acid which was first used largely in experimental tests in 1916, and on an extensive commercial basis the following year for the fumigation of citrus trees in California. This acid has been known to chemists for many years, but probably because of its instability and its very poisonous nature, it has not been manufactured on a large scale. It is a colorless liquid, less than three-fourths the weight of water, and is also very volatile, and boils at less than eighty degrees Fahrenheit. For these reasons, hydrocyanic acid gas is rapidly given off from the surface of the liquid, and there is danger in breathing in an atmosphere close to an open container. This danger is increased when the liquid is sprayed or spattered. Gas from this acid will injure the fruit and foliage if used in excess, in much the same way as the gas generated by other methods; hence it is highly important that such work of fumigating should be given to a thoroughly reliable concern like the one of which we are writing.

The killing efficiency of the liquid hydrocyanic acid as compared with pot and machine generation, or other methods of fumigation was determined, first by comparative tests in a fumatorium; second, by comparative tests under form trees; third, by comparative tests in the field; and fourth, by examination of commercial work in the field, and it is no wonder that this new means of citrus fumigation has come into such favor that the Orange County Fumigation Company has all that it can do. The place, with this new method, where the greatest concentration of gas occurs under the tent from the liquid is practically the reverse of that from the pot, or portable generator; with the former method, the most effective killing is at the bottom of the tree, while with the latter the most effective killing is at the top.

The Orange County Fumigating Company is a growing enterprise, having been duly incorporated for a very necessary work. Its officers are: president, L. W. Evans; vice-president, J. A. Maag; secretary and manager, J. A. King; treasurer, E. W. Bolinger. Directors: L. W. Evans, El Modena; J. A. Maag, Orange; L. A. Bortz, Olive; J. F. Allen, Orange; A. G. Finley, Santa Ana; and Ed. H. Dierker, Orange.

Mr. Peterkin is a member of the Odd Fellows at Orange, and also of the Modern Woodmen and the Elks at Santa Ana. He was married at Santa Barbara to Miss Rebecca Jordan, a native of Missouri; and their fortunate union has been rendered the happier by the birth of one child, Thelma.

WILLIAM F. DIERS.—Santa Ana owes much of her commercial prosperity to such far-sighted, optimistic men of grit and experience as William F. Diers, for the past six years manager of the Wm. F. Lutz Company, Inc. He is a native son, and was born in Kern County, on November 11, 1884, and his father was Henry Diers, a farmer still living, who was born in Germany, and now resides in Santa Ana. He married Miss Mattie Baker, by whom he had four children, and she passed away some thirty years ago.

William was the third child in the interesting family, and enjoyed the educational advantages of both the grammar and the high schools. He came with his folks to Santa Ana in 1890, and grew up not only to prepare himself for an earnest tussle with the world, but to enjoy sport as well, particularly horseback riding. He belongs to the Orange County Country Club.

In 1900 he entered the service of the Wm. F. Lutz Company, Inc., and step by step rose to his present position of responsibility and trust. In 1913 he was made manager of the firm, and much of its recent success must be credited to his experience and fidelity. A staunch member of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Diers is also an active worker in the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. Mr. Diers is a Republican in national political affairs and has served for three years in the National Guard of California. He belongs to Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, and was honored there as exalted ruler in 1919. In the World War period, he was most active on all the drives for war work purposes, and in many respects has set an inspiring example of plain, loyal and worth-while citizenship. On February 28, 1920, he married Mrs. F. E. Gustlin of Santa Ana.

ROBERT G. TUTHILL.—Could a history of the recent development, along sanitary and strictly edifying lines, of undertaking in California be written, and proper credit given those individuals who have not only "done things," but have pointed the way to others wishing also to do and willing to follow, then one of the leading firms of Santa Ana—Messrs. Smith and Tuthill—would necessarily be mentioned in the front rank, and another star be added to the long list for which the town has striven and fought these many years. Both Robert G. Tuthill and his partner, George S. Smith, have endeavored, ever since creating their present establishment, to advance the status of undertaking whenever and wherever possible; and how far they have succeeded in their ideals those most familiar with their actual accomplishments can tell.

Born in Oskaloosa, Iowa, in May, 1878, Robert was the son of George Tuthill, a business man born in New York, who had married Miss Mary Skillen. The parents moved from Iowa to Kansas when the child was three months old, and then they went on to Portland, Ore., where they are both living. They had three children, and Robert was the second in the order of birth.

He attended the grammar and high schools of Kansas, and also a business college, and as a young man followed the undertaking business, first, in 1899, at San Francisco and after two years again in Kansas. Three years later, he was back in Los Angeles; and there he continued in undertaking for seven years.

On March 1, 1914, Mr. Tuthill came to Santa Ana, and soon afterward formed a partnership with Mr. Smith, who had been here twenty years. In every respect the equipment, including the needed automobiles, is modern and strictly up-to-date; and the progressive, refined and refining spirit animating the two gentlemen and their associates has won for them a large number of appreciative patrons. It is not surprising that Mr. Tuthill is a wide-awake director of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce and enthusiastic in its progressive work.

On September 22, 1913, Mr. Tuthill and Miss Ella Dougherty were married at Portland, Ore.; the bride being a native of Kansas and the daughter of Jas. and Mary Dougherty. They have three children—Mary, Martha and Roberta. In national politics Mr. Tuthill is a Republican, he is a Protestant in religious faith, and he belongs to the Masons, the Knights Templar, the Odd Fellows and the Elks.

ARCHIE VERNON FEWELL.—The distinction of being a native Californian belongs to Archie Vernon Fewell, of the firm of Wine and Fewell, cement pipe manufacturers and irrigation contractors, and he has spent practically all his life in Orange County, his birthplace. Mr. Fewell was born at Santa Ana on June 4, 1892, the son of Edward and Rosa Wilkinson Fewell, who were the parents of three children: Archie Vernon, of this review; Blanche, now the wife of Merrill Stearnes, a cotton grower in Arizona; and Mildred, the wife of Albert Shinn, also residents of Arizona. The father, who is a resident of Tustin, was born in Iowa, while the mother was a native of that state. She passed away in 1905, when Archie was but thirteen years old.

Mr. Fewell started in the cement business in Santa Ana at the early age of fifteen, working for John M. Wine, now his partner. He remained there until 1914, when he went to Lankershim where he conducted a general cement business. After one year there he returned to Santa Ana and formed a partnership with his former employer, John M. Wine, their place of business being located at 1029 East First Street. They are the leading firm in this line in Santa Ana and have always on hand a full stock of valves, gates and cement pipe of all sizes, so that they are able to handle any work that comes to them. They have executed many large contracts for Orange County, as well as for scores of the largest citrus growers and ranchers of Santa Ana and the neighboring towns. They place an absolute guarantee on every foot of their work and have built up a reputation for thorough, efficient work and square dealing that places them in the forefront of reliable business firms of the county. In the laying of cement pipes, Mr. Fewell has no equal, perhaps, within a wide radius. He does all this work himself and from January 1 up to the first of June, 1920, he laid more than 75,000 feet of pipe. Endowed with strength and physique far above the average, Mr. Fewell has a propensity for hard work and it is often said of him that he does two men's work every day.

Mr. Fewell's marriage which occurred at Santa Ana, June 15, 1911, united him with Miss Ollie Pickering, a native daughter of California, born at Santa Paula, Ventura County, but reared in Seattle, Wash. Her parents are George and Laura (Buffham) Pickering, the father of English birth and the mother a native of Illinois. Mrs. Pickering is one of Santa Ana's successful business women, being engaged in the real estate business there. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Fewell: Their first born were twins, George V. and Laura Belle, the former only living to be sixteen months old; Dorothea Rose and Bernice. The family home is at 910 West Fourth Street, Santa Ana. Mr. and Mrs. Fewell attend the United Presbyterian Church at Santa Ana and enjoy a wide popularity in its social circles.

FREDERICK P. YANDEAU.—The ranch of twenty acres on Western Avenue, owned by Frederick P. Yandea, is one of the show places of the vicinity, with its well-cared for, up-to-date appearance. The Valencia orange trees, now in their sixth year of growth, had just been set out when Mr. Yandea purchased the place. At that time the irrigation facilities were limited, but the property is now piped and valved to a complete degree, and its appearance testifies to the care bestowed upon it.

Mr. Yandea was born in Essex Junction, Vt., on April 11, 1872, the son of John and Tillie Yandea, also natives of the Green Mountain State, whose children numbered eight, six of whom are living, and two of whom migrated to California. Frederick P. was reared and educated in his native state and had the benefit of a high school education. He afterward followed the occupation of a telegrapher for a number of years, and in 1897, when twenty-five years of age, came to California. A year later, in 1898, he entered the U. S. service as a member of the signal corps, and served in this capacity until 1900. At the outbreak of the Boxer Rebellion in China, he again entered active service, serving one year in China. He returned at the close of that time to the Philippine Islands, which he left for the scene of war. In 1904 he was appointed district telegraph officer in the Philippine constabulary, ranking as first lieutenant. After a period of two years he was appointed postoffice inspector, and retained the office four years. Ill health caused him to retire from the service and return to California, where he located in San Diego County to recuperate his failing health in the balmy climate of the Southland.

His marriage in 1908 united him with Miss Lena M. Holliday. His interest is ever to build up and add to the commercial influence and prosperity of the community in which his lot in life is cast, and among whose citizens he is highly esteemed as a worthy member. He is active in the membership of the Anaheim Cooperative Orange Growers Association.

P. H. NORTON.—A conservatively careful, yet progressive ranchman whose agricultural methods are the true keys to his phenomenal success, is P. H. Norton, of 301 Edgewood Road, Santa Ana. He was born on November 20, 1877, in Freeborn County, Minn., the son of G. E. and May H. (Phillips) Norton, and started life with the district school training there. His father was a native of Vermont, and his mother was born in Wisconsin, and as might be expected of such genuinely American folks, they afforded every advantage possible for the education of the son, who eventually took an agricultural course at the St. Anthony Park branch of the University of Minnesota, during the time, until he was twenty-six years old, when he remained at home on his father's farm, lending a hand in the work there.

On December 9, 1904, Mr. Norton was married to Miss Iva E. Wiseman, who was born near Albert Lea in Freeborn County, Minn., the daughter of A. P. and Ellen Wiseman, farmers and early settlers of Minnesota. The same years, Mr. Norton purchased eighty acres and leased 160 acres in addition, farming 240 acres in Redwood County. He followed agriculture there for seven years, making a specialty of breeding Percheron horses.

When he sold out, finally, he came to Santa Ana, and in 1911 purchased a tract of about six and one-half acres on Edgewood Avenue, two acres of which were in walnuts and three in Valencias. In 1918 he added by purchase six acres of walnuts, and as all was under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, he easily had one of the most desirable properties in the county. From 1916 to 1917, Mr. Norton also owned a four-acre grove of young Valencias on East Palmyra Street. He is a member of the Santa Ana Valley Walnut Growers Association and also of the Santiago Orange Growers Association.

Four boys make up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Norton: Arold P. is a student at the Santa Ana high school; and Francis W., George Stanley and Miles A. Norton are in the grammar school. Mr. Norton is a member of the First Baptist Church at Santa Ana, and is also a Mason. Mrs. Norton, who long studied music under the best masters available, gives much pleasure to her family and friends with her proficiency on the piano.

ORAL V. DART.—A man who will long and pleasantly be remembered for his substantial work in both building up and upbuilding Santa Ana and Orange County is Oral V. Dart, the carpenter and contract house mover, who was born in Rexford, Thomas County, Kans., on November 9, 1887, the son of George W. and Tracy J. Dart, farmers and landowners, being among the first settlers of western Kansas. When Oral was nine years old, they removed with him to Jewell County, where he was educated in the Jewell district school.

In 1908 he came to California and worked on the Valencia ranch near San Juan Capistrano, for the following two years, when he returned to Kansas for a short time, in the winter of 1911, owing to the death of his beloved mother. Then he came West again, this time to Seattle, and there he was employed by Albers Bros. in their flour mill. Once more he returned to Kansas and farmed.

In 1912 he came to California and for some time limited himself to ordinary carpentering. Realizing the need, however, of an expert mover of houses, he entered that field, and found no difficulty in demonstrating that he was the man for the occasion and the community. Since then he has been busy enough contracting for that kind of work, in some instances undertaking what others would not care, under the difficult conditions, to attempt.

At Santa Ana, on June 14, 1917, Mr. Dart was married to Miss Helen Teel, a daughter of F. H. and Mary Teel, of that same city. There Mrs. Dart was born, reared and educated. One boy, a promising lad named Alvin Lowell, born on July 9, 1918, has blessed this fortunate union. Mrs. Dart is a member of the Nazarene Church of Santa Ana, and Mr. Dart belongs to the Free Methodist Church.

He has just traded his handsome home at 1322 West Fifth Street for a grove of eleven acres lying between Santa Ana and Orange, and as nine acres are already in walnuts, the cosy ranch bids fair to be of real value in the near future.

Orange County is fortunate in having such public-spirited men as Mr. Dart, who for years stuck by the Prohibition party, and now that their goal has been reached, believes in working for the highest citizenship regardless of party lines.

JEROME V. SCHULZ.—A sincere, peace-loving citizen, fond of his home and solicitous for the welfare of children, and interested in the political problems of the day, is Jerome V. Schulz, the successful Williams Canyon rancher. His parents were John C. and Mary Ann Schulz, and he was born in Waterloo County, Iowa, on May 21, 1873. After having become a prosperous farmer, John C. Schulz came out to San Francisco with his wife and the six-year-old lad, Jerome, and for three years engaged in the hardware business. In 1882, Mr. Schulz came south to Anaheim and bought five acres. The land had been set out to grapes, but the new owner planted walnut trees. The lad helped his father on the ranch, at the same time attending the district schools.

On October 18, 1905, in Santa Ana, Jerome Schulz was married to Naomi A. Alsbach, the daughter of Montgomery and Mary E. Alsbach. The lady had first seen the light at Los Angeles, and when a year old had accompanied her parents to Downey. On account of her mother's health, they removed to Silverado Canyon, and there she still lives on their old home-site.

Directly after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Schulz moved to their present ranch in Williams Canyon, which Mr. Schulz had purchased in 1902, and where they and their family have lived ever since. There are 160 acres in the ranch, eight of which he has planted to budded walnuts, twenty-one are under cultivation in small grain and corn for domestic use, and two acres are given to prunes and apricots. Sycamore and eucalyptus trees grow in abundance on the place. This land was originally the Williams Ranch, and belonged to the man after whom the canyon was named.

When Williams purchased the ranch he bought it for a sixty-pound can of honey; he had for the most part goats as stock, and mountain lions would come down and steal them. Now the Schulz children go over a mountain trail one and a half miles long, on their way to school, and they used to frequently call to their father to come and kill the rattlesnakes they found. Of late, they have killed many of the reptiles themselves. This particular place on the ridge they have named Rattlesnake Peak.

Five children—four girls and a boy—have blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Schulz. Evelyn Dorothy is the oldest; then comes Vernon Everett, and after that Alice May, Florence Louise and Frances Isabel, all of whom attend the Silverado grammar school. Mr. and Mrs. Schultz are Democrats, but also were stand-patters for Hoover. Mrs. Schulz, who is serving her second term as trustee and clerk of the Silverado School district, is a woman of much native ability and business acumen, who is of much assistance to her husband, and both are taking an active part in helping the movements that have for their aim the building up of the county and community.

WILLIAM B. ALEXANDER.—The history of the family of Mr. and Mrs. William B. Alexander is associated in a very interesting manner with the stirring events in three great commonwealths—California, Tennessee and Colorado—Mrs. Alexander's father having been among those who repeatedly braved and suffered much to help found the Pacific State, and Mr. Alexander having held public office when such was anything but a sinecure. He was born in Lebanon, Tenn., about thirty miles east of Nashville, on August 6, 1858, the son of John C. and Sarah (Moser) Alexander, also natives of that state, as their parents were before them; and he was educated at the district school at Lebanon, Tenn.

When nineteen, in 1877, he left home to go to Colorado, and in Durango, La Plata County, he settled for a while and was employed by the San Juan Smelter and Refining Company. Supplies were at that time very scarce and dear; so much so that when he went on tours of investigation in the Rockies, he had to pay as high as sixty-five dollars a ton for his hay for the horses.

Durango was four miles from the Navajo Indian Reservation, where the Utahs, the Navajos and the Pueblos lived; and the Indians would steal the whites' horses, and the whites, in turn, would steal the redskins' cattle. Then uprisings occurred, and the whites would be compelled to drive the Indians back into their own territory. Notwithstanding the privations and the responsibility, Mr. Alexander remained foreman of the smelter company for twelve full years.

After that he went into the cattle business, and often bought and sold as many as 1,000 head at a time. And he continued buying and selling cattle for about eight years, when he sold out and came West to San Diego, Cal., where he engaged in wholesaling and retailing.

When he came to Orange County, he purchased ten acres west of Santa Ana, which he devoted with success to beets and beans; and he also bought and sold property in Santa Ana. He owned good lots on Baker and Parton streets; and being satisfied with the future outlook of the town, in 1917 he bought a home on West Fifth Street, and also established his vulcanizing works. The patronage accorded by the public from the start of this enterprise speaks for itself.

In February, 1878, Mr. Alexander was married to Miss Ina L. Pennington, a native of Wilson County, Kans., and the daughter of J. T. and Sarah Pennington, early settlers in Wilson County, who came to Durango, Colo., in 1872. One son has blessed the union—Thomas D., who works in Santa Ana. Mrs. Alexander was educated at the Durango high school, and later taught in the vicinity of her home until she was married. Her father made three trips in "prairie schooners" across the plains, coming to California for the first time in 1849, during the famous gold rush. The family attend the Methodist Church.

In Tennessee, before going to Colorado, Mr. Alexander was a deputy sheriff for a couple of years; and in Durango he was on the town board for two years. In national politics he is a Democrat. Fraternally, he is a member of the Odd Fellows, of the Woodmen, and of the Elks; and there is no one who enjoys greater popularity, or carries his honors more modestly.

S. E. TINGLEY.—Among the decidedly progressive men of Orange County, itself one of the most progressive sections of the great California commonwealth, should be mentioned S. E. Tingley, a prominent resident of Tustin, who in 1910 established the Tustin Lumber Company, now playing such an important part in the development of the district. They do a general lumber and mill business, and handle all kinds of builders' material, cement, roofing and wall board; and by anticipating the wants, rather than merely catering to the needs of the community, render the town and environs a great service. A large force of men are employed on the two acres of the company, and it is not surprising that their business last year amounted to forty thousand dollars.

Mr. Tingley is a native of Trenton, Mo., and was born in the notable year of 1876, when the nation was celebrating its first century of existence and prosperity. His father was Joseph F. Tingley, a native of Ohio, who married Miss Eliza Roberts, a native of Virginia. Of their five living children, S. E. is next to the youngest and was two years of age when the family removed to Wamego, Pottawatomie County, Kans., remaining there until 1887, when they came to the Pacific Coast, locating at National City, San Diego County, Cal., and here he completed the public schools.

In 1896 Mr. Tingley was married at National City to Miss Sarah J. Cox, daughter of William and Isabel Cox, natives of England, and they have one daughter, Margaret O. Tingley. In 1902 he moved to Santa Ana, and here, in Orange County, he has been actively engaged in the lumber business ever since. Previous to his establishing the Tustin Lumber Company, Mr. Tingley was in the employ of the Pendleton Lumber Company at Santa Ana.

As a wide-awake citizen who has not only provided a place for himself, but has contributed toward the advancement of both the county and the state, Mr. Tingley is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Tustin, and never fails to support a movement for the progress of the town. He is also both a member and a trustee of the Presbyterian Church. In Masonic circles he is especially popular, but he counts his friends in all circles of society, and in various communities.

WERNER R. DROSS.—To the young men, both of the past and present generation, California had proved a land of opportunity, and success is within the reach of all who possess energy, business ability and a determination to succeed. Such has been the experience of Werner R. Dross, the efficient warehouseman of the San Joaquin Warehouse Company, a position he has held for the past ten years. This is the largest lima bean warehouse on the Pacific Coast, and consists of two large buildings, one 450 by 40 feet and the other 500 by 40 feet. Seventeen cars of beans can be loaded at one time. There are two bean cleaners in each warehouse and only the most up-to-date methods and the best machinery are used, none but white labor being employed to hand pick and clean the beans. The product is put up in 100-pound sacks, ready for the consumer.

A native of Germany, Werner R. Dross was born at Elbing on February 6, 1879, his parents being Walter and Vanda (Gerdes) Dross, both natives of Germany, who lived and died there. The father was the owner of a flour mill, farm and grain warehouse at Elbing, so that Werner was familiar with the warehouse business from his earliest childhood. By his first marriage Walter Dross was the father of three children: Frieda, who died in Germany, leaving three children; Werner R., the subject of this sketch; and Erich, a farmer in Germany. The mother passed away when Werner was but three years old, and the father married again, his second marriage uniting him with Augusta Kaehler, who is still living in Germany. The following children were born of this marriage: Walter, Robert, Maryana, Bernhard, Gerhard and Helmut. Bernhard the first and Gerhard both died in infancy, and Walter and Helmut lost their lives in the recent war. Bernhard, second, is the manager of the Newton Grain and Bean Warehouse at Oceanside, he and Werner being the only members of the family in America.

Mr. Dross grew up at Elbing and received an excellent education there, attending the high and polytechnic schools, where he studied bookkeeping, higher mathematics, Latin and French. At the age of nineteen he became a sailor before the mast, shipping to Singapore, thence to Buenos Aires, South America, and from there to Honolulu, and back to San Francisco. When he reached the latter port in March, 1900, he was so agreeably impressed with the country that he resolved to locate in California. Shortly after landing, however, he heard of the great mining prospects in Lima, Peru, and made his way there with a friend. He was soon engaged by the Prussian government as a draftsman, a position for which he was well qualified by his polytechnic school training in his native land. He soon decided, however, that Peru was too warm a climate for a place of residence, so returned to California, and he has since made his home in the state of his choice. His first position was with George W. Kneass, the proprietor of a boat building and furniture manufacturing establishment in San Francisco, and there he remained for two years, working as a mill hand. He then went to work for the S. P. Milling Company in 1904, holding positions with that company at Santa Barbara, Oxnard, Kings City, San Ardo and Camarillo. In 1911 he came from the latter place to Irvine, taking the position of warehouseman with the San Joaquin Warehouse Company, and he has continued with that concern ever since, making a splendid success of his responsible position.

A man of excellent business judgment and executive ability, Mr. Dross stands high in the community, and is popular in the circles of the Elks and Odd Fellows, having been a member of the Santa Ana lodges of these organizations for several years. Having become a naturalized citizen of the United States in 1913, in Santa Ana, Mr. Dross has never regretted the circumstances that led him to make this land his home, and the passing of the years has made him increasingly fond of this particular section of his adopted country.

WALTER N. CONGDON.—The interesting and highly instructive history of several representative pioneer families is recalled by the story of Mr. and Mrs. Walter N. Congdon and their continued and increasing prosperity. Mr. Congdon is the proprietor of the Congdon Motor Car Company, whose motto, "We can fix your automobile any place, any time," has captured more and more patrons, and as an ignition expert managing the Prest-O-Lite exchange, he has done much for Orange County motorists in guaranteeing strictly first-class machine work. He was born at San Juan Capistrano on August 16, 1878, the son of J. R. Congdon, so well known to Californians, who had married Miss Mary A. Rouse, one of another widely-connected family. He learned the plumbing trade at Santa Ana, and worked for the Nickey Hardware Company, whose proprietor was Frank P. Nickey, of Santa Ana.

On June 15, Mr. Congdon was married to Miss Allie M. Nickey, of 517 Bush Street, and the daughter of the aforesaid gentleman, once a supervisor of Orange County. She was born in Iowa, but grew up in Santa Ana, and here attended the high school, from which she was graduated in time with honors. Two children blessed the union—Jack N. and Mildred Allyne.

Having made his mark in Santa Ana, Mr. Congdon returned to San Juan Capistrano, and in 1914 established, under the name of Congdon's Garage, the business now so agreeably associated with his daily activity, and under the charge of Mrs. Congdon, as well as himself, that accomplished lady acting as bookkeeper. Mr. Congdon is ably assisted by his younger brother, Chester, who is also a first-class mechanic and auto expert. They maintain a Ford service station, and while doing vulcanizing, carry a full line of four or five different kinds of tires. They sell gasoline, oil, greases and a full line of auto supplies; and because of the completeness and quality of their stock and their prompt way of doing things, it is safe to say that they never lose a customer when once they get one. And they always have as many as they can conveniently care for, with their expert service.

FRANK C. PLANCHON.—A hard-working, successful rancher, who has become a leading grower of both beets and beans in Orange County, is Frank C. Planchon, who owns a fine ranch of thirty acres in the Newport precinct. He was born in Santa Clara, Cal., on March 4, 1885, the son of John P. S. and Martha (Reynaud) Planchon. His father, who was born in South America, was a business man in Montevideo, where the grandfather, also named John P. S. Planchon, established a large wholesale meat market, and he owned, besides, 10,000 acres of land, and 10,000 or more head of cattle, the market for which he thus found himself. He also established a confectionery manufactory there. The Waldensians had a settlement of about fifty families at that place, but on account of the frequently occurring revolutions in that country, having for the most part large families, they were desirous of getting the young men away from being pressed into military service for no cause whatever, so the minister, the Reverend Solomon, and ten families left La Plata, and came to Barry County, Mo., and how and where they traveled en route is worth recording. The trip from Montevideo to Verona, Mo., took two months, for they sailed from La Plata to Buenos Ayres, thence to Rio de Janeiro, after that to Cape Colony, South Africa, and then up the African Coast to the Canary and the Cape Verde islands, and after that to the Azores, then to Havre, France, next to Liverpool, and thence to New York City—sixty-four days on the seas. From New York they proceeded by rail to St. Louis, and finally to Verona, where the Waldensian settlers had bought land. Grandfather Planchon was born near Piedmont, in the duchy of Savoy, and he went to South America as a young man, and there married Miss Catherine Courdin, who was a native of Piedmont. Once arrived in Missouri, Mr. Planchon bought 1,000 acres of land, and here he resided until his death. He had six boys and two girls; his son, John P. S., came to California when a young man in the early eighties, and was married in Santa Clara County to Martha Reynaud, born in France. They followed farming until 1886, and then returned to Barry County, Mo., where he is a large and successful farmer.

Frank C. Planchon grew up on his father's farm in Missouri, receiving a good education in the local public school. When twenty years of age, having always had a desire to see the state of his nativity, he came to Orange County, intending to stay four months and then return home, but he liked the country and conditions so well here that he has prolonged his stay until now. He worked on ranches and then rented land and engaged in farming.

In 1908 Mr. Planchon was married to Miss Pearl Walker, who was born and reared in Los Angeles, and who had moved to Talbert in 1905, where her father, Frank P. Walker, was a farmer until his death. They have been blessed with three children, Carl, Earl and Martha. Mr. and Mrs. Planchon are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Greenville, where he is financial secretary, as well as secretary of the board of trustees, and where his influence is directed for the good of the community.

In 1915 Mr. Planchon bought his ranch of thirty acres, two miles southwest of Santa Ana, seven of which he has planted to lima beans, fifteen to beets, while the balance of the area is devoted to yards and alfalfa. His method of cultivation shows a thorough knowledge of local conditions—the first requisite always to success.

ALBERT C. LANTZ.—A representative of a successful business family, noted as an oil expert, who is pardonably proud of his accomplishment in effecting an extensive oil lease, is Albert C. Lantz, who was born eight miles from Aurora, in Will County, Ill., on July 29, 1885. His father was W. D. Lantz, a native of Will County, where he first saw the light of day on August 21, 1859, the son of Daniel and Betsy (Holdman) Lantz; and he was married to Miss Isabelle Malcolm, the mother of our subject, in Will County, November 4, 1880. Albert lived with his parents, who were farmers, raising Shorthorn beef cattle and Poland-China hogs.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Lantz removed to Iowa in 1893 and there purchased a farm of 240 acres four miles north of Waterloo, devoted to corn, stock and grain. At Waterloo, Albert went to the district school, at the same that, as a live, healthy boy, he worked about the farm. In 1907, W. D. Lantz came to Santa Ana and began to deal in real estate, buying and selling houses; establishing that reputation for experience and fair dealing which has ever since been of such value to them and brought them so much patronage.

After coming to California, Albert Lantz engaged in the automobile business as the authorized Ford distributor for Santa Ana; and this Ford agency he conducted until 1914. Now he is in the oil promotion field, and owns a half interest in the largest oil lease in Orange County. This lease was effected on May 15, 1920, and is jointly owned by R. T. Tustin of Chicago, who has recently come to Santa Ana as an old oil expert from the East, and A. C. Lantz, our subject. The lease embraces 23,835 acres of old, proven oil land, and was given by L. F. Moulton. On this land, some ten years ago, a well was sunk 2,400 feet, striking oil, but the oil was not produced in paying quantity. The lease extends in wide area from the Moulton lines near El Toro, running southwesterly to the ocean.

A derrick is to be put up and first-class oil drilling machinery will be installed in Aliso Canyon. A well is then proposed for each thousand acres, and if production warrants the increased investment, two wells will be sunk for the same area. Mr. Lantz was a graduate of the Waterloo high school, and so has the fortunate asset of a good education. He belongs to the Elks.

Royce W. Lantz, another son of W. D. Lantz and a brother of our subject, was born near Aurora, in Will County, Ill., on November 11, 1892, and lived with his parents, coming west to California with them. He went to the district school in Will County, and finished his studies in Santa Ana, where he graduated from the high school. Since then he has engaged with his father in Santa Ana realty, and at present is widely known as a wide-awake, successful operator, making honesty the basis of all of his business dealings.

On December 13, 1917, Mr. Lantz enlisted in the United States Navy, and was sent to Mare Island for training. He left for the Hawaiian Islands on February 15, 1918, and there served as a machinist's mate at the radio station. Later he returned to the United States and was discharged on July 23, 1919. Now he is a member of the American Legion.

ALFRED TRAPP.—Honest, industrious and well-informed Americans, reasonably contented with their environment and lot, and ambitious and hopeful for the future, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Trapp belong to that sterling class of "hard laborers" which is the wealth, the bulwark and the pride of our country. He is a machinist, a blacksmith and a carpenter, and an all-around mechanic as well, trained through long experience as a section foreman on the Santa Fe Railway, a ranch foreman and a builder, and is employed by the L. F. Moulton Company, who undoubtedly appreciate his versatility.

He was born at Otto, in Fulton County, Ill., on September 7, 1873, a brother of Mrs. Dempsey W. Gould, and grew up in Illinois, where he attended the public schools. He was early introduced to a life of unremitting industry; and since he was always handy with tools, he had no need to be begged to develop his mechanical turn.

He came out from Illinois to California in 1898, and went to work as a trackman at Serra, in Orange County, in the service of the Santa Fe Railroad Company. For two years he worked as a section hand, and then he rose to be track foreman or section boss, and that position of responsibility he held for five years.

In Capistrano he was married to Miss Chester C. Gray, a daughter of J. M. Gray, who lives with the Trapps at El Toro, and a sister of Warren M. Gray, who is mentioned elsewhere in this book. J. M. Gray was a track foreman and construction boss for the Chicago and Northwestern Railway in Iowa for over forty years, and well earned the rest he now enjoys. Mrs. Gray is dead. After that, Mr. Trapp entered the employ of E. W. Scripps at Miramar, in San Diego County, and for six years shouldered all the responsibility as foreman of road building on that millionaire's elegant ranch and adjacent roads. He takes great delight in his problems, and derives from his work something more than mere income.

Four children were given to Mr. and Mrs. Trapp, and three they have been allowed to retain, one having passed beyond. She was the second in the order of birth, and was given the attractive names Frances Elizabeth. The surviving children are the eldest, the third, and the youngest—John M., Grace Myrtle and Harry Alfred.

Mr. Trapp who, by the way, has been a Socialist for the past twenty years, is a student of economics, industrial relations and politics, and in common with his good wife, who also has a humanitarian disposition, is deeply interested in the industrial and other questions of the day.

HARRY ARTHUR FROEHLICH.—Among the many freedom-loving citizens of the German Empire who left their native land to escape the iron rule of Bismarck was Joseph Froehlich, a friend and compatriot of Carl Schurz, who came to American as soon as he had finished his required term of service in the German army. He had received an excellent education in the schools of his native country and had been taught the trade of a piano maker there, but after coming to the United States he took up the work of court reporting in the circuit court in Henderson County, Ill. Shortly after coming to this country Mr. Froehlich was united in marriage with Miss Amelia Stuck, who was, like himself, born in Germany. Four children were born to them: William is a blacksmith at Fillmore, Ventura County; Harry Arthur is the subject of this sketch: Tillie resides at Pacific Beach; John is connected with the technical department of one of the large moving picture concerns and makes his home at Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Froehlich are both deceased.

Harry Arthur Froehlich was born at Oquawaka, Ill., December 27, 1873, and passed the first six years of his life in Illinois, when he moved to Winfield, Sumner County, Kans., with his parents. Here his father engaged in the lumber business as agent for the Rock Island Lumber Company, and the family made their home there for about eleven years. Coming to San Diego, Cal., in the spring of 1889, Harry A. started to work for M. F. Heller, continuing with him for the next six years, after which he traveled out of Los Angeles for four years representing the old firm of Steinen and Kirchner, a barber and butcher supply house. On account of ill health he gave up his business association with them and located at Miramar, San Diego County, where he engaged in the grocery and general merchandise business with good success for a period of five years, when he disposed of his business profitably and went to farming at Del Mar. After two years he sold out his leasehold and leased the Boynton fruit ranch at El Toro. At different times he was employed by L. F. Moulton, and on March 1, 1919, he accepted the post of warehouseman for the L. F. Moulton Company, a position of great responsibility and trust, as he handles upwards of $500,000 worth of grain and beans each year.

El Toro is the grain emporium of Orange County, and the greater part of it is handled through the two great warehouses of the L. F. Moulton Company, which have a capacity of 100,000 sacks. They are finely equipped with the latest and most approved machinery for cleaning beans and a roller mill for crushing barley.

On December 25, 1897, Mr. Froehlich was united in marriage with Miss Grace North, a native daughter of the state, Santa Ana being her birthplace. Her parents, who are now both deceased, were John J. and Sophia Jane North, the father, a native of Liverpool, England, while Mrs. North was born in Australia. Mr. Froehlich is a Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World.

ALBERT PRYOR.—A highly-intelligent and industrious representative of an early pioneer family of Southern California, concerning whom it would not be a mere commonplace to say that "his word is as good as his bond," is Albert Pryor, the San Juan Capistrano horticulturist, who owns over forty of the choicest acres in the neighborhood, including eighteen in well-set walnuts. He not only lives in the famous Mission town, but he was born there, on April 6, 1872, and there he attended the public schools, later studying at the excellent St. Vincent's College at Los Angeles, and topping off his student work with a stiff course at the Woodbury Business College, in the same city.

Nathaniel Pryor—sometimes referred to as Don Miguel N. Pryor—was the grandfather of our subject, and came here, it is said, far back in 1828, when he was thirty years of age, being, therefore, one of the earliest Easterners to settle in California. Fifteen or twenty years later, about the time that he was made a Regidor or Councilman, he was one of perhaps ten Easterners who had farms inside of the district of the Los Angeles pueblo and was one of the oldest and most prominent citizens, well thought of and highly respected by everyone. Part of his property was a vineyard, between the river and what is now Los Angeles Street, and on it was an old adobe which, according to Harris Newmark, the pioneer-historian, may still be seen on Jackson Street, the only mud-brick structure in that section. Nathaniel Pryor was twice married, having a son, Pablo by his first wife, and a son, Nathaniel, Jr., by his second.

His first marriage was to Theresa Sepulveda of Los Angeles, who died when her son Pablo was born, in about 1840, and is one of the few, according to Newmark, with the mother of Pio Pico, buried inside of the old Catholic church at the Plaza, Los Angeles. Pablo, or Paul, who was born in Los Angeles, married Rosa Avila of San Juan Capistrano. Her father, Don Juan Avila, was a large landowner and cattle grower. Paul Pryor owned the old Don Miguel Pryor ranch in Los Angeles, as well as a valuable estate in San Juan Capistrano, residing at the latter place until his death in 1878, leaving a wife and six children, Albert being next to the youngest. The widow survived until 1915.

Albert Pryor was with Joseph Mascarel in Los Angeles until his death, and had charge of his estate. During that time, he witnessed many stirring events, and saw the steady progress of the Southland, including the building of the Santa Fe Railroad. In 1894 he was married, in Los Angeles, to Miss Natalia Leonis, a native of Los Angeles, in which city she was brought up, and they have had two children—Albert T. and Paul. Seventeen years ago he bought a residence at San Juan Capistrano, in order to remain there and afford his children the best educational facilities. He owns a farm of forty-three acres, advantageously situated at Serra, and this may some day outlive his Capistrano holding.

LEON EYRAUD.—Southern California has welcomed many sons and daughters of the Hautes Alpes, France, affording them opportunities they would probably never have enjoyed had they remained in their beautiful but less favored country, and among those who have succeeded here, and who, in succeeding, have contributed toward the advancement of the great commonwealth, must be noted Leon Eyraud, the genial and thoroughly attentive proprietor of the Capistrano Hot Springs Resort, twelve miles northeast of San Juan Capistrano. He was born in or near Marseilles, France, on February 24, 1878, the son of Pierre Eyraud, who had married Honorine Cadwel; his father was a blacksmith who had both a smithy and a cafe, and he and his wife were born, married and died in France, passing away at the ages, respectively, of seventy-six and seventy-eight. They had seventeen children, eleven boys and six girls; and among them Leon was the sixteenth in the order of birth. Pierre Eyraud served under Napoleon in 1848, and was esteemed because of his military record.

Leon attended the government, or public schools in France, and learned the blacksmith trade from his father. He served for three years in the French cavalry, and while in France was married to Miss Fannie Faur, who was born near Marseilles. Then he and his bride came across the ocean and the continent to Los Angeles, in 1906, sailing from Havre on the steamship La Provence of the Transatlantique Company on September 22, and landing at New York City, after a pleasant voyage, on September 28. They spent three days in the New World metropolis, and then took the train for Los Angeles, in which city they arrived on October 4.

For four years Mr. Eyraud worked for the Cudahy Packing Company at Los Angeles as a sausage maker, and then he conducted a French boarding-house under the name of the Cafe des Alpes, which he started in 1913.

Having bought the Capistrano Hot Springs on January 1, 1919, he sold his Los Angeles cafe on January 20, 1920. Since then he has expended some $10,000 in fixing up the new resort. He has his own vegetable garden, and produces his own supply of milk, cream and butter. He bought all the buildings, consisting of the main hotel, a store building, a pavilion, a fine kitchen and dining-room, and seventeen cottages and twenty-four tents; and on last Memorial Day catered to over 200 people. He maintains his own poultry ranch, and also a store for various supplies, including oil and gasoline for automobiles, and is also the postmaster of Capistrano Hot Springs. He holds under lease some 150 acres of the Mission Viego rancho, and he has engaged a full staff of competent help who operate under the successful direction of Mrs. Eyraud.

The Springs which have made this resort so famous maintain their temperature of 137 degrees, winter as well as summer, and are charged with the most life-giving substances. They afford Nature another opportunity to dispense her own remedial properties for the restoration of health, and have proven to many persons to contain wonderful recuperative powers. They are situated at a high elevation in the picturesque and romantic mountains of San Juan Capistrano, where the bracing mountain air, and the life-giving heat of a southern sun, tempered by the ever-blowing afternoon sea breeze from the Pacific Ocean, only a short distance away, together make an Elysian paradise. Hundreds of visitors come annually to partake of the beneficial waters and to enjoy the wonderful baths; for the waters are of particular value to those suffering from rheumatism, gout, stomach disorders, skin diseases, nervous affection, neuralgia, and bladder, kidney and liver troubles.

FRED HUTTER.—A decidedly live wire is Fred Hutter, the live-stock dealer in Santa Ana, a circumstance the more interesting because, while Orange County makes no claim as a stock country, it shipped, in 1919, $1,500,000 worth of live stock. He is the proprietor of the "Illinois Stock Farm," and both as a wide-awake buyer and dealer of experience, and a man desirous of handing out the square deal to his fellows, he is enjoying increasing popularity.

He was born at Lincoln, Logan County, Ill., on March 1, 1875, the son of Frank Hutter, born in Germany but a butcher and stockman at Lincoln, where he died in 1918. He married Margaret Wachner, who died when Fred was only two weeks old. The lad was the youngest of four children, but by a second marriage his father had fifteen children, and eleven are living. Fred was reared, therefore, by his stepmother, who died in Illinois in 1919. He attended the German Catholic school at Lincoln, and also for three years the high school, and meanwhile learned the butcher's trade, working under his father.

In 1897 Mr. Hutter came to California for the first time and worked at his trade in various parts of Northern California for about eight years. He then went into Nevada, and from there to Colorado, and while in Denver was united in marriage with an estimable lady. Soon after they went to Lincoln, Ill., but in two months' time arrived back in California. Mrs. Hutter's health being delicate for two years, they moved about seeking a suitable climate, but of no avail, and she passed away in Pasadena in 1908, leaving a daughter, Zelma, now eighteen years old and living in Phoenix, Ariz. In Tucson, that state, in 1913, Mr. Hutter married his second wife, Miss Fredericka Korn, born and reared in Wisconsin until she was ten years old, when she was taken to Connecticut. They have one daughter, Dorothy Mae.

That same year, 1913, Mr. Hutter came to Southern California, and has lived in Santa Ana ever since, preferring that and Orange County to all the other wonder spots in the state. He bought his present place in November, 1919. There are six acres in his stock ranch on South McClay Street, and he has a slaughterhouse there. He buys hogs and cattle, and slaughters and sells to local dealers. He also buys and sells stockers and feeders, and makes a specialty of cows and dairy cattle.

LINDLEY B. SKILES.—A rancher deeply interested in the development of Orange County, whose modest estimate of the fruits of his years of hard, intelligent and public-spirited work still permits him to believe that he has had much to do with the building up of Santa Ana, especially as a home place, is L. B. Skiles, the rancher of 2548 Santiago Street. He was born on December 28, 1857, near Mt. Pleasant, Henry County, Iowa, the son of Henry and Jane Skiles, farmer-folk who made a specialty of raising corn, grain, cattle and hogs. He attended the Mt. Pleasant district school, while he lived with his parents on a farm. After a while Mr. and Mrs. Henry Skiles moved to Johnson County, Mo., and in 1867 took up farming there.

On December 28, 1881, Mr. Skiles was married in Johnson County to Miss Flora L. Miller, the daughter of John and Jane Miller, Missouri pioneers, who came to that state in 1869; and after his marriage he farmed, with three brothers, on an extensive scale in Missouri.

In 1887, during the great "boom," he came to California, and on Christmas Eve arrived in Santa Ana. There he worked at the carpenter's trade for twenty years, and during that period of bustling activity, erected many of the finest and most comfortable homes in Santa Ana. He himself lived on Orange Avenue for a while, and then, in February, 1919, he purchased a home on North Santiago Street, where he has half an acre of walnuts showing a high state of culture.

Four children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Skiles: Harry L. is a rancher, living in Stockton; Roy is a plumber and resides at Santa Ana; Clarence is a cement worker in the employ of Preble & McNeal, of Santa Ana; and Maude, the wife of J. E. Prentice, lives at Azusa.

The standards of the Republican party have always appealed most to Mr. Skiles; but he is too broad-minded and too patriotic to allow partisanship to blind him to the desirability of common action in local affairs, and so throws out partisanship altogether. As an orchardist he cares for four groves—one of twenty, the other of twelve acres—of walnuts in the northeastern section of Santa Ana, or the southwestern part of West Orange; five acres of lemons near the county hospital and ten of oranges near Anaheim; and this keeps him in vital touch with some of the most important of California industries, to whose rapid, but permanent development, he is able to contribute in no small degree.

HAROLD C. HEBARD.—An energetic, hard-working and prosperous young poultryman, who not only thoroughly understands the many problems of his field, but has mastered some concerning the marketing of walnuts and so is also identified, in an interesting manner, with the walnut industry of Southern California, is Harold C. Hebard, a native of Topeka, Kans., where he was born on February 11, 1896. His father, Horace A. Hebard, was born in Iowa, but went to Nebraska when he was about eighteen, and was widely known throughout several Central States as an expert photographer. He had married Miss Belle Cromwell, a daughter of Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Hebard removed to Lincoln, Nebr., and there Harold attended the public school, after which he took a business course at Union College, College View, in the same state. On the evening of Harold's graduation, with honors, from the high school, that is, on June 1, 1915, the Hebards left for California, and their first home was at Santa Ana. The following year they removed to Riverside, and now the parents reside in San Diego; but our subject remained and embarked in a hatchery in Santa Ana. He established what is known as the Orange County Hatchery; and it was not long before he made it the largest and most successful hatchery in the region.

He commenced with a capacity of six thousand eggs, and the following year raised it to nine thousand, with which output he contented himself for a couple of years. During the season of 1919-20, however, he enlarged the hatchery to a capacity of twenty thousand. He has both Pioneer and Jubilee incubators, and uses a heating system devised by himself. He erected a hatching house, twenty-four by thirty-six feet in size, out of hollow tile, and has a ceiling with an air space made of building paper and sawdust packing, that serves to keep the entire room evenly temperatured. For compactness, his incubators are arranged two tiers deep. Although hatching is the main business undertaken by Mr. Hebard—and to that he gives his entire attention from January to August—he has four hundred head of the very choicest Rhode Island Reds, Barred Plymouth Rocks and White Rocks. His hatchery is located on the five-acre ranch of Fern S. Bishop. His five acres of walnuts are under the service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

Between August and January, Mr. Hebard is busy as manager of the Irvine Walnut Association, which last year handled over nine hundred tons of walnuts, which they eventually marketed through the California Walnut Association.

On April 9, 1917, Mr. Hebard was married to Miss Clara Bishop, daughter of the well-known family of Fern S. and Nellie (Deck) Bishop of Santa Ana. The Bishops were old settlers in California, and Mrs. Bishop is a native of Santa Ana, where she was also educated. They have one boy—Harold C. Hebard, Jr.

CHARLES R. FARRAR.—Well known in business and civic circles in Orange County, Charles R. Farrar was born in La Crosse, Wis., February 25, 1864, and when one year old was taken to Minnesota. Three years later the family moved to Quincy, Ill., and there he was reared and educated, receiving his schooling in the public and high schools and finishing with a course at the Gem City Business College. When seventeen years old he entered the hardware business, with the firm of the Cottrell Hardware Company of Quincy. After spending four years learning the business he became traveling salesman in Illinois and Missouri for the same firm and continued for ten years, and at the end of that period traveled for twenty years for the Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett Company, of Chicago, in much the same territory. Having made three different trips to California, he finally concluded to locate here.

In the spring of 1915 Mr. Farrar came to Placentia, and bought out a small hardware store; this he has greatly improved and now has a modern and up-to-date establishment in keeping with the growing community, and with a stock which in its careful selection shows evidence of the years of experience which the proprietor has had the advantage of in the hardware business. In addition to his business demands, Mr. Farrar acts as postmaster of Placentia, receiving his appointment in 1917 from President Wilson when the office was in the fourth class and reappointed when it reached a third class basis.

Mr. Farrar's marriage, which occurred in East Durham, N. Y., united him with Minnie Gifford, a native of New York State, and three children have blessed their union: Harry, married Marion Cober and they are the parents of two sons; he is manager for the Southern Illinois Gas Company at Murphysboro, Ill.; Gifford, is assisting his father in business; and Reba, wife of W. C. Cober, assistant postmaster of Placentia. The family attend the Presbyterian Church.

Active in Masonic circles, Mr. Farrar was made a Mason in Lambert Lodge, No. 659, A. F. & A. M., Quincy, Ill., and demitting, is now a member of Fullerton Lodge, No. 339, F. & A. M. He is also a member of Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., and a charter member of Fullerton Commandery, Knights Templar, and of Quincy Consistory, S. R., as well as Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Los Angeles. For many years he has been and is a member of the United Commercial Travelers and is an active member of the Orange County Hardware Dealers Association. Mr. Farrar is liberal and enterprising and has always shown his readiness to assist worthy enterprises and movements for the betterment of conditions in the community.

W. R. FREEMAN.—A modest, sincere and very public-spirited citizen, albeit he is interested primarily in the problems of ranching, is W. R. Freeman, of 2527 Santiago Street, Santa Ana, where he has lived for the past three or four years. He was born near Northfield, Dakota County, Minn., on September 12, 1886, the son of William H. and Mary C. Freeman, both natives of New York State. They were farmers, too, and early settlers in Minnesota, Mr. Freeman's grandfather having come to Minnesota in 1851.

W. R. Freeman was sent to the district schools in Minnesota, and lived at home, helping his parents, until they removed from Dakota County in 1906 and came to California, whereupon he took over his father's farm in Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Freeman came to Santa Ana and purchased a ranch on North Lincoln. They are now both deceased.

At Waconia, Minn., on June 4, 1907, Mr. Freeman was married to Miss Gussie Thom, a daughter of Fred and Elizabeth Thom, natives of Minnesota and farmers. Miss Thom was born at Waconia, in Carver County. On January 1, 1912, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Freeman removed to California from Minnesota, and they lived on the ranch purchased by the elder Freeman in 1906, continuing to operate it until 1916, when they sold it. The same year Mr. Freeman purchased the twelve-acre ranch on Santiago Street. Two acres are in walnuts, three and a half in oranges, while six and a half are planted to beans. These six and a half acres will probably be planted to Valencia oranges next spring; formerly they had various kinds of old fruit trees, which were grubbed out by Mr. Freeman. The land is watered by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

A member of the First Methodist Church of Santa Ana and a Republican in matters of national political moment, Mr. Freeman tries to do his duty before God and man. He joined Company F of the Santa Ana National Guards in 1918, and expected to have seen active service before the close of the war.

J. WILLIAM SACKMAN.—A native son, who is very successfully developing his choice ranch land, bringing it, by the most scientific methods, to a high state of cultivation, is J. William Sackman, who was born at Oakland on May 1, 1876, the son of John and Bertha (Brower) Sackman. His father was a skilled mechanic, who came to Santa Ana when our subject was two years old, and at Santa Ana he made an enviable reputation for himself in his ability, by original and ingenious, but very thorough means, to do mechanical work.

J. William Sackman attended the schools at Santa Ana, and when only fifteen years of age he started out to make his own way, learning the butcher's trade. At the age of twenty-one he began conducting the Bon Ton Market at Fourth and Broadway, Santa Ana, but in 1905 he sold out and engaged in the manufacture of brick. He established a brickyard at Olive and Hickey streets, where he owned four acres, installed crude oil burners to burn the brick, and machines for the manufacture of brick, and developed the plant until it put out two millions of brick a year. When he had made a success of the enterprise he sold it in August, 1919, to Harvey Garber, but still retains the four acres of land on which the brickyard is located.

In 1916 Mr. Sackman purchased a ranch of nine and a half acres on North Olive and Sixth streets, five acres of which he planted in walnuts and four acres in Valencia oranges. It is improved with a two-story residence, where he makes his home with his family.

On January 6, 1904, Mr. Sackman was married to Miss Gertrude E. Osgood, who was born in Boston, Mass., on May 1, 1880. When a mere girl her father died and she came to California with her mother in 1884. They settled for a while in Los Angeles, and later came to West Orange. Two sons blessed the union, George D. and William C., both pupils in the grammar schools. Fraternally Mr. Sackman was made a Mason in Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and is also a member of Hermosa Chapter, O. E. S. For years he was active in the Merchants and Manufacturers Association and is also a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

EDWIN JULIAN.—An oil man and a rancher long entrusted with responsibility calling for hard, unremitting labor, is Edwin Julian, now retired, who was born in Cornwall County, England, on February 5, 1852, the son of William and Johanna Julian, residents there who were esteemed by all who knew them. He remained at home until he was eighteen, and then decided to try his fortunes in the New World. Coming alone to America, he landed in Quebec in 1869. Then he went to Petrolia, Canada, and worked in the oil fields for ten years; later became a foreman for the Ontario Land and Oil Company, of Petrolia, and had over 500 wells under his personal supervision. The wells had one and two-inch pipes, and each produced from four to 100 barrels of oil a day. To economize power, 120 wells were driven by one pumping plant. The oil basins were shallow, and it was not necessary to go down more than 500 feet to get the flow. Mr. Julian was foreman for this company for twenty-two years, and was the first man to devise a system for the separation of the oil from the water, after the water had gotten into the wells. He used a plug system, plugging the well just below the oil, and above the water line. While in Canada he also had the supervision of five miles of the country roads in the vicinity of Petrolia.

On May 5, 1872, Mr. Julian was married to Miss Harriett Sophia Turner, a native of London, England, and the daughter of Philip and Harriett Turner. Philip Turner was an engineer, who came to America in 1870, followed the next year by his wife and daughter, now Mrs. Julian. He also went to Petrolia, and there made his home.

In 1908 Mr. Julian came to the United States and settled at Santa Monica, soon afterward purchasing a ranch of eighty acres in the Topango Canyon. This was devoted to fruit, alfalfa and bees, and such was his success with the 800 trees, free from insects and worms, that his apples were displayed by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. He had also cows, mules and hogs on his ranch, and in 1917 his bees gathered seven and a half tons of honey. On May 19, 1919, Mr. Julian sold his ranch to his son, Edwin, and removed to Santa Ana, where he purchased a beautiful bungalow at 2345 Spurgeon Street.

Seven children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Julian, and five are still living. The eldest, William Charles, is deceased; Edwin is living on the Topaño Canyon Ranch; John Henry is in Canada; Selena A., Mrs. L. A. Menges, is in Indiana; Victor is a machinist in the Long Beach shipyards; Arthur is deceased; and Fred is in Florida. Mr. Julian is a Mason, and also belongs to the Canadian order of Odd Fellows; Mrs. Julian belongs to the Church of Christ, Scientist.

CLYDE H. ELLIS.—An experienced rancher, who has the advantage of also being an expert machinist and a good business man, is Clyde H. Ellis, the son of a well-known pioneer in the Newport-Greenville-Talbert sections of Orange County. He was born at Tazewell, Claiborne County, Tenn., on May 14, 1885, the son of O. H. Ellis, a native of the same county, who died in 1913, at the age of sixty-three. He came to Santa Ana in 1886, and after living there a year removed to Newport, where he ran a dairy for twelve years. He bought the place he was long identified with some twenty-five years ago, and after a while successfully engaged in the cultivation of celery and sugar beets. When he died he owned 120 acres. He had married Mellie M. Kawood, by whom he had four children. Clyde was the oldest; then came Annie E., the wife of L. J. Buschard; the third in the order of birth was James N. Ellis, a native of Orange County, where he was born at Old Newport, or Greenville, on December 26, 1889; he married Myrtle Washburn. The youngest was Maggie E. Ellis, wife of Oliver Jones, the rancher, at San Anofra, Cal.

Clyde grew up here on his father's various ranches, and at the same time that he was learning how to make himself useful, and to prepare for a tussle with the world, he attended the public schools. His ambition and the desire of his parents for his higher welfare led him to attend the Orange County Business College, where he completed a profitable commercial course. Then he went to San Bernardino, where he accepted a job as a mechanic's helper, and at that he continued for three years. He still was bent on improving his time, and he therefore took a course, in his spare time, with the International Correspondence School, and was declared a competent machinist.

Mr. Ellis next entered the employ of the famous Holt Manufacturing Company, makers of caterpillar tractors, harvesters and threshing machines, as service guide or mechanical expert, traveling and looking after Holt machinery. For a time he made Phoenix, Ariz., his headquarters, and was sent by his company to different parts of Arizona and the Imperial Valley.

In the fall of 1917 Mr. Ellis came back to the Ellis farm, which he rented and operated during that and the following years. It was then that he formed his present association, in partnership, with his brother, James N. Ellis, utilizing the farm owned by his mother. He also put sixty acres into cabbage, barley, hay and beans. He made a specialty, while growing cabbages, of the Winningstad variety, and having started with only $500 in capital, cleared up a small fortune inside of two years. The Ellis ranch has five flowing wells, with a fine pumping plant, giving and handling an abundance of good water, and this has proven a natural advantage, taken care of by a man thoroughly familiar with mechanical problems, and a most valuable asset.

Aside from the Ellis ranch of 120 acres he also leases 525 acres, the Snow and Grover ranches, where he is raising barley, beets and beans, and as is natural for a mechanic of his experience, he has the most modern motive power machinery, using a Best sixty-horsepower tracklayer and a Holt thirty-horsepower tracklayer.

At Santa Ana, in 1913, Mr. Ellis was married to Miss Sadie G. Miller, a native of Keokuk County, Iowa. She was one of seven children, and came to Los Angeles with her parents, Frank C. and Carrie J. Miller. Two children have blessed the Ellis union; one bears the attractive name of Naomi Fern, and the other is Jack N. Mrs. Ellis has proven a valuable helpmate to her husband, and has participated in all his activities for the betterment of the community.

R. EARL ELLIOTT.—A very successful Californian who has become an enthusiast for California is R. Earl Elliott, the mail carrier and rancher, who improves each shining moment, after he has discharged his official duties, in caring for and developing his valuable ranch property. He was born in the comfortable town of Sedalia, Mo., on Washington's Birthday, 1876, the son of William H. and Margaret Frances (Wason) Ellit, who at present reside at Wichita, Kans. His parents removed to Butler, Bates County, Mo., when Earl was a mere child, and in Bates County he was reared on a ranch, for his father had 160 acres devoted to general farming. He attended school in the Harmony district and meanwhile steadily mastered a knowledge of farming. The name was originally Elliott, but the great-grandfather, Thomas, was of Scotch descent, and changed it to Ellit. He was a pioneer of Louisville, Ky., and built one of the first houses there. The name remained as such until the present generation, when Earl with his eldest brother and sister, changed their name to Elliott. When Mr. Elliott was twenty-seven he came to California, in February, 1903, and for eighteen months, from June of that year, served as superintendent of the Santa Ana Cemetery. He undertook to do all the cement work there previously contracted for by private parties, and also started a record showing the lots for which the upkeep was paid by private parties.

After a while Mr. Elliott sold out his cemetery interest to S. H. C. Ritner, and with Dr. Newton, of Santa Ana, studied and practiced chiropractic. This did not permanently satisfy him, however, and he entered the Government service in 1906 and took charge of a rural free delivery route, which he has held ever since. This includes a section southwest of Santa Ana through Talbert, and he was the first carrier to use an automobile for rural delivery in this section.

In 1906 Mr. Elliott built a home at 1702 East Fifth Street and two years later he traded this for J. E. Livesey's home at 319 East Seventeenth Street, where he set out an orchard, and in 1912 he built a new home. In March, 1919, he traded that for a twelve-acre citrus ranch on Warren Street in Tustin, and in December sold it to C. M. Lyon. Then he purchased the five-acre ranch at 314 Santa Clara Avenue from John Winter. The ranch is under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company's service, and so is well supplied with water, and is devoted to Valencia oranges. It is, in fact, now one of the model ranches of its size in the neighborhood.

In 1900, at Butler, Mo., Mr. Elliott married Miss Mabel D. Ritner, the daughter of Spencer H. C. and Mary Ritner, and a native of Henry County, Iowa. Four children have been granted the happy couple. Spencer, who is at present a gun pointer on the Battleship Brooklyn, enlisted at Santa Ana on May 5, 1919, and was sent to San Francisco to be trained on Mare and Goat Island. Ivan R. is a student in the Santa Ana high school; Ruth is in the eighth grade of the grammar school, and Grace is in the sixth grade. The family are members of the First Baptist Church of Santa Ana, where Mr. Elliott is a deacon and is as enthusiastic in his support of all church and civic improvement work as he is in the prosecution of business and the "booming" of the favored section and state in which he lives.

ISAAC R. HENDRIE.—An energetic, hardworking and far-seeing rancher of the sincere, modest type, whose relations to his neighbors are governed by the principle of the Golden Rule, is Isaac R. Hendrie of 1110 West Washington Street, Santa Ana. He was born at Glenwood, Mills County, Iowa, on September 4, 1869, the son of Senator James S. Hendrie, born in Ohio, but a settler of Iowa, where he was a prosperous farmer, owning a half-section of land, half of which was usually devoted to the growing of corn and the other half to hay and timberland. He represented Mills and Montgomery counties as senator of the Iowa legislature, and later was the Democratic sheriff of Mills County, Colo. He was married to Mary L. McClanathan, born in Ohio. In 1886 they moved to Colorado and located on a farm near Wray, then Weld County. When the county was divided he was appointed a commissioner of the new county (Washington County) by Gov. Alva Adams. Later Washington County was divided and he became a commissioner of the new Yuma County, and also county judge until he resigned, in 1909, to move to Long Beach, Cal., where he resided until he died, in the year 1911, at the age of eighty-three. His wife had passed away in 1910.

When a lad of sixteen, Isaac came to Colorado with his parents, who settled near Wray, 160 miles east of Denver. The young man lived at home and rode the range from 1886 until 1900, steadily acquiring, through his father's guidance, a thorough knowledge of agriculture and cattle raising.

Isaac R. Hendrie then purchased his father's land and continued to farm along the same lines as his father had pursued, until 1909, when he determined to push further west, and sold the acreage he had improved. He was a member of the Colorado Cattle Growers Association.

Settling for a while at Long Beach, Mr. Hendrie worked for the City Water Company there for five years, or until July 22, 1914, when he purchased seven acres on West Washington Street, Santa Ana. He set out four acres to apricots and the balance to walnuts, and soon had one of the trimmest small ranches to be seen anywhere for miles around, made more valuable on account of the excellent water supply from the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. Since purchasing this property Mr. Hendrie has established an extensive poultry business, with some 3,000 White Leghorn chickens. He built an incubator house, with two incubators of 500 capacity each, and also has the necessary brooders; he is a member of the Poultry Producers Association of Southern California.

On April 19, 1893, Mr. Hendrie was married to Miss Maude Dakan, the daughter of Riley and Emeline (Cahill) Dakan, born in Ohio and Kentucky, respectively, and early settlers of Marysville, Mo. In 1892 they came to Colorado, but later returned to their farm in Missouri, which they have now owned over fifty years. Mr. Dakan served as a soldier in a Missouri Regiment during the Civil War and is a prominent G. A. R. man.

Mr. Hendrie received a very thorough grammar school training at Glenwood, Iowa, while Mrs. Hendrie was equally fortunate in her training at Wesleyan College, Cameron, Mo., later teaching school in Colorado, and they have striven to give the best of educational advantages to their five children. The eldest, James R., is living at Oakland; Dorothy L. has become Mrs. W. L. Tubbs of Santa Ana; Mary E. lives at home and is a student at the Santa Ana high school; Harold is a pupil in the grammar school, and Walter B., the youngest.

JOHN T. LYON.—Southern California has offered many opportunities to John T. Lyon, and with the keen vision and foresight of a "born" real estate man, he has grasped the opportunities offered and climbed to success through his own abilities and energy. Born in Bastrop County, Texas, April 16, 1875, he was reared to boyhood in Llano, that state, and in 1884, when he was nine years old, the family moved to Washington Territory, where his stepfather took up a timber claim, cleared the land and engaged in ranching.

On reaching nineteen years of age, in 1894, Mr. Lyon started out for himself, and came to Southern California, first locating in Pomona, where he worked for wages on different ranches. In 1895 he came to Santa Ana and worked for a time, then went back to Pomona, in 1896, and worked on ranches once more. In 1897 he settled in Chino, rented land and raised beets for the sugar factory. In 1898 he located at Spadra, raised alfalfa and engaged in the feed and fuel business. In 1901 this enterprising young man bought an eleven-acre orange grove in North Pomona, next to the Richards ranch, and two years later sold this property for a profit of $2,000.

In May, 1904, Mr. Lyon located in Garden Grove, Orange County, bought fifty acres of land, the old Toomey place, and put in a pumping plant, the first one installed in that district; he improved the land and sold it in 1906. From 1906 to 1913 he located in Santa Barbara, erected a business block in that city, and engaged in the mercantile business; this he sold out in 1913, and then located in Los Angeles, where he engaged in the real estate business, selling land in the San Fernando Valley for the H. J. Whitley Company, which concern had opened up land in the Van Nuys to Owensmouth section. In this Mr. Lyon was very successful, selling over a million dollars' worth of property in this district.

In 1917 Mr. Lyon came to Anaheim, and engaged in the buying and selling of orange groves, and is at present the owner of a very fine grove near Anaheim. He started in the real estate business in that city in November, 1919, and his years of experience of the actual, practical sort, throughout Southern California, make him peculiarly adapted to the appraising of land valuations in this section of the state, and particularly in Orange County, and his settling in this district shows a keen appreciation of its possibilities.

The marriage of Mr. Lyon united him with Fannie M. Baker, a daughter of Andrew Baker, one of the early settlers of Anaheim. Fraternally Mr. Lyon is a member of the Santa Barbara Lodge of Knights of Pythias, and of Anaheim Lodge No. 207, F. & A. M.

RALPH A. FULLER.—A very popular and enterprising business man and horticulturist of Orange, who is very enthusiastic and optimistic for the wonderful opportunities and great future for Orange County, is Ralph A. Fuller, who was born on September 19, 1881. His father was Herman A. Fuller, an educator and one of a family of "down easters," tracing their ancestry back to England, which was also the case with the family of Mrs. Fuller, who was Ida W. Andrews before her marriage. Mr. Fuller died when his son Ralph was only ten years old and the lad came to California with his mother in 1895. Mrs. Fuller purchased the old Ainsworth place on Yorba Street at McPherson, consisting of fifteen acres, and in 1909 sold it. Then she built on her ten acres at the southwest corner of Yorba and Chapman streets. These are now devoted entirely to Valencia oranges and the acreage is under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. Mrs. Fuller, who was a very active member of Hermosa Chapter, O. E. S., of which she was past matron and also past noble grand of the Rebekah Lodge of Orange, passed away on Christmas Day, 1913. Of her two children Ralph A. is the eldest, and his sister is Mrs. Olive M. Fine of 303 West Santa Clara Avenue, Santa Ana.

Ralph A. Fuller's early education was received at El Modena public school and Santa Ana high school. After school days were over he took charge of his mother's ranch, and being an admirer of standard bred horses, he was one of the organizers and an officer in the Orange County Driving Club, and also took an active part in their matinees. Among the fine animals he owned was the sire "Raymon," No. 12007. In 1909 he moved to his present place, which he later improved to Valencia oranges. In May, 1915, he took up life insurance and is now connected with the Travelers' Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., and has become a leader among Southern California insurance men. He still finds time to look after his orange orchard and see that it has the proper care, and takes much enjoyment in its development.

Mr. Fuller is active in all community affairs and contributed liberally to the success of the bond drives during the World War. A Republican in national political affairs, he allows no partisanship to affect him in the discharge of his duty as a citizen in matters of local moment. Mr. Fuller is a prominent clubman and a leader in social affairs, not alone in Orange County, but in the metropolis of the Southland as well.

FRED RAY FRASER.—A hard-working, thoroughly capable young man, who is steadily rising in the esteem of his employers, is Fred Ray Fraser, who divides his time as foreman and rancher. He was born at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on March 6, 1891, the son of Francis P. Fraser, who ran both a flour mill and a farm, and had married Miss Rebecca A. Scott. When he was four years old, his parents, in September, 1895, brought him to California, coming directly to Santa Ana, where his father purchased a one-acre apricot grove in Tustin. He lived at home with his parents, while he attended the Santa Ana grammar and high schools, from which he was duly graduated with credit, and well equipped to take his part in the world's work.

Immediately after finishing his high school studies, Mr. Fraser went to work for the Gowen and White packing house, and has since then so advanced in work and responsibility that he is foreman of the walnut and apricot departments.

On December 6, 1911, Mr. Fraser was married at Santa Ana to Miss Hazel Crane, a Nebraska girl, who was born in Brown County. Her mother, Jennie Crane, died in Nebraska, and in 1908 her father, Fred O. Crane, came to California with his family. There were nine children, and she was the youngest daughter.

After his marriage, Mr. Fraser and his wife lived on Valencia Avenue, but in 1919 he sold out and purchased an orange grove at 826 North Baker Street. However, he found the work of handling this new grove too much, with the responsibility of the packing house, so he sold the grove and bought the home at 710 West Washington Street, where he now lives. Three children brighten their home—Velda B., Vivian B. and Evelyn L. Fraser.

Francis P. Fraser, our subject's father, lived at his Tustin home until 1917, when he sold out and moved to Santa Ana, where he bought a home at 615 East Second Street. On May 30, 1919, he passed away, mourned by all who had the good fortune to know him. Mrs. Fraser lives at her home on East Second Street. Mr. Fraser did manly service in the Civil War, marching with Sherman on his celebrated campaign through Georgia, and for four long years engaging under his leadership in other battles; and he was well honored as a modest veteran, free from hate or rancor.

BARRY H. MCPHEE.—A native son of California whose success in buying and selling property has been such that he thinks there is no place on earth equal to the Golden State, is Barry H. McPhee, who was born in Elsinore on November 1, 1893, the son of George W. McPhee, who became one of the proprietors of the Santa Ana Blade, and in whose comfortable home he remained until he was married in 1913. He attended the Santa Ana grammar and high schools, and made a specialty of the commercial course in that institution. Being apt and learning easily, he had time to spare, and so, at the same time that he studied, he also worked for the Blade.

On February 16 he was united in matrimony to Miss Helen Neff, the accomplished and popular daughter of L. H. and Lydia Neff, who came from Lincoln, Nebr., in 1912. Here she attended the Santa Ana high school, and made a host of friends.

Mr. McPhee is employed as a lineman for the Edison Company, in whose employ he has been for the past nine years, and is now connected with the Santa Ana branch, but he is something more than merely an electrician. He has bought and sold two groves and two homes in the past few years, and in doing so has turned over some rather attractive money.

His present holding is ten acres, all in walnuts, one-half of which is interset with Valencia oranges, and the balance is full bearing, and affords to the eye of even the novice a fine sight. The ranch is served by the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and that means plenty of good water, and at the right time.

One daughter, Joy McPhee, a pupil of the Santa Ana grammar school, brightens the home of this accomplished couple, and bids fair to be herself a young woman of the right sort of accomplishments. Santa Ana need not worry about her future with such enthusiastic "boosters" as the McPhees.

Rob McMillan

RUFUS C. McMILLAN.—The wise man of the old has said: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches." The successful contractor of Santa Ana, Rufus C. McMillan, has, by his conscientious workmanship and high principles of business integrity, acquired as a reward that much coveted prize—a good reputation. He was born on Christmas Day, 1879, at Pine Bluff, Ark., and was reared and educated in his native state, early learning the trade of a carpenter. At the age of fifteen he began to follow his trade and when nineteen years old began contracting there, and for a time was in the employ of the Cotton Belt Railroad Company and in 1904 located in Muskogee, Okla., where he continued in the contracting and building business and built several fine residences, one of his patrons at Muskogee being a Mr. Williams, the banker and wealthy oil magnate. In December, 1906, he returned to Pine Bluff, where he spent four years in the building business, erecting many fine homes.

It was in 1910 that Mr. McMillan first came to California, having felt the call for some time previous to inspect the western part of our country. He arrived in Los Angeles on December 31, and for a time visited various cities of the southern part of the state looking for a suitable place in which to engage in his business and finally decided that Santa Ana held out the best inducements to a man of energy and determination. On February 19, 1911, he brought his family here, purchased a lot and built a home for them and very soon demonstrated his judgment by branching out as a contractor and at the end of twenty-three months, beginning on May 1, that year he had completed forty-three buildings. Judging from the success he has achieved since he took up his residence in Santa Ana, his choice of location was well taken. Up to January 1, 1919, Mr. McMillan had erected 105 residences and business blocks in the town, and during 1919, at one time he had fourteen buildings under construction. During the year 1920 he completed twenty-five important contracts and numerous smaller ones in the county. He has not confined his operations to Santa Ana as Fullerton, Placentia, Anaheim, Huntington Beach, Newport Beach and San Juan Capistrano show examples of his skill as a builder. Some of the residences he has built have cost as high as $23,000. Among the buildings in Santa Ana erected by Mr. McMillan mention is made of the Stanley and Gilmacher blocks; Wickersheim and County garages; sheriff's office; and the residences of Bert Annin and W. D. Woodward in Fullerton; Fiscus home in Anaheim; Ray McClintock's in Greenville; the Edwards and Hansen family residences in Placentia; Herbert Rankin, C. E. Jackson, Judge Thomas, W. D. Wilson, Briggs, C. T. Johnson and the Crose homes in Santa Ana; and the Ocean View school building.

Mr. McMillan has been married twice; his first union was on August 4, 1901, in Pine Bluff, Ark., to Miss Callie M. Beach, and they had three children, Daisy Thelma, Grace and Mary Agnes. On December 16, 1914, in Santa Ana his second marriage united him with Miss Pearl Wilcox, a native of Kansas, where she was born near Ness City, but was reared and educated in Dodge City. They have two children, Eugene and Pearl Larene. Fraternally Mr. McMillan is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks. The high regard in which Mr. McMillan is held as a builder is best exemplified by the fact that his former patrons have retained him to construct their buildings without asking for competitive bids. Their confidence in his superior judgment and unquestioned integrity in all business transactions assures them that their work will be most satisfactorily completed.

ROY S. LANCASTER.—A wide-awake young rancher intensely interested in the growth of Orange County, and willing to do his share towards the advancement of Southern California interests, for the benefit of his neighbors as well as himself, is Roy S. Lancaster, whose talented wife and true helpmeet is proud of her birth as a native daughter. He was born in Travers County, Mich., in 1875, the son of James B. and Minnie (Tracy) Lancaster. His father was a druggist and postmaster, and Roy grew up with certain home advantages not accorded every young man.

This did not prevent him, however, at the age of seventeen, from feeling the lure of the outside world, and to such an extent that he went to South Dakota, and in Britton, Marshall County, worked in the harvest field. He also traveled considerably, stopping in each place only for a season, and at Rock Island, Ill., he engaged in mining for a year. From Rock Island he then went to Chicago, where he worked for nearly a year in the Harvey Steel Works, at the same time that he was attending the Columbian Exposition of 1893.

Mr. Lancaster's next move took him to Idaho, where he secured a timber claim; but he stayed there only a year. The greater attractions of California brought him to Orange County in 1894, and here he found employment working out on farms. Since 1913 he has lived on his present ranch at 1426 North Baker Street, Santa Ana.

On July 2, 1901, Mr. Lancaster was married to Miss Grace Greenleaf, daughter of Eli F. and Lucy A. Greenleaf, who was born in Santa Ana. Her father was born in Maine and the mother in Ohio, their marriage taking place in Missouri. They crossed the plains in the sixties in an ox-team train, and spent several years in Northern California. Pioneer settlers of Santa Ana, they came there in 1871, and both passed away there. Six children—four boys and two girls—have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lancaster: Berney; Robert is a high school student; Lucile, Catherine and Ray are pupils in the grammar school; and Jack is at home. Mr. Lancaster is a Republican in national politics, but never allows partisanship to interfere with his loyal and liberal support of any movement likely to make for the betterment of the community in which he lives.

EMIL KRUEGER.—A sturdy pioneer who has become one of the most loyal of American citizens and respected agriculturists of his neighborhood is Emil Krueger, the owner of a very productive ranch on La Veta Avenue, Orange. He was born in West Germany in July, 1863, and his parents were Herman and Mathilda Krueger. They had five children, and all three of those still living are residents of California. Mrs. Krueger having passed away, the father emigrated to the United States nine months in advance of his children. He sought here and found a sheltering government under whose fostering care they could breathe the air of freedom and enjoy equal rights and privileges.

Emil grew up in his native country, and while profiting from the excellent schools there, met and cheerfully accepted the challenge of hard work. In 1883 he came to the United States and spent four years as a weaver in the cotton mills at Exeter, N. H., and in 1887 he came to Orange, Cal., where he worked in orchards and for the Santa Fe Railroad until he purchased his present ranch, which he improved, and thus advanced steadily. He is a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association and the Tustin Lemon Association.

In February, 1893, he was married at Orange to Miss Augusta Rosenthal, also a native of Germany, and by her he has had three children: Herman, a farmer here; Rose, now Mrs. Harris, and Bertha, now Mrs. Cook, both of Orange.

Mr. Krueger purchased his land in 1890, when it was unimproved stubble, and the uneven surface seemed to make it quite unfit for irrigation; but by very hard work during long hours and weary months, he at length set out his fruit trees and accomplished the task of improvement. Now the ranch is so productive and famous that the Valencia oranges are a wonder to behold, and the lemons bring the highest price. He now has fifteen acres in a body, under the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and he also has a pumping plant. He is a member of the Lutheran Church, and as a self-made man, Mr. Krueger belongs to that type of citizen of which the town and county of Orange may well be, as it ever is, justly proud.

SAM STEIN.—A hustling, thoroughly enterprising merchant who has steadily advanced from a modest beginning to a position of prominence in the commercial circles of Santa Ana, in which city he has gained the respect of all classes, is Sam Stein, the proprietor of Stein's Stationery Store at 210 West Fourth Street. By the public generally he is familiarly known for his stature and his jollity; while to his many patrons he is the one out of a hundred who not only takes infinite pains to please, but studies the conditions of today and so anticipates the wants of tomorrow. Once a man has come to be a customer of Stein's Stationery Store, he is seldom found to turn elsewhere for that kind of service.

He was born in Russia on September 5, 1885, and his parents were Samuel H. and Lena Stein. They had five children, and Sam was the second child born to them. When he was still a child, the parents crossed the wide ocean to the United States; and as they stayed in New York for a while, he attended the public schools there, and then for a couple of years went to the City College of New York.

When old enough to do so, Sam learned the plumber's trade, at which he also worked for a couple of years; but on coming to California in 1902 he entered the employ of the Lazarus Stationery Company at Los Angeles. This experience with one of the best firms on the Pacific Coast proved the finest of mercantile schools.

In September, 1914, Mr. Stein came to Santa Ana and started in the stationery business in a small way, with one clerk; and having attended to business, business increased until now he employs eleven persons. He carries a full line of office supplies and stationery, and he maintains such a completely equipped kodak finishing house that, as the only concern of its kind in the county, he does work for many other stores all over Orange County. Naturally, he is a live wire in the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce and the Santa Ana Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

On February 23, 1908, Mr. Stein was married at Los Angeles to Miss Celia Singer of Los Angeles; and two children have blessed their union—Arthur and Helen. He belongs to the Masons, the Elks and the Eastern Star; but as a man deeply interested in public affairs, he is above party and partisanship.

ANDREW J. KOCH.—Coming to Orange County in 1900, Andrew J. Koch has indeed attained a splendid success in the twenty years of his residence here and is now one of the most prosperous citrus ranchers of the Yorba district. Mr. Koch's parents were Henry P. and Lydia (Buckting) Koch, the father being a native of Germany, while the mother was born in Missouri. Henry P. Koch was a pioneer settler of Rhineland, Mo., having left his home in Germany in early manhood, arriving at New York March 6, 1854. Some time after his advent to America he located in Rhineland, where he followed his trade of a blacksmith for many years. He was an industrious, upright citizen, loyal to the land of his adoption, having become a naturalized citizen, and he occupied a respected place in his community. He served in the Twelfth Missouri Cavalry from 1861 to 1865 in the Civil War, being wounded in action. There were four children in the Koch family: Andrew J., the subject of this review; Theo, a wealthy farmer residing in Missouri; William, also a farmer in Missouri; and Clara, the widow of Louis Flucht, who died in Missouri, September 30, 1920. Born February 21, 1861, at Rhineland, Mo., when but a youth Andrew learned the blacksmith's trade in his father's shop. In 1883 he started a blacksmith shop in Luter Island, Mo., where he continued for a period of five years when he sold out and purchased a blacksmith business in his old home town, continuing in business there until 1900, when he came to California. Arriving here, he followed blacksmithing for a number of years at Fullerton, where he built up a profitable business. In the meantime he purchased seventeen acres west of Yorba on Yorba Boulevard. He sold some and retained eleven acres, and here he makes his home. The grove is planted to walnuts and oranges and is now in full bearing. He has brought it up to the highest state of cultivation and it is now one of the most profitable ranches in the vicinity, bringing in a handsome income. Mr. Koch has installed a complete system of cement irrigation pipes and has erected an attractive modern residence costing $4,000, besides up-to-date outbuildings. The prosperous, well-kept appearance of the place betokens the industry and thrift of the owner. In October, 1919, Mr. Koch leased his ranch for oil, being included in a blanket lease. Two wells are now down and have struck oil so he is already receiving an income from his lease.

At McKittrick, Mo., February 11, 1884, Mr. Koch was married to Miss Minnie K. Lindhurst, a native of St. Louis, Mo., and a daughter of Adolph and Louisa (Kallmeyer) Lindhurst, early settlers of Missouri where her father died while the mother came to California and passed away here in 1920. Mrs. Koch was the oldest of their four children. Mr. and Mrs. Koch are the parents of three children: Adolph H. is a rancher at Yorba and is the owner of an eight-acre citrus ranch; his wife, before her marriage, was Miss Myrtle Bubach; Albert W. married Miss Lula McClelland and is with the Standard Oil Company at Fullerton; George A., who married Miss Hattie McCoy is with the Union Oil Company at Anaheim. The family are all members of the Anaheim Evangelical Church and Mrs. Koch is prominent in the work of the Women's Circle of that church. Mr. Koch was made a Mason in Yorba Linda Lodge, No. 469, F. & A. M., is a member of Fullerton Chapter, R. A. M., and also a member of Fullerton Lodge, No. 103, I. O. O. F., in which he is past grand and has served as representative to the Grand Lodge, and he is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics Mr. Koch is an adherent of the Republican party, although not blindly partisan in his views. Unselfish, liberal-minded and a conscientious Christian worker, he well deserves the comfortable fortune that he has accumulated entirely through his own industry and perseverance. Since leaving his home state twenty years ago he had made two trips back and so appreciative and enthusiastic is he over California, and particularly Orange County, that each time he was delighted to be back in the land of sunshine and flowers.

ROBERT R. SMITH.—A merchant whose happy combination of conservatism and aggression in enterprise has brought him substantial success in commercial returns, is Robert R. Smith, the well-known dealer in feed, fuel and ice. He was born and reared on a farm near Rockford, Winnebago County, Ill., on September 25, 1861, and he grew up in Illinois on a farm. His father was Robert C. Smith, and he had married Catherine Stewart. Both parents are now among the silent majority.

The fourth in the order of birth of seven children, Robert attended the rural schools of Illinois, and then helped on a farm until he was twenty-six years of age, when he engaged in the grain and stock business in Orchard, Mitchell County, Iowa. Later he removed to Traer, Tama County, Iowa, where he continued the same line of business for seven years, coming to Santa Ana, Cal., in 1905. His first trip to California was as early as 1887, then another trip in 1892, when he was married in Santa Ana to Grace Smiley, a sister of his late partner, by whom he has had three children: Stewart is the athletic coach at Fullerton high school, having served in the U. S.

Marines during the World War; Carson, who was a chemist in the U. S. service at Washington, is now with the Goodyear Rubber Company at Akron, Ohio; Harold is attending the Santa Ana high school. After locating in Santa Ana in 1905, Mr. Smith established himself in the grain business as Smiley and Smith, at 401-403 West Fourth Street, which continued until 1915, when he purchased Mr. Smiley's interest and continued the business of retailing feed, fuel and ice until December, 1919, when he sold out to give all of his time to real estate. The family attend the United Presbyterian Church. In national politics Mr. Smith is a Democrat, and both he and his family are distinguished for their public-spiritedness.

Few men in Santa Ana are better or more favorably known than Robert Smith. He was elected to the school board in 1915, for a four-year term; and during that period was president of the board of trustees for three years. He installed the Junior College and advocated such radical changes in the direction of the best business methods in the management of the schools that debts were cleaned up, and when he left that high office he turned over to his successor everything in apple-pie order.

It may be added that Stewart Smith has enjoyed the honor of coach at both the Santa Ana and the Fullerton high schools, where he has made a record for handling boys; while Carson Smith, the Washington chemist, who directed the services of twenty subordinates, has made a record for handling men.

JOB DENNI.—A native of Canton Unterwalden, Switzerland, Job Denni was born on September 30, 1878, at Geswil. He was educated in the public schools of his native country and is the only one now living of a family of four children born to his parents. Job Denni lived in Switzerland until 1902, then decided to seek his fortune in the United States, and having an uncle, Louis Denni, who had been a resident of Southern California since 1881, living in Los Alamitos, Orange County, he came here and his first employment was with the Los Alamitos Sugar Company. So faithful was he in the discharge of his various duties that he soon won the good will of his employers, and also mastered the English language by persistency of purpose so that he is proficient in his knowledge of that tongue and feels that it has had no small assistance in his success.

Mr. Denni's uncle was engaged in the dairy business at Los Alamitos, leasing land from the Bixby Land Company. After working for his uncle by the day, mastering the details of the business, he took over his uncle's interests in 1912 and has since been the successful proprietor of what is known as Dairy No. 2. Mr. Denni owns 150 head of fine Holsteins, besides which he has an interest in other herds. His stock is kept largely on sugar beet pulp, the home dairy ranch being contiguous to the sugar company's plant. This is one of the oldest dairy ranches in Orange County and under the management of its owner produces on an average of 90,000 pounds of milk per month, which he finds market for in Los Angeles and Long Beach. The ranch covers 500 acres of ground and he grows large quantities of alfalfa and grain. Previous to buying out his uncle he operated Dairy No. 1, in Los Angeles County, near Signal Hill.

On April 18, 1910, at Long Beach, Job Denni was united in marriage with Miss Juanita Enfield, a native daughter, born in San Francisco. Her parents were of French and German extraction and her mother is still living at Long Beach, but had been a resident of San Francisco for forty-five years. Four daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Denni—Juanita, Mary, Marguerite and Josephine. Mr. Denni is a member of the Knights of Columbus of Anaheim.

In 1905 Mr. Denni began buying land in the Cypress district, making his first purchase of ten acres, and to this he has added from time to time until he now owns 120 acres, twenty acres of which he has set out to Valencia oranges and the balance is used for alfalfa and barley. He put down a fine well, 618 feet deep, installed a pumping plant and put in a cement pipe line for irrigating his acreage, even supplying his neighbors with water, such an abundant supply did he get. He was the very first man to install a pipe line and many of his neighbors have profited by his example and have connected up with his line. By his progressive methods he has demonstrated that his section is a coming Valencia district and thereby enhanced the value of the properties thereabouts. It had been said that citrus fruit could not be grown successfully west of Magnolia Avenue and when Mr. Denni bought his land, which was composed of what is known as dead sand upon which grain would not grow six inches high, people said it was useless, but his experimental work has won commendation and others are following in his footsteps and many acres have been set to oranges. Mr. Denni is a self-made man and by his industry and close application to business has won for himself a decided success and stands high in the esteem of all who know him for his square dealings.

Job Demmi

RUPERT BEST.—A pioneer of the early eighties, who is hale and hearty in his discharge of home duties at the age of seventy-two, and is still highly esteemed as a most useful citizen, is Rupert Best, for many years an active member of the Maccabees and long their valued organist. Now he lives retired at 1150 Hickey Street, visited regularly by devoted friends who find pleasure in talking with him about old times. He was born in Cornwallis, Kings County, Nova Scotia, on October 29, 1848, the son of Elisha and Mercy Ann (Bishop) Best. His father was a farmer in the fertile valley of Cornwallis, who raised potatoes, apples and various kinds of fruit; and while Rupert was attending the district school, he lived at home and helped his father to run the farm, thus gaining a valuable experience.

At the time of attaining his majority, Mr. Best left home and went to Halifax where for five years he clerked in a shoe store. Then, having learned the ins and outs of that business, he himself embarked in the same line, and continued to sell shoes until he came to California in the fall of 1882. On October 15 of that year he arrived at Santa Ana, and having purchased forty acres six miles to the southwest of the town, he lived there eleven years, enjoying the companionship of and assisted by his family. He devoted his ranch to general farming, and for the most part raised potatoes, barley and alfalfa.

The twenty-fifth of November, 1878, witnessed the marriage at Halifax, Nova Scotia, of Mr. Best and Miss Alice Maude West, the daughter of James T. and Sophia West, who were early settlers of Nova Scotia. Mr. West owned two ships and engaged in trade between the West Indies and Nova Scotia, sending from Halifax cargoes of dried, salted and pickled fish and bringing back West Indian products, including sugar. Mrs. Best had been educated at the district school in Halifax, and proved an excellent helpmate to her devoted husband. In 1893 he traded his ranch for his present place at 1150 Hickey Street, Santa Ana, which he improved with a modern residence and here he has since resided. On February 8, 1918, Mrs. Best passed away, mourned by her family and friends.

Six children blessed this fortunate union: Ida B. is the wife of Charles F. Coulthard, the alfalfa rancher of Chino; Charles Newton, the second-born, affords his father a comfortable home; Lilly is Mrs. Deardorff of Lents, Ore.; Percy L. is a driller at Oil Fields; Louis K., of Sixth Street, is employed by the Edison Company; and Eddie Grant is also with that firm. In national politics a Democrat, Mr. Best always works and votes for the best men and the best measures in local affairs, irrespective of party.

Mr. Best has always been devoted to the study of music, and for twenty-five years, or from 1892 until 1917, he served as the organist to the Knights of Maccabees. This extended period speaks much for the vitality of this rugged gentleman who has passed his three score years and ten. Mr. Best's mother was also of an exceptionally hardy constitution. She joined him in California at the age of seventy-four, and it is said that the balmy climate of the Golden State, and particularly Orange County so benefitted her that she was able to add nearly a quarter of a century to her life, attaining the fine old age of nearly ninety-six.

JAMES CLOW METZGAR.—How much of the success of the Chamber of Commerce as the liveliest kind of an agency in promoting permanently the best interests of Santa Ana is due to the labors, well directed and untiring, of its secretary, James Clow Metzgar, those who are familiar with his exceptional gifts and fortunate training, as well as his unselfish devotion to the day's work on hand, know. He was born at Monongahela City, Washington County, Pa., on July 19, 1876, the son of Daniel H. Metzgar, a dentist of Pittsburgh and a war veteran. He married Mary Virginia Clow, the daughter of Dr. James L. Clow, whose father was a pioneer of Pittsburgh and once owned land from the center of the present Pittsburgh business district five miles up the Alleghany River to Sharpsburg. James Beach Clow, father of Dr. Clow, was the first town clerk of Pittsburgh and the first elder in the first Presbyterian Church established there. He was a son of Captain Clow of the Revolution, and both families are on record in the first United States census, published in 1790, in the Pittsburgh district.

James C. Metzgar attended the common and the high schools of Pittsburgh, and later entered the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in its telegraph department. In 1902 he came West to California, and took up real estate and bond brokerage. At present he is the secretary of the Santa Ana Chamber of Commerce, and also of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Orange County and the Santa Ana Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

At Uniontown, Pa., on March 14, 1899, Mr. Metzgar was married to Miss Belle Hustead, daughter of William Hustead, a prominent coal operator of that city, who had married Mary Brown. Both the Husteads and the Browns were pioneer families of Fayette County, Pa. Three children were born of this union: Miss Mary Virginia Metzgar is now at the Westlake School for Girls in Los Angeles; James Hustead Metzgar has been attending the Santa Ana high school; and Edgar Clow Metzgar is deceased. The family attend the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Metzgar belongs to the Orange County Country Club, the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Elks. In national politics a Republican, he is at all times nonpartisan in his "boosting" for Santa Ana and Orange County.

A thorough American, Mr. Metzgar naturally takes pride in his ancestry. His father's family came from Holland, and descended from the French Huguenot, Thebald Metzgar, who established the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, and died in 1642, leaving a large estate, later taken over by the Holland Government. His mother's family, on the other hand, came from pure Scotch blood, descending from Captain Clow of the Dragoons in the American Revolution. He was the youngest son in a family of twelve, and the only one who came to America.

FELIX YRIARTE.—A public-spirited, highly-esteemed citizen of Brea, who warmly advocates popular education and furnishes the best of examples of industrious citizenship in working eight hours a day in the shops and then eight hours on his ranch, is Felix Yriarte, who was born in Basses-Pyrenees in Spain, November 20, 1884, and came to America in 1889, when he was five years of age. His father was Patricio Yriarte, a sheep and cattle owner and herder, and his mother, Pascuala (Arrese) Yriarte, was also a native of Navarra, in the Basque country. When eleven years of age, Felix tended the flocks of sheep at Olinda, and there was then a number of oil wells there. His father controlled, under lease, 4,000 acres, and had 6,000 head of sheep in an open, wild country. Felix went to school in Orange County, Cal., and here learned his English.

These good parents lived at the old ranch home in Brea until the death of both in March and April of 1915, and our subject worked on the farm for his father until he was twenty-five years old. He had full charge of the machinery and the farm work, and when the time for a larger development came, he was instrumental in erecting the very first oil well derrick of the Brea Canyon, in the hills south of Brea, where the field has proven the largest in the county.

Now Mr. Yriarte understands oil production as well as anyone, and he has also become an expert acetylene welder and does the most difficult lathe work in the shops of the Union Oil Company at Brea. This is interesting in contrast to Mr. Yriarte's experience in San Diego some years ago, when he was swindled out of $4,000 through an unwise land investment. He had an estate of thirty-three acres left him by his father, which he improved to lemons and sunk his own well and sold in November, 1920. On Orange Street, at Brea, he erected the first residence, in 1909.

At Los Angeles, on December 2, 1909, Mr. Yriarte was married to Miss Celestine Lorea, a native of the Spanish Basque country, who came to the United States in 1906. Four children have blessed this union, and they are Mary, Joseph, Paulina and Marguerita. Mr. Yriarte is a member of the Knights of Pythias, and also of the order of D. O. K. K. of Los Angeles.

WILLIAM J. FITSCHEN.—A young and promising rancher whose career is all the more interesting because he is a native son, and one alert to every opportunity presented by the great commonwealth of California, is W. J. Fitschen, resident on La Veta Avenue, Orange, where his beautiful fourteen-acre ranch is exclusively devoted to citrus fruits. This property, formerly part of the estate of his father, Henry Fitschen, who bought it in 1906, he has owned for several years.

Mr. Fitschen was born in Orange County, in April, 1890, and is the son of Henry and Anna Fitschen, natives of Germany, from which country they emigrated to the United States in 1878. The next year they moved west to California and Orange County, and ever since Henry Fitschen has been one of the producers of Orange County. There were nine children in the family, all Americans by birth, and they bear the names of William J., Anna, Henry, Emma, Frederick, Louisa, George, Mary and Louis.

Brought up and educated in Orange County, where he enjoyed the advantages of both the common and the high schools, Mr. Fitschen early engaged in agricultural pursuits, and so has traveled further in that scientific and industrial field than most men of his age. On June 2, 1915, he was happily united in marriage to Miss Wanda O. Schoeneberg, daughter of Mrs. Marie Schoeneberg, by whom he has had two children, Marie and William. She is a native of Wisconsin, and is a fine type of the Western woman of that part of the country. The family are worthy members of the Lutheran Church, and are among those most enthusiastic for all that spells the permanent development of Orange County on the broadest and best lines.

HUBERT H. DALE.—A Minnesotan so keenly alive to the trend of modern trade that, foreseeing the development of the automobile industry, he was able to take the tide at the flood, as Shakespeare says, and attain to fortune, is Hubert H. Dale, of the well-known firm of Dale & Company, proprietors of the auto body, top and sheet-metal works at 418-428 West Fifth Street, Santa Ana. He was born at Fairmont, in the North Star State, on December 14, 1879, the son of D. A. Dale, who became a hardware merchant of Santa Ana and has had a pleasing part in the fitting out of many settlers in this favored region. He married Miss Amy J. Allen, who became the mother of five children, among whom Hubert H. was the oldest. All the family are now living.

The lad grew up in Minnesota and attended the excellent grammar and high schools in the vicinity of his home. Then he took a course in a business college, and thereafter engaged in the livestock business in Chicago. He next went to Wisconsin and entered the trade in building materials; in each of these undertakings acquiring more and more experience of value later when he joined the busy, competitive workers on the Coast.

In 1912, Mr. Dale came to California and Fullerton, and for five years he was engaged in making well casings—a line of activity he abandoned only to take up another, his present occupation, still more attractive. Now he has a large, modern shop, equipped with every kind of machinery needed; and with a trained staff of twenty-five men, he handles the bulk of the business in his field for Orange County. The reputation of the establishment, not only for fair dealing but also for experience and facilities enabling it to meet almost any emergency, has very naturally brought it steady patronage, with very little solicitation.

At Oshkosh, Wis., on November 11, 1910, Mr. Dale was married to Miss Ivy Guenther, a daughter of August Guenther and a native of Wisconsin; and two children, Hubert H., Jr., and Loraine M., have blessed their union. The family attend the Episcopal Church. Mr. Dale is an Elk and a Republican.

Though unable to give much time to public affairs without the neglect of his business, Mr. Dale accepted election as city trustee in April, 1919, and notwithstanding his brief residence here, he has made his presence and influence felt in the unfailing support of every movement likely to advance Santa Ana and Orange County within and beyond California.

JOSEPH HOLTZ.—A self-made rancher who has become prosperous and also expert as a beekeeper, is Joseph Holtz, who was born at Herringen, Kreis Saarburg, Lorraine, on May 12, 1870, the son of Louis and Margareta Holtz, with whom he lived in that district on a farm until he was twenty, meanwhile enjoying the usual common-school education and learning the ins and outs of scientific agriculture. In the fall of 1890, he came to the United States quite alone, traveling almost direct to Los Angeles, and from Los Angeles to Orange. Here he worked on farms when vegetables were the main crops, and raised potatoes and cabbage. After a while, grapes were planted and raisins became the crop. However, as the growers were not organized there was no profit from the enterprise and labor.

In 1894, he came to Silverado Canyon and became interested in the raising of bees. He spent the summers in bee culture, and during the winters worked out as a ranch hand. In 1901 he purchased a half-section of land, and this is now the site of his ranch in Silverado Canyon.

Only an adobe house was standing on the property, and he set out to improve the land in many ways. In 1905, he built a ranch house, and the same year he married, in Santa Ana, on January 24, Miss Mary A. Veith, born at Humphrey, Nebr., the daughter of Ignatz and Julia Veith. They came from Columbus, Nebr., in 1903, and having enjoyed community advantages had been able to give their daughter a good common school education. Immediately after the marriage, the husband and wife moved onto the ranch, so that the improvements now there are their handiwork.

They have ten acres in barley, three acres in wheat, three acres in corn, ten acres in alfalfa, and this alone yields from four to seven cuttings a season. Water is obtained from Silverado Creek by private right of irrigation; the acreage was originally railroad land. There is an acre of all kinds of fruit trees for domestic use; and there are also horses, cattle and chickens, and some 160 colonies of bees, and the season of 1920 yielded him thirteen tons, being the best season he ever had; he is a member of California Beekeepers Association.

Six children have come to bless the domestic life of Mr. and Mrs. Holtz. Joseph L., Alban P., Margaret M., Henry A., Agnes A., and Marie A. The four eldest attend the Silverado School, of which Mrs. Holtz is one of the trustees. The family attend the Catholic Church of Santa Ana, and Mr. Holtz is a member of the Knights of Columbus. In national politics, they are Republicans.

ALBERT WILLIAM WOOD.—Not every popular official so well deserves the honors accorded him as does Albert William Wood, the constable of Anaheim Township, the late marshal of the city of Anaheim and license tax collector, nor does every favored office holder succeed so well in carrying his honors with modesty and dignity. A native of Quebec, Canada, where he was born on June 27, 1875, Mr. Wood was the son of a farmer, John Wood, now deceased, whose wife was Miss Grace Wilson before her marriage. They were the parents of nine children and Albert William was the seventh child.

From twelve years of age he was reared at Vankleek Hill, Ontario, and there received his education in the grammar and high schools, helping on the home farm and teaching for two years after his own schooling was finished. Next he matriculated at McGill University at Montreal, expecting to study medicine, but he found at this time that his health would not permit him to continue the confinement necessary to complete the course, so decided on a business career. Entering a provision house, he clerked there for a couple of years, and in 1899 came west to Bisbee, Ariz., where he engaged in the livery and undertaking business, and under the firm name of Fletcher and Wood, came to have the leading business in this line in that frontier mining town. Wishing to locate in California, he disposed of his interest in the business in 1911 and came to Anaheim. For two years he ran a livery stable, then sold out and went into general contracting and ranching, continuing in this for some time.

On May 1, 1918, Mr. Wood was appointed city marshal of Anaheim and the same year was elected constable of Anaheim Township, and he is now filling the duties of that office as well as that of deputy sheriff. In May, 1920, he resigned his office as city marshal and license tax collector in order to engage in business, and he was the proprietor of the People's Service Station at 130 South Lemon Street, and also agent for the Motor Transit Company at Anaheim, said to be the largest stage company in the world. In November, 1920, an opportunity presented itself for him to engage in the real estate business with J. S. Howard and disposing of his business to advantage he is now devoting his time to his official duties and the Howard Realty Company, their offices being located on South Los Angeles Street.

At Bisbee, Ariz., February 15, 1904, Mr. Wood was married to Miss Veronica Jane White, a daughter of Patrick and Jane White, and a native of Tempe, Ariz. Mr. and Mrs. Wood are the parents of four children: John Albert, Mary Patricia, Allan William and Wilson Dowling. The family home is at 422 West Broadway, Anaheim.

While Mr. Wood is a Republican in politics, he is broad-gauged when it comes to issues affecting only the community in which he lives. In fraternal circles, he is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, being a member of Lodge No. 19, at Bisbee, Ariz. He was made a member of Elks Lodge No. 671, at Bisbee, but is now a charter member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, of the Elks.

ULYSSES S. AMACK.—The distinction of being the leading contractor and builder of fine homes in Orange County belongs to Ulysses S. Amack. He is a native of Missouri, born March 9, 1869, in Putnam County, and when two years of age the family moved to Iowa. He was the second child of three children born to Bartholomew and Julia Wilson Amack, born in Indiana, who lived in Missouri, and later Iowa. The father served in Company I, Twenty-third Missouri Volunteer Infantry, in the Civil War for eighteen months, when he was honorably discharged by reason of physical disability, with the rank of corporal. He had studied medicine under Dr. Carlisle of Putnam County, Mo., and had also taken a course at the Keokuk Medical College and received his degree of M. D. and was just going to start practicing medicine in Summerset, Iowa, when he died from heart failure, January 14, 1872. Ulysses was reared on a farm and received his early education in the country schools. When he was three years old his father died. His stepfather, H. D. Ockerman, was a carpenter, and he taught Ulysses the trade, which he naturally had inherited a taste for, as both his paternal and maternal relatives were mechanics. He was quite young when he began his apprenticeship and after becoming a proficient carpenter he followed his trade successfully in Norton County, Kans., from 1884 till 1890, when he removed to Denver, Colo., where he followed the trade until he returned to Iowa.

In 1902 Mr. Amack came to Long Beach, Cal., where he engaged in carpenter work for four years, then locating at Anaheim. At first he was employed by others, but for the past ten years he has conducted a contracting and building business for himself. At one time he was a member of the contracting firm of Amack, Bever & Wilson of Anaheim, who constructed a number of the leading business blocks there, among which, worthy of note, mention is made of the Yungbluth Block and Carroll Block. Mr. Amack has made a specialty of fine homes, and from February, 1919, to October, 1920, he has besides others to his credit the construction of homes for the following residents of Anaheim: M. E. Beebe, Andy Koch, Oscar Dykeman, George Barry, Fred Wisel, Harry Spielman, Franz Jauernik, J. W. Sebastian, J. W. Duckworth, and many others; also seven bungalows for the Anaheim Improvement Company and three for the Anaheim Union Water Company. Besides these homes at Anaheim he has also constructed residences for James A. Jensen and Oscar Dykeman at Fullerton; the Golden State school building, east of Anaheim, and the club house for the Anaheim high school.

In recognition of his splendid ability as a dependable, high-class builder, the high school board of education for many years secured Mr. Amack to make the repairs and improvements of buildings until now he has too much work on hand. He is a member of the First Methodist Church and served as a member of the building committee during the erection of their beautiful house of worship, and is a member of the board of trustees.

In Wayne County, Iowa, on March 17, 1895, Mr. Amack was united in marriage with Miss Sadie E. Wolf, a native of Ottumwa, Iowa. She was the daughter of Josiah and Minerva (Travis) Wolf, born in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, who were farmers in Wayne County, Iowa. Her father died in Iowa, and her mother spent her last days in Long Beach. Mrs. Amack was educated in the schools of Albia, Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Amack had three children, and two are living: Wayne W., a graduate of the Anaheim high school, who is a natural mechanic, is foreman of his father's building business and also fills the position of draftsman; and Coy, attending the high school. In fraternal circles Mr. Amack is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World, and with his wife is a member of the local Rebekah lodge, and in national politics are Republicans.

DR. HESTER TRIPP OLEWILER.—Although but a recent addition to the professional circles of Santa Ana, Dr. Hester T. Olewiler, the able and efficient osteopathic physician and surgeon, with offices at 114½ East Fourth Street, has established a large and growing practice.

Dr. Olewiler is the wife of Claude E. Olewiler and is a native daughter and a descendant of an honored pioneer family. She was born in Riverside County, her parents being William B. and Alice (Hopkins) Tripp, the former a native of California, while her mother was born in New Mexico while crossing the plains to California. Grandfather Tripp laid the first brick in San Bernardino. Dr. Tripp was reared in Hemet, Riverside County, where she attended the public school and graduated from the Hemet high school. She served two years as an apprentice in the Hemet Public Library and as assistant librarian.

After severing her connection with the library she attended the Los Angeles College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, where after taking a full course of four years she was graduated in 1918 with the degree of D. O. For a while she practiced her profession in Los Angeles and on July 10, 1919, opened her office in Santa Ana. Dr. Olewiler stands high in her profession and is a member of both the state and county associations of osteopathic physicians, being chairman of the public educational committee of Orange County; she is also a member of the Los Angeles Women's Osteopathic Association. She is fast winning a reputation as a skillful and conscientious practitioner and can look forward to a long and useful career.

WALDO R. McWILLIAMS.—An experienced lumber dealer who has naturally had much to do with building interests in Orange County, thereby laying the foundations in one generation for the welfare of another, is Waldo McWilliams, the genial and accommodating manager of the Gibbs Lumber Company of Fullerton. A native of the Hawkeye State, he was born at Hedrick, Iowa, on March 1, 1890, the son of Samuel McWilliams, a lumber dealer, who married Miss Berthenia Smith, a native of Iowa. The family came to Los Angeles in 1902, and both parents are still living and are residents of Pasadena.

Educated in the public schools of Los Angeles, Mr. McWilliams attended the Los Angeles high school for two years, and then engaged in the lumber trade in that city. After that, he worked at various places, for a while at the Anaheim yard, then coming to Placentia as manager, and finally settling as manager at Fullerton. His father had formerly been manager of the Fullerton yard, and after Waldo McWilliams was married he came to Fullerton to remain. It was not long before he had become a live member of the Board of Trade and the Fullerton Club.

On June 9, 1915, Mr. McWilliams was married to Miss Clara Linebarger, the ceremony taking place at San Diego. The bride was a daughter of Dallison S. and Ellen Linebarger, and a native of California. Husband and wife attend the Christian Church, and Mr. McWilliams votes the Democratic ticket. He is fond of out-of-door sports, and especially interested in baseball.

RAYMOND F. FRANTZ.—A highly respected citizen who has risen from routine newspaper work, both in the circulation and mailing departments in Santa Ana and in Los Angeles, to become a very successful horticulturist making a specialty of citrus fruit, is R. F. Frantz, familiarly known as "Ray" of Palm Drive, La Habra district, one of the most outspoken enthusiasts for Orange County, despite that his ranch property is almost over the county line. He was born in Argonia, Sumner County, Kans., on October 29, 1886, the eldest son in a family of three boys and three girls, the son of F. E. Frantz now of the escrow department of the Whittier National Bank, and formerly the banker at Argonia. F. E. Frantz is a native of Virginia, came to Illinois and Kansas as a pioneer, and now at sixty-eight years of age, enjoys the best of health. He had married Miss Mary Waugh, of Alsace-Lorraine, whose bi-lingual training made her familiar from childhood with both French and German.

The subject of our review, who was brought to California a babe of three months, and to Orange County when ten years old, attended the grammar schools of Santa Ana and Los Angeles, and then for a term went to the commercial department of the high school in the larger city. After that, he entered the employ of the California Wholesale Hardware Company in Los Angeles, and still later, he and his father opened and managed a hardware and implement store at Whittier.

In 1910 he purchased a citrus grove of two acres in East Whittier, and later he purchased a fourth interest in forty-one acres, and assumed the management of the property. This gave him valuable ranching experience, and for years he has been in close touch with the growing of citrus fruits. More recently he has bought thirty-one acres, and Mr. Espolt sixteen acres of a trim ranch of forty-seven acres, set out to Valencia oranges and Eureka lemons, and he has joined the La Habra Citrus Association, and has undertaken to farm sixty acres of rented land as a dry-farming enterprise. He uses a tractor and all the other up-to-date machinery desirable. He is a member and president—1920-1921—of the La Habra Chamber of Commerce, is also identified with the Farm Center, and served as vice-president of that useful organization.

On September 7, 1910, Mr. Frantz was married to Miss Alma W. Espolt, daughter of William Espolt, the pioneer citrus rancher, of Whittier. She was born in Iowa, and has one child, Maribel Louise. Mrs. Frantz is a high school graduate, and is active in the Woman's Club of La Habra, and in Red Cross work. Mr. Frantz was a committeeman for "drive" work during the late war, and he belongs to the Blue Lodge and the Royal Arch Masons.

LEASON F. POMEROY.—Orange County has been fortunate indeed in the caliber of the men who have elected to make their homes and carry on their business interests within the confines of this fertile spot. Men of affairs, alive to the opportunities to be found here, they have each one aided in bringing about the present prosperity of the county, and in so doing have advanced their own interests as well. Among these, Leason F. Pomeroy, dealer in automobiles, stands out from the ranks as an enthusiastic "booster" for his home community and keenly alive to the advantages to be found here. He was born in Adams County, Nebr., on a farm, February 23, 1877. When he had reached five years of age the family moved to New York state and he was educated in the schools of East Aurora, that state, and later engaged in the mercantile business with his father, and for twenty-two years he lived in New York state.

Seeking newer fields, Mr. Pomeroy returned to his old home in Nebraska and for seven years farmed 320 acres, meeting with success. In 1910 he came to Anaheim and bought twenty acres of land one and one-half miles east of town. One-half of this was in bearing Valencia oranges and he planted the remainder to the same variety, developing a finely producing grove, which he sold in 1919.

In March, 1919, Mr. Pomeroy entered the automobile business, at 134 South Los Angeles Street, and he is agent for the Chalmers and Hupmobile cars, both high class in every respect, the Hup car notable especially for the fact that its engineers have built a chassis so free of complications that it is easily understood by the mechanically-inclined owner and quick aid given. Mr. Pomeroy is also agent for the Swinhart tire.

The marriage of Mr. Pomeroy united him with Velma M. Eckersley, a native of Illinois, and two sons have been born to them: Wray S., and Leason F., Jr. Fraternally, Mr. Pomeroy is a member of Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. E.; he is a member and was one of the governors of the Mother Colony Club, and in March, 1918, he was elected a member of the Anaheim Board of Education and was clerk of that body. He has also served as a director in the Anaheim Mutual Orange Growers' Association, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' Association. It would be hard to find a man more fully in accord with the western spirit of progress than is Mr. Pomeroy, or one more willing to work for the advancement of his district.

Raymond F. Frantz

WILLIAM J. FISCHER.—One of Anaheim's earlier settlers, a man highly esteemed among his associates, was William J. Fischer, who contributed generously to the upbuilding of both the business and the agricultural development of this locality. Born in Saxony, Germany, July 26, 1856, Mr. Fischer came to the United States in 1872 at the age of sixteen years. He had learned the trade of cooper in New York and engaged in this line of work in that city. In 1879 he came to California, locating at San Francisco and here he entered the employ of the Dreyfus Cooperage Company, coming to Anaheim in 1881 in the interests of this company. He later bought twenty acres of land in North Anaheim, planted a vineyard and later sold it to Peter Schumacher of Fullerton. Mr. Fischer also erected a cooper shop on North Lemon Street, near Chartres Street, and here he carried on a large business, making barrels and casks for the wine makers, at one time having six men in his employ. He also planted ninety acres in walnuts near Anaheim for the Dreyfus Company and for a time he also engaged in wine-making.

Mr. Fischer was united in marriage in 1882 with Miss Clara Hattemer, who was born in the Rhine country, Germany. She came to New York in 1872 and ten years later to Anaheim, when she and Mr. Fischer were married. Of the five children born to them, three are living: Birda is the wife of William Zimmerman, an orange grower of West Anaheim; William J., deceased; Clara Maude is the wife of Victor W. La Mont, and the mother of two children—Victor and Allen; Charles H., a rancher in Pomona, married Miss Hazel Cook and they have one daughter, Lela; and Robert, deceased. The children were born, educated and reared in Orange County.

Mr. Fischer died on October 26, 1906, and his passing made a void in a large circle of friends and in the community, for his sterling qualities and devotion to the best interests of Anaheim had given him an honored and esteemed place. He was a member of the Fraternal Aid and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and was very popular in membership of these organizations. Mrs. Fischer has been an upbuilder of Anaheim and has erected two houses on property they owned. She has witnessed the wonderful development of Orange County and is classed as one of the stanch pioneers.

EBON R. RYAN.—An experienced and successful rancher, who has followed general farming and had just set five of his fourteen acres to oranges when he sold out to buy five acres near Garden Grove, which is set to walnuts, is Ebon R. Ryan, who enjoys the esteem of all who know him. At various times he has owned other parcels of land in Orange County, and as a result of which he is able today to form a judgment of his own as to what are the best producers.

A native of Kentucky, he was born on July 20, 1877, the son of Joseph and Ann Elizabeth Ryan, both of whom were natives of the Blue Grass State and farmed extensively and successfully. They had fourteen children, and of these Ebon was the twelfth in the order of birth. When eight years old, his parents migrated to Indiana, and there he was reared and educated.

In 1914 Ebon R. Ryan left Indiana for the Pacific Coast; and not long after arriving in Orange County he was appointed foreman for the Water Company at Yorba Linda, in which position he rendered satisfactory service. He saw little prospects for advancement and financial betterment, however, and therefore took up farming, and few ranchers, therefore, throughout the Southland would appear to have better prospects for the future.

In 1900 at Butlerville, Ind., Mr. Ryan married Miss Myrtle Stewart, a native of Kentucky and daughter of James N. and Mary Stewart, and six children have been born of this union; they are Gladys, George, Paul, Mary, Kenneth and Robert. Mrs. Ryan has two sisters and a brother in Los Angeles County.

OSCAR A. SCHILDMEYER.—A successful horticulturist who owes much of his progress to clear thinking and rational industry is Oscar A. Schildmeyer, who manages a fine ranch of fifty-five acres, thirty-five acres owned by his mother, one and a quarter miles north of Orange, and an additional eighteen acres above the average across the road. Forty-eight acres of the first-mentioned tract are given to Valencias; seven acres to lemons, and eighteen acres to Navel oranges. He was born on February 2, 1894, and grew up in Orange, where he worked for his father. On June 30, 1917, he was married in Los Angeles to Miss Mirl Brown, a Santa Ana girl, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Brown, reside at Santa Ana. Mrs. Brown was born in Missouri and reared in Kirksville, and was seventeen years old when she came to California with her parents and three brothers and two sisters. One child has blessed this union of Mr. and Mrs. Schildmeyer—a son, Robert Oscar.

In 1919, Mr. Schildmeyer bought ten acres of oranges in the Olive precinct, a part of the original fifty-five; in the operation of his farm properties he uses only the most up-to-date methods and machinery, and these include a draw-bar tractor of twenty horsepower.

Mr. Schildmeyer entered the U. S. service in the World War on August 6, 1918, but was honorably discharged at Camp Lee, Va., on December 16 of the same year. He is a member of the American Legion at Santa Ana. Before the war he served in the United States Marine Corps for two years, and went all over the Asiatic stations on the SS. "Brooklyn." He was stationed at Cavite, in the Philippine Islands, for three months before being sent out on the "Brooklyn," and had an excellent opportunity of seeing something of Philippine life. He served in the military police of the Eighth Division, and was honorably discharged from the Marine service on November 5, 1916. All in all, Mr. Schildmeyer is a very interesting personality, as he is also an Al ranch manager. An instructive glimpse of the development of the Schildmeyer estate is afforded in another sketch in this work—that of Mrs. Louisa Schildmeyer, the mother of our subject.

HARRY MAYER.—A modest, industrious rancher, whose live interest in the progress of the community makes him naturally an efficient road foreman of the Silverado precinct, is Harry Mayer, who was born in Kolmar, Upper Alsace, Germany, on February 5, 1875. He learned the baker's trade in neighboring Muelhausen, and as a baker worked in that city for a year. At the age of sixteen, he came to the United States and traveled widely throughout the central and western country; and by 1893 he reached Colorado. He enlisted in the U. S. Army at Fort Logan, and served both there and at Fort Russell. After a service of three years and three months, he was honorably discharged, and returned to civic life.

On October 18, 1896, Mr. Mayer was married to Miss Sophia Bukoutz, a native of Wamego, Kans. She was reared with a public school education and the work and comforts of a home farm, and in 1893 moved to Colorado with her parents. Mr. Mayer farmed in that state for ten years, ably assisted by his wife. On May 22, 1907, he arrived in California, and at El Modena purchased five acres. Meanwhile he worked for John King, hauling fumigating equipment. In 1912 he sold his ranch, and the next year took a trip back East to see the Colorado folks. He was wise enough, however, not to remain there, but returning to California, gave three years to the raising of grain and hay.

In 1917, Mr. Mayer came to Silverado Canyon and bought his present ranch, where a well was recently sunk, in a search for coal. The finest artesian water was struck, instead, so that he now has a good flowing well. Bringing his ranch up to a high state of cultivation keeps him busy part of the time; and he is also employed as road foreman in charge of the Silverado Canyon Road and the roads of the Silverado precinct.

Six children have become the pride of Mr. and Mrs. Mayer: Mary is the wife of Frank Berry of Black Star Canyon; Margarette is Mrs. Walter Whistler of El Modena; Irene is at home; Henry is a student at the Silverado school; and there are Anna and Lois. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Mayer is first, last and all the time such a thorough American that he is ready to support any good local movement, regardless of partisanship.

JOSEPH LAUTENBACH.—The quaint old city of Wittenberg, Germany, redolent with memories of Luther's day and the Reformation, was the scene in which the childhood days of Joseph Lautenbach was set. He was born in that city February 29, 1884, and reared in the vocation of his father, who followed the shoe-making business. Young Joseph worked at his trade in the old country, and when twenty-four years of age, in 1908, came to Pasadena, Cal. He soon secured employment with The Innes Shoe Company of Los Angeles, but like many another of his nationality, was ambitious to work for himself. After nine months in California, he located at Anaheim, June 14, 1909, and with the undaunted spirit that seems to be the heritage of successful men, opened a small repair shop on Center Street, in a room four by ten feet in dimension, and with a capital of ten dollars, eight of which he expended for leather with which to start his business. The shop was a success from its inception, and in four months' time he installed modern machinery for shoe repairing, being the first man in Anaheim to install electrically-driven machinery for this work. In November, 1914, when the new modern brick block at the corner of Center and Lemon Streets was completed, he moved his shop to that location, occupying the corner store in the building. He put in a full line of ladies' and gentlemen's shoes and conducts the shoe store in connection with the repairing department. He carries a full line of the famous Crawford shoes for men. His business has made rapid strides, and he is now one of the prosperous merchants of Anaheim.

Harry Walters

Add Q Walters.

His marriage in 1914 on Christmas Day united him with Miss Caroline Link, a native of Gridley, Ill., daughter of William Link, a retired orange grower of Anaheim, and they are the parents of a four-year-old son, named Wesley. Mr. Lautenbach has recently erected a cozy and comfortable new home at Anaheim. In his fraternal affiliations he is a member of the Sons of Herman, and has passed all the chairs. A worthy citizen and a capable business man, Mr. Lautenbach is self-made in the broadest meaning of the term, and has demonstrated what an ambitious and energetic young man can accomplish in a country where opportunities are ripe for those who have the disposition to take hold of the situation and make the most of it.

HENRY WALTERS.—The junior member of the enterprising and progressive firm of Livenspire & Walters, brick contractors of Santa Ana, Henry Walters was born in Louisville, Ky., July 19, 1877. He was reared and educated in the metropolis of the Blue Grass State, and there he also learned the trade of a brickmason. As a virile and vigorous young man he was intensely interested in the great American game and became a professional ball player, filling the position of an outfielder. He played with the Rock Island, Ill., Jacksonville, Fla., Decatur, Ill., St. Joseph, Mo., and Newark, N. J., teams.

As a brickmason, Mr. Walters became a great factor in the construction of large buildings throughout the country, working on and superintending some of the finest blocks in the country, from among which especial mention is made of the largest church and bank building in Maysville, Ky.; the J. M. Atherton and the Stark Block, both fifteen-story buildings, in Louisville, Ky. In Cairo, Ill., he was foreman of the construction of the passenger depot for the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company; also for the freight depot and sheds 500 feet long, for the same company. In Terre Haute, Ind., Mr. Walters was foreman of construction on the five-story building for the Young Women's Christian Association.

On April 1, 1911, Henry Walters arrived in California. In time he again took up his trade of a brickmason, and was employed by the well-known contractor, Arthur Sanborn, as foreman in the construction of the Congregational Church in Pomona, also a large schoolhouse at Redondo. In 1913 Mr. Walters formed a partnership with Mr. Livenspire, and they have erected the following buildings in Santa Ana: the Post Office, Spurgeon Block, West End Theater, Phillips Block and the Santa Ana Warehouse, the John Hetebrink residence at Fullerton, and the residence of John Tuffree at Placentia, Rutherford Building, a big warehouse at the Delhi Sugar Refinery, and all the brick garages in Santa Ana. At the San Bernardino Orange Show Mr. Walters built two displays for the Pacific Sewer Pipe Company, for which he was awarded two prizes. On the pier at Venice he erected a large display for the Los Angeles Brick Company, for which the first prize was awarded. Mr. Walters also erected the display room for the Corona Chamber of Commerce and built a brick block at Newport.

At Louisville, Ky., September 30, 1907, Mr. Walters was united in marriage with Miss Ada C. Carnahan, a native of Hodginsville, Nelson County, Ky., born on a farm adjoining the historic Abraham Lincoln farm. However, her schooling was obtained at Elizabethtown in the same county. Fraternally, Mr. Walters is a member of Pomona Lodge No. 246, I. O. O. F., and with his wife is a member of Torosa Rebekah Lodge at Santa Ana, of which Mrs. Walters is a past noble grand. She is also a member of Hermosa Chapter O. E. S., and the Woman's Relief Corps, as well as ex-president of the Daughters of Veterans. Mr. Walters is emphatically with the western spirit of progress, and especially enthusiastic over the great opportunities Orange County offers to intelligent and industrious men.

RAYMOND L. GODWIN.—Numbered among the successful and enterprising contractors of Santa Ana is Raymond L. Godwin, the well and favorably known plastering contractor. He is a native of the Hawkeye State, born at Stuart, Guthrie County, Iowa, November 3, 1882. When fourteen years of age he moved with his parents to Alamogordo, Otero County, N. M., where for six years he rode the range for different cattle men.

In 1901 Mr. Godwin came to California and in 1903 he learned the trade of a plasterer, working for W. O. Rowley of Orange, remaining with him for six years. While living at Orange, Mr. Godwin helped in the construction of the Union high school, and it was he who struck the first pick in the ground for the excavation. He did the plastering on many buildings at Orange, including the German school and Center Street school buildings; also many fine residences. In 1910 he located at Corona, where he became foreman for Mr. Rowley, who had the contract for the Corona high school. Afterwards Mr. Godwin entered business for himself at Corona, doing cement, brick and plastering contract work, and while there built the Lord Block, also the Glass building and a number of fine residences.

Coming to Santa Ana in 1914, Mr. Godwin entered the employ of George W. Young, a plastering contractor. His extensive experience in building and ability to manage men soon won for him the position of foreman, and it was under his careful supervision that the plastering contracts on the following buildings in Santa Ana were satisfactorily finished: Meyer Apartment Hotel, W. H. Spurgeon Block, United Presbyterian Church, F. E. Farnsworth residence and the Mills and Winbiger Funeral Home; he also worked on the new buildings of the Orange union high school.

On the most memorable day of modern history, Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, Mr. Godwin decided to enter the contract plastering business again. The wisdom of his decision has been clearly proved by the splendid success he has achieved in his business enterprise. Among the buildings and residences he has plastered mention is made of the following: The Sheriff Office building, Wickersheim Garage, eight residences for Justin Bencher, thirteen residences for R. C. McMillan, and in Orange he has plastered eleven residences for Dale and Riggle.

His splendid workmanship and the high character of his business integrity have won for him a leading place among the contractors of Orange County and to facilitate the completion of his contracts he constantly employs from two to five men. Mr. Godwin is a "booster" for Orange County and believes in aiding all worthy movements that have as their aim the upbuilding of the county's best interests.

At Villa Park, October 4, 1905, Mr. Godwin was united in marriage with Margaret Hinton of Villa Park, and they are the parents of a son, William. Fraternally Mr. Godwin is a member of Orange Lodge, No. 225, I. O. O. F., as well as Santa Ana Lodge, No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

GEORGE W. WARDWELL.—An efficient, faithful and very popular member of the public service is George W. Wardwell, the superintendent of rodent control and the horticultural inspector of Orange County, who was born at Fond du Lac, Wis., on June 17, 1874. He attended the excellent public schools of that locality, and early took up the study of natural history and taxidermy. He had talent for this line of work, and soon became such an expert taxidermist that he was frequently called upon to mount animals and birds for private collections.

Having come to California in 1896 at the age of twenty-two, Mr. Wardwell became both an interior and exterior decorator, and followed this trade in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other coast cities; and in 1904 he located at Long Beach, and continued his work there. In 1902 he moved his residence to Wintersburg, although he still followed his trade in Long Beach.

In 1904, however, when Huntington Beach was started, he decided to pitch his tent there and grow up with the town. He thus became the first decorator to undertake painting contracts, and for years worked on all the residences and business structures of Huntington Beach. After a while he bought the Huntington Beach Nursery, which he conducted until he sold out to its present owner.

In 1913, Mr. Wardwell was appointed by the board of county supervisors to his present office, in which he is doing a splendid work, clearing the county of ground squirrels and gophers. During the past three years, however, he has rid the county of eighty per cent of the ground squirrels. To accomplish this, poisoned grain was given to the farmer, who scattered it freely on the ground. In the winter and spring of the year carbon-bisulphide is used. This is poured on the waste balls, which are placed in the holes of the rodents, next set fire to, so that a poisonous gas is generated, which spreads throughout the little tunnels and caves and does its deadly work.

Mr. Wardwell married Miss Ada Hoff, a native of Kansas; and their home life is blessed with five children. They are Hazel, Helen, George W., Jr., Elizabeth and William.

DR. GEORGE MARKHAM TRALLE.—Distinguished among the members of the Orange County Medical Society, of which he had the honor to be president in 1919, and eminent among those who have contributed to make Santa Ana one of the most desirable and safest places for comfortable living in the state, George Markham Tralle enjoys an enviable reputation as a specialist in the treatment of diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. He was born in Benton County, Mo., July 18, 1871, the son of Henry Tralle, a contractor and builder, now deceased, who married Miss Elizabeth Cooke, a native of Missouri. The father served in the Civil War as a member of an Illinois regiment, and for years he received the honor due him as one who helped to preserve the country. Mrs. Tralle is still living, residing in Kansas City, Mo., and is the mother of eight children, four sons and four daughters.

The third child in order of birth, George M., was educated at the public schools and at William Jewell College at Liberty, Mo., after which he matriculated at the University Medical College at Kansas City, from which he was graduated on March 28, 1899. Going to Purcell, McClain County, Okla., he put in fifteen years in general practice and then took post-graduate work in New York City, and came to California and did post-graduate work in San Francisco, after which he came direct to Santa Ana. In January, 1916, he began his practice here, and has limited his work to diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat, and has met with very gratifying success and a constantly increasing practice. Besides the Orange County Medical Society, he belongs to the American Medical Association and the California State Medical Society, also the Southern California Medical Society.

On April 18, 1899, at Kansas City, Mo., Dr. Tralle was married to Miss Florence Hunt, born in Missouri, a daughter of J. M. and Nellie Hunt. She shares with him the esteem of those who know them and his deep interest in Orange County affairs. The doctor is a member of the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Commandery and Shrine in Masonry, having passed through the offices of the first three named in Purcell, Okla. During the World War he was on the examining board for soldiers and a member of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps, and in various ways he and Mrs. Tralle actively participated in war work. In national politics he is a Republican.

CHARLES LEO DAVIS.—One of the pioneers in the garage business in Orange County who has very naturally brought his establishment to the fore so that now it is one of the best equipped for its size and pretensions in the entire state, is Charles Leo Davis, proprietor of the Chandler Garage, representative Republican and popular Elk. He was born at Arlington, Vt., on August 20, 1882, the son of a farmer, R. F. Davis, who was highly esteemed in his day, but is now deceased. He had married Miss Martha Curry, whose home was at Slingerlands, N. Y., and who was the daughter of John Curry, a florist. Mrs. Davis is now living at Santa Ana, the mother of this only child.

The grammar and high schools of his neighborhood furnished the lad with his first educational advantages, and later he studied at the Polytechnic school at Worcester, Mass., and there he took a course in machine steam engineering, and was graduated in 1904. For seven years thereafter he was with the Spencer Wire Company, of Worcester, makers of gas engines, and there he had the finest opportunity to perfect himself in machine work. In 1910 Mr. Davis came to Santa Ana and entered the service of the Guarantee Garage. Removing to Orange, he took charge of the Buick auto shop, and after that he came to Santa Ana and engaged to work for the Lutz Company. In 1913 he bought into the garage business at 209 North Main Street with George Kellogg; and two years later, he bought out his interest.

The Chandler Garage not only represents that famous company's cars in the district of Orange County, but it carries a full line of automobile accessories and undertakes to render prompt and the best of service. For the demands of his trade, as only thus far developed, Mr. Davis employs eighteen men. On January 1, 1920, he moved his garage to its present location, at Broadway and Sixth Street, where he occupies the corner, 100x125 feet.

Like most men given to one or more kinds of sport, Mr. Davis is fond of both fishing and hunting, and good-naturedly responds to the many appeals in the community for more serious cooperation, thereby proving his qualities as a citizen and a neighbor. Fraternally besides being a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks, he is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and a charter member of the Rotary Club and of the Orange County Auto Trades Association.

DENNIS J. DONNELLY.—Prominent among the more recent settlers of Anaheim who have become successful orange growers, is Dennis J. Donnelly, a native of Ireland, born at Tullamore, Kings County, in 1875. His youthful days were spent on a farm in Ireland, and when twenty years of age he emigrated to the United States. For many years he followed copper mining in the West, two years being located at Butte, Mont.

In 1898 Mr. Donnelly enlisted in the U. S. Navy, serving during the Spanish-American War, three years faithfully filling the position of fireman, and during his enlistment served in the Philippine station. He was aboard the ill-fated U. S. Warship Charleston when she was lost off Luzon November 2, 1899, and subsequently was transferred to the U. S. Warship Oregon, being aboard her when she was wrecked in the Straits of Pechili on the way to the relief of siege of Peking. He received his honorable discharge from the U. S. Navy in 1901 at Mare Island, Cal.

Mr. Donnelly is justly proud of his bronze medal, inscribed with the name "U. S. S. Charleston," awarded to him by the "Citizens of the State of California," and he is a member of the Spanish-American War Veterans.

Resuming his former occupation of mining, Mr. Donnelly located at Bisbee, Ariz., where he engaged in copper mining for five years, after which he went to the copper mines in Sonora, Mexico. The year 1906 found him the proprietor of a hotel at Seattle, Wash. The fall of the same year he moved to San Francisco, where he helped in the rebuilding of that stricken city after its destruction by fire and earthquake. In 1907 he again returned to copper mining, this time locating at Globe, Ariz.

During the year 1910 Mr. Donnelly visited Anaheim, Cal., and was so favorably impressed with the country that he decided to make Orange County his permanent home. He purchased ten acres of raw land three miles southwest of Anaheim, which he improved by leveling and planting to Valencia oranges. He still retained his residence in Globe, Ariz., but brought his family to Anaheim for permanent settlement in 1912, erecting a bungalow at 115 North Helena Street.

Possessing keen business foresight, a progressive spirit and a determined will to win success in the citrus industry, Mr. Donnelly took up the study of orange culture, soil conditions and fumigation, and his special efforts have been rewarded by an abundant crop, the yield for 1919 being 2040 boxes of fruit, which were handled by the Anaheim Orange & Lemon Association, of which he is a member.

At Bisbee in 1904 Mr. Donnelly was united in marriage with Julia O'Conner, a native of the Emerald Isle, born near Killarney, in County Kerry. Of this happy union two daughters were born: Mary Elizabeth and Rose Annie. Mr. and Mrs. Donnelly are patriotic American citizens and loyal supporters of their adopted country's cause in every time of need, their motto being "America First." Religiously, they are members of the Catholic Church.

WILLIAM N. MILLER.—A well-posted oil man, whose keen observation, attention to details, unremitting industry and a regard for the experience of others as well as his own previous successes or failures have enabled him to thoroughly understand the oil business, is William N. Miller, who was born near Ava, Douglas County, Mo., on July 6, 1889. His father, J. T. Miller, also a native of Missouri, is a farmer there; he married Miss Katie Shadden, a native of Tennessee, and they had six children, of whom William was the oldest.

He was brought up in Missouri, attended the usual grammar school courses, and when a youth of seventeen came out to the Far West and settled for a while at Condon, Ore. He went onto a ranch, and during the winter rode the range and continued in that line of activity until 1911, when he returned to Missouri to marry Miss Minnie Pugh, a daughter of Missouri, and a sister of S. L. Pugh. On coming West again the young couple settled at Taft and there made his entry into the oil industry. He entered the service of the Union Oil Company, and later was a tool dresser for the Miocene Oil Company, then was with the Head Drilling Company at Taft for three years.

In 1919 Mr. Miller came to Placentia, as a driller for the Heffern Oil Company; and when well No. 1 was completed, he set up No. 2. He then worked on the Olive Petroleum well at Olive and put it down 1,000 feet; and when he resigned, he did so to accept the superintendency of the Placentia Oil Company, where he remained until March 1, 1920. In November he became interested in the Orange County Drilling Company. He is a stockholder in the Heffern Oil Company, and in the Fullerton Leasing Company, and is doing all that he can to develop the important oil interests of Orange County.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller have had four children, three living: Lois, Glen and Ina. Carl, the oldest, died aged seventeen months. Mr. Miller belongs to Douglas Lodge, No. 319, I. O. O. F., at Ava, Mo.; and he also belongs to Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, and is a member of Anaheim Lodge of Masons.

SUMNER E. REED.—The excellent service of the Santa Fe Railroad at Fullerton has always been appreciated by the townspeople, and never more so than since the advent here of the present agent, Sumner E. Reed, a native of Wisconsin, where he was born in Green County on December 21, 1865. His father was Samuel R. Reed, a farmer, a native of New York state, and his mother, who came from Michigan, was before her marriage Miss Lucretia H. Post. They, with their two sons, moved to Nebraska in 1877. Now both of the parents have joined the great throng making up the silent majority of humanity.

The elder of the two children, Sumner attended the rural and then the high school, after which he remained on the farm, as have so many faithful American young men, until he was twenty-one years of age. His first venture in the service of strangers was made when he accepted a post with the Burlington Railroad; later he went to the Fremont, Elkhorn & Missouri Valley Railroad, and next back to the Burlington. That was followed by an engagement with the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha, and he remained with that company until 1909, when he came to the Santa Fe.

At first he was an operator at Colton, and from there he went to various places along the line. For six years he was at Inglewood. In each place where he was stationed Mr. Reed acquired measurably some valuable experience, had a good time, mastered railroading, and made many friends. In March, 1917, he was transferred to Fullerton, and here has been, as fully-empowered agent, ever since. Active every day in endeavoring to promote Fullerton's commerce with the outside world, it is natural that Mr. Reed should be an energetic worker in the Fullerton Board of Trade.

During April, 1916, while Mr. Reed was at Inglewood, he was married to Mrs. Myrtle M. (Thayer) Martin, who was born in Michigan. Mr. Reed still enjoys a lodge evening occasionally, and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. In national politics he is a Republican, but he knows no partisanship when it comes to boosting for Fullerton, Orange County or even California. Among his recreations are automobiling and outdoor exercise.

SALVADOR M. PADIAS.—A hard-working farmer, operating scientifically, and therefore getting all the good results possible from his various expenditures, is Salvador M. Padias who, through his own honest, untiring efforts, has acquired for himself and his family a comfortable affluence. He is, in fact, one of the leading beet growers on the Irvine Ranch, where he operates 268 acres, 156 of which are devoted to sugar beets and the balance to barley hay.

A native son, he was born at San Juan Capistrano, Cal., on January 29, 1892, the son of Ramon Padias, now deceased, the representative of one of the proud old Spanish families. He was an experienced farmer, and left a competence to his widow, who was Mercedes Mendes before her marriage. She now owns twenty acres of highly improved land, devoted principally to Valencia oranges, and is located on South McClay Street, in Santa Ana, where she now resides, aged sixty-two years.

S. M. Padias, the youngest son and the seventh child, attended the grammar school at Tustin, after which he worked on his father's farm until the latter died in 1912. Then he began to farm for himself, and he also went out and worked for others with large eight-horse teams. In the beginning, he worked for two different companies, but both failed financially, and he received only forty-five dollars in cash and judgments for $2,200 for his work, from which he has since realized nothing.

This most unfortunate experience, however, did not deter him from starting anew, if in debt, and commencing all over again under such disadvantageous circumstances that he had to borrow money from others. In the fall of 1915 he leased the above mentioned ranch, which he has improved and brought to a high state of cultivation, and it is all under irrigation; his beet crop has averaged as much per acre as any other on the Irvine ranch, and the position he occupies today shows that he could not long have been idle. He came to have time enough, though, to partake in various activities appealing to the patriotic citizen, and to work with the Republicans for better civic standards.

In San Diego, July 23, 1914, Mr. Padias was married to Miss Dorothy Talbott, the daughter of Chas. I. and Leona (Gibson) Talbott, early settlers of Los Angeles County, the father being the proprietor of the Central Auto Park in Santa Ana. Mrs. Padias is a native daughter, born at Glendora, but reared and educated in the Garden Grove grammar and high school. Mrs. Padias' maternal grandfather, George Gibson, served in a Nebraska regiment in the Civil War, and she is naturally an enthusiastic member of the Daughters of Veterans. This fortunate union has been blessed with one child, now a bright four-year-old boy, Robert Edward. Fraternally, Mr. Padias is a Knight of Pythias, and a popular member he is in that constantly growing order.

JACOB P. PROBST.—Prominent in business circles in Anaheim, and well known in other parts of the state, Jacob P. Probst was born in Odensa, Denmark, September 7, 1883. He is a son of Hans P. and Rossamina (Petersen) Probst, both natives of Denmark, and in the fall of 1883 Hans P. Probst brought his family to the United States, locating in Warrensburg, Mo., where he built up one of the largest carriage manufacturing plants in the state. His four sons were all associated with him in business, under the firm name of Probst and Sons, and for twenty-seven years they carried on the establishment in their own two-story factory, one-half block in area. They were extensive advertisers and the name became famous all over the state for fair dealing and high quality of goods. They carried all kinds of horse-drawn vehicles, also manufactured to order, did repair work and painting.

The children now living of Mr. and Mrs. Hans P. Probst are: George, Merentius, Jacob P., Blenda, wife of Victor A. Peterson of South Pasadena, and Thorwald A., the well-known landscape artist of the Pacific Coast, who is at present writing and traveling in California in the interest of reclaiming the old California Missions. The father located in South Pasadena in 1910, where he conducted with his sons a large auto painting, decorating and repair establishment. The family home in Warrensburg, Mo., was a work of art, all the furniture and woodwork being designed and built by themselves, and the walls and ceilings decorated in the same manner. The home contained many valuable works of art designed and collected by the family, many of which were brought with them to their South Pasadena home.

Jacob P. Probst first came to California as a tourist in 1904, when he traveled all over the state, and in 1907 he returned to take up his permanent residence here, first locating in Alhambra, where, in partnership with his brother, he followed painting and decorating, and erected a home in that city. He later removed to South Pasadena, where he erected a home, and when his father arrived, in 1910, engaged in business with him in auto painting.

On June 4, 1917, Mr. Probst located in Anaheim, where he now follows auto painting and decorating, occupying modern and commodious quarters at 113-115 West Adele Street. He does the finest class of work, including monograms and crests, and his years of experience in the painting line make him a valuable man for his line of work. He takes an active part in the affairs of Anaheim, was a member of the advertising committee of the old Anaheim Board of Trade, and ready at all times to give of his knowledge and effort toward the further advancement of his home city and county. Fraternally he is a member of Anaheim Lodge, No. 207, F. & A. M.

The marriage of Mr. Probst united him with Della A. Peterson, a native of Iowa, the ceremony occurring at Santa Barbara, in 1908, and three children have been born to them: Blenda, Lucille, and Jacob A., deceased. Mrs. Probst is one of a family of twelve children, all but two of whom are now living. With her husband she joins in the social life of the community and works toward its upbuilding.

JOHN JOHNSTON.—The efficient chief engineer of the Anaheim Brewery, John Johnston has been a resident of the United States for nearly twenty-five years. He is a native of Scotland, having been born at Glasgow on Christmas Day, 1869, and is a son of John and Catherine Johnston, both natives of the land of the heather. The Johnston family consisted of nine children, five of whom are living, two being residents of California. John Johnston, Sr., died in Canada, Mrs. Johnston still making her home there.

John Johnston was reared and educated in the Dominion of Canada. In 1896 he came to the United States, and after stopping for some time in New York, he migrated to California in 1905, locating in Los Angeles, where he remained for three years. In 1911 Mr. Johnston moved to Anaheim and accepted his responsible position with the Anaheim Brewery, having under his supervision five engines, and has continued with the company nine years. He is an expert machinist, with thirty years of experience, and is regarded as one of the most efficient engineers in this section of the state.

In 1901 Mr. Johnston was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Treffer of Canada and four children were born to them: Francis, Lillian, James and John. During the World War James served in a California regiment of infantry stationed at Camp Kearney. Mr. Johnston and his children are all musical and their playing is greatly enjoyed and appreciated by their many friends in the community, where they have gained high repute as musicians.

The second marriage of Mr. Johnston united him with Miss Margaret Fitzpatrick of Belfast, Ireland. Fraternally, Mr. Johnston is a member of the Anaheim Lodge No. 1346, Elks, and Anaheim Aerie of Eagles.

JOHN S. RUNYAN.—A highly esteemed resident of Santa Ana who attained the enviable distinction of being one of the most public-spirited citizens of the town in which he had previously lived—Medicine Lodge, Kans.—is John S. Runyan, who was born in Turbotville, Northumberland County, Pa., on October 27, 1853. His father was George Barton Runyan, a farmer and an early settler in the Keystone State, who had married Miss Elizabeth Schuyler, also a member of an early family there. The lad was sent to the high school at Turbotville, and then to the State Normal school at Bloomsburg; and afterwards for five years he taught school in Montour County, Pa. In 1878 he moved to Lawrence, Douglas County, Kans., and there for a couple of years taught school.

In 1880 he made a new departure in going to Barber County, Kans., and engaging in the cattle business. Four years later he was in the general merchandise trade in Medicine Lodge in that state; and there he remained until August 1889. On the twelfth of that month he entered the First National Bank of Medicine Lodge and for five years was the bank's assistant cashier; and in 1894 he became the cashier. After that he rose to be vice-president of the bank; and he was also associated with other banks in Kansas.

On November 26, 1885, Mr. Runyan was married in Warrensburg, Johnson County, Mo., to Miss Nannie R. Holmes, a native of that town and of a fine old Virginian family that migrated to Missouri. Her father was Benjamin A. Holmes, and her mother, in her maidenhood, was Miss Sallie A. Douglas. Miss Holmes took a complete course at the Warrensburg State Normal, where she was graduated, receiving a life certificate as a teacher; and afterwards she taught in Johnson County, and later in the high school at Liberty, Mo., until her marriage.

In 1911, Mr. Runyan came to California for his health, and settled at Santa Ana; and the next year he built his home at 416 South Birch Street. In 1919 he purchased an interest in an orange grove near Placentia, and in July of the same year he bought an interest in a lemon grove at Yorba Linda. He also purchased stock in the First National Bank of Santa Ana.

While in Medicine Lodge Mr. Runyan was city treasurer for twelve years, and he also served on the city council of Medicine Lodge a number of terms, never allowing his preference for Republican political doctrine to interfere with his administration of local office. He tried to begin life aright in his profession of religion, and in Santa Ana found it natural and easy to help the congregation of the First Baptist Church in 1913 begin the erection of their handsome edifice. He is chairman of the board of trustees, was on the building committee, and is also a member of the committee of finance of said church.

For sixteen years in Medicine Lodge Mr. Runyan was both a member of and treasurer of the board of education. Having no children of their own, they set out to rear and educate a niece, Miss Una Holmes, who was a native of Missouri and lived with Mr. and Mrs. Runyan in Kansas, and on August 7, 1907, was married to C. C. Lewis, the private secretary of the late Senator Chester I. Long of Kansas, with whom, during the season of 1907, they enjoyed the inspiring life of the capital, Washington. In the spring of 1909 Mr. and Mrs. Lewis went to Phoenix, Ariz., and later they came to Monrovia, where Mrs. Lewis died, on February 13, 1916. Then Mr. Lewis returned to Phoenix, Ariz., and is now with the State Water Commission. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis. The elder is a girl, Helen by name, and the younger is called John Runyan.

ROBERT WILSON.—A full and worthy life has been the portion of Robert Wilson; from stirring events in his boyhood and early life he passed to the more peaceful pursuits of the business world, and his sterling traits of character have made for success in both. A native of Canada, Mr. Wilson was born near Guelph, Ontario, August 15, 1852, the son of James and Elizabeth (Ramsey) Wilson, born in Scotland and on the Isle of Man, respectively, but married at Eden Mills, Ontario. The father was an engineer in sawmilling, and later in the manufacture of oatmeal. He made the oat mill on exhibit at the International Exposition at London in 1862 that was awarded a medal. His death occurred in Ontario.

Robert Wilson was the second eldest in a family of four boys and one girl, and he is the only one now living. He was reared at Eden Mills, Ontario, where he obtained his education in the country schools. In 1866, when a boy of fourteen, he enlisted as a bugler in a Canadian company of volunteers, and was in the famous Fenian Raid and in the battle of Ridgeway, June 6, 1866. For fourteen years he served under Queen Victoria in the Canadian Militia, was bugler of No. Two Company, First Ontario Riflemen, went with them to Ft. Garry, now Winnipeg, in 1871, and was in the Reil Rebellion of that year. Afterwards he was in Infantry Company No. One, Twenty-eighth Battalion, and later on was in an engineering corps in the second Reil Rebellion in 1884-85, and was at the Battle of Batoche. As early as 1866, between his different enlistments, Mr. Wilson learned the trade of baker and candy maker, and in 1873 located in Buffalo, N. Y., entering the employ of Sibley & Holmwood, wholesale candy manufacturers. Eighteen months later he returned to Stratford, Ontario, and again served in the militia; later he settled in St. Paul, Minn., where for twenty-one years he carried on a bakery of his own with success. While there he was local correspondent for Eastern magazines devoted to the bakery trade.

The year 1906 marks the arrival of Mr. Wilson in Anaheim. He purchased the Powell Bakery, on West Center Street, which he carried on with success until June 28, 1915, selling out to B. Jensen, and since that date he has lived retired, with the record of having been in the bakery business for more than forty-eight years, which speaks for itself as to the steadfast qualities of the man.

Mr. Wilson was twice married, his first wife being Mary Jane McIntosh, a native of Ontario. Her father was for many years in the employ of the Grand Trunk Railway, coming to Montreal from Scotland, and was the first boilermaker employed by that company, continuing until his death at Port Huron, Mich. Mrs. Mary Jane Wilson died July 7, 1915, leaving three children: Robert, a printer of Los Angeles; Mrs. Agnes L. Every of Tacoma, Wash., whose husband is claim agent for the Northern Pacific Railway; and Clarence, a graduate of Stanford University and a civil engineer by profession, of San Francisco; he was a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission that recently completed a physical valuation of the different railroads, and he is now with the Pacific Gas and Electric Company in San Francisco. He enlisted in the Third U. S. Engineers in the World War and was stationed at Camp Humphries, Va.

For his second wife Mr. Wilson married Mrs. Jennie A. Keeling, also a native of Canada, and they are among the esteemed citizens of Orange County. He was made a Mason in Ancient Landmark Lodge, St. Paul, Minn., and is now a member of Anaheim Lodge, F. & A. M. He has also been a member of the Odd Fellows for forty-five years and is a charter member of Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Modern Woodmen. For years he was a member of the Anaheim Chamber of Commerce.

ANTON C. CARLE.—A thoroughly experienced and successful farmer, whose intelligence and industry have spelled for him and others a well-merited prosperity, while his uprightness of character and general dependability have won for him the confidence of all who know him, is Anton C. Carle, the lessee for eighteen years of a ranch not far from El Toro, where he lives and labors with his devoted and gifted wife, in a home made the more attractive through a promising, ambitious daughter, preparing for a business vocation. He was born in Alsace-Lorraine, France, on May 10, 1878, and like all the inhabitants of that region enjoying better advantages, learned both French and German. At Dinsheim, too, the famous vineyard place not so far from Strassburg, he was married, on July 21, 1900, to Mary Catherine Kuntz, a native of that place, where she was born on December 3, 1880, the daughter of Martin Kuntz, of Alsace-Lorraine. He was an expert machinist, but died in 1907, and his wife, whose maiden name was Madeline Myer, was born in the same place. Seven girls were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kuntz, and they attended the schools of the Catholic Sisters.

Mr. and Mrs. Carle were married when she was nineteen years old, and on August 6, 1900, they bade goodbye to parents, and other relatives and friends, and began their honeymoon trip with a voyage across the Atlantic. They sailed from Hamburg and landed in New York, from which city they took the train across the continent, and alighted at Los Angeles on August 26. In Dundee, Los Angeles, and also at Loma Linda and Glendora, Mr. and Mrs. Carle worked out together—he as gardener and she as housekeeper, and when they had made a good start for themselves, they came out to El Toro.

Here he worked for Dwight Whiting, at first as a gardener, and among other things he then accomplished he set out 487 acres of eucalyptus, now almost a forest, half a mile to the northeast of El Toro. He had almost eighty men working under him, and this gave him a chance to add Spanish to his fund of languages, so that he now speaks French, German, English and Spanish. He first came to El Toro in 1904, and when, five years later, Mr. Whiting died, he took a lease on 320 acres and began to rent. He now raises hay, barley and oat-hay, mixed and pure, and the balance in beans and wheat—eighty-five acres of the former and twenty acres of the latter, and in their comfortable home about two miles from El Toro they reflect with both happy and sober thoughts on the past.

Mr. Carle's father was also named Anton, and he was born at Gresweile, in Alsace, as was his wife, whose maiden name was Clementine Doersaff. She died two years before our subject came to America. She had twelve children, ten girls and two boys, and among these Anton was the eighth child in the order of birth. He learned gardening in Alsace, but he worked, while there, mostly as a weaver of cloth. He wove woolen, cotton and silk goods, and he still has some of the fabrics that he wove himself.

His first work here was in Dundee at viticulture and horticulture, and then for Mrs. Frank Taylor, at the corner of Central and Adams streets in Los Angeles, and from there he went to Loma Linda, where he made the beautiful drives from the rocks, planned the roadways and laid out the flowers. In this unpretentious but pleasant manner Mr. Carle began his association with the Southland; today he owns the business block, including the barber shop and pool hall, opposite the railroad depot at El Toro, which he built, and for two years he ran a butcher shop, after which he remodeled it and now rents it as has just been stated. He uses eighteen head of horses and mules in his farming operations. He also owns a number two special Ventura bean thresher, and during the season is kept busy threshing in the neighborhood. He is prosperous, and he wishes everyone else to be equally successful. He is an American through and through, and during the recent war patronized each issue of the Liberty Bonds, and otherwise supported the war activities. He is a naturalized American citizen and a Republican.

In 1906 Mrs. Carle returned to Alsace-Lorraine on a visit, and took with her their daughter, Emma Juanita, now a student in the Orange County Business College. They had a fine time, and have been talking about it with satisfaction ever since. They have also thought of their home associations with sorrow, for great changes have occurred where once all was so attractive.

AMBROSE F. FISHERING.—Perseverance and optimism have ever been the outstanding characteristics of Ambrose F. Fishing, now a successful rancher near Anaheim, and these qualities, combined with steady, industrious application to the task at hand, have enabled him to rise above circumstances that would have daunted one less courageous. Mr. Fishing's early memories carry him back to the Buckeye State, where he was born at Xenia, August 16, 1868, the seventh child in the family of Henry and Mary (Beall) Fishing. The father was born in Germany, but came to Ohio in the early days, when he was a lad of sixteen, and he was for many years in the mercantile business in Xenia.

Mr. Fishing's early education was gained in the public schools of his native city, but his opportunities in that line were limited as he left home at the age of thirteen to make his own way in the world. He learned the furniture trade when but a boy and followed this line of work until he was of age, when he went into the retail grocery business at Dayton, Ohio. He was meeting with good success when the flood of 1899 wiped out his business completely, destroying all that he had. Too ambitious and energetic to be routed by even this disaster, he rebuilt and soon was forging ahead more rapidly than ever, only to suffer a second loss of all his possessions in the great flood of 1900, that caused such a terrible loss of life and property in this Ohio city.

These experiences determined Mr. Fishing to locate in the West, so in 1901 he came to Los Angeles, Cal., and though practically without capital he undertook the purchase of five acres of land in the Sunrise tract, now Huntington Park, where he built the first house. He took a position with the Van Vorst, Burman Furniture Company in Los Angeles, later connecting with Barker Brothers as foreman of their frame department, a position which he held for fourteen years, driving back and forth with a horse and buggy to his work. In the meantime Mr. Fishing divided his five-acre tract into town lots and sold them off, making a handsome profit in the transaction.

In 1908 Mr. Fishing came to Anaheim and soon after purchased ten acres on Loara Road and Lincoln Boulevard. This was a rough, unattractive piece of land, in poor condition, and one with less foresight and courage than Mr. Fishing would have hesitated to buy it, not being able to see its possibilities. He went to work on it at once, however, developing a sixty-inch water supply, and setting out a citrus grove from his own nursery stock. He has taken great pride and pleasure in bringing his ranch, which they have named El-No-Care-O, up to a high state of cultivation, and works unceasingly to keep it in this condition. Despite the losses he sustained before coming to California, he has retrieved his fortunes and has accumulated a competence since his arrival here.

On April 16, 1902, Mr. Fishing was married to Mrs. Sadie J. (Burton) Myers, formerly of Iowa, but a resident of Los Angeles for a number of years. By her first marriage she was the mother of a son, Edmond B. Myers, who is an expert mechanic and served on a submarine in the Atlantic during the war. Mr. and Mrs. Fishing are the parents of one son, Robert Huntington, so named because he was the first child born in Huntington Park. He graduated from the Anaheim grammar school and in July, 1919, enlisted in the U. S. Government radio service and is now at Mare Island (1920). Mrs. Fishing has ever been a capable helpmate to her husband, cheerfully aiding him in all his undertakings, and he gives to her due credit for a great degree of the success they have attained. They have recently erected a fine residence on their ranch and here they live in comfort. Seeing the necessity for co-operation in all local affairs, Mr. Fishing is a member of the Anaheim Citrus Association and gives his loyal support to the affairs of that organization. He marches under the Republican banner and is a firm adherent of the policies of that party.

CHESTER H. KENYON.—A self-made, scientifically-operating farmer, who has learned by hard study the best of all the various methods for the production of abundant crops, is Chester H. Kenyon, the well-known rancher of Glen Avenue, Tustin, among the best supporters of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company and an energetic member of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers' Association. He was born near Mt. Union, Henry County, Iowa, on March 8, 1884, the son of Wm. H. and Flora (Hale) Kenyon, the father being a native of Wisconsin. Mrs. Kenyon died when our subject was eight years of age, and then he was taken by an aunt, Mrs. Amelia Crellin, a sister of his father, by whom he was reared. There were three children in the Kenyon family, and Chester was the oldest.

Chester attended the common schools in Henry County, Iowa, until he came to California with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Crellin, in October, 1899, and then he finished his schooling here. In June, 1899, these foster parents first came to Tustin, and two days after their arrival they purchased the "Nat Brown" place, now the home ranch of a brother of Mr. Kenyon. They returned to Iowa, sold out and brought the boys along. While attending school Chester worked this estate for his uncle, while he went to work also for other ranchers. In about 1908 his father followed him to Tustin, and for the first time perhaps enjoyed a balmy climate and some well-earned rest; he also became an orange grower and makes his home in Tustin. Chester Kenyon's first holding was a five-acre citrus grove, which he later sold. In 1913 he bought eleven and a half acres, which he devoted to walnuts; and this is now the home place, where he has erected a very comfortable residence. He has added eight acres of walnuts adjoining, so now has nineteen and one-half acres. He is also at present raising beans, of which he has thirty acres on the San Joaquin ranch, so that, altogether, he manages about seventy acres.

The day after Christmas, 1908, Mr. Kenyon was married to Miss Jessie Scott, the daughter of Chester H. and Elcina Scott, farmer folks of Kansas, who later removed to California. One daughter, Marjorie, has blessed this union. Mr. and Mrs. Kenyon liberally supported Red Cross and War Loan work during the War, and are always ready to lend a hand, when needed, for social uplift and advancement.

R. W. EDENS.—Orange County has been fortunate to draw within its boundaries men of energy, resourcefulness and brains, who have devoted their time and talents to the development of its diversified resources. Among the men who have closely identified themselves with the oil industry is R. W. Edens, of Fullerton, a large stockholder and general manager of the Mid-Central Oil Company, now drilling for oil in proven territory at Huntington Beach. He also is financially interested in other companies that are now drilling in that locality. Besides these extensive interests, Mr. Edens is one of the proprietors of the Orange County Fertilizer Company, and a member of the firm of Edens and Wagner, dealers in oil lands and leases, and investments, with offices in the Amerige Block, Fullerton.

A native of Kentucky, R. W. Edens was born in Cumberland County, September 26, 1875, and was educated in the public schools of his native section until he was sixteen, then he came to California, and in Ventura County, secured employment in citrus orchards. He assisted in setting out the famous Lemoneira Orchard, the largest lemon ranch in the world. After he had labored in the orchards of Ventura County a number of years he left there and located in Fullerton in 1904. This was then a small country village with scarcely any civic improvements, and here he opened the first garage, thus showing that he was strictly up-to-date. He then had the agency for the Maxwell and Chalmers cars, also sold auto trucks. As he succeeded he formed a partnership with John E. Wagner, of Placentia, and organized the Orange County Fertilizer Company, which confines its business to Orange and Los Angeles counties. They specialize in barnyard manure and commercial fertilizer, and to conduct their business they operate five motor trucks, three of which they own. This company has played an important part in the development of the citrus fruit industry in the county since its inception, the volume of business aggregating about $15,000 per month.

The marriage of R. W. Edens united him with Miss Mollie Matthews, a native of Pennsylvania. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church in Fullerton and a lady of many accomplishments who shares with her husband the esteem of a wide circle of friends. Fraternally Mr. Edens is a member of Fullerton Lodge No. 394, F. & A. M.; Anaheim Lodge No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Fullerton Board of Trade.

Mr. Edens is a man of the strictest integrity, liberal and progressive in his ideas and methods; a live wire and a booster who takes an interest in every movement that has for its aim the promotion of the best interests of the community, and especially of Fullerton, where he makes his home and is popularly conceded to be a leader in all that seeks to elevate the best in citizenship.

LILLIAN PREST FERGUSON.—A painter regarded by many critics as foremost in the delicate art of portraiture, is Mrs. Lillian Prest Ferguson, whose charming personality cannot fail to hasten the fulfillment of her dream for Laguna Beach as a center of the best art. She was born in Ontario, Canada, the only daughter of Thomas Prest, a banker and real estate broker at Windsor, who had married Miss Sarah Smith, a daughter of Samuel Smith, the first mayor of Guelph, Ontario. When Lillian was ten years of age she went with her parents out to the great Northwest; and lived in a sod house; and she has many tales to tell of the hardships endured there. There were no schools in that territory at that time, and her mother sent her to Winnipeg, where she was educated in a convent under the instruction of Sister Mary Xavier.

She had a natural talent for portrait sketching, and was early given some instruction; and when only sixteen years of age she finished her first real work. It was a portrait of the mother of Archbishop Taché, a prelate she has always admired, and to whom she has felt peculiarly indebted for her early success; and some months later she put the last touches to a portrait of the Archbishop's father. She remained in Winnipeg some months, studying and painting, and then she went to Toronto, where she studied with W. L. Forster. She returned to Winnipeg and was made an instructor in the Winnipeg Art School, where she remained until her marriage with Peter Ferguson, an attorney of Ontario, with whom she toured England, Scotland and France. Then she became a student at the Academie Julien of Portraiture in Paris, and there made rapid progress under the renowned Professor La Fevre. On another trip to Europe she studied in Holland, with her instructor, Alexander Robinson, and from there she made various sketching trips to the most picturesque parts of the Continent, exhibiting her work the next season at the gallery in Paris.

Coming west to California in 1915, Mrs. Ferguson settled for a while at Carmel-by-the-Sea, fortunate in the pleasant association with William M. Chase, who gave instruction in portraiture. Since 1912 she had made sketching trips to Laguna Beach; for, having once become familiar with the unrivalled attractions here, she needed no incentive to urge her to return. During 1918 Mrs. Ferguson planned and erected her home place one and a quarter miles south of the Laguna Beach Hotel, and she has started a school of pottery at Laguna Beach, in which she herself gives expert instruction during the winter months. At other times she is generally to be found at her truly remarkable studio at the beach.

Mrs. Ferguson's art is to be seen at the galleries at Exposition Park, in Los Angeles, and also in San Francisco. She is an active member in the Independent Society of Artists of New York City, the California Art Club and the Laguna Beach Art Association, of which she is a charter member. She also belongs to the Hollywood Woman's Club, and to the MacDowell Society.

GEORGE ROHRS.—A hard-working, progressive and successful native son of whom California may well be proud, is George Rohrs, whose life reflects his high ideals, and does credit alike to his esteemed parents and to himself. His father was Fred Rohrs, the well-known rancher and realty owner, who was born in Germany, in the historic year of 1848, and came out to America when he was still in his teens. His mother was Anna Gobrugge before her marriage, also a native of that country, and she came to the land of greater freedom, hoping to better her condition—a wish that was amply satisfied. They were true pioneers of the great state of Ohio, where they were married, and later did their part in helping to develop the still greater commonwealth of California.

George was born in Orange County on December 10, 1884, and attended the Central school at Santa Ana. Then he worked on his father's ranches. In time, too, he purchased twenty acres to the west of his father's ranch, where he set out orange and walnut trees. He also sunk a good well, and so has reserve water for irrigation, as has his father on the home ranch. He uses a tractor and horses, and works his ranch at the same time that he operates his father's. He is a member of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company.

In May, 1914, Mr. Rohrs was married to Miss Dora Miller, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller, of Tustin Avenue, whereupon they went to the East on an extended honeymoon trip of several months. He had already built a fine residence upon his ranch, and furnished the same, and it was ready for his home upon their return. Mr. Rohrs was the owner of real estate and specially of buildings for business purposes in Santa Ana, so that he may well be looked upon as one of the men of affairs in the city.

L. E. ALLEN.—A conservative, but enterprising rancher who has had the advantage of seeing the steady growth and sure development of the county from the time that he was a boy, so that it is perfectly natural for him to work for home interests, and especially, with his appreciation of education and love of literature, for the public schools, is L. E. Allen, a native of Port Elgin, Ontario, Canada, where he first saw the light on April 14, 1883. His father, H. A. Allen, was born in Ontario and a descendant of a well-established old Puritan family of the New England states. He became both a farmer and a banker, and married Emma German, a native of the Empire State, a member of that fine old New England circle among whom was Senator Obadiah German.

H. A. Allen came out to California on a visit in 1860, but returned to Canada. Twenty-four years later, he returned, with his family. L. E. Allen was then a babe; but in the course of his boyhood he progressed through the grammar grades of the local schools. On April 14, 1886, Mr. and Mrs. Allen and their family moved on to the eight acres on Main Street, known as the Potts Place, which constituted the home ranch; and there our subject, as a dutiful son, worked until he was twenty-one years old. When the father died, in 1916, he left over eighty acres of land to his widow, Mrs. Emma Allen.

L. E. Allen helped Mr. Stevens survey the Fruit Company's ranch and helped to set out many of the best orchards in this section. His brother, A. H. Allen, is a partner with him in their ranch enterprises, operating fifty-two acres of land in the city limits of Santa Ana, with two residences, nearly all set out to walnuts. They use tractors and horses to operate the ranch. Another brother, Gerald, and the mother, Mrs. H. A. Allen, now reside at Los Angeles. Mr. Allen belongs to the Santa Ana Walnut Association and the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and in national politics is a Republican; but he endeavors to perform his duty in relation to local affairs by a broad-gauged nonpartisanship, enabling him to work and vote for the best men and the best measures.

JOHN W. SAUERS.—Yorba Avenue borders some of the most attractive ranches in the Tustin District, and of special attraction is the well-developed property owned and operated by John W. Sauers, a native Nebraskan, who is widely known as one of the most practical of farmers. There are twenty acres in the tract, and nine are devoted to English walnuts, while eleven bear Valencia oranges. Ten of these acres Mr. Sauers purchased in 1913, and upon the original ranch he built his dwelling house; the other ten he bought as recently as 1917. All the land was in poor condition when he first acquired it, but now he is able to point to a high state of cultivation. The splendid and well-kept appearance of his orchard demonstrates the large amount of labor and care he gives to the cultivation of his place, leaving the soil and trees in such fine condition that it is the consensus of opinion it is one of the best orchards and counted one of the show-places of the district.

Born at Hooper, Dodge County, in the Black Water State, August 1, 1880, he is the son of John and Jane (Bruner) Sauers, natives of Pennsylvania, who became pioneers of Nebraska. The father was an extensive farmer and stock raiser, who later came to Orange County, where he became a successful and prominent horticulturist at Tustin. He and his beloved wife passed away at Santa Ana, where they had resided during later years. Grandfather John Sauers served in a Pennsylvania regiment in the Civil War. A brother of J. W. Sauers, C. E. Sauers, and a sister, Margaret, now Mrs. Suddaby, are also residents of Tustin.

John W. Sauers was brought up and educated in the public schools of Nebraska, and in time learned the trade of his father, carpentering. After years of application to this handiwork, he came out to California, in 1906, and fortunately settled in Orange County, where he has come to enjoy the confidence and esteem of his fellow-men.

Mr. Sauers has been twice married. His first wife, to whom he was married in 1903, was Miss Maud Osborn before her marriage, and she became the mother of a daughter, Volga Laurene. His second wife, married in 1914, was Miss Hazel, a daughter of R. M. Rowley, who was a pioneer of Santa Ana, coming from Massachusetts to California in the early days. Being a pharmacist, he started a drug store on Fourth and Main streets, still known as the Rowley Drug Store, of which he was the active head until he died in 1918. His widow still survives him. Mrs. Sauers was born in Santa Ana, and was a graduate of the high school. They have one child, a son, John Vernon Sauers.

Mr. Sauers has never affiliated with any lodge, but he is nevertheless popular for his personal worth as a man. Among ranchers he holds his own as a horticulturist and agriculturist who knows what he wants, and who goes about the getting of it in a scientific way. Mr. and Mrs. Sauers take an active interest in civic affairs, as well as a deep interest in religion, both being active members of the First Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana.

ANDREW COCK.—For many years a prominent resident of Orange County and actively associated with the development of the horticultural wealth of this part of the state, Andrew Cock is today one of the best informed and most highly respected horticulturalists in California. He is owner of an exceptionally valuable ranch just south of Santa Ana, located on South Main Street, and consisting of fifty-five acres, devoted to general farming and the nursery business. This property is under a high state of cultivation and is splendidly improved, making one of the most attractive homes in the vicinity.

Mr. Cock is a native of Waco, Texas, born August 22, 1886, but came to California with his parents when he was a baby, locating at Tustin, where the father engaged in ranching. He received his education in the public grammar school at Tustin and in the Polytechnic high school in Santa Ana. When he was nineteen years of age he entered the employ of the San Joaquin Fruit Company at Tustin, being stationed on their 1000-ranch near that place. From his boyhood he had been keenly interested in horticulture and here he found ample scope for the development of his natural inclinations. He found the development of this great fruit ranch a task entirely to his liking, and at the age of twenty-two years he was made manager, which position he held, discharging the heavy responsibility which it entailed with ability and efficiency, until 1919. In the development of the San Joaquin Fruit Company's ranch Mr. Cock was especially successful. He made a careful and detailed study of individual trees and secured the buds only from record trees, that produced fruit of superior quality and in great abundance, thus developing a superior stock of trees. He assisted with the planting of the first tree, soon after his employment by the company, and later as manager, superintended the development of vast groves of oranges, lemons and walnuts. In September, 1919, he resigned his position to engage in farming for himself, and purchased his present property at Santa Ana, where he has since made his home.

The marriage of Mr. Cock occurred in Tustin, and united him with Miss Nellie Gertrude Matthews, a native of Kiowa, Kans., who came to Tustin, Cal., with her parents in her teens. Of their union have been born three children, two sons and a daughter, namely, Leonard, Lewis and Margaret. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cock have a wide circle of friends in Orange County, and have taken an active part in social and civic affairs. Mr. Cock is a member of the Santa Ana Branch of the Federal Reserve Board and a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias, Tustin lodge, of which he is past chancellor.

Mr. Cock is descended from a long line of splendid American ancestry. His father was Linneaus A. Cock, born near Marshall, Texas, April 6, 1856, and his grandfather, Lafayette Cock, was a native of Tennessee. Lafayette Cock removed to Mississippi, where he was married to Bennetta Taylor, a native of Mississippi. They later removed to Texas and engaged in farming near Marshall, but eventually returned to Mississippi where Lafayette Cock passed away July 31, 1861, and Mrs. Cock, September 25, 1865. Linneaus A. Cock was brought to Holmes County, Miss., by his parents in 1860 and was reared and educated in that state. He was married in Madison County, Miss., December 11, 1884, to Miss Viola Ward, a native of that county and the daughter of the Rev. T. M. and Mattie (Taylor) Ward, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Holmes County, Miss. Rev. T. M. Ward, was a Princeton graduate and also held a medical degree from Columbia University. He rode the Methodist circuit for many years, preaching and practicing medicine, carrying his Bible and his medicines in his saddle bags. The maternal great-grandfather of our subject, Andrew Cock, was Elias Taylor, who served through the Mexican War as private aide to General Zack Taylor, of whom he was a nephew. He was a prominent railroad man, being one of the builders of the Southern Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, and served as its president for many years.

After their marriage Linneaus Cock and his bride went to Waco, Texas, and engaged in cattle raising until 1887, when they came to California, locating at Tustin, Orange County, where they engaged in ranching. In 1899 he bought a ranch near Tustin which he greatly improved, and now has ten acres of Valencia oranges and five acres of walnuts, in full bearing. He is retired from active business and resides in Tustin with his wife. Of the children born of this union, seven are still living, all well and favorably known in Orange County. They are Mrs. Edith Egert, a teacher in the Los Angeles schools; Andrew, the subject of this sketch; Alma, a graduate nurse, now residing in Los Angeles; Thomas, a traveling salesman for the Sherwin-Williams Company, of Los Angeles; Edgar, a machinist in Tustin; Willis residing on his father's ranch at Tustin; and Howard, a student in the Polytechnic high school in Santa Ana.

S. F. DEAMUD.—A conservative, but progressive man, whose great perseverance has brought him a measure of prosperity which, in turn, makes him a natural, enthusiastic "booster" for Santa Ana and Orange County, is S. F. Deamud, a native of Wayne, Wayne County, Mich., where he was born on January 22, 1858, eighteen miles west of Detroit. His father, Samuel Deamud, was a native of Toronto, Canada, and as a maker of shoes controlled for his lifetime a large and profitable business. His mother was Sarah Moore before her marriage, and she was a daughter of John Moore, an Englishman by birth. When Samuel Deamud and his wife married, they came to Wayne, Mich., to make their home.

The lad was sent to the ordinary local schools, and being fond of machinery, learned how to run an engine when he was a mere youth. After a while, he moved about from town to town in Michigan, and then he went beyond the state's borders into and through other large cities, acquiring valuable practical experience.

In 1881 he took up a homestead tract at Arapahoe, Furnace County, Nebr., and staying with the venture, won out and acquired full title, proving up on the 160 acres. Then he sold his Nebraska holdings, and, like a modern knight, motored west to California in a Maxwell touring car.

At 1003 Grand Avenue he purchased two acres, which he improved and developed in the setting out of walnuts and oranges. He has stock in the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, and so gets the benefit of their irrigation service. He is also a member of the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association. He is something of a poultry fancier, with a preference for the best strains of Leghorn and Rhode Island Reds, and for the purpose he has an ideal poultry house.

On June 7, 1897, Mr. Deamud was married to Mrs. Ella (Scheeks) Keeler, a widow with two children. Mabel is the wife of Clyde Larson, a farmer of Nebraska, and Lulu is at home. Mrs. Deamud's father, Nelson Scheeks, was killed in the battle of the Wilderness, in the Civil War; and the mother died shortly after of sorrow. Mr. Deamud has a brother, William H. Deamud, who has been a resident of Santa Ana for the past thirteen years. He also has a sister, Mrs. Charles Amann, of Los Angeles.

In national politics a Republican, Mr. Deamud has supported prohibition as a desirable move for the bettering of society; and he has also liberally encouraged both War loan drives and the work of the Salvation Army.

CHARLES L. COTANT.—A young, but enterprising and very capable business man, who is fast rising in the local commercial world, is Charles L. Cotant, a native of Nevada, where he was born at Elko on September 13, 1893. He is the son of Allen Leroy and Margaret Cotant, early settlers of Nevada and Montana, his father having been engaged extensively in the cattle business. He came to Orange County for the first time with his parents in 1898, when Allen L. Cotant purchased a ranch of seventy-five acres in various tracts at Tustin. The home place was on First Street and Glen Avenue, and was formerly known as the W. S. Bartlett place; it had groves of walnuts and oranges, and there the father still resides.

Charles L. Cotant attended both the Tustin grammar and the Orange County high schools, and took a course in the School of Commerce and Finance in Los Angeles in 1910. He also attended the Los Angeles Military Academy. In 1911, he was employed to make collections for the Cudahy Packing Company, and two years later he associated himself as assistant cashier with the First National Bank of Tustin, a position he held for two years. In March, 1915, he took charge of the collection, escrow and bond departments of the First National Bank of Santa Ana.

On August 31, 1915, Mr. Cotant was married to Miss Eileen Tubbs, the daughter of V. V. and Lillian Tubbs of Tustin, who came to California in 1890 from Emerson, Mills County, Iowa, where they were landowners. Miss Tubbs was graduated from the Santa Ana high school, after which she pursued an art course at Pomona College. One daughter, Mary Elizabeth, has blessed this marriage. The family attend the First Presbyterian Church and share in its spiritual, social and sociological life and work. Mr. Cotant is a Republican in matters of national political moment, but never allows the hindrance of narrow partisanship to interfere with his support of the best measures for the community in which he resides.

BARRETT L. HALDERMAN.—An enterprising young rancher, whose scientific knowledge of horticulture has contributed greatly to his success, is Barrett L. Halderman, a native of Phillips County, Kans., where he was born on November 11, 1883. His father, Charles M. Halderman, was a native of Ohio, but was reared in Iowa and removed as a pioneer to Kansas, where he homesteaded 160 acres in Phillips County. He married Miss Eliza Pillsbury, also a native of Ohio, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and became an extensive landowner in the Northwestern States. Coming to California, in time he brought his family to Santa Ana, and bought a ranch at Tustin; and since 1903 he has been associated with ranch properties in Orange County.

Barrett Halderman attended both the grammar and high schools at Long Island, Kans., and for two years studied at the Manhattan Agricultural College. At that time, however, he felt less interest in horticulture, and developed instead a live interest in trade. He became a grain buyer and shipper in North Dakota and Minnesota.

On October 1, 1913, Mr. Halderman was married at Lincoln to Miss May Hadell, the daughter of Alfred and Emma (Nye) Hadell. Her father was a merchant at Long Island, Kans., and was well known for both his enterprise and his high sense of honor. Three fine boys have blessed this marriage—Earl, Alan and Barrett. The family attend the Roman Catholic Church. Mr. Halderman owns eleven and a half acres on East Washington Street, and the family controls ninety acres of the best soil in the county. No wonder, then, that they are all good "boosters."

The three brothers of Mr. Halderman have excellent military records, and all the Haldermans are noted for their loyalty. Barrett Halderman is a Democrat, but non-partisan when it comes to helping along worthy projects of a local character. He is a member of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, and the Anaheim Orange Growers Association. He also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and to the Knights of Columbus.

DR. BERNICE BENNETT.—The professional circles of Huntington Beach have recently been augmented by the addition of the able and efficient osteopathic physician and surgeon, Dr. Bernice Bennett. She is the daughter of Arthur W. and Mary E. (Slocum) Bennett, and was born in Adair County, Iowa. Her early education was received in the public school of her district and was supplemented by the first-year course of the high school at Earlham, Iowa.

In 1908 Miss Bennett came to California, locating at Monrovia, where she continued her schooling, graduating from the Monrovia high school in 1912. Deciding to enter upon a professional career, Miss Bennett chose the science of osteopathy, together with that of surgery. She entered the Pacific College of Ostopathy, until it merged and became the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, and was graduated from the latter institution in January, 1916, with the degree of D. O., after which, to equip herself more thoroughly for the responsibilities of her chosen profession, she took a post-graduate course at her Alma Mater, and finished the requirements in June of the same year.

Because of her splendid ability and thorough training, Dr. Bennett was selected as an assistant to Dr. A. E. Pike, of the Osteopathic Sanitarium at Long Beach. She gained much valuable experience by her association with this famous osteopathic physician, which greatly aids her in her professional work.

In November, 1919, Dr. Bennett opened an office at Huntington Beach in the First National Bank Building. Although she has been a resident of Huntington Beach but a short time, Dr. Bennett has already established a splendid practice, and her fame, with her thorough knowledge of the science of osteopathy, which is being spread abroad, greatly augments her clientele. She is a member of the Delta Omega Society, and professionally is a member of the Orange County Osteopathic Association and the California State Osteopathic Association.

JOSEPH A. MERRICK.—An engineer who makes a specialty of steel structural engineering is Joseph A. Merrick, prosperous rancher and business man of Santa Ana, Orange County, and numbered among the enterprising and progressive men of the Tustin district. He is the owner of ten acres devoted to the culture of citrus fruit. He purchased his present home ranch in 1917, and has erected a beautiful and commodious bungalow with all modern improvements and conveniences.

Mr. Merrick was born in 1874 in the state of Kansas, and is the son of Dr. John K. and Sarah Merrick. The father, a man of letters who added the degree of D.D.S. as well as M.D. to his name, practiced his profession in Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Kansas. In the parental family of nine children two became dentists and six of the nine are now living, namely, Henry, Mary, Hattie, Don, Grace and Joseph A. of this sketch. He was reared and educated in California, coming to the latter state in his early childhood. For twenty-five years he has followed mechanics, principally structural steel engineering in connection with the Lacy Manufacturing Company about thirteen years, holding a position with them at the present time. He was with the Union Oil Company eleven years and has been a resident of Orange County, Cal., for fourteen years. His marriage April 14, 1900, united him with Miss Pearl E. Dixon, a native of Minnesota, and of their happy union three children have been born, namely, Vernica, J. A. Jr., and Ronald.

CHARLES L. HANSEN.—An enthusiastic advocate of the superior possibilities of Fullerton and her environing districts, whose opinions carry the greater weight because of the scientific and practical attainments of the "booster," who can himself demonstrate what can be done through his own high degree of cultivation, is Charles L. Hansen, the rancher of Placentia Boulevard, who is a native son not only of California, but of Placentia, where he was born in the boom year of 1886, on August 7, the youngest son of Peter Hansen, the well-known pioneer. He attended the grammar school at Placentia, and in 1909 was graduated from the Colorado School of Mines, with the degree of E. M.

Since that time, Mr. Hansen has been very successful in mining engineering. He was first employed as a mining engineer with the Quartette Mining Company at Searchlight, Nev.; then he became superintendent of the Investors Mining and Leasing Company at Wall Street, Boulder County, Colo.; then manager of the Dagger Mining and Milling Company at the Vontrigger mines in San Bernardino County, covering a period from 1909 until 1915. He is frequently employed as an expert, his trips taking him to different parts of California, Arizona and Nevada. In all of these positions of responsibility he has demonstrated fully his fitness for the problems and work committed to his care. Somewhat impaired health, however, led Mr. Hansen to return to Placentia and assist his father to subdivide the home ranch.

In the beginning, he purchased two acres and a house on Placentia Boulevard, and now he owns sixteen acres in Valencia and Navel oranges, full bearing. In 1919, with H. C. Head, he bought ten acres adjoining, also developed to oranges. He takes a keen interest in agriculture, and as a result of advanced, intense study and what might be termed intensive farming, obtains the largest returns for all his investments. From 145 Valencia orange trees, for example, seven years old, he harvested a yield of 1,140 field boxes of fruit. He belongs to the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and also has valuable oil leases.

On December 10, 1912, Mr. Hansen was married to Miss Agnes Hanifan, a daughter of Thomas Hanifan, who lived retired at Los Angeles until his death, November 10, 1920. She is a graduate of the State Normal at Los Angeles, and is most active in club life at Fullerton, being an ex-president of the Ebell Club. In national politics a Democrat, Mr. Hansen is at all times a nonpartisan, supporter of the best obtainable for local improvement, and he is never more loyal to his home district than after such a trip as he recently made of 1,600 miles to the Yosemite and Lake Tahoe.

E. OYHARZABAL.—A sturdy, interesting pioneer of Orange County who, as one of the early settlers in San Juan Capistrano added one more to the French colony in Southern California, is E. Oyharzabal, popularly called "Steve" Oyharzabal, owner of the California Hardware Company's building in Los Angeles. He was born in the Basses-Pyrenees, on January 26, 1854, and sent to the local French schools, where he received instruction in French and Spanish, while he acquired the idiom of the Basques. His brother, Domingo, who was born in the same locality eight years before, and had come to America in 1863, was already in California; and this fact proved an encouragement to our subject and another brother, William, who also set out for the western land of promise. William died soon after reaching San Juan Capistrano, and Domingo and "Steve" who was still in his teens, went to Inyo County and bought land, and then embarked in the raising of sheep—an enterprise later carried on at Bakersfield. Their father, Baptiste, and their mother, Sabina (Belsunce) Oyharzabal, were farmers and stock-raisers; and although the father died when "Steve" was only two years old, the lads grew up to have a better understanding of that line of work than any other. The burden of nine children upon the mother made it necessary for some to leave home, and the three sons mentioned took the initiative in striking out for themselves.

Both brothers worked hard, and Domingo, perhaps because he was the elder, soon became prominent. He had a keen eye to climate and conditions, and when he came to Orange County in 1878, and settled at San Juan Capistrano, he believed that he had found here a combination of advantages to be had nowhere else in the state. His faith in Orange County's future led him to make investments in real estate, purchasing ranches from time to time, as his means permitted, until in 1910 he owned over 4,000 acres of choice land. He himself planted 150 acres of walnuts. He also raised large herds of cattle, sheep and livestock, and in time installed a fine system of irrigation reaching to the remote ends of his ranch, thus greatly enhancing the value of his land. He even acquired valuable real estate in Los Angeles, and during his early residence at San Juan Capistrano, he erected the old French hotel, long a landmark of the Mission town. He is especially mentioned by Harris Newmark, the distinguished pioneer, whose "Sixty years in Southern California" is such a storehouse of information concerning old-timers in the Golden State. Domingo died, unmarried, at San Juan Capistrano, in 1913, recalled by all who knew him as a typical Franco-American. Then, for the first time, the long partnership between the brothers was dissolved.

They were equal partners in all building as well as farming operations, and while Domingo was the most enterprising, "Steve" did the hard, outside work. Domingo, for example, superintended the erection of the building now used by the California Hardware Company at the corner of Alameda and First streets in Los Angeles, while his brother was in France, but he never lived to see the edifice completed. He was taken ill and died in his sixty-seventh year; and his demise was regretted by many, for he was a good-hearted, upright man.

E. Oyharzabal owns the building now used for a grocery store on Central Street, San Juan Capistrano, just north of his home, a two-story affair maintained, from 1878 to 1903, by the Oyharzabal brothers as the French hotel, and presided over for seven years by Mrs. E. Oyharzabal, a woman of accomplishment, in maidenhood popular as Miss Lucy Darius, whom he had married in 1896. Mr. Oyharzabal returned to France for the first time in 1884, while his mother was still living; and in 1903, after he had taken to himself a wife and had his business affairs in excellent shape, he went back again to visit his beloved Basque country. He remained in the Basses-Pyrenees until 1905, when he returned to California and to San Juan Capistrano with Mrs. Oyharzabal. Once more, in 1909, this deserving pair crossed the ocean to France and Spain, and set foot again on California soil in 1913, shortly before Domingo Oyharzabal's death.

Mrs. Oyharzabal is a daughter of Pierre and Antoinette (Pocheln) Darius, residents of Bayonne, and she attended school there and also at Bordeaux, where she acquired, in addition to the Basque dialect, both French and Spanish. She has since added English. Her father was a railroad conductor in France, and that circumstance enabled her to travel somewhat in her country. Mr. and Mrs. Oyharzabal live in a stately adobe house on Central Avenue, near the State Highway in San Juan Capistrano. The years of their hard labor have certainly been rewarded, for Mr. and Mrs. Oyharzabal, knowing where they can find a million or more when they want it, are about to start once more for France and Spain, to be gone, they hope, for another three years at least.

A. J. ALBERTS.—A philanthropist who first very wisely learned the great lesson of doing for himself before attempting to help others, is A. J. Alberts, the successful rancher of 1135 East Washington Street, who began his career as a newsboy in Chicago. He was born in Sterling, Whiteside County, Ill., on March 12, 1878, the son of A. J. Alberts, a dry goods merchant of Chicago, whose foresight and hard work eventually brought him prosperity. He was a native of Illinois, and he had married Miss Sophie Beuck, also a native of that state.

Our subject enjoyed the advantage of both the grammar and the high schools of Chicago, during which time he sold newspapers as a boy in that city. He earned for himself not only many dollars a day, but a reputation which led to his appointment after five years as the assistant circulation manager of the Chicago Daily News, which responsible post he held for fifteen years.

In 1903 he made a trip to Antelope Valley, and for a while he stayed at Littlerock, Los Angeles County. He was connected for some time with a realty company in Chicago, so that when he again came to California and visited Los Angeles in 1913 he was in a position to profit from a tour of the orange grove districts.

He bought eleven acres of full-bearing walnut and orange trees, nine years old, joined the Santiago Orange Growers Association, and also the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, and subscribed to the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, getting their service.

When Mr. Alberts married, he took for his wife Miss Anna Koehl, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Koehl, residents of Pennsylvania, where they died, after Mr. Koehl had been for years an active merchant. The Alberts are liberal supporters of the Presbyterian Church of Santa Ana, and they also patronized the Red Cross and helped along the War loans. Mr. and Mrs. Alberts have three children. Grace and Paul are attending school at Santa Ana, and Edward is at home.

JOHN L. PLUMMER, Sr.—A successful promoter of realty in the now famously fashionable Wilshire district of Los Angeles, who has come to have unshaken faith in the future of Balboa and as a logical result calculated to influence others, has already built a great deal there and plans to accomplish far greater things for the bay town and himself, is John Louis Plummer, who was born on Powell Street, San Francisco, on March 31, 1856. The story of his parent's life, it has been well said, reads like romance. His father, John C. Plummer, was an English sea captain, who came to the United States from Southampton as early as 1832, and sixteen years later crossed the Isthmus of Tehuantepec on foot in his eager desire to reach the Pacific. He navigated successive sailing vessels for the P. & O. Company in the Orient, and after years of adventure and even hardship, during which he had done his share to build up the merchant marine on the Pacific, he retired from the sea and lived comfortably at Los Angeles, where he died in 1910. He had married Miss Mary Cecilia McGuire, a native of the Hawaiian Islands, and a daughter of George McGuire, a well educated woman of advanced ideas and an early advocate of woman suffrage in California. On taking up her residence in Los Angeles in 1862, she acquired Government land, bought and sold real estate, and became the owner of 1,000 acres in the Wilshire District, which the family continued to hold title to until it had greatly appreciated in value.

John Louis Plummer, therefore, had the unusual experience of growing up more or less familiar with life in both San Francisco and Los Angeles, and of being able constantly to make comparisons between the pulsations of the two municipalities. He came to the Southland to reside in the early sixties, and for many years farmed more or less of the 800 acres or more in the West End, raising cattle, hogs, grain and garden truck, where now rise some of the stateliest residences in the city. He and his folks also owned downtown property of great value in Los Angeles. He laid out 160 acres on Sunset Boulevard and cut it up into two-acre tracts, and 140 acres in Highland Park, which he sold off without subdividing. Besides owning property in Hollywood, Mr. Plummer has in recent years subdivided the Plummer Ridgewood Park on Van Ness Avenue, an estate of ninety acres, into lots sixty by 170 feet, with streets 100 feet wide, on which have been built some thirty houses costing from $6,000 to $30,000 apiece.

Wishing to hie away from city life, Mr. Plummer in 1914 purchased some sixty acres of Brand Boulevard land, near San Fernando, set out an orchard and built four attractive houses, for himself and his children; but as early as 1906 he had begun to invest at Balboa, and he has continued to do so ever since. In 1919, he erected ten bungalows in a court, known as the Plummer Place, and he intends to add eleven more, and a large residence on the Bay front, where he will make his home as his final harbor.

Mr. Plummer was married at Los Angeles to Miss Ellen Dalton, the youngest daughter of Henry Dalton, the famous pioneer of the Azusa, who came to Southern California by way of Peru, and owned among other extensive tracts of more or less historic interest later, much of the land acquired by "Lucky" Baldwin. Mrs. Plummer, it is sad to relate, passed away in 1918, a noble woman who had nobly fulfilled her mission in each community wherein she had dwelt, and mourned by a large circle of friends, and especially by her four sons, John, Charles, Theodore and Anthony, and the four adopted children, Raymond, Henry, Inez and Eudora. Balboa looks to Mr. Plummer with greater confidence than ever in facing the problems of the future, nor will the deserving beach resort be disappointed, for in all that he has hitherto set his hand, this courageous path breaker has always succeeded.

J. C. WILLIAMS.—An esteemed pioneer who has the distinction of having been among the first to advocate the cultivation of the Valencia orange as a commercial industry is J. C. Williams, the rancher and real estate dealer of Fullerton, who was born in Monona County, Iowa, in April, 1878, the son of J. W. Williams, an expert mechanic, who had married Miss Delphina E. Mendenhall. The worthy couple came to California in 1886 and settled in Los Angeles; and there, for twenty years, Mr. Williams followed his trade. Our subject received his early education in the graded schools of the old Mission city, and later attended the University of Southern California, where he pursued a business course. Then, at the age of twenty-one, he went into the hardware business. He started modestly, but came to have a profitable wholesale trade with a store in Los Angeles and another in San Francisco, and he sold out when the fire at San Francisco wrecked so many.

Mr. Williams then entered the real estate field, joining his brother, A. G. Williams, in a partnership. They had offices at both Los Angeles and Anaheim, and during their efforts to advance the best interests of this part of the Southland, they took up the possibilities of Valencia orange development, and enthusiastically presented the prospects of the industry. They were thus instrumental in inducing many persons to develop Valencia orange groves, and handled millions of dollars' worth of property when land was cheap. Such was their experience in contributing to advance valuations that they saw a certain grove jump in price from $1,200 to $1,400, then to $7,500, then to $14,500, and recently to $28,000. This grove is near Anaheim, and is only one of many that the Messrs. Williams handled to the great benefit of successive owners, and to the advancement of the orange industry in Orange County.

Unmarried, and residing with his sister on Orange Grove, near South Spadra, on a ranch of choice land, well irrigated by a private pumping plant, Mr. Williams leads a quiet life, studying citrus and realty conditions, and lending a hand whenever and wherever he can to elevate politics and civic life, and to upbuild as well as build up the community in which he has so long and pleasantly lived and labored.

MORTIMER HUGH PEELOR.—A well-known and always interesting pioneer who, having made a success in business and become a prosperous merchant, has been able to branch off and become an equally expert and successful horticulturist, is Mortimer H. Peelor, who helped establish the foundation of things in Orange as far back as 1885. He was born in Henry County, Mo., and came to California when he was sixteen years old. His father was C. P. Peelor, a merchant of Orange, and he had married Miss M. C. Lotspeich. Two uncles, the Lotspeich brothers, were the earliest settlers of Villa Park in the Mountain View district, and they were very worthy men.

Mortimer, the eldest in a family of four children, enjoyed the advantages of both the common and the high schools, and later was graduated from the Woodbury

Business College in Los Angeles. Then he worked in his father's store for a while, and coming to Placentia entered the employ of Stern-Goodman, with whom he remained for a number of years or until he bought them out and established himself in the mercantile world under the firm name of M. H. Peelor. Two years ago, he sold out his well-conducted grocery, and turned his attention to quite another field.

In 1906, Mr. Peelor had purchased ten acres of choice land, on which he set out both walnuts and oranges; and in time he became a member of the Placentia-Fullerton Walnut Growers Association; The Placentia Mutual Orange Growers Association. He also became a shareholder in the Anaheim Union Water Company. He is interested in bank stocks, and he wishes prosperity to everybody else, hence he is a first-class "booster" for both town and county. He is a Democrat in matters of national political moment, but never allows partisanship to interfere with his enthusiastic, loyal support of things strictly local.

On October 7, 1890, Mr. Peelor married Miss Mayme Jones, daughter of the well-known rancher, O. P. Jones of Santa Ana; and one child, Kathleen, now the wife of S. James Tuffree, and a graduate of the State Normal School at Los Angeles, class of '13, has blessed this fortunate union. Two years ago Mr. Peelor erected his residence, where a generous hospitality is dispensed to all of Mr. and Mrs. Peelor's wide circle of friends.

JOHN H. KIRSCH.—Descended from a long line of honored ancestors, residents of that stanch little buffer state, Luxemburg, the pawn of kings since the thirteenth century, John H. Kirsch was the first of his family to leave the old home for the New World, which has now been his home for more than thirty years. His parents were John and Marie (Berg) Kirsch, both of whom passed their whole lives there, until their decease, some years ago. The eldest of a family of ten children, four of whom are now living, two at the old home and two in California, John H. Kirsch was born in Canton Diekirch, Luxemburg, November 11, 1865. The father was a well-known miller and farmer, and after receiving a good education in the local schools, John H. from his boyhood made himself useful on the farm and at the mill, learning the miller's trade and also how to dress the mill stones used in the old water-power mill. On reaching the age of seventeen he left the old home and went to France, working at his trade of miller, near Chalons-sur-Marne, in the department of the Marne.

In 1889 Mr. Kirsch came to the United States, and located at Winona, Minn., where he engaged in farming, later leasing a large farm which he devoted largely to stock raising. Here he continued until he purchased a farm near Grand Rapids, Wis., which had an excellent location on the Wisconsin River. It was fine, rich land and here Mr. Kirsch was very successful, bringing it up to a high state of cultivation. Attracted by the great opportunities offered on the Pacific Coast, however, Mr. Kirsch disposed of his Wisconsin farm and came to California in 1906, locating first in Tulare County, where he purchased forty acres of land and engaged in dairying and alfalfa raising. Remaining there for a year and a half, he then disposed of his holdings and came down to Orange County, buying thirteen acres on East and Santa Fe streets, near Anaheim. This Mr. Kirsch set out to Valencia oranges, budding and raising half of the trees himself, and caring for the orchard until it was five years old, when he sold it to Mr. Gruessing, and it is now one of the finest orange groves in the district. He then bought a tract of twenty acres on Nursery Avenue, which he also improved, setting it out to oranges and lemons, and under his expert care it soon became one of the show places of the neighborhood, so that in 1917 he was able to dispose of it at a handsome profit. Since that time he has bought and sold a number of orange groves, and with his wide knowledge of all of the details of the citrus industry and of Orange County lands and soils, he has been very successful in all the deals he has closed, giving satisfaction to everyone concerned. Optimistic for the future of Orange County, and believing it to be the finest locality in the world, particularly for citrus culture, Mr. Kirsch neglects no opportunity to prove his faith by his works, taking an active interest in every progressive movement.

In 1891, while a resident of Minnesota, Mr. Kirsch was united in marriage with Miss Lena Litt, who like himself was a native of Luxemburg, and who came to the United States during the same year—1889. Three children have been born to them: Katie, is Mrs. J. W. Heinz, her husband being an orange rancher at Anaheim; Anna, married Ben Heinz, who is also the owner of a citrus ranch at Anaheim; John F. enlisted when twenty years of age in the U. S. Naval Reserve Corps, serving until he received his honorable discharge, and he, too, is engaged in orange growing at Anaheim. Mr. and Mrs. Kirsch reside in their comfortable, attractive home at Palm and Chartres streets, Anaheim, a property which Mr. Kirsch built and improved. In 1904, while a resident of Wisconsin, he made a trip back to his native land, and spent a happy time visiting his old home and friends, but returning to the land of his adoption more than ever enthusiastic over its great opportunities. His foresight and initiative have enabled him to take advantage of these opportunities and he has made a splendid success. Liberal and kind-hearted, he is ever ready to lend a helping hand in every worthy enterprise and he shows his willingness to cooperate in local affairs by membership in the Anaheim Orange Growers Association. In fraternal circles he is popular in the ranks of the Knights of Columbus.

WILLIAM E. STRADLEY.—A man eminent in the busy world of affairs in Los Angeles, who has also become a leader in both the building up and the upbuilding of Placentia, is William E. Stradley, who was born in Humboldt County, Kans., on January 12, 1872, and came to Des Moines, Iowa, as a small boy. He was a mason by trade, and first reached Los Angeles in 1887, at the time of the great boom in Southern California realty. The next year he made a trip back to Iowa, and then he came out to the state of Washington, and he laid the first brick in any building in Seattle on June 9, 1889, three days after the big fire there.

He followed his trade in Seattle, and then, as a journeyman brickmason, traveled through twenty-eight states, returning to Des Moines in 1898. He took up contracting and building in masonry, succeeded very well, but in 1901 returned to Seattle, and there, as a contractor and builder he remained active until 1904. Then he came south to Los Angeles again, and there he has since resided, reaping the fruits of his own enterprises, started far back in 1898. A general contractor, he is the senior member of the firm of Stradley & Newton, brick, concrete and cement contractors, with an office at 500 Stimson Building in that city. In 1919, he himself erected twenty-eight store buildings in different sections of Los Angeles, and he also put up buildings in Wasco, Kern County, and at Newhall, Cal. Besides, he erected a large number of private residences in Los Angeles.

Mr. Stradley's entrance into Orange County dates from 1911, when he came to Placentia to construct the two-story brick block for the Placentia National Bank. He then bought lots and started to build up the promising town, and ever since, he has built additional structures, always holding on to what he has once acquired. These include the Marjie and the Stradley brick blocks of two stories, on Santa Fe Avenue, and no less than forty-four apartments in the town. Those who recall that Mr. Stradley erected the Wilcox Cafe at Seal Beach, will not be surprised at the thorough manner in which he has taken hold of Placentia real estate and the problem of the new town's development. He is a director of the Los Angeles Builders Exchange, and is also an officer in the Mason Contractors' Association of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Stradley, who enjoys the devotion of a large circle of appreciative friends, was Miss Marguerite M. Kuntz before her marriage, and is a native of Iowa. Mr. Stradley is a member of Golden State Lodge, No. 358, F. & A. M., Signet Chapter, No. 57, R. A. M., Perfection Consistory, No. 3, S. R., Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. and Jinniston Grotto, M. O. V. P. E. R., all of Los Angeles. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen, Knights of the Maccabees, and the Sunset Country Club.

HENRY G. MEISER.—A very successful rancher owning several tracts of desirable land, and a citizen fortunate not only in the esteem but the hearty good will of his fellowmen, who are familiar with his leadership in various movements making for the broad and permanent development of Fullerton and vicinity, is Henry G. Meiser, who was born near Lincoln, Nebr., on November 21, 1880, the son of Henry and Elizabeth Meiser, farmer folks of Nebraska. These worthy pioneers came to California in 1881 and settled at Anaheim; and there Mr. Meiser worked in the lumber mill for three years. In 1884, the elder Meiser purchased twenty acres of land, which he set out to grapes, oranges and walnuts; and these twenty acres are known today as the old Meiser home place.

Henry G. Meiser attended the schools in Fullerton, and when only fifteen started out for himself in the world. For five years he worked in the Orange County Nursery, and then in 1904, he purchased a ranch of twelve acres, on South Spadra Street, which he himself set out to Valencia oranges. There, too, in 1916, he built for himself a home. The land is under both the Anaheim Union Water Company and the El Camino Water Company, financed by a company of neighboring farmers and commanding a well of 100 inches. Mr. Meiser took a live interest in this co-operative project, and until recently was secretary of the company.

Mr. Meiser was also president of the Federal Farm Loan Board of Orangethorpe, and soon after the precinct branch was formed, it was taken into the Orange County organization, in which Mr. Meiser then became a director. How much good this Federal loan movement has accomplished here, both to the individual rancher needing the aid of capital, and to the community needing the rancher, only those familiar with the general working of the Federal Loan may realize, but Mr. Meiser and his associates are to be congratulated on the fruits of their strenuous labors.

In 1913, Mr. Meiser purchased ten acres of land half a mile west of Fullerton, a ranch formerly devoted to the culture of walnuts. He grubbed out the latter, however, and set out Valencia orange trees; and now he has a display of citrus fruit worth a journey to see. In the fall of 1918, he also bought ten acres on East Orangethorpe Avenue, near Placentia, and this land with its four-year-old trees bearing Valencias is also under the Anaheim Union Water Company. He belongs to the Placentia Orange Growers Association, and markets his products thereby.

At Fullerton, Mr. Meiser was married to Miss Pauline Schnitger, a native of Wisconsin who had become a resident of Garden Grove. Both husband and wife belong to the Methodist Church of Fullerton, and Mr. Meiser is both a Mason and an Odd Fellow. He also belongs to the ranks of the Republicans; but he is too public spirited to allow any party preferences to stand in the way of giving his support, in local movements at least, to the best men and the best measures.

E. EARL CAMPBELL.—One of the leaders among the scientific young ranchers of Orange County is E. Earl Campbell, who is also making a marked success, not only as an orange grower, but also in agricultural ranching. Enterprising and well informed in all lines pertaining to soils and crop conditions, Mr. Campbell conducts his ranch on modern business lines. Belonging to the third generation of Campbells who have contributed to the development of Orange County, he is the grandson of Robert Campbell, who came here in 1884, settling on the ranch on South Cambridge Avenue, a part of which is now owned by Earl Campbell.

Illinois was the birthplace of E. Earl Campbell and he first saw the light of day on the Campbell homestead, near Peoria, on October 29, 1886. His parents were D. F. and Julia F. (Shaw) Campbell, a sketch of their lives being given elsewhere in this volume. There were ten children in the Campbell family, as follows: E. Earl of this review; Henry S., a rancher near Orange; Roy, a graduate of the University of California, is now an assistant entomologist in the Department of Agriculture; Elma is Mrs. Wood of Covina; Ruby resides in Los Angeles, where she is employed; Ensley is assistant farm advisor of Monterey County and Robert attends the University of California; Margaret is in the Orange Union high school; Hazel and Julia attend the grammar school at Orange.

When E. Earl Campbell was but a year old his parents removed to California, where his father engaged in ranching and citrus culture at Orange. Reaching school age, he attended the grammar school at Orange and graduated from the Orange high school, being a member of the second class to graduate from that institution and of the first class graduated from the fine, new modern building. Later he entered the California Polytechnic at San Luis Obispo, taking a two years' course, and was a leader in his class, especially among the debaters of the college; returning to Orange, in 1908 he began working for his father on the home ranch. In 1909, Mr. Campbell purchased twenty acres of citrus orchard adjoining the ranch of his father, and which was a part of the original tract owned by his grandfather, Robert Campbell. Here he has a fine orange orchard, which he keeps up to the highest state of cultivation. Some time ago he erected a modern ten-room residence, old Colonial style, on his ranch and it is considered one of the finest and most beautiful homes in the locality and on which Mr. Campbell spared no expense.

To insure his orange grove being maintained in the very best condition, free from disease and capable of producing its maximum yield Mr. Campbell employs an expert in tree husbandry to give the trees the benefit of his care. In addition to his horticultural interests, Mr. Campbell is engaged in growing barley and beans. At El Toro, where with his partner, E. B. Trickey, he is leasing and operating about 1,000 acres of the Whiting ranch, he has been fortunate in obtaining large yields and successful returns. Besides himself, two men are kept busy on his ranch and for work stock he uses six head of mules.

In December, 1919, Mr. Campbell was married to Miss Dora Truscott of Sacramento. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell, Mavis L. and Helen M. Always ready to help in any movement for the advancement of the community, Mr. Campbell is a firm believer in cooperation, and is a member of the Santiago Orange Growers Association. In fraternal circles Mr. Campbell is active in the circles of the Masonic order, being a member of the Orange Grove Lodge, F. & A. M., at Orange. Despite his busy life and many interests he takes an active interest in politics and is a decided protectionist and Republican.

HENRY D. MEYER.—Like many others of his native land, to Henry D. Meyer, a prosperous citizen and former rancher of Santa Ana, America beckoned as the land of opportunity, as his immigration here at the age of fifteen testifies. Born in Hanover, Germany, August 26, 1866, he was the son of Henry and Mary (Luering) Meyer. The mother died when Henry was a lad of but eleven years, the father later in life coming to the United States, passing away in Mason County, Ill., in 1892, at the age of seventy-two years.

Henry D. Meyer received an excellent education in the schools of his native land up to the time when he was fifteen years old, when he left his home for the long journey to America. Taking passage on the SS. Oder, he landed at New York March 25, 1881, and proceeded to Mason County, Ill. There he secured work on a farm, and was there employed at small wages in those days, for about five years, getting in two months of schooling in the winter time, and poring over his books whenever the opportunity afforded in order to secure an English education.

Feeling that better opportunities still awaited him on the Pacific Coast, Mr. Meyer came to California in 1887, arriving at Los Angeles on August 4, of that year. He soon went down to Wilmington and got his start in the dairy business at San Pedro and Redondo Beach, continuing in this line until 1892. In 1897 he located at Fairview, where he engaged in dry farming, meantime acquiring considerable land in the vicinity. Associated with him in his ranching enterprise are his two sons, Irving B. and Victor C., and his son-in-law, Louis Butterfield. The ranch is devoted principally to beans, sugar beets and grain, the crop yield of the former being very heavy. The raising of cattle and hogs is also an important feature of the ranch. In 1908 he purchased a fruit ranch of 250 acres at Hemet, which is devoted to apricots and peaches.

In 1914 Mr. Meyer removed to Santa Ana and built the commodious Meyer Apartments at Third and Spurgeon streets. This is the finest building of its kind in Santa Ana, being a three-story and basement structure of reinforced concrete, modern in every particular and serving the purpose both of a commercial hotel and an apartment house. He makes his home at 1712 North Main Street, Santa Ana.

Mr. Meyer's marriage in 1889 united him with Miss Mary Kohlmeier, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Kohlmeier of Los Angeles, the ceremony being solemnized at Redondo Beach. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Meyer: Irving B., a sketch of whom is given elsewhere in this historical work; Edna L., the wife of Louis Butterfield; Victor C., all associated with our subject, and Florine A. Fraternally a Mason, Mr. Meyer is a Knight Templar and Shriner, as well as an Elk. A man of industry and foresight, Mr. Meyer has always been very energetic, giving the closest attention to every undertaking in which he is interested. Well-deserved success has crowned his efforts and he now stands in the front ranks of Santa Ana's prosperous citizens, who have succeeded by dint of their own well directed efforts.

OTTO MILLER.—The owner of the Miller Garage at 112-14 West Commonwealth Avenue, Fullerton, Otto Miller was born at Utica, Winnebago County, Wis., March 9, 1870. His grandfather, Christopher Miller, was an early settler in Utica, where he bought Government land and broke the prairie with ox teams, converting the virgin soil into a fertile farm. It was on this farm that our subject's father, John F. Miller grew to manhood, having come there in his early teens, and he, in turn, purchased land and improved a farm. His marriage to Julia Hinz followed this step, which would naturally lead to the establishing of a home. Miss Hinz had also come to Utica with her parents, who were also pioneers of that district, and resided there until their death. Our subject is the third eldest of the seven children who blessed this union and are still living, but he is the only one on the Pacific Coast. A brother, Paul, who was graduated from the University of Wisconsin, is now Commissioner of Education for the United States in Porto Rico.

As a boy, Otto worked on the home farm and attended the public school. At the age of twenty-three he started in the butcher business in Ripon, and later enlarged his business, adding a line of groceries and building up a large trade. It was there that he was married to Emma Leitz, and two children were born to them, Erwin E. and Sarah. While successfully conducting his business, he also operated a farm which he owned, but after twenty-six years he sold out and decided to locate in California, Fullerton being the town of his choice. It was there he purchased the large business building at 112-14 West Commonwealth in August, 1919, and opened business September 26, his son Erwin E. being associated with him in the garage business. Being a splendid mechanic, Erwin, after completing his schooling in his native city, Ripon, where he was born in 1894, took a course in steam and gas engineering at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. He learned the garage and auto repairing business in Ripon and also worked in the factory of the Four-Wheel-Drive Auto Truck Company at Clintonville, Wis. After he came to Orange County in August, 1918, he worked in the garage of Albert Sitton in Fullerton, as well as other garages in the Valley. When his father purchased the garage property, he joined him in the business and is devoting his time to the mechanical end of it. The Miller Garage is well equipped and their show room and offices have been newly refitted and improved, making it one of the best-appointed garages in Fullerton. Besides doing all kinds of repair work on automobiles, they buy and sell used cars, do welding and carry a full line of Miller Tires in which they specialize, and they have a successful and growing business.

Erwin E. Miller's marriage to Miss Ruth Baker took place in Wisconsin and they came to California via the Lincoln Highway in his automobile. Appreciative of the great opportunities afforded men in Orange, who are willing to work, Otto Miller foresees a steady growth and wonderful future for this section of California. Though a strong Republican, he is too broad minded to let party politics stand in the way of any move for the betterment of the locality in which he makes his home.

C. FOREST TALMAGE.—Among Orange County's youngest ranchers is C. Forest Talmage, who is making a decided success for himself as a citrus rancher at his place of ten acres on East Collins Street, east of Tustin Street, Orange. Mr. Talmage's native state was Iowa and he was born there January 23, 1900, at Monroe. His parents were Charles F. and Nanna (Rinemuth) Talmage, natives, respectively, of Ohio and Iowa. The father came from Ohio when a young man and settled at Monroe, and he was well known in that locality as a prosperous farmer and stock raiser, shipping to the Chicago markets from his extensive farm of 348 acres.

In the fall of 1913, Charles F. Talmage brought his family to California, arriving at Orange and soon after purchasing a ranch there. In Iowa, C. Forest Talmage attended the schools of Monroe, until his twelfth year, and after the removal of the family to Orange County, he spent one year in the grammar school and three years in the high school at Orange. For the next two years he worked for his father on his ranch and in 1918 purchased from him a tract of ten acres on East Collins Avenue, in the Villa Park district. Here he has developed a splendid orange grove through his scientific management and steady hard work, and it is one of the best producers in the vicinity.

On November 28, 1917, Mr. Talmage was united in marriage with Miss Marjorie Haynes, the ceremony being solemnized at Beaver, Utah. She is the daughter of D. A. Haynes of Long Beach and was a classmate of her husband at the Orange high school. They are the parents of a little daughter, Melba Lucile. Mr. and Mrs. Talmage make their home in their attractive residence which had been built and furnished all ready for their occupancy before their marriage. They attend the Methodist Church at Orange, and Mr. Talmage is a member of the Villa Park Orchards Association and of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. While young in years, Mr. Talmage has already taken an assured place in the affairs of the community, through his efficiency and dependability and he has the prospect of a most successful future before him.

EMANUEL C. H. FRANZEN.—A prosperous citrus grower, who is naturally rather proud of what he has accomplished, through hard work and careful study, is Emanuel C. H. Franzen, who was born in Little Bendigo, Victoria, Australia, in the vicinity of Ballarat, on July 29, 1866—in the midst of the winter in that antipodes. His father, Henry Franzen, was a blacksmith and a native of Schleswig-Holstein; and he had married Tina Kryhl of Denmark. This worthy couple moved to Australia in 1857, and they were getting nicely settled there when Emanuel was born.

On account of the illness of his grandmother, it was deemed best to return to the vicinity of a good hospital so that the necessary operation might be performed; hence, the family returned to Germany in 1868 and Kiel, but all in vain, for she passed away soon after the surgical effort was made to save her life. The Franzens then lived near Flensburg for five years, when they migrated to America and to Illinois. They arrived in Sycamore, Dekalb County, in 1873, and there for a year Henry Franzen followed blacksmithing until 1883. When he sold out, it was to come further west, to California.

At Orange, he purchased ten acres on Walnut Street, one and a half miles northeast of Orange, land owned at present by William Grecht; and Emanuel both worked at farming and began to learn the carpenter's trade, having attended grammar and private schools at Sycamore. The lad began to breathe the milder air of the Golden State when he was sixteen years old, and by 1893 he was able to purchase seven acres on South Tustin Avenue, a part of his present place. Later, he purchased eight acres from the Gathmann ranch adjoining his place on the north, the whole making a fine block of fifteen choice acres. He has two acres devoted to Mediterranean sweets and thirteen acres to Valencia oranges, and the land is under the water service of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company, in which cooperative concern Mr. Franzen owns fifteen shares; and all the improvements, including his splendid residence, garage, barn and pumping plant, have been accomplished through our subject's own efforts.

On August 3, 1893, Mr. Franzen was married to Miss Mary Gathmann, a sister of John Gathmann, and a native of Fond du Lac, Wis., and the daughter of John and Gesche Gathmann, old settlers in that state. She came to Orange with her parents in 1882, and her father purchased property to the north of and next to Mr. Franzen's. Her education began in Wisconsin, and was finished at Orange. Mr. Franzen belongs to the First Presbyterian Church of Orange, and takes an active part in the many valuable movements there; also participating actively in the war drives. Six children—five of whom are still living—blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Franzen. George H. is living on the old Slater ranch on North Tustin Avenue. Edward J. is at home with his parents. Emma J. also enjoys the life of her parents' home; she is a graduate and a post-graduate of the local high school, and is employed by the Guarantee Title Abstract Company in Santa Ana. Della M. is taking a general course at the junior college in Santa Ana, and Mabel D. is at the Orange high school. Lois died on May 27, 1918.

Mr. Franzen stands for principle every time in politics, and his family share his rugged honesty. Two of his sons sacrificed something in the late war for the sake of the same worth-while ideal. George H. served in the aviation department, having enlisted in March, 1918. He served at North Island and at March Field, and had the care, as a mechanic, of the planes. After being honorably discharged, in the spring of 1919, he returned to civilian life. Edward J. enlisted in the Navy; went to the training school at Gulfport, Miss., in June, 1918, and served as landsman and machinist's mate. And he was busy there until he was retired as a reservist on January 16, 1919.

HUGH J. HEANEY.—An industrious, enterprising and successful native son of whom California may well be proud is Hugh J. Heaney, head of the Los Angeles Division of Railroad Telegraphers. He was born at Los Angeles on July 25, 1893, the son of John W. and Mary (McDonald) Heaney. His father came west with his parents from St. Louis and was graduated from the Los Angeles high school; and later, as a mechanical engineer, he has served several firms for years in Los Angeles, and acted as road engineer for the fire department. He has also been active in various movements in the City of the Angels for the improvement of the community. Mrs. Heaney came to Los Angeles from Nova Scotia, in company with a brother and a sister; and she was married soon after settling here.

Hugh Heaney finished the usual courses in the grammar school and then studied for a year at the Los Angeles Polytechnic; but the progress of his studies was interrupted when his folks moved to Elsinore. When seventeen years of age, he became absorbed with telegraphy, and at Elsinore he served an apprenticeship of eighteen months under Oscar Ray, the station agent and telegrapher. Then he went on the road for the Santa Fe Railroad Company, as extra relief agent and telegrapher, and served in the Los Angeles division, which now extends from Barstow to San Diego.

On June 17, 1917, Mr. Heaney came to Santa Ana, and took up the duties of an operator in the Santa Fe office. He has also served as telegrapher at various stations on the road, including Elsinore, Mentone—both of these resorts—Placentia and National City, and also at Redlands. Inasmuch as the telegraph played an important role during the war, in the movement of troops, Mr. Heaney, as well as all other operators, was placed under control of the Government. In 1918, also, he became a member of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Los Angeles Division, of which he has been made local chairman. He also belongs to Lodge No. 583 of the Elks at Redlands, and to the Knights of Columbus; and in national politics he is a Republican.

On July 3, 1916, Mr. Heaney was married to Miss Grace Callaghan, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. Callaghan, fruit growers of Redlands, whose ranch at present comprises some twenty-five acres. Her parents were pioneers in Redlands, and in that city she was born on September 16, 1898. Two children have blessed this union: Mary Elizabeth was born on October 18, 1917; and Grace Loretta on February 11, 1919. Mr. Heaney has two sisters living. The elder is Mrs. H. C. Taber of Los Angeles, the wife of a well-known member of the Los Angeles fire department; the younger is the wife of J. E. Fenton, an instructor in mechanics in the Southern Pacific Railroad shop. Mrs. Heaney has two brothers and a sister. Bernard J. is a sophomore at Berkeley; John J., a salesman, is proud of his military record; and Mary E. is a student at the Girls' College at San Francisco.

MACK HENRY MORRISON.—A man who has had a share in various building enterprises in and around Santa Ana, and has thereby helped to construct one of the most beautiful of Southern California cities, is Mack Henry Morrison, who was born a native son in Hornitos, Mariposa County, on January 3, 1867, the son of a sturdy pioneer, Mack Henry Morrison, who crossed the plains and mountains from Little Rock, Ark., to California in 1850. He located in Mariposa County and married Miss Susan Titchenal, the daughter of William H. Titchenal, an early settler of Santa Ana. Five of Mr. and Mrs. Morrison's children still survive, and Mack Henry is the third son among them.

He attended the common schools in Mariposa and was reared on a farm of three hundred twenty acres, five miles northeast of Hornitos, Cal., where his father raised stock and grain, the nearest market being Merced. In 1883, he was sent to Santa Ana to attend school, after which he returned to his father's farm. Then he worked out, saved his earnings, and in 1889 came back to Santa Ana and Orange County, and soon thereafter entered the employ of Frank and George Heil as a brickmason.

On October 2, 1888, Mr. Morrison was married, at Snelling, to Miss Ida Hamilton, daughter of Joel and Sarah Hamilton, of Snelling, Merced County. She came to California as a girl with her parents from Moberly, Mo., and it was not long before she had thoroughly caught the California spirit. For seven years, Mr. Morrison farmed for himself in Merced County before coming to Orange County to make his home in this thriving locality.

In 1896, the happy couple located on the old Neal Place on Bristol Street, in Santa Ana, and then, for a year, he went to El Modena and the Hot Springs. After a while, he purchased a ranch at 1120 East Washington Street—a home place with three acres of walnuts and a good family orchard, where he now makes his residence. Meanwhile, he is an employee at C. H. Chapman Lumber Yards in Santa Ana. He has other important financial interests besides those of his ranch, so that, with his daily labor, he is a busy man indeed.

Six children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Morrison: Crystal is the wife of Dyas Kenner, a rancher, at Tomato Springs, and the mother of a child, Alien; Loftus B. is at home, with a fine record as a graduate of the Orange County Business College and as a soldier; Marvin, a graduate of Pomona College and at present the athletic director, football coach, and professor at the Santa Ana high school, also has a military record, receiving the commission of ensign; he married Miss Cecil Wood, of Beverly Hills; Orval is in the fire department at Portland, Ore.; Rosalind attends the Lincoln school; and Evelyn is in the Santa Ana intermediate. The family worship at the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Santa Ana. Mr. Morrison, who is a Democrat, has always supported prohibition. He is an active member of the Maccabees.

JOEL BRUCE HANDY.—Even as a boy the inclinations of Joel Bruce Handy were in the direction of agricultural pursuits and at the early age of sixteen he started ranching on his own account. A native son of Orange County, he has grown to manhood in his home environment and has been a liberal contributor to modern ideas on the subject of vegetable growing, particularly of the Monstrous variety lima beans.

The next to the youngest of four children born to Owen and Mary (Parker) Handy, Joel B. Handy was born December 5, 1881, on Handy Street in Orange, Cal. His schooling was received in the schools of Villa Park and he was always a leader in athletics during his school days, being very proficient in all kinds of sports and games. In 1897 he decided to start out on his own responsibility, although but a boy, and he began the growing of vegetables. At first he grew only small produce, such as peas, beans, corn, etc., marketing his produce at Los Angeles and San Francisco. He was the pioneer in the growing of small vegetables in the Villa Park district and was one of the founders of the Orange County Vegetable Association, with headquarters at Villa Park. Mr. Handy was always very successful in his work and soon became purchasing agent for the large commission firms of Quadroos and Joseph, and Jacobs and Malcolm, both of San Francisco. He was also the representative of the Aggeler-Musser Seed Company for some time and proved up on the Monstrous lima bean here and at Laguna Beach, which has proved the biggest bearer of all lima beans. For about seven years of this time he also had a nursery, raising orange and lemon trees.

For the past fifteen years Mr. Handy has been manager of the Handy ranch of thirty acres, which is situated at Villa Park, devoted to oranges and lemons. In addition to his extensive activities as a vegetable grower he has also become interested in citrus culture, and is the owner of an orchard of seven and a half acres at Villa Park, half Valencia oranges and half lemons, and here the family make their home. He is a member of the Central Lemon Association and Villa Park Orchards Association.

On February 10, 1904, Mr. Handy was united in marriage with Miss Esther May Johnson, born in Michigan, who came to Orange, Cal., in 1902 with the family of her uncle, G. J. Stock. She is the daughter of Wm. M. and Elizabeth (Stock) Johnson. Her father is dead, while her mother now makes her home at Anaheim with a younger brother, Estel Johnson. A sister of Mrs. Handy, Mrs. J. H. Gunnett, resides at Long Beach. Mr. and Mrs. Handy are the parents of three attractive children: Zelda Elizabeth, in Orange Union high school, and Owen William and Bruce Johnson.

A man of unusual energy and initiative, Mr. Handy makes a success of any work that comes his way, and in addition to his profitable ranching activities he is also of an inventive turn, which frequently stands him in good stead in his ranching enterprises. Notwithstanding a very busy life, Mr. Handy retains his prowess as a sportsman and has a fine bungalow and fishing launch at Laguna Beach, where he gets great enjoyment out of the free outdoor life. A firm believer in protection, he is naturally an adherent of the principles of the Republican party.

THEODORE REUTER.—A self-made man who has won recognition as a successful rancher, is Theodore Reuter, who was born at the old ranch house at 902 Grand Avenue, Santa Ana, on February 12, 1890. His father, Ludwig Reuter, a native of Germany, married a daughter of that country, Magdalena Herchert; and in 1887, when so many were flocking to California on account of the "boom," they became pioneers of Orange County, following one of Mr. Reuter's brothers, already comfortably settled here, and Mr. Reuter bought eight acres on Fruit and Grand streets.

The second son in a family of four surviving children, Theodore went to the grammar schools in Santa Ana and then took two years of the high school course; and from his seventeenth year he began to give his attention earnestly to agriculture. In 1902, Ludwig Reuter increased his holdings to twenty acres, and in time the family purchased and improved other ranches and then sold them at a profit. At present Theodore is the manager of nineteen and a half acres, in which two brothers and a sister also have a share. Ludwig Reuter died in March, 1915, aged fifty-four years; but his widow is still living at the old home ranch, aged about fifty-six.

Ludwig Reuter became an early winemaker and also wine merchant of Santa Ana, and the old Reuter home place is a landmark known to thousands throughout the county. The old house, too, was once used in Tustin as the early schoolhouse, and so it still has its associations for many. This structure was removed by the ingenious pioneer, who retained it in good condition. Now Theodore has the management of ten acres of walnuts, and about nine acres of oranges. He belongs to the Santa Ana Walnut Growers Association, and also to the Santiago Orange Growers Association.

On August 25, 1916, Mr. Reuter was married to Miss Dorothy Weber, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Weber of West Garden Grove; and one child has blessed their marriage—the baby, Jean. The family attend the Christian Church, and Mr. Reuter is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood of Santa Ana. In national politics, he is a Republican. Patriotic to the core, Mr. and Mrs. Reuter supported all the Liberty Loan drives during the war.

A sister of Mr. Reuter is Hedwig S., now the wife of Roy W. Angle, master mechanic of the Union Oil Company. A brother is H. A. Reuter, and another brother is Ernest A., who is at home. H. A. Reuter, who is connected with the Santa Ana Register, enlisted in the World War, as did his brother, Ernest, in August, 1917; and for two years they both served overseas. E. A. was in the First Division of the Mobile Repair Ordnance; and H. A. was in the Supply Service at Neuf Chateau, France. In 1919, at San Francisco, they received their honorable discharges.

OTTO L. AHLEFELD.—A native of California in all but birth, Otto L. Ahlefeld has lived in Orange County since his third year, so that his memory of his childhood days does not reach beyond its borders. He was born in Lombard, a short distance from Chicago, Ill. January 4, 1894, his parents being George and Louise (Stauch) Ahlefeld, both of whom were born in Germany, the father coming to America from his old home at Hamburg when but a young lad. There were six children in the Ahlefeld family, three of whom are living: Fred E. married Miss Gertrude Lippe of Santa Ana and they are the parents of one child, Richard; Otto L., the subject of this sketch; and Ethel, the only daughter, resides with her parents in Orange.

George Ahlefeld farmed in the vicinity of Lombard, Ill., for a number of years, until 1897, when he brought his family to California, settling near Orange, where he immediately began citrus ranching. He still resides on his original purchase, which he has improved and developed, having erected a comfortable residence on the property some years ago. Otto was reared on the home place, receiving a good education in the public schools at Orange. He early began to help his father on the ranch, so was fortunate when but a boy in getting a thorough and practical knowledge of the citrus industry. In 1916 he purchased a tract of five acres at Olive and this he has developed and improved, planting it to oranges, and he has had water piped to it for irrigation purposes from the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. In 1920 he made a considerable addition to his holdings by the purchase of a well developed ranch of ten acres on Palmyra and Santiago Creek. Five acres of this ranch are set to Valencia oranges, while the remainder of the acreage is taken up with the buildings and a thriving walnut orchard. His ranch at Olive is now leased to the Olive Petroleum Company.

On August 30, 1916, Mr. Ahlefeld was married to Miss Verona Strong, born in this county, a daughter of Carl and Alice (Straud) Strong, who were pioneers of Orange and are still ranchers in Los Angeles County, Mrs. Strong being a native daughter of California. One child, Carl G., has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ahlefeld. They make their home on the ten-acre ranch which Mr. Ahlefeld purchased this year and here he is devoting his time and energy to bringing the place up to the highest degree of cultivation. Seeing the benefits accruing from organization among the growers, Mr. Ahlefeld is a member of the McPherson Heights Citrus Association and of the Olive Hill-side Growers Association, also of the Santa Ana Valley Irrigation Company. Politically he is a believer in the principles of the Republican party. He is a member of the Lutheran Church at Orange and both of them are active in its circles, where they enjoy a wide popularity.

LEROY A. WARREN.—A professional man whose choice of the open-air life of California made him a rancher, and whose common sense and experience have made him conservative in his progressive operations, is Leroy A. Warren, known to those who really know him as public spirited and patriotic in every particular. He was born in Arkansas City, Kans., on September 14, 1891, the son of Thomas L. Warren, now a business man and property owner at Santa Ana, where he also has a brother in business, Howard T. Warren. Thomas Warren was born in Iowa in 1866, and later moved to Kansas. He had married Miss Elizabeth Wilson, who was born in Ohio in 1862, and they came to Santa Ana on Christmas Eve, 1900, bringing their three children—our subject, an older brother, Martin W. Warren, now in the post office at Santa Ana, and a younger brother, William H. Warren, who is with the Union Oil Company of Santa Monica.

Leroy Warren attended the grammar schools at Santa Ana, and in 1911 was graduated from the high school of this city, after which and during the academic year of 1912-13 he was a student at Occidental College. Then he matriculated at the Santa Barbara Normal school, from which he was duly graduated in 1914. He first taught in the Visalia high school, where he was the athletic trainer for a year, giving instruction as well in the other city schools, and from 1917 to 1919 he was a teacher in the manual arts department of the high school at Santa Ana, and was athletic trainer and football coach at Santa Ana.

In 1919 Mr. Warren retired from his professional work and on April 26 bought three and a half acres of oranges and one and a half acres of lemons at Villa Park—a small ranch, having a fine residence and an orchard. He has five shares in the Serrano Water Company and three shares in the Santiago Well Company, and with this most adequate irrigation he is an independent shipper, and has come to enjoy an enviable reputation for the quality of his ranch products.

On December 28, 1916, Mr. Warren was married to Miss Ruth E. Alexander, of Hollywood, who was a fellow-student with Mr. Warren at the Santa Barbara Normal school. She is a lady of excellent accomplishments, who also taught school, instructing in domestic science at the Inglewood schools. Their one child, James Alexander, was born on May 15, 1918. Mr. Warren supports the Community Church at Villa Park, and under the leadership of the Republican party endeavors to work for improved civic standards.

ALFRED W. LEICHTFUSS.—A live worker and, therefore, a very live wire in the Orange Men's Club, boasting at present a membership of nearly 150, is Alfred W. Leichtfuss, who was born in Milwaukee, Wis., on July 1, 1883, the son of August F. Leichtfuss, also a member of that great commonwealth by reason of birth. He was a decorator and a dealer in artistic draperies; and after a long, arduous business career, which enabled him to contribute much toward the proper direction and development of artistic taste in Wisconsin, he came out to California to live in retirement, and now resides with his son, our subject, on the home ranch. He had married Miss Auguste Janicke, a native of Germany, who brought to her aid as his life companion the best traits of womanhood and domestic life in her native land, and a fine appreciation of the social institutions of America and their significance to broad-minded and large-hearted women.

Alfred Leichtfuss attended the local grammar schools in Milwaukee, and from his thirteenth year worked hard for a living. He learned the baker's trade, and was head baker of the busy shop of Beith & Porth, in Milwaukee, continuing in that business for four and a half years. He was the third son in a family of nine children, all still happily alive, and he made good as a salesman. He represented, also, the Edgewood Dairy Farm of Wisconsin, and for years traveled extensively for that well-known concern. In October, 1904, he came to Villa Park and worked as a rancher, and now he owns and operates for himself sixteen acres, ten of which are set out to Valencias, three to lemons and three to Navel oranges. By hard, steady work, and in various ways he greatly improved his ranch and raised it to a high state of cultivation.

On August 1, 1905, Mr. Leichtfuss was married to Miss Elsie Knuth, and they have three children, all bright students in the neighboring schools. Their names are Wilfred, Harvey and Lawrence. The family attends the Lutheran Church, in which Mr. Leichtfuss has served on the building committee. He is a member of the Villa Park Orchards and the Central Lemon Growers associations, and he marches in his civic endeavors in the ranks of the Republican party.

MANSON ROUSE.—An enterprising ranchman, with a fine knowledge of horticulture and full of the progressive spirit of the twentieth century, is Manson Rouse, who was born at San Francisco on September 3, 1897, the son of D. M. Rouse, a native of Agency County, Iowa, where he was born in 1870. He had married Sarah McCullough, a native of County Armagh, Ireland, and came to Northern California as a boy in 1875. His success in large irrigation projects in the north has fixed his fame among the inhabitants there, where he was best known as the superintendent of the San Joaquin and Kings Rivers Canal and Irrigation Company. His death occurred at Santa Ana in 1912.

Manson Rouse was sent to the graded schools in Santa Ana, after which he took the high school course in the same city. For four years he was employed by Miller & Lux in Merced County, coming direct from the north in 1917 to Villa Park. With his mother and his younger brother, David, Mr. Rouse also began the management of a fine lemon and orange ranch of twenty acres, located on the beautiful Center Drive, and this estate, owned by his mother, he now directs. According to Mr. Rouse, nowhere in California does the lemon industry make a better showing than at Villa Park, and this opinion, founded on scientific study and practical experience, is naturally of great interest to all who are essaying citrus culture in Orange County. He uses tractors on his up-to-date ranch, and with a fine system of pipe lines and a complete outfit of modern machinery he is able to maintain a "show place" and to make a very comfortable income for all concerned.

In national politics Mr. Rouse is a Republican, but he does not allow partisanship or narrow views of any kind to interfere with his vigorous and effective support of every measure or movement likely to build up or upbuild the community with which he is so vitally and so honorably associated.

WILLIAM J. S. HOLDITCH.—An enterprising, experienced and successful rancher who has made a specialty as a horticulturist, is William J. S. Holditch of Villa Park, known to everybody for miles around as a "good fellow." He was born at Sturgeon Falls, Ontario, on September 27, 1881, the son of James Holditch, a native of that place, who both kept a store and ran a ranch in Sturgeon Falls, and was honored by his fellow-citizens as their choice for mayor of that town. He came to Sturgeon Falls as a pioneer with John Parker, and married Ellen Parker, a native of England, who came to America when she was a girl. William attended the local schools in Canada, graduating from the high school of Sturgeon Falls, and as the oldest son in a family of seven children, worked for two years for an uncle in a planing mill at Sturgeon Falls.

In 1901 Mr. and Mrs. Holditch and a daughter came to California for a year, to look around and size up the country, and in 1902 they arranged for the remainder of the family to follow them here. In October of the same year our subject entered the University of Southern California, and for a couple of semesters pursued such studies as were congenial to him. He discontinued the course when the health of his father became impaired, and it was necessary for someone to take charge of the fine twenty-five acres purchased by him in Villa Park in March, 1903. This ranch has ten acres of Navel oranges, three acres of apricots, and the balance, or twelve acres, in barley. It also came to have a good well, finished by James Holditch in 1912. In course of time John Holditch, another son, bought eight of the acres.

William Holditch started a nursery of citrus trees, where he planted and grew stock both for his own ranch and for the market. In 1907 he bought from Frederick Meade of New York some twenty-one unimproved acres at Villa Park, and there he himself set out the trees. In addition to the water supply from the well dug by his father, Mr. Holditch commands other service through his holding of stock in the Serrano Water Association, and he is a member and shareholder in both the Central Lemon Growers and Villa Park Orchards associations.

James Holditch came west in pursuit of better health, and found the improvement desired in Orange County, Cal. He died in 1913, aged sixty-three. His widow lives contentedly, having at home a daughter, Marguerite, our subject, and two other sons, George E. and Bronson Holditch. A son, John, married Miss Myrtle Adams and lives at Villa Park; and a daughter, Anna, became the wife of W. A. Knuth. John Holditch saw active service in France as a member of the Ninety-first Division of the Three Hundred Sixty-fourth Regiment. Bronson was also in the land of the Gauls as one of the Fortieth Division in the One Hundred Forty-fifth Battery of the Heavy Artillery, and George E. Holditch was connected with the ground service in the aviation department of the U. S. Army. All received honorable discharges. John is a member of the Elks at Anaheim, while William is a charter member of, and has held office in, the Knights of Pythias of Orange.

In national politics a Republican, in local affairs a first-class nonpartisan "booster," Mr. Holditch supports the Community Church and every movement likely to result in the uplifting and upbuilding of Villa Park and her favored sister communities in the most favored of all counties, Orange.

BENJAMIN W. JEROME.—A native-born son of the state, who has come into prominence as one of the successful ranchers of Orange County, is Benjamin W. Jerome, who possesses in a large measure those qualities which have been the foundation of the upbuilding of the West, enterprise and determination, qualities which he no doubt inherited from his father, William Jerome, a pioneer settler with a record for valiant service in the Civil War, and later in the bloody conflicts with the Apaches, that his descendants may well cherish with pride.

William Jerome was born in London, England, on July 21, 1846, and on migrating to America located in Pennsylvania. Shortly after his arrival there the Civil War broke out, and he at once joined the colors of his adopted country and enlisted in the First Pennsylvania Cavalry, and served throughout the conflict. After the close of the war he enlisted in the regulars and was sent to the Pacific Coast to relieve the First California Volunteers, who had restrained the depredations of the Indian tribes during these days. Coming to California via the Isthmus of Panama, they landed at San Pedro and made their way to Yuma, Ariz. Here Mr. Jerome served for two years under Captain Dunkelberger, and later in the company of Captain Bernard, and took part in the Apache campaign when Chief Cochise was at the head of the tribe. During one of the battles he was twice wounded and on account of climatic conditions and lack of hospital facilities he was sent to San Diego. After his recovery he was given his honorable discharge and mustered out and located in Los Angeles; here he was appointed as a member of the police force, and it was during this time that he made the acquaintance of Miss Martha Ward, like himself a native of London, England, who had come to California on a visit. The acquaintance continued and resulted in their marriage in 1875.

In 1879 Mr. and Mrs. Jerome removed to what is now Orange County, settling at Olive, and on September 25, 1881, he located at Tustin, where he built his home and thereafter made his residence. Here he engaged in business as a plaster and cement contractor, a trade which he had learned in Philadelphia in his early days. He was always prominent in the ranks of the G. A. R., and his passing, on August 20, 1900, at the age of fifty-four, left a heartfelt void in the ranks of his comrades. His widow survives him and makes her home with her daughter, M. Louise, on the Irvine Ranch. Five children were born to this worthy couple: William C. is the present auditor of Orange County and a partner with his brother in the ranching business; Benjamin W., the subject of this review; M. Louise leases 200 acres of the Irvine ranch; Nellie is the wife of C. E. Stone, who is foreman of the Whiting ranch operated by the Jerome brothers; Estelle is Mrs. Don Rudd of Santa Monica.

When Benjamin W. Jerome was in his second year his parents moved to Olive, Orange County, and later to Tustin, and here he has ever since made his home, attending the public schools and growing up in close touch with every phase of ranch life. On reaching young manhood he and his brother, William C., started farming on the Whiting ranch, raising wheat and barley for a number of years. They worked hard and made a splendid success of their undertaking, which enabled them to branch out more extensively from year to year. The problems involving the nature, condition and needs of the soil, and properly supplying that which is lacking in order to realize the highest state of productiveness, are matters to which they give close attention, and by the scientific application of the most approved methods of culture they have demonstrated what can be accomplished by intelligent and systematic work.

In addition to the 320-acre ranch north of Irvine on which Mr. Jerome makes his home, the brothers operate 800 acres of the Whiting ranch and the tract of 200 acres south of Irvine which their sister, M. Louise, holds under lease. They also are the owners of 200 acres, all under cultivation, 160 acres lying in the Imperial Valley and forty acres near Tustin. Formerly they devoted the greater part of their holdings to hay and grain, but of late years they have specialized in lima beans, and in this they are most successful, producing up to twenty sacks an acre on some of their land.

Mr. Jerome's marriage, which occurred at Santa Ana on October 8, 1902, united him with Miss Effie Smithwick, who was born at Kernville, Kern County. She is the daughter of Edward Smithwick, a native of Texas, who crossed the plains in the early days. He engaged in stock raising in Tulare County, later going to Kern County, where he met and married Rebecca Reid, also a native of Texas, who had been brought across the plains by her parents when but a babe. The Smithwicks came to Santa Ana about forty years ago and Mr. Smithwick engaged in the livery business there and also occupied the office of justice of the peace; he still makes his home there. Mrs. Jerome was graduated from the Santa Ana high school and for four years was herself a teacher. Mr. and Mrs. Jerome are the parents of one son, Benjamin E.

Mr. Jerome is prominent in the California Lima Bean Growers Association and in fraternal circles is a member of the Elks, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen, being affiliated with the Santa Ana lodges of these organizations. In his political sympathies he is a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party. Active, progressive and successful, the Jerome brothers are among the most energetic workers in Orange County, and they bring to bear upon all their dealings those principles of honesty and integrity that are ever the real basis of success.

ARTHUR C. PICKERING.—An optimistically inclined, self-made rancher, who is not ashamed to acknowledge that he commenced ranching in 1910 with an encumbrance of $4000 on his six acres, is Arthur C. Pickering, who may also modestly boast that today he owes no one a dollar, and now controls eleven well-developed acres, all set out successfully to citrus fruit. This remarkable prosperity, reached as a matter of fact in 1918, Mr. Pickering attributes largely to his capable, loyal wife, who has shared with him his uphill climbs and now enters in with him to enjoy the fruits of long, hard labor, clear foresight and bold, if wisely conservative, investment.

Mr. Pickering was born in Wellington, Sumner County, Kans., on February 15, 1884, the son of Loring A. and Elnora (Cummins) Pickering, both natives of Indiana, who pioneered to Kansas in the early seventies and there broke up the virgin soil. They had to face the most adverse and discouraging conditions, and to undergo many real hardships; but they accomplished something for the new state, and when Arthur was five years old they moved back to Indiana. There the lad attended the district schools of Henry County, and he also worked for his father on the home farm.

When he was twenty-one Mr. Pickering proved up on some homestead land in Oklahoma, in which he had become interested. His parents had long wished to move westward, but they did not venture to do so until their home had been destroyed by fire, in 1906, when they went to Galveston, Tex., then came to Whittier, Cal., where they now live. Arthur C. joined his parents in Texas, working on the docks and for the General Shipping Board, and he continued to work in the Lone Star State for three months. In 1907 Arthur followed to the fast-growing Quaker town, and there, working for his father, he became an enterprising rancher.

In 1910 L. A. and Arthur Pickering bought seventeen acres of open barley field in the Yorba Linda tract—six acres of which were sold—and at present the entire tract is held by our subject, who is a member and shareholder in the Yorba Linda Citrus Association, a member of both the Yorba Linda Water Company, a charter member of the Yorba Linda Chamber of Commerce, and the holder of stock certificate No. 1 in the Foothills Growers Association, having been instrumental in bringing to his district the branch house.

On May 9, 1907, Mr. Pickering was married to Miss Cecil E. Fadely, a schoolmate of his boyhood days, and four children blessed their happy home. The eldest was Chauncey, and then came the twins, Carolyn and Elnore, who are attending the Yorba Linda grammar school, and Elizabeth. The family reside in Yorba Linda on Park Place. Such was the promising family of this estimable couple; but Chauncey, who first saw the light of day on April 15, 1909, at Whittier, and grew up in Yorba Linda, a favorite with all who knew his sunny disposition, his thoughtful demeanor and his manly conduct, closed his eyes to the scenes of this world on June 2, 1920, the services being conducted by Rev. Ray Carter, pastor of the Friends Church, of which the boy was a member. He had just finished his fifth grade work and had been naturally delighted with his success; so much so that one cannot doubt that he was eager to enter upon that higher development awaiting every earnest soul in the unknown world.

RICHARD W. COLE.—With the dogged determination of the British race to carry on, as shown so clearly in the late war, Richard W. Cole has won his way to success over all obstacles, and with no help save that of his own energy and will power has reached an assured position in life, where he can look back and say that his work was good. Born at Chidlemolt, Devonshire, England, October 16, 1846, when five years of age he was brought to America by his parents, and the family finally settled in Ontario, Canada. At the early age of twelve years he was obliged to start to work, and was employed on farms, making his own way. In 1878 he came out to Coos Bay, Ore., and engaged in contract lumbering in the Coos Bay district for three years. He then came to California, first locating in Sonoma County, and worked on the ranch of ex-Sheriff Adams. Later he worked in the redwood lumber camps near Guerneville, that county. The year 1881 found him in San Diego County, and there he pre-empted a homestead of 160 acres near Escondido, and eighty acres of government land, proving up on his holdings and farmed them for twenty years, only to lose all he had made during the dry year in that district through lack of water for his land.

Coming to Orange County in 1902, nothing daunted by Dame Fortune turning her back on him, Mr. Cole started in anew and worked on oil wells for the Union Oil Company for nine years. During this time he bought six and one-ninth acres of raw land of the Tuffree ranch, planted this himself to Valencia oranges, and in 1917 sold the property for $20,000. He then bought his present ranch of ten and one-half acres of Valencia oranges, ten-year-old trees now in full bearing, and in 1919 he produced 4013 field boxes from the property. He is a member of the Placentia Mutual Orange Association, and a man highly esteemed by his neighbors for his sterling qualities and business ability.

The marriage of Mr. Cole, which occurred in Canada, united him with Margaret Fraser, a native of Ontario, Canada, and five children have been born to them: Gertrude, wife of A. Addington of Arizona, and the mother of two children; Bertha I., Mrs. Bessonette of Olinda, the mother of three children; Mabel, wife of Frank Summers, with the Union Oil Company, and the mother of three children; Albert, an oil man of the McKittrick district; Myrtle, wife of Ed Cline, oil man, and the mother of two children. A sad blow fell on the family December 11, 1920, when his beloved wife passed away, mourned by her family and many friends.

HERVEY D. NICHOLS.—A progressive citrus rancher, who has attained success both for himself and for others in his executive work as manager and secretary of the Villa Park Orchards Association, is Hervey D. Nichols. He was born at Enosburg, Franklin County, Vt., December 26, 1887, the son of George H. Nichols, a Vermonter, who married Miss Hattie Leach, also a native of that state, and became a farmer. He owned 360 acres devoted to a dairying enterprise, and had sixty head of milch cows and forty young stock. Four children were born to this worthy couple, and of these Hervey is the youngest. An older brother, George L., is the owner and manager of the old homestead which has been in the possession of the family since the historical year of 1812.

Hervey attended the Brigham Academy at Bakersfield, Vt., and then went to the University of Vermont, where he pursued an engineer's course. Having finished his studies, he became a representative for the Pugh Brothers Automobile Company of Providence, and for five years attained the most gratifying success in that field. A trip to Porto Rico led to his remaining there for a couple of years, but in 1913 he returned to the States.

On October 8, 1913, Mr. Nichols came west with his mother, who has spent four winters in California, and stopped a while in Los Angeles, later engaging in the citrus industry in Pomona; and in this field he has continued to progress. On August 11, 1915, he returned to Vermont to marry Miss Eunice Story, a native of that state, who had been a classmate with him at Brigham Academy. Two children have blessed this union—Lawrence E., born August 4, 1918, and Winston P., born February 20, 1920. Mr. Nichols is a member of the Villa Park Community Church, where he is president of the board of church trustees; he is also a school trustee, and in national politics is a Republican.

The Villa Park Orchards Association, whose six years' existence and the last two years of successful operation is largely due to the experience and fidelity of Mr. Nichols, has 150 members and packs and distributes fruit coming from some 1250 acres. It is a non-profit-sharing, non-capital stock association, and the growers are interested to the amount of fifty dollars per acre, which is taken out of the proceeds at the rate of five cents per packed box. The grower owns that much interest in the establishment, which is not transferable except through the sale of the acreage. Six years ago Mr. Nichols was house foreman for the association, and he has been a couple of years in his present combined office of manager and secretary. Prior to coming here, for three years he was at La Verne and served as foreman of the Orange and Lemon Growers Association there, thus adding greatly to his experience.

The Villa Park Orchards Association now employs as many as 100 men and women during the season, and so busy is it that its offices are never closed. It furnishes transportation to all employees who require it, to and from Orange. It shipped 434 cars of oranges during the season of 1919. Throughout the plant the equipment is thoroughly modern, and as the fruit raised in this section is among the choicest to be found in all of California, it is not surprising that the brands—"Alphabetical," fancy, and "Bird Rocks," extra choice—are among those most eagerly sought by Easterners who know a good orange when they taste one. Three trucks are used to handle the fruit.

Mr. Nichols is a director in the Lotspeich Water Association, and one-quarter of a mile east of Villa Park he owns twelve acres of rich farm land, eleven acres of which are set out to Valencias and one acre to lemons. This property he purchased from Alfred Leech, a well-known orange grower. It is irrigated through the Lotspeich Water Association.

At college Mr. Nichols belonged to the Delta Sigma fraternity, and now he is a Mason, affiliated with Orange Grove Lodge at Orange. A worker in church and social organizations, Mr. Nichols and his good wife enjoy a wide popularity.

JULIAN R. CRUIZ.—A young man of sterling worth, who is making good as a valued employee of the Standard Oil Company, one of the organizations best known in all the United States for taking care of those who have first shown themselves capable of faithful, disinterested service, is Julian R. Cruz, rancher and teamster. He was born at Yorba, in the Yorba precinct, on January 28, 1888, the son of P. and Jesus Ramirez Cruz, both of whom were natives of Sonora, Mexico. He attended the grammar school at Yorba, and from childhood was properly brought up under the supervision of the Catholic Church.

When old enough to do so, he began working out on ranches by the day, and then by the year, and in 1918 commenced to work for the Standard Oil Company. He is still with that concern, and is employed on the Kraemer leases. Being single, he is able to assist his parents, who live on a rented ranch of a couple of acres, and he furnishes the support of his maternal grandfather. A half-brother of Mr. Cruz, George Manzo, works for the Federal Oil Company on the Stern lease; a sister, Mary, is the wife of Prudencio E. Yorba, the rancher of the Yorba precinct; and a half-sister, Claudina Asebedo, is the wife of Eugene Navarro, and lives at San Gabriel.

Mr. Cruz takes a keen interest in all that goes on in the political as well as the business world, and is ever ready to do what he can to better the conditions of the locality in which he lives. He is a Republican in matters of national politics, but believes that when it comes to supporting or rejecting local propositions, it is better to have a free hand, untrammelled by party requirements. In various ways, therefore, although young and in modest means, Mr. Cruz is able to do his full duty as a citizen.

LLOYD E. SHOOK.—The owner of one of the finest small citrus ranches in Orange County, Lloyd E. Shook has been one of Yorba Linda's most enthusiastic citizens since settling here in 1911. A native of Iowa, Mr. Shook was born June 25, 1891, in Buena Vista County, that state, his parents being Hiram M. and Candace (Spencer) Shook, both of whom are still living at the home place in Iowa, but have made five trips to California. Lloyd E. Shook was one of a family of five children and was reared at the parental home in the Hawkeye State, where he received his education in the public schools. When his school days were over he worked for his father on their large grain and stock farm, continuing there until his father retired in 1909. For the next two years he was associated with others of the family in farming, after which he came to California. He came to Yorba Linda, where he purchased the citrus ranch of six and a half acres on Buena Vista Street that has since been his home. It is a splendid property, bringing in an excellent income, and it shows the painstaking care bestowed upon it by its owner.

On February 10, 1917, Mr. Shook was married to Miss Thelma Lois Pike, the daughter of Loren D. Pike of Yorba Linda, and they are now the parents of two children, Allen and Dorothy. A firm believer in cooperation in all community matters, Mr. Shook is a member of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association and of the Yorba Linda Water Company, and he is ever ready to lend a hand in any undertaking that will be of benefit to the neighborhood. His land is now under lease to an oil company. Should this locality produce oil in commercial quantities it will increase the value of his holdings immeasurably. In politics Mr. Shook is a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party.

H. DELEMERE THURBER.—Among the younger representatives of the legal profession in Orange County, H. Delemere Thurber holds a prominent place. He was born in Bourbon, Crawford County, Mo., March 19, 1893, the son of Delos P. Thurber, a physician and surgeon who died in St. Louis before the removal of the family to California. He had married Miss Nancy Chilton, a native of Missouri, whose parents were William and Liddia Louisa (Allen) Chilton. Dr. Thurber and his wife had eight children, H. D. being the sixth child.

When he was a lad of five years H. D. Thurber was brought to California, and here he was reared and educated. He attended the grammar schools in San Diego, later the Polytechnic at Los Angeles, and he was graduated from Bell's Business College in the same city. His desire was to become a lawyer and he studied law at the University of Southern California and was graduated with the class of '15. Soon afterwards he came to Orange County, choosing Fullerton as his place of residence, and here he has built up a good clientele. In politics he is a Republican on all national issues, but in his enthusiastic devotion to Fullerton and Orange County he knows no party lines that might prevent him from advocating the best men and the best measures at all times.

In June, 1914, Mr. Thurber was united in marriage at Fullerton to Miss Lottie P. Ellis, daughter of Lee C. and Elizabeth Ellis. She was born in Pueblo, Colo., and was living in Fullerton at the time of her marriage. Two children have come to bless their home; one son bears the honored name of his father, and the second child is Robert Leland Thurber.

During the World War Mr. Thurber showed his patriotism and enlisted in the aviation section of the S. E. R. C. as a ground officer and served until honorably discharged. He then re-enlisted in the quartermaster corps, but on account of the armistice was not called into service. During the war and when not away in service he served in the California Military Reserve. He is a member of Fullerton Post, No. 142, American Legion; is a member of Anaheim Lodge, No. 1345, B. P. O. Elks; has been an active member of the Fullerton Board of Trade since 1915, and served one year as a director. Mr. Thurber is a member of the alumni of the University of Southern California College of Law. Since 1917 he has served as secretary of Loma Vista Cemetery and Continental Mausoleum. In 1919 he entered into partnership with B. F. Pinson to engage in the real estate and investment business in Fullerton.

LOREN D. PIKE.—A conservative, successful rancher and one of the most enterprising citizens of Yorba Linda, Loren D. Pike is highly esteemed throughout Orange County by all who know and deal with him in his private capacity or as president of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association. He was born at Willoughby, Ohio, February 17, 1869, the son of J. D. Pike, a farmer of Willoughby, who had married Miss Mabel Lorinda Gray, also a native of the Buckeye State, and he is now the second eldest of the four surviving children. He attended the ordinary common school of his district, and later pursued two years of the high school course; in the meantime commencing early on his father's farm, and continuing there, in share work with his father, until he was twenty-eight years old.

When he married, June 11, 1896, he took for his life companion Miss Lucy Brott, a school teacher and the daughter of Lewis and Amanda (Hoeg) Brott, of Mayfield, Ohio. She received her education in the public schools of her native district. Her paternal ancestors were Ohio pioneers, while on her mother's side her ancestors helped to clear the way for civilization in Michigan. Through this domestic relation Mr. Pike became interested with Mr. Brott in the lumber business, both in the woods and in the retail business, and they worked together in that field in Ohio for seven years. They dealt in both wood and coal, and established an enviable reputation for honest, prompt and reliable service.

In the fall of 1912 Mr. Pike came to California and to Fullerton, and later he removed to Yorba Linda. He purchased nine acres of citrus grove on the Yorba Linda Boulevard, and in 1914 moved his family to this district. Six children have blessed this worthy couple, and six worthier children could scarcely be found. Thelma is the wife of Lloyd E. Shook, and the mother of two children, Allen and Dorothy. Helen is Mrs. Homer Bemis and has one child, Lucie Jane. Bernice married Hugh Nixon, and is the mother of a child, Loren. Emmett Loren, Ruth Josephine and Marjorie E. are at home. Mr. Pike belongs to the Friends Church, and serves as the clerk of the monthly meeting. He is also a member of the Yorba Linda Chamber of Commerce and of the Yorba Linda Water Company, and has served as the president of the Yorba Linda Citrus Association three years, and as a director in the same since 1914. He is also a director in the North Orange County District Exchange, representing five branch houses. In national politics he is a Republican.

HAROLD R. TAYLOR.—An efficient mechanical engineer thoroughly understanding his business, and attractive to all who know and deal with him on account of his genial and sympathetic personality, is Harold R. Taylor, who has charge of all the great pumps for irrigating the celebrated 1000-acre walnut and citrus ranch belonging to the San Joaquin Fruit Company, originally a part of the great Irvine or San Joaquin ranch. He was born in Terre Haute, Vigo County, Ind., on February 11, 1883, the son of John M. and America (Johnson) Taylor, both of whom are living on a farm in Clark County, Ill.; from which county Mr. Taylor, the only representative of the family on the Pacific Coast, came out to California in 1912. He grew up on his father's farm of 160 acres in Clark County, and attended the public schools at Dennison and Patton, in Illinois. While in Indiana, at the age of twenty-one, he had the terrible misfortune to lose his right arm, which got caught in a corn-shredding machine he was running. From a boy he displayed natural ability as a machinist and was early set to work running machinery on the farm—threshers, corn shredders, engines. In 1912 he came to California and located at Tustin, where he accepted a position as above stated.

Four hundred acres of lemons and oranges, and 600 acres of walnuts make up the area to be irrigated for the San Joaquin Fruit Company by the seven giant pumps run under Mr. Taylor's supervision, from which one may gather his degree of responsibility; for the quality of the fruit company's products rates among the highest sent to market from any part of California. Mr. Taylor is interested as a partner in the firm of Taylor and Sears in the growing of lima beans, and assists in the operation of 400 acres two miles north of Irvine Station, on which both partners reside. Of this, 350 acres are planted to beans, principally limas, the balance being reserved for the making of barley hay. The firm own and run a bean thresher, and engage in threshing on the Irvine ranch.

Since coming to California, Mr. Taylor was married to a lady from Clark County, Ill., Miss Bertha Sears, a native of that county, who has quite fulfilled her duties as a most encouraging helpmate. She is the daughter of Lincoln and Mary Sears, born in Clark County, Ill., now residing on the Irvine ranch. Husband and wife belong to the Advent Christian Church at Tustin, and are interested in all that upbuilds their neighborhood and county. Mr. Taylor is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

MRS. ROSIE J. NORTH.—A woman who has aided materially in building up and improving Orange County, is Mrs. Rosie J. North, who was born in St. Louis, Mo., a daughter of Anton and Anna (Duba) North, who were early settlers of St. Louis, where her father was a merchant tailor and both have now passed away.

Mrs. North was the next to the youngest of their seven children, and the only one who resides in California, growing up in the city of St. Louis and having the advantages of her excellent schools. Her marriage occurred in 1889, when she was united with Chas. E. North, who was born near St. Louis, where his parents were farmers. After his marriage they engaged in farming near St. Louis until March, 1908, when the family migrated to California, locating at Anaheim. They purchased ten acres of raw land on North Street, two and a half miles east of Anaheim. This he leveled and improved, establishing a nursery business; he continued this for six years and also set his place to Valencia and Navel oranges. Later he bought five acres adjoining and ten acres a mile west, which he also improved to oranges, now full-bearing groves.

However, he was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors for he passed away January 1, 1918, and since then his widow has sold ten acres and continues to care for the place in the most approved manner. In the care of the fifteen-acre ranch, she is assisted by her children and they use the latest machinery, including a Case tractor. Believing in cooperation, she is an enthusiastic member of the Anaheim Mutual Orange Distributors Association.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. North was blessed with five children: Lawrence C., who is ably assisting his mother with the care of the orange groves; Nellie, a graduate of Anaheim high school and Woodbury's Business College at Los Angeles, resides in that city; Ursula is a graduate of Anaheim Union high school; Irvine is attending Loyola College in Los Angeles; while Irene is attending the local school. With her children, Mrs. North is a member of St. Boniface Church in Anaheim.

Having long had a desire to make a visit to her old home in Missouri, Mrs. North satisfied her longing in 1920, twelve years after she had located in California and made a trip back to St. Louis, visiting her home and friends and relatives in that section, spending a period of four months amid the old familiar scenes, returning to California well satisfied with her trip but more pleased than ever with the state of her adoption—the land of sunshine and flowers.

JOHN W. HARGRAVE.—In the history of this or any other country no section has developed more rapidly or more wonderfully in recent years than Southern California, and the men of affairs in the various smaller towns have been largely instrumental in forwarding this growth. Prominent among the business men of Yorba Linda is John W. Hargrave, cashier of the First National Bank of Yorba Linda. Mr. Hargrave was born near Cadiz, Harrison County, Ohio, August 19, 1865, and attended the public schools of his native county until thirteen years of age. His father, Robert Fleming Hargrave, was born in Virginia and came out to Ohio, where he married Ruannah Thomas, and they were farmers in Harrison County until his death in 1878. Mrs. Hargrave was born near Cadiz, Ohio, the daughter of Peter Thomas, born in 1782 in Virginia, who was a pioneer of Harrison County, Ohio, where he hewed a farm from the heavy timber.

In the spring of 1879, with his mother, John W. Hargrave removed to West Branch, Cedar County, Iowa, and completed his education in the public schools at that place, afterward locating at Brookings, Dakota Territory, where he was clerk in a drug store for two years, then in a general store for three years. In May, 1892, he began his banking career in Ipswich, S. D., as assistant cashier in the Bank of Ipswich. He was founder of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Hankinson, N. D., and became cashier of that institution September 1, 1899, continuing in that capacity until November, 1912, when he resigned to locate in California. On December 1, 1912, he became cashier of the State Bank of San Pedro, holding the position until January, 1915, when he resigned and engaged in the real estate business until he organized and promoted the First National Bank of Yorba Linda, which opened its doors for business October 1, 1916. This bank, which has been a large factor in the growth of Yorba Linda, and has built up a fine business, owns the fine modern building which it alone occupies. Its officers and directors are: Dr. Lester Keller of Yorba Linda, president; Chas. H. Hamburg, of Whittier, vice-president; and J. W. Hargrave, cashier.

Mr. Hargrave has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Nettie Mower of Brookings, S. D., who was accidentally killed in a runaway at Clear Lake. She bore him two children: George M., who is a teacher of manual training at Covina high school; and Edgar J., a student at Occidental College. For his second wife, he married his brother's widow, Mrs. Della (Miles) Hargrave, born in Oskaloosa, Iowa. She had two children by her first marriage: Arthur C., a graduate of the University of North Dakota; is superintendent of the industrial department of Chaffee high school; and a daughter, Mrs. Merl Sheets of Lemon, S. D. Fraternally, Mr. Hargrave was made a Mason in October, 1919, in Yorba Linda Lodge No. 469, F. & A. M., of which he is treasurer. He is also a member of the Modern Woodman of America and of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is a member of the Yorba Linda Chamber of Commerce and of the Yorba Linda Farm Center, and during the recent World War was chairman of all Liberty Loan drives held in Yorba Linda.

HERBERT D. COON.—Prominent among the contractors, designers and builders who have forged their way to prosperity and success, is Herbert D. Coon, a man well known in his line of business at Fullerton, Cal. Mr. Coon was born in Santa Cruz, Cal., December 23, 1887, and comes of an early pioneer family. His father, Herbert William Coon, born in Ohio, came to California in about 1870, when he married Julia Stewart. He was a lumberman in Santa Cruz and they now make their home in Pasadena; of their six children Herbert D. Coon is the youngest. He received the foundation of his education in the schools of Santa Cruz, completed it in high school in North Chicago, Ill., and served his apprenticeship with the well-known Oakland contractor, Frank Irvine. For two years he was engaged in the building of the Terra Cotta plant at Tracy, Cal., and for the next two years was employed in construction work for the Stone Canyon Coal Company in Monterey County. In 1910 he located at Pasadena, and engaged in the construction of high-class residences in the Orange Grove Avenue and Oak Knoll sections, the finest residence sections of the city. His next venture was in the Yellowstone National Park, where he worked for the Great Northern Railroad in construction work on hotels, etc., for two years. He then returned to Pasadena and did construction work on fine houses for many of the leading real estate firms. He afterward located at Fullerton and built bungalows for one year, then doing his bit for the war, worked in the shipyards at San Pedro for two years.

In April, 1919, he located again at Fullerton, where he intends to make his home, and where he continues the vocation of contractor and builder. Among some of the fine residences he has erected may be mentioned the Wm. Knepp, F. P. Woods and the Willis Maple homes. He has just completed a beautiful apartment house, of his own design, consisting of four apartments of four rooms each in the Ramona tract, at a cost of $13,000. The exterior of the building is of plaster, carrying out the Fullerton Improvement Designs, which are found in the new public buildings at Fullerton. His building operations are not alone confined to Orange County, but he is also building in Long Beach, where he erected the George Treher apartments.

As a designer and for ability to execute any class of work he undertakes he is preeminent, and in all his work strives for and attains styles that are commensurate with the high-class of patronage he caters to. His marriage, in Santa Ana, November 25, 1908, united him with Miss Sylvia Hanes, a native of Darke County, Ohio, a daughter of Henry and Margaret (Puterbaugh) Hanes, descended of old Quaker stock who came to Pasadena in 1905.

EARL LAMB.—A promising young man well known and justly popular is Earl Lamb, the youngest son and child of the late W. D. Lamb and his esteemed wife Elizabeth, both pioneers and highly respected old settlers in the west part of Orange County where they prospered, and where Mrs. Lamb still lives and is one of the largest landowners. He was born upon his father's ranch at New Hope, Orange County, on August 2, 1892, and while he attended the Fountain Valley grammar school, was brought up to share in his father's undertakings as landowner and ditch builder, stock raiser, dairyman, grain and sugar beet grower, so that he mastered a good deal of knowledge not usually acquired by boy or youth. Later, he supplemented his common school studies by a stiff commercial course in the Orange County Business College at Santa Ana, from which he naturally profited a deal.

Earl Lamb has control of 144 acres of excellent river-bottom lands near Talbert, near the Santa Ana River, in what was formerly spoken of as the Gospel Swamp, but is now known as Fountain Valley; and there for four years, or until about 1915, he grew sugar beets. For the past four years or more he has cleaned up a neat sum in raising lima beans. Beginning with 1920, Mr. Lamb has planned to rent out his acreage to three different tenants, who purpose growing beets and beans, while he will continue to reside on the place with his family.

In 1912, Mr. Lamb was married to Miss Etta Bradley, a daughter of George Bradley, of Huntington Beach, who was formerly a rancher near Talbert. He still owns a valuable ranch there, but is chiefly engaged in the warehouse of the Lima Bean Growers Association at Greenville, in Orange County. Mrs. Lamb is a talented and charming helpmate, and the parents are proud of three bright and interesting children, Rachel, Willie and Alvin. The Lamb household is noted for its hospitality, maintaining a pleasant California tradition of which any family might well be proud.

RICHARD FRAZER.—The building and contracting business of Santa Ana is indeed fortunate to have added to its already splendid list of artistic designers and dependable builders the name of Richard Frazer, the large and successful building operator of Kansas City, who recently located in Santa Ana. For many years he was actively engaged in building fine residences in the metropolis of Missouri, and while there built over 300 houses for Roy Russell, now a resident of Santa Ana and a member of the well-known realty firm of Shaw and Russell.

Richard Frazer was born on a farm in Ray County, Mo., December 9, 1872. He received his early education at the rural school of his district and followed farming until he was twenty-eight years of age. In 1900 Mr. Frazer located in Kansas City, Mo., where he learned the carpenter's trade, and in time formed a partnership with W. M. McCoy, one of the leading contractors of the city. They made a specialty of constructing fine residences and continued the partnership five years, Mr. Frazer afterwards engaging in the business alone.

On October 2, 1919, Mr. Frazer moved to Santa Ana and was so deeply impressed with the enterprising spirit of the city and its possibilities that he at once became a staunch booster for Santa Ana and sincerely believes that in the rapidity of its growth it is the coming city of Southern California. He made a practical demonstration of his faith by investing at once in real estate, purchasing the corner of Van Ness and West Sixth, 125 by 150 feet. He has erected one house, and contemplates building four more on this property. He also purchased a lot 40 by 300 feet at 2012 North Broadway, where he will erect a fine residence for himself. Although a resident of Santa Ana but six months, he has constructed twenty-five houses. Such a record augurs well for the future business success of this enterprising designer and builder of high grade houses and bungalows.

In Ray County, Mo., Mr. Frazer was united in marriage with Miss Frances Miller of Nebraska and they are the parents of two children: Dorothy, now the wife of R. J. Jones; and Charles, who is a student in the Santa Ana schools. Fraternally Mr. Frazer is a member of the Red Men and of the Mystic Workers.

NEWTON E. WRAY.—A rancher, who is well pleased with his realty investments and with whom, as a capable and faithful public official, the public is quite as well satisfied, is Newton E. Wray, a native of California, where he was born at Placerville, El Dorado County, on March 6, 1874. Placerville used to be known as Hangtown, on account of the vengeance meted out to culprits there by citizens who finally took the law into their own hands. Executions were for a while frequent and swift and it is even said that one man, commencing his downward path rather early in the morning, was hanged before breakfast.

George W. and Ethel (Vanderburg) Wray were the parents of our subject and were natives of Crawfordsville, Ind., and Iowa, respectively, and they came across the unexplored continent with an ox-team train in the gold rush period of 1850 in separate trains, and it was here they met and were married at Placerville and where George Wray engaged in mining for some years; he was prominent in the social welfare of Placerville and with other pioneers was a member of the vigilance committee.

Twenty-six years later they moved to Tulare County and there, five miles east of Tulare, they purchased a ranch of 640 acres. This was devoted for the most part to stock, although much grain was also grown there. There Newton lived with his parents and attended school in the district east of Tulare. When eighteen years of age he left home and worked out for five or six years and the day before Christmas, 1898, when he was twenty-four years old, he was married in Tulare to Miss Isabel Nicholson, daughter of James and Sarah (De Rosia) Nicholson, who had come to California from Iowa in 1887. Mrs. Wray received her education in the public schools of Tulare. In 1901 Mr. Wray bought sixty acres in Tulare County and there engaged in the raising of stock and alfalfa. This fine Tulare property he retained until 1913, when he sold it.

In the fall of 1910 he came to Orange County and for a couple of years rented a home in Santa Ana, when he purchased the property at 611 South Main Street, lived there for a year and then sold it. In 1913 he purchased his present ranch of twelve and a half acres on the Broadway extension, and while operating his place was also in the employ of C. C. Collins Company as a fruit buyer, and thus has become well acquainted with the fruit growers all over Orange County. Two acres of his ranch are set out to oranges and the rest is planted to walnuts. He also owns twenty acres on South McClay Street devoted to general farming and he also has two cottages at Balboa Beach. He was active in the loan drives during the late war and always works for the best men and the best measures, irrespective of party ties.

Mr. and Mrs. Wray have one son, Clayton Elmer Wray, who is at present in the U. S. Naval Service, being second-class pharmacist mate in the hospital department on the Island of Guam. Mr. Wray holds an appointment under Sheriff Jackson as a Deputy. He is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 241, F. & A. M., and also of Santa Ana Chapter, R. A. M., and Santa Ana Council, R. S. M., and with his wife is a member of Hermosa Chapter, Order Eastern Star. He is also a member of Santa Ana Lodge, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand and with Mrs. Wray belongs to the Santa Ana Rebekahs.

JOHN B. HICKEY.—A prosperous rancher who has followed the citrus industry for twenty-eight years, having been four years longer in the Golden State, and who has thereby acquired a valuable experience which he has at all times placed at the disposal of his fellow-ranchers, thus contributing to the advancement of California agriculture, is John B. Hickey, the proprietor of the Hickey ranch of seventeen and a half acres, three miles southeast of Orange and five miles northeast of Santa Ana. It was a vineyard when he came into possession of it, and now he has twelve and a half acres devoted to lemons, and five to oranges, and his trees are from six to fifteen years old. For twelve years Mr. Hickey has been raising lemons, so that it is fair to assume that he, if anyone, knows a good deal of the problems and prospects of lemon culture.

He was born at Millerville, Clay County, Ala., on October 18, 1866, the son of Richard C. and Jane (Weathers) Hickey, who were married in that state. His father was a planter, and for four years he gave his best service to the cause of the Confederacy, attaining the rank of a sergeant. They had eleven children, nine of whom are now living, six in California; and our subject was the fifth in the order of birth. With limited schooling obtained during years when he had to assist in the raising of cotton and corn on a plantation of 400 acres, John Hickey grew to be seventeen years old, and then he left for Hot Springs, Ark., where he spent the winter. After that, he went to the Indian Territory for a couple of years, and then he put in a year in Texas. After a visit to his old home, he migrated to California in 1888, the stirring period of the boom, and settled at Santa Ana.

In Orange, on February 4, 1895, Mr. Hickey took for his wife Mrs. Nannie (Harris) Sitton, the daughter of Andrew Simpson Harris; she was born in San Bernardino, Cal., and had attended school at El Monte, where her father was a farmer. When she was eight years old, she took a trip to Texas with her parents and returned the next year. At Orange she was married to B. Martin Sitton, Jr., who was born in Illinois; after their marriage they engaged in farming near Downey and later near Orange until his death, December, 1893. They had three children: Zorah D. Sitton became the wife of Dr. Joseph F. Teeter of Los Angeles; Albert H. Sitton is a machinist, who married Miss Rose Rogers, handles the Overland and the Willys-Knight automobiles, and resides at Fullerton; while Rachel Annie died when she was three years old. Two brothers of Mrs. Hickey are J. Wiley and W. Frank Harris, real estate dealers with headquarters at Santa Ana.

Andrew Simpson Harris possessed a character, and had an experience by no means commonplace. He was born on October 22, 1816, in North Carolina, but early removed with his parents across the mountains into East Tennessee, then the "frontier," abounding with Indians and game, so that he became an adept with both the ax and the rifle. While yet in his youth, he removed to Western Missouri, and in Cass County helped to blaze the way for civilization.

The pioneer spirit, however, once more asserted itself, and a move was made to Denton County, Texas, in 1845. At the end of three years, he returned to his home for a visit, and was married, in 1848, to Miss Lou Ann Majors, daughter of David Majors and a native of Madison County, Ky., where she was born on September 3, 1829. The young couple returned to Texas; but Mr. Harris' failing health made it necessary, in a few years, for him to leave that state. In 1857, therefore, when he had to be carried on a bed and three small children must also be provided for, the weary, ox-team journey to California was undertaken in company with friends. Six long months were consumed in the tiresome and dangerous trip, when they made their first long stop at San Bernardino; but about one year later, they located at El Monte, residing at that place until 1867. Believing that he had regained his health, he braved the journey to Texas again, this time by horse teams, but a second time undermining his constitution, he sacrificed much to join another emigrant train, and once more trailed across the desert El Monte was reached in 1868, and six years later, 1874, he removed to the place near Orange where his remaining years were spent. After enjoying fairly good health for years, he suddenly sustained a stroke of paralysis, which was followed by typhoid fever; and on September 28, 1893, when nearly seventy-seven years old, he passed to his eternal reward. In all the years of his experience as a Christian, Andrew Simpson Harris never wavered from a straightforward life of trust in his Savior and devotion to His cause, and he not only helped to organize the first Baptist Church in that part of Texas in which he resided, serving as its clerk, but he also took part in the formation of the Los Angeles Baptist Association. He was also a member of the Orange Baptist Church since its formation in 1886, and was one of its deacons for a number of years. Mrs. Harris, while still in her Cass County home, became a member of the Baptist Church; and thus for more than seventy years she lived an exemplary life. For twenty-five years, she was a widow, and when acute feebleness overtook her, she spent the last two years of her life with her son in Orange. Her demise was peaceful and without illness. Seeing a changed look quietly creeping over her face, her daughter-in-law said: "Mother, I think the end is near—would you not like to go home, to Heaven now?" And she answered, "Yes, I would like to go now;" after which, the gentle spirit calmly departed. Mrs. Harris was survived by her sons, Eli J. Wiley and Frank Harris, and her daughters, Mrs. Nannie Hickey and Mrs. Mary Beard. She left also twenty-one grandchildren, twenty-four great-grandchildren, and even one great-great-grandson, George H. Clem, Jr. Mr. and Mrs. Hickey are active, devoted members of the Baptist Church at Orange, where Mr. Hickey is chairman of the board of trustees and a deacon of that organization.

JOHN P. HARMS.—A splendid type of the progressive, loyal German-American is afforded by John P. Harms, who was born in North Hanover, Germany, on October 23, 1855, the son of John L. and Elsie Harms. His father was a farmer, who also did shoemaking; and so the lad, who was given the best of grammar school advantages, worked out on a farm in summer time, after his ninth year. When fifteen years of age, he crossed the ocean to America and proceeded direct to Missouri; and at Higginsville began his first nine years of farm laboring in America. Now, through hard work, he has become prosperous, a man devoted to his family and proud of the service his sons rendered in the late war.

Removing to Clifton, Washington County, Kans., he there worked out on a farm for a year, after which he purchased eighty acres of land, on which he raised corn, hogs and cattle. Near Clifton, too, at Palmer Church, he married Rosina Botjer, on November 9, 1882, a native of Concordia, Mo., and the daughter of Dietrich and Rebecca Botjer, well-to-do farmers and landowners. When Rosina was fourteen years old, her parents removed to Clifton, Kans., and there they acquired good farm property. The young lady attended the parochial school at Concordia, Kans., and after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Harms farmed their eighty acres for the next fourteen years. During the same period, Mr. Harms also bought an additional farm of two hundred acres two miles to the north. In 1894, he sold these Kansas farms and having decided to come to California made direct for his present home site. For a while, he merely rented three acres of this farm, and then he purchased nine acres; two years later he added five more, making fourteen in all. The land was then planted to grapes; but as these gradually died off, orange trees were set out, and now Mr. Harms has eleven acres of Valencias, one acre of Navels, and two acres of lemons. He built a fine dwelling and the outbuildings himself, and all the improvements on the place are due to his own efforts.

Ten children have come to be numbered in the promising family of this worthy pioneer couple: Arthur D. Harms married Matilda Rodieck, and is at present living in Atwood, Cal.; John H. married Nettie E. Pogue and engaged in the drug trade at Orange; Edward John is a truck driver at Oxnard; Frederick J. C. has a position in the Imperial Valley; Emil A. married Rosa Schnipp and is living on a ranch on Handy Street, Orange; Clara Anna married Otto Ohlde and lives in Snohomish, Wash; George W. is bookkeeper on the Irvine ranch; Ernest A., living at home, cares for his father's farm; Anna M. is bookkeeper in her brother's drug store; and August William, who also lives at home, is a student at the Orange high school. The family are members of the German Lutheran Church.

Frederick J. C. Harms, the fourth child in the order of birth, volunteered as a mechanic, in July, 1918, for service in the World War, and was enlisted at the Jefferson high school building in Los Angeles. He was sent to Camp McArthur at San Pedro, and there he served his country until he was discharged. He was on a list to go to France when the influenza epidemic placed him under quarantine; and he was honorably discharged in April, 1919.

WALLER SINCLAIR HEAD.—Among the most progressive young ranchers of the Anaheim district must be rated "Clair" Head, as he is known to all his acquaintances, the owner of two well-kept and fruitful farms, one of thirty acres, on which he lives, devoted to walnuts and oranges, and the other of ten acres, which he reserves for sugar beets. Besides operating these in the most scientific manner, he leases sixty-five acres and there produces lima beans and chili peppers. He purchased the site of his home ranch only in 1913, when he set out his orange trees, the walnuts having been planted some fifteen years previous; so that much of his admirable results have been evolved in a comparatively short time. Indeed, his success thus far would seem to distinguish Mr. Head as a man much in advance of his age in agricultural lines.

Mr. Head was born at Garden Grove, July 5, 1883, the son of Dr. Henry W. and Maria E. Head, a sketch of their lives appearing elsewhere in this history. He attended Garden Grove grammar school and the Santa Ana high school, and then took up farming as his vocation, and this he has followed ever since.

In 1910, on June 14, Mr. Head was united in marriage with Miss Gladys Coates, who was born in Iowa but was reared in California. She attended the Santa Ana high school and later graduated from the Orange high school. She was a school teacher before her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Head are the parents of one daughter, Percie Clair, who attends the Katella school. Loyalloy interested in all the community's affairs, Mr. Head has served for three years as clerk of the Katella school district.

JULIAN A. PRESCOTT.—Among the worthy and prosperous ranchers of Tustin, Julian A. Prescott is numbered. He is the owner of a ranch of twenty-seven and one-half acres, planted to oranges, upon which he erected a beautiful and artistic bungalow in 1912, the year he purchased the property from J. H. Martin. His thrift, enterprise and progressiveness are indicated in the care bestowed upon his ranch, and he holds an assured position among the leading residents of his community.

Of New England ancestry, he was born in Lime Springs, Iowa, in 1875, and is the son of Augustus D. and Sarah (Butterfield) Prescott, natives of Phillips, Maine; they moved to Iowa, then to Arkansas City, Kans. Julian had the advantage of a grammar and high school education in Arkansas City and the additional advantage of association with his father in business. The father, A. D. Prescott, an active business man and real estate manipulator, followed this business a number of years with pronounced success, passing away in 1911. Mrs. Sarah Butterfield Prescott traces her ancestry back to Revolutionary days and was a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She spent her last years with her son, Julian A., in California and died June 29, 1920. Our subject was the only child of this union and was for some years associated with his father in business and naturally acquired a valuable experience. He is well abreast of the time, has a keen eye for business, is well versed in current topics and events, and is a man who will make a place for himself in the financial and agricultural world.

In 1912 he came to Los Angeles, Cal. After spending the winter in looking over California for a location he selected Orange County and purchased twelve acres to which he has since added until he now has twenty-seven and a half acres to which he has given his time and best efforts to bring it to its present high standard. It is beautifully located on the Newport Road and Seventeenth Street, four and a half miles east of Santa Ana and is devoted principally to the culture of Valencia oranges. Believing in cooperation he is naturally a member of the Tustin Hill Citrus Association.

STONE WALKER TODD.—How much of the efficiency of Orange County's superior gas service is due to the experience and strict attention to business represented in Stone Walker Todd's superintendency, only those who know the man, and have followed his career and daily work since he took charge, will be able to state. He was born at Richmond, Ky., on January 13, 1885, the son of Huston B. Todd, a business man in that vicinity, who has since died, but is recalled as a successful man of affairs. He married Miss Mary Rucker, a native of Kentucky, who now resides in Knoxville, Tenn., and by her he had six children.

The fourth in the order of birth, Stone Walker attended the grammar school and later engaged in mercantile work, which he followed for six years, adding to his experience with the world and human nature, and preparing for the next important step, he moved to the Pacific Coast. He arrived in Santa Ana, Cal., on February 1, 1911, and entered the service of the gas department of the Southern California Edison Company. On April 1, 1911, the Southern California Edison Company sold their gas properties in Orange County to the Southern Counties Gas Company. Mr. Todd remained in the services of the Southern Counties Gas Company at Santa Ana until June, 1911, when he was transferred to Anaheim to take charge of the work for the gas company at that place. In October, 1911, he was made district agent of the northern half of the county for the Southern Counties Gas Company and remained in this position until October 1, 1915, when the two districts were united and he was made district superintendent of Orange County, and was moved to Santa Ana, where he remained until December 1, 1919. He then resigned to take a position as general superintendent of the Industrial Fuel Supply Company.

The general offices of the new company are located in the First National Bank Building at Anaheim, Cal., and their purpose is to purchase gas in the Montebello, Brea Canyon, Placentia and Huntington Beach fields from the oil companies and wholesale the same. The Industrial Fuel Supply Company has erected two large compressor plants, one at the Placentia fields and one at the Montebello fields. In 1916 Mr. Todd purchased four acres of orange land on West Chapman Avenue, where he makes his home.

THOMAS S. WESTON.—This is an age of specialists and the man who centralizes his efforts on some one particular branch of his trade or profession is more sure of winning a success in his chosen line. That this is true in the building and contracting business is illustrated in the career of Thomas S. Weston, of Santa Ana. He was born March 23, 1875, at Saginaw, Mich., and remained there with his parents until he was ten years of age, when his father moved to northern Idaho. John Weston was a mill man and contractor, and with others purchased a saw mill which he set up at Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, in 1887, it being one of the first large mills in the state.

Thomas S. Weston finished his education in the public school at Coeur d'Alene, after which he followed railroading with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company for five years; the last year of service with the company he was employed as an engineer. After leaving the railway service, he followed the trade of a carpenter and contractor with his father and in 1902 located in Boise, Idaho, where he began specializing on designing and installing store fronts and interior work, continuing along this line ever since. He has become so proficient in this special branch of carpentry as to be regarded as an expert. While living in Boise he was appointed building inspector by Mayor Pence, serving during his term of office.

In 1913, Mr. Weston moved to Los Angeles, where he became foreman for A. J. Crawford, a contractor who specialized in store work. While in the employ of Mr. Crawford he put in the store front and interior for Young's Market on Broadway, the Coliseum Bar and the Chocolate Shop on Broadway. In 1915 Mr. Weston located in Santa Ana, where he engaged in building and contracting. Special examples of his artistic designing and superior workmanship are seen in the following store fronts at Santa Ana: Seidel's Market, Smart Shop, Peterson's Shoe Store, Mrs. Enlow's Millinery Store and Miles' Shoe Shop. He also built the Lawrence Block at Santa Ana for A. J. Crawford. At Balboa Mr. Weston installed a refrigerator window for Henry Seidel. These cold storage windows are another feature of which he has made a specialty. At Compton he erected a $20,000 business block for W. J. Zeiss and at Bolsa he designed and built for O. H. Merritt one of the first up-to-date, sanitary dairy barns in the county. It cost $5,000, has a cement floor and is forty-eight by fifty feet in size, with a capacity for accommodating forty cows.

In 1903, Mr. Weston was united in marriage with Nettie Martin, a native of Boise, Idaho, and they are the parents of two children, a daughter, Esther, and son, Darrell. Fraternally Mr. Weston is a member of Santa Ana Lodge No. 794, B. P. O. Elks.

JOHN W. UTTER, M.D.—A descendant of pioneers of California on both sides of the family, Dr. John W. Utter has much to be proud of in his ancestry, and as a loyal native son of the state he is carrying on to the best of his ability the work started by those grand old men and women who made possible the present-day era of prosperity and peace in the far west. Born September 29, 1872, in Willetts, Mendocino County, he is a son of Isaac Utter, who fought in the Mexican war and came to California in 1847. For a time he was located in the Anaheim district of Los Angeles County, in 1877, and he later returned to Mendocino County where he engaged in the cattle business. His wife, the mother of John W., crossed the continent to this state on the first steam train, and a grandmother of John W. crossed the plains with ox teams in pioneer days.

With such a background for his start in life, the young lad could hardly help but make a success of his own endeavors, and his education was started in the public schools of Willetts, later graduating from the Ukiah high school, and for eight years thereafter he taught school in Mendocino County. In 1901 he left his native town and came south to Los Angeles, where he taught school for four years. At the end of this period he entered the University of California, at Berkeley, and graduated from the medical department in 1910, with his degree of M.D.

On leaving the university Dr. Utter came direct to Anaheim, and started the practice of his profession, since which date he has continued in practice here, a well-known figure in the life of the community, prominent equally as a physician and as a man with the best interests of his district at heart, loyal to his state and to the city where he first started to practice his profession.

The marriage of Dr. Utter, which occurred on May 22, 1900, united him with Stella Moore, like himself, a native Californian, born in Sacramento, and three children have blessed their union: Marjorie, John W., Jr., and Marion. Active in the fraternal life of the community, Dr. Utter is a member of the Elks, the Knights of Pythias, and of the Anaheim Lodge of Masons. Professionally, he is a member of the American Medical Association and the state and county organizations.
